Answ: IN my Examen page 51. I said, They that say the Covenant of grace belongs not onely to believers, but also to their naturall children, whether believing or not, these add to the Gospel, and the Apostle saith of such, Gal. 1. 8, 9. Let him be accursed. And page 122. It is no wrong to say it, that it is a new Gospel to affirm that this is one of the promises of the covenant of grace, That God will be the God of believers and of their seed; that the seed of believers are taken into covenant with their parents, I cannot derive its pedigree higher than Zuinglius. To this Mr C. opposeth his seventh Conclusion with ambiguity and seeming hesitancy. For what else can be the reason of those terms [at least as well] which are not like the expressions of a man that is well resolved what to hold? But that we may rip up this Conclusion, 1. He supposeth that right to outward ordinances, or more particularly to an initiall seal, is covenant-interest from the covenant of grace, which is a mistake, as I have often shewed. 2. That such externall covenant interest of grown persons is Gospel without Scripture, which mentions onely justification by faith and life by Christ to be the Gospel, not such a covenant interest (as they call it) which may be to reprobates as well as to elect persons. 3. He speaks of believers inchurched by such a covenant as the Scripture mentions not. 4. He annexeth the covenant interest he speakes of to this Church-covenant as well as to the covenant of grace without any warrant but his own conceit, nor shewes how far it is annexed to the one with or without the other. 5. He asserts the covenant interest at least externall and Ecclesiastical of Infants of inchurched believers. 6. That this is Gospel. The first place he brings for his Conclusion is Deut. 30, 6, 11, 12, 13, 14, compared with Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8, and saith, The matter of the promise, scil: inward power of grace sheweth it was a Gospel-promise like that Heb. 8. 10, 11, 12.

Ans. This is enough to shew the impertinency of this text to prove the meer externall Ecclesiasticall interest of infants of inchurched believers. For it contains that promise of inward grace, which Mr. B. saith, belongs onely to the elect. Friendly Accom. pag. 362. 2 Saith he, Now this was made to the seed or children of these church members, as ch. 29. 14, 15 here is not any evasion as is usuall in mentioning Abrahams seed, &c. this people to whom this was made, being not so spiritual themselves.

Answ. I grant that the promise Deut. 30. 6. of circumcising thine heart and the heart of thy seed, is meant of the seed of those then assembled, but not of all their seed, but onely such as were elect, nor at all times, but a speciall time, upon their return to God when they were in captivity, nor at all to their infant-seed but to their grown seed, as Mr B. proves in the words and place above cited, Friendly Accom. page 361. And whereas Mr. C. conceives the people to whom this promise was made, not so spiritual, he is mistaken. For if God promised to circumcise their heart, they must be spiritual. 3 That it was not a bare tender, which I grant. 4. saith he, Lest any doubt should arise how this should be ratified and made good, Moses prophetically setteth out Christ as dead and risen in whom this covenant was ratified, v. 12, 13. All which the Apostle further explaineth, Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8

Answ. I do not conceive that either Moses, Deut. 30. 11, 12, 13. useth the words there to shew how the promise, v. 30. 6. should be ratified, or that he prophetically setteth out Christ as dead and risen, Deut. 30. 11, 12, 13. or that the Apostle, Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8. so explains it. He that reads the chapter may perceive, that Deut. 30. v 11, 12, 13, 14. are brought to this end, that Moses might prevent the excuse which might be made for their disobedience by alleaging that Gods lawes were at such a distance from them as that they could not come to them. And though it is true that the Apostle applies those words to the word of faith, Rom. 10. 6, 7, 8. yet it is manifest that it was not a prediction of Christs resurrection, as there the words stand, 1. from Deu. 30. 10. where the commandment mentioned v. 11. is said expresly to be [Gods commandment and statute which are written in this Book of the Law.] 2. That it was that which was nigh to them that they might hear it and do it. v. 14 which is meant of the Law, not of the word of faith concerning Christ dead and risen, which was not to be done by us, but to be believed. Rightly saith Beza, Annot. ad Rom. 10. 8. τὸ ῥῆμα, Hebr. הדבר haddabar, quo vocabulo Moses intelligit legem quam Dominus voce sua promulgavit, audiente universo populo suo, ita ut nullam ignorantiam possit prætexere, cum ejus tabulas haberet descriptas, tanquam adeo singuli ex re citare possent, & intus haberent quasi in cognitione & animo insculptam: sed quod Moses dixit de lege, hoc totum Paulus ad Evangelium accommodat per allusionem. Piscat. Analys. alludit Apostolus ad verba Mosis, Deut. 30. 12. Diodati Annot. on Rom. 10. 6. [speaketh on this wise] S. Paul makes use of this passage, though spoken in another sense.

The like to which he doth in the same Chapter: v. 18. alledging the words Psalm. 19. 4. concerning the preaching the Gospel in all the world, which is undeniably meant of the course of the heavens. Nor is it of force to overthrow this exposition, to say, that the word Deut.30.14. is said to be in their heart, for to be in their heart is there no more than to be understood by them though they were disobedient, and might be true of the law as wel as the Gospel. Nor is it any disparagement to the holy writings, to say that sometimes holy writers accommodate to their purpose words that have other meaning in the places where they stand. Whence I infer that the words v. 11. [the Commandement which I command thee this day] do not prove that thereby is meant the very Gospel-Covenant ratified in Christ, but the Commandment given in Horeb Deut.29.1. nor is there any shew of likelihood that the words *Deut.*30.11,12,13,14 should be meant of the promise v.6. of circumcising the heart of their seed, for that was not to be done by them, but God. And though it be true that Moses had that day propounded the Commandments as a mutual Covenant betwixt them and God, as wel as God and them the parents or rulers stipulating therein in behalf of themselves and Children (or rather in the behalfe of the whole nation in present being and unborn posterity) and so in reference to them also a conditional covenant that day in the plains of Moab, Deut. 29.1.9,10,11,12,13,14,15,29, and 30.6,7,8,9,10,11,12,13,14. yet the covenant was on their part to keep the commandments of the Law for their prosperity *Deut.*29.9. not to believe in Christ (which few of them understood). And when it is said *Deut.*29.13. that it was that God might establish them that day for a people to himself, and that he might be unto them a God, It is not meant that they should be all believers, and God to them a justifying and saving God in Christ, Mr. B's. words in his Friendly accommodation, pag.361. And for that which you urge [Ero Deus tui & seminis] I doubt you will not prove that it reacheth so far as you speak. It sufficeth that God will be to them a God of mercy and do for them all that is necessary to put them in statum salutis pro conditione parvulorum, and Mr. C's own exposition, I will be a God to some in respect of external interest, shew that to be a God to some doth not necessarily infer they shall be regenerate and so the covenant of saving grace in Christ be gathered thence. And therefore I deny that *Deut.*30.6.11,12,13,14. *compared with Rom.*10.6,7,8. doe evidently or obscurely prove, that the Covenant-interest (external as he cals it) "of in-"churched stipulating parents children is Gospel, or that the Apostles preached this doctrine, or that believers are to eye the covenant in such a latitude "as to their children with them by faith, or that the essentials of the Covenant of grace in the latitude of the extent thereof to covenant parents with "their children held forth in the old Testament was delivered and held forth "as valid to the faith of the Saints in the new and after Christs incarnation. "Nor doth Peter propound the word of true faith in such a latitude as with "reference to their children, (in Mr. C's sence) Acts. 2.38,39. And though Paul hold forth *Rom.*5. 14,15. the abounding of Christs grace (to them that are Christs) in the gift of righteousness, yet that any such thing as external Ecclesiastical covenant interest to the natural seed of believers is held forth Rom. 5.14,15. is Mr. C's, palpable dotage. And how *Acts.*2.38, 39 *Rom.*11.16,17,18,19. 1 *Cor.*7.14. are mistaken is shewed in the first part of this Review and in this third part. But Mr. C. fails to dispute thus, That which believers, as such, have, do, and ought to believe as a branch of the Covenant of grace, that is Gospel; but this is of that in nature, ergo. The major needs no proof: the former text also clearing the same: the major de jure is evident: they ought to believe the whole Covenant made with them, as is evident, faith must be as large as the object, the Covenant is the word of faith. And so he proceedes in more words.

Covenant

Whereunto I answer, I grant his major, But Mr. C. seems not to heed his own Syllogism. For he tels us the minor de jure is evident, they ought to believe and by which words he seems to have conceived, that this was the minor, that they ought to believe the whole Covenant: whereas his minor to be proved was this [the external, Ecclesiastical interest of Infants of inchurched believers is that which believers, as such, have, do and ought to believe as a branch of the Covenant of grace]. But Mr. C. as a man weary of disputing falls to his dictating way again after his confused manner leaving his reader to aim at what he would prove, and how. That which he should prove is, that the external Ecclesiastical interest of Infants of inchurched believers is that which believers, as such, have, do and ought to believe as a branch of the covenant of grace: surely if they ought to believe it he should produce some promise or declaration that avowes it as a constant and certain thing. But instead thereof he fals to Gen.17.7. and tels us, God in making a Covenant in a Church reference especially, as was that with Abraham Gen.17.7 he taketh in their seed or children as joint covenanters. but what he means by Gods making a covenant in a Church reference, or in which words he takes believers seed as joint covenanters with their parents, or in which words the external Ecclesiastical interest of every believers natural child may be proved, he shews not, nor can shew, there being no mans seed: but Abrahams there mentioned. He goes on thus; Hence the phrase of seed in their generations taking in parents generating and children begotten, as those in and by whom Churches, are like to be continued. Answ. It is true it is said Gen.17.9. to Abraham [thou shalt keep my Covenant; therefore thou and thy seed after thee in their generations] and this Covenant is v.10. every man-child among you shal be circumcised. But that this phrase [seed after Abraham in their generations] should infer that God taketh in believeng parents generating and children begotten even of the Gentiles in the Covenant of grace at least in respect of external ecclesiastical interest is yet to me a riddle, I know no more to be inferred thence but this, that not only Abraham, but also the Israelites his posterity were bound to circumcise their males in their generations. But we have more of this stuffe.

"Whence (saith he) God, when to speak in reference to the Church-seed "as well as to the choise elect-seed of Isaac's line in which the visible, and "not meerly the invisible Church was to be continued, he saith, he will "establish his Covenant with Isaac, not with Ishmael, Ishmael was A-"brahams seed too, and therefore externally in the Covenant, and therefore "sealed; but God knowing that Ishmael would reject this, he warneth A-"braham of it a little before that it might not trouble him afterwards: It is "not to be with him in his generations for that cause Gen.17.8. compared "with Gen.21.9,10,11,12,13. but with Isaac in his generations, God not "opposing therein Isaac to his Church-seed, who by rejecting the Covenant "will and did love, he and his to be cast out.

Answ. Mr. C. in this passage speaks so obscurely that it is hard to say what he drives at, and I may take up the saying, seed me a riddle what's this?

He:

He makes a difference between Gods speech of Ishmael and Isaac, "that "God saith he will establish his Covenant with Isaac not with Ishmael, "it was not to be with him in his generations, who was to be cast out: all which I grant true, and thence infer, that God never made his Covenant with, to, or for Ishmael, and yet he was to be circumcised, and therefore the initial seal (as it is called) was given to him to whom the Covenant belonged not. But Mr. C. using this blind index [whence] leaves us to ghess, what he drives at. [whence] importes it is from somewhat before that God said this of Ishmael, but that before was that God takes in parents generating and children begotten. But me thinks it is from the contrary (as the Apostle conceived Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8, 9.) that God speaks this of Ishmael, who was Abrahams seed, and yet not taken into the Covenant, who yet should be taken in, if yet Mr. C's. principles were good, that "the Covenant was made to "Abraham and his seed in their generations. And how Mr. C. reckons Ish- "macls as not Abrahams Church-seed I know not, nor do I understand how Ishmaels posterity should be cut off from external right to the Covenant: he belog a Church member according to Mr. C's dictates.

Mr. C. then tels us, that God saith in reference to our times he will be a God to the families throughout the earth, and pag. 83. he cites for this purpose the prophecy Ierem 31. 1. but there it is, the families of Israel: But were it, the families throughout the Earth, this proves not that it is Gospel, that Infants of inchurched believers have external Ecclesiastical covenant-interest. If it did, it may as well infer infants of inchurched believers, yea servants (who are part of the families of the earth) to have the same interest, yea all in the world, if we must understand it without limitation, and if with limitation then it is most rightly expounded as the Apostle doth Gal. 3. 8. the promise of blessing all nations, of believers v. 9. and so all the families of the earth; to whom God will be God shall be only believers of all the families of the earth Gentile believers as Mr. C. truly saith, without Infants. As for what Mr. C. observes, that God said to Abraham to be a God to him and his seed in their generations not in their regeneration, it is frivolous. For none of the Gentiles seed are Abrahams seed but by regeneration, and so to be Abrahams seed in their generations applied to Abrahams spiritual or Church-seed among the Gentiles is all one as to be Abrahams seed by regeneration. And for the prophecy of being a God to all the families of the earth, it is meant not of every member of the family, but the meaning is that God would not restrain his Gospel and Church to the Jews, but take in any of the families of the earth, who would embrace it, as when it is said Mark. 16. 15. preach the Gospel to every creature, (that is) to any Gentile as wel as Jews, yet infants not meant. This is proved from the event because parents did believe when children did hate them for it Mat. 10. 35, 36. and the husband was often a believer the wife an infidel. But saith Mr C. "it was usually otherwise, and "God speaks of things as they usually prove: extraordinary occurrences cross not such a rule. To which I say, if the prophecy were as Mr. C. would, that it should be Gospel that God will be a God of children with parents, because he will be god of all the families of the earth, then it must be true of the children of all and every of the families of the earth which recieve the Gospel. Nor are prophecies to be expounded at, if they foretold onely contingents what may be, and what may not be, but what shall certainly be.

nor can ther be a rule, much lefs Gospel, made of that which is uncertain, somtimes it is somtimes it is not, a rule being, as they say in logick, a determinate & known thing. nor is it true that the occurrent of the families being divided in religion was extraordinary. For our Lord Christ speaks of it rather as ordinary & commonly to be expected Matth. 10. 34. 35, 36. But Mr. C. would have a rule from Acts. 11. 14. Acts. 16. 31. Luke. 19. 9. To this may be answered 1 that three instances mak not up an induction of particulars whence a rule may be made. 2. The first instance is not meant of infants, for none are there said to be saved but those that heard the words which Peter spake. The next includes not Infants. For the very next v. 32. shews that by the house were meant those to whom the word of the Lord was spoken. Nor is there any intimation of an infant meant Luke. 19. 9. And it is certain that none of the texts speaks of that which they are produced for, a bare external interest: for they expressly speak of salvation, and therefore if they prove it to be a rule that parents and children are joint Covenanters, or are taken in together they will prove they are saved together, which Mr. C. I suppose will not assert. But some other answers are in my Examen which I must vindicate with these. I had said Examen part. 78 there is a necessity to make τῷ οἴκῳ τούτῳ a restrictive particle and to expound this house Luke 19. 9. of Zacheus his family only in reference to his person. Against this Mr. C. speaks thus.

"Nor by salvation come to his house, is meant the comming of salvation "to himselfe: as if he and his house were all one: nor do I know any pa- "rallel Scripture speaking in such language, that when the scope and intent "is to mention the comming of such or such a mercy to such a person, that "phrase is used to denote the same; that such or such a mercy is come to his "house. what need such a circumlocution? if so intended, the word might more "plainly have been set down, this day is salvation come to this publican, "this person, this man or the like, in as much as he also is become a son of "Abraham. And what though the Greek word be used in Acts 2. 45. and "4. 35. for secundum according as, yet not for quatenus, or in quantum e- "forasmuch as the text and sense thereof are cleare, that it noteth proportion "of such administration, not meerly the cause or reason thereof. Or if it "be supposed to imply the cause or reason thereof its evident it noteth the "proportion also, they gave to every one as, or according as they needed scil: "proportionably to their need: it being regular as to give to the needy, so "to give them according to the measure of their present necessity. But "how that sense will here be fitly applicable I see not, to say that salvation "is come to his house or to him according as he is a Believer, but ra- "ther as our translators render it, it's to be taken as a reason of the "former, salvation is come to this house, forasmuch as he is a son of "Abraham.

Answ. By restraining the salvation come to Zacheus his house to his person, I do not make Zacheus and his house all one, but salvation is come to his house that is, to this place, inasmuch, or in that Zacheus is also become a Son of Abraham. But whereas Mr. C. thinks no Scripture using such language, I will use Grotius his words shewing the contrary even in Luke, because they are full to answer this passage of Mr. C. Annot. in Luc. 19. 9. τῷ οἴκῳ τούτῳ, Synecdoche, Domus enim pro Patre familias dicitur: ita supra. 10. 5. εἰς ἣν

εἰς ἀν οἰκίαν εἰσέρχεσθε, πρῶτον λέγετε, εἰρήνη τῷ οἴκῳ τούτῳ· καὶ ἐὰν μὲν ᾖ ἐκεῖ ὁ υἱὸς εἰρήνης, ἀναπαήσεται ἐπ' αὐτὸν ἡ εἰρήνη ὑμῶν. Domum autem ideo nominásse videtur Christus, ut ostendat rebatam hospitii gratiam. Dixerat enim Zachæo Christus, ἐν τῷ οἴκῳ σῷ δεῖ με μεῖναι. Quare quæ ad hunc locum afferri solent de beneficiis Dei in familiam pii Patris familias, quanquam vera sunt rectè accepta, tamen huc pertinere non arbitror. As for what he saith that καθότι doth not signifie quatenus, he may know that Scapula puts quatenus for the first signification of it. What I said, that καθότι was not only a causal particle, but also a restrictive is not denied by Mr. C. But he thinks it is not good sense to say, according as he is a believer, but rather it is to be taken as a reason of the former. I confess it would not be good sense to say [according, that is after the proportion that he is a believer] but thus it is good sense to make it to note the reason with restriction, and so our Translators do when they render it [for so much.] And this is confirmed in that, if it be expounded that salvation did come to his house, that is his wife, children, servants for this only reason, or cause, because he was a Son of Abraham, in that he was a believer, it may be gathered thence that a mans whole house, or posterity, may be saved barely by his believing: To this Mr. C. saith, Na: but as Acts 16. 31. upon his believing they shall come in the Gospel-way, in the Covenant-road, and ordinary means of salvation. But that this is a false Exposition both places shew. That Luke 19. 9. must needs be meant otherwise than of the means of salvation with which Zachæus might not have been saved: For besides that to his being a Son of Abraham (not a Son of Abrahams Covenant as Mr. C. speaks (though that be true also) but a follower of Abrahams Faith) salvation is certainly annexed; nor had it been so joyous if he had not meant salvation it self: it is put out of all doubt that he means salvation it self by verse 10. where he gives this reason why he said salvation was come to him, though some murmured at his going in to him; for (saith he) the Son of man came to seek and to save that which was lost; therefore he had both sought, and did save Zachæus who was lost. And for the other place it is as frivolous to expound Acts 16. 31. of the means of salvation. For, 1. Pauls Answer is of that of which the Jaylour asked him, else he had deluded him by his Answer; but the Question was not, What may I do to be put in the road, ordinary means of salvation, the Gospel way? But, What may I do to escape the wrath due to me? 2. That salvation is meant which was consequent on his believing, but the ordinary means of salvation was not consequent, but antecedent; that which followed on his believing in Christ was the certainty of salvation. Yea to interpret thus, Believe in the Lord Jesus, and thou shalt be saved, that is thou shalt hear the Word, be Baptized, &c. is so frigid and sapless and interpretation as no considerate man, sure no Interpreter besides Mr. C. that I know, did ever give a sense of it. But Mr. C. tells me:

"Nor is it is sense of salvation for covenant means of salvation, or the "covenant and promise it self unusuall in Scripture. The salvation "which Christ and his Apostles preached, and those Heb. 2. 3. neglected, "was not barely salvation it self, but the promises holding the same "forth, this was that mercy, and riches, and salvation also which came to "the Gentiles, as rejected by the Jewes, Rom. 11. 11, 12, 17, 19, 30 verses "compared. So Esay 51, 6, 8, Gods salvation is his promise or covenant

"on which their salvation did depend, Calvin in locum. 2 Sam. 23. 5. David "speaking of his house or posterity, which albeit it were not so orient "then, yet God had made a covenant with him, scil. in reference to his "house, ordered in all things and sure; And this, scil. this covenant with "me and my house, is all my salvation and all my desire, albeit he maketh "my house not to grow or flourish in such a sort: this covenant then was his "salvation objectivè, causaliter, or instrumentaliter.

Answ. If this sense of salvation for covenant means of salvation, or the covenant and promise it self were usuall in Scripture, yet it could not be the sense, Luke 19. 9. or Acts 16. 31. whether we understand it of the outward means of salvation, the Word and Sacraments, or of the promise of salvation; but must be understood of saving by justification, as Tit. 3. 5, 6, 7. For neither is the outward means of salvation, nor the promise of salvation consequent upon being a son of Abraham, and believing as salvation is in those places. 2. Yet in none of the places alleged by Mr C. is salvation put for being in the Gospel way the ordinary means of salvation competent to infants. And for the covenant or promise of salvation it self, he dares not avouch it to be Gospel, that all the infants of inchurched believers have interest in it, and therefore if salvation Luke 19. 9. were put for the covenant or promise of salvation, yet it would not prove that it belongs to every son of Abrahams whole house, but Mr C. must limit it to the elect, as I do. Yet let us consider his Texts, that it may appear with how little heed he brings Texts, as if he never examined their pertinency, but heaped them together whether to the purpose or not. They are said to neglect salvation, Heb. 2. 3. Ergo, salvation is taken for the outward means of salvation competent to infants or the covenant of salvation. Nay rather salvation is taken for salvation as it was preached and offered, not for the means of salvation competent to infants, nor for the promise of salvation, but for salvation it self neglected in that they did not take hold of it by believing and obeying the doctrine of the Gospel. Acts 28. 28, salvation is said to be sent to the Gentiles, and that they would not hear it. But salvation there is the doctrine of salvation, not competent to infants who could not hear it. Rom. 11. 11, 12, 17, 19, 30, is not meant either of the bare outward means of salvation, or the covenant of salvation only, much less the outward means competent to infants, Esay 51. 6, 8, the term Salvation is not taken for the bare outward means of salvation competent to infants of inchurched believers. If Salvation 2 Sam. 23. 5, did note outward means of salvation, because it is said, This covenant is all my salvation, desire should note outward means of desire, because it is said, This covenant is all my desire. I grant the convenant is termed his salvation Causaliter, or Instrumentaliter, and his desire objectivè. The covenant everlasting in all things ordered and sure, was made with David in reference to his house, not in respect of outward covenant interest to the infants of his house (it's a wonder to me that such a man as Mr C. should so dote, especially after the publishing of Mr Cottons book of the Covenant on that Text) but in respect of the great promise of raising Christ out of his loins, Acts 2. 30. or as it is Luke 1. 69. Raising up a Horn of salvation for his people in the house of his servant David, and this (that is the accomplishment of this promise) was all his salvation and all his desire, although he did not make his house to grow in secular greatness. I deny not but parents faith may be an occasionall means to stave off destruction from, and to further the salvation of their children, as Heb. 11. 7. 23, 25, 27, 28, Jonah 3, & 4. But this I deny, that barely in this respect, in that the parent is such, the infant of an inchurched believer, whether professing or reall, is a visible member of the Christian Gentile Church, and capable thereby of Baptism, or that this is any part of the Gospel. But Mr C. tells us, Shall it then be yielded that such benefit should come as was before spoken of to adult servants of the house, &c. And is here no reference to the poore Babes by reason of their tender age? Hath the mercifull God revealed no ordinary help for them?

Answer. It is yeilded that benefit came to the servant of the Jaylors house, Acts 16. 31. but not the benefit there mentioned barely by the Jaylors faith without their own. Though we conceive infants not meant Acts 16. 31. because the Texts, v. 32, 34, lead us to understand by [the House] the persons who heard the word, believed and rejoyced, yet we exclude not infants from salvation, nor do we deny to the elect the ordinary help of the Spirit regenerating them, and Christs mediation for them, if they die in infancy, although they have not the ordinary outward means of the Word and Sacraments. And therefore he might have spared his pathetick interrogation fitter for an Orator than a Disputant, and for a Papist than a Protestant. Nor need we exclude them from salvation for want of actuall faith because of the words Mark 16. 16. Heb. 11. 6. For either those places may be understood of the act of faith in those to whom the word is preached, or else if it be understood of all infants, they may have faith in seed and act by Immediate operation of the Spirit, and yet they not to be baptized, because it is undiscerned by the Minister of Baptism. The Jaylor might have encouragement to hope for his Infants salvation, though they were not meant in those words, Acts 16. 31. If the election of God be not any thing visibly to comfort him concerning his Children, no more is the covenant of salvation, which is comensurtae with election, Rom 9. 8. nor is discernable any more than election, both are alike discerned by the fruits of repenting and believing.

As for Baptism, it could not assure salvation, nor the want of it debar from it. If it be not said, That the Jaylors house believed before they were baptized, yet it is said in the next verse, and in the verse before, that Paul spake the word to all that were in his house.

&c. As for that he saith, " It follows not that what is applicable to the adult " persons in the house, scil. that joy of faith must exclude children from " baptism whereof they were capable, no more than when it is said, Deut. 12. " 7. that they and their households were to eat before the Lord, and to re- " joyce in all they put their hands to, &c. Because therefore their little chil- " dren could not so actually express joy in what they put their hands unto, " therefore they were none of the household which did eat before the Lord. " Anabaptists would not like this arguing, which urge the joynt communi- " on of the Jewish Children in all sorts of Church-ordinances.

I answer, If by little children be meant infants of a day or two, or some months old (at which age they baptize infants) I affirm that they are not meant by the Household, Deut. 12. 7. and that for the reason given, because they could not eat before the Lord, and rejoyce in all that they put their hands unto, mo. Nor do I know any whom he calls Anabaptists, but would like of this arguing: The Jewish Households were to eat before the Lord, and rejoyce in all that they put their hand to; therefore little children of a day or two, or some months old, are not any part of the households to whom that precept is given, or of whom that which is there said, is there meant. For though we all grant that infants were circumcised, and in my Examen, page 169. I say the males that could eat, though not come to years of discretion fit to receive the Lords Supper, were to eat the Passover, yet I know none of the so called Anabaptists which urge the joynt communion of the Jewish children (infants of a few dayes or months old) in all sorts of Church-ordinances.

What Mr C. saith further, Suppose a mans household, Men, Women and Children, all diseased and cured at the Bath, and afterwards the household expresseth their joy for it by leaping & dancing for joy; and it be said such a man, he and all his were washed at such a Bath, and he & his whole household afterwards even danced for joy: none will say, that because little ones could not so leap for joy, and are excluded from the notion of the [whole household] in this later, therefore they were not in the account of [all his] in the former, if it were granted him, yet the arguing from Acts 16 32. where it is said, That Paul spake the word of the Lord to all that were of the Jaylors house: and v. 34, He rejoyced believing in God with all his house, with the constant narration of the Evangelist in the Acts of the Apostles, mentioning baptizing of none but believers, do evidently shew, that by [all his, v. 33] were meant onely those that heard the word and believed. It is true more or fewer of this or that sort of persons or things born or unborn are meant by the terms [House or Household] as the matters and circumstances of the speech lead to, nor need I say that Gen. 34. 50. under the term House are not meant little children, because of the words Gen. 35. 1, 2, 3, 4. Nor need I deny that Infants are often intended by the term House and Household, as Gen. 30, 30, &c. or that they are chiefly meant thereby, as 1 Sam. 20. 15, &c. or that they are intended when some parts of the family are expresly instanced in, and children not withall mentioned, as Gen. 14. 16. or that children are ordinary instruments to build or hold up a house in naturall, civill, religious and Church-respects too, as Exod. 1. 21. or that the Covenant-expressions of Seed and Seed in their generations, do more directly reach them as such, than either Wives or Servants, as such, as Gen. 17. 7, &c. Yet all this doth neither take away the force of the reasons before given why under [all his, Acts 16. 33.] Infants are not meant, much less prove that which Mr C. should prove (which he must do if he will prove his covenant-interest Ecclesiastical of believers seed thence) that in the Jaylors house were infants, and they baptized.

Ezek. 16. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. hath been often shewed to be impertinently alledged being meant of the Israelites when brought out of Egypt and then God said [live] to them when they had been ready to perish in Canaan first, and then in Egypt by oppression and after brought them to mount Sinai and entered into the covenant of the Law, which Mr. C. indeavoring to apply to an Ecclesiastical external priviledge of Gentile believers infants in the time of the Gospel doth toto Cœlo errare. It is neither said there to Jerusalem then live, nor Micah. 7. 20. "that the same mercy and truth engaged to Abra- "ham and Jacob God did both swear to other Jew fathers of families, or that "there is mention of pardon of sins externally made over to them or plea-

"here for that end v. 18, 19. And though I deny not that in respect of the cove"nant made with Iacob at Bethel Gen. 35. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. God is said
"there to speake with Israel in Hoseah his dayes Hos. 12. 2. yet I deny there is a word that saith that external Church interest of inchurched Gentile believers infants is Gospel. Nor is there any thing 2 Sam. 23. 4, 5. about external covenant-Church-interest, but of the peculiar promise made to David of the continuing the kingdome to his posterity, which having its full accomplishment in Christ Acts. 2. 30. was indeed in that respect the covenant of grace, and was so believed both by David and all believers before Christ, that it should be done, and now by all believers that it is done. But this promise was made of Davids house only not of every particular believers, and therefore it is impertinently brought to prove that it is Gospel that to every believers house God hath made such a Covenant, or that the children of every believer have an external covenant interest with the parent. As for the instances of Eve and Lamech concerning Seth and Noah Gen. 4. 25. and 5. 29. ther's no mention of any Covenant, nor that these were Covenant babes, much less of a Covenant belonging to all believing parents with their children, but an acknowledgment in the former that God had appointed Eve another seed instead of Abel whom Cain slew in respect of the preisthood say some, others in respect of propogating mankind, others because of Christ to come from him: in the other a propheſy of Noah that he should comfort them concerning their worke and toil of their hands, because of the ground which the Lord had cursed, which is concieved by some as meant of the invention of plowing. vide Christoph.
Cartwright in locum: the new Annot. follow that sense. But were it true Eve had respect in that speech Gen. 4. 25. to the promise Gen. 3. 15. and that she believed God would continue the Church in Seth's posterity, and that thence came the distinctions of the sons of God and daughters of men Gen. 6. 1, 2. and La- mech believed that Noah should be a rest, as it were to the Church albeit that corrupt world should be destroyed: yet all this is noteeing to the point Mr. C. should prove, that it is Gospel that the children of every inchurched Gentile- believer have an externall covenant church-interest, there being in those Texts not a word of such an externall covenant Church-interest, nor of any generall promise to them, but onely a mention of speeches which had their rise from particular Revelations about those persons which are there mentioned.

Psalm. 102. 25, 26, 27, there's not a word of the externall Federall Church state of inchurched Gentile Church-believers. But if the Psalm were made towards the later end of the captivity of Babylon, and were the prayer of the Iews, as v. 13, 14, makes it probable, then it seems to be meant, as the new Annotations on Psa. 102. 28, thus, The children of thy servants shall continue] This is the literal (as I may call it) immortality proposed in the Law to them that fear of God, their surviving in their posterity: If of the Saints prophecying of the calling of the Gentiles, or, as some would, of the reingrafting of the Iewes, that Paraphrase of Junius may be right: 1. Vera & germana Ecclesiæ tuæ membra conservabuntur in æternum virtute tua & tibi cura futura sunt. Take it of whomsoever the words may be verified, it mentions no such thing as ex-ternall federall Church-interest, but continuance and establishment before God, that is, as Ainsworth notes, as much as so long as God doth dure, meaning for ever. For assurance whereof they had a word of faith, to wit, some revelation of God, though no such covenant as Mr C. imagines, intituling children of inchurched Gentile-believers to externall Church-interest.

Mr C. urgeth a second Argument to prove the federall interest of believers infants to be Gospel because from the beginning, and he begins with Gen. 3. 15. to prove that it was held as Gospel, that the Species of the infants of believers in Church-estate were taken into the Verge of the Covenant of Grace; as if infants of believers were a Species, and not Individuals, or that it were denied that some infants were taken into the verge of the covenant of grace. And then he dictates without proof, that Adam and Eve were eyed by God as a seminall visible Church; whereas in that promise they were eyed either as the root of mankind, or it as a Church, more likely as the seminall invisible, than as the visible Church. He interprets The Seed of the Woman, not onely of the principall Seed Christ, in, and by whom it was ratified and fulfilled, but her Church-seed also whom the same promise did comprehend. But I would know of Mr C. whether Cain were not her Church-seed, who by Mr C. his Dictates was the infant of inchurched believers. For Adam and Eve were eyed, saith Mr C. as a seminall visible Church? If so, then it is true of Cain, that he should bruize the Serpens head as Eves church-seed; which how he did, unless being of the wicked one, and slaying his brother, as is said of him, 1 John 3. 12. be bruising the Serpents head, I understand not. Many Interpreters comprehend Cain under the Serpents seed; but none I have met with, comprehend him, or any reprobate, under the Womans Seed mystically understood. There are Interpreters that understand the promise, Gen. 3. 15. as made to mankind in respect of the naturall Serpent, and the best of Christs destroying the works of the Divel, as John speaks, 1 Epist. 3. 8. and others of the elect overcoming Satan, and treading him under their feet, Rom. 16. 20. But none do I find who understand it of infants of believers externall Covenant Church-interest. Believers, it is true, are called Abrahams seed, but no where true believers, as such, are called Eves Church-seed, nor doth Eve by faith from thence thus interpret the scope of the promise, Gen. 4. 25, 26. And if infants be meant by the womans seed, Gen. 3. 15. in a spirituall sense of overcoming the Divel, yet no infants but elect can be meant thereby, sith no other overcome the Divell. So that it is so far from being true, that this Gospel of Infants of believers externall Covenant Church-interest, was held in the beginning of the world, Gen. 3. 15. that I rather conceive that it is no elder than Mr C. and am sure is a meer figment. But there is more of this Rubbish to be removed. He tells us,

" The same Doctrine is implicitly held forth, Gen. 9 in the opposition of the " servile condition of Canaan, v. 25, 26. to the future Churchstate of Japhet, v. " 27. the one accursed parent and child to servitude, so that Chams Babes as " soon as born, were to be slaves: but Japhet parent & child, are prophetically " voted to Church-estate in Sems tents, so that inchurched Japhets babes " are actually within Sems Tents so soon as born. As God would accurse " collective Canaan, Noah propheseth that God would enlarge, because collective Japhet to turn into the tents of Sem; which Interpreters expound " of the joyning of the Gentiles unto the visible Church. Now visible " Church-estate supposeth visible Covenant-estate, as is evident.

Answer

Answ. If Mr. C. may be allowed to make Gospel of Doctrine so implicitely held forth as his new Gospel is here; I see not why we should so much blame, as we do, Popes for making new Articles of Faith out of places clearer for their purpose, than this is for Mr. C's. The servil condition of Canaan is referred generally by Interpreters to the bondage they were in when Joshua subdued them, and the Gibeonites were made slaves: which though it did extend to their Children, yet was not such, but that even they were Proselytes many of them to Israel, as Araunah the Jebusite, and after the woman of Canaan is commended for her Faith, Matth. 15. 28. and therefore not excluded from the visible Church. And for the blessing of Japhet, whether we read it, God shall enlarge Japhet, as some, or perswade Japhet, as others, I see not how it is well cleared, that the accomplishment of it is in the Calling of the Gentiles descended from Japhet, as the Greeks, and others into the visible Church, because it is said that Canaan should be servant to Japhet, whereas the Tyrians, and Sidonians, and Carthaginians, and others descended of Canaan were in the visible Church as well, if not as soon, as many of the Posterity of Japhet, as is apparent by the Histories of the Church mentioning Bishops and Synods held among them, and famous Writers. And therefore for my part I encline to think it a Prophecy of the Civil condition rather than Ecclesiastical, whether it were fulfilled in Alexander the great, and the Greek Kings of Asia after him subduing Tyre and Sidon, and possessing Palestina, of which Judea was a part, or of the Romans subduing Carthage and possessing Judea: But be it taken as a Prophecy of the Ecclesiastick state of these people, with what Argument will Mr. C. prove, That the dwelling in the Tents of Sem, is refered rather to the visible, than the invisible Church? They who will have it accomplished when the Gentiles were fellow-heirs of the same body, and partakers of Gods promise in Christ by the Gospel, Ephes. 3. 6. or when the Gentiles were grafted in the stead of the Jewes, Rom. 11. 17. have more reason to understand it only of true believers converted by the Gospel, and so of the Invisible Church, than to understand it of the visible Church as visible, as I have shewed in the first part of this Review: yet were it meant of the visible Church, there is no Argument to prove it meant of the Babes of Japhet as soon as they are born. For what though it be that Canaan, and Sem, and Japhet be all collectively taken, yet Mr. C. himself, pag. 161. hath taught us, That Speeches of the whole Body of the Jewes, collectively taken, are true, in respect of the choice or refuse part; and so may, or rather must be the speeches here necessarily understood, Canaan collective neither comprehending every Canaanite in their greatest servitude, nor collective Sem, or Japhet, comprehending every Israelite or descendent from Japhet, but a notable part. And if those of Japhet that dwelt in the Tents of Sem, that is according to the Exposition of Mr. C. were of the visible Church, were brought in by perswasion, and this perswasion was by the Preaching of the Gospel according to the opinion of many Interpreters, the Argument is forcible to the contrary, that Babes are not hereby meant among the Inhabitants in the Tents of Sem Ecclesiastically expounded, but only such as could hear and understand, and were perswaded by the Gospel to joyn themselves to the visible Church of Christ.

After this Mr. C. dictates out of Gal. 4. 23, 24. Gen. 21. 10. That even as Ishmael and his were exiled out of Abrahams family, and the legal Jerusalem and her Children even the body of the Jewes adult and infant were dis-churched, so Ecclesiastical Isaac, Abrahams Church-seed with their Children should be instated in the visible political Gospel-Church. But the Apostle doth not speak of casting out of the visible Church as such, but out of the Inheritance of Sons, that is justification and salvation, and Jerusalem that now is and her Children is not Jews as Jewes or the body of Iewes or adult and infants as Mr. C. speaks: for then many Myriads of Jewes believing should be cast out: But Ierusalem that now is, notes the legal Covenant, and her children not Infants born at the City Ierusalem, but so many whether of Jews or Gentiles, as sought righteousness by the Law, and not by Christ, as Hagar signifies the legal Covenant, & her Son Ishmael such as were born of the flesh, that is, trusted in the flesh, as the Apostle speaks, Phil. 3. 3. that is, in their legal righteousness, and carnal privileges. And on the other side, Sarah and Ierusalem above, signifie the Gospel-Covenant, vers. 24, 25. which begets Children by Promise, that is, according to the Doctrine of Faith in Christ typified by Isaac, and these that believe are born after the Spirit, and do inherit life, righteousness, salvation. There's not a word of Abrahams Church-seed there, or any where else in Mr. C. his sense; and [Ecclesiastick Isaac] is a new Notion, and a meer figment of Mr. C. in his sense; and [the casting out] is meant of the invisible Church of the saved, such as do reject Christ, and adhere to the Law; and the taking in is meant of the taking into the invisible Church of the justified and saved, them that believe in Christ, or are united to him, and not of an in-Churching of meer visible Professors, Parents, and Children into the visible Church by an outward rite.

The three Texts next alleged by Mr. C. are all mis-alleged to prove an external Covenant Church Interest of the Infants of in-Churched-believers, to wit, Esay 65. 20. the impertinency of which to this end, is shewed in the Second Part of this Review Sect. 11. the impertinency of Isa. 61. 9 and Ezek 37. 27. in this Part of the Review before Mr. C. proceeds to a Third Argument.

In answer to which I deny, 1. the Major, or sequele, that [if Infants and little ones of visibly believing parents in their Church estate, before they can make any personall confession or profession of faith in the covenant, yet then are Abrahams Church-seed, then is it Gospel that the promises belong to them.] Nor is it in substance or circumstance the Apostles, Gal. 3. 16. To Abraham and his seed are the promises made. For though it is granted, that it is Gospel that to Abraham and his seed the promises are made, yet it is utterly false that there is meant a seed of Abraham, who are neither elect nor true believers, but onely the naturall children of Gentile inchurched believers, yea of Gentile visible inchurched professors of Faith, whom Mr C. in a new language of his own without Scripture, calls Abrahams Church-seed; yea, the Text is so manifestly against it, that I wonder Mr C. could imagine any Reader would receive his Dictates about this Text. For the Apostle expresly links the promises to Christ as the seed of Abraham, and whether Christ be understood personally or mystically, as Beza and others, yet by the seed are not meant the fictitious Church-seed of Abraham, to wit, the naturall children even of infants of visible inchurched Gentile-believers, or visible professors of Faith, but true believers, or elect persons, who alone are members of Christ mystical.

still. And the promises are of the Spirit through faith, v. 14. the inheritance, v. 18. life and righteousness, v. 21, 22, which are made to none but true believers, or elect persons. To which I add that external covenant-interest (if there were such) is never in Scripture termed the Gospel, no not in those who rightly have it, as true believers, but Christs dying for our sins, and justification by faith in him.

2. I also deny the minor " [that the Infants and little ones of visibly believing parents in Church-estate before they can make any personal confession or profession of faith in the Covenant, yet then are Abrahams Church-seed] Mr. C. takes upon him to prove the minor; 1. in those of Abrahams loins in the elect seed. I should think (saith he) it should not be questioned, but yet it hath by some; that Infants while Infants and till believers are not in the covenant &c. And by such other speeches of our Adversaries in this point, the covenant-right not only of the individual Infants of believers, but the Covenant estates of that species and sort of persons is wholly denyed, and so since it's evident and acknowledged that some are elected of that sort, yet it's denied that they have part in the word of Gods covenants, so that if they die in Infancy, as many of the choise seed of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob did &c. Yet that ordinary means of saving efficacy in all the saved elect is denied, contrary to that principle Rom. 9. 6. But more hereof anon: but Rom. 9 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. is so clear for it I wonder any deny it. Isaac and Jacob are made precedential instances of interest not only of election, but of Gods calling unto the fellowship of his free covenant without respect either to their desire or indeavour of it personally v. 16.

" Answ. There are sundry reasons which make me conceive that in this and many other passages in this argument Mr. C. aimed at my self. Mr. Robert Baillee minister of Glasgow in Scotland had in the 2. part of his Dissuasive intituled Anabaptism ch. 4. pag. 92. charged me with spoiling all Infants of all interest in the Covenant of grace, and denying all right to the new Covenant to Iewish Infants till in their ripe years they became actuall believers. From which false criminations I have vindicated my self in the Addition to my Apology printed at London 1652. Mr. C. here tels of some " who speak as if they " held that Infants while Infants, and till believers are not in the covenant, " that wholly deny the covenant estate of that sort of persons, though they " acknowledg some of them are elected of that sort, yet it's denied they have " part in the word of Gods covenant, and if they die in Infancy that ordinary " means of saving efficacy in all the saved elect is denied them. I have reason to conceive that these are calumnies of others, sure I am if they rae meant of my self they are calumnies, and so shewed in my Books before cited and in other of my writings. From which that I may stand free I further express my self distinctly thus. 1. That by [in the Covenant of grace] I mean the promise of righteousness and external life by Christ Jesus. 2. That I mean by [being in the Covenant of grace or belonging to it] the having this promise made to them by God whether Gen. 17. 7. or Gen. 3. 15. according to the speech of the Apostle Tit. 1. 2. that God promiseth eternal life προ χρονων αιωνιων before the times of the ages, that is afore any age of man was past. 3. that all the elect of God whether children of believers or

unbelievers dying in Infancy, or at the riper age are in this covenant of grace, that is, God hath promised eternal life to them by Christ, they are given to Christ to save, are children of the promise Rom. 9. 8. 4. That all these are Abrahams seed meant in the promise Gen. 17. 7. though not actual believers. 5. That all these have Christs merits and the spirits inbeing in them afore they dye as ordinary means of salvation. 6. That none but these elect persons have the said covenant of grace or promise of righteousnes and life by Christ made to them. 7. That no where visible professers of faith is in the Covenant of grace. 8. That the natural child of a believer, no not the naturall child of Abraham the Father of believers was or is in the covenant of grace, as their child, or barely by vertue of their faith, but onely the elect of them by vertue of their election by God. 9. That these elect persons, though elected, and having the promise made to them, yet have not the things promised (if of years of understanding) till they do believe, they are not justified till then, and so are not actuall partakers of the covenant of grace, or not actually therein. 10. That no where in Scripture is the naturall child of a Gentile-believer, or a visible professor of Christian faith, termed Abrahams Seed, and the term of Abrahams Church-seed, applied to such is a novel expression, not grounded on Scripture. 11. That the formall, proper, and adequate reason why any was to be circumcised, was, not his being in the covenant made with Abraham, nor is the reason why any should be baptized, barely his interest in the covenant of grace, but the command of God, in the one, appointing males of eight dayes old of Abrahams house, and Proselytes thereto to be circumcised; in the other, disciples by their own profession of faith in Christ to be baptized. 12. That the use of the terms, Being in the outward Covenant, externall covenant-interest of Infants, and such like are mistakes upon the imagined connexion between the covenant of grace and the initiall seal, as they call it. Now to Mr C. his proof.

His proof is from Rom. 9. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 16. That elect infants were Abrahams seed in covenant, which I deny not, but say, that Rom. 9. 8. proves not only, that all the elect seed be included in the promise, Gen. 17. 7. but also that the Apostle expresly affirms, that onely the elect are the children of the promise understood spiritually, and they only *Abrahams seed. But what Mr C. saith and I grant, proves not that Infants and little ones of visibly believing parents in Church estate, before the Infants can make any personal confession or profession of faith in the covenant, are Abrahams Church seed to whom the promise, Gen. 17. 7. belongs, but the contrary: Nor is it hereby proved, that such Infants are covenanters ingaged, or as Ifants of Abraham and Isaac, children of the promise, as if the formalis ratio of their childrens being children of the promise, were Abrahams and Isaacs believing and inchurching, as Mr. C. seems to conceive, it being contrary to the expres determination of the Apostle, Rom 9. 8. which excludes Ishmael and Esau from being children of the promise. Nor is it true, that the change of Abrahams name, Gen. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, &c. compared, proves that the children of believers inchurched are Abrahams seed, but onely that believers of all nations are such, Rom. 4. 17.

Mr C. glanceth at a passage in my Examen, page 96. wherein I say, that the Apostle, Rom. 4. 12. makes Circumcision, a Seal of the righteousnes of faith, but not to all, or only circumcised persons, but to all believers whether Jews or Gentiles; so that according to the Apstles doctrine, Circumcision in as much as it sealed to Abraham the righteousnes of faith, which he had yet being uncircumcised, so that it is so far from being true that persons have the promise, therefore they must have the seal in their persons; that it follows, persons have the promise, therfore they have the seal in Abraham, hough they never are nor may be sealed in their own persons.

" To this Mr. C. saith, " The Apostles discourse cleareth it to be other" wise, his scope being not to infringe any Gospel-right to the Gospel-seal,
" but to take off any reasoning in point of justification from any work of " the Law considered apart from Christ: As for the sealing of Abrahams be" lieving children the Gentiles in Abraham sealing, if that were intended, as " much might have been affirmed of the believing children of Abraham, as they " such, and so the circumcising of such Iewes at least had been more than " were needed to far forth.

I reply, I grant the scope to be to prove Iustification by faith; but I say, in respect of the present point the words prove no more, but that Abrahams personall circumcision was to him and all that belive as he did, whether Jewes or Gentiles, the seal of the righteousnes of Faith. And I do acknowledge, that if that were all the use of circumcision, there was no simple necessity of any Iew believer to be circumcised in their own persons, yet God might think good ex abundanti, more abundantly to shew unto the heirs of promise the immutability of his Councell, as the words are, Heb. 6. 17. and therefore would have them also circumcised in their own persons to that end. But however there were other ends of circumcision, as the prefiguring of Christ to come, the distinguishing the Israelites from other people, &c. And therefore notwithstanding Abrahams circumcision sealed to Jew-believers the righteousnes of faith, yet it was not needless that they should themselves be circumcised in their own persons for the ends to which God appointed it. And the command being expres for their circumcision, they could plead no exemption from their personall circumcision upon that pretence that quatenus believers they were circumcised in the circumcision of their father Abraham while the command stood in force, no not though all the ends had ceased, as that Christ were come, all other nations were circumcised as well as they, &c. I say, had these ends and all other ceased, yet without Gods releasing of the command, they were to be circumcised.

How

How little that Act of Christ, Luke 18. 15, 16, 17. with Mark 10. 16. makes for Mr C. his purpose, is shewed in the second part of the Review before, and so likewise how impertinently Esay 61. 9. & 65, 22. are alleged, is shewed before in this part of the Review. I neither grant that incburched Gentile visible believers are any other where called Abrahams spirituall seed: Nor do I think Anabaptists wil grant, that if they were, then are their children also.

But, saith he, " The parents being not meerly abstractively considered " the Covenant-seed, Gen. 17. 7. but as in reference to their childen with " them. For the seed of Abraham to whom the Covenant Gen. 17.7 is made, " is the seed in their generations, which necessarily imply and suppose as the " parents generating, so the children begotten of them, the parents make not " the generation alone, nor the children alone, but joyntly considered toge- " ther.

Answer. No person is the Covenant-seed, Gen. 17. 7. but Abrahams seed, which being meant of his naturall seed, so it includes all descended from him by Isaac and Jacob in their future generations; if meant of his spirituall seed [their generations] notes either the ages in which they were born by natural generation, or by spiritual regeneration by Fathers in Christ, who beget them by the Gospel 1 Cor. 4 15.

" But, saith Mr. C. " Here Anabaptists sever the subject parties taken into " the covenant-consideration, they agree it's Abraham & his spiritual seed, " but leave out the notation of the seed, scil. seed in their generations the " proselyte Gentiles in Abrahams house, they were not his carnall seed; " why are they then sealed, but as they were Abrahams spiritual and Church- " seed.

Answer. We sever not the subject parties taken into Covenant consideration, as Mr. C. speaks, but distinguish them: Nor do we leave out that Notation of Seed, scil. in their generations; but take it in, as I have said. the Proselytes, if believers, as Abraham, they are his seed by Faith, if no, they are not his seed according to Scripture. Abrahams Church-Seed is a new-devised term without Scripture: Yet the proselytes and their children were to be circumcised by vertue of the command, whether they had any part in the covenant or not, as being in his house, though not of his seed. And if by Gods solemnly enjoyning a Seal to a Blank, or a seal to no Covenant of his, be meant, that circumcision of the Proselytes was a token of that Covenant which was no covenant of Gods, I deny it; it was a Covenant of Gods, in which he made many promises, it was not a token of a Covenant that assured nothing, as a paper in which nothing is written (which we call a Blank) there were promises and persons specified in the covenant. But if the meaning be this, That God solemnly enjoyned that such should be circumcised to whom no promise was made in that Covenant, I grant it true Ishmael, &c. and count it no absurdity to say, God in that sense did solemnly enjoyn the Seal to be put to a Blank.

Circumcision, in the Institution of it, was a token or signe of the Covenant made with Abraham, Rom. 4. 11. to be a Seal of the righteousness of Faith, is said of no ones circumcision but Abrahams. What [Mr C. means, That it was a seal of the righteousness of Faith, not so much Subjectivè as Objectivè, Rom. 4. I understand not, except this be his meaning, that it did seal not so much the righteousnes of faith to the persons circumcised, as this truth, That righthecusnes is by faith. Being understood of Abrahams personall circumcision, I conceive it sealed both wayes, of any other mans circumcision; I find not the Apostle calling it the Seal of the righteousnes of Faith. But of Seals and sealing I have spoken sufficiently in sundry Sections before. I shall not contend about that passage, That the Baptism of Simon Magus was in the nature of it, and Gods institution, a visible Seal of the most spirituall part of the covenant, and yet did not Iscariot and Magus partake of the spirituall part of the Covenant, my former explication being remembred. And I take it as true which next followes, It is peculiar to the elect to be in the covenant in respect of the participation of the saving efficacy of it, Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. And hence observe. that none but the elect are rightly said to be in the covenant of grace: For none are in the covenant of grace but they to whom it is made (for what is it to be in the covenant, but to have it made to him? So the Directory, so Rom. 9. 8.) But they to whom the covenant of grace is made, are the elect onely. The covenant of grace is the covenant of Saving grace, Heb. 8. 10, 11, & 10. 16. Rom. 11. 26. 1 Cor. 11. 25. Heb. 13. 20. of Regeneration, Iustification, &c. But that is made onely to the Elect: Ergo. The Minor is proved thus, They to whom it is made, they have the saving efficacy, otherwise God should make it and not perform it, and so his Word fall, which is not to be granted: But the elect onely have the saving efficacie, as Mr. C. confesseth. Ergo. I deny not, Reprobates may in respect of their own profession, be said to be externally in the covenant of grace, in appearance to men, in the face of the visible Church, but not in respect of Gods promise and before him, which they say is sealed in the Sacrament. Nor do I deny the appointment of God to be to circumcise or baptize Reprobates as well as elect, and that the nature of these ordinances is the same on both sorts, though the use and efficacy in part be various. Nor do I deny the covenant with Abraham one, yet hold it is mixt, which is proved from the words of Mr C. here in that it holds forth variety of covenant-blessings; some more common to all, and some more peculiar to a few. But I deny the Goipel doth hold forth blessing, common to any other than the godly. It is true, there are promises of this life, 1 Tim. 4. 8. 1 Cor. 3. 22. Mark 10. 30. and Reprobates have some such outward things as the elect, as cloaths, aire, life, but not as blessings from the Gospel, neither sanctified in the same manner, nor upon the same tenure. As for circumcision, it was the covenant metonymically onely, and did confirm the whole covenant sacramentally to elect and reprobate.

Mr. C. yet adds, " That if that sort of persons, to wit, Infants, or Abrahams spirituall seed without personall actuall faith by which it's said onely persons come to be Abrahams seed, it's enough to prove, that Gentile inchurched believers infants are the the seed of Abraham. But that is fully proved from Gal. 3. 7. 6. 9. 16. 27, 28, 29. where, by Christ, is meant Christ mysticall, that is, Christ with his Body the Church, as 1 Cor. 12. 13. If then Infants be not Abrahams seed, then are they not members of Christ, nor of the invisible Church, and so are without salvation.

To

To which I answer, That I never denied that elect infants were Abrahams spiritual seed, nor said onely by actuall faith persons are Abrahams spiritual seed, but grant that some Infants are Abrahams spirituall seed, whether by election onely, or by seed of faith, or by such a special secret work as is unknown to us, like Jacobs struggling in the womb, and taking hold on his brothers heel, or John Baptists leaping in the womb of his mother for joy, and so are of the body of Christ, and members of the invisible Church, and thereby saved. But I deny that infants of Gentile believers, whether elect or not, are Abrahams spiritual seed, and in that respect in the covenant of grace or promise of God being their God, and thereby admitted to baptism.

" But Mr. C. adds. " I say to exclude that sort of persons scil. believers " Infants from being a part of the visible-church in genera is to exclude " them from any ordinary state and way of salvation. Nay I will go further " and say, that for any to suppose all the individual Infants and each of them " which came of such inchurched parents, not to be also parts of this body of " Christ the visible Church, and consequently not to be Abrahams spiritual " seed, is to exclude them from a state and way of salvation. In respect to " the ordinary course thereof, and so to leave them all under the consideration of such a way to be saved in as is only extraordinary: ordinarily they " are not to be supposed to be saved, or at least it is not to be supposed, that " ordinarily, or that in an ordinary way any Pagans, or Turkes out of the " visible Church, or any in and of Rome as Tridentine and Antichristian " should be saved: yet God may and somtimes doth, and will have some " souls brought on to him thence, and even from amongst Mahometans " &c. But all will yeild I suppose that this is an extraordinary case: and so " crosseth not that rule, that without even the visible Church there is no salvation; scil. Taking the maxime in reference to ordinary times, and " with all to the ordinary course and way of attaining unto salvation.

Ans. Mr. C. his drift I conceive is to prove, that if Infants of believers be not visible Church-members they have no ordinary state and way of salvation, and that the maxime is true, that out of the visible Church in reference to ordinary times and withal to the ordinary course and way of attainining unto salvation there is no salvation. Against which I oppose that if the maxim out of the Church there is no salvation, be understood of the visible Church, & the ordinary state & way of salvation, it will as well concern Mr. C. to shew how children of believers endued with a reasonable soul and humane body, yet still-born or dying in their mothers womb with her and never borne are provided for an ordinary way of salvation as wel as for us concerning Infants born alive. I suppose they will not say Infants dying in their mothers womb and there buried, and never brought to light, are visible members of the Church, who were never visible men, nor that they are to be baptized. What ordinary way & state of salvation external have they more than Mahometanes? If it be said they have election, the vertue of Christs death the promise of God according to election, the secret work of the spirit I grant it, and the same may be said of Infants living, nor can it be certainly and without doubt denied of Papists and Mahometans infants. Though I confess it is far more probable that oridnarily God gives these means to Infants of believers whether Churched or unchurched than to the Infants of others, and rather to the Infants of true believers, than meer

professors of faith. Yet I dare not determine certainly thereof because of the expres resolution of the Apostle *Rom.*9. concerning Ishmael and Esau, and his reference thence v. 15, 16, 18, 20, 21, 22. And if he count it certain there is no salvation out of the visible Church in an ordinary way there being no ordinary way to estate Infants in the visible church (which I grant not as well as he) but baptism, then he doth as good as affirm, that ordinarily no infant is saved without baptism, which is either the Popish tenent or not much short of it. This will the more urge M. C. because he limits the promise to Abrahams visible Church-seed in reference to Church-covenant, and I suppose they of N. E. baptize not infants of parents not inchurched; what ordinary way of salvation have children of believers not inchurched, who are not accounted visible Church members when their parents were not? And the like must be said of the children of excommunicate persons, of uncertain originall Apostates, who are with them, or some of them no visible Church-members: how are they in the visible Church, and what provision is for them? For my part I conceive that if the matter be impartially considered, I think their doctrine is pressed with the like difficulty that mine is. I affirm that believers infants, and infants of unbelievers, if elect, are certainly saved ordinarily, that is, according to the constant course of Gods purpose by vertue of Gods promise, Christs death, and the Spirits secret working, though they be neither baptized, nor are visible Church-members: and I think they can say no more concerning infants of believers dying with the mother in the womb, and never brought to light, which is no unusuall thing. I say that it is very probable because of generall indefinite promises and frequent experience that the infants of believing parents are elect, when the infants of Infidels are not. Yet I cannot affirm they are elect, because the promises are not universall to every believers infants; yea, if they were, as Pedobaptists would have them, universall in respect of externall privileges (which is not true) yet there could be no certainty of election and salvation inferred thence. And therefore though there be a better ground of hope of the salvation of a believers infant than others; yet in a question concerning the certainty of the event whether they are saved or no, I must suspend my judgement, and leave it to Gods secret will, having no rule revealed whereby to determine it. If Mr. C. assure any more, I conceive he will deceive himself and others. Dr. Twiss. Animadvers. in Corvin. pag. 35. saith thus: Ad hæc fortè in ea sententia sunt nostri Theologi ut propositum Dei de salvandis fidelium liberis in infantili ætate morientibus haud liquidò satis demonstrari in sacris literis. Et sanè non diffiteor exitia hujus rei suppeditari nobis ex sacris literis inducta, quibus tamen acquiescimus. But Mr C. adds,

" Such then as exclude all Infants of believers one or other from the notion " of Abrahams spirituall seed, from covenant and Church-estate, they put them " in the Pagans, Gentiles estate, of which Paul speakes, who being they " and others strangers from the promise and covenants, and from the visible Church: they place them in that respect in an estate of persons that are " without God in the world, and so under the Divel the God of the world; " and in an hopeless estate, neither they nor any for them can have any ground- " ded hope of them, they are without hope, in regard at least of any ordinary " way or mean of salvation Eph. 2. 11, 12.

Answ. I exclude not all infants of believers one or other from the notion of Abrahams ſpirituall ſeed, from Covenant and Church-eſtate, meaning this of being Abrahams ſpirituall ſeed, and included in the covenant of grace and inviſible Church, which alone can make God to be their God, eſtate them in Chriſt, be the ground of a certain hope of their ſalvation, and that according to an ordinary way. They that teach them to be viſible Church-members, and baptize them, cannot give parents a grounded certain infallible hope of ſalvation without this ordinary way; I aſſen, nor can they give more aſſurance of that way of Baptiſm, than may be given without it, baptiſm not ſaving without the anſwer of a good conſcience towards God, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Neither that nor their imaginary viſible Church-membership aſſuring that they are not under the Divel, nor without God in the world. And if they do, they do it without Scripture, and experience doth too often refute them. Mr C goes on.

Nor let it ſeem grievous that our friends and brethren in the Lord of name and worth in the Church, have, as it ſeemeth, urged that in caſe of ſuch an excluſion of believers children, they are made as Turks or Indians, ſo far forth in regard that not being in covenant nor Church-eſtate, the Apoſtle truly ſtates ſuch perſons caſes, they are without hope, and without God in the world: He maketh no diſtinction of potentia remota and propinqua in that caſe.

Anſw. It is a grievance to us their brethren in the faith, that Mr M. and ſuch men of name and worth in the Church, ſhould ſo miſrepreſent our Tenet as they do, with whom Mr C. ſeems to concur. Mr. M. his calumny in miſrepreſenting my words in his Defence, part 2. ſect. 10. as if I had ſaid, That I know no warrant to think election to reach believers children more than unbelievers children, that I know no more promiſe for them than for the children of unbelievers, is anſwered in my Apologie, ſect. 14. I have ſhewed here and in my Examen, Part. 2 Sect. 10. and in my Apologie Sect. 14. that I put the elect of them into the covenant of grace, and in the Inviſible Church, and this onely is the ground of a ſure hope of their intereſt in God, and Chriſt, and ſalvation. And that they are elect I give 4 probable reaſons which are not competent to the infants of Turks and Pagans, 1. generall indefinite promiſes not made to Turkes and Pagans, 2. The payers of parents and godly for them, 3. Their education and breeding among the godly, whereby they are in a neerer poſſibility to be godly, than others. 4. The frequent experience that the children of the godly prove ſuch; which yet becauſe thoſe promiſes are not particular and definite, that is, determining this particular good of ſalvation to each particular perſon, & prayers are made and heard with limitation of Gods will & the education may fail in its effect, and experience is not ſo conſtant, but that it falls out otherwiſe in many, therfore there's no ſufficient ground for certain hope but only probabie. Mr M. Mr C. and others, aſſign 2 more, to wit being in Covenant & Church-eſtate. But Mr C. pag. 93. confeſſeth, It is peculiar to the elect to be in covenant in reſpect of the ſaving efficacy of it, Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. And that being in covenant and Church-eſtate, which he makes common to all, elect and reprobate, cannot aſſure them certainly of ſalvation; therefore were it granted that there were ſuch a covenant of Church-privileges and that they were viſible Church-members and to be baptized (which I conceive to be fictitious) yet this could not make the hope of their ſalvation more than probable, no nor ſo probable as the reaſons I give, where I infer that they do us wrong to inſtil into peoples minds that which tends to make us odious, that our doctrin takes away all grou dof hope of infants salvation, dying in infancy, whē in truth the promise of salvation as we assign it is the same wth the promise as they assign it, & the grounds we give of the hope of the infants interest, are as sufficient to make it probable as theirs, if they were supposed true, which yet notwithstanding all they say, we know are fictitious. Now hereby is a plain answer to Mr. C. If Infants of Turks be any of them elected, which Mr. C. seems to grant when he saith, God may and sometimes doth and will have some souls brought on to him from Rome, and even amongst the Mahometans, &c. We do grant they are really and before God in as good a condition as believers children, though not in appearance to us and in respect of their present estate, nor can they be said to be without Christ, without God in the world in all respects. But in respect of present state and appearance to us, neither Infidels nor their children are in any condition so hopefull as believers and their children, because of the generall indefinite promises they have, the benefit of prayers, which are not with a like ardency: for Infidels though we pray for them also in a more generall manner, the benefit of their education, which if it be to Indians children, yet not with a like care. And if it be, we should not think it absurd to say, that if they be brought into godly families, their salvation is hopefull as well as believers children. Else why doth Mr Cotton conceive in the way of the Churches of New England, in the latter end they may be baptized. And the experience is very frequent concerning godly mens children proving godly, but very rare that an Infidels child living among Infidels, is converted. And for a word of promise for faith and hope to rest upon, as I said, it hath been shewed, that neither Mr M. nor Mr C. nor any other can produce any promise in Scripture that assures the salvation of an Infant of a reall believer, much lesse of a meer professor dying in infancy; yea, to retort Mr C. his Argument, we are not to sorrow without hope, concerning our brethren that dye at age: yet we have no certain word of faith to relye on, but that God will be the God of elect and true believers, Luke 20. 36 37, 38. But that this promise reacheth to our brother deceased at age, we know onely probably, though the probability is greater by reason of his profession and conversation, yet at most but probable, notwithstanding those signes, we are not certain he is elect, he may live and dye an hypocrite. Many are canonized for Saints in Heaven who perhaps are among unclean spirits in hell. We therefore in this case are fain to suspend our judgment about the certainty, and to content our selves with a likely hope upon probable grounds. And so we may do concerning our children according to my doctrine, though I confesse the hope is more probable of such a one than of an Infant; yet sometimes also there appears as much cause of fear. However this I say, that were it not to make our doctrine of Antipædobaptism odious to parents, who being indulgent to their children, are easily moved to passion towards them, that say any thing of them that seems harsh, and are very much inclined to them and their words that tend to feed them with such conceits as occasion their hopes, though but fond, of good to them, our doctrine would be free from this exception. But such courses should be far from men of worth, who should present truth nakedly, without respect to mens affections. As Mr C. tells us, he hath been the longer in proof of this seventh Conclusion, in that it is the very Hinge of the Controversie: So I have answered it more fully, though it have been very tedious to me by reason of Mr. C. his confused and impertinent Dictates. And I do declare that I do not see reason from that which Mr. C. hath said to unsay what I said, that the children of believers covenant-estate, at least Ecclesiastical, as asserted by Pædobaptists, is a new Gospel, not elder than Zuinglius, and therefore rejecting it, I shall hold that to be Gospel which I find so called, 1 Cor 15.1,2,3,4,&c. Rom. 1.16,17. *Gal.*3.8. 2 Tim, 2.8. *Rom.*2.16. and such like places and wish Mr. C & others of his mind, who upon such uncertain and impertinent allegations, impose their Gospel upon mens consciences, to ponder with more seriousness the Apostles words', Gal. 1. 9. If any man preach any other Gospel than that ye have received, let him be accursed.

SECT. XLV.

Mr C. his Answers to objections against his seventh Conclusion, part. 1. c. 3. Sect. 9. of his Just Vindie. are considered, and Mr. Bl. his Tenents concerning the geneall term of a Covenant, that it is a mutuall agreement.

I Wave the first Objection here, and for my speeches about Pharez, Zara, and others, and that of the Jewes being branches of the Olive by their birth, that I forget not my self, and how far I own them, and wherein I correct them, or explain them, may be seen in the first part of the Review, *Sect.*6. 19, 21.

The second objection is thus, If Infants be in the Covenant of grace, and born so, then such Infants were born in the Covenant, and never out. And besides, Gods Covenant of saving grace being absolute, and undertaking to give saving grace to such as are in covenant with him, all such must be saved, unless God fail of his truth.

To this Mr. C. answers, 1. That Covenant of grace, as I. S. acknowledgeth it to be mentioned, Deu. 29. it was made with little ones then unborn intentionally, v. 14, 15. as well as with those then present actually: So that when they were born, they were born in the covenant and never out. As much may be said of the Infant Elect seed, or children of the promise dying infants, they were born so, and never out of that estate after they were actually existent: yea they were all girded in the covenant, Jer. 13.

Answ. The passage Deut. 29. 15. is not meant of Gods covenant or promise to them, but their promise or covenant to God, as appears in that v. 14. Moses is said to make the covenant with them, that is, to engage them in their own persons for themselves and little ones to own God and his lawes, and v. 15. it is said, before the Lord our God, which shewes that the person making that covenant, v. 14. was distinct from the Lord, and this Covenant be made with him that was not there with them that day, to wit, the unborn posterity, as rightly M. C. and others conceive, and this Covenant Moses made with them by engaging them by an oath of their Princes and progenitors, in the same sense as Saul and the Israelites were bound to the Oath made by Joshuah and the Princes of Israelites to the Gibeonites. So that those unborn are not said to be in Gods Covenant of grace as made by him, and so intentionally onely because not existent; but they were in covenant with God virtually, because of the Obligation which lay on them by their progenitors and Princes engagement for them to take the Lord for their God, and upon their obedience God engaged himself to establish them to be a people unto himself. And this, I confess, did ever oblige them; but it is nothing to the objection which speaks of Gods Covenant as made to infants, not of infants Covenant as made to God. Nevertheless I confess what ever were the Authors meaning in that Objection, it is no absurdity to grant, that elect infants dying so, were born in the Covenant and never out, that is, they had the promise of God made to them at, yea and before their birth, and in respect of the actuall possession of the benefits of the covenant, they were in the covenant before their death and never out. But so are not elect infants dying in respect of outward Church-privileges, they are not born visible Church-members, nor subject to be baptized.

2. Saith Mr C. Gods Covenant did not barely offer, or promise to covenant; but made a Covenant, a Covenant and an Oath with them that day, Deut. 29. 12, 13, 14, 15. and amongst other promises engaged himself to circumcise their hearts chap. 30. 6. yet were not all in heart circumcised, and yet the promise of God failed not, being in the generall propounded to them conditionally, and not as it is said here absolutely, at least it had reference to them all in common. The word of the promise took not effect in as many of the Jewes to whom the covenant promises externally belonged, yet it followed not, that therefore it took no effect at all, and that God was unfaithfull, for it took effect in others, Rom. 3. 3. and 9. 6, 7, 8. And so here.

Answ. What this is to the objection which is here answered, I do not well understand. Gods covenant of saving grace, whether expressed Gen. 17. 7. to Abraham and his spirituall seed, or Heb. 8. 10 or elsewhere, is absolute in respect of the persons to whom, God takes into covenant persons of his own good pleasure without any previous disposition moving him to promise to this rather than that, though some benefits of that covenant are promised upon condition, and all those to whom it is made, must be saved, unless God fail of his truth. But for the Covenant, Deut 29. 12, 13, 14, 15. it was their covenant to God, as well as Gods covenant to them, nor was it the covenant of grace according to the Gospell made to Gentile-believers, but a nationall engagement of the Israelites to observe the lawes of God which Moses made with them at Gods command in the Land of Moab, besides the Covenant which he made with them in Horeb, and Gods engagement thereupon to take them for a people while they observed his Laws In which covenant first Moses tells them what God hath done for them, notwithstanding their dulness to perceive it; and then ejoyns them, v. 9 to keep the words of the Covenant and do them, that they might prosper in all that they did: and then tells them, that they all stood there in a full Assembly, that they might be engaged for themselves, their little ones, strangers within their Camp, and posterity to observe Gods Commands, and then tells them that God would establish them for a people unto himself, that is, that he would continue them to be a distinct people to him from other nations, and be a God to them according to his oath to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, that is, to drive out the Canaanites, to give them their Land, to make them great and prosperous, which is manifestly a covenant proper to Israel, and it is not denied to be propounded to them conditionally, and to have reference to them all in common, and was of the same sort with the covenant at mount Sinai, not the covenant of regenerating and saving grace made to the Gentiles, tiles, called the new Covenant confirmed by Christs blood, Deut. 30. 6. God promised to circumcise their heart and the heart of their seed: which promise I do not now conceive to be conditionall: For though v. 2. there be a condition expressed, yet I think it is not a condition of the promise v. 6. but of the promise v. 3. to wit, of restoring from captivity upon their seeking of God. But if it be made a condition of the promise v. 6. yet it is not a condition competent to Infants, nor is it there made to any but the Israelites, and to them onely at the time of their return from captivity in reference to their re-establishing in the land of Canaan, and so was not common to them all, much less to all believing Gentiles at all times. It is untrue that the promise of saving grace is made to any onely externally, or that it takes not effect in all to whom it is made, or that any such thing is meant Rom. 3. 3. & 9. 6, 7, 8. though I deny not that there were many promises to Israel after the flesh, which being indefinite in respect of persons, and conditionall upon obedience to the lawes given by Moses, took not effect in all the Israelites, though in generall propounded, and therefore notwithstanding some attained them not, yet the faith of God was not without effect. But all this is nothing to the objection concerning Gods covenant of saving grace in Christ, which is not shewed to be made to any but the saved, nor shewed to be in respect of the persons taken into covenant conditional.

3. Saith Mr. C. This Argument supposeth that one cannot be within the Covenant of saving grace externally, but they must be in a saving estate, the contrary whereunto appeareth, Concl. 3. And it is said of sundry illegitimate Jewish Children, that they were within the covenant of saving grace, namely externally: for the Author cannot mean other. And yet of all such who will say, they were all in a saving estate? Even Esau's Birthright was more than right to Isaac's temporall estate as born of Isaac, it was a Church blessing as well as a Naturall and Civill.

Ans. That any one is in the covenant of saving grace onely externally, is not proved before. My words Examen pag. 73. which Mr. C. seems to mean, [but Pharez and Zarah of Judah and Tamar, Jephte of Gilead, and many others were within the covenant of saving graces and Church-privileges] are not meant of the covenant of saving grace externally onely, but also internally. Esau's birth-right was more than right to Isaac's temporall estate as born of Isaac, it is that which Jacob was not born to, for it was πρωτοτόκια, the right of the first born, which Jacob had not but by purchase and blessing, nor is it denied to be a Church-blessing, but that it was the spirituall blessing promised to Abrahams seed, to wit justification and salvation from the covenant of saving grace I do not conceive: for that was not limited to the first born as the birth-right was, and therefore it seems to have been either the superiority, or the inheritance of Canaan, or the descent of Christ and the Church of God from him (to which I most incline) the least of which being a great losse, and having with it the privation of interest in the covenant of saving grace, he being hated of God, made Isaac tremble and Esau cry, and were a fit instance to set before the Christian Hebrews, lest they through prophane undervaluing Christ, fail of the grace of God.

Mr. C. adds 3. Object. But saith he, the Covenant of grace being a Co- venant, there must be a mutuall agreement betwixt the Covenanters, and so knowledge and consideration of the terms thereof, and restipulation as in mens covenants. Henry Den a little differently maketh a necessity of the persons entering into covenant with God, scil. by faith unto covenant-right, and not meerly Gods entering into Covenant with the creature, for so he entered into covenant with the Beasts, &c. Gen. 9 10. Answer. To which I answer, the covenant of grace is as well a Testament, 1 Cor. 11. Heb 9. Now a Testament may be, and useth to be made in reference to little ones without their knowledge, nor do any use to deny a Childs right in the Testators will because it was taken in amongst other Legacies in the bequeathed Legacies before it understood the same. Nor will it be denied in the case of the elect seed, the choice parties in Gods Covenant, Gen. 17. That they, many of them, dying Infants, without actuall knowledge, were not therefore children of the promise, or that that solemn Covenant Deut. 29. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, & 30. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, &c. with that people, wherein conditions also were propounded on their parts, that therefore the Covenant was not made betwixt the little ones there present because they neither understood, nor could actually subscribe to the conditions, the contrary being there expressed: No, rather it sufficed, that the childrens covenant-estate being the parents privilege, whence the encouragements to Abraham to walk with God, Gen. 17. 1, &c. from that amongst other encouragements, that God would become his Seeds God also, &c. v. 7. and so Deut. 29 and 30. amongst other encouragements to the parents that is one, v. 6. that God will do so for their seed also: yea the children being reckoned as in their parents, as Levi paid Tythes in Abraham. &c. Yea, the externall avouching a Covenant may be of God, being owned as the childrens, Deut. 26. 16, 17. yea the childrens circumcision being as well the parents covenant duty: whence called the Covenant, or the covenant parties covenant part or duty as well as the token of Gods Covenant, Gen. 9. 7, 9, 10, 11. they restipulate in their parents knowing acceptance of the Covenant and professed owning of it upon the Covenant terms, as well upon their childrens part as their own. & they restipulate in a passive reception of the Covenant-condition and Bond too after imitation of their Father Abrahams faith and obedience: To which purpose I. S. confessed circumcision was annexed to the covenant: yea, the bastard children of Judah and Gilead, and others, are acknowledged to be in the Covenant of saving grace, which yet could not personally restipulate in a way of actuall knowledge, or faith, or the like.

Answ. The Objection, as it is not mine, so I might let it and the answer passe, but that there are some things in the answer to it, that do require consideration. In the first part of this Review, Sect. 5. answering Mr. Stephens his arguments for the Convertibility, as he calls it, of a word of promise and a word of command, from the general nature of Covenants between men and men, I had said, the words כרת and διαθήκη do not always note a mutuall covenant, and mutuall performances, and instanced in Gen. 9. 10 and said, there is a single covenant as well as mutuall, and further added, that if it be true, that such a convertibility must needs be between those persons that do contract according to the generall nature of Covenants, then there can be no Covenant between God and Infant, which an Infant cannot contract. If any say the Parents do contract for them, to I say, Be it so; then according to this arguing, they should also sear or be sealed for them. Hereupon Mr Bl. Vindic Fid.

Append.

Append. pag. 470. taks occasion to answer part of this, maintaining pag. 479. that there is a mutuall contract, and mutual performances, to which persons are engaged, not onely usually in covenants, but in all covenants, and that it is of the general nature of Covenants, that there should be such a convertibility as that both must, if not seal, yet contract or perform, and where a Seal is vouchsafed, must accept of it. And to the allegation of Gen. 9. 9, 10. answers ברות, is taken improperly, as Job 5. 23.

Whereto I reply, That it must needs be confessed, that Covenant, Job 5. 23. must needs be understood improperly, for the stones of the field cannot properly covenant, that is, promise any thing, who are there said to be in covenant with Man, But Gen. 9. 9, 10. where God is said to establish his covenant with all living. I see not why it should be taken improperly, sith covenanting doth properly agree to God, who doth in proper sense promise, and in improper sense it would not be rightly said of God, that he did not make a Covenant, but as it were make a covenant, or do some other thing which is resembled by making a Covenant, which must be the explication of that phrase if God be conceived to speak improperly. If Mr Bl. do conceive any Tropicall impropriety of speech in that expression, I suppose he cannot reduce it to any Trope in Rhetorick, but that he will mar the sense of the words. And if Gods Covenant with Noah and his Sons, be properly understood v. 9. I see not any reason why the same term without repetition applied to beasts, as the object of the Covenant, can be taken any otherwise than properly. Besides, this Covenant Gen. 9. 15 seems to be called Gods Oath, Isa. 54. 9. and therefore is properly taken. Nor do I know any Interpreter who understands it improperly. Paræus hence gathers, Fœdus hoc est universale Dei cum omnibus creaturis terrestribus. & est absolutum non conditionatum. And the New Annotations of Mr. Ley on Gen. 9 10 have it thus: Some allege this place against the Anabaptists, and thus it may serve to refute this fancy, viz. that the Covenant of God may be made with, and the seal of the Covenant applied to creatures that have not the use of reason, which they deny, in denying the administration of Baptism to them. Which passage although it have this falshood, that we deny that the Covenant of God may be made with or to Infants: yet it appears that they who speak thus, understand Gods covenant Gen. 9. 10. properly. The promise Heb. 8. 10. of writing Gods Lawes in their hearts, is called the Covenant, unto which no covenant is prerequired, and to take away the evasion, as if it were not a covenant properly so called, but a prophecy, or but a part of the covenant, there being other promises which prerequire conditions, it is to be observed, that it is not onely called the better Covenant, v. 6. as being made a Law upon better promises, and having a better Priesthood to execute it, but also it is opposed to the Old Covenant, and as coming in its stead, and therefore if in the one it be properly meant, it is so in the other: and Jerem. 32. 40. the promise, that He will not turn away from them to do them good, but will put his fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from him, is his Covenant. The Covenant to Abraham and his seed is called Promises, Gal 3. 26. which shews that promises on one part may be called a Covenant. And though in Deeds indented there are mutuall promises, yet in Deeds Poll as the Lawyers call them, I think a person is said to covenant to another, though there be no condition or promise required of him to whom the Deed is made. As for that which Mr. Bl. saith, Where there is a Seal vouchsafed, the party to whom the promise is, must accept of it: it is true if it be required, but it is expected that it should be shewed, that God ever required the Infants of believers to be baptized in their own persons.

To return to Mr. C. Most of the things he answers are granted, or else examined before, but the chiefest thing in the answer is denied, to wit, that Parents knowing acceptance of the Covenant, and their passive reception of the Covenant-condition and Bond to after imitation of their Father Abrahams faith and obedience, is or may be termed the Infants restipulation intituling to Baptism.

In the answer to the next Objection, Mr. C seems to charge us rather than himself, to block up the ordinary way to regeneration, and to debar believers children from the ordinary means of their chief good, by denying them interest in the Word of Promise, the which is such a means, &c.

But therein Mr C. his charge is but vain: For the word of Promise, which is the means of regeneration, is not the covenant of externall privileges, but the promise of saving grace in Christ, which we debar them of no more than Mr. C. doth. And when he denies that he makes every believer to be Abraham, sure he must do so if he expound Gen. 17. 7. I will be a God to thee Abraham, that is, to every believer, and to thy seed, that is, every believers seed. And when he grants that God doth not promise such a particular Land now as to Abraham, and that the multiplying of Abrahams, &c. was of peculiar consideration, he must grant that the Covenant made with Abraham had peculiar domestick promises not common to all believers, which is all one as to say, it was a mixt covenant, and that circumcision had some reason from the promises in the covenant, which were peculiar to Abrams naturall posterity, which is sufficient to prove there is not par ratio, or the same reason of baptizing infants, as for circumcising them. I find no where any but Abraham a Covenant-Father, as Mr. C. would have it, no where doth God say he would be a God to Isaac, and Jacob, and to their seed: Nor is it said, Rom. 11. 16. 28, that they were covenant Fathers to their posterity, nor Jesse a Covenant-root to David, Isai. 11. 1. And by Mr C his Doctrine, inchurched believers are made Abrahams, sith it makes the promises to be to them and their seed, which is ascribed to Abraham onely, Gal 3. 16. Luke 1. 55.

But Mr. C objects, That the Apostle calls all those inchurched Jewes of old, our Fathers, Fathers to him and to the Gentiles, Corinthian members, 1 Corinth: 10. 1, &c.

To which I answer, They could not be called the Corinthians naturall parents, being no descended from them; nor their Covenant-fathers, for they were many of them such, as God was not well pleased with, v. 6. and the Corinthians descended not from them, and therefore derived no externall Church-privilege from them: therefore either it must be understood that they were called Ancestors of the Corinthian Christians, who are called Idolaters, chap. 12. 2. either in the sense we call any in foregoing generations our Fathers, though we are not descended from them by naturall generation, or else by the Figure of communication, wherein that is spoken as common to others with the persons mentioned, which is not common indeed, but either out of familiarity, indulgence, desire to ingratiate, or such like reason we attribute it to them to whom it is not to be attributed, as Paul, Ephes. 2. 2, 3. Peter 1 Pet. 4. 3. which was not true of them. Philip. 3. 6. Acts 23. 1. but meant of the Gentiles to whom they wrot, Col. 2. 13. Gal. 2. 15. and so Our Fathers is not of you Corinthians, but of me and Sosthenes, 1 Cor. 1. 1, or by an enallage of persons, as when Paul saith, 1 Thess. 4. 17. we which are alive, it is not to be conceived to be true of himself, or of any of the Thessalonians to whom he then wrot, but it is [We] for [They] the first for the third person.

" But saith Mr. C. " If Isaac and Jacob were not such Fathers to their seed " also, as was Abraham in Covenant and Church-respects, how then are the " Jewes said to be beloved for their [Fathers] sakes? Surely it was not for " their sakes as men, and naturall Fathers, but as spirituall and Covenant-" fathers, Rom. 11. 26, 28. compared; yea the Covenant is expresly made in " those terms to Isaac & to his seed, to Jacob and to his seed, Gen. 26. 3, 4, 5, " & 28 13, 14. And so though they were Abrahams Church and Covenant " seed, yet Covenant Fathers to others, and so Gentile inchurched believers are Abrahams Church-seed, yet Covenant-fathers to their Children.

The term Root, and first Fruits, and the term Fathers, Rom. 11. 16. 28. are not proved to be the same. The Fathers, it's not denied to comprehend Isaac and Jacob, as well as Abraham: But they are called Fathers there in respect of the naturall generation of the Israelites to be re-ingrafted, not as Covenant-Fathers propagating externall Church privileges even to Gentile inchurched believers: For they are there reckoned as the Israelites progenitors, not the Gentile inchurched believers progenitors. Yet I deny not that God hath reference in that passage to his covenant made with them, and his love to them, and so the Jewes now broken off, yet are beloved by God, with an intention to restore their posterity out of remembrance of his ancient amity and covenant with their forefathers, which cannot be verified of the Gentile inchurched believers in respect of their children. Neither Gen. 26. 3, 4, 5, nor Gen. 28. 13, 14, is either of the Evangelicall promises made to Abraham, Gen. 17. 5, A Father of many Nations have I made thee, or that v. 7. to be a God to him and his seed, made either to Isaac, Gen. 26. 3, 4, 5, or Jacob, Gen. 28. 13, 14. though the promises of multiplying their Seed, blessing them, giving them the land of Canaan in their Seed, blessing all the Nations or Families of the earth, be there mentioned, which, with sundry passages of the Apostle Rom. 4. 11, 12, 16, 17. Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. Gal. 3, 16, 29, and other places assure me those Evangelicall promises, Gen. 17. 5. 7. were made to Abraham peculiarly, neither as a Patriarch out of a reason common to him with other Patriarks, nor as a believer out of a reason common to him with other believers, but out of a peculiar consideration of him, either as Father of believers by his exemplary faith, or as a person elected by God to have the covenant instated in him and his seed.

As for Mr. C. his answer to the objection from Rom 4. 16. if that Text prove not that all that are Abrahams seed are actuall believers, yet it proves that the promise is sure to all that are Abrahams seed by actuall believing as he did, and consequently are saved.

To

To his quſtion, If all members of the viſible Church be not Abrahams ſeed, what right have they to the ſeal of the covenant made to Abrahams ſeed? I anſwer, Right to Circumciſion and Baptiſm is not from the Covenant, but according to Gods appointment to ſome, whether they be in covenant or not, Abrahams ſeed or not.

Gal. 4. 26, 28, 31. Gal. 3. 29. I have formerly ſhewed that by [Us all] are not meant every Galatian Chriſtian Profeſſor, but true believers, as Rom. 8 32. 1 Cor. 12, 13. 2 Cor. 3. 18. & therefore thence it cannot be gathered, that any meer profeſſor of faith is Abrahams ſeed, much leſs his infants. None but true believers are ſaid Gal. 3. 27, to be baptized into Chriſt, and to put on Chriſt, though others were baptized into his Name: which appears verſe 26. where they are ſaid to be the Sons of God through faith in Chriſt Jeſus, and yet there were other than elect perſons in that Church, and they baptized. Mr. C. methinks ſhould not be ignorant that what is ſaid of perſons in the Churches indefinitely, is ſometimes verified onely of the choyce party, 1 Cor. 1. 1. 1 Theſſ. 1. 4. 1 Pet. 1. 5. & 2. 9. by a Synecdoche of the whole for a part Nor doth Mr C. his diſtinction of baptizing into Chriſt, putting on Chriſt, being Children of the promiſe, being by one ſpirit baptized into one body, attributing theſe to all Sacramentally, and in facie Eccleſiæ, ſuit well to theſe places, in which the predicate cannot be attributed in truth to thoſe that are meerly ſuch.

As for the laſt Objection, Mr. C. muſt needs be guilty of making three parties in the Covenant, Abraham, his ſeed Believers, and their Infants. For Believers are not comprehended under Abraham, but under his ſeed, nor believers naturall infants comprehended under Abrahams ſeed, except they be true believers, or elect perſons, nor in the covenant made to Abraham and his Seed doth Abraham ſuſtain the perſon of all believers, Jewes and Gentiles, but of the Father of them, and therefore as yet Mr. C. his Concluſion remains unproved, that the Covenant intereſt at leaſt Externall and Eccleſiaſticall of Infants of inchurched Believers, is Goſpel, but a Figment of Mr. C. not found in Scripture.

SECT. XLVI.

The 27, 28, 29 Chapters of Mr. Blakes Vindic. Fœderis are examined, and it is shewed, That he hath not proved the Covenant of Grace in Gospel times to admit or to be made to any but the Elect regenerate.

SIth Mr. Bl. is accounted one of the chief Patrons of Infant Baptism, my purpose is to examine the remainder of that which he hath written in his Vindic. Fœd. against me for Infant Baptism, and may be conceiv d to be yet unanswered. Ch. 27 pag. 189, 190. he heaps up many texts to prove that in old Testament times the Covenant was made with Israel in the uttermost latitude and extent with all that bore the name of Israel, which I grant, understanding it of the National Covenant, Deut. 29. and of the Covenant of the Law, Exod 20. &c. but deny it being meant of the Covenant of Evangelical grace, which is the onely Covenant the people of God are now under, and which alone is the question now, Who are in this Covenant? or to whom is this Covenant or the promises of it made by God? I assert as before, Sect. 33. That it is made onely to the Elect. And Mr. Bl. pag. 191. yeelds that many Orthodox writers seemingly restrain the Covenant onely to the Elect and regenerate. But he addes some distinctions, whereby he thinks what they say may be salved from self contradictions. 1. Of a two fold Covenant, 1 a single, 2. a double to perform both parts, to save upon repentance, and to give a new heart: But he doth not shew that there is any Evangelical Covenant now which is not double, nor that either the double or single is made with any but the elect. 2. Of an inward Covenant, which he grants to be made onely to the elect; and an outward, which, he saith, is a Covenant properly so called, and which Scripture holds out for the Covenant of God with his people, in which all professed Christians so called are, which puts them into a capacity of Sacraments, and their children of the initial Sacrament: But what this outward Covenant is, or where it is to be found I know not; what I find about it is shewed to be vain, Sect. 25. and Mr. Bs. refutation of it in his Apology against Mr. Bl. pag. 66, 67, 10. saves me any further labour to shew it to be a figment. 3. Of being in Covenant according to title to the Covenant, or to the benefits of the Covenant; and saith, the right of Covenant belongs to all that externally make profession, the benefit onely to the elect. But I know no right of Covenant, but what is by Gods promise, and surely all to whom God promiseth have the benefit of the Covenant; and to imagine, that the Covenant of grace is to any to whom the grace following the Covenant is not, is to make Gods Covenant and word to fail, which the Apostle abhorred, Rom. 9. 6. and to make the Covenant of grace as liable to complaint as the first Covenant, contrary to Heb. 8. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. 4. Of entring into Covenant, which all visible professors do, and stedfastness in it, which do onely the elect and faithfull, Psal. 78. 34. But this text speaks not of the Covenant of Evangelical grace as if any were entred into it who were not ſtedfaſt in it: but of the Covenant of the Law with the Jewiſh people, which is not the Covenant in which the Gentiles are under the Goſpel. And to Mr. Bls. confuſed talk I again ſay, 1. That the Covenant of Evangelical grace is made by God onely to the Elect, and that in reſpect of Gods promiſe none but they are in the Covenant, nor is there to any right to Sacraments or capacity of an initial Seal barely by that being in Covenant. 2. That profeſſion of Faith may cauſe a man to be taken to be in the Covenant by the guides and brethren of the viſible Church, in the face of which he may have title to Sacraments, but his infant children have no title thereby to Baptiſm. 3. That from the beginning none but the elect had the Covenant of grace made to them. 4. That from the beginning it is not proved the children with their parents to have been no not in the imaginary outward Covenant. But let's view what Mr. Bl. ſaith.

1. He alledgeth Matth. 28.19. "and takes it as freely confeſt, that "a Diſciple of Chriſt is in Covenant with God, and tels us that the "Covenant Matth. 28.19. is committed to man to work, and to judge of "it being wrought, to put a ſeal for ratification and confirmation of it; "which cannot be reſtrained to the elect, for they onely are known to "God; an elect perſon and a Church member ſhould be termini convertibiles, the ſeal of the Spirit, and the ſeal of the Sacrament are in "equal latitude; to baptize an unregenerate perſon is to put a ſeal to a "blank, as high an abuſe of that ſacred Ordinance as the circumciſion "of the Sichemites, Gen. 34.24.

Anſw. It is not confeſt by me that a Diſciple of Chriſt, that is every Diſciple of Chriſt is in Covenant with God, meaning it in reſpect of Gods Covenant or promiſe of Evangelical grace made to him, nor do I know of any Covenant, Matth. 28.19. committed to man to work, and to judge of it being wrought, and to put a ſeal for ratification and confirmation, though I grant every Diſciple profeſſing Chriſt is in ſome ſenſe in Covenant with God, that is, by his act of profeſſion doth engage himſelf to follow Chriſt, and ſo in that reſpect is in Covenant with God, and that Matth. 28.19. the Apoſtles are injoyned to make Diſciples by preaching the Goſpel, and baptize them, which may be done without working a Covenant between God and man, (which phraſe doth imply that a Miniſter can work God into Covenant, which is in my apprehenſion an abſurd conceit) or judging of a Covenant being wrought, or putting to a ſeal for confirmation of it. And for the abſurdities Mr. Bl. infers from the denial of reſtraining the Covenant to the elect, I count the firſt not to follow upon my tenet, ſith I conceive a man may be a Church-member who is not in the Covenant of grace; and for the ſecond, I count it no abſurdity according to my explication before given, Sect. 34. 35. though I do withal declare, that the ſeal of the Sacrament is a term I reject for the reaſons given before, Sect. 31. And for the third, I count it no abuſe to put a ſeal to a blank, that is, to baptize a perſon who is not in the Covenant of Evangelical grace. As for the 3d. argument Mr. Bl. would draw from Matth. 28.19. to prove that the Covenant of God is onely a Covenant professed, because Matth. 28. 19. & whole Nation is in Gods ordinary way of administration in a capacity to attain and enter into it, it is answered in the 2d. Part of this Review, sect. 9. where it is shewed that Matth. 28. 19. there is no such command as to make Disciples, and baptize the whole of a Nation, even the infants.

Mr. Bl. adds a 2d. text, Matth. 20. 16. & 22. 14. whence he argues thus; "If there be a call from God in the times of the N. T. in a far greater latitude then the grace of election, that of many called few onely are elected, then the Covenant in the N. T. times is not to be restrained to the elect and regenerate, but contains all that professedly accept the terms of the Covenant, and visibly appear a people of God. This is evident, seeing the call is into Covenant; all at the feast were called ones, all the hired Labourers were Covenant-servants. To conceive men to be called of God, and not to be in Covenant with God, is a full contradiction. The call hath its terminus a quo and its terminus ad quem; a state which upon call they leave, and a new state on which they enter. They are upon this call in a neater relation to God then the rest of the world, otherwise they were the same as ever, and not called at all. But there is a call in N. T. times, &c. Ergo.

Answ. The consequence of the major is denied, and to the proof of it I say, 1. The call is not into Covenant with God in the sense which is now in question: For now the question is, Whether there be a Covenant in the N. T. wherein God engageth himself to be God, and to account for his people any besides the elect? Now no man is called into Covenant in this sense: for no man is called to engage God to be God, &c. it were an arrogant & to call or invite men to engage God, it is God onely who is to do this, and therefore if any were to be called to this, it were God himself. 2. It is not true, that to conceive men to be called of God, and not to be in Covenant with him is a full contradiction. For though the calling mentioned Rom. 8. 30. do always bring men into an estate of being in Covenant with God, yet not the calling Matth. 20. 16. & 22. 14. For though the calling there have a Terminus a quo & ad quem, in the one resembled by calling to work in the Vineyard, in the other by calling to a Wedding feast; yet that every one that was called had a new state on which he did enter, is not true: For even those who refused to come were called, Matth. 22. 3, 4. and the man who came in without a Wedding garment, though he sate down, yet was not in a state of Covenant, or acceptance, but was thrust out. Nor is Mr. Bls arguing of any force. Men are called into Covenant with God, therefore they are in Covenant with God: For by the same reason it might be inferred, the same men are called into the fellowship of Christ, 1 Cor. 1. 9. into the Kingdome and glory of God, 1 Thes. 2. 12. therefore some non elect persons are in the fellowship of Christ, in the Kingdom and glory of God, which is false.

Mr. Bl. adds Mat. 13. 24, 25, 47. & 3. 12. & 2 Tim. 2. 20. whence he argues thus. "A man in the Kingdome of Heaven is a man that is in Covenant with God, unless he stood in a Covenant relation he could have

" no ſtanding there; and the compariſon were very ſtrangely drawn,
" if this Kingdome thus ſet out had all that were good, none bad in it.

Anſw. It is granted that good and bad, elect and non-elect are in the viſible Church, and ſo in the Kingdome of Heaven, if by it be meant the viſible Church: but that a man in the Kingdome of Heaven is a man that is in Covenant with God, that is a man in the viſible Church is a man that is in Covenant with God, ſo as that God hath made a Covenant or promiſe of Evangelical grace to or with him, is denied, nor is, or ever will be proved by Mr. Bl.

A 4th. text is Heb. 10. 29. whence he ſaith, " Theſe muſt needs be " granted to be wicked, yet cannot be denied to be in Covenant, being " ſanctified with the bloud of the Covenant. And then ſets down three " interpretations; one of the Arminians, that ſay they were ſanctified
" internally and in Covenant, but fall from both, which he lets paſs.
" Another, that Chriſt is ſaid to be ſanctified, which ſeems to him to be " very much ſtrained. A third, by external ſeparation for God, and de" dication to him, which he embraceth.

Anſw. Neither do I conceive that it is Chriſt who is ſaid to be ſanctified by the bloud of the Covenant: For though I grant he is ſaid to be ſanctified, Joh. 10. 36. and to ſanctifie himſelf, Joh. 17. 19. and τελειῶσαι to conſecrate or make perfect, Heb. 2. 10. & 5. 9. & 7. 28. Yet I do not find the phraſe applied to Chriſt any where, that he is ſaid to be ſanctified by the bloud of the Covenant; but ſtill applied to thoſe that are bought by Chriſt, Heb. 10. 10, 14. & 13. 12. Nor doth it ſo well ſuit with the Apoſtles aim of aggravating the ſin of Apoſtacy from Chriſtianity, to mean it of Chriſts being ſanctified, as of the Apoſtates being ſanctified heretofore by that bloud of the Covenant which he now counted common, or unclean: Nor do I conceive it can be meant of ſuch a meer external ſanctification, whether by Baptiſm, or external profeſſion, as Mr. Bl. and others conceive. For 1. the ſanctification here is the ſame with the ſanctification meant, ver. 10, 14. & 13. 12. But that ſanctification is more then ſuch an external ſanctification, even ſuch as perfects for ever them that are ſanctified, v. 14. and hath with it the writing and remiſſion of ſins according to the Covenant which is ſet down v. 15 16, 17. 2. Nowhere is ſuch an external ſanctification aſcribed to the bloud of the Covenant; but to aſcribe to it ſuch a meer external ſanctification in any ſanctified by it, is to diminiſh the vertue of it, as if it did no more then the legal ſacrifices contrary to the Apoſtles arguing, Heb. 9. 12, 13, 14. 3. Nor thirdly, had it aggravated the Apoſtates ſin to ſay that he had counted the bloud of the Covenant wherewith he was ſanctified onely externally, a common thing: For this had ſhewed no more evil in the diſeſteem of Chriſts death, then if the bloud of the legal ſacrifices which did ſanctifie externally, Heb. 9. 12. had been counted unclean. Therefore I conceive the ſanctifying Heb. 10. 29. meant of the effectual ſanctifying before God, meant Heb. 2. 11. & 10. 10 14. & 13. 12. but yet underſtand the ſanctifying, Heb 10. 29. not of what was ſo really, but of what was according to their own opinion, and profeſſion embracing the Chriſtian Doctrine. Even as Gal. 5. 4. whoſoever are juſtified by the Law, that is,

Whoſoever

Whosoever of you do avouch that you are justified by the Law. Luke 15.7. some are said to be just persons needing no repentance; that is, in their own opinion and profession, as those Luke 18.9. And thus I conceive is that speech also to be understood, 2 Pet. 2. 1. and hereby the Arminian argument from both places for Universal Redemption, and Apostacy of Saints is avoided. Now these may be denied to have been in Covenant, that is, to have been of those to whom God promised Gospel grace, sith they were onely sanctified according to their own opinion and profession; yea though the sanctification were meant of being sanctified externally, and this were from the bloud of the Covenant, yet it follows not that those who are sanctified thus are in Covenant with God, as the meaning of those is who say the elect onely are in Covenant, that is, the Covenant of Evangelical grace is made by God onely to the elect.

Mr. Bl. adds "Neither can all the noise which Mr. T. hath made "about 1 Pet. 2.9. take off that text, but that it speaks fully to hold up "a Covenant in this latitude; and from thence I thus argue. If those "phrases, a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy Nation, a peculiar people, be applied to Christians as to Jews in an equal latitude to "one as to other; then it must needs follow that there is a Covenant "in Gospel times in like latitude as in the time of the Law, including "all that accept the terms of the Covenant, and visibly appear as the "people of God, and is not restrained onely to the elect regenerate. "The consequence is evident, seeing the terms plainly imply a Covenant. Here is a Covenant people or no where: But these terms, a "chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, "are applied to Christians as well as to Jews, to one in as great a latitude as to the other. That which God speaks to Israel in the Wilderness, that Peter speaketh to the Church to which he writes; All Israelites in Moses days, all Christians professing, in Peters time, had "those titles, when onely those that kept Covenant were at any time "worthy of them, and had the comforts of them.

Answ. The noise I make is not a meer sound without reason, nor is any one of my reasons made void by Mr. Bls. answers. To him I reply, 1. That his speech is inconsiderate when he saith the text speaks fully to hold up a Covenant in this latitude, which comprehends non-elect persons, when there is not a word of any Covenant, and the terms he onely saith plainly imply a Covenant. And though I deny not that the people there mentioned were a Covenant people, yet I deny any one of the terms doth imply a Covenant; for a chosen generation doth not imply a Covenant, sith both election and generation may be without a Covenant; and the like may be said of the other terms, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar, or purchased people: So that in this respect the consequence may be denied. Nor is the consequence good for another reason. For it is not true that all Israelites in Moses days had those titles, which I find Exod. 19.5,6. yet there onely three of them, and those not said of all the Israelites in Moses days, but a promise of being to God such as these titles import, upon condition they did hearken to his voice, and kept his Covenant, which was neither verified of all Israelites in Moses days, nor in after times. And therefore though those terms were applied to Christians as to Jews, yet it doth not necessarily follow that there is a Covenant in Gospel times in like latitude as under the Law, sith those titles were not verified of all the Jews at any time, but of them and then onely when they were obedient. But I deny the minor also of Mr. Bls. argument, that the terms are applied by Peter in an equal latitude to Christians as by Moses to Jews, and assert as in my Possessor, sect. 10. pag. 128. that they are applied onely to those who are members of the invisible Church. Whereupon Mr. Bl. speaks thus to me.

"But I would wish Mr. T. to take into more serious consideration.
"First, whether the first verse of this second chapter be meant onely of "invisible members? Whether the Apostle perswades regenerate men, "and onely regenerate men, to lay aside all malice, and all guile, and hy-
"pocrisies, and evil speakings?

Answ. To the first question I say affirmatively, that by new born babes, v. 2. are meant onely members of the invisible Church; for they are said, ch. 1. 23. to be born again, not of corruptible seed, but incorruptible, by the word of God which liveth and abideth for ever. Ver. 2. to be elect according to the fore-knowledge of God the Father, begotten again unto a lively hope, ver. 3. And to the 2d. that he mentions onely regenerate persons, whom he perswades, though the duty is incumbent on others.

"2*ly.* Whether the 3d. v. be to be thus limited; Whether the Apo"stle makes doubt in that manner, whether they had tasted that the "Lord is gracious? And yet those words in both those verses must "needs be understood of the same men, and under the same notion as "these, ver. 9. The Apostle brings his speech to no full period till
"v. 11. Those that must lay aside all malice, guile, &c. of whom he "makes question, whether they had tasted that the Lord were gracious;
"they are this chosen generation, this royal priesthood.

Answ. 1. εἴπερ 1 Pet. 2. 3. is translated [if] and may seem to import doubt or uncertainty, but it may be as well translated [seeing] as it is 2 Thes. 1. 6. and so it imports certainty that they had tasted how gracious the Lord is, without making question of it. And this reading is more apposite to their condtiion, and more suitable to the exhortation; For it is more agreable to the nature of a motive to the duty, ver. 2. to conceive it thus, Desire the word to grow by it, sith or seeing you have tasted how gracious the Lord is. 2. But if it were read [if] yet in such passages as these [if] doth not import doubt, but onely is as a rational particle, noting the connexion between the terms, as Joh. 15. 18. Ephes. 4. 20, 21. And so the sense is here, If you have tasted (which he supposeth, not questioneth) then you ought to desire the milk of the word, that you may grow by it. 3. Were it the Apostle had doubt whether they had tasted how good the Lord is (which is not to be conceived, considering what he saith of them, c. 1. v. 3, 23. c. 2. 2, 5. &c.) yet this doubt might be of a more full taste, which every regenerate elect person might not have. 4. The exhortation to lay aside malice, &c. doth not intimate they were any of them whom he calls new born babes, v.2. a chosen generation, an holy nation, v.9. unregenerate or non-elect; for such exhortations are necessary for the most holy Saints, in whom are reliques of corruption, and liableness to temptation.

3*ly*. Saith Mr. Bl. "Let him seriously consider the Apostles further "enlargement of this honour of these Christians, which in times past "were not a people of God; words borrowed from Hos. 1. 10. Hos. 2. 23. "and spoken of the call of the ten revolted Tribes: And in Deut. 32. "21. of the call of the Gentiles into a visible Church state and profession, and so applied by the Apostle, Rom. 9. 24, 25, 26. Whence I argue. "The call of the ten revolted Tribes, and of the Gentiles into a visible "Church way, is not to be meant of the Church as it is invisible onely. "This Mr. T. hath taken into consideration, and answered. However it "be in the places to which the allusion is, yet it is certain that here it "is meant of such a calling as is from darkness to marvellous light; ta"king it, it seems, for granted, that there is no marvellous light in "visible Churches; that in the land of Zebulon and Nephthali where "they saw a great light, there were onely invisible members. Matth. 4. "15, 16.

Answ. My answer to this objection was in two things. 1. That terms applied to Christians in the New Testament with allusion to passages in the Old, yet are not always to be applied to Christians in the same latitude they were to Jews. 2. That in that place such a calling is meant as is from darkness to his marvellous light by his vertues or powers; which therefore deserve to be shewed forth, and which they do shew forth that are thus called. And both these I confirmed from Rom. 9. 24, 25, 26. which is manifestly said of them who were called v. 23. vessels of mercy; Nor is this a denomination a parte præstantiori, for it is expresly said ὃς καὶ were the same whom he called vessels of mercy. And the same place of Hos. 1. 23. is alluded to in Rom. 9. 25. and 1 Pet. 2. 10. and can be understood of no other then the elect. And therefore if the places Hos. 1. 10. Hos. 2. 23. Deut. 32. 21. should be understood (which I grant not) of any other then the elect or members of the invisible Church; yet 1 Pet. 2. 10. can be understood of no other, sith no other have such a calling as is there meant, v. 9. nor any other obtain mercy as there is meant. That which Mr. Bl. replies after his flirting fashion, goes on this false insinuation, that I took it for granted, that there is no marvellous light in visible Churches, which he would refute from Matth. 4. 15, 16. and that this was the force of my reason; whereas my reason did not suppose that at all, but that none are so called from darkness to light in that manner the Apostle there describes the calling, but onely the elect, which is true; though there be marvellous light in visible Churches, yea, and in meer visible professors, yet none so called as Peter describes 1 Pet. 2. 9. but onely members of the invisible Church.

4*ly*. Saith Mr. Bl. "As honourable titles as these are frequently gi"ven in Scripture, as shall be shewn, to visible professors, why should "then these be limited to invisible members?

Answ.

Answ. 1. No titles so expresly noting elect persons as those 1 Pet. 2. 9. are given any where to meer visible professors. 2. If they should be in any place given to the visible Church, yet they are to be restrained to the elect onely; as when a heap of corn is so called, which hath much chaff; or a field of corn, which hath much tares; the denomination is from the better part, and is to be applied as verified onely of it.

Sly. Saith Mr. Bl. "Mr. T. in his Letter made this Text to be paral-"lel with those Texts, Gal. 6. 10. 1 Tim. 3. 15. 1 Pet. 2. 10. And those "Texts I have demonstrated to be meant of visible Churches, to which "Mr. T. replies nothing.

Answ. I do not find that in my Letter I made 1 Pet. 2. 9. parallel with those Texts, Gal. 6. 10. 1 Tim. 3. 15. 1 Pet. 2. 10. But in my Exercit. § 12. I do alledge to prove that onely believers may be meant by a holy Nation, as they are by a family or kindred, Ephes. 3. 15. the household of faith, Gal. 6. 10. the house of God, 1 Tim. 3. 15. a people, 1 Pet. 2. 10. Now saith Mr. Bl. these texts I have demonstrated to be meant of visible Churches. But he hath not demonstrated them to be meant of meer visible Churches, or meer visible Professors in them, who are not also of the invisible Church; and therefore I thought in my Postscript, and think still I need make no further reply. Mr. Bl. considers my arguments to prove 1 Pet. 2. 9. meant of the invisible Church.

"1. I argue (saith Mr. T.) from the terms, chosen generation, royal "priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people, that is by Christs death, Tit. "2. 14. which cannot be affirmed of any other then elect and true be-"lievers. Ergo. Answ. 1. Such a way of arguing would not pass with "Mr. T. in his adversary; as peculiar people is taken in one place of "Scripture, so it must be taken in all places; but in one place it is ta-"ken for the elect regenerate. If this would hold, much labour might "be spared in finding out the various acceptation of words in Scrip-"ture.

Reply. M. Bl. it seems hath such a spirit of Divination, as to foresee what I would do in a contingent thing. But this folly of his I impute to his Satyrical vein, which makes him that he can neither relate nor answer any thing of mine candidly. My argument was not drawn onely from the term [peculiar people] but also from the terms [chosen generation, royal priesthood, an holy nation] which with the other term [a peculiar people] or as in the Margin of our last Translation [a purchased people] have been applied to the elect onely by these interpreters, whose words I here set down. *Beza analys. Loci oppositum membrum, electorum videlicet summam excellentiam describit, &c. Piscat analys. 2. Saith Mr. El "These termes and others equivolent to these are "given to the Israelites Deut. 14. 1, 2. Deut. 7. 6. Deut. 32. 9. not "as a church invisible, but as visible members. Their qualifications "are often as low, as their appellations by reason of their relation to "God raise them high. And setting apart Christs death, I would know "how they came to this honour.

Answ. These termes are given in the places cited to Israelites, yet that they are given to them as visible members, and not as a church invisible, or as I would say to the church visible of Israel, in respect of and with limitation to the elect or members of the invisible church, as a field of corn in respect of the good grain, is not proved. Yet if it were the titles 1 Pet. 2. 9. spoken of christians, cannot be verified of them but in a ſenſe appropriate to the elect. They are no way a royal prieſthood, but as prieſts that offer ſpiritual ſacrifices to God, acceptable to God through Jeſus Chriſt, v. 5. which none but the elect and true beleevers can do; no other way royal but in that they are Kings to God, reign over ſin, Satan, &c. through Chriſt, which none but the elect do; a choſen generation, but by Gods election to life eternal; a holy nation, but by regeneration of the ſpirit; a peculiar people, but by Chriſts purchaſe; which can be verified of none but true believers, and elect perſons. And to Mr. Bls. demand I anſwer, ſetting apart Chriſts death, I know not how Chriſtians ſhould come to this honour which is expreſſed 1 Pet. 2. 9.

3. Saith Mr. Bl. "The gift of Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts, "Paſtours, and Teachers, were the gift of Chriſt, and purchaſe of his "death. Theſe are for conſtitution of viſible Churches, viſible mem-"bers enjoy theſe priviledges in common with regenerate perſons, to "which more is already ſpoken.

Anſw. Though I finde Apoſtles, Prophets, Evangeliſts, Paſtours, and Teachers, termed Epheſ. 4. 11. the gift of Chriſt, yet I do not finde them ſaid to be the purchaſe of Chriſts death as ſuch: nor do I know how they can be truely ſaid to be the purchaſe Chriſts death, as is meant, 1 Pet. 2. 9. Tit. 2. 14. ſo as that every Apoſtle, &c. ſhould be redeemed from iniquity, be of the people of Gods poſſeſſion, to ſhew forth the vertues of God, &c. nor do I conceive to what purpoſe this is brought in here by Mr. Bl. except he mean that the titles 1 Pet. 2. 9. are given to the viſible Church in reſpect of the Miniſters, which is ſo frivolous that I am unwilling to imagine it of him.

2. Saith Mr. Bl. "Mr. T. objects from that which is ſaid of them, "they are called by God, by his power and vertue into his marvellous "light, and v. 10. that now had obtained mercy which they had not "before; which cannot be affirmed of any but true believers and elect "perſons.

Anſw. Men brought into a viſible Church-ſtate, are brought into a marvellous light. The ſeven golden candleſticks Rev. 1. 20. had a marvellous light in their lamps, and yet in ſome of thoſe there were onely a few names, that had not defiled their garments; And this light is a mercy, the fruition of it a great mercy, Pſal. 147. 19, 20. Yea, it is applied by the prophet, Hoſ. 2. 23. (whence the Apoſtle gathers it) unto the mercy enjoyed in a viſible Church communion, as is not denied by Mr. T. himſelf.

Reply. Where it is that I deny not that Hoſ. 2. 23. is applied unto the mercy enjoyed in a viſible Church communion, I remember not, yet if I did grant it any where, I might underſtand it of ſaving mercy, proper to the elect, for that is mercy enjoyed in a viſible Church communion.

But Mr. Bls. anſwer is not to the argument as by me urged; For I did not form it thus, they who have marvellous light, who have obtained a great mercy are elect: But thus, they who are called by Gods power or vertue, which therefore they are to ſhew forth, out of darkneſs, into his marvellous light, which in time paſt were not a people, but are now the people of God: which had not obtained mercy, but now have obtained mercy, are the elect, which I confirmed from *Rom.*9.23,24,25. where the same place of *Hos.*2.23. is alledged and applied onely to the elect. But these things are said of those 1 *Pet.*2.9. Ergo. Which argument is confirmed by the words of Piscator above cited, and of Beza in the place cited, where he saith, Simulque ne quis ambigat sit electus necne revocat nos Apostolus ad vocationem efficacem, ex qua æternum illud alioqui occultissimum electionis nostræ decretum certò intelligamus, idque ex una Dei gratuitò eligentis & vocantis misericordia. The new Annot. praises] or vertues. That is, that we might glorifie God in our conversations, thereby shewing forth the abundant mercy and great power of God in calling us. Isa. 8.13. Darkness] that is ignorance, ch.1.14. *whereby is meant our sinfull and miserable estate by nature, under which men are kept, through ignorance of the Gospel, Eph.*4.18. & 5.8. *Col.*1.13. His marvellous] hereby is meant our estate of grace, through the effectual calling of God by the knowledge of the truth. See 2 *Cor.*4.6. Acts 13 47. & 26.18. called marvellous, because of the great mystery of godliness, which is revealed in the Gospel; and called his, because God revealeth it. Dr. John Rainold Apol. thes. § 15. Neque soluni è tenebris in admirabilem Dei lucem vocati, 1 *Pet.*2.9. sed & electi, 1 *Pet.*1.2. nuncupantur, atque genus electum, 1 *Pet.*2.9. Now though meer visible Church-members may have marvellous light, and obtain great mercy, yet they cannot be said to be thus called, to be a people of God, and to obtain mercy, as Peter there describes.

3. Saith Mr. Bl. "It is said that those persons did beleeve contradistinguished to them that were disobedient and stumbled at the word; "but such are onely the Elect, Ergo. Answ. So did all they that made "shipwrack of the faith, 1 Tim. 1.19. So did Simon Magus, Act. 8.13. "So did the hearers compared to the rocky ground, Luk. 8.13. And "whereas it is said, these believers are contradistinguished to them that "were disobedient and stumbled at the word, it fully makes against "him; Those disobedient ones, are those that disallow Christ, as we "see v. 7. that reject Christ upon tender, that persist in Judaism or "Gentilism. All others not professed Jews nor Gentiles, are in that "place beleevers (and in all other Scriptures respective to visible pre-"rogatives) which are all visible church-members.

Reply. It is true sometimes they are termed believers, who are meer visible professors, but here the believers are such as to whom Christ is pretious, and are contradistinguished to them that were disobedient and stumbled at the word, unto which also they were appointed (which Mr. Bl. did ill to leave out) which shews they were reprobates appointed to perish, and consequently the contradistinguished believers are such as are saved, which cannot be said of them that made shipwrack of the faith, or Simon Magus. Which is confirmed from v. 9, 10. which Mr. Bl. confesseth is understood of the same men, v. 3. and under the same notion as these, v. 9. the Apostle brings his speech to no full period till v. 11. which reasons are confirmed by the note of Diodati on 1 *Pet.*2.7. It is that pretious thing, namely, that precious foundation whereof Isaiah speaks, which the text leads to, and is verified onely of the elect, to whom alone Christ is the precious foundation. And the other by the note of Beza on v.8. Preterea particula καὶ ad uncta & quod mox subjicit, vos autem genus electum nonne manifestam antitheſin ostendit rerum ad decus & ad dedecus conditorum, sicut credentes & immorigeros ante opposuerat? Nor is what is said, that they disallowed Christ, v.7. any thing against this, that they that beleeved, v 7. were true beleevers and elect, any more then it follows all that are meer visible professors are termed beleevers ordained to eternal life, Acts 13.48. because they are contradistinguished to those who rejected the word of God, and judged themselves unworthy of eternal life, v.46.

4. Saith Mr. Bl. "They are said to be built as living stones, &c which "can agree to none, but elect persons and true beleevers. Answ. That "is left out in the quotation of this text, which would wholly spoil the "argument, and carry it on the other hand; namely those words, to "whom comming as unto a living stone. The Apostle shews them the "way, and points out the condition called for; which being done, they "are then built as living stones: And this implies that it was so with "some, but not with others. Here is that which is done by some and "and neglected by others, and their happiness upon discharge of their "duty; so that if Mr. T. his confidences were not far higher then his "arguments, he might well sit down, and fairly acknowledge that these "titles are given to visible Church-members.

Repl. Mr. T. his confidences are strengthened by Mr. Bls. slight answers to his arguments. His argument was, They who are said to be built as living stones on Christ the living stone, a spiritual house, a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, they are true beleevers and elect persons. But such are those v.5. who are termed a holy nation, v.9. Ergo. The major is proved from this, that these things can agree to no other; the minor from Mr. Bls. own words cited before, that they are the same, v.3. & 9. the Apostle not bringing his speech to a full period till v.11. Thus Dr. John Rainold, thes. 4. § 24. applies this passage onely to the elect. And Mr. John Goree, Vindic. Vind. calls it a misapplication of 1 Pet 2.5. to the visible Kingdome, which expresly note the spiritual house, ch. 5. pag. 20. New Annot. on v. 5. lively stones] that is, as having life from him. See v.4 Diodati annot. on 1 Pet. 2. 5. Lively stones] namely participating of that foresaid life of Christ; and therefore opposite to the dead stones of the material temple. Are built up] or be ye built up. An holy priesthood] that is to say, a multitude and company of priests. By Jesus] whose perfect righteousnes and intercession gaineth all Gods grace to beleevers and to their works. Now what saith Mr. Bl to this? He neither denies major nor minor; But tels us, that those words, to whom comming as unto a living-stone, if they had been cited would wholly spoil the argument, and carry it on the other hand; which is very strange to me, who find those words thus intepreted by the new Annot. v.4. Comming] that is by faith. See Joh. 6.35. & 5.43,44,45. Heb. 10. 22. By Diodati, v. 4. To whom] that is to say, being united to the Lord Jesus, and made his members by a lively faith, that they should prove that the titles 1 Pet 2.5. are given to meer visible Church-members, as if any meer visible Church-member did come to Christ as a living stone by a lively faith, and were a living stone, built up a spiritual house, &c. But let's view Mr. Ills reasons. 1. The Apostle shews them the way, and points out the condition called for, which being done, they are then built as living stones. But 1. it is plain that the Apostle speaks of them as built up already, οἰκοδομεῖσθε, ye are built up, as our translation best reads it, not as of a thing to be done: and this is confirmed in that v 2. they are said to be new born babes, ver. 3. to have tasted how gracious the Lord is, ch. 1. 22. to have purified their souls, v. 23. to be born again. And for πρὸς ὃν προσερχόμενοι, it may be as well read unto whom being comen, as unto whom comming. And so Piscat. in anal. loci. Argumentorum unum est a pari, videl a vocationis initio, quod significat quum ait, eos jam ad Dominum accessisse, id est fide eum recepisse, atque ita super eum adificari cæpisse, and therefore notes more then the way and condition called for, even the thing already begun. 2. But had the Apostle shewed onely the way and condition called for, what had this been to prove that the titles, v. 5. are given to meer visible Church members? Sure nothing at all; for were they comen, or comming, or to come, their comming must have been by faith, and they had not been living stones, built up a spiritual house, nor a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, without a lively faith and election: And therefore neither Mr. Ills conceit being granted, is it proved that any other then elect and true beleevers are meant 1 Pet. 2.5. 2. Saith Mr. Bl. And this implies that it was so with some, who did their duty and were happy, but not with others who neglected. But 1. how those words, unto whom comming as unto a living stone, implies the neglect of duty, I am yet to learn: If they did note a condition, yet they could imply onely a possibility of neglect, not that some did neglect. 2. If some did neglect, yet this is nothing to prove that ver. 5. which is said onely of those that did come and so were happy, the titles are given to meer visible professors. The rest of the Chapter is to vindicate himself from what I said, that I hardly beleeve any approved Writer joyns with him in his interpretation. To which he saith, 1. It is not like my confidence, who dare affront the body of protestant Divines in Tenents that ex professo they have handled against the Papists. Answ. That I do so, is not shewed; that I dare do so when I have truth on my side, is no vice. If Mr. Bls reasons had been good, his singularity had not been culpable. 2. He would insinuate that in my interpretation I follow Estius and Gerhard, whom I neither have, nor ever made use of about this text. 3. That he hath Mr. Ball, whose book I now have not, and his words cited by Mr. Bl. seem not to speak any thing of 1 Pet. 2.9.10. 4. That A Lapide, is wholly for him, to whom he saith I use to be beholding. But I think the words of A Lapide cited by him, are not clear for him; nor do I use to be beholding to A Lapide, he being an Author I have not, nor do I remember that I have made use of him but in the first part of the Review, § 22. onely about 1 Cor. 7.14. 5. That Gerhard mentions others that understand 1 Pet. 2.9. of common and general election. But whether approved Writers ters or not, he doth not say, so that my words stand good, notwithstanding Mr. Bls. vindication of himself, his injurious insinuations of me, and his futile arguments and answers about 1 *Pet.*2.9.

Mr. *Bl. ch.*28. proceeds in proving "That the Covenant of grace in "Gospel times admits Christians in profession, in a state of unregene-"ration, and is not limited in the bounds of it to the elect regenerate. "And 1. he argues from four terms, beleevers, saints, disciples, christians, "which he proves out of Scripture to be given to persons not elect "(which is not denied) and they imply a Covenant undeniably: and "this he proves from my confession, that the titles men ioned by Peter "1 *Pet.*2.9. from Moses, argue a people in Covenant, and therefore "I am so shie to confess them to belong to visible professors: But "those titles are as high as these, and as undeniaoly implying a "Covenant are given to visible professors; those then even according "to me are on this account in Covenant with God.

Answ. Mr. Bl. doth but mock the Reader, and abuse me, by speaking of a confession which he doth not shew, and by assigning a reason of my not confessing the titles, 1 *Pet.*2.9. not to belong to visible professors, which is never given by me, but imagined by himself. As I said before, so I say again, though I hold those who are (as 1 *Pet.*2.9. the the terms are used) a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, a peculiar people, are in Covenant with God, as having Gods Covenant of Evangelical grace made with them; yet I deny that the terms imply a Covenant. And as for the other four terms Mr. Bl. alledgeth to prove meer visible professors being in Covenant, he doth in like manner mock his Reader, 1. not telling what Covenant those terms imply, 2. nor how they imply it, 3. nor on whose part they imply it, whether on the persons part thus intituled, or on Gods, which is the onely thing in question, Whether God have made his Covynant of grace in Gospel times with any non-elect? which sure those terms imply not, sith they imply either the act, as Beleevers and Disciples; or the state, as Saints and Christians, of the persons intitled; not any act of God, covenanting or promising to them Gospel grace. 4. The proof likewise from my confession (if it were so) is as vain: For the terms Christ, holy Angels, onely begotten Son of God &c. are as high as those 1 Pet. 2.9. yet they do not imply a Covenant by my confession; and therefore I may well deny his inference to be my confession, though I should have yeelded that which he saith I confess to be mine.

2. Mr. Bl. argues from some absurdities. "1. This restriction of the "Covenant makes an utter confusion between the Covenant it self "and the conditions of it; or the Covenant it self, and the duties re-"quired in it; between our entrance into Covenant, and our observa-"tion of it, or walking up in faithfulness to it: For there are that en-"ter and keep Covenant with God, Psal. 44.17,18. Psal. 103.17,18. "And there are those that break Covenant, Psal. 78.10, 37. Jer. 34. "18,19,20. *Levit.*26.25. *Isa.*24.5. Now according to this opinion, "regeneration is our entrance into Covenant, and regeneration is our "keeping of Covenant; before regeneration we make no Covenant,

"after regeneration we break no Covenant, there is no such thing as "Covenant breaking: All this makes an utter confusion in the Cove-"nant.

Answ. They that hold, that the Covenant of grace in Gospel times is limited to the elect regenerate, do not think either regeneration our entrance into Covenant, or our keeping of Covenant, or that before regeneration we make no Covenant, or after regeneration we break no Covenant, or that there is no such thing as Covenant breaking; all these are Mr. Bls. fictions, and so is his imputation of making an utter confusion in the Covenant. But this they hold, that God enters none into his Covenant of Evangelical grace but regenerate persons, and that they do all keep Covenant; and that though many before regeneration make Covenant with God, and break that Covenant they make, and so there is Covenant breaking on their part, yet that God keeps the Covenant of Evangelical grace with those he makes it, and that no regenerate person doth so break it as to be ever cast out of Gods Covenant. And for Mr. Bls. texts, they are impertinent to prove that after regeneration any do break the Covenant of Evangelical grace God hath made. For Psal. 78. 10, 37. Levit. 26. 25. Isa. 24. 25. do speak expresly of breaking the Covenant of the Law made with the people of Israel in mount Sinai, which is another Covenant then the new or Evangelical Covenant, Heb. 8. 9, 10. But our question is of the Covenant of grace in Gospel times. And Jer. 34. 18, 19, 20. is ridiculously alledged, sith it speaks not of the Covenant Evangelical, but of the particular Covenant which Zedekiah and the Princes of Judah made to let their Hebrew servants go free, which they brake contrary to the Law. Yet to shew Mr. Bls. futility in arguing there is no consequence in this reasoning. In mens Covenants there are that enter Covenant and keep it, and others that in like manner do enter into Covenant and not keep it, and so men enter into Covenant with God, and some keep it, and some not, therefore they that hold that God makes his Covenant of Evangelical grace onely with the elect regenerate, do confound the Covenant it self and the conditions of it, or the duties required in it, or the entrance into Covenant and our observation of it, or walking up in faithfulness to it. For the distinction remains still between all these, though they be conjoyned in the same persons, as heat and light are distinct though together in flame, and justification and sanctification though conjoyned in the same persons. Yea, sith Mr. Bl. holds some that enter into Covenant are stedfast in it, he makes according to his own superficial arguing the same confusion we do, and so falls into the same imagined absurdity.

The 2d. absurdity Mr. Bl. would fasten on the tenet that the Covenant of grace in Gospel times is limited to the elect, is; that then there is no such thing as an hypocrite in the world, as in reference towards God; For an hypocrite is one that personates the man that he is not, an hypocrite respective to religion and in Scripture use of the phrase, is one that pretends for God, and is not Gods; now according to this opinion, that onely regenerate men are in Covenant, there is no such thing as an hypocrite, no such sin as hypocrisi; ewbere the Gospel is preacked, God makes tender of himself in Covenant, and in case none but regenerate persons enter Covenant, then onely they take upon them the persons of people in relation to him.

Answ. If Mr. Bl. and other Pædobaptists had any will to deal honestly, as men that sought to clear truth, and not to pervert readers, they would, being so often particularly in my Postscript §. 6. admonished, distinguish of being in Covenant by their own act of covenanting, and Gods act of promising. I never denied, that in respect of their own act of covenanting, mere visible professors may be said to be in Covenant with God, but denied that in respect of Gods act of promising (which alone was in question, sith the question being of infants, they cannot be said to be in Covenant with God by their own act of covenanting, but only by Gods act of promising) any other then elect persons are in Covenant with God. Now I grant it, that of them to whom the Gospel-covenant is made by God, there is none an hypocrite; but there be hypocrites of those that enter into Covenant with God; that is, of those that promise to be Gods and are not; to whom, though God tenders himself in Covenant, yet he makes no Covenant or promise to them of Evangelical grace, and therfore notwithstanding this imagined absurdity, yet the position is true, that the Covenant of grace in Gospel times, as made by God to men, is limited to the elect.

The 3d. absurdity is, then no Minister in any Church may baptize any person, for none can now discern infallibly whether a person be regenerate, and Mr. Bl. findes Christ giving charge to disciple Nations, and to baptise them, but findes him not giving Commission, that wherein the judgement of charity men have cause to conceive them to be disciples, then to baptize them. The Apostles staid not for observation of those signes, that might in a well-grounded charity perswade that they were regenerate persons. And these that fix it here, too ordinarily make interests the chief ground to carry their charity to a more favourable construction. They that are most like to make a party with them, or drive on interest their way, must be judged persons meet for baptism; of this in a short time we have large experience. Those that gather up Churches, and initiate them by baptism (the way of the Apostles I confess, in case that they would make good that they have to deal with Heathens, and therefore a way of more colour then theirs, that set up new Churches, and retain the old baptism) we see what manner of saints are received among them, such that civil persons (respective to sobriety, chastity, or upright dealing with men) cannot without stain of their reputation, make their companions.

Answ. Pædobaptists do usually plead, that infants are in the Covenant of grace, therefore they are to be baptized. The antecedent can be meant of being in the Covenant of grace no otherwise then by Gods act of promise, to be the God of a believers seed; therefore they make the being in Covenant by Gods act of promise to be a persons God, the rule of baptizing. Now I assert, that God hath not promised to be a God to any man or his seed in respect of Evangelical grace, but the elect. Therefore this absurdity is justly charged on the Pædobaptists, that according to their hypotheses, no Minister can baptize any infant in faith. For he must baptize according to them, onely those infants that are in Covenant, and whom he knowes to be in Covenant; but those infants onely are in Covenant who are elect, and no Minister can know which infant is elect, or in Covenant with God, which not, all infants are not, no not of believers, not all Abrahams, or Isaacs, Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. Therefore according to this rule no Pædobaptist can baptize any infant in faith, and a judgement of charity Mr. M. Mr. Bl. and others agree and that according to truth, is not it we are to baptize by. So that this absurdity doth unavoidably follow on Pædobaptists opinion, which Mr. Bl. endeavours, but in vain, to fasten on us, who do often disclaim baptizing persons upon their being in Covenant with God by his act of promise to be their God, as our rule; and do continually assert our baptizing persons, because disciples by profession, and by reason of their own covenanting to follow Christ (which Mr. Bl. confesseth to be according to Christs Commission, and the Apostles way in dealing with Heathens) and therefore the absurdity follows not our opinion, but the Pædobaptists, who can baptize no infant by their rule, because they cannot know any infant whom they are to baptize to be in the Covenant of grace. As for Mr. Bls. confession, that our practise is the way of the Apostles in case we would make good that we have to deal with Heathens, I wonder Mr. Bl. a learned man, should require us to make good that which of it self is so manifest. For sure we have to deal with Heathens or with Jews, sith all the men in the world are either Heathens, that is ἐθνικοὶ of the Nations, or Jewes: but me thinks he should not say we have to deal with Jews, therefore we have to deal with Heathens, and consequently our practise is the way of the Apostles, by Mr. Bls. own confession. To confine the term [heathens] onely to them that are not Christians in name, is indeed according to the vulgar speech, but besides the Scripture use, which Mr. Bl. me thinks in his writing should have followed. But if Mr. Bl. mean it in the vulgar sense, it is easie to make it good that no Englishman or his child is a Christian, till he be made a disciple by preaching the Gospel, sith to be a disciple of Christ and a Christian are terms of the same sense, Acts. 11. 26. Yet in baptizing by Christs commission and the Apostles practise, there is no difference made between Jews and Heathens, both are to be baptized upon their believing, Mark. 16. 16. neither the one nor the other were, or were to be baptized by the Apostles, without their own personal profession of faith. Our way then by Mr. Bls. own confession is the way of the Apostles. His confession also is true, that our way is of more colour then theirs that set up new Churches, and retain the old baptism, for acknowledging them church-members at Baptism, and not admitting them as church-members though without scandal, is after their own principles to contradict themselves; and to set up Churches in a congregational way, disclaiming the National and Parochial, and yet to admit infants to Baptism by vertue of Circumcision, and Abrahams covenant and church-gathering, what is it but to dissent that in practise which they plead in dispute, and to make the frame of the national Church Jewish, the rule of the Christian Church catholick. Nor have Presbyterians any colour for their reformation of Baptism or the Lords supper, if they will stick to their allegations of taking a rule for Baptism from Circumcision, or of the Lords Supper from the Passeover; for, to them all sorts whether ignorant or scandalous were admitted; and if we must retain whom the Jewish Church retained as visible church members, there will be no Ecclesiastical juridical excommunication for moral miscarriages, there being no such among them. As for what Mr. Bl. chargeth the baptized Churches with, of the unholiness of their members, though I can say little of those near Mr. Bl. (if there be any) yet I am able to say of some, and Mr. Baxter himself hath in print said somewhat of one of the Churches, which might refute this calumny, and I think there are many able to testifie of the holy conversation of many of the Churches of baptized persons, however Mr. Baxter imagines they in the end prove wicked. However, we do neither in practise nor opinion maintain such impure Churches of ignorant and vicious persons as Mr. Bl. Vindic. Fæd. ch. 47. doth, and Presbyterians commonly do: Nor is it likely, the worst of the baptized Churches should be worse then the ordinary sort of the Pædobaptists Churches of Mr. Bls. way.

Chap. 29. Mr. Bl. answers to some objections against his assertion. 1. That regenerate persons onely are in New Testament times honoured with the name of the people of God, they therefore onely are in Covenant. To which he answers, 1. That there are terms equivalent, Beleevers, Saints, Disciples, and Christians, which are given to the unregenerate. To which I reply, that though this argument be not mine, yet it may be said, that the term Gods people doth rather imply being in Covenant with God then the other terms. But I think the argument not cogent, sith the term [my people] doth not in the force of the word necessarily import a Covenant of God, and men may be conceived his people by election, or purchase, without a Covenant, and therefore own it not.

2*ly.* Saith he, It is not often that that phrase is found in New Testament Scriptures, with such restriction onely to regenerate persons. He denies not Tit. 2. 14. is taken for a people separate by grace out of the state of nature: But he is not resolved whether Revel. 21. 3. serve to purpose, it being in dispute whether to be fulfilled on earth or in heaven; if on earth, then it sets out a singular glory in the Church through Ordinances in purity, yet with a mixture of close hypocrites. And for Christs personal reign on earth, that he lets go as the opinion of others, of a considerable part of whom he is not very well conceited it seems.

Answ. His not denying Tit. 2. 14. to be pregnant, and being alledged by me as the parallel place to 1 Pet. 2. 9. confirms my restriction of the titles there used to the regenerate. And me thinks the promises, Revel. 21. 3, 4. That God would be their God with them, that he would wipe away all tears from their eys, there should be no more death, nor crying, nor labour, should be sufficient to prove the people of God there meant to be onely the regenerate. And me thinks Matth. 1. 21. & 2. 6. Luke 1. 17, 68, 77.

77. & 2.32. & 7.16. Acts 15.14. & 18.10. Rom.9.25. & 11.1. & 15.10, 2 Cor.6.16. Heb.4.9. & 8.10. 1 Pet.2.10. Revel.18.4. the term [my people or Gods people] should be restrained to the elect.

3ly. Saith he, My people, or people of God, is used more frequently in the N. T. without restriction to the elect regenerate. He alledgeth three places, 2 Cor.6.16. which with him is plain quoted from Levit.26.16. where it is a national promise, to be understood of Gods visible abode in ordinances, being tendered to those that were over-busie with Idols, from which he dissuades with this argument, that they were the temple of the Lord, separate of God for his worship and service, and the promise is no more then is made good to visible Churches, Revel.2.1. whereof some members were not regenerate.

Answ. To dwell in them to walk in them, to be their God, and they to be his people, the temple of the living God, 2 Cor.6.16. whom he receives, to whom he is a father, and they his sons and daughters, cannot be meant of any other then the elect: For they onely are the temple of God in which he dwels, who have his Spirit, 1 *Cor.*3.16,17. & 6.19. (a bare separation by outward calling to his worship & service is not enough) which is the most forcible argument to dissuade from medling with Idols. However it be *Levit.*26.16. here is not a national promise, but a promise to particula persons, separate from the rest of the nation, *v.*17. Nor can it be understood of Gods visible abode in ordinances, but in persons who were holy; nor is it made to every visible Church, in respect of every visible member: Nor is the promise of Christs walking, Revel. 2.1. so much as this of Gods dwelling in them.

The 2d. he alledgeth is *Rom.9.25. which is to be understood no otherwise, where the call of the ten Tribes, from Hos.*1.10. & 2.23. is applied to the call of the Gentiles into a Church state and condition. And to the objection from Rom.9.23. he saith, God sets up visible ordinances, and calls to a Church state as is there propheſied, that he may there work to himself a people of invisible relation, that thereby he may make them vessels of mercy, having afore prepared them to glory.

Answ. The call, Rom 9.25. is not as Mr. Bl seems to conceive, an outward refusable calling into a visible Church state by visible ordinances; but as v. 7. 8, 11, 24, 26. calling is effectual calling, which gives being to the called, and is never refused, but proper to the elect onely: Which is apparent from v. 24. where he saith even us whom also, which can have reference to none but vessels of mercy mentioned *v.*23. who are also sons of the living God, v. 26. Which being urged by me in my Postscript, sect. 10. and not refelled, stands as a firm proof that the people of God there are onely elect ones, or as Mr. Bl. speaks, a people of invisible relation, vessels of mercy afore prepared to glory.

The 3d. he alledgeth is *Revel.*18.4. where all professors of faith are included in that exhortation, and so all Ministers are to preſs it. But though it were the duty of all, yea of them that were not professors of faith, to quit Babylon; yet the invitation is a fruit of Gods special care by a voice from heaven, and therefore is more then an exhortation to a commoh duty, to wit, a ſpecial effectual call, whereby Gods people, that is his elect ones; ſhall be brought out of Babylon as Lot out of Sodom, and is to be conceived of the elect onely, not of hypocritical profeſſors of faith. So that Mr. Bl. hath not brought one Text out of the New Teſtament, in which [Gods people] is applied to meer viſible profeſſors; and yet if theſe had ſerved his turn, his aſſertion had been falſe, as is ſhewed by the number of places wherein [Gods people] is limited to the elect.

Another objection is out of Jer. 31.31,32,33. which he ſaith " is ſet up " againſt all New Teſtament light, to prove that none muſt be of the " called of God in o Covenant, for fruition of Church priviledges, but " thoſe that are regenerate: Men in Old Teſtament Covenan broke " Covenant, as is there expreſt; men in the new Covenant ſhall keep " Covenanant, and theſe are onely the elect and regenerate.

Anſw. The Text joyned with Heb 8. 6,7,8,9,10. proves that God makes his new Covenant with none but thoſe who keep it, who are the elect onely. I produce it not to prove (as Mr. Bl. ſuggeſts of ſome) that none muſt be of the called of God into Covenant, for fruition of Church priviledges, but thoſe that are regenerate; nor to prove that none ſhall enter Covenant and tranſgreſs it. that the Covenant that now is, is not in any poſſibility to be tranſgreſt: but to prove, that none to whom God makes his new Covenant do break it; which the Author to the Hebrews doth affirm, in that he differences this from the former Covenant, that the former was faulty, or occaſioned God to complain that it was broken; but this is ſuch as that to take away occaſion of complaint for breach of it, God makes proviſion by better promiſes, that it ſhall not be broken by thoſe to whom it is made. Nor doth it hence follow, as Mr. Bl. ſpeaks (this being the characteriſtical difference) that as none in New Teſtament times enter Covenant, but they keep Covenant; ſo none in Old Teſtament times were in Covenant, but did tranſgreſs it: For we do not ſay as he perverts the poſition, that none in New Teſtament times enter Covenant but they keep Covenant; we know many have by their profeſſion and baptiſm entred into Covenant, and have not kept it: but this we ſay, that God makes with none his new Covenant, whether in New Teſtament times, or in Old Teſtament times, but they do keep it; and that this is the characteriſtical difference between the Old and New Covenant (not Old and New Teſtament times) which are in the Epiſtle to the Romanes and Galatians called the Law and the Promiſes; that the one might be and was broken, yet the other is and ſhall be kept by thoſe to whom it is made, becauſe of Gods undertaking to write his Laws in their hearts. As for an outward Covenant made by God diſtinct from theſe and yet in force, it is Mr. Bls. figment as Mr. B. hath proved in his Apol. againſt Mr. Bl. pag. 66,67,103, &c. As for the anſwers, 1. that the Covenant, Jer. 31.31,32,33. is not a Covenant properly ſo called, it is refuted before, Sect. 33. as I remember. 2. That it is not the whole of the Covenant. But if it be but a part, it is made onely to the elect, the other part whatever it be being made to none other. 3. If the new Covenant be another Covenant, then there muſt be two diſtinct Goſpel Covenants.

nants. But this is said upon the mistake refuted Sect. 43. that the Covenant at Mount Sinai with the Jews was the Gospel Covenant. I have again viewed pag. 105, 106, 107. of Mr. Bls. answer to my Letter, and do not find any explication of the promises Jer. 31. 31, 32, 33. which may shew that the promises there are made to any but the elect; nor do I find an explication of them, whereby to know how he would have them understood, but of the term [new Covenant] which he would have understood as if it were meant onely of a clearer explication of the old Covenant not well understood before, as Joh. 13. 34. the new commandment is a clearer explication then was formerly. But neither is true: For the new commandment Joh. 13. 34. is not so called from a new explication, but a new motive, his own example, as the very words shew: And the new Covenant is so called, Jer. 31. 31, 32, 33. not from a clearer explication, bu better promises, Heb. 8. 6. And I still profess, that I find not that Mr. Bls. answer is quit from enervating the argument for effectual grace and perseverance in it, sith he makes the Covenant to be to the non-elect; nor doth he demonstrate, that I cannot build effectual grace and perseverance on that text, making it a distinct Covenant from the first, without the overthrow of effectual grace and perseverance in Old Testament times. Thus much for answer to those three Chapters of Mr. Bl. he that would see more of Mr. Bls. mistakes about the Covenant, may read Mr. Baxters Book afore quoted.

SECT. XLVII.

Mr. Bls. Vindic. Fad. Ch. 34. Concerning the stating the question of the Birth-priviledge of the issue of Eelievers, is examined; and his Objections against my stating it removed.

MR. Bl. ch. 34. complains, that my confusion hath mudded the way, that my mixture brings a cloud upon all] he might as well say light is darkness. He saith, I undertake a full Comment upon these words of the Covenant, Gen. 17. 7. Exercit. pag. 3. in which the Reader will not finde this undertaking. He sets down my distinction of Abrahams seed Exercit. pag. 3. and then saith, here by the way Mr. T. mistakes himself. 1. In casting Ishmael out of Covenant in that manner, that all the time of his Circumcision he had not title to it, to that end that he might make (were it possible) the Covenant and the Seal distinct of themselves, without any relation one to the other, conceiving some to be sealed that were never in Covenant, and some to be in Covenant that were never sealed. Ishmael was in Covenant, as was Esau at his Circumcision, and his Circumcision doth witness it, Gen. 17. 11.

Answ. I do assert, that the Covenant Gen. 17. was not made with Ishmael, for none of the promises there did belong to him, and I have further proved it from v. 19. 20, 21. Heb. 11. 9, &c. though not to make the Covenant and Seal distinct of themselves, without any relation one to another; yet conceiving some were to be circumcised that were never in Covenant, and vicevers â. But Mr. Bl. thinks it proved that Ishmael was in Covenant, because he was circumcised, for it is said, Circumcision shall be a token of the Covenant between me and you, Gen. 17. 11. To which I said, the Covenant was between God and Abraham and his seed in their generations, v. 7. and this seed is declared exclusively of Ishmael to be Isaac, v. 21. and them that should be of him, Gen. 21. 12. Rom. 9. 7, 8. Though every persons Circumcision after Gods appointment was a token of the Covenant God made, yet not of the Covenant God made between himself and the circumcised: for the covenant of God with Abraham was not to every circumcised stranger, nor to every circumcised child, but between God, and Abraham and his seed in their generations which should be called in Isaac, and accordingly the covenant to be kept, v. 10. is said to be between God and Abraham and Sarah, and Abrahams seed. Pareus com. on Gen. 17. 7. Two heads there are of the Covenant, God and Abraham; on Abrahams part also his seed or posterity are comprehended. But the seed is understood according to the limitations of Scripture here, and in other places, Gen. 17. 21. & 21. 12. Rom. 9. 7, 8. what therefore is here added in their generations, extends not the Covenant to Ishmaelites, Idumaans, and Keturaans. There is no truth in that which Mr. Bl. adds, men in Covenant were the adequate subject of Circumcision, and are of Baptism. For the females and the males of the seventh day were in Covenant, yet not subjects of Circumcision; many Proselytes and others were the subjects of Circumcision, though not in Covenant. Nor is the reason why either this or that person was to be circumcised, and is now to be baptized his being in Covenant, but the command of God concerning them whether they be in Covenant with God or no, in that sense in which Pædobaptists mean when they say infants are in covenant, because of Gods covenant made to them without their own covenant, as hath been often proved. The casting out which I observe Apol. 114. of Ishmael doth not sufficiently argue (as Mr. Bl. saith) that Ishmael was once in Covenant, but that he was once in Abrahams house, from whence he was cast out.

2*ly*. Saith Mr. Bl. "Mr. T. does ill in laying upon Ishmael the "brand of Bastardy, as though he were a son of whoredomes to faithful Abraham; Concubines in Scripture have the name of Wives, and "their seed was ever accounted legitimate; neither will this serve his "purpose at all to argue Ishmael out of covenant.

Answ. I termed Ishmael Abrahams base natural seed, but not to argue him out of covenant, nor by terming him base did I term him the son of whoredomes, but of an unlawful bed. And though Concubines in Scripture have the name of wives, and whores are usually called those that are common to more then one, and the sons of Concubines counted legitimate in respect of inheritances, yet he that should say that Concubines were lawful Wives, and their children legitimate before God, must maintain the lawfulness of Concubinate and Polygamy in the Patriarchs, which our Lord Christs words gainsay, Matth. 19. 4, 5, 6.

M. Bl. having recited my words Exercit. pag. 3. concerning the different ferent seed of Abraham, and the different manner of Gods promise to be God to them, he thus after his calumniating manner infers: So that it evidently appears, that he casts out all the natural seed of Abraham (legitimate or base, as he calls them, inheriting or not inheriting) from any title to that Covenant, save in domestick and political benefits. Which if true, I should cast out Isaac, Jacob, David, Christ Jesus himself from any title to that Covenant Gen. 17. 7. save in domestick and political benefits: which is so gross a thing, and so manifest a falshood, that I wonder Mr. Bl. hath the face to write such a thing of me, and to pervert my words so palpably; but that I perceive he cares little how he hazards his own credit, so he may impair mine. I say, that God promiseth he will be a God to Christ, imparting in him blessing to all nations of the earth, to the spiritual seed of Abraham in Evangelical benefits; to the natural seed inheriting in domestick and political benefits. How doth it sufficiently appear hence, that I cast out all the natural seed of Abraham from any title to that Covenant, save in domestick and political benefits? Doth it follow, that because I assigne Evangelical benefits to Abrahams spiritual seed, I deny any of his natural seed to be his spiritual?

To this loud calumny, he adjoyns his own gross position in these words. "Here I shall undertake a position in full opposition, I will "establish my Covenant, &c. Gen. 17. 7. in their fullest latitude as "they are there spoken, in the largest comprehension (which accord-"ing to Scripture they can be taken) are entred with all the natural "seed of Abraham, by Isaac and Jacob. Which if true, then God breaks his word if he be not a God in spiritual, and all other blessings comprehended under the phrase, I will be a God to thee and thy seed; to Judas, Abab, the Pharises that said Christ cast out devils by the help of devils, and so blasphemed the Holy Ghost, the Jews that rejected Christ, in effectual calling, justifying, raising to eternal life, which the Scripture comprehends under that phrase of being a God to a person, Rom. 9. 11. Gal. 3. 16. Luk. 20. 37, 38. He saith, the confirmation of this position, is a matter of ease if any. Which I acknowledge, if by [confirmation] be meant such as Mr. Bl. in his dictating and flirting fashion useth to confirm things; not distinctly opening terms, nor the meaning of the texts he brings, nor shewing by any Logical deduction the pertinency of them to prove his position. But I shall as soon expect a new world in the Moon proved as that position, by any true Logical deduction out of Scripture. He talks of my trifling circumstances in my Examen, and foul miscarriage in my stating of the question, even in that which was most necessary according to the rule of all Logicians, that in every consideration of things, distinction of ambiguous terms should be used first afore any definition, proposition, proof, or answer be made, as Keckerm. syst. Log. l. 1. sect. post. c 1. out of Cicero, Boetius, Aristotle, Galen, &c. shews; and for endeavouring to bring Mr. M. to state his own proposition without ambiguity, that I might know what to deny or grant, which Mr. Bl. terms ineptly my soul miscarriage in my stating of the question, when I stated not a question at all, but

onely sought to finde out how Mr. M. meant his 2d. concl. in his Sermon. But Mr. Bl. will have his position limited. And he speaks thus. "1. We "take not in all the natural seed of Abraham, as the position plainly "expresseth, but the seed by promise, which I understand not of the "elect or regenerate seed: but of that seed which G d by miracle (ac- "cording to promise) gave to Abraham by Sarah, when she was past "years of child bearing.

Answ. 1. If he take not in all the natural seed of Abraham, as comprehended in that promise Gen. 17.7. but the seed by promise, then the Covenant Gen. 17.7. was never made to Ishmael, which was signified by circumcision, and consequently though Ishmael was circumcised, yet he was never in covenant, and Mr. Bls position is false, men in Covenant are the adequate subject of Circumcision. 2. If he understand not by [the children of the promise Rom. 9.8.] the elect or regenerate, then he doth not understand as the Apostle doth, who declares v. 11. that the seed v. 7. who are children of the promise v. 8. are such as are by Gods calling according to Gods purpose of election, v. 11. whom he loveth, v. 13, hath mercy and compassion on, v. 15. and deserts the contrary demonstrants, as I have often shewed in this and other writings. 3. If he understand the seed by promise onely of that which God by miracle (according to promise) gave to Abraham by Sarah, when she was past years of child-bearing, then he asserts the Covenant Gen. 17.7. in the fullest latitude to be made wholly to Isaac, not to Jacob, or any other, for no other but Isaac individually taken was that seed which God by miracle (according to promise) gave to Abraham by Sarah, when she was past years of child bearing.

Mr. Bl. adds, The natural posterity (which was the birth by promise) we onely understand; and so the Apostle explains it Rom. 9.7, 8. neither, &c.

Answ. If Mr. Bl. understand onely Gen. 17.7. by [the seed of Abraham] the natural posterity (which was the birth by promise) and that according to Mr. Bls. description in the words immediately precedent is no other then individual Isaac, then he takes in no other then Isaac into the Covenant, Gen. 17.7. as meant by Abrahams seed. Now the Apostle is so far from explaining it so, that the contrary is most true. For 1. the Apostle expresly saith, that is they which are the children of the flesh, that is begotten by meer natural generation of Abraham, which is all one with the natural posterity of Ab aham, these are not the children of God, that is those to whom the promise is made Gen. 17.7. as the contradistinction to the children of the promise in the latter part of v. 8. shews. And that by [children of the flesh] are meant meer natural posterity appears in that v. 7. which is explained v. 8. the term [the seed of Abraham] is put as equipolent to [children of the flesh.] which understood any otherwise then thus [the seed or children of Abraham by meer natural generation] should exclude Isaac also, who was the natural posterity of Abraham, and so the seed of Abraham, but not by meer natural generation. 2. If the Apostle had explained the seed, Gen. 17.7. of the natural posterity onely, which was the birth by promise (which according to Mr. Bls. deſcription can be no more then individual Iſaac) then he had ſaid Rom. 9. 8. but the child of the promiſe is counted for the ſeed, not as he doth in the plural number, the children of the promiſe, (by whom are meant all elect perſons, who are by ſupernatural calling counted by God for the ſeed of the Gentiles as well as the Jews, as he affirms v. 24.) are counted for the ſeed to whom the promiſe Gen. 17. 7. is made. But Mr. Bl. goes on thus.

" Where children of God is taken in the ſame latitude as adopti" on, v. 4. comprizing all the viſible body of the Jews, as it is alſo
" taken, Deut. 14. 1.

Anſw. The right reading (as I have before proved) of Rom. 9 4. ſhould be [whoſe was the adoption] and this is meant indeed of the viſible body of Iſraelites in former generations, excluding the preſent; nor do I deny it to be ſo meant, Deut. 14. 1. but not ſo as either then or at any time comprizing every particular Jew, but as Mr. Bl. himſelf rightly explaineth ſuch paſſages in his anſwer to my letter pag. 51. (though ill applied to Rom. 9. 25, 26.) the denomination being a præſtantiori parte, as we call it, a heap of corn, where yet there is a mixture of chaff, and a corn field, where there is a mixture of tares and other weeds; and as the Apoſtle (writing to the Church of the Theſſalonians) ſaith, knowing brethren your election of God, and yet I ſuppoſe you do not believe that each particular man was a veſſel of glory. But I go after Mr. Bl.

" Onely, ſaith he, thoſe that are born by promiſe are included, and
" ſo all the ſons of Iſhmael and Keturah, though their parents were once
" in Covenant, are by Gods ſpecial command ſhut out.

Anſw. 1. There are no more born by promiſe according to Mr. Bls. deſcription but Iſaac, and ſo no more according to him included; not Jacob, much leſs all the viſible body of the Jews. 2. If thoſe that are born by promiſe onely are included, then Iſhmael, and the ſons of Keturah who were not born by promiſe, are not included in the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. then they were never in Covenant, for none were never in that Covenant, who were not included in the promiſe. 3. The Scripture doth not mention any ſpecial command to ſhut out Iſhmael out of the Covenant he was once in, but to caſt him out of Abrahams houſe. Nor do I ſee in what ſenſe Abraham could be ſaid to caſt him out of Covenant. Surely not by revoking Gods promiſe, that were little leſs then blaſphemy, to aſcribe to Abraham the evacuating of Gods word; not by uncircumciſing him, for neither was any ſuch thing done, though Abraham obeyed God, nor perhaps could be done. What other way he might ſhut him out of Covenant I do not underſtand. 4. If Iſhmael were once in the Covenant, as it comprehends the promiſe of Evangelical grace, then God promiſed to be his God in reſpect of regeneration, juſtification, adoption, ſanctification and raiſing up to eternall life, and he was in that eſtate, and if he were ſhut out again, then a man may be in the covenant of Evangelical grace and ſhut out again, which is contrary to the very end of the new Covenant, as it is expreſſed Heb. 8. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10. and infers falling away from Goſpel grace.

Mr. Bl. proceeds thus. "Neither are all these included; for as "God cast off Ishmael and his seed, so also Esau and his posterity; "therefore the Apostle having brought the former distinction of seeds, "rests not there but adds v. 10, 11, 12, 13. And therefore the deno- "mination of the seed is in Jacob, surnamed Israel; Therefore when "the head, or if you will, root of the Covenant is mentioned; usually "in Scripture it is not barely Abraham, but Abraham and Isaac, to "exclude all Abrahams seed of any other line; not barely Abraham and "Isaac, but Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. The natural seed of Jacob then "(not according to ours, but Gods own limits) is included in that Co- "venant in the full latitude and extent of it.

Answ. 1. The terms head or root of the Covenant, are not Scripture expressions. I finde Gal. 3. 16. that to Abraham and his seed were the promises made, and Rom. 11. 16. If the root be holy so are the branches, v. 18. thou bearest not the root, but the root thee; but this root is I conceive, no other then Abraham, who is not termed either head or root of the Covenant singly or jointly, but of the olive or branches in respect of their propagation from him partly as a natural father, and a spiritual father in respect of Israelite believers, and partly as a spiritual father onely in respect of Gentile believers. But if any be to be termed the head and root of the Covenant, I think it is most fit to give that title to Christ, the surety and mediatour, Heb. 7. 22. & 8. 6. to whom the promises were made, Gal. 3. 16, 17. 2. When God is stiled the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that it is to exclude all Abrahams seed of any other line, and to say that God cast off Esau and his posterity from the Covenant, is more then the Apostle saith, or is according to truth. For the Apostle doth onely say, that therefore the Oracle was delivered concerning Esau and Jacob, and the words of the Prophet concerning Jacob and Esau are alledged, that he might shew that God confined not his Covenant to Abrahams natural posterity, nor included them all; not to shew that he cast off or excluded all Abrahams seed of any other line then Isaac and Jacob from the Covenant. For then Job, Jethro, and all other Proselytes of Abrahams seed by Keturah, of Esau's posterity had been excluded from the Covenant of grace in Christ, which is contrary to Scripture; and in like sort, all the Gentiles from Ishmael, Keturah, Esau, had been excluded from being called Christian believers. For none are called by God who are excluded out of the Covenant of grace. 3. That the natural seed of Jacob is included in that Covenant Gen. 17. 7. in the full latitude and extent of it, as it comprehends a promise of Evangelical grace, is so far from being the Apostles determination, that he resolves in the contrary in those words Rom. 9. 6. All are not Israel, that are of Israel.

Secondly, saith Mr. Bl. "We do not say that this Covenant was en- "tred with Abraham as a natural Father, nor his seed comprehended as "natural children; but as a professour of the Faith accepting the Co- "nant, taking God for his God; he accepts it for himself, and for his "seed, his natural posterity. And all that profess the Faith hold in "the like tenure, are in Covenant, and have the Covenant; not re-

" sted in their own persons, but enlarged to their posterity.

Answ. I do not remember that I did any where say that Pædobaptists said, that covenant Gen. 17. 7. was entred with Abraham as a natural Father, but the Author of the little Treatise intituled Infants Baptism proved lawful by Scripture, asserted the Covenant was made with Abraham as a believer; to which I replied, that as it was Evangelical it was not made with Abraham simply as a believer, for then it had been made to every believer as to Abraham, but with Abraham as the Father of believers, and with his seed as believers as he was. But that ever any Pædo baptist did afore Mr. Bl. assert that the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. as it was a Covenant of Evangelical grace, was entred by God with him as a professour of the faith, accepting the Covenant taking God for his God, accepting it for himself and for his seed, his natural posterity, I do not remember. If they should, yet I take it to be false, and without likelihood of truth. For if the Covenant of Evangelical grace were made with Abraham under that formal consideration, then God had promised Evangelical grace, justication, adoption, to him as a professour of faith onely, so that if it were supposed he had been an hopocrite, yet he should have been justified, adopted in that he was a professour of faith, or else it is to be conceived justification and adoption were not to Abraham by this Covenant, contrary to Gal. 3. 16, 17, 18. nor hath it any likelihood of truth, that God would single out so exemplary a believer as Abraham was, Rom. 4. 18, 19. and enter so solemn a Covenant with him barely as a professour of faith, which was competent to an hypocrite. Nor do I well know in what sense God entred the Covenant with him as a professour of the faith accepting the Covenant for himself and his seed. For Gods entring the Covenant is no other then his making of it: But God did not make it on this condition that Abraham should accept it for him and his seed, but as knowing Abrahams integrity, by way of testification of his love and grace to him being so eminent and tried a believer afore this Covenant was made with him. Nor is it true that all that profess the faith hold in the like tenure, are in Covenant, and have the Covenant; not vested in their own persons, but enlarged to their posterity, there being none in the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. but Abraham and his seed, of whom no meer professour of faith, much less his seed, except elect or true believer is either. Nor was the Covenant ever made to Abrahams or Israels mere natural posterity as it is Evangelical; much less enlarged to the posterity natural of every professour of faith.

Thirdly, saith Mr. Bl. " We entitle the seed of Abraham, as before, " to spiritual mercies (and so the seed of all that hold in the tenure of " Abraham) to saving grace, and justification to life eternal; not by " an absolute conveyance infallibly to inherit (we know though Israel " be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant onely shall be saved, Rom. 9. " 27.) but upon Gods terms, and conditions in the Gospel of God, " held out of God to his people; salvation is made over by vertue of " Covenant, to all thus in Covenant in that sense as Christ speaks " Joh. 4. 22. salvation is of the Jews. In that sense as Christ of that " of Zacheus family; this day is salvation come to this house, Luk. 19.

" 9. In that sense as the Apostle to the Hebrews speaks of it, where he " sets out the danger of neglecting so great salvation, Heb. 2. 3. In that " sense (as I conceive) the Apostle speaks of it, where he saith, that up" on the call of the Jews all Israel shall be saved, Rom. 11. 26.

Answ. That by [salvation Luk. 19. 9. Heb. 2. 3. Rom. 11. 26.] is not meant outward priviledges, in which salvation upon Gods terms may be obtained, hath been shewed before Sect. 44 And though I grant that salvation is said to be of the Jews, in that from them was the doctrine of salvation, yet I see no necessity to expound the term [salvation] metonymically, as if by [salvation] were meant barely the doctrine of salvation, but the sense may be truely conceived thus, salvation, remission of sins, justification, adoption, eternal life, is of the Jews, as instruments by preaching the Gospel of converting, and so saving men. But that God when he promised Gen. 17. 7. I will be thy God and the God of thy seed (as this promise is Evangelical) meant this, all the professors of faith and their seed shall enjoy those priviledges, in which salvation upon Gods terms may be obtained, is proved false. 1. In that the writers of the New Testament never so explain it, but where the promise is mentioned as Evangelical, they declare it imports a further thing proper to the elect and true believers. 2 That they never by Abrahams seed as Evangelically understood, mean any other then elect persons and true believers: both which are proved largely before Sect. 28. 3. That in this sense the promise were not made good, for God doth not make good to every professour of faith that he shall have those priviledges, as to be baptized, be in Church-communion, have the the Lords supper, have a Pastour to preach the Gospel, much less to every one of his natural seed, as frequent experience shews. 4. By this expositon nothing is assured to the infant of a believer, or to a professour of faith, which is not also to an unbelievers child, yea to an unbeliever, who as well as they have title to saving grace, and justification to eternal life, upon termes and conditions in the Gospel of God, held out of God to his people.

Mr. Bl. adds, " And this [that professors of faith or believers up" on their call shall enjoy those priviledges, in which salvation upon " Gods terms may be obtained] is all that can by any means be squee" zed out of their words, that say, the Covenant of grace was made
" of God, with Abraham and his natural seed, or with believers and " their seed. It is even irksome to read the large business that Mr. I.
" makes of it, to hide out Mr. Ms. meaning, about the Covenant of " God made with Abraham and his seed; and both Mr. M. and my self " must per force confess that we mean it of a Covenant, infallibly ab" solutely to confer grace, and consequently salvation.

Answ. 1. That more may be squeezed out, is proved in my Exam. part 3 sect. 3. in this part of the Review sect. 30, 31, &c. And if no more be meant by them, these things will follow. 1. That they mean by the Covenant of grace, a covenant of outward priviledges, of visible Church-membership, Baptism, the Lords Supper, to every believer by profes-en, though a Gentile, and his natural seed, under the pretence of the Covenant, Gen. 17.7. which pretended outward Covenant of outward privileges is a meer counterfeit, neither Gen. 17.7. nor any where else to be found in the holy Scripture. 2. They do most grosly abuse the text, Gen. 17.7. for proving such a Covenant, quite besides the expositions given of it throughout the New Testament, as is proved in this Part of the Review, sect. 28. and quite besides the expositions even of the reformed Divines, though Pædobaptists, in their commentaries on the N. T. and writings against Arminians. 3. They do mock Readers most palpably 1. in telling them the Covenant of grace contains the promise of remission of sins, &c. is for substance the same in all ages, and say it belongs to all the infants of beleevers, that they are in it, that is the Covenant of grace, they are confederate with parents, as the words of the Directory, Mr. M. and others cited by me, Exam part. 3 sect. 3 shew; and yet deny this Covenant of saving grace is made to them all, but upon such conditions as upon which it is made to unbeleevers children yea, to every man in the world. 2. In that they when they make the sacraments to be seals of the Covenant of grace, and attempt to prove it from Rom. 4.11. which mentions onely a seal of the righteousnes of faith they make them seals of the righteousnes of faith, and say infants are in the Covenant, and the seal must follow the Covenant, and yet nevertheless deny all the infants they baptize by vertue of being in the Covenant (of which Baptism is a seal) to be in that Covenant of which Baptism is a seal; but say they are in a meer imaginary Covenant, which they call an outward Covenant, of which Baptism is no seal, but rather according to their conceits, the thing it self covenanted or promised. 3. They mock parents, by telling them in writings and sermons, that they are to be comforted concerning their children, that if they be beleevers their children are saved by vertue of the promise Gen. 17.7. that they are bound to beleeve it; and yet when they are pressed with the Apostles determination, Rom. 9.6,7,8. and other arguments, they deny that they understand it of the Covenant of saving grace, (which alone can infer salvation) infallibly and absolutely to confer grace; but either they make it onely conditional if they repent and beleeve, which no man is sure any infant doth; or they say in the judgement of charity (which is fallible, and is no object of faith) we are to take them to be in Covenant and to be saved, or else they say (which is now the common shift) they are in the outward Covenant, which is a figment, and of which they cannot say but that a person may be in it and not saved. 4. That sith it is commonly conceited by readers and hearers that they mean that which Mr M. Mr G. Mr Bl. &c. do disclaim, Pædobaptists are bound to teach the people at their baby-sprinklings, and at other times when they avouch the infants of beleevers and of meer visible professors of faith to be in the Covenant of grace, Gen. 17.7. and thereupon derive their title to Baptism that they mean but as Mr. M. Mr. Bl. say, that they may acquit themselves from deceiving the people, and being judged impostors.

2. It is no marvel that the 3d. Section of the 3d. Part of my Examen

is irkſome to Mr. Bl. to read, ſith it doth ſo fully lay open the fallacy of Pædobapiſts in their ſpeeches concerning the infants of beleevers being in Covenant. Nor did I ſet down the poſition I conceived Mr. Ms. 2d. concl. any otherwiſe then in a fair candid way, giving my reaſons thereof; and not as Mr. Bl. ſaith, per force impoſing any thing on him. And for Mr. M. it is ſhewed above §. 30. that Mr. M. in his Defence hath rather hidden then explained the meaning of his 2d. Concluſion. As for M. Bl. I did acknowledge Exam. p. 46. that he ſpake moſt warily, and therefore was far from obtruding upon him. But yet Mr. Bl. for want of other exceptions againſt me, chargeth me with wronging him in a paſſage in my Apology, pag. 156. where I ſay, How doth this ſtand with that which he aſſerts, ch. 3. ſect. 2. of his anſwer to my Letter, pag. 13. That infants of beleevers have ſalvation, if they die in their infancy, by vertue of the Covenant? Theſe words, he ſaith, were none of his, and that I could not but know it, when I publiſhed them; and that the meaning was not his, I knew alſo, ſeeing he expreſſed it in theſe words, That they are in the ordinary way of Gods diſpenſation ſaveable. To which I reply, The aſſertion I conceived his, I gathered from thoſe words in the place cited by me, That Scripture therefore, 1 Cor. 7. 14. in this controverſie is ſtill brought in by our Divines, as evidently holding out a Covenant holineſs, and conſequently ſalvation of infants. And truly I muſt confeſs I thought his words ſo plain, that I never dreamt he would have denied it to be his meaning, conceiving he alledged the Proteſtant Divines as conſonant to his own opinion; and that if ſalvation of Infants be inferred conſequently from covenant holineſs (which Mr. Bl. aſſerts from 1 Cor. 7. 14.) then it is Mr. Bls. meaning, that infants of beleevers have ſalvation in their infancy, if they die in their infancy, by vertue of the Covenant, and that he aſſerts a certainty of ſalvation from the Covenant. That which he ſaith, I knew that the meaning I impute to him was not his becauſe of the words he ſets down, and therefore a calumny tending to make a brother odious, is I am ſure falſe, and a calumny which I never expect to have fairly anſwered by him, nor almoſt any thing elſe he is charged with by me to have dealt fouly in his oppoſing me about this point. The words he mentions were in the period before thus. This Papiſts deny, as not knowing how to avoid the ſalvation of infants, but that they are in the ordinary way of Gods diſpenſation ſaveable, when they are thus admitted within the verge of Gods promiſe. Which being ſpoken of the Papiſts, I did not conceive ſo likely to explain the ſpeech of the period following, as that other a little before, Proteſtants affirm that infants without actual admiſſion to Baptiſm are ſaved. The main argument wherewith Proteſtants aſſert it, is the Covenant, in which with the parents, infants are included: and I conceived [are ſaved] is as much as are actually ſaved. Nor am I yet ſo well indoctrinated by Mr. Bl. as not to think it had been non-ſenſe (which I would not impute to Mr. Bl.) to expound ſalvation of infants, by ſaveableneſs in the ordinary way of Gods diſpenſation. Nor did I imagine that by Mr. Bl. much leſs by Proteſtan Divines, a ſaveableneſs onely in Gods ordinary way of diſpenſation, ſhould be made the conſequent of Covenant holineſs, but a certainty tainty of salvation. For the Covenant or promise doth not assure onely a possibility, but a certainty; yea, possibilities are not the things which men ever assure, they are antecedent to Covenants and promises, but certain events; and to imagine Gods Covenant to assure onely a possibility, a saveableness, and not a certainty of salvation, is to make God to promise nothing, but what is without such a Covenant, which is to make it a blank. And if the Covenant holiness infer onely a conditional salvation, it infers no more salvation then damnation: yea if infants have no more by their Covenant holiness then a saveableness in Gods ordinary way of dispensation, then they have onely a saveableness if they be baptized, hear the Gospel preached, beleeve it, profess it (which is the ordinary way whereby God dispenseth salvation.) But if this were Mr. Bls. meaning, he had made Baptism, &c. a necessary condition of their salvation, and so he had tied their salvation with the Papists to Baptism, or rather been more rigid then they, durior pater infantum Augustino, requiring the hearing the word, actual faith, and profession of them to salvation. So that I hope by this time Mr. Bl. will forgive me this wrong, in setting down his opinion better then he meant it, and that he will let fall his suit against me for this thing: And if so, I will forgive him for his next insinuation of my setting up a man of straw and then beating it down (though it be indeed the common saying of Pædobaptists, who usually say, the Covenant of grace sealed by Baptism, (which is that of justification) is made to beleevers and their seed, the promise is to them and their children, Acts 2.39. which is meant by them of remission of sins,) and for his frivolous charge of my using the arguments of Jesuits, and making use of Protestants names, when I do bring not onely the names, but the very words and arguments of the most approved Protestant writers in great number, and produce one Papist, Estius alone, no Jesuite, but, though a Papist, of the better sort; and do, and may safely protest, that some of those Mr. Bl. chargeth me with I did not read; and for one, what I read in him came not into my mind when I wrote that Examen of Mr. Ms. sermon. So that what Mr. Bl. doth so often insinuate, as tending to make me suspected as if my arguments against Infant Baptism were borrowed from Papists, even then when I avouch Protestants, is a most unworthy calumny, though I still say I am glad when I find truth, that I meet with it in any Authors, whether Protestants or Papists, and think it not the worse for their owning it.

Mr. Bl. after his false accusations of me, and limitations of his own tenet, speaks thus. "To draw all up towards a conclusion. All that "is necessarily included in Gods entrance of Covenant with a people, "engaging to be their God, and taking them for his people; is here by "this grand Charter of Heaven made over to Abraham, and his natural "issue by Isaac and Jacob. All their posterity are branches of this root "by nature simply considered, and they are holy branches by vertue "of this Covenant, which necessarily implies privileges of Ordinances, the fruition of Gods Oracles, which are his Covenant draughts; "without which no people are in Covenant, but all are strangers:

"And

"And this priviledge of Ordinances implies also all priviledges, lead"ing to, and accompanying salvation, and salvation it self upon Gods
"terms in his word revealed. And so before the disputation, the Read"er hath my supposition.

Answ. The Reader hath a supposition indeed, but such a one, as if he examine it, he will be more to seek concerning Mr. Bls. mind, then if he had omitted it. But I shall as fairly as the ambiguity of his expressions will permit, search out his meaning. There are no fewer then nine Propositions thrust together in these words of his, That all that is necessarily included in Gods entrance of Covenant with a people, engaging to be their God, and taking them for his people; is here by this grand Charter of Heaven made over to Abraham, and his natural issue by Isaac and Jacob. In which, 1. he asserts the promise Gen 17. 7. to be the grand Charter of Heaven: And I grant it to be so in the sense in which the Apostle means it, Gal. 3. 16, 17, 18. Rom 4. 16. and elsewhere, to wit, as it is a promise of regeneration, justification, eternal life, which I call Evangelical grace. 2. He speaks of Gods entrance of Covenant with a people, engaging to be their God, and taking them for his people, and of things necessarily excluded in this entrance of Covenant. But there are many ambiguities in these expressions. The term entrance into Covenant is ambiguous: He may be said to enter into Covenant who offers it, or who makes and concludes it. The term people of God is ambiguous; it may be meant either of his people by special right, as the ten Tribes were when they fell off to idolatry; or his people by outward profession onely, or his people by effectual saving calling. The terms engaging to be their God, and taking them for his people, may be understood in respect of temporary protection, advancement, rule, &c. or righteousness and eternal life. The word people may note either singular persons, or the collective body of a Nation which may not include every singular person. He supposeth things necessarily included in Gods entrance of Covenant with a people: But I am not yet convinced that any things are necessarily included in Gods entrance of Covenant with a people, engaging to be their God, and taking them for his people; but that all things therein included are arbitrary, or of his free-will. And if there be any things necessarily included, sure they are not priviledges of Ordinances, I mean initial and after Seals, visible Church membership of Infants; for God entred into Covenant with Abraham long before, and never promised those things; so he did with Noah, and with Adam. And that which agreeably to the Scripture was promised Gen 17. 7. was to the natural seed of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob, peculiar protection, provision, rule, 1 Sam. 12. 12. by giving Laws to them, appointing them Judges, directing them by Oracles in war and peace, &c. To the spiritual seed of Abraham the promise was of Christ, righteousness, adoption, and the inheritance of eternal life; not those petty things which Mr. Bl. doth frivolously imagine to have been contained in that grand Charter of Heaven, as he calls it, which is the thing that Mr. Bl. would fain squeeze out of that text, though there be not the least colour in all the holy Scripture for it. His second Proposition is, that

All

All Isaac's and Jacobs posterity are branches of this root by nature simply considered; which if he understand of Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, as a natural root, propagating them by natural generation, I grant it; if he mean it of a Covenant root, as he calls it, as deriving from them Evangelical grace by the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. I deny it. His 3d. is, and they are holy branches by vertue of this Covenant; which if he mean they were holy in respect of Gods special rule, setting up his Tabernacle among them and such like prerogatives as are mentioned Rom. 9. 4, 5. I grant it: But if he mean it of holiness according to election of grace, as Rom. 11. 16. is meant, it is not true. His 4th. is, that this Covenant necessarily implies priviledge of Ordinances, the fruition of Gods Oracles: which if he mean in this sense, that Gods worship should be among them, that the Laws of God, and his Word should be to the collective body of Israel, I grant it; but if he mean it of visible church-membership of infants, initial and after Seals, which is the thing he aims at,) I deny it. The 5th. that priviledge of Ordinances, and fruition of Gods Oracles, are Gods Covenant draughts, hath the same answer. The 6th. and 7th. that without this priviledges of Ordinances and fruition of Gods Oracles, no people are in Covenant, but all are strangers; if it be meant of the Covenant of Evangelical grace, and of particular persons, the Propositions are manifestly false; for then no infants dying afore they have an initial Seal, hear the Word, &c. should be in Covenant: if it be meant of the priviledges of Ordinances, and fruition of Gods Ordinances in any sort, I grant, that if there be no worship of God among them, no fruition of Gods Word written or unwritten, no people of ripe age, whether families, or nations, or single persons, can be said to be in Covenant, but are strangers from it; but if they be understood of such peculiar Ordinances and Oracles as the Jews had, Rom. 9. 4, 5. I deny it; for Adam, Seth, Enoch, Noah, &c. were in Covenant with God without them. His 8th. And this priviledge of Ordinances implies also all priviledges leading to, and accompanying salvation; if meant of in-being in Christ, having his spirit to dwell in them, which are the chief priviledges leading to, and accompanying salvation, and of all that have the priviledge of Ordinances, I deny it; unless he mean it as he doth the 9th. Proposition, that this priviledge of Ordinances implies salvation it self upon Gods terms in his word revealed, which are Repentance and Faith in Christ, and then both Propositions are granted, the 8th. and the 9th. that the priviledge of Ordinances doth imply both in-being in Christ, and his spirits in-dwelling, and salvation it self to them that repent and believe in Christ. Which is true also of them that have not this priviledge of Ordinances, as Cornelius, and many more. And thus Mr. Bl. also hath my exposition and answer concerning his position and supposition: Let's now see what he proves.

SECT. XLVIII.

The 35th. and 37th. Chapters of Mr. Bls. Vind. Fæd. are examined, and his Arguments concluding the natural issue of believers to be taken into Covenant, are answered.

HE intitles thus ch. 35. Arguments concluding the natural issue of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob to be taken into Covenant; which he may prove and not oppose me, who grant, that God promiseth Gen. 17. 7 to be a God to the natural seed of Abraham, inheriting in domestick and political benefits: From whence he falsly infers, that I cast out all the natural seed of Abraham from any title to that Covenant, save in domestick and political benefits; and then undertakes this Position in full opposition, That Covenant in those words expresst Gen. 17. 7. in their fullest latitude, as they are spoken in the largest comprehension (which according to Scripture they can be taken,) are entred with all the natural seed of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob. So that if to be a God, Gen. 17. 7. to Abraham and his seed, comprehend Evangelical benefits of regeneration, justification, eternal life, his position is, That the Covenant is entred in respect of these benefits, with all the natural seed of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob: which can be meant no otherwise then thus, God had promised, Gen. 17. 7. these benefits to them all: For the Covenant could be no otherwise entred with them, Isaac and Jacob being not then begotten, nor in being, and therefore the entry into Covenant could not be mutual. Here then the Question between us is not, Whether the natural issue of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob were taken into Covenant? Gen. 17. 7. for I grant that God there promised to be a God to them by domestick and political benefits, to wit, by setting up his worship more peculiarly in that nation, by raising up the Messiah out of them, by giving them peculiar Laws himself, raising up Judges and Governours for them, vouchsafing them peculiar protection which he vouchsafed not to other people, directing them by his Oracle when they enquired of him, &c. And these benefits he promised to them all conditionally if they adhered to God: But the Question between us is; Whether Gen. 17. 7. God have promised to all the natural issue of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob, the Evangelical benefits of regeneration, justification, and eternal life, supposed to be meant in the words, to be a God to thy seed? This I deny, and Mr Bl. should prove, if he dispute in opposition to me. However let's view what he writes.

"My first argument (saith he) is taken from the addition annexed "to this Covenant in the words immediately following v. 8. That seed "of Abraham that had possession of the Land of Canaan through the "gift and by vertue of the promise of God, is the seed here taken into "Covenant to have the Lord for their God. This is so plain, that no-"thing can be plainer to any that read the words; but the natural seed

" of Abraham, all the ſeed of Jacob in their ſeveral Tribes (record" ing as God ſet them their bounds) inherited the Land of Cana-
" an, which is called the Land of their inheritance, and not onely the " ſpiritual ſeed regenerate, they that onely ſojourned in Canaan, Heb.
" 11.13. and were never poſſeſſed of it, had title to it: It was theirs in " reverſion, though they never came into actual poſſeſſion.

Anſw. 1. The major is not true, if the ſubject of the Propoſition be underſtood exclusively, or univerſally, and the phraſe in the predicate [to have the Lord for their God] be meant in reſpect of the Evangelical benefits of regeneration, juſtification, and eternal life. It is not true, that God hath covenanted to be a God in reſpect of theſe benefits to all, or onely to that ſeed of Abraham that had poſſeſſion of the Land of Canaan through the gift, and by vertue of the promiſe of God: nor doth the Text at all make it plain. For though it prove that the ſeed of Abraham meant in the fore part of Gen. 17. *v.*8. were alſo meant *v.*7. yet it doth not prove that all, or they onely that had the promiſe of Canaan, had the promiſe of being a God to them in Goſpel grace. The minor is granted, [all] being meant, as they ſpeak in Logick, diſtributively in genera ſingulorum, that is, of any ſorts of them, but not in ſingulos generum; and with limitation to certain times fore-appointed of God, not in all times. All ſorts inherited, but ſome were not to inherit till a certain time, and for a certain time; A baſtard, Mamzer, *Deut.*23.2. was not to enter into the congregation of the Lord, and ſo not to inherit regularly till the tenth generation. But were Mr. Bls. concluſion granted, it proves not what I deny, that to all, and every Iſraelite God promiſed Evangelical benefits, Gen. 17. 7. or viſible church membership and initial ſeal at all to any in that promiſe, Gen. 17.7.

" My next argument, ſaith he, is drawn from the ſeal that is annexed " in the words immediately following this additional promiſe, v. 9.10.
" 11. They that had the ſign and ſeal of the Covenant, that had it by " Divine appointment they were a people in Covenant. This is ſo
" plain, that nothing can be more plain; God doth not enter Cove" nant with one and give the ſign and ſeal to another: But all the na" tural ſeed of Abraham by Iſaac and Jacob had the ſeal, viz. all the " males, thoſe that were in a capacity of it; it was not limited to the " ſpiritual ſeed. There had been no place for that diſtinction, of cir-
" cumciſion in the fleſh, and circumciſion of the heart; if none muſt be " circumciſed in the fleſh, but thoſe that are circumciſed in heart.

Anſw. 1. Waving my exception againſt the title of ſeal of the Covenant, not given to circumciſion, or any other Rite in the Scripture, and inconvenient as is before proved, and putting in [Circumciſion] inſtead of it; I deny the major, if underſtood univerſally: nor is the major plainly true, but plainly falſe, it being manifeſt in that very Covenant, that God entred it not with Iſhmael and others whom he appointed to be circumciſed. Nor is any thing more plain then the contrary to what Mr. Bl. aſſerts. For God did enter into Covenant with the natural ſeed female inheriting of Abraham by Iſaac and Jacob, according to Mr. Bl. himself; the daughters of Zelophehad were in Covenant, and yet he did give the sign of the Covenant to others, and not to them. Nor is the minor true; for the males of seven days old were in a capacity of circumcision, yet they had it not. I grant that circumcision was not limited to the spiritual seed, yet conecive Mr. Bls. proof of no force: For though it had been so limited, yet there had been place for the distinction of circumcision in the flesh, and of the heart, sith things may be distinguished which are not separate. But were the conclusion granted, it fails as the former in proving what I deny.

"My 3d. argument, saith he, is drawn from the Comment that God "himself makes of this Covenant, holding it every where out in this "way of tenure to Abraham and his natural issue, as before, Exod. 20.2. "Deut 5. 6. All that whole people he owned as his, all of them being "Abrahams natural issue; yet all of them were not spiritual. Exod. 5. "1. Deut. 14.1,2. Amos 3.1,2. is very full to our purpose. Every one "that descended from Jacob, the whole of the family that came out of "Ægypt, were a select people to God in Covenant; he was according "to the terms of that Covenant, their God. There is not a place where "God calls them by the name of his people (which are almost endless) "but there we have this confirmed, that that people were the Lords by "vertue of this grant made to Abraham and his seed.

Answ. This last speech might be granted, and what else Mr. Bl. inters from the Text; yet he attains not his end, unless he prove that by vertue of that Covenant all the Israelits by natural discent were God's regenerate, justified people; for the thing he should prove against me, is, that Gen. 17.7. God promiseth to be a God in respect of Gospel benefits to all Abrahams natural issue by Isaac and Jacob. Yet I conceive there are places wherein the Israelites were termed Gods by vertue of the Covenant of the Law Ezek. 16 8. & 20.5. &c. without mentioning the Covenant Gen. 17.7 which the Apostle conceives differently of, Gal. 3.16,17. And the scriptures Exod. 20.2. Deut. 5 6. Exod. 5.1. Deut. 14.1,2. though spoken of the body of Israel, yet may and are to be understood, at least in some senses of them, not of every individual: Surely he was not God Evangelically to those that believed not, nor were they his people, nor legally, so as to afford them that protection, and temporal blessings which are promised in the Law, Deut. 28. &c. to Abab, Achan, Korah, and such like. But in the Evangelical sense the denomination is from the better part, the people before knew, as the Apostle himself expounds it, Rom. 11. 2, 5. and in respect of political blessings according to the Covenant of the Law, to the obedient to the Law, as of long life to dutifull children, safety while they kept the Solemn Feasts. Exod. 20. 12. & 34.24. Nor doth Amos 3.1,2. which, he saith, is full to his purpose, say, that God was a God to that whole family which he brought out of Ægypt by vertue of the Covenant, Gen. 17.7. much less to every one of them Evangelically, nor doth he say he had known them all Evangelically, but had known them onely, that is, had distinguished them from other people by giving them his Laws, &c. which makes nothing thing to prove according to Gen. 17.7. God took every descendent from Jacob into Covenant in respect of Gospel benefits.

"In the 4th place, saith he, I argue from the practise of the people "of God, making this Covenant of God entred with Abraham and his "seed, a Plea to obtain mercy from God for all Israel, the worst of Is-"rael, in their lowest state and condition, Deut. 9.26,27. If this Divi-"nity had been th n known, Moses might have been sent away with this "answer; That he spake for dogs, and not for children; not for Israel "but for Aliens and strangers to the Common-wealth of Israel. But as this "and the like requests of the people of God were made in faith, so they "prevailed with God; Moses there urgeth, they are thy people and thine "inheritance, v.29. as doth the Church, Isa. 64. 9. and Moses petition "takes, as the History shews, Exod. 32. 14. Yea, when God vouch-"safes mercy to his people thus in Covenant, Levit. 26. 42. it is upon "this account of the Covenant. And appearing for the deliverance of "Israel out of their hard and pressing bondage, he saith to Moses, Exod. "3. 6. and that to stay up his faith in confidence of deliverance.

Answ. That which Mr. Bl. should prove, is, That Covenant expressed in those words Gen. 17. 7. in their fullest latitude as they are spoken, in the largest comprehension (which according to Scripture they can be taken) are entred with all the natural seed of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob. And in his answer to my Letter, ch. 10. pag. 55,56. he urgeth Exod. 32. 13. Deut. 29.27, Levit 26.42. Exod. 3.6. to prove that Gen 17.7. was a promise of grace and mercy to Jacobs posterity, such as of which Circumcision was a seal, Rom. 4. 11. which he saith is no other then a Covenant of grace, and saith Circumcision did seal that Covenant, to be the God of believers, and their seed, Gen, 17.7,10. But not one of the petitions or speeches alledged do prove either the former, or this last assertion. The petition of Moses, Exod. 32.13. was upon occasion of the making of the golden Calf, & Gods speech to Moses concerning the consuming of them for it, and making Moses a great Nation: Moses to divert God from this thing, alledgeth, 1. That they were his people which he brought out of Ægypt with great power, and a mighty hand; and if he should consume them, the Ægyptians would reproach him, as intending mischief to them when he brought them out of Ægypt. Where it is true, God calls the body of them his people: But this must be understood, if Evangelically; in respect of the better part onely; if Legally, either de jure because they ought to have been his people, being delivered from Ægypt, and having engaged themselves Exod. 19.8. to obey God; or de facto, because he had done so great things for them, and thereby owned them in respect of his actings for them above other people. 2. He presseth God with his Oath to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. But the Oath he mentions is concerning the multiplying the seed of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob as the stars of heaven, and giving the land of Canaan to them, and that they shall inherit it for ever; not a word of being God to all the natural issue of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob in respect of Evangelical blessings, nor a word tending to shew the extent of th promise Gen. 17.7. in respect of gospel grace. The same answer I give to his allegation of Deut. 9. 26, 27, 28, 29. And to Mr. Bl. first I answer, this Divinity was then known to God, and God might have sent away Moses with this answer, That he spake for some who were dogs, or reprobates, and not children of God according to the election of grace, which is the Apostles Divinity, Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. 1 Cor. 10. 5. Heb. 3. 10, 11, 16, 17, 18, 19. and that they were strangers from the Commonwealth of Israel, that is of the Israel of God, Gal. 6. 16. And this is also the Apostles Divinity, Rom. 9. 6. and therefore I count this no absurdity. But I grant they, even the worst of them were not dogs, but children, and of the Commonwealth of Israel political, in respect of their outward state, and in that respect holy, and different from other people. To the other I answer, it is true, Moses prayed in faith, and was heard; but there is no mention in the places alledged of his praying for spiritual Evangelical grace for every particular Israelite, but for the preventing an utter destruction of them: Nor doth he at all express any such faith, whereby he believed God had promised to be a God to all the natural issue of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob in respect of Evangelical benefits, but that God would not destroy them, in which respect he was heard. And in like manner the Covenant upon the account of which God did vouchsafe mercy, is that of giving them Canaan, which Mr. Bl. will not have the Covenant it self, but an Appendix to it; and yet Exod 32. 13. that is it which is pleaded, and Levit. 26. 42, the Covenant it is plain is that he made concerning their seating in Canaan, for it expressly saith, and I will remember the Land, and v. 44. I will not utterly destroy them. The Church it is true, saith, Isa. 64. 9. we are all thy people; but if this Church be meant of all and every Israelite by natural descent, then all and every of them were a praying people, which is not to be said, and therefore is to be understood of the believing remnant only, or else that they were Gods people in the sense before given of Exod. 32. 12, 14. Deut. 9. 29. Exod. 3. 6. It is true, God saith to Moses, to stay up his faith in confidence of the deliverance of Israel from Egypt, that he was the God of his Father, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and Jacob, and it is true, our Lord Christ hence proves the resurrection of the dead, Luke 20. 37, 38. and therefore it proves eternal life included in the promise, Gen. 17. 7. but this is so far from proving God to be a God in respect of Evangelical blessings meant Gen. 17. 7. to every Israelite, or to be a God to believers and their natural seed, that it is a good argument to the contrary; for this absurdity would follow, That every one of them are certainly saved, if he were a God to every of them in the sense, Luke 20. 37, 38.

Mr. Bl. next excepts against me for censuring of Chamiers calling the promise of the Land of Canaan an Apendant to the Covenant, Gen. 17. 7. And saith, The thing is so clear in the narrative of it, Gen. 17, that nothing can be more evident, The Covenant is full, v. 7. To be a God to Abraham and his seed; and this he might have been, had he pleased, in the Land of Ur of the Caldees, or in any Land whatsoever that his seed had been planted in: But when the Covenant is thus made, there is added; v. 8. And I will give unto thee, &c.

Answ.

Answ. My censure of Chamier was no more then this, I like not, and I say the same still, that the promise of the land of Canaan Gen. 17. 8. is not a meer appendant, but as truly a part of the Covenant God made with Abraham Gen. 17. as v. 7. And to Mr. Bls. strong conceit I oppose my strong conceit of the evidence to the contrary (being backed by the Scripture) as sufficient of countervail his saying; And for his reasons. 1. God might have been a God to them in Vr, Ergo, the promise of Canaan is but an appendix, not a part of the Covenant. I answer, 1. by the like reason it might be said, thou shalt be a Father of many Nations, is but an appendant to the Covenant, contrary to Gen. 17. 4. because God might be a God to him, though father of one Nation onely. 2. By denying the consequence, which is in my slender conceit a baculo ad angulum. The other (if it be a reason and not a dictate) is, the Covenant is full, v. 7. but when the Covenant is made there is added, v. 8. I answer. 1. By like reason it might be said, The Covenant is full, v. 4, 5, 6. but when the Covenant is made v. 4, 5, 6. there is added v. 7. ergo, v. 7. is no part of the Covenant, but an appendant to it. 2. It is not proved that at v. 7. the Covenant is full, yea v. 8. being as Mr. Bl. himself stiles it, an additional promise, it is proved, that the Covenant is not full without it being added as a promise, and so a part of the Conant.

I said the Holy Ghost me thinks speaks otherwise Possscript. §. 12. Mr. Bl opposeth. The force of this argument must needs be this. That which is any where called a Covenant, that is not an appendant to a Covenant. But the giving of the land of Canaan to the seed of Abraham is there called by the name of a Covenant. Mr. T. sure will not say that Circumcision is the Covenant between God and his people, he will not deny but it is a signe and seal annext to the Covenant; and yet Gen. 17. 10. it is called a Covenant. Mr. T. well enough knowes a Metonymy of the adjunct and the common use of it in Scripture; but that it is his wisedome for his advantage to conceal it.

Answ. Mr. T. well knows, that Mr. Bl. useth artifices to elude, when he should answer. The words of the Psalmist were alledged as a plain testimony, which need not be formed into an argument, but if it need forming, I should not form it as Mr. Bl. forms it (that he may the easier slight what he cannot answer) but thus. That promise which is called Gods Covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations, which he made, was his oath, confirmed for a Law and everlasting Covenant, declared by saying in words what God would do, that is a Covenant, at least in part, and not a meer appendant. But such is the promise of the land of Canaan, Gen. 17. 8. and elsewhere, ergo. The major might be proved from the definition of a Covenant, which is either a promise or an aggregate of promises single or mutual. The minor is the very text. And to Mr. Bls. shift I reply. I knew well enough a metonymy of the adjunct or signe to be used Gen. 17. 10. But I withal knew it would have been my folly to have expounded the term [Covenant] Psal. 105. 8, 9. by a metonymy like that Gen. 17. 10. For I should have made the Psalmist speak non-sense, and perverted his plain meaning if I had thus expounded, he hath remembred his Covenant, that is not his promise it self, but the signe and seal of it, which he made, sware, said. And I think it had been Mr. Bls. wisedome to have concealed this shift, and rather have let it pass without saying any thing to the objection.

Mr. Bl. adds his fifth and last argument, from Texts in the N. T. which interpret this Covenant thus entered with Abraham in that latitude as extending to his natural issue, and not with limit to his spiritual seed; and that not barely in domestick civil, but in spiritual promises; so that this one hath many in the bowels of it.

Answ. Abrahams spiritual seed are true believers as he was and elect persons, spiritual promises are so called from the things promised, called Ephes. 1. 3. spiritual blessings in heavenly things in Christ, such are regeneration or circumcision of the heart, remission of sins, justification, adoption, eternal life. If Mr. Bl. holds the Covenant with Abraham extending to his natural issue, and not with limit to his spiritual seed in spiritual promises, he holds regeneration, remission of sins, justification, adoption, eternal life, to them who are neither true believers nor elect persons. Let's view his proofs.

First, saith he Rom. 9. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. The Apostle aggravating his sorrow for Israel, not respective to civil or domestick but higher concernments for the whole body of Israel, he reckons up their priviledges, the priviledges of all that according to the flesh were Israelites; priviledges formerly enjoyed, but now lost, nine in number. Here sure is enough to conclude them of the seed thus in Covenant to be of Gods adopted seed under the promises.

Answ. He might more truely have said, here sure is nothing (as it was printed) to conclude all the natural issue of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to be of Gods adopted seed under the promise of spiritual blessings in the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. as it contained Gospel grace. The priviledges could not be of all that according to the flesh were Israelites, for of them all as concerning the flesh Christ could not come, now were all (if any of them) priviledges Evangelical from spiritual promises in the Covenant of grace, but rather all of them Domestick or civil priviledges which believers of the nations had not. Nor were the priviledges to the Israelites at all times, but at some times. And therefore this text is impertinent to Mr. Bls. purpose, yea this Scripture and that which followes put together, are an antithesis to his thesis.

Secondly, saith he, Rom. 11. The Apostle speaks of the casting off of Gods people. Those that are cast off from being a people of God, were once his people; those that are put out of Covenant, were a people in Covenant: but the natural issue of Abraham (called natural branches, v. 21. being by right of birth of that Olive) are there broken off, cast off; therefore the natural issue were the seed in Covenant.

Answ. The conclusion is granted, the natural issue of Abraham who were also the spiritual seed were the seed in Covenant, and such were a great part of the Jews in former ages, but those broken off, were never in the Covenant of grace; Nor is it said they were put out of the Covenant venant of grace, or broken off from the Olive in which they were in their persons, but in which their progenitors were; nor are they said to be natural branches v. 21. because by right of birth of that Olive, but by reason of their descent from Abraham they are natural branches of that Olive which at first was by natural as well as spiritual descent from him, but never by right of birth. It is false if meant of casting off from being his people, as it is meant Rom. 11. 1, 2. that those that are cast off from being a people of God were once his people, understanding it in their own persons. But of this text, and this argument, more hath been said in the first part of this Review, and more will be, if the Lord permit, in that which follows.

Thirdly, saith he, Matth. 8. 11, 12. whence he thus argues. Children of the Kingdome that are to be cast out, are in the Kingdome onely upon an interest of Birth, for the fruition of the priviledges of Ordinances, and not upon any spiritual title, infallibly giving interest in salvation: But the children of the Kingdome were upon our Saviours sentence to be cast out, therefore they were in the Kingdome onely on an interest of birth.

Answ. This argument 1 concludes not Mr. Bls. position, that the Covenant expresst Gen. 17. 7. in the fullest latitude of the words as they are there spoken, in the largest comprehension (which according to Scripture they can be taken) are entered with all the natural seed of Abraham, by Isaac and Jacob. 2. It contradicts his own position, for if it bee as he here saith, that they were not children of the Kingdome (though the natural seed of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob) upon any spiritual title infallibly giving interest in salvation, and yet the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. wherein God saith, he will be a God to Abrahams seed, comprehends such saving grace as creates a spiritual title, infallibly giving interest in salvation, as the Apostle Gal. 3. 16, 17, 18, &c. expounds it, then the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. is not entred with all the natural seed of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob, in the fullest latitude of the words as they are there spoken, in the largest comprehension (which according to Scripture they can be taken) therefore this argument overthrowes his own position. 3. If by [being in the Kingdome] be meant being visible members of the visible Church Jewish, the conclusion is granted, but withal it is proved from the same text, that they were never in the visible Church Christian, but were opposite to it, in that they embraced not the Christian Faith, but opposed the Lord Jesus Christ, and so had no right to baptism, though they had circumcision, and did eat the passeover. 4. It is manifest from the text, and agreed upon by interpreters, that the Kingdome of Heaven in that place notes the Kingdome of glory, or the state of eternal life and blessedness in heaven, and not the visible Church onely, or a being in it for the fruition of the priviledges of ordinances. For 1 the Kingdome of heaven is that wherein Abraham and Isaac and Jacob were then sate down, for it is said v. 11. they shall sit down with Abraham Isaac and Jacob, in the Kingdome of heaven. But they were then sate down not in the visible Church onely, nor had being in it for the fruition of the priviledges of ordinances, but in the state of eternal life and blessedness in heaven, ergo. 2. The Kingdome of heaven there is directly opposed to the outer darkness, where is weeping and gnashing of teeth. v. 12. But that which is directly opposed to the outer darkness in which is weeping and gnashing of teeth, is the Kingdome of glory, or the state of eternal life and blessednes, in heaven, and not the visible Church onely, or a being in it for the fruition of the priviledges of ordinances, ergo. 3. The scope of the speech of our Saviour is conceived by most interpreters, to be to abate the insolency and pride of the Jews, who contemned the Gentiles. Upon occasion of the Centurions faith v. 10. he tels them, though they now despised the Gentiles as not worthy to eat with them, yet they should come from East and West and should sit down with the best of their Ancestors, in the best, highest, and happiest place and condition. 4. Expounding it of the visible Church it were not true which our Saviour speaks; For the Gentiles did never sit down with them in the visible Church for the fruition of the priviledges of ordinances, such as Circumcision, the Passeover, Baptism, the Lords Supper, for some of these Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, did never partake of, nor ever shall, nor may the Gentiles with them, partake of circumcision, and the passeover, for that had been to have foretold that the Gentiles should have been circumcised with those Fathers, which had been to establish Judaism, contrary to the Apostles decree Acts 15. to Pauls determination Gal. 2. & 5. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Yea, if it had been foretold that the Gentiles should come and joyn themselves to the visible Church Jewish, which began in Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, our Lord Christ had foretold that conjunction, which was so far from proving true in the event, that they who did come to Christ were persecuted and cast out of that Church Gal. 4. 29. 1 Thes. 2. 15. 5. Hence it follows, that the children of the Kingdome are not so called because they were in that Kingdome of heaven which is there meant, for then they had never been cast out: but they are called children of the Kingdome, because as Diodati notes, by the prerogative of Gods Covenant the Jews seemed to be heirs of this Kingdome, or as the new Annot. ad cb. 9. 15. who were born of those parents to whom the Kingdome was promised, and by vertue of the Covenant Rom. 9. 4. it had still belonged to them, had they not forfeited it by their unbelief and wickedness. Piscat. sch. Filios vero regni] id est, Judæos qui hactenus per aliquot sæcula ad regnum illud cælorum vocati sunt & vocantur. Beza Annot. Filios regni, τὸ υἱὸς τῆς Βασιλείας, id est, indigenas, quos vocant vulgò naturale subjectos. Intelligit autem Dei regnum, ad quod pertinebant in genere quicunque erant ex Abrahæ genere, cum longè alia sit ratio coram Deo censendi filios Abrahæ, nimirum ex fide. So that they were children of the Kingdome not before God in actual title or possession, but onely in appearance to men, and likelihood, considering their descent and the first manifestation of Christ, and the Gospel to that people. 6. Our of this it appears that a man may be said to be cast out of the Kingdome of heaven, who was never in actually, but onely in possibility, according to what was apparent to men, and consequently Mr. Bls. propositions are not true in his precedent argument, Those that are cast off from being a people of God, were once his people; those that are put out of-

of Covenant, were a people in Covenant; nor the argument good, Ishmael was cast out of Covenant, therefore once in. Nor is it seldome, that men are said to be brought up from the grave, as Psal. 30. 3. and to be redeemed from the grave and hell, who were never in, but onely in danger of it.

But Mr. Bl. hath yet a fourth text, which was his text in his Birthpriviledge, it is Gal 2. 15. From whence after some explication given of the text he thus argues, That which is a priviledge of nature or birth, belongs to the natural issue, that cannot be denied. But to be in Covenant with God as a people holy and exceeding others that are without as sinners, is a priviledge of nature or birth, therefore this priviledge belongs to the natural issue.

Ans. To be in covenant with God may be understood either in respect of the Covenant with Abraham Gen. 17. or the Covenant at Mount Sinai Exod. 19. To be in the Covenant Gen. 17. may be in respect of Evangelical benefits, or of domestick and political benefits or priviledges, as, to bee accounted members of the Israelitish nation and so of that church, to have the service of God among them, the law among them, education under it, freedome from idolatry, and other pollutions of the Gentiles. To be as a people holy, may be understood either of holiness by inward sanctification, called circumcision of the heart, or of outward holiness ie being distinguished from other people, as set apart visibly for God, whether in reputation or truth, either by Gods distinction or by an outward signe, or by their own profession. I grant the minor of being in Covenant either Exod. 19. or Gen. 17. in respect of the domestick and political benefits, at least some of them, and to be a holy people exceeding others that are without as sinners, if understood of outward holiness in reputation or truth, by Gods distinction, and by the outward signe of Circumcision, was (I do not grant is) a privil dge of nature or birth, and accordingly grant the conclusion, that this priviledge did (I do not say doth) belong to the natural issue (I do not say to all) of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob, and was proper to the Jews, and no more can be gathered from Gal. 2. 15. there's not a word of the same priviledge as belonging to the natural posterity of believing Gentiles. But the minor is denied, if understood of Evangelical benefits and of holiness inward (of which alone the question should have been formed, his position being in full opposition to my words) nor is it proved out of the text, himself expounding Jews by nature, that is by birth and offspring of a nation that is holy though in themselves sinners, reputed an holy people, a people by covenant holy to the Lord, which they might be though to be in Covenant with God Gen. 17. 7. and as a people holy and exceeding others that are without as sinners by inward holiness be not a priviledge of nature or birth.

But Mr. Bl. thinks my grant involves me in not a few contradictions. 1. To what I say Exercit. pag. 3. the natural seed inherit onely domestick and civil benefits. But Mr. Bl. falsly chargeth me, the word [onely] is Mr. Bl. addition not mine, as the Reader that shall read the words may perceive. 2. To what I am wont to deny, that birth entitles any to such priviledges as interest in Circumcision, and observance of Moses law. But this is another of Mr. Bls. forged calumnies: let him shew if he can that I say so any where, and he deserves some credit, if not let him suffer as a Calumniator. 3. That I deny the natural seed any promise of spiritual mercies, which is another forgery of his like the former. 4. That I say this was proper to the Jews in that Church state, who had prerogatives peculiar to them. And then saith thus. And here we urge it no further, and it fully concludes Mr. T. in a contradiction, that will have the natural seed of Abraham, and no other then his spiritual seed to be entituled to such priviledges. Here's more of his forgery, that I say no other then Abrahams spiritual seed are entituled to such priviledges as were proper to the Jews in that Church state, who had prerogatives peculiar to them. Let him shew any such thing in my writing, or let him, as he and his fellow Pædobaptist Mr. Robert Baillee (who hath in like sort wronged me) as they ought, testifie their repentance by righting me. Otherwise the Lord will to their shame discover their evil dealing, i their own conscience be so blinde or so hard as to slight such a sin.

He concludes thus, Any one of these arguments severally, much more all jointly, make good this position, that all the natural seed of Abraham by Isaac and Jacob, are in that great Charter (vouchsafed of God) taken into Covenant so as to be the people of God, and to enjoy all priviledges of his people in order (upon Gods termes) to everlasting salvation. But 1. not one nor all prove that God did promise to all Gen. 17. 7. or any such outward priviledges as he means, to wit, to be circumcised, or right to it and the Passeover, nor that all enjoy them. 2. The promises of justification, adoption, eternal life, upon Gods termes, without the promise of regeneration and effectual calling, make not a person to be in the Covenant, nor a people holy to the Lord Evangelically. Now this promise Mr. Bl. hath not proved to be made to all the natural seed of Abraham, by Isaac and Jacob, and till he doth so, he proves nothing against my assertion Exercit. pag. 3 which he pretended fully to oppose, but hath failed to do it. His 36. ch. is answered before sect. 29. I pass on to ch. 37. which is thus entituled, The Covenant in New Testament times takes in parents with their children; This he sets himself to make good first by interrogatories, and then by Peters words Acts 2. 38, 39. which is answered before sect. 21. A little of his interrogatories.

To his first, if by the grant he mean the Covenant of grace Evangelical, I deny it to have been ever made to a believer and all his seed, nor is it proved by Mr. Bl. If a Covenant of visible Church-membership and initial seal, I deny any such Covenant ever made by God to a believer and his seed, or the grant thereof to have been held by the Church of God in fee from Abraham to this present hour, and therefore need shew no reverse of such a grant.

To his 2d. demand, I grant a whole nation may enter into Covenant as Deut. 29. nor do I restrain any from engagement of their infants and posterity unborn by an oath and curse to own God But I finde there no promise or grant of visible Church-membership and initial seal to believers and their seed, by vertue of such a Covenant. His other

other frivolous queſtions in that demand are anſwered often, that the difference ariſeth from the different inſtitution of Circumciſion which is the rule of adminiſtring them, not intereſt in the Covenant if there were ſuch.

To his 3d. demand, I know no ſcandal ever given or likely to be given to the Jews by not baptizing infants. His random talk of ſtriking out of the Covenant infants, is ſhewed often before to be vain, as going on ſuppoſitions not proved. To his allegations of Gen. 17. 7. Ezek. 16. 20. 1 Cor. 7. 14. I have often anſwered before.

To his 4th. that the reaſon why in the Apoſtles dayes and the next age to them no queſtion was moved about the baptizing of infants, though infants were circumciſed by the Jews is manifeſt, to wit, Chriſt had not appointed infants to be baptized, the Apoſtles and primitive Chriſtians did not at all uſe it, it was contrary to the end and uſe of baptiſm as appointed by Chriſt, they knew not of the Pædobaptiſts doctrine, about the title to baptiſm from the Covenant, and its ſucceſſion to circumciſion.

But Mr. Bl. further refers me to Mr. Baxters Treatiſe of Infants Church membership, proving that infants were ſometimes Church members, pag. 26, 27. that there is no repeal of this grant vouchſafed of God pag. 27, 28. waiting for ſome fair anſwer to the former demands Whereto I ſhall addreſs my ſelf, as being very deſirous with the aſſiſtance of the Lord to do my endeavour for the freeing of men from the deluſion of that Book, wherewith a great number of Pædobaptiſts have been gulled.

SECT. XLIX.

The 4th. Ch. of Mr. Baxters, Part 1. of Plain Scripture proof, &c. is examined, his conceits about Infants viſible Church membership and their admiſſion conſidered; and ſundry Animadverſions made on that Chapter.

MR. B. part 1. ch. 4. of his Plain Scripture-proof, &c. writes thus. "My 2d. argument, and the chief I ſhall make uſe of, is this. All "that ought to be admitted viſible Church-members, ordinarily ought "to be baptized: But ſome Infants ought to be admitted viſible Church-"members; therefore ſome Infants ordinarily ought to be baptized. "Mr. T. hath gone over and over the terms of this Argument; ſo oft, "as if he could not poſſibly find out my meaning in them: when they "are as plain as I well know how to expreſs my ſelf. A great while he "fain would have denied the major Propoſition; but at laſt he is con-"tent to deny onely the minor: And indeed that is the very heart of the "controverſie. The queſtion between us is not ſo much whether infants "may be baptized? as whether they are in the number of Chriſtians, and "to be added as members to the viſible Church? If Mr. T. did grant the "minor, and not deny our children Chriſtianity, and to be members of

" the Church, I ſhould for my part, think his errour (though foul)
" yet of leſs conſequence in denying of Baptiſm. But it is their Church-" membership that he denieth, and yeeldeth that all that ought to be ad" mitted members ſhould be baptized.

Anſw. That I did often in the diſpute at Bewdly go over and over the terms of this argument, need not ſeem ſtrange, when Mr. Thomas Hooker having the book he was to examine before him in Print, in a like point, ſaith thus, Survey of the ſumme of Church Diſcipline, Part 1. ch. 12. when I had read over Mr. Rutherford once and again, I was at a ſtand in mine own thoughts, to determine certainly what was his proper intendment by the catholick and viſible Church. I might well doubt what he meant by the viſible Church, how he defined it, (wherein his notion is different from what others have, as is ſhewed before in the 2d. part of this Review, ſect. 17.) whether he meant the viſible Church catholick, or particular; and if particular, whether Jewiſh, or Chriſtian. And for the admiſſion, what he meant by it, how, and by whom it ought to be, was doubtfull. I perceived in the very entrance of the diſpute, by his preface and his propounding the queſtion about our baptizing, repreſenting it as odious, as if it were murder and adultery; and after by his denying liberty of repeating to mee, refuſing to explain his own terms, ſcoffingly putting it off as if it were catechizing of him, when I deſired him to open ſome terms to me which he uſed; and when I told him that it was needfull the people ſhould underſtand us, he replyed, he came to diſpute with me, not to inſtruct them: nor would clear them, except I could by diſtinction force him to it. I deprehended that he was, as I found him, bent to catch advantages to inſult over me, and carry away the fame of a victory, and not in a brotherly candid way to diſcuſs the point, that truth might appear to all the hearers, which I hoped from a man ſo ſeemingly godly. Upon which reaſons I confeſs I was hæſitant, both about the anſwering of this, and other arguments all along the diſpute, finding that Mr. B. had ſtudied arguments in unuſual expreſſions, that he might the more eaſily entangle me, having no time to weigh his words, but being required preſently to give anſwer. For which reaſon I was alſo neceſſitated ſometimes to vary my anſwers as I deprehended his meaning to be. Now preſuming I ſhall better underſtand Mr. B. then I could do before, I ſhall give a more determinante anſwer to his argument. Which that I may do, I conceive it neceſſary, that in the entrance I do enquire into his opinion concerning the viſible Church, and admiſſion into it, and the meaning of his expreſſion [ought to be admitted viſible Church-members.]

1. Mr. B ſuppoſeth that the reaſon of the appellation given to the viſible body, is its ſeeming (to the judgement of man) to be the ſame with the myſtical Præſcitus: Morator ſect. 11.

2. That " to be a member of the Church viſible, is but to be one that " in ſeeming, or appearance, or to the judgement of man doth belong " to the inviſible Church or the Kingdome of Heaven; if a man be " known (or any ſort of men) to belong to the Church inviſible, then
" they

"they visibly belong to it; and then they are visible members of the "Church. Plain Script. proof, &c. part 1. ch. 31. pag. 105. ch. 17. pag. 73. He saith, "to be member of the visible Church, or of the Church "as visible, or a visible member of the Church are all one, and is no "more but to seem to be a true member of the Church of Christ, "(commonly called invisible) or of the true mystical body of Christ. Answ. to my Valedict. Orat. pag. 176. "You say you dispute them not "out of the invisible Church. Answ. 1. But will you yeeld that they "are so much as seeming probable members of the invisible Church? "If you do, then they are members of the visible, which you deny: "For to be a visible member of the Church, or a member of the vi-"sible Church as such, is no more then to be a seeming member of the "invisible Church, or one that we ought to take in probability to be "of the invisible Church. Wherein how Mr. B. is mistaken, is shewed in the 2d. Part of this Review, sect. 17. pag. 229, &c.

3. Ch. 20. He imagines an universal visible Church existent, not dissolved; which is all one as to say, there is or was an universal visible Church, consisting of individual members immortal, or perpetually visible: Which mistake of his will come under consideration in that which follows.

4. Ch. 5. & ch. 20. he imagines having infants to have been of the essentials of the Jewish Church. But therein he is mistaken: For though they may be termed substantial parts, yet not essential, (the Jewish Church had ben a visible Church though there had been no infant in it) but integral.

5. Ch. 20. that the nature of the Jews church was not repealed, that the Jews Church was not repealed, ch. 5. that the Law or Covenant on which the species or essential form of their Church (and many of its accidents) was grounded, is not changed or repealed. Though the Jews are cast off, yet the law and nature of Churches is still the same. Which speeches, with other more of the like kind, shall be (God willing) examined in that which follows, and the non-sence and vanity of them shewed.

6. Ch. 23. that infants visible church-membership did not begin at the institution of circumcision, but rather with the first infant of faithfull Adam, though he after fell off.

7. That this is grounded on a Law and Covenant of God, which is made higher then that, Gen. 17. 7. even that Gen. 3. 15. Ch. 23. Yes, he makes it to antecede the fall of Adam. ch. 19. it is said to be of the Law of nature to have infants to be apert of a Kingdome: And ch. 13. therefore infants to be church members. Pag. 60. That infants must be church-members, is partly natural, and partly grounded on the Law of grace and faith: as if Church constitution were natural, and not by meer institution.

8. Animadv. on Mr. Bedfords treatise of Baptismal regeneration, Plain Script proof pag. 326. pag. 15. and elsewhere he makes the condition of the infants church membership and justification to be wholly without him in the faith of the parent. The falsity of which conceit is shewed by me in the 2d. part of this Review, sect. 10, 17. and elsewhere.

9. That this visible church-membership, notwithstanding the continuance of the parents Faith the imagined Law and Covenant, yet endures not but til they, when they come to years, do themselves make profession. So Plain Scrip. proof, part 2. ch. 6 pag. 119. "He is not to be taken for a "Christian, who will not visibly by himself when he comes to age (as "he did by his parents in infancy) publickly profess both his assent to "to the fundamental Articles of Faith, and his consent that the Lord "onely shall be his God, and Christ onely his Redeemer, and so his "Saviour and Lord, and promise in heart and life to be true to him "accordingly: And I deliver the Sacrament to none that will not thus "profess and promise. And pag. 335. He saith, "He will not contra-"dict this proposition of Davenant, Those who in Baptism were truly "justified, regenerated, and adopted suitable to their infant state; "when they come to the use of reason, are not justified, regenerated, "and adopted suitable to the special state of the aged, unless by "repenting, believing, and abrenunciation, they fulfil their vow made "in Baptism.

10. That there is no other way of admitting visible members now into the Church, but by Baptism, pag. 24. 108. But they are visible members afore Baptism according to his tenet, pag. 24. we and infants are Church-members before Baptism.

11. I presume that when he saith, All that ought to be admmitted visible church members, ordinarily ought to be baptized, he means this of Christian Churches, church-members, and admitting into them, not the Jewish: For though I find him speak as if the Jews Church were not repealed, (as in his non-sence he speaks, ch. 30.) that is, as I imagine, in the nature or essence the Jewish Church visible and the Christian were the same, and so they that were admitted into the Jewish, are to be admitted into the Christian; which caused me to suspect at the Dispute an ambiguity in that expression [ought to be admitted visible church-members.] Yet I do not imagine that he holds the proposition in this sense, All that ough heretofore to be admitted visible church members in the Jewish Church distinct from the Christian, ordinarily ought then to be baptized afore Christs coming, while the Jewish Church stood: if he should, I should deny it.

12. That this admission which infants are to have is, as he often speaks, into the visible Church: But what this admission into the visible Church is, by whom, and unto whom it ought to be, according to Mr. Bs. judgment, is yet to me uncertain. Admission is, according to the common use of it, the taking in of a person into an Office, Army, or Family, or the like, to perform the work, enjoy the benefit, profit, &c. of such an Officer, Member, &c. And it is usually done by some Officer to whom that business is committed; and the person upon his admission, and by vertue of it, takes his place, work, benefit, or what else he is admitted to, as his right and due. But I know no such thing in the baptizing of infants. Indeed by Baptism regularly, a man is admitted to the Communion of the Church in prayer, hearing, receiving the Lords Supper, and such other acts of Christian Communion as belong to visible

Church-members. But an infant by Baptiſm is not admitted to theſe Prayer and hearing are in ſome ſort allowed to unbaptized perſons, and they are admitted to them who are infidels, when infants baptized are ſent away as uncapable of them, and diſturbers by their crying and playing. The Lords ſupper they are not admitted to by their Baptiſm, till they themſelves profeſs, as Mr. B. and other Pædobaptiſts agree; The being, name, repute of Church-members is antecedent to Baptiſm, and therefore they are not admitted to it by Baptiſm. I muſt confeſs therefore I do not well know what this admiſſion of infants is which is by Baptiſm, and I think the propoſition in Mr. Bs. argument to be void of truth or ſenſe, if it be not thus conſtrued: All that ought to be admitted viſible church-members are baptized, or, which is all one, ordinarily ought to be baptized afore they are admitted, unleſs the admiſſion and baptiſm be one and the ſame, and then the ſpeech is an inept tautologie, as if he had ſaid: All viſible church members that ought to be baptized, ordinarily ought to be baptized. So that now Mr. B. may ſee ſome reaſon of my demur about his major propoſition, which though it were as plain as he well knew how to expreſs himſelf, yet there is ſo much ambiguity in it, that in the ſenſe which the words in any good conſtruction will bear, it is to be denied: But if he underſtand it in the later ſenſe, the Syllogiſm is nugatory, the minor and the concluſion being the ſame. Nevertheleſs, as in the Diſpute I let the major paſs, ſo I ſhall do in this anſwer, onely taking notice of ſome things in his proof of it, and inſiſt upon my denial of the minor.

The firſt argument of Mr. B. to prove admiſſion into the viſible Church is to be by Baptiſm, I approve, and thence conclude againſt infant Baptiſm thus. If we have neither precept nor example in Scripture ſince Chriſt ordained Baptiſm, of admitting any by Baptiſm as viſible members but believers by profeſſion, then all that muſt be admitted viſible members ordinarily by Baptiſm, muſt be believers by profeſſion. But ſince Baptiſm was inſtituted (or eſtabliſhed) we have no precept or example in Scripture of admitting any as viſible members by Baptiſm, but believers by profeſſion. Ergo, all that muſt be admitted viſible members muſt be believers by profeſſion. I know not what in ſhew of reaſon can be ſaid to this. For what man (yet Mr. B. and Pædobaptiſts dare) dare go in a way which hath neither precept nor example to warrant it, from a way that hath full current of both? yet they that will admit infants into the viſible Church by Baptiſm do ſo. If he ſay there's precept before, I anſwer, his own major requires precept or example ſince Chriſt ordained Baptiſm, and therefore that ſhift avoids not the retortion of his argument. To what he replies to this argument in his Præſeſtin. morator, ſect. 16. beſides what I have ſaid in the 2d. part of this Review, ſect. 4. pag. 66. 67. there is enough in the ſame book, ſect. 10, 11, 12 &c. to manifeſt, that infants are not in any Scripture diſciples appointed to be baptized, Matth. 28. 19. Nevertheleſs, I find Alſtedius in his Supplement to Chamier de natura Eccleſia, cap. 7. §. 4. thus writing. Baptiſmus admittit in Eccleſiam particularem: ſed in Eccleſiam catholicam poteſt aliquis admitti ſine baptiſmo; quia hanc ad rem ſufficit vera fides.

And whereas Mr. Ball in his reply to the answer of the New-England Elders about the nine positions, pag. 60. had said, Baptism is the seal of our admission into the congregation or flock of Christ; but not evermore of our receiving into this or that particular society as set members thereof: Mr. Allin rejoyns in his Defence, pag. 163. Baptism doth not admit actually into the Church, and your own expression secretly implieth as much, when you say, Baptism is a seal of our admission into the Church or flock of Christ: If baptism be the seal of our admission, then there is admission thereunto before baptism: but who doth admit, and where and when is any admitted to the Church, but in particular congregations? Can any be admitted into a Church, that whole Church being ignorant thereof? Fulwood serm. of the Church, &c. p. 14. The children of believers, born in the Church, are not (though virtual) actual members of the visible Church before Baptism. This I produce, to shew the uncertainty among Pædobaptists about admission into the Church by baptism, and membership before Baptism.

Like also what Mr. B. saith in his 2d. arg. To be above ordinances is to be above obedience to God, and so Gods: And when he saith in his 3d. The nature and end of baptism, is to be Christs listing, engaging sign; it is a good argument to prove that infant baptism hath not the nature and end of baptism, sith it is not Christs (that is, according to his appointment) listing, engaging sign, the infant neither lists nor engageth himself by it as Christ appointed: And when he saith, If it be the use of baptism to engraff and enter us into the body or Church, 1 Cor. 12. 13. and into Christ, as Rom. 6. 3. then sure it must be used at our engraffing and entrance, it rather follows, it is before, sith the means is to be before the end in execution. To what he saith about Church-members, Disciples, Christians, enough hath been said in the 2d. part of this Review, sect. 10. &c.

In his 6th. argument, having formed an argument from Ephes. 5. 26. he saith of me. Mr. T. in his Exercit. objecteth, 1. That then the thief on the cross, &c. were no church members. Answ. It followes not from [he that is baptized shall be saved] that therefore he that is not baptized shall not be saved: so here, for the former speaks but ad debitum, and the later de eventu; it will follow, that it is a duty to baptize all members where it may be done; but not that it shall certainly come to pass.

Resat. What I said Exercit. pag. 21. of that text, Ephes. 5. 27. was not an objection against what Mr. B. would evince from the text, but in answer to an argument urged for infant baptism from that text by a London Minister, in a conference anno 1643. Which argument being drawn from an act or end of Christ, which was not one duty, but his performance: it was urged, that if infants were not baptized, and to be baptized, they belonged not to the Church: To which I answered, καὶ ἀνθυποφορικῶς, by an answerable illation, by the same reason the thief on the cross should not belong to the Church because not baptized. That which Mr. B. answers is not true, that Mark 16. 16. the former part speaks but ad debitum, and the later de eventu. For though a duty may be gathered from the subject of the proposition, it being clear, that salvation being promised to the believer baptized, Faith and Baptism are required red duties to that end; yet the former part of the proposition doth as fully speak of an event as the later part doth. And though Ephes 5. 26. it is proved a duty to baptize, as also to preach the word, because it is Christs way (in which we are to concur with him) of clensing his Church: yet the clensing of the Church with or in the washing of water by the word, doth not note a duty, but an end intended, and event to follow by Christs action. Mr. B. proceeds.

2. He objecteth, that therefore it must be understood of the more famous part of the Church, or that purification is to be understood of that which is for the most part. Answ. The Apostle speaks plainly of the whole Church; and to take it for part, is to cross the Text, except you shew a necessity for it. 2. It speaks of all quoad debitum, in regard of the means of it, which they are capable of. 3. And usually quoad eventum of the said means too.

Refut. 1. It cannot be understood of the whole visible Church, in which are many reprobates; for it is that Church which Christ loved with that peculiar love which is the Husbands pattern to love his wife by, for whom he gave himself, that he might sanctifie it, that he might present it to himself glorious, and a Church not having spot or wrinkle, or any of such things; but that it might be holy, and without blemish: which are true onely of that part of the visible, which is also of the invisible Church of the elect. 2. Whomsoever it speaks of, [that he might purifie it in or with the washing of water by the word] it speaks of the intention of Christ; which being supposed that it is not frustrated, it follows, that those who are said to be purified in or with the washing of water by the word, are all in the event converted by preaching, and baptized with water. Which sith it cannot be said of all elect infants, for they are not purified by the word, it must be understood as I say, either by a synecdoche of the whole for the more famous or apparent part; or else the act is meant of that which is usually done, or for the most part, not what is universally and perpetually. 3. It is granted, that we may gather thence the duty of preaching the word, and baptizing with water, and that they who are sanctified by preaching are to be purified by baptism, and that this was usual in the event, a known use in the primitive times: But expresly it notes onely Christs act, not the Ministers duty, which is onely implied, and follows from this, that Christ doth it by them; and it supposeth, that they who are capable of the one, to wit. baptism, are capable of the other, the hearing of the word; for these two are conjunctively put, not disjunctively either the one or the other, as if some were purified in the washing of water onely, others by the word; but the same who are purified by the one, are purified by the other. Mr. B. adds.

Object. But some may say, that [by the word] is here added, which infants are not capable of. Answ. 1. Infants are sanctified by the word of promise and precept to parents to dedicate them to God, though not by the word preached to infants. 2. The means is to each member as they are capable. washing by water to those that are capable of that, and by the word to those that are capable of that, which blind and deaf men are not any more then infants.

Ref. There is no word of precept to parents to dedicate infants to God by baptism, though there be to pray for them; nor do I think M. B. would allow every parent to dedicate his or her infant to God by baptism, which they must do if there were a precept to them to do it. That there is no such word of promise as entitles every infant of a believer, or any definitely to baptism, much less that appoints parents to dedicate their infants to God by baptism, is amply shewed in this book before. Nor can the meaning be, Ephes. 5 26. of such a sanctification. For 1. no word of promise, and precept to parents to dedicate them to God, is that which Christ doth sanctifie or cleanse them by, partly because there is none such, partly because the word of precept to parents (if there were such) to dedicate them to God, would not cleanse or sanctifie the infants, it hath no effect on them, nor notes their duty: nor doth the precept sanctifie or cleanse, but the observing of it; nor was the parents dedication ever made by God a means to cleanse or sanctifie the child, as there is meant. Nor, were there such a word of promise to a parent, would that of it self sanctifie and cleanse. 2. The word there meant, is the word of the Gospel preached to those who are said to be cleansed by Christ. For 1, all along the N. T. and particularly in that Epistle, by [the word] is meant the word of the Gospel, as it is preached or published. Acts 10.22,36,37. *Rom.*10.8,9,17. *Ephes.*6.17, *Heb.*6.5. 1 *Pet.*1.25. Luke 3.2. John 3.34. & 6.63,68. & 8.47. & 12.47,48. & 15.7. & 17. 8. Acts 5.32. Matth 13.20,21,22,23. Mark 2.2. & 4.14,15,16,17, 18,20. & 16.20. Luke 1. 2. & 5. 1. & 8.11,12,13,15,21. & 10.39. & 11.28. John 5.24,38. & 8.31,43,52. & 14.23,24. & 17 6,14, 17,20. Acts 4.4,29 31. & 6.2,4,7. & 8.4,14,25. & 11.1,19. & 12. 24. & 13. 5,7,26,44,46,48,49. & 14. 25. & 15. 7,35,36. & 16. 6, 32. & 17.11,13. & 18.11. & 19.10. 1 *Cor.*1.4. & 14.36. & 15. 2. 2 *Cor.*2.17. & 4. 2. & 5.19. *Gal.*6.6. *Ephes.*1.13. *Phillip.*1.14. & 2.16. *Col.*1.5,25. & 3.16. & 4.3. 1 *Thes.*1.6,8. & 2.13. 2 *Thes.*3.1. 1 *Tim.*5.17. 2 *Tim.*2.9,15. & 4.2. *Tit.*1.3,9 & 2.5. *Heb.*13.7. Jam. 1.21,22,23. 1 *Pet.*1.8. & 3.1. Revel 1.9. & 6.9. & 12.11. & 20.4. 2. And by this, all said to be purified, Ephes. 5.26. are cleansed, and therefore no infants, who are not at all capable of understanding it, and therefore not so capable of being cleansed by it as the blind and deaf. Mr. B. yet adds.

Object. But it is the invisible Church that Christ is said thus to cleanse, Answ. 1. Certainly those that are washed with water, or hearing the word, or either, are all visible members. 2. The visible Church hath the outward priviledges and titles of the invisible, because as to us they must in probability be judged to belong to both. Therefore Paul frequently calls them all saints and sons of God by faith, &c.

Ref. Though they be of the visible who are so washed, yet the Church

Church Ephes 5. 25, 26, 27. cannot be meant of the meerly visible; but onely of them who are so of the visible, that they are also of the invisible, as is proved before from the things said of the Church, which agree to none other. And thus Mr. B. hath my answer to that Cb. and my apprehension of his major; let's now view his minor, and try his Achilles which he is so confident of.

SECT. L.

The fifth Chapter of Mr. Bs. Plain Scripture proof &c. Part. 1. is examined and the texts Gal. 4. 1, &c. Matth. 28. 19. cleered so as to prove infants now no visible Church-members.

CH. 5. he begins thus. "Though I have many and clear arguments "from the new Testament, to prove infants to be members of the "visible Church, as I shall let you see, God willing, when I come to "them; yet because I think it most orderly to take them before us from "the beginning, I will first fetch one from the old Testament, and that "such as is fully confirmed from the new: For I hope you are none of "those who have wiped out all the old Testament from your Bibles, or "that presently look upon a text as no text, if you hear it come from "the old Testament.

Answ. I Know none at Bewdley so erroneous or foolish. But Mr. B. may see (if his high soaring meditations and studies will allow him time to descend to view such a low argument, as hee oft disdainfully speaks) something written in the 2d. part of this Review, Sect. 2, 3. which tends to prove that no good argument can be drawn from the old Testament for his admission of infants visible Church members. And for his many and clear arguments from the New Testament to prove infants to be members of the visible Church; he did wisely put in the caution; God willing when I come to them I shall let you see them, to save his credit, though he never shew them. For my part I despair of ever seeing them. As for those I have found brought by him, the chief have been examined in the first and second Part of this Review, and found impertinent. The dispute that remains to be viewed is so immethodical, that had Mr. B. ever been bred up in Schools, I am confident he would have been ashamed of it. But I must now follow him in his own track.

I therefore, saith he, argue thus; First, If by the merciful gift and appointment of God, not yet repealed, some infants were once to be admitted members of the visible Church, then some infants are to be so admitted still: But by the merciful gift and appointment of God not yet repealed, some infants were once to be admitted members of the visible Church: therefore they are so to be admitted still.

Answ. Mr. B. pag. 14. plainly saith, that by [admitting] he means solemn admitting, that since baptism was instituted (or established) we have no precept or example of admitting visible members any other way, that as a Souldier before listing, and as a King before crowning and taking his oath, so are we and infants Church-members before baptism: He saith pag. 26. of this argument, I will first fetch you one from the Old Testament. Whence 1. it is apparent that his visible Church membership and admitting visible Church-members, are not the same. 2. That a merciful gift and appointment of God of visible Church-membership is not all one with the merciful gift and appointment of God of admission of visible Church-members. 3. That a merciful gift and appointment of God of admitting visible Church-members, is by some solemn rite. Which is confirmed in that he speaks of admitting visible Church-members, as a duty to be performed by some persons, as when he saith ch. 4. ought to be admitted visible Church members, and in this place were once to be admitted visible Church members. Visible Church-membership might be and was a gift of God, not a duty, (which is some action to be done by man) but a state or relation resulting from the foundation, or cause, or reason of it. Now if Mr. B. cannot shew (as I am confident he cannot) any other gift or appointment of God of admitting infants visible Church-members in the old Testament unrepealed, besides that of circumcision, then either his antecedent (as hee terms it) must be meant of it, or else he mocks the people of God with a pretended merciful gift and appointment of God of admitting infants visible Church-members unrepealed, which is no where extant, but is fained by himself to delude them: and if it be that of Circumcision, then his minor asserts the appointment of Circumcision, and his conclusion is, that our infants are still to be circumcised. Nor can I, with all my enquiry and study, conceive (if he had understood himself) he could mean any other. For by his making admission solemn, comparing it with listing of a Souldier, crowning of a King, it is manifest that he understood it of a solemn Rite; and speaking of it as a thing that ought to be, he must mean it of an act to be performed by man; and limiting it now to Baptism, he intimates it was by some Rite answerable to Baptism heretofore, which I hardly think any learned man but would conceive must be meant of Circumcision and no other, sith no other was appointed by God to infants for admission of them as visible Church-members. It is true, he often, when I pressed him in the Dispute to speak plainly whether he meant by his appointment or Law unrepealed that of Circumcision, did deny it, and distinguished between the Law of infants visible Church-membership and that of Circumcision; but he never shewed me a Law of infants admission as visible Church members besides it. And in his arguments whereby he proves the not repealing, he concludes about the not repealing of the Law of infants visible Church-membership, not of their admission. Of which fallacy I had in the Dispute some obscure apprehension, and therefore pressed him so often to speak plainly, and told him he must mean it of Circumcision, (which fact of mine Mr. B. did in the Dispute, and doth here ch. 23. represent as defective in tenderness of conscience, fear of God, love of truth, charity to a brother, common modesty, after his usual usual fashion of making out-cries without cause,) but could not then clear it, having not then so well understood his opinion, nor his shifting of the terms, nor being able to shew it for want of a Notary, and time to view his arguments, he being also very quick in urging and pressing me to answer, without allowing time to weigh his arguments: and therefore after much altercation concerning his meaning, gave way to his proof of the Law of visible Church-membership unrepealed, and neglected to keep him to the proof of the Law of admission unrepealed, to mine and the Causes great disadvantage. Whether Mr. B. did fraudulently or ignorantly manage the Dispute, belongs to God to judge; though I must needs say, that I did then, and do still suspect he was not free from deceit, or dolus malus in it: finding in a Copy I have of the Dispute, that he distinguished then between visible Church membership and admission. As for my self, had I perceived so clearly as now I do, his mind about the kind of visible Church-membership and admission of infants he asserts, I should have stuck to this, That though infants could have been proved visible Church members, according to the Law he pretends unrepealed; yet were they not to be admitted by Baptism, which is appointed onely for visible Church-members by profession of faith: And therefore whereas he saith he contends more for infants visible Church membership then Baptism, and makes that the very heart of the controversie, I conceive otherwise, and do let him understand, that were it not that I know that he hath very much abused me and others in that which follows, I should think my tenet not overthrown, nor much regard it, though his Law of infants visible Church-membership were yeelded, and my answer to his arguments omitted. But sith things are as they are, I resolve to go on.

have

"The Antecedent (saith he) hath two parts. 1. That by Gods merci"ful gift and appointment some infants were once to be admitted mem"bers of the visible Church: This is as far beyond all doubt as you "can expect. 1. Mr. T. granted it in his publick Dispute: and so he "doth in his Apology, pag. 66. where he saith [I acknowledge that in "the visible Church of the Jews, the infants were reckoned to the Church]
"yet lest any should be so impudent as to deny it, I briefly prove it
"thus. 1. If infants were part of them that entred into Covenant with "the Lord God, and into his Oath, that he might stablish them for a "people to himself, and he might be to them a God; then infants were "part of the Church: But the former is plain, in Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12.
"to any that will read it. Therefore infants were part of the Church.

Answ. What I did I still grant, that infants were part of the Jewish Church, and were circumcised; but the conclusion Mr. B. infers from Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. is not that which Mr. B. should prove. For it is not all one to say, Infants were part of the Church, and by Gods mercifull gift and appointment some infants were once to be admitted members of the visible Church. Nor doth Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. prove either infants were part of the Church, or their admission. Their entring into Covenant was not by any act of their own, but by the Elders or parents, who in like manner Covenanted for the unborn, v. 15. who could not thereby be visible Church-members, being not then existent; and therefore the Covenant there made them not visible Church-members. Nor is there any proof of their admission thence, they were admitted either after or before, the Covenanting was not their admission, for admission is the act of some person that hath that trust or office committed to him; but their Covenanting was the persons own act, and if it did admit the infants, then it did admit the parents, Elders, Captains, and so they did admit themselves, which is absurd; and the establishing them for a people to himself, is no more then as Piscator rightly Schol. in Deut. 29. 13. That he might require from thee the worship of himself by obedience towards his precepts, and so may binde thee to himself. So the obligation of the people precedes, and he might be to thee a God, that is may in like manner promise to thee that he will follow thee with his grace, and do thee good and so make thee happy. So Gods promise followes. It was a Covenant neither to make nor admit them visible Church members, but to engage them to obedience, and to assure them thereupon of protection and blessing: and this extended to their posterity v. 15. who could not be then visible Church-members, or admitted then as being not existent.

2. Saith Mr. B. If infants were engaged to God by the seal of his Covenant (Circumcision) then they were members of his Church: But some infants were so engaged: therefore they were Church members; this is all undeniable. I never yet met with any that denied either.

Answ Circumcision is not stiled in Scripture the seal of the Covenant, but I grant that infants were members in the Jewish Church visible, admitted by Circumcision, and engaged thereby though not by their own act, yet according to Gods injunction and severe exaction to keep the Law, and this is the onely proof of their admission Mr. B. brings out of the old Testament. He adds,

3 If infants were part of those that were baptized to Moses in the cloud and sea, and drank the spiritual drink, even of that rock which was Christ, then sure they were part of the visible Church: But the antecedent is plain 1 Cor. 10. 1, 2, 3. They were all baptized, &c.

Answ. I deny the antecedent to be plain, 1 Cor. 10. 1, 2, 3. and have proved the contrary to be true, in the 2d. part of this Review Sect. 21. whither I refer the Reader:

4. Saith he, the Martyr Stephen calleth that assembly, whereof they were members [the Church in the wilderness] Acts 7. 38. Therefore they were Church members.

Answ. The conclusion and proof is granted, but I observe that the conclusion to be proved is altered from this [by Gods mercifull gift and appointment, some infants were once to be admitted members of the visible Church] into this [infants were Church members, part of the visible Church.]

The 2d. part of his antecedent, which he saith is the onely thing I deny, and which the whole weight of this argument lieth on, is [that this mercifull gift of God to infants, and ordinance of Church membership is

not

not repealed] and he saith he hath here the negative, and the proof lies not on him, yet he will examine my proofs, and then prove the negative by a multitude of evident arguments from the Scripture, that he hath shewed Scripture not questioned for it, and that he may justly expect plain Scripture or argument to prove the repeal of that Law.

Answ. He hath shewed no plain Scripture, nor any argument for a Law or Ordinance that infants are, were or shall be visible Church-members of which I need prove a repeal, though I grant he hath proved a Law or Ordinance for the admission of infants by Circumcision, which is the onely Law or Ordinance I finde in him, either for infants visible Church-membership or their admission, and if he hold it unrepealed, I can quickly prove the contrary. Nevertheless I follow him in his wild goose race.

"And first, saith he, I expected some plain Scripture, 1. Because it "must be a plain word of God onely that can prove the repeal of any "part of his word, and mens reasonings may as likely prove vain in "this as any thing, if they be not grounded upon plain Scripture. And "2. because I deal with those men that call for plain Scripture proof of "infant baptism from us: therefore did I over, and over, and over, de-"sire Mr. T. to bring some word of God to prove the repeal of infants "Church-membership. But what text do you think he brought? In "his publike dispute he never offered to name one text: nay, in his "sermon which he preached after upon deliberation, he never offered "to name one text in all the Bible, to prove that God hath repealed "infants Church-membership. Is not this enough to make his cause "suspicious? Nay, I am confident he cannot bring one text for it.

Answ. And I have long expected from Mr. B. some plain Scripture in which I might see any such Law or Ordinance distinct from Circumcision for infants visible Church-membership and admission, which I might consider whether it be repealed or no, or capable of a repeal or not. 1. Because it must be a plain word of God onely that can prove such a law, and mens reasonings (as it will appear in the examining them Mr. Bs. are) may as likely prove as vain in this as any thing, if they be not grounded upon plain Scripture. And 2. because I deal with those men, particularly Mr. B. that pretend plain Scripture proof for infants Church membership and Baptism, but to those that justly call for such, bring no expres precep or example of infants baptism in the N. T. (which alone can be counted plain Scripture proof in this thing) but consequences from Circumcision and the Jewish Church-state, which have no validity but on the grant of such suppositions as are false; yea in these mens disputes against Papists, and Prelates, and others, are rejected; and yet they are so extreme blinde as to think, and so impudent as to bear the people in hand, these are plain Scripture proofs of infants Church membership and Baptism. And therefore did I over and over and over desire Mr. B. to bring me some word of God for such a law. But what text do you think he brought? In his publike dispute he never once offered to name one text: nay, in his Præfat. Orator sect. 6. printed some few years after upon deliberation he brings none, though preſſed by me in my Precurſor. Nevertheleſs, ſith M. B. forceth me to it, I determine, as I have done to others, ſo to ſift Mr. B's allegations alſo. He goes on in his venemous way thus.

what if Mr. T. ſhould uſe Magiſtrates as he doth infants (as former Anabaptiſts have done) hath he not as good ground? and would they take it well? May be not as well ſay, when I ſhew him Scripture in the old Teſtament for Magiſtrates in the Church, and being Gods people [that it was from the peculiar ſtate of the Jews: God hath ſet up no Magiſtrates of Chriſtians in the Church now] would not our Magiſtrates bid him bring ſome Scripture to prove the repeal, or elſe they ſhall take their old Teſtament Commiſſion for currant? and let him bring me any more Scripture to prove the repeal of infants viſible Church membership, then is brought to prove the repeal of Magiſtrates in the Church if he can: (O how juſt is it with God, that thoſe Magiſtrates who favour, countenance and cheriſh thoſe men, that would keep all Chriſtians infants out of the Church, ſhould by the ſame men be put out themſelves, both of Church and State?)

Anſw. What Anabaptiſts in former times did or held, it is hard to ſay, ſith we have the narration of their facts and tenents onely from their adverſaries. Notwithſtanding Auguſtines reckoning Jovinian among heretiques, and Hieromes invectives againſt Vigilantius, yet learned Proteſtants have excuſed or defended both. Dr. Reynold Conference with Hart, ch. 5. div. 3. Jewels defence of the Apol. Feild of the Church book ch. 30, 31. Cracanthorp vindic. Eccl. Anglic. contra Spalat. Andr. Rivet. ſum. contr. tom. 1. queſt. 1. &c. Mr. B. himſelf would not paſs without a deep cenſure, if the writings of Mr. Crandon, Mr. Eyre, Dr. Kendal, &c. ſhould bee taken for good proof of his tenets. It is much harder, and indeed a moſt injurious thing, that the conceived opinions and practiſes of men of former times, ſhould be charged on Antipædobaptiſts now who do diſclaim them. And as for this ſpiteful paſſage of Mr. B. though I have ſaid enough to anſwer it in the 2d. part of this Review ſect. 3. yet I add. That I have not ſo good ground to deny Chriſtian Magiſtracy as infants viſible Church-membership, that I have Scripture to prove the repeal (if it muſt bee ſo called) of the pretended viſible Church-membership of infants, which was onely in the Jewiſh national Church now diſſolved, and another frame erected by Chriſt: but not ſo of the Magiſtracy which was not proper to the Jewiſh people. Melchiſedech was a King, Job was a Magiſtrate Job 29, &c. Civil Magiſtracy as the power of Parents, and Maſters, are of the law of nature and nations, Chriſt and his Apoſtles did not alter the ſtate of Magiſtracy, but left them as they found them, and confirmed them; ſundry converted Governours kept their place after converſion: but the viſible Church-membership of infants was onely in the Jewiſh Church, the frame of which is quite altered by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and not the leaſt hint given of any infants being in or ſolemn admiſſion into the Chriſtian viſible Church, but much to the contrary in the new Teſtament. We keep infants out of the Church no otherwiſe then Chriſt and his Apoſtles did, and if Magiſtrates do favour, countenance and cheriſh us in this, they do but cherish us in the doing of what the Apostles of Christ did, and M. B. that doth animate the Magistrates to molest us, and in his 7th. humble advice to the Parliament Decemb. 24. 1654. would have us deprived of all Pastoral Cure having the publique maintenance, doth shew his minde to persecute us, and by his grounds had conceived himself bound in conscience to have dealt so with the Apostles, if hee had been in their dayes. But O how good is God to us, and just to him and such as he is, that the madness of such a Balaam is rebuked, his advice rejected as injurious, and pernicious, tending to take away that liberty of examining things received, and to impose on mens consciences new subscriptions and conformities, as intollerable as those the Prelates urged, and consequently shutting out light from shining, and inducing persecution afresh; and that he and such as he is, who are partial in Gods law, prophaning, yea quite changing or dissolving the prime solemn ordinance of Christ, and opposing (contrary to their solemn Covenant) the reformation of that abuse, should be made contemptible before all the people ! Mal. 2. 9.

Mr. B. adds, yet in private I confess he cited two texts to prove the repeal of Gods Ordinance and merciful gift, that infants should be Church-members: and I will read the two places to you (which private conference I would not mention, but lest it should be thought a wrong to him to overpass his owely proofs) The first was Gal. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. when I considered that such a man should deny all infants Church-membership, and affirm that God hath repealed that his Ordinance, and merciful gift, and have no more Scripture for it then such as this, and yet be so confident, it maketh me amazed. Hath he not a good wit, that can prove that Christ hath repealed his merciful gift, because he hath redeemed us from under our bondage and tutorage? or that he hath shut out all infants from his Church, because he hath delivered them from the inconveniences of their minority? If I had no better proof then this for infant baptism, I should be ashamed once to open my mouth for it.

Answ. Had Mr. B. any true love, or justice towards me, as he seems to have by his pretended loathness to mention my private conference, he had not so often and with such false calumniatory inferences mentioned in his writings what past in private conference concerning my censure of mens not receiving the doctrine of Antipædobaptism, my plea for plurality of places, &c. whereby he hath done what in him lay, to defame me as proud, covetous, schismatical, and given over by God to a reprobate minde, though there was no necessity of such divulgings. But much experience hath taught me to expect no better usage from an intemperate Zelot for his opinion, though a pretended friend and seeming godly, then from an open enemy. Mr. B. is amazed that I alledged Gal. 4. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. as I did, and but that I have learned nil admirari of such passages, I should be amazed at his dealing with me, in setting down my proofs, though they were but in a private conference without study. The thing of which he urged me to prove the repeal, I remember not whether it were of the visible Church-membership of infants, or of their admission. The latter was it, the repeal of which he denied; For ſo was his antecedent [By the merciful gift and appointment of God not yet repealed, ſome infants were once to be admitted members of the viſible Church] and this is proved plainly from *Gal.*4.1,&c. that the ordinance of admiſſion (which was no other then circumciſion) of infants is repealed; yea, if that explication of Beza, Legem enim (id eſt totam illam legalem oeconomiam) dicit fuiſſe inſtar tutoris ſive curatoris ad certum tempus dati, thus Engliſhed in the New Annot. For hee ſaith that the law, that is the whole Government of Gods houſe according to the law, was as it were a kinde of tutorſhip or office of an Overſeer appointed for a time, be right, the Church-memberſhip viſible of infants (which was peculiar to the Jews, and belonged to the legal Church-ſtate) is plainly limited in that place to a certain time now expired, and conſequently the ordinance of ſuch Church-memberſhip (if there had been ſuch) repealed. And I ſay, that if he had ſo good proof for his infant baptiſm, as this is for the repeal of his pretended ordinance of infants admiſſion and viſible Church-membe.ſhip unrepealed, I would plead for it as he doth. But Mr. B. as one that ha h a good wit, can by his Chymiſtry prove hence his non repeal.

Nay, ſaith he, I pray you do but conſider, whether his own proof be not ſufficient againſt him? Doth not this text plainly tell us, that the heir in his minority is Lord of all? and ſo approve of the natural birth priviledge of our children in civil things? And will God then deny children to be heirs of any thing, and bereave them of their ſpiritual or Church-priviledge, and neither tell us why he doth it, nor that he doth it.

Anſw. Gods heirs are but co-heirs with Chriſt *Rom.*8 17. true believers or elect p rſons, who are not depri ed by me of any truely ſo called ſpiritual Church priviledge. The priviledge of infants viſible Church-membership as it came with the ſpiri ual Church-ſtate of Abrahams family, ſo it ceaſed with the diſſolution thereof, of which God hath given us reaſon in that it was but for an appointed time by God, which as it began with Gods ſpeci l love to Abraham, ſo it ended upon his loathing his unbelieving poſterity, and ſetting his love on the Gentiles.

Again, ſaith he, more plainly: if Chriſt came to free the heir from his bondage and tutorage onely, and from the ſervitude of his minority; is it likely that he came to free them from their Church-memberſhip? Can any man think that this was any part of the bondage? I require thoſe whoſe conſciences are not wholly enſlaved to their fancies and conceits, to judge of this ſoberly, whether they can poſſibly think it a bondage to be a member both of the univerſal Church and of a particular! Let them not here tell me that Circumciſion was a bondage, or that the Law was a Tutor; For I ſpeak of none of theſe, but of their being members of the Church of God.

Anſw. Whom Mr. B. means by perſons whoſe Conſciences are wholly enſlaved to their fancies and conceits I cannot determine, I know few men who give me more cauſe of fear that they are ſuch then Mr. B. who ſeems to me to have more conceits and fancies then one, and thoſe with ſo much pertinacy and violent zeal promoted, as (me thinks) ſcarce agree to a ſober man. For my ſelf I ſay, that ſuch a viſible Church-membership as the infants of the Jews had, in my sobereſt judgement, I not onely can possibly think (which Mr. B. himself also may do, sith it implies no contradiction) but do verily think to have been a part of the imperfect state of the Church, and in some respect of the bondage. For though Churchmembership be a priviledge of it self, yet comparatively, and in respect of some consequents attending it, as namely subjection to the whole Law of Moses, it is a manifest imperfection and bondage. As the state of the Apostles was a state of minority, bondage, imperfection, while Christ was on earth in comparison of the estate after his ascension, when the spirit was powred out upon them John 16, 7. And I doubt not to affirm that Christ came to free his whole Church from that visible Church-membership it had then, by natural descent, and consequently to alter the visible, Church-membership of infants into a more perfect way, by setting up a Church throughout the world, not by carnal descent in one nation, but in a spiritual way by faith in Christ, through the preaching of the Gospel. And I must tell Mr. B. of Circumcision and the Law, it's bondage and Tutorage (whether it like him or not) sith infants had no where else visible Church-membership then in the Jewish Church, whereby they were in bondage to Circumcision and the Law. Nor can I tell what ordinance of admitting visible Church-members unrepealed he means, besides that of Circumcision, and therefore he must speak of these if he speak of the visible church-membership in the Jewish Church which had these annexed.

3. Yet further, saith he, when this text tels us that Christ came to redeem us from under the Law, and the bondage of minority, is it not a clear proof that he hath brought us into a far better state then we were in before? and hath advanced us in his family, as the Heir at age is advanced? And can any man of common sence and conscience expound this of his casting all their infants out of his family? Christs Church is his family; and doth the Heir use to be freed by being cast out of the family? why may he not as well say, that all the body of the Jewish nation are now delivered by being cast out of the Church or Family of Christ? Is it not more agreeable to the scope of the Apostle here to affirm, that certainly they are so far from being turned out of the family or Church of Christ, that by Christ they are now brought into a far higher state, and made members of a far better Church, then that particular Church of the Jews was.

Answ. It is true, Christ hath advanced his Church into a far better state then it was in before, and that is the reason why infants are left out (I say not cast out) of his visible Church. For whereas the particular Church of the Jews (in which alone infants were visible Church-members) was as well a civil Commonwealth as a Church of God, and was by descent of birth, and by proselytism made up of all in the Commonwealth; it seemed good to God to make his Church more spiritual, consisting onely of them who owned Christ as their Lord; and therefore till infants do so, they are no parts of the visible Church Christian. And thus men of common sence and tender consciences may and must expound the Apostle, it being agreeable to his scope, if they will speak rightly: And the body of the Jewish nation, I mean the greatest or

moſt conſiderable part, if embracing the Goſpel they had been baptized, their children being not baptized till they profeſſed, had been rightly ſaid to be delivered from the minority and bondage they were in before in the ſenſe before declared. Mr. B. adds.

4. And if any yet ſay, that it is not the infants, but onely the parents that are thus advanced by Chriſt to a better ſtate, is not this text plain againſt him? For the Apoſtle extendeth redemption here to thoſe that were under the Law; and who knoweth not that infants were under the Law? And if it did not belong to each individual under the Law, yet it cannot in any tolerable ſence be denied to belong to each ſpecies or age: (yet I can prove, that conditionally this deliverance was to each individual perſon in the ſenſe as God ſent his ſon Jeſus to turn every one of them from their iniquity, Act. 3. laſt.) And now judge I pray, whether this be not a pittifull ground for men to prove the repeal of Gods merciſull gift and ordinance of infants Church-membership.

Anſw. That which I ſay is, that the particular Church of the Jews being diſſolved, a Church of a better conſtitution is by God erected, and ſo the Church of God is advanced by Chriſt into a better ſtate, that is, from carnal to ſpiritual, which neceſſitates the leaving infants out of the viſible Church Chriſtian, till they be diſciples or believers: and this is a better eſtate to infants as well as parents, ſith that Church-ſtate did engage them to Circumciſion and the Law, which were their bondage. Nevertheleſs Mr. Bs. proof is not to be allowed: For it follows not, redemption is extended to thoſe that were under the Law, therefore to each individual, or to each ſpecies or age, the term being indefinite, and the ſpeech true if any under the Law, and thoſe of one ſpecies or age be redeemed; as in like ſort, when God is ſaid to chooſe the poor, the weak things of this world, this proves not univerſal election of the poor, or weak, ſith the terms being indefinite, they need not be underſtood univerſally except in neceſſary matter. I remember once in a Diſpute it was urged thus for univerſal redemption, Chriſt came to redeem them that were under the Law, all are under the Law, Ergo. To which I anſwered by denying the minor, producing Gal. 4. 21. Rom. 6. 14, &c. though I might have anſwered alſo by denying the indefinite term to contain all. But if Mr. Bs. reaſoning be good that it cannot in any tolerable ſence be denied to belong to each ſpecies or age becauſe they were under the Law, it will follow, that it cannot be denied in any tolerable ſence to each Jew, for they were under the Law, and then it will follow that the Jews were univerſally redeemed that they might receive the adoption of ſons. And it ſeems by his words in his Parentheſis, Mr. B. holds a conditional deliverance for each individual perſon meant Gal. 4. 5. concerning which, beſides what I have ſaid before, Sect. 33, 34, 35. I adde this cenſure of Mr. John Collings. Provoc. provocatus in anſwer to Boatman, ch. 5. pag. 61. Univerſal redemption; conditional Covenant. Two Covenants, one abſolute, another conditional, are notions in Divinity I do not underſtand, and think them hardly reconcilable to truth, (if to ſenſe,) they are the canting language of thoſe that would ſupply Franciſcus de Sancta Clara's place, as to reconciling us and Arminians, nians, and are no better then Arminianism minced for the better digestion. But those words of Mr. B. that God sent his son Jesus to turn every one of them from their iniquities, Acts 3. last, in the sense he can prove (as he thinks) that conditionally this deliverance was for each individual person, do import that he holds that Christ was sent not onely for universal redemption conditionally, but also for universal conversion conditionally. Which if true, then Christ blesseth all by turning every one from his iniquity, Acts 3.26. conditionally; and then unless he can assign another condition than the act of a mans free will, he must hold universal grace of conversion, and conversion by Christs blessing conditional upon the concurrence of mans free-will, which is indeed the venome of Arminianism. Which if Mr. B. hold (as his words import) I may well say he stands on pitifull ground, a very quagmire, however men judge of my proof from Gal. 4. 1. &c. of the repeal of the pretended ordinance of infants Church-membership.

Mr. B. proceeds. But one Text more was named, and that is my Text, Matth. 28. 19, 20. Go disciple all nations, &c. Is not this brave proving the repeal before mentioned? what saith this Text to any such matter?

Answ. The first question hath so much insolent folly, that I think fit to give no answer to it. To the second I say, 1. This Text compared with Mark 16.15. proves, that Christ appointed after his resurrection, that his Church should be gathered in all nations by preaching the Gospel, and baptizing, and no otherwise; and consequently, the Church not gathered this way is not agreeable to Christs institution. The forepart of the antecedent is plain; For as Paræus rightly paraphraseth the words, Com. in Mat. 28. 19. Christs words have this sense, Make to me Disciples, gather to me a Church among all nations by your preaching bringing them to the faith of the Gospel. And Piscat. observ. Matth. 28. 19. By the coherence of the sentences it is signified, first by the doctrine of the Gospel the nations were to be brought into the Church, then to be baptized when they should enter into the Church and profess the faith. And that neither the institution of Christ, nor practise of the N. T. allows any other way of gathering the Church, is proved in the 2d. Part of this Review, sect. 5. &c. 2. I say this Text excludes infants from being baptized, as is proved in the same place, and consequently from being visible members of the Christian Church. The antecedent is confirmed from Mr. Bs words, Plain Scrip. proof, &c. against Mr. Bed. pag. 299, 300. where he proves from Mat. 28. 19. Mark 16. 16. &c. That in the institution and every example of Baptism through all the Bible, the first grace is pre-requisite as a condition, which he makes to be faith included in the term [Disciple.] The consequence is also proved from Mr. Bs. assertion, Plain Scrip. proof, &c. Par. 1. ch. 5. pag. 24, 25. and elsewhere, proved from Mat. 28. 19. All visible Church members are to be baptized. Whence I infer, All visible members of the Christian Church are to be baptized; No infant is to be baptized. Therefore no infant is a visible member of the Christian Church. Now if no infants are now visible members of the Christian Church, and the Church which is gathered thered without making Disciples by preaching the Gospel first to them, and then baptizing them, is not agreeable to Christs institution, then Christ hath repealed the gift and ordinance of visible Church membership of infants. I expect now some brave answer from Mr. B. to these plain arguments without any bravery. But what do I meet with.

" Nay, saith he, I am confident the contrary will be proved from " this Text also: For if it be nations that must be discipled and bap- " tized, certainly all infants can never be excluded, but must needs " some of them at least be included. I do not believe that men were " to be made Disciples by force; nor that all were Disciples when the " King or greater part were so: But that the Apostles commission was to " disciple nations; this is their work which they should endeavour to " accomplish: and therefore this was a thing both possible and desira- " ble: therefore when the parents are by teaching made Disciples, the " children are thereby discipled also: As if a woman escape drowning, " the child in her body escapes thereby; yet this is not by any natural " cause, but by force of Gods grant or Covenant.

Answ. Though Mr. Bs. confidence, and his fooliſh admirations and exclamations have taken much with the ſhallow and heedleſs both Miniſters and people of this age, yet they appear ridiculous to me. His ſpeeches in this place are but dictates, that if nations be to be diſcipled, infants cannot be excluded; that becauſe they were to endeavour the diſcipling all nations, therefore infants; that when the parents are by teaching made Diſciples, the children are diſcipled alſo: all which I deny, and have demonſtrated to be falſe ſo fully in the 2d. Part of this Review, ſect. 5. &c. that I ſhall as ſoon expect the ſnow be proved black, as any of them proved by Mr. B. or any other. His ſimilitude is frivolous, no child being included in the parent in reſpect of diſcipling, as the child in the womb is in reſpect of drowning. If it were, then alſo in reſpect of baptizing, ſo that if the mother with child be baptized, the child alſo is baptized as wel as diſcipled, and then baptiſm of ſuch infants after would be rebaptization. Such a grant or Covenant, by force of which infants are made Diſciples is a meer figment. If infants were made Diſciples by a Covenant, it muſt be of God to them, wherein he promiſeth it to them upon their parents bei g diſcipled; and if ſo, then they are diſcipled ere they be born, and conſequently not made Diſciples by the Apoſtles, and ſo no part of the nation to be diſcipled by them, nor they to endeavour their diſcipling unleſs they ſhould actum agere, do what is already done; whence it will follow, that they had no commiſſion to diſciple or baptize infants, for they had no commiſſion to diſciple by Gods Covenant, or to baptize ſuch Diſciples, but thoſe who were made by their preaching Diſciples; and as Mr. Collings ſaith truly in his Provoc. provoc. ch. 5. pag. 54. The Apoſtles notwithſtanding that precept, Matth. 28. 19, 20. did not think themſelves obliged to baptize any, but ſuch as believed and confeſſed their ſins Mr. B. adds.

" When all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron were turned to the Lord, the whole cities, infants and all, were diſcipled.

Anſw.

Answ. Though our last translation read Acts 9. 35. And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, and turned to the Lord; yet in the Greek, and agreeably the vulgar, Beza, &c. And all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron saw him, who turned to the Lord; which seems to import, that all they who turned to the Lord saw him, and so [they that saw him] is limited by [them turned to the Lord,] which is not to be said of infants. But were the reading retained as it is in our last translation, yet it is a grosse conceit of Mr. B. to apply this to infants. For it is said of these, 1. That they saw Æneas cure. 2. That they were converted to the Lord. 3. That by seeing the cure of Æneas they were moved to turn to the Lord, as Piscator in his Scholie saith, to wit, moved by the miraculous healing of Æneas by Peter. Now to affirm these things of infants, is in my apprehension (however it be in Mr. Bs.) against common sense. Besides me thinks Mr. B. should not be ignorant that frequently in the Scripture such expressions wherein the word [all] is used, are limited to a greater part, and those of years the matter so requiring it, as Matth. 2. 3. & 3. 5. Acts 8 10, &c. Mr. B. adds.

How can Christ bid them, Go and disciple all Nations, if infants and so all the Nation are utterly uncapable of being disciples? or how will Mr. T. expound the word all nations?

Answ. Had Mr. B. heeded the words of the 13. Section of the first part of my Examen, or the 14th. section of the Postscript to my Apology in answer to Mr. Bl. he might have found answer to these questions. But I conceive upon very probable signes Mr. B. never studied my writings, but lightly read them, and I finde he hath dealt with me in like manner concerning my answers in the dispute at Bewdley, and such passages as he excepts against which fell from me in private conference, and that this is the reason of these and many more unnecessary questions he puts me to answer. But if the Reader please to read the 2d. part of this Review sect. 5, &c. he may see a full answer to these questions, the sum whereof is this; that Christ bids them Go, and by preaching the Gospel Mark. 16. 15. make disciples of or out of all nations, and then baptize them, who by believing the Gospel became disciples, Mark. 16. 16. which may and must be understood with exclusion of infants, as when he bids them preach the Gospel to every creature Mark. 16. 15. & Col 1. 23. it was preached to every creature under heaven, yet no infant meant. And by way of retortion, I do seriously ask Mr. B. how he will expound the word all nations? and how Christ can bid them disciple infants without making Christ a fool and a tyrant in commanding that which is ridiculous and impossible?

Mr. B saith of me further. He oft saith, It is here one and there one out of a city or nation that God will call: I shall say more to the shame of this speech afterwards: yet let me say this much at present. If it bee but some few, or here and there one, yea or but the most that Christ commandeth to disciple, then we must endeavour to make but those few or most disciples (for our endeavour must not go beyond our command and commission) But this is most horrid Doctrine, and notoriously false, [that Apostles and Ministers ought not to endeavour the discipling of all, but of some,] (For Paul oft profeßeth his longing and endeavour to the contrary:) therefore it is an falſe that the command is not for the diſcipling all.

Anſw. What Mr. B. hath ſaid to the ſhame of my ſpeech plain Scripture proof, &c. pag. 279, 280. (which is I think the place I ſee means) is to the ſhame of ſo impudent an affronting of plain Scripture proof retelled in my Preeurſor ſect. 22. which ſhame is not at all covered by his reply in his præſtinis morator ſect. 22. in which he doth not at all anſwer my proof out of Scripture for my ſpeech, but onely ſeeks to acquit himſelf from that which I charge him with as not rightly ſetting down my words, which is his frequent fault. Two parts of my ſpeech he excepts againſt, 1. that God will not call nor ever did, a whole nation ſo as that every individual ſhould be within the viſible Church. Againſt this he refers to his Addition pag. 339. 340. and there he turns me over to Mr. Hudſon, and refers me to the anſwering of him when I anſwer the 20th. Chapter of the firſt part of his plain Script. &c. But many of the texts, and conſequently the reſt are ſhewed to bee impertinently alledged, in the 2d. part of this Review ſect. 9. (where pag. 129. I was miſtaken in what I ſaid, I know not what is in Mr. Bs. addition pag. 339, 340. thinking then it had been ſome addition which was not in his firſt edition, which now I finde otherwiſe) and therefore if I ſay no more of that, the Reader will not want an anſwer to the allegations in his addition pag. 339, 340. 2. He excepts againſt what he conceives I ſay [that Apoſtles and Miniſters ought not to endeavour the diſcipling of all, but of ſome] which he terms horrid doctrine and notoriouſly falſe. On the other ſide if my meaning be rightly underſtood, to wit, of perſons that have not the uſe of reaſon, ſuch as infants, natural fools, &c. I aver the contrary doctrine to be horrid and notoriouſly falſe, for the reaſons fore-given. If he charge me with it, that becauſe I ſay God will not call a whole nation (which I mean of effectuall call alluding to 1 Cor. 1. 26, 27, &c.) therefore I mean that we ſhould endeavour to diſciple none but ſuch, his charge is but a calumny. No words of mine either in pulpit writing, or private ſpeech, tended to ſuch a ſenſe. As for what he ſaith, Paul oft profeſſeth his longing endeavour to the contrary, if he mean contrary to my aſſertion, it is moſt falſe. He no where profeſſeth his longing and endeavour to diſciple the whole of a nation, even the infants. The profeſſion he makes Philip. 1. 8. is the fulleſt and likelieſt to be meant by Mr. B. that comes to my thoughts, which it were ridiculous to apply to infants, [they all] being the ſame to whom he wrote entituled, Saints in Chriſt v. 1. with whom he had fellowſhip in the Goſpel v. 5. in whom God had begun a good work v. 6. who in his bonds and in the defence and confirmation of the Goſpel were partakers of his grace v. 7. whoſe love he mentions v. 9.

Thus much for the proof of which Mr. B. was confident. To his words, If this [my alleaging Gal. 4. 1, &c. Matth. 28. 19. as before] be not to feign God to ſay what we would have him; yea contrary to what he doth ſay, then I am quite miſtaken. I anſwer, I grant it, and add that I do not call to minde that ever I found a man of ſo much fame, and confidence, ſo fouly miſtaken as Mr. B. is in this point. I proceed as faſt as I can after Mr. B. who hath made the way foul by his ſcribling.

SECT.

SECT. LI.

The arguments from the altering of the Jewish Church constitution and call, the ceasing of the High Priest, &c. to prove Infants now no visible Church-members, are made good against Mr. Bs. 5th. Ch. plain, &c. part. 1.

But let us hear, saith he, whether his arguments be any clearer then these texts for him. The sum of all his arguments, that I can hear, is this: If the Church constitution whereof they were members be taken down, then their membership is taken down: but the Church &c. therefore &c. To prove the antecedent this is added: If their Church call be altered, then their Church constitution is altered: but their Church call is altered, therefore, &c. To prove the minor, he shews the different calls then and now. 1. Then they were called by Moses or Abraham, the Magistrate; but now by Ministers. 2. Then all the nation was called in one day, even servants and all; but now God cals here one and there one. Besides he shews, that the Temple Priesthood, sacrifices are taken down, and therefore the Church constitution. This is the very strength of all that Mr. T. hath to say, to prove the repeal of Gods merciful Ordinance of infants Church membership. And I cannot chuse but say, They are silly souls, and tractable to novelty, and easily seduced from the truth of God, and far from the stability of judicious tender conscienc't Christians, who will be drawn by such misty, cloudy arguing, without any Scripture proof; yea and against so much Scripture.

Answ. And I cannot chuse but say that Mr. Bs. dealing is disingenuous and Sophistical, in sore-stalling Readers by such censures, which are the mere evaporations of his own ignorance and confidence, and I might add arrogance. But to the argument. I deny that this is the very strength of all that I have to say to prove the repeal, or that it is cloudy, misty arguing, against any Scripture, But from it. The argument is taken from the notation of the word Church, put into the definition of it by the generality of Divines, yea by Mr. B. himself't plain Script. proof, &c. pag 71, 82, that the Greek word for Church is from calling out, and that the Church is a people or a society of persons called out of the world. Whence it follows, that they who are not called out of the world are not of the Church, they that have not an outward call, are not of the visible Church: But infants have not the outward call of the Christian Church, therefore are not visible members in the Christian Church. The minor is proved from the proper call of the Christian Church, which is proved negatively not to be as the Jewish Church, 1. by authority, 2. of a whole people together. 2. affirmatively by assigning 1. the onely way of outward call in the Christian Church to be by preaching the Gospel, 2. that this call is of single persons severed in their habitations, relations, &c. The former is proved by story. Two remarkable outward calls there were of the Church of Israel, one by Abraham, and that was Gen. 17. (perhaps there was some other, but no other occurs to me) and that was according to Gods direction rection by authority, taking in all his house together, not by preaching as the Apostles did. The other of Moses Exod. 19 &c. which was done in like manner. The later is proved by institution and practise to be seen in these and many more Scriptures, Ephes 4. 11, 12, &c. Acts 2. 41. 47. Act. 8. 12, &c. But of this which is the onely outward churchcal infants are not the subjects, therefore neither of visible churchmembership, which is always this way and no other in the Christian Churches. This is further confirmed from those Scriptures which deny the new birth necessary to admission into the Christian Church to be by humane generation (which it must bee if it bee as the Jewish churchmembership was) as Joh. 1. 13. and ascribe it even in Jews the n. Iv s to the word Jam. 1. 18. 1 Pet. 1. 23. It is further confirmed in that the distinction of the Church visible and invisible, is from their different calling. They are not of the invisible who are not inwardly called, they are not of the visible who have not the outward call. Primum illud quod acta Ecclesiam constituit, est vocatio: unde etiam & nomen suum accipit & definitionem. Hudson vindic. p. 67. external vocation and submission gave right in foro Ecclesiæ to be admitted members of the Church. Ecclesia enim est cœtus hominum vocatorum 1 Cor. 1. 24. cum 10. 32. Ames Medul Th. l. 1. c. 31. §. 6. 7. But infants have not the outward call, they are not brought into the Church by the word. Therefore they are not visible Church-members.

What saith Mr. B. now? 1 You must distinguish between the particular Church of the Jews, and the universal visible Church. And here I lay down these three propositions. 1. The Jews Church was not the whole universal visible Church that God had then in the world. And this he alleageth as my opinion with others and confirms it by sundry arguments.

Answ. Though the Assembly at westminster say Confess. of faith ch. 25. art. 2. The visible Church, which is also Catholick or universal under the Gospel (not confined to one nation, as before under the law) consists, &c. yet I agree with Mr. B in his proposition though not in all his proofs. For the text Gen. 18. 19. proves not the continuance of the Church in any of Abrahams posteri y but those by Isaac, nor do, the instances of Bethuel, Hiram, the Ninivites, Candace Queen of the Ethiopians, evince a Church of God distinct from the Jewish.

His 2d. proposition is, if the Jewish Church had been the whole visible Church, yet it would have been considerable in both respects; both as the Jewish Church and as the universal, which I let pass. His third is.

There is no member of any particular Church, who is not also a member of the universal Church: Therefore infants were members of the universal visible Church as well as of the Jews particular Church; so that if it could be proved that their membership in that particular Church is overthrown, yet that is nothing to prove that they have lost their standing in the universal Church. But this I shall fullier improve and vindicate hereafter.

Answ. It is much to prove they have lost their standing in the universal, if they had no standing in the universal distinct from that in the particular: as an excommunicate, Apostate, &c. hath lost his standing in the universal visible Church, if he have no standing therein distinct from from that in the particular Church, which he hath loſt. And this was the caſe of infants, they had no ſtanding in the univerſal diſtinct from that which they had in the Jewiſh Church; and therefore it, that particular Church-ſtate or frame be diſſolved in which alone infants are reckoned as members, (as it is,) and another erected in which they are not reckoned, infants are not any longer to be reckoned as viſible Church-members. And his I ſhall make good when I come to Mr. Bs. fuller improvement of this.

2. Saith Mr. B. You muſt diſtinguiſh between the eſſentials, and ſome accidentals of the Jewiſh Church: The Prieſthood, Temple, Sacrifice, &c. were meerly accidental, and might be repealed without the repeal of the eſſentials, or the ordinance eſtabliſhing the Church it ſelf.

Anſw. I grant the diſtinction, but find it of no uſe, till it be ſhewed what are the eſſentials, and what not; what the ordinance is that eſtabliſhed that Church, that it is of the eſſentials of that Church, that infants be viſible members is of the eſſentials of that Church: which to aſſert were all one as to ſay, the Jewiſh Church had been no Church viſible without infants, which I take to be abſurd.

3. Saith Mr. B. "You muſt diſtinguiſh between their Church conſi-
"dered in it ſelf, and conſidered comparatively as to others. The Jews "were a peculiar people and Church of God, no other had the like "priviledges. Now if they had believed, they ſhould have kept all their "priviledges abſolutely conſidered: (except it be a loſing them to "change them for greater.) But comparatively conſidered, they ſhould
"not have kept ſome relative priviledges: For they ſhould no longer "have been a ſingular peculiar people, ſeeing others ſhould have en"joyed as great priviledges as they; yet this would have been without "any loſs of theirs, much more without wholly unchurching them or "their children. When a man hath but one ſon, he hath the priviledge
"of being his Fathers onely Son: But when his father hath many "more, he hath loſt that priviledge; and yet is not therefore turned "out of the Family; nay, the adding of more Brethren in our caſe, is "an increaſe of the happineſs of each particular: for this is the very "caſe of the Jews. The adding of the Gentiles would have made the "Jews no more to be ſo peculiar as to be ſingular in their priviledges;
"and yet they ſhould have enjoyed never the leſs. Therefore mark it,
"the Scripture ſpeaking of taking in the Gentiles, it expreſſeth it as
"by taking down the partition wall, and making of both one Church;
"but it ſpeaks not of unchurching the Jews firſt, and their children, or "bereaving them of their priviledges. And when in his Viſion Peter
"was taught the Doctrine of the Gentiles reception into the Church, "Acts 10. it was not by making the Jews unclean, but by cleanſing the "Gentiles to be clean as the Jews. So that if the Jews would have belie"ved, they ſhould have loſt only their comparative priviledges conſiſt-
"ing in the ſingularity of their enjoyments, which is no loſs to them, to "have the Gentiles enjoy them as well as they; but their priviledges in "themſelves conſidered, would not have been diminiſhed, but ſome
"leſſer turned into greater: And therefore certainly God would never have turned their children all out of the visible Church.

Answ. The distinction is of the Jewish Church considered in it self, and comparatively as to others; but the application is (as if Mr. B. had forgotten his distinction) of their privileges considered absolutely, and comparative, and then he saith if the Jews had believed, they had lost onely their comparative priviledges, not in themselves considered. Concerning which conceits, it had been requisit, if he would be understood, that either he should have given a catalogue of each sort of privileges, or such a description of them as whereby we might understand which are of the one sort, which of the other. My opinion is, that had the Jews believed, that is every individual Jew of age, or the greatest part had received the Gospel, they should have enjoyed with the Gentiles all the priviledges of the Covenant of saving graces; the Jewish people should have enjoyed their possessions in their own Land, which me thinks Christs words import, Luke 19. 41, 42, 43. But deny that they should have this as a priviledge to them, that their children should be accounted visible members of the Christian Churches. For Gods purpose was to erect a Church universal uniformly by preaching the Gospel, and not by birth; and it appeared plainly by the practise of John Baptist, Christ and his Apostles, who never took in any believing parents infant to Baptism and the Christian Church, nor admitted any Jew without his own personal profession of Faith in Christ. Nor is the contrary proved by Ephes. 2. 14. but that very thing I assert. For the taking down the partition wall was by taking away the Jewish rites, and Church state, that none could be joyned to them without conformity to the Law, now one Church is made of both by faith through the Gospel, Ephes. 3. 6. And in like manner when Peter took in Cornelius, Acts 10. he declared Gods mind in his Vision, v. 35. that in every Nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him; but he doth not say that every one of their infant children are taken in to the Church, nor did he any act whereby to shew that to be Gods mind. Nor are Mr. Bs. observations of any force, for they suppose that if the Church state of the Jews were altered, Paul would have spoken of their unchurching, Ephes. 2. 14. and Peter, Acts 6. of their making unclean, which implies as if there were no other way then these to alter their Church-state, and to leave the infants out of the visible Church Christian; whereas I have often shewed the contrary, that it was done by taking in onely to baptism believers, releasing from the burden of Circumcision and the Law, which might have been though all the Jews of age had been believers.

14. Saith Mr. B. So when we call the Jews [a National Church] and when Mr. T. saith God took the whole Nation to be his Church, it may be meant either in regard of the appropriation and restriction to that Nation onely, as if God had not called any other whole Nation: and so it may be true, that the Jews onely were a National Church (though yet it is doubtfull, as what is said of Melchizedek before sheweth:) and also in regard of their National and Church unity (which yet is the excellency and strength of all other Churches;) or else by a National Church may be meant, as if all were Church members that were of that Nation, and no more were required to the being a Church member but to be of that Nation: And thus I perceive it is by many understood. But this is notoriously false.

Answ. It is in this last sense I mean it, and I think it manifestly true with these explications. 1. That they were of that Nation by birth property, or proselytism. 2. That they were Church-members while they continued to be of that Nation any of these way. 3. That they were Church-members with some disparance or inequality of privileges. Let's view Mr Bs. proofs.

For it was then as well as now, the Covenant of God (wherein he took them for his peculiar people, and they took him for their onely God, the parents engaging for themselves and their children) which made them members of the Church. For 1. No aged person, no not servants, much less ordinary proselites were members, except they entred the Covenant; though they are commanded to circumcise all in their house, yet it is supposed, that by their interest and authority, they caused them first to enter the Covenant: Therefore they were to circumcise the servants bought with money, as being absolutely their own, whom they had most interest in; but not the hired servants, whom they had no such authority over (except they became proselytes voluntarily)

Answ. A mutual Covenant, such as that at Mount Sinai, I deny not to have made the people of Israel the Church of God, and consequently the infants then born visible Church-members. But I deny that it was then by reason of the parents engaging for themselves and their children, sith it appears plainly by Exod. 19.7,8. & 24.3. that the Elders of the people onely engaged for the whole Nation. And the same I conceive of the Covenant Deut. 29.10,11,12. The Covenant Gen. 17. if it were mutual, it doth not appear that any other then Abraham himself engaged for his house. Nor do I deny such a mutual Covenant, if the Lord should enter into it, or declare his mind concerning it, would make a Nation, and consequently infants Church members. But according to the constitution of the Christian visible Church I deny God makes any such Covenant or declares his mind that by such Covenant he will gather his Church. Yet were it yeelded that the Covenant made them members of the Church, the Propositions are true nevertheless with my explications, That all were Church-members that were of that Nation, and no more is required to the being a Church-member but to be of that Nation. And to what he alledgeth, I acknowledge that ordinary Proselytes at first admission were not members without their Covenant engaging them and theirs in their power to the observance of the Law of Moses, and the same reason I conceive of hired servants, and that thereby they became of that Nation, or as the Jewish Doctors say were regenerated, and lost their former kindred, and became Jews. But it was not enough to make them of that Church, though they covenanted or professed to take Jehovah for their onely God, except they took on them to observe Moses Law. Therefore Cornelius was no visible member of the Jewish Church, though he feared God with all his house, but was shunned by them, Acts 10.28. & 11.3. as an unclean clean, uncircumciſed perſon of another Nation. Nor do I find any proof of that which Mr B. ſuppoſeth, that all aged perſons, as ſervants bought were before they were circumciſed cauſed by their Maſters intereſt and authority to enter the Covenant firſt. But this doth no whit overthrow the Poſitions, That all were Church-members that were of that Nation, and that no more was required to the being a Church-member but to be of that Nation. Nor is there any more force in what Mr. B. adds. 2. And though they were taken into the Church in infancy yet if they afterward forſook or renounced the Covenant, they were to be cut off from the Church, yea to be put to death. 3. And in many caſes their children were to be put to death with them. And therefore their Church was not ſo National as that any in the Nation ſhould be a member of it who forſook the Covenant. Which I grant: For then they ceaſed to be of that Nation, that is in that policy, or Commonwealth de jure at leaſt, if not de facto. What he adds, Indeed God choſe the ſeed of Abraham in a ſpecial manner? but not to be Church-members immediately, but firſt to enter into his Covenant, and take him for their God, and ſo to be Church members, is not true. For immediately upon their birth, the ſeed of Abraham were Church-members viſible, though neither they nor their parents, or any other entred into Covenant for them: and if this ſpeech of Mr. B. were true, neither had Jews infants been viſible Church members, and ſo not to be circumciſed (contrary to the command) nor according to Mr. Bs. and other Pædobaptiſts principles our infants viſible Church-members, nor to be baptized without ſuch entring into Covenant going before, which will nullifie the infant Baptiſm of many, and overthrow the argument from the Covenant, Gen 17. 7. produced as ſufficient for infant Baptiſm by moſt Pædobaptiſts without any other entring the Covenant.

5. Saith Mr. B. You muſt diſtinguiſh betwixt breaking off that particular individual Church or ſome members of it, and the repealing or breaking off the ſpecies or eſſential nature of the Church.

Anſw. The breaking off the particular individual Church of the Jews is a term I meet with Rom. 11. 20. But the term of repealing or breaking off the ſpecies or eſſential nature of the Church is a new term not uſed that I know of any where, but, if I may uſe Dr. Kendals phraſe, in the Schola illuſtris of Kederminſter. A repeal of a Law is an obvious word; but this term of repealing of the ſpecies or eſſential nature of the Church is like the ſpeech of a man doting. I have heretofore learned that the eſſences of things are invariable, eternal, definitions are of eternal verity, conformable to the Idea in Gods mind, though exiſtences be mutable: and therefore to expect a proof of a repeal or breaking off the ſpecies or eſſential nature of the Church, is to expect a proof of an impoſſibility.

6. Saith Mr. B. "And ſo you muſt diſtinguiſh between the repeal"ing of the Law or grant upon which the very ſpecies or nature of the "Church is grounded; and the execution of the threatning of Law "upon particular perſons or Churches offending. The repeal of the "Law or ordinance doth take away all right to the mercy granted by

"that Law or ordinance even the remote conditional right, and that "from all men, one as well as another to whom that Law gave that "right. But the punative execution of the threatening doth onely take "away the absolute right to the mercy and the right in it, and that "from none but the particular offenders. This punitive execution of "the Law (or the curse of the Covenant, as it is called Deut. 29. 20, "21.) is so far from being a repeal of the Law, that it certainly pro-"veth it is not repealed: For a repealed Law is of no force, and so "cannot be executed. And upon these two last distinctions, I add this "for application of them: The individual Jewish Church is (for the "most part) broke off, and so they that are so broke off are now no "Church, and consequently have lost their priviledges: But the Law "or Covenant on which the species or essential form of their Church "(and many of its accidents) was grounded, is not changed or repea-"led. So the Church of Smyrna, Thyatira, Laodicea, and the rest of "Asia (for the most part) are now unchurched: But this is but by a pu-"nitive execution of the Law for their sin, and no change in the Law, "or in the nature of the Church; And so it is with the Jews also in "their unchurching. Though they are cast off, yet the Law and Na-"ture of Churches is still the same; and onely the Laws about cere-"monial worship, and some other accidents of the Church are repeal-"ed. So that the casting off of them and their children, is no proof "that the whole species of infants is cast out of the Church vi-"sible.

Answ. The nature, species, essential form of the Church is that which is expresst in the definition of it, in which Mr. B. himself pag. 82. saith, certainly all Divines are agreed, that it is a society of persons separated from the world, to God, or called out of the world, &c. now a law on which this might be said to be grounded liable to repeal is in my apprehension a dream: Laws repealeable determine not of essences, but things to be existent, to wit, particular actions to bee done or omitted. Nor do I conceive that the essential form of the Church is grounded upon a Covenant. For though God separate or call a people to himself by a Covenant single or mutual, and so may bee of the existence of a Church, yet if God do separate or call by authority, preaching, power, or any other way, without a Covenant, they will have the essence of a Church. The Jewish Church I never conceived to be a species, but an individual, and of it I grant that it might be and was dissolved without the change of the nature, species or essential form of the Church, unto which the having of infants visible Church-members did not belong. For if so, without infants and that as visible Church-members it could not have been a Church. What the priviledges Jewish infants had as visible Church-members except preservation, as part of that people, such inheritance, and other benefits in part which their parents had, which they must needs lose with their parents breaking off, I do not well understand: Nor do I know any priviledge, which the believing Jews infants did lose by being left out of the Christian Church visible, which they should have had if they had been taken in. For the priviledges of the Jewish infants by being visible Church-members, were, as I conceive, to cease upon the comming of Christ, and the erection of the Christian Church, not by any punitive execution of a Law, but a wise dispensation of God, as he conceived fittest for his own glory, and the enlarging of the Kingdome of his Son. The species, as Mr. B. speaks, that is, the whole order, rank, series or sort of men in infancy was never in the visible Church, but onely the infants of the Jewish Nation. Nor were they cast out of the Church visible by any judiciary sentence, but by altering the Church-state from Jewish into Christian as God thought best.

7. Saith Mr. B. Again, you must distinguish betwixt breaking off primarily and morally onely by Covenant breaking and merit, (as an adulterous woman doth break the marriage bond, and so cast out her self;) or else breaking off in a following act by punishment (both morally and physically) as a man that putteth away his adulterous wife:) In the former sence all the Jews that were unchurched did unchurch themselves and their children; and God onely unchurched them in the later sence. And therefore the children of believing Jews (who did not adulterously violate the Covenant) were never unchurched; God casteth out none but those that first cast out themselves.

Answ. If this last speech were true, absolute Reprobation should be an errour. But perhaps he means it of casting out by judiciary sentence, and so I grant it true of persons of age. But in the present business, the leaving out infants out of the visible Church was neither by any sinfull voluntary dissertion or transgression of Gods Law, morally deserving it; nor by any act of judiciary sentence legally, or punitive act executing or physically ejecting: But by a free act of his Soveraignty, altering the Church-state from a more carnal to a more spiritual, without any detriment to believers or their children.

Mr. B. applies his distinctions thus, Let us now review Mr. Ts. arguments. 1. He saith, their Church constitution is taken down; and therefore their membership. To which I answer: 1. By [constitution] is meant either the essential nature, or some ceremonial accident: And by [taking down] is meant either [by repealing the Law, which takes down the whole species,] or [by meer punitive execution taking down that individual Church:] In the first sence of [constitution and taking down] I utterly deny the Antecedent, and may stay long enough I perceive before he prove it. 2. By [their membership] either he means the individual infants of unbelievers, unchurched Jews (which I grant,) or else the whole species of infants (which I deny.) 3. Besides, the argument concludeth not for what he should bring it: That which it should conclude, is [that the mercifull gift and ordinance of God, that some infants should be Church-members is repealed:] This is another thing from what he concludeth.

Answ. 1. By [constitution] I neither mean the essential nature, nor some ceremonial accident, but the composing of the integral parts which make up a Church an entire whole or totum integrale. I do not find by such notes as I have of the Dispute at Bewdley, January 1. 1649.

that I uſed the term of [taking down,] but rather the term [altered,] which even Mr. Bs. ſetting down my argument ſhews to have been the term I uſed. And this alteration I conceive was made neither by repealing the Law which takes down the whole ſpecies, nor by meer punitive execution taking down that individual Church; but by a free act of his Soveraignty as Rector or Lord, who may at his pleaſure alter the frame of his Church as he pleaſeth: As when a Lord or Governour one while takes into his houſe men, and their wives, and children, another while onely ſingle men, he neither perhaps repeals a Law which made the whole ſpecies members of his houſe, nor puniſheth the individual perſons that were in his houſe, but becauſe it likes him better to have his houſe onely of ſtrong able men, alters the ſtate of his houſe in reſpect of the members; ſo it is in this caſe. 2. By [their Church-membership] I mean not either the individual infants of unbelievers, unchurched Jews, nor the whole ſpecies of infants; but the individual infants of the Jewiſh Church members, whether believing or unbelieving. 3. If I conclude (as I did) that the Church-membership of infants was altered in the viſible Church Chriſtian from what it was in the viſible Church Jewiſh, I prove the pretended gift and ordinance of God that ſome infants ſhould be Church-members is repealed. Let's view his anſwer to my proof.

" He proveth, ſaith Mr. B. that [their Church conſtitution is altered, becauſe their Church call is altered.] To which I anſwer, 1. Here is ſtill nothing but the darkneſs of ambiguity and troubled waters to fiſh in. As we know not what he means by [conſtitution] as is ſaid before; ſo who knows what he meaneth by [their Church call?] Is it meant firſt of Gods Law or Covenant enacting, making, and conſtituting them a Church? 2. And, if ſo, then is it meant of the eſſential parts of that Covenant or Law giving them the eſſence of a Church [I will be to thee a God, and thou ſhalt be to me a people, Deut.29.11,12.] 3. Or is it meant of the leſſer additional parts of the Law or Covenant giving them ſome accidentals of their Church, as the land of Canaan, the Prieſthood, the Sacrifice, &c. 4. Or is it meant of Gods immediate call from heaven to Abraham or any others to bring them into the Covenant? 5. And if ſo, whether of Abraham onely? or Moſes onely? or both? or whether Aaron and all other be excluded or not? And what he means by a Church call to infants that cannot underſtand, I know not; except by a call he meaneth circumciſing them? And 6. whether he mean that call by which particularly they were at firſt made a Church? or that alſo by which in every generation their poſterity were ſo made, or entred members? 7. And if ſo, whether that which was proper to the Jews poſterity? or that which was proper to converted proſelyted members? or ſome call common to both? and what that was? when I can poſſibly underſtand which of all theſe calls he means that is altered, then it may be worth labour to anſwer him.

Anſw. The ſpeeches are inept of the eſſential parts of the Covenant and the accidental, the eſſential parts of that Covenant or Law, giving them the eſſence of a Church, [I will be to thee a God, and thou ſhalt be to me a people, Deut.29.11,12. Which ſuppoſe either God could not make a Covenant without that promiſe, or that a Church could not be without that promiſe, or that Covenant might be without the promiſe of the land of Canaan, which was as eſſential to that Covenant as the other, they being both but integral parts, of which each is eſſential to the integrity of the whole. And for the eſſence of a Church, which conſiſts in the aſſociation, or union of the members, it is not given by a Covenant of God, promiſing what he will be to them, and they to him for the future, (for that aſſures them onely of continuance, doth not give their preſent eſſence.) but by ſuch tranſeunt fact as whereby he ſeparates them from others, and unites or incorporates them together, which I call, as uſually Divines do, the Church call; agreeably to the Scripture, Rom 9.24,25,26. 1 Cor. 1.2,24 &c. Which Church call is either inward by his Spirit, and is ſtill the ſame; or outward, and was, though by various acts of his providence, yet moſt manifeſtly by the authority of Abraham and Moſes, not by meer perſwaſion and begetting of faith, as in the Chriſtian Church, when the preachers of the Goſpel called the Chriſtian Church: But the authority and power of Rulers, who did as well by coercive power as by perſwaſive words, draw all in the compaſs of their juriſdiction into a policy or Commonwealth, which was called the congregation or Church of Iſrael, in which the infants were included, and by vertue of the ſettlement by Abraham and Moſes it ſo continued to the time of the diſſolution. This Mr. B. might have underſtood eaſily to be my meaning, by my inſtances which he ſets down, that the way, means, or manner of outward Church call into the Chriſtian viſible Church is altered from what it was in the Jewiſh: For the Chriſtian Church outward call was onely according to inſtitution and primitive practiſe by the preaching the Goſpel to each member of the viſible Church Chriſtian, and by that means perſwading perſons to receive Chriſt, and not by any coercive power of Rulers, whereas the Jewiſh was otherwiſe. Mr. B. proceeds.

"In the mean time briefly thus I anſwer. 1. The additional leſſer parts "of the Covenant giving them the ceremonial accidents of their Church "is ceaſed, and ſo are the ceremonies built thereon. 2. The Eſſential "part of the Law or Covenant is not ceaſed; God yet offers the Jews "to be their God, and them to be his people. If they heartily conſent it "may be done, onely the World is taken into this Covenant with them, "and neither Jew nor Gentile excluded, that exclude not themſelves. "3. Gods immediate call of Abraham and Moſes did quickly ceaſe, "when yet the Church ceaſed not. 4. And for the Miniſterial call, 1. "That which was by the perſon of Abraham and Moſes numerically did "ceaſe when their act was performed; yet the effect ceaſed not: Nor "did the Jews ceaſe being a Church when Abraham and Moſes were "dead and gone. 2. If he mean it of that ſpecies or ſort of Miniſterial call, then what ſort is that? And indeed for ought I can "poſſibly learn by his ſpeeches, this is that he drives at: [God "then called by Magiſtrates, but now by Miniſters: And ſecondly, "then he called all the Nation in one day, but now he calls here one and "there one.]

Anſw.

Answ. The Reader may hence easily perceive, that Mr. B. might have understood, or rather did understand me well enough, that I meant it of the sort of Ministerial call, which he could learn by my speeches, that drive at it. But whether he heeded not my words at first when he wrote the questions, or whether he thought it best to make shew of not understanding, what he could not well answer, he hath chosen to pretend ambiguity where all was plain. But for what he saith, that the essential part of the Law or Covenant is not ceased, because God yet offers the Jews to be their God and them to be his people, he therein shews two mistakes: 1. That he makes that promise to be the essential part of the Covevnt, as if God could not make a Covenant without it, which is false, the Covenant *Gen.*9.9,10. with Phinehas, *Numb.*25.12, 13. with the Rechabites, *Jer.*35.19. being without it. 2. That the Covenant did not cease because God still offers, which implies either the Covenant to be all one with an offer, or that there is a Covenant when there is an offer, whereas there may be an offer yet no Covenant, and there may be a Covenant and yet no offer upon condition of consent, as Mr. B. means. But Mr. B. proceeds thus

Let us therefore see what strength lies in these words. 1. What if all this were true? is there the least colour for the consequence from hence? It is as good a consequence to say, That when God judged Israel by Debora a woman, which before was judged by men, that then Israel ceased to be a Commonwealth, or the constitution of the Commonwealth was altered. Or when the Government was changed from Judges to Kings, that then the essential constitution of the Commonwealth was changed, and so all infants lost their standing in the Commonwealth? what if the King inviting the guests to the marriage feast did first send one kind of Officer, and then another; first a man, and then a child, and then a woman, doth it follow that the feast is therefore altered? If first a man, and then a child, and then a woman be sent to call you to dinner, or to any imployment, or company, doth this change the nature of the company or imployment? what if a Bishop call one man to the Ministery, and a Presbytery another, and the people a third, is not the Ministerial work and office still the same? what if a Magistrate convert one man now, and a Minister another, and a woman a third, doth it follow that the Church or State that they are converted to is therefore not the same? what a powerfull argument is here for a man to venture upon to unchurch all the infants in the world? The efficient cause enters not the essence: or if it did, yet not every lest principal inferiour cause, such as the Messenger or Minister of our call is; If you had proved that God had repealed his Law which is the Charter of Church membership, then you had said something, else you say nothing to the purpose.

Answ. I neither attempted nor needed to prove the essence, nature, or essential constitution of the Jewish Church to be altered, and therefore if the different call I assign prove it not, yet what I was to prove, that the Church constitution in respect of the integral parts, and consequently of infants being included, is altered, might be, and indeed is firmly concluded from thence. For as Alsted. suppl. Chamier. de natura Eccl. ch. 2, §. 3. *The matter of the Church are men called, Mat.*20.16.

The

The form is the call it self, and that is either simple, that is, either external onely, or internal onely; or conjunct, that is, external and internal together. §. 7. The inward call is that in which God calls inwardly by his spirit: the outward, in which he calls outwardly by the ministery of the Church. And this is the call of the Church, which as it is the action of God calling, is in God himself; but as it is received of the Church, is it's form: Oras Amef med. Th. l. 1. c. 31. §. 6, 7. That first thing which in act constitutes the Church, is calling; whence also it receives it's name and definition. For the Church is a company of men called, 1 Cor. 1. 24. with 10. 32. And Cameron in his prælect. of the Church, in his definition of the Church, makes it to be a society of men called by the ministery of the word, and faith, called and believers are the same in Scripture. Mr. B. confes. of Faith, pag. 284. The Church is, Cœtus vocatorum vel fidelium. If then infants be not called by the word, which is the onely way of calling into the Christian visible Church, nor believers, then they are no part of the visible Church Christian, and consequently the Church constitution is altered, and the Law of visible church membership of infants (if there were such a Law) is repealed. And this argument is powerfull enough (if there were no more) to venture upon to unchurch (though I like not the expression) all the infants of the world, that is, to prove none of them to be members of the visible Church Christian. That which Mr. B. objects, doth not invalidate the consequence. For the consequence is not grounded on this onely, that the Magistrate called then, and the Minister now; then all together, now here one and there another: but on this, the Magistrate did it then by his authority, though without perswading one after another; but in the Christian Church the Minister doth it by preaching the word, teaching and perswading one after another, as the word takes, and not by any commanding power, or outward force, or legislative, or coercive vertue. And this is sufficient to alter the constitution of the Church in this respect; because if none be called but those that receive the word, and none be members of the Church but the called, and infants be uncapable thereof, they are not members of the visible Church Christian. And therefore Mr. B's. frivolous questions all run upon the mistake which out of negligence he runs into, as his own words shew, as if I had argued onely from the different persons, and their different office, and not also from the different way, manner, or sort of call, whereas he acknowledgeth that my speeches do drive at this, that my meaning was of the species or sort of ministerial call; and so I might answer them all negatively, and grant what he would have me, and yet my proof stands good. And for what he saith, that the efficient cause enters not the essence, I find to the contrary in Keckerm. syst. log. l. 1. par. 2. c. 2. That in the definition of accidents, the notion of distinction, or the difference is taken from the subject, efficient, end, and object. Yet this, if true, were nothing against me, who do not make the Messenger or Minister of our call of the essence of the Church, no nor of the existence, though the Apostles words Rom. 10. 14. speak near to it: But this is that which I hold, no person is ordinarily a member of the visible Church Christian, but who is called by the outward outward preaching of the word, who ever be the Messenger or Minister of the call; and sith infants are not so called, they are not members of the visible Church Christian.

Mr. B. adds, 2. I utterly deny that there is any more truth in the Antecedent then in the consequent. God hath not altered the nature of the call in any substantial point, but in meer circumstances.

Answ. What Mr. B. means by the nature of the call, and what points he makes in the call substantial, what near circumstances is not easie to tell, but that God hath so altered the Jewish Church call, as to exclude infants from the Christian visible Church is so apparent, that I know not how to conceive of the denial of it. but as a fruit of oppositeness without reason. For all the way that John Baptist, Christ, the Apostles and other teachers took and appointed to be taken for gathering the Christian visible Church, was by preaching the Gospel to all that would hear it, to make them disciples or believers, and so by baptism to joyn them to the Church. But that the Jewish Church call was different is apparent, in that there were no such teachers sent out to unite them, but that by the authority of the Magistrates, whether household or national they were imbodied. Rightly saith Mr. Hudson vindic. ch. 4. sect. 5. pag. 94. Gods method of conveying Church. priviledges used in the national Church of the Jews, being in populo Israelitico, must needs differ from the method in populo Catholico. And the same is true of Gods call. But what need we any other to shew the proper call of the Christian Church visible then Mr. B. himself, in his Saints Everlasting rest, part. 2. ch. 6. sect. 1 Edit. 1. pag. 223, 224. he is so ample, and his words so plain, that I think if there were no more to shew his perverse stiffness in this thing it were enough. I will transcribe some passages. Consider in what way Christ spreads his Gospel: to bring men in from the world into his Church from Paganism, Turcism or Judaism to Christianity, he never gave the sword any such Commission; he never levied an army to advance his dominion; nor sent forth his followers as so many Commanders to subdue the Nations to him by force, and spare none that will not become Christians: He will have none but those that voluntarily list themselves under him: He sent out Ministers, and not Magistrates or Commanders to bring in the world. Can he say this of the Jewish Church, and their call? But let's view his wincings against the plain truth, and in some sort against his own light, though perhaps forgotten when he wrote this later book.

It is, saith Mr. B. said, it was then by Magistrates and now by Ministers. I answer; 1. what was by Magistrates? the first call? or all after? For the first I know not which or when it was, let him that can tell, see that he prove it. I finde when Circumcision was first instituted in Abraham's family; But never when their Church-membership begun; shall I dare to think that either Abraham or his family were no Church-members till they were circumcised? Rom. 4. would confute me.

Answ. Mr. B. saith he answers, but indeed puts questions to me to answer, and those impertinent. For though I could not tell him which was the first call, nor when the church-membership of Abrahams family ly begah, yet it might be true and proved, that the call of the Jewish Church was by the magistrate. But yet for clearing of the truth, I shall make some answer. 1. That I find God calling Abraham out of Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 12. 1. Acts 7. 3. Isa. 41. 2. and sundry times I find Abraham sacrificing to God, and God covenanting with him: Nor would I deny Abraham, Sarah, and those of his family who worshipped the true God, to have been visible church members before circumcision. 2. But yet I finde not the whole family of Abraham men women and children made a visible Church, by any act or rite which might be termed a Church call, whereby they were separated from all other people and united in a little nation unto God till the appointment of circumcision by God, and the performing of it by Abrahams authority. Now if Mr. B. could not tell which and when the Jewish Church call was, or the Jews childrens church-membership began, I think he is very unreasonable to require of me to shew a repeal of a thing which hee findes not when it began. But there is more of this wilde posing scribling to be answered.

2. Saith he, Suppose it were true that Abrahams family began then to be a Church; (which will never be proved) yet did not God call them to Circumcision immediately? what is this to a ministerial call?

Answ. 1. It will never be proved that any whole family, infants, servants, &c. were joyned in a little national Church as the Jewish before that time, there being no such covenant, and token of it till then. 2. God did immediately make his covenant with Abraham then and appoint circumcision, But the call of the Church was mediate, the revealing of the covenant, and the administring the token of it, whereby they were separated to be a people to God, being done by Abraham himself as the minister of this call. Yet we have more questions to answer.

3. Are you sure that which Abraham did in it was as a Magistrate? and not as a Prophet? nor Priest? nor Master of family? prove that if you can.

Answ. It is easie to prove that what Abraham did was done not as a Prophet, nor Priest: for then it should have been the work of Prophets and of Priests to have circumcised: but as the Master of the family, or parent, and consequently as the Magistrate of that house. For I count a parent or master of a Family to be a Magistrate in a little compass.

Yet more, 4. what was it that Abraham did? He circumcised them when God had commanded; And was circumcising the call? then the infants in the wilderness, nor the whole camp almost had no Church call; And then the women had never any Church call.

Answ. Circumcising was part of the call; the declaration of God concerning Abrahams posterity, and his other providences separating the Israelites in the Wilderness and with them the women, as bringing them out of Ægypt, bringing them into Covenant, giving them Laws by Moses, &c. which reached to women and males uncircumcised, were also a part of the Church call. Yet again,

What was it then that Abraham did more then now may be done? If you

ſay, he compelled them to be circumciſed by violence without their conſent, I deny it as a forgery; And if he had done ſo by thoſe at age, it had been no making them Church-members; for their conſent is abſolutely neceſſary therto. If you ſay, Abraham by his intereſt and authority perſwaſion did win all at age in his family to conſent; dare you ſay, that every Maſter of a family and Magiſtrate ought not to do ſo now? So that I cannot finde any more that Abraham did in this call then may now be done.

Anſw. I do not think Abraham did compel them by violence to be circumciſed, I think it could hardly have been ſo done; nor do I think Abraham did it as preachers do now, by reaſons and proofs of thei duty perſwading them to it, and leaving it free to them to conſent or not; (perhaps the time was too little to do it in, and not unlikely, Iſhmael would have then refuſed, being a ſcoffer, and then thirteen years old:) But he did it by his command, authority, and intereſt; which if Magiſtrates and Maſters of Families do uſe with perſwaſion to win perſons to conſent to the Goſpel, they do what is commendable, and in ſome caſes their duty: And if they win any, ſo they make them viſible church-members by their preaching to them, not meerly by Authority as Abraham, who I think was bound to have circumciſed by force if any had not yeilded to it, or elſe to have cut him off by that law which is Gen. 17. 14. And I hardly think Mr. B. will yield a Magiſtrate or Maſter of a family to do what Abraham did, to adminiſter as they call it, the initial ſeal, whether it be circumciſion or baptiſm. Yet were his concluſion yielded him, neither it nor any thing he hath ſaid doth at all overthrow my poſition, which was, that the Chriſtian Church call is by preaching, the Jewiſh, by the Magiſtrates authority, and ſo different.

Mr. B. goes on thus. And then for Moſes what more did he? did he make them members without their conſent? No, he ſets before them life, and death, bleſſing and curſing; and bids them chuſe which they would. Deut. 28, 29, & 30, chapters. Doth he circumciſe them? No, not his own Son. Nor the infants forty years, nor the women at all. Doth he command them to obey the commands of God? And ſhould not every King and Magiſtrate do the like? Doth he perſwade them? why, you know he was a Prophet; and if he had not, yet ſure he muſt do it as a King, and as a ſervant of God. where then lies this peculiar call by the Magiſtrate? I think by that time we have ſearcht this to the quick, we ſhall finde the Magiſtracy leſs beholding to Mr. T. then was imagined. No wonder that he told the people in his pulpit that it was Doctrine of a dangerous conſequence which I delivered [that Magiſtrates had their power from Chriſt the mediatour, and not onely from God as creatour] I doubt by this arguing of his, that he will not allow the Magiſtrate to call all his people together and propound the Covenant of God to them, and command them to obey God. You finde not Moſes by priſon or fire forcing any man to conſent: And if he had, you muſt have a little further work to prove that it was that which made them a Church, or that the Magiſtrates may not ſtill do as much as was done herein then.

Anſw. Mr. B. herein doth moſt ſhamefully wreſt my words and

meaning: For whereas to shew the different call of the Jewish and Christian Church, I alledged onely matter of fact, that the one was by the Magistrates authority, the other by Ministers preaching the Gospel, which could not take in infants; Mr. B. wrests my speech as if I had said, Magistrates might not do what Moses then did, and goes about to insinuate, as if the Magistracy were less beholding to me then were meet; and endeavours to encrease the suspicion of my lessening his power by my Doctrine in the Pulpit at Bewdley. But of my judgement in this thing, I have given account in the same Pulpit on occasion of the Swearing of the Magistrate there on *Rom.*13.4. in these Positions. 1. That all power is committed to Christ to manage as Mediator, *Mat.*28. 18. *Joh.*5.22,27. 1 *Cor.*15.24. And consequently, what they do for or against the Church, it is from Christ enabling or permitting even as Mediator. 2. That Magistrates as well as others are subject to, and are to yeeld obedience to Christs commands as he is Mediator, *Mat.*17.5. *Act.*3. 22. 3. That they have power & authority in many things which concern the Church of God, and are bound to use their power for Christ, and his Church, so far as their power extends, 1 Tim. 2. 1, 2. And in this sence it is that Christ exerciseth some of his Government by Magistracy under him, as also by Parents and Husbands, *Ephes.*6.4. But I conceive it a business of much difficulty, to set the right bounds of their power Many things few or none but Papists restrain them in, as the calling of Assemblies, judging of Ecclesiastical persons for civil crimes, ordering the maintenance, and estates of such persons, with many more such things as are to be done circa Ecclesiam, not in Ecclesia: On the other side, few or none but Erastians allow them power in the Church, so as to act as civil Magistrates in that which is by special commission appointed to proper Officers, viz. the preaching of the Gospel, administring the peculiar Rites of the Christian Church, ordination of Elders, government by Ecclesiastick censures, and such like things. The chiefest difficulty hath been, how far they are to use their power for making men profess Christianity, accept of Teachers, punishing of Hereticks and excommunicate persons, and such like acts, in which for the most part Magistrates by instigation of Popish Priests, Prelates, and others, have much miscarried, and been unhappy instruments of much oppression. Yet for my part I do not deny altogether their power about such things as these, especially if they go no further then what Mr. B. here speaks of, the commanding them to obey Gods commands, propounding the Covenant of God to them, restraining pernicious Teachers, and go upon very sure grounds, that they urge nothing but what is certainly Gods command, or agreeable to it, nor punish or restrain men for that which is questionable whether it be an errour, or pernicious. But this I hold, should a Magistrate as Moses did, by his authority, upon fears or hopes, or other compliance, draw all the people of the Land into a Covenant, to engage themselves and posterity to be Christians, yet this would not make the whole Nation to be a Christian Church, the infants visible church-members, capable of Baptism, sith Christ hath not appointed this way, but another, to wit, by preaching

the Gospel to call his Church, and the preachers of it to baptize believers so called. 4. I say, that a civil Magistrate is not an Officer of Christ as Mediator, sith he hath no new Commission from him as the Apostles, John 20.21. and others, Ephes 4.11. And I conceive to hold the affirmative is of dangerous consequence: it will follow, 1. That a civil Magistrate is bound to produce a further commission from Christ as mediator, besides the appointmen of God as creatour, which I neither think Mr. B. hath shewed, nor can shew. 2. That he who shews commission from Christ as mediator to rule, hath the authority of a civil Magistrate, which puts both Swords into Elders hands. 3. That if a civil Magistrate be an Officer of Christ as mediator, he is in the Church, in which alone Christ as mediator sets Officers; and then he must be a Christian or no Magistrate, yea, a church member, and then he hath rule in the Church, and power to do Ecclesiastical acts. 4. Then dominion is founded in grace, which it seems Mr. B. holds. Praefatin. Mor. sect. 19. as most certain that it is founded in the grace of redemption and universal; and brings for it plain Scrip. proof, &c. pag. 229. Rom. 14.9. which v. 8. shews plainly to be meant onely of those that live and die to him, and are his own peculiar people; and the word κυριεύση notes not such a Lordship as is over enemies, as Devils, and children of perdition by power and force; but such a Lordship as is with property over them as his possession, to whom he hath right as his own, 1 Cor. 6. 10. such as a wife, an obedient child, or servant. The other Texts prove but my first Position. The Reader I presume will pardon this excursion, being necessitated by Mr. Bs. frequent and continued mal gnant suggestions, tending to make me accounted an adversary to Magistracy. I now return to the point in hand. And in answer to Mr. Bs demand, I say, the peculiar call of the Church of the Jews by Moses the Magistrate was, in his bringing them out of Ægypt, into the Covenant at mount Sinai, setling them under Laws, Priesthod, Government, whereby they were fashioned or established as a national Church. But in the Christian Church, the Apostles and other holy Teachers did gather, and fashion, and establish the Church Christan by preaching of the word, without such a way of authority and power as Moses exercised. It is true he did as we read, Deut. 30.19. but not so as the Apostles, who when the Gospel was refused exercised no power over the refusers; for Moses would suffer none to live in the Commonwealth of Israel who did not own the God of Israel, and if they worshipped an Idol he put them to death.

Mr. B. adds. 5. This argument, if good, would help the Seekers to prove that we have no Church on earth, because not called by Apostles, and so the Church. Constitution taken down, and none by God substituted. Let them that have better eys then I find out this peculiar church making call; for I cannot.

Answ. My argument, the Church call is altered from the way of making the Jewish Church by Abrahams and Moses authority, into the perswasive way of begetting faith by Ministers preaching the Gospel, therefore the Church constitution is altered, doth not help Seekers, except cept it be acknowledged, there is no Church now by Miniſters preaching the Goſpel, but by meer authority of Magiſtrates, which was heretofore the objection of Papiſts againſt the Engliſh churches, but refelled by Proteſtants, Jewel, &c. For I do not appropriate the Church call to the Apoſtles, or men who could ſpeak that which was meerly, wholly, undoubtedly, inſite, implantedly the word of God, as Borelius ſpake, but to the preaching of the Goſpel by any Miniſter of Chriſt, or other inſtrument, whereby faith is begotten, and whereby alone the Chriſtian viſible Church and all its members were called, in a different way from the Jewiſh Church call; which if Mr. B. do not ſee to have been the Chriſtian peculiar church making call, after his writing in his Saints everl. reſt, par. 2. ch. 6. ſect. 1. it ſeems he will not ſee it, and then wee may apply to him the Proverb, who ſo blinde as hee that will not ſee?

Mr. B. paſſeth on thus. well, But may it not yet lie in the ſecond point [that they were all taken in to be a Church in one day?] Anſw. 1. what day was that? I would Mr. T. could tell me. He ſaith Moſes did it: but that's no truer then the reſt. For ſure they were a Church before Moſes time. Did they begin to be a Church in the wilderneſs? or did Moſes onely expreſs the Covenant to them more fully, and cauſe them oft to renew the Covenant, and ſo onely confirm them a Church? was not the circumciſed ſeed of Abraham a Church in Ægypt? and was the uncircumciſed Hoſt onely in the wilderneſs the Church? This is excellent arguing.

Anſw. This is excellent anſwering, not to deny what is objected, but to propound croſs interrogatories. Suppoſe I could not aſſign the day, is not the thing true? But that Mr. B. may not loſe his longing, I tell him it was when Abraham circumciſed his houſe, Gen. 17. 23. When Moſes made a Covenant with them in Horeb, Deut. 29. 1. If I ſay Moſes did it, I ſay but what the Scripture doth, Deut. 33. 4, 5. nor doth it want of truth if it be no truer then the reſt. It is not true Iſrael had their Church call from Moſes, for ſure they were a Church before Moſes time; this is Mr. Bs. excellent arguing. As if the ſeed of Abraham, a fluent being, conſiſting of a ſucceſſion of people, might not have one Church call in one age, another in another; one by Abraham, another by Iſaac, another by Jacob, another by Moſes. Doth not Mr. B. himſelf, pag. 122. tell us, that Moſes did cauſe them oft to enter and renew the Covenant? I do not ſay they began to be a Church in the wilderneſs, or that the ſeed of Abraham was not a Church in Ægypt, or onely in the wilderneſs: But this I ſay, the Church call of that people was oft in ſeveral ages by the authority of the ſeveral Patriarchs and Rulers, as God ſaw it needfull to bring them into Covenant, for better faſhioning, eſtabliſhing, or recovering the Church fallen, but for the moſt part by the authority of Rulers; or if by a Prophet, in an extraordinary manner, as Elijahs days, 1 Kin. 18. and that not by the way uſed in the Chriſtian Church, by a daily adding to the Church, and multiplying it by preaching, as Acts 2. 47. & 6. 1. but by authority calling the whole nation and people together into Covenant at once.

Again

Again saith Mr. B. But Abraham took all his family to be a Church in one day, you will say. I answer. First, It is not proved when they began to be a Church. Repl. Nor needs it. 2ly. And would not Mr. T. now have a whole family made a Church in a day? Is that his charity?

Repl. Yes, and the whole world, if it seemed good to God: But we find not that he doth so, or gives us any rule or president for us to do so, in the constitution of the visible Church Christian, any otherwise then by preaching the Gospel to them, and baptizing Disciples or believers, Mat. 28.19. Mark 16.15,16. And sure my charity must not be my rule about the use of Gods Ordinances, but my Lord and Masters appointment.

3*ly.* Saith Mr. B. And what of it had been true if the whole Kingdome? either it was with their consent, or without: without their consent they could not be made church-members; for they could not enter into Covenant with God.

Answ. If this be true, then no infants are church-members. And though it were true, that none could enter into Covenant with God who is of age without his consent, (which seems to me otherwise,) yet the consent obtained meerly by the authority of Masters or Governours, through fear or hopes without teaching, and free acceptance of Christ upon the preaching of the Gospel, doth not make a visible member of the Christian Church, however it did in the Jewish. I do not think the Americans forced to be baptized by Spaniards, or other people by the conquests of Charls the Great, and other Christian Princes, afore they knew Christ by teaching made Christians, were such, though there was some consent out of fear of loss of life or liberty if they were not. Mr. B. adds.

And never was any such thing attempted. Even Joshua treads in Moses steps, and bids them chuse whether they will serve the Lord or not. Jos. 24.

Answ. Whether Abraham had the free consent of all his house to enter into Covenant with the Lord, or whether he did circumcise some and take them to his Family Church without their consent, is uncertain: However, if Abraham had a slave refractory, which he was loath to lose, yet he must circumcise him against his will, because of the command with the penalty, Gen. 17. 12,13,14. And in the circumcising the Sichemites what was done and attempted is known. Neither Moses, nor Joshua did so leave it to the Jews liberty, but that they would have cut off from the people by death any that refused to acknowledge God, or that set up an Idol. Asa's Covenant was of putting to death whosoever would not seek the Lord God of Israel, 2 Chron. 15.13. Whereas there is no such Law in the Christian Church, that whoever shall not believe in Christ shall be put to death.

Yet further saith Mr. B. And it being with their consent that the nation were church members, may not the like be done now? what, may not any or all the nations of the world be added to the Church, if they will consent, and enter the Covenant?

Answ. Yes, they may, so many as upon knowledge of Christ do freely consent to receive him in all nations: But infants, natural fools, mad

what then is this making them a Church in one day that Mr. T. so cloudily talks of? If he say, it is that then the infants were taken in: I answer, that is to prove the same by the same, or else to argue circularly: As to say, their Church call did take in infants, therefore the taking in of infants was peculiar to their Church call; this begs the question: Or to say, their Church constitution is ceased, because their Church call is ceased; or, their Church call consisting in the taking in of infants is ceased, therefore their Church constitution is ceased; and that Church constitution is ceased, therefore the taking in of infants is ceased. This arguing is like their cause.

Answ. I have sundry times told Mr. B. that the call in one day of the whole nation was by Abrahams authority, Gen. 17. and by Moses, Exod. 19 &c. otherwise then in the Christian visible Church, which was by a daily addition of believers out of several families, cities, and nations, by preaching to them the Gospel. And how my arguing is framed without begging the question, or any circle, is before shewed. And the [call in one day] I meant of Abrahams and Moses act, whether the hearts of the whole nation were bowed to consent to take the Lord for their God, or no. I neither envy nor deny the enlarging of the Church by Christ, nor do I think the converting or taking in more or less makes an alteration in the nature of the Church call or constitution; but a call by preaching the Gospel makes an alteration in the Christian visible Church call and constitution from the Jewish, sufficient to exclude infants from Christian visible church-membership. But Mr. B. clamours thus against me.

And what means Mr. T. to talk of here one and there one? To speak so contemptuously in such disparaging language of the Kingdome and Gospel of Christ? Is not the wonderfull success of the Gospel one of our strong arguments for the truth of the Gospel and our Christian Religion? And it seems Mr. T. will give this away to the Pagans, rather then admit infants to be members of the Church.

Answ. I mean to speak as the Holy Ghost speaks, 1 Cor. 1. 26 27, 28, 29. James 2. 5, 6. Rev. 5. 9. and as by the Histories Ecclesiastical may be made apparent, which rashly Mr. B. calls speaking contemptuously in disparaging language of the Kingdome and Gospel of Christ, as he formerly did my denial of infant Baptism accusing of my own children. Nor by my saying is the argument for the truth of the Gospel and Christian Religion a whit infringed. For the force of the argument is not from hence, that whole nations, cities, houses were converted by the Gospel; but that though the persons were contemptible who preached, their Doctrine likely to affright men, without arms, against opposition of great ones, there was so great success over the world as to convert so great numbers, though few in comparison of the rest, even in most barbarous countreys, from their long accustomed idolatry to embrace a crucified Lord. Yet saith Mr. B.

was it but here one and there one when three thousand were converted at once, and five thousand afterwards? and many myriads or ten thousands even of the Jews that continued zealous of the Law did believe? Acts 2.41. & 4.4. & 21.20. besides all Gentiles? was it but here one and there one, when all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron turned to the Lord, both men and women, Acts 9 35. and all that dwelt at Samaria, Acts 8.

Answ. It was but here one and there one as I meant it. 1. It was not any whole nation or city, and perhaps few whole households, sure I am not one infant in any of the places. For in Acts 2.41. they who were baptized gladly received the word; and Acts 4. 4. they heard the word and believed; and Acts 21.20. they believed and were zealous of the Law; Acts 9.35. they saw it, and turned to the Lord; Acts 8.12. they believed Philip. 2. These three thousand, five thousand, ten thousands inhabitants might, and likely were but one out of one house, and another out of another house: As God had much people in Corinth, Acts 18.10. yet but few households; the Husband a believer, the Wife an unbeliever; the Servant a believer, not the Master, 1 *Cor.*7.11,12,16,21. So many myriads might be, yet but here one and there one, considering that Jerusalem, especially at the Feasts, was full of people; and that the myriads are not restrained to Jerusalem, but might be in Judæa, or perhaps in remoter parts. It is evident that the number of Christians was not able to match the Persecuters, and that even in Jerusalem: Yea, it is said, Acts 21.30. that all the city was moved against Paul, and the people ran together, all Jerusalem was in an uproar, *v.*31. much ado the souldiers had to rescue him from the multitude, v. 35. even at that time when the myriads are said to have been of believing Jews, *v.*20. The Texts Acts 9 35. & 8.12. say not as Mr. B. that all that dwelt at Samaria believed, nor all that dwelt at Lydda and Saron both men and women, but those that turned to the Lord, as is shewed Sect. 50. before.

Yet more. Let him shew me when three thousand Jews were made church-members in a day, if he can, before Christs time: I say, if he can, let him shew it me. Sure ever since Abrahams time (and I doubt not but before too) they were added to the Church by one and one as they were born.

Answ. If I cannot shew it Mr. B. gains nothing, my assertion, that the Jewish nation were a Church together in one day by Magistrates authority, the Christian Church was gathered by Apostles and others preaching whereby one was made here one day, another there a believer another day, not a nation, city, nor always a house together, stands good. But sith M. B. wil allow me so much favour as to shew him any thing, me thinks he should not deny that more then three thousand were made church-members in one day, *Deut.*29.10,11,12,13,14,15. And if in the time of Solomons reign, when Judah and Israel were many as the sand which is by the sea in multitude, 1 *Kin.*4.20. three thousand were born in one day, by Mr. Bs. own grant there were three thousand added to the Church in one day.

Yet again saith Mr. B. And I have shewed you before, that Christ sendeth his messengers to disciple all nations: It is a base exposition that shall say he means onely, Go and disciple me here one and there one out of all nations, and no more.

Answ. And what childish vanity, if not worse, he hath shewed in his ridiculous including infants to be discipled in that commission, is shewed before in the second Part of this Review, Sect. 12. &c. If it be a base exposition which he sets down, it is base dealing if he set it down as mine exposition: who yeeld that their commission was to disciple all of a nation who could be discipled, though it is true that they could not do it to a whole nation in a day as Moses did; and in the event they discipled but here one and there one in a house for the most part.

Yet more saith Mr. B. And what means that in Revel. 11.15. Are not these Kingdomes added to the Church as well as Israel?

I answer, That it means not as Mr. B. imagines, that the whole people of Kingdomes shall become Christs visible Church, but the rule or dominion of them shall be his, as the close of the v. and ch 12.10. shew, which makes nothing for Mr. B. as will appear by examining his frivolous arguing, ch. 13.

Yet again saith Mr. B. like a brave Goliath, And are not all professors of Christianity in England, as truly in the Church as all in Israel were? I challenge any to answer me herein, and undertake to make it good against them (as far as will stand with modesty to challenge) whatsoever any Separatist (commonly called Independents) or Anabaptists may say to the contrary; (for I have pretty well tried the strength of their arguing in this.)

And I have pretty well tried Mr. Bs. strength in disputes, and find it small though his words be big. I do not answer to the name of a Separatist or Anabaptist, they are Mr. Bs. abusive language of me. Let Independent Pædobaptists answer it as they please. I think if they will baptize infants from the rule of circumcision and the Jewish Church-state, they must assert a national Church, admit all that avouch themselves Christians to breaking of Bread, and their infant males to Baptism. And I conceive Presbyterians by the grounds they maintain Pædobaptism are debarred from keeping the ignorant and scandalous from the Lords Supper; and though I challenge not as Mr. B. yet presume I shall make both good in their season. As for the present question of Mr. B. I grant it, and then I hope we shall not fight about it. Yet I tell Mr. B. I do not take all for professors of Christianity whom perhaps Mr. B. doth, nor do I think Mr. B. can find me one professor of Christianity among all the infants in England.

Yet a little further, saith Mr. B. Either Mr. T. by [Church call] means that which was the means of entring infants, or men at age or somewhat common to both. The Jews did all enter into the Church as members in infancy, even they that deferred Circumcision till forty years old, and the women that were not circumcised. And what call had these infants that cannot understand a call?

Answ. The Church call of the Jewish nation or family of Abraham was by his authority, in a way common to men of age and infants: Abraham and his house were by circumcision and declaring Gods Covenant formed into a visible Church, and accordingly all that were born of Abraham, and all that were taken into his house while they continued in that Family or Nation, were of that Church. And this way of Church call, by bringing into the bond of the Covenant the whole Nation, infants, servants, men and women together, was by the authority of Moses renewed at mount Horeb, and in the land of Moab, Deut. 29. 1. though circumcision were deferred for a time. And this call was of the infants, though not by themselves apart, yet conjunctly with the whole Nation, the chief representing the rest, Exod. 19. 7. Deut. 29. 10. and among them the infants, who might as well understand a call as a Covenant, into which Mr. B. contends they did enter.

Mr. B. adds. "The Proselytes, who were made Church-members "at age, were first converted to God, and professed the true Religion, "and so brought in their children with them: They were converted "not all in a day, but by times; not onely by Moses, or succeeding "Magistrates, but chiefly by Priests or Levites, or zealous people, or "by what way or means God was pleased to use for that end. I did in- "treat Mr. T. to shew me any material difference between the call of "these Proselytes into the Church in all ages till Christ, and the call of "us Gentiles into the Church: And truly he gave me an answer of "meer words for a put off, (wherein he hath a notable faculty,) which "I can find no weight nor sence in, nor am I able to tell what he would "say to it; nor can I conceive what possibly can be said of any mo- "ment. And as Camero well noteth, μαθητεύειν, is now used in the "Church as it were in the place of προσηλυτεύειν: Discipling now to "us, is as Proselyting was to them. So that you see now what this "Church call is which he layeth so great a weight on, and how much in "the main it differeth from ours.

Answ. When that time was that Mr. B. made this request to me, and what imperfect answer it was which I gave him, I do not well remember: I guess it was when I had conference with him alone, Jan. 25. 1649. in his chamber, when he drew me to a conference with him, pretending friendliness; but (as the event shewed, having Jan. 15. before, when I suspected no such dealing, written his abusive Epistle before his Saints everlasting rest, in which he falsly accused me and proclaimed his driving me to absurdities in the Dispute, Jan. 1.) drew from me what he could for his advantage, and then printed it in this Book, without my revising my answers, or his acquainting me with his printing them, or rightly according as they were printing them, as may be perceived by this Review; and mocking me with this fraudulent trick, when I expected according to his promise to see his arguments written from some of his own or my auditors to whom he would communicate them. But leaving him to the Lord, I shall now give a plain answer to his demand. Proselytes were of two sorts, 1. Of the gate, as Cornelius, owning the God of Israel, but not joyning to the Church and policy of Israel. These were not of the Jewish Church visible, though they were of the Church invisible of true believers, and of the Church visible universal of professors of the true God: For they were accounted unclean, and shunned by the Jews, Acts 10, 28. & 11. 2, 3. Their calling I conceive was as ours is, by the word of God made known to them; nor do I find that infants were any part of the Church of them, whether domestick as in Cornelius house, Acts 10.2. or congregational, of which I find not an instance, nor of any rites or discipline they had. 2. Of righteousness, who were made such partly by persuasion as Mat. 23.15. and so far their call agrees with our call, and the other sort of Proselytes, partly by entring them into the Jewish Church, by Baptism, Circumcision, and an Offering, and with them wives and children; and this was done by authority of Elders imposing on them the precepts of Moses Law, and acting according to rules of their own. In which how much their Church call differs from ours is shewed in the 2d. Part of this Review, sect. 24. in answer to Dr. Hammond. Now though they were joyned to the Jewish Church one after another, and the infants of the Jews as they were born; yet the Jewish Church, whether at the first erection, or after establishing, were constituted of the whole Family and Nation together by the authority of Abraham and Moses differently from the call of the Christian Church visible in so material a point as excludes infants from church-membership, ὅπερ ἔδει δεῖξαι, which thing I was to demonstrate.

Mr. B. goes on thus. But yet one other argument Mr. T. hath to prove the Church constitution altered, and consequently infants now cast out, or their church membership repealed: And that is this; They were to goup three times a year to the Temple; they had their Sanedrim, and High Priest: Now he appealeth to all, whether these be not altered: And therefore the Church constitution must needs be altered; and so infants put out.

Answ. My argument is this, If that which had the same reason with infants church membership be altered, then infants church membership is altered: But that which had the same reason with infants visible church membership is altered, Ergo. The consequence is made good by the rule of Logick, Where there is the same reason of things, there is to be the same judgement. De paribus idem est judicium. The minor is proved thus. The High Priest, Sanhedrim, repair to their Feasts, had the same reason with infants visible church membership: But they are altered, Ergo. The major is proved thus. Infants church membership was no where but in the Jewish Church, we read of it no where else, nor upon any other reason but their being part of the Nation, which God had made his Church; they were visible church members upon no profession of their own, nor from any general determination of God, Law or Ordinance that the children should be reckoned of his Church with the parents in any countrey whatsoever, there being no such Law; but meerly from hence, because he would have the Nation of Israel to be his fixed people out of whom the Messiah should come, and so a National Church till then. And for the same reason he would have one High Priest, Temple, repair thither at solemn Feasts, a Sanhedrim, their genealogies kept, their possessions by lot, &c. But all these are altered now, the Church is not National, no one High Priest, Temple, Sanhedrim, &c. therefore neither infants visible Church-membership membership, which had the same reason and no other. What saith Mr. B.

Alas, miserable Cause that hath no better arguments! are any of these essential to their Church constitution? How came there to be so strict a conjunction between Priesthood, Temple, Sanhedrim, &c. as that the Church must needs fall when they fall? may it not be a Church without these?

Answ. Alas miserable Cause that hath no better answers! Is infants church-membership essential to Church constitution? How came there to be so strict a conjunction between the Church and their membership, as that the Church must needs fall when they fall? may it not be a Church without these? If the Temple, &c. might be altered, and and were, because not essential to the Church; infants Church-membership did cease too, which was no more essential then those, and which hath been proved to have the same reason with these, to wit, Gods making his Church National out of which the Messiah was to come. Hitherto nothing is indeed answered, and what is said is retorted. The rest is according to Mr. Bs. vein of frivolous putting impertinent questions to me.

I would intreat Mr. T. or any Christian who hath the least good will to truth left in him, considerately to answer me to these. 1. Was not the Jewish people a Church before they had either a Temple, or Sanhedrim, or High Priest, or any of the ceremonies of the Law of Moses? Ans. I think not: there was no time they were a Church, but they had a Priest, an Altar, Sacrifices, distinction of clean and unclean beasts, &c. were they not a Church in Ægypt, and in the families of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob? Ans. They were. 2. Did the adding of these Laws and ceremonies take down any former part of the Church? Ans. No. Or did every new ceremony that was added make a new Church, or constitution of the Church? Ans. No. 3. If the adding of all these ceremonies did not make a new Church, or overthrow the old, why should the taking of them away overthrow it? Ans. Who saith it doth? 4. If the Jews Church constitution before Moses time was such as took in infants, why not after Moses time? Ans. Who denies it? Or if infants were Church members long before either Temple, or Sanedrim, or High Priest, &c. why may they not be so when these are down? why must they needs fall with them when they did not rise with them? Ans. Because if they did not rise with them at the same time, yet they were erected upon the same foundation, the Jewish National Church, as the walls fall with the roof, though they rise not together, because they rest on the same foundation. 5. And if the very specifical nature of their Church be taken down, then men are cast out, and women too, as well as children. Ans. I say not the specifical nature of their Church was taken down, but the particular Church constitution Jewish altered; and I grant it, that men and women under the consideration as they were in the Jewish Church, are left out (I will not say cast out, for they were never in) of the Christian visible Church as well as children. If it be said that Christ hath appointed men and women to be church members anew, I answer, what man can imagine that Christ first repealed the Ordinance that men and women should be members of the Church, and then ſet it up anew? Anſ. And what man can imagine otherwiſe who reads the New Teſtament, but that (if there were ſuch an Ordinance that men and women being Jews by birth ſhould be members of the Jewiſh Church) Chriſt repealed it, when neither John Baptiſt, nor Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles admitted any Jew becauſe a Jew into the Chriſtian Church by Baptiſm, without his perſonal faith and repentance?

Mr. B. ſaith, I will waſt no more time in confuting ſuch ſlender arguments, but ſhall willingly leave it to the judgement of any underſtanding unbyaſſed man, whether Mr. T. have well proved that God repealed his Ordinance, and revoked his mercifull gift, that ſome infants ſhall be Church members.

Anſw. It is my burthen that I muſt waſte more time in refuting ſuch empty ſcriblings as theſe, containing queſtions, and thoſe not touching the argument, inſtead of anſwers; and I leave it to the Students of Divinity in the Univerſities, and elſe-where, who are underſtanding unbyaſſed men (if there be any) yea to any that have ſtudied Logick, to judge whether I have not proved a repeal of his pretended Ordinance, after I have added ſome more proof out of the New Teſtament in the next Section, and anſwered his Letters to me, to which I haſten.

SECT. LII.

It is proved, that infants were not reckoned to the viſible Church Chriſtian in the primitive times, nor are now.

1. I Thus argue, If no infants were part of the viſible Church Chriſtian in the primitive times, then whatever Ordinance there were of their viſible church membership before, muſt needs be repealed. But the antecedent is true, Ergo the conſequent. The conſequent of the major I think will not be denied: For ſuppoſing there were infants even of Chriſtians, and an Ordinance before, that the infants of the godly ſhould be viſible church members, and yet no part or members; then it muſt needs be from the revocation of that Ordinance, if there were ſuch a one. Now that the antecedent is true, I prove thus. If in all the days of Chriſt on earth, and the Apoſtles, no infant was a part or member of the viſible Church Chriſtian, then not in the primitive times: For the primitive times of the Chriſtian Church go no further, though I think I might extend my proof ſomewhat further. But the antecedent is true, Ergo.

That no infant was a part or member of the viſible Church Chriſtian in the dayes of Chriſt and his Apoſtles on earth, is proved by theſe arguments.

1. All viſible members of the Church Chriſtian were to be baptiſed. This is often aſſerted by Mr. B. plain Scrip. proof, &c. pag. 25. The whole Church muſt be ſanctified by the waſhing of water, pag. 342. As the whole Church is one body, and hath one Lord, and one faith, ſo it hath one common baptiſm. And he alledgeth 1 Cor. 12. 13. Eph. 5. 25, 26. Eph. 4 5. out of which this propoſition may be proved. But no infants were to be baptiſed. This is proved at large in the 2d. part of this Review Sect. 5, &c. Therefore no infants were viſible members of the Chriſtian Church.

2. They were not viſible members of the Church Chriſtian who were not of the viſible body of Chriſt. This is proved from Mr. Bs. words plain Script. &c. pag. 25. The body 1 Cor. 12. 13. is the viſible Church. pag. 342. As the whole Church is one body &c. pag 39. What is the Church? Is it not the body of Chriſt? The ſame he confirms pag. 60. 318. from 1 Cor. 12. 13. which he proves to be meant of the viſible Church, and it is affirmed by the Apoſtle Col. 1. 24. Epheſ. 1. 22, 23. that the Church is the body of Chriſt, and ſo the viſible Church is his viſible body. But no infant was of the viſible body of Chriſt. This is proved 1. from 1 Cor. 12. 13. all that were of the body were made to drink into one ſpirit, namely in the cup of the Lords ſupper. Diodati annot. in locum hanc rationem confirmat teſtimonio baptiſmi & cænæ dominicæ piſcat. analyſ. 1 Cor. 12. 13. Arg. 9. Sacramento baptiſmi & cænæ dominicæ omnes fideles connectuntur. Dicſon expoſ. Anal. 1 Cor. 12. 13. ut utri uſque Sacramenti unus ſcopus & idem etiam eſſe intelligatur, Beza annot. in 1 Cor. 12. 13. Calicem quoque Domini in hanc ſpem bibimus. Grot. annot. in locum. But no infant was made to drink into one ſpirit, for none of them did drink the cup in the Lords ſupper, Ergo. 2. From 1 Cor. 10. 17. All that were one body and one bread, did partake of that one bread which was broken v. 16. But no infant did partake of that one bread, if they did they muſt do ſo ſtill & be admitted to the Lords ſupper, Ergo. 3. From Epheſ. 4. 5. The whole Church is one body, and hath one Lord and one faith. Mr. B. plain Script. &c. pag. 342. But no infant hath one faith, Ergo.

3. They were no members of the viſible Church, who were left out of the number of the whole Church, all the believers, the multitude of the diſciples in all the places where there is an enumeration of the members of the Church, or mention of the whole Church, the number of believers or diſciples in the new Teſtament. But infants are left out of that number in all places in the new Teſtament, Ergo. The major is evident of it ſelf. For as we know who was in the church by their mention, ſo we know who were not by their being left out in thoſe paſſages, which make an enumeration or reckoning of all, there being no other way to know who were in or out; and if this be not true, the ſpeeches are falſe which mention all, the whole, the multitude, as the full number if they were not ſo. The minor is alſo proved from thoſe texts where ſuch enumeration is mentioned, Acts 1. 15. Peter is ſaid to ſtand up in the mids of the diſciples, and that the number of the names together were about an hundred and twenty. and in the verſes before are reckoned the Apoſtles with the women, Mary the mother of Jeſus and his brethren, and they are ſaid to continue in one accord in prayer and ſupplication. Here I conceive is an enumeration of the diſciples or church that then was at Jeruſalem viſible. Dr. Lightfoot in his Com. on Acts 15. ſaith, the believers lievers at Jeruſalem no doubt were many hundreds if not thouſands at this time; though we read of no Converts in this book till the next chapter. For what fruit or accompt can elſe be given of all Chriſts preaching and pains beſtowed in that city? Let but Joh. 2. 23. & 3. 2. & 4. 1. & Mar. 3. 8 & Joh. 7. 31. & 8. 30. & 11. 28, 45. & 12. 19, 42. and divers other places be well weighed, and it will be utterly unimaginable that there ſhould be leſs believers in Jeruſalem now then many hundreds, much more unimaginable that theſe one hundred and twenty were all, who were all Galileans, and no inhabitants of Jeruſalem at all. The like is the arguing of the Aſſembly in their anſwer to the Diſſenters, pag. 66. Nevertheleſs it ſeems not improbable to me, conſidering the narration all along the chapter, that v. 4, 6. they are ſaid to come together, go to mount Olivet, and then to return to Jeruſalem, and their action noted with ſpecial notice of ſome, v. 13, 14. and then next, v. 15. that Peter ſtood up in the midſt of the Diſciples, that this enumeration of 120 is not an enumeration onely of men of note, but of all the diſciples of Chriſt then at Jeruſalem, me thinks the terming of Peter a Galilean, Mark 14. 70. doth intimate few of the Hieroſolymitans were diſciples of Chriſt; Chriſts preaching moſt in Galilee, his directing them to go into Galilee where they ſhould ſee him, Matth. 26. 32. Mark 16. 7. the diſciples ſhutting the doors and aſſembling at evening for fear of the Jews, Joh. 20. 19. do ſhew that moſt of the diſciples were Galileans, few of Jeruſalem; ſpecially when all the diſciples forſook Chriſt and fled, Matth. 26. 56. the ſhepheard being ſmitten and the ſheep ſcattered, v. 31. However the enumeration being of diſciples, and the women being reckoned with them, and not their children, nor the actions of prayer, &c. ſuch as are to bee aſcribed to infants, it is evident that infants were not then countted among the diſciples, and conſequently not for viſible members of the Chriſtian Church.

Acts 2. 1. They are ſaid to be all with one accord in one place. The Aſſembly ubi ſupra alledgeth reaſons why they all ſhould be meant of the Apoſtles onely, but not cogent. For 1. the narration doth not any more limit the words Act. 2. 1. by Acts 1. 26 then by v. 15. 2. not onely the Apoſtles, but others were filled with the holy Ghoſt women as well as men, v. 17. Acts 4. 31. & 6. 5. 3. though they were Galileans that ſpake v. 7. yet it proves not the [all] v. 1. to be Galileans. 4. the mention is of the Apoſtles v. 14, 37, 42. not to ſhew that it was a meeting of the Apoſtles onely, but becauſe they were the leaders and chief actors in that Church.

And that the meeting was of the whole Church at Jeruſalem then, is proved from v. 41. thus, The meeting was of them to whom the three thouſand ſouls were added; But they were added to the Church v. 47. not onely to the Apoſtles, or teachers. For then the ſenſe ſhould be, that that 3000 ſhould be added to the teachers, and ſo many more teachers added: whereas they are ſaid to continue in the Apoſtles doctrine v. 42. by their profeſſion of it, the Apoſtles teaching and not they. And hence I gather, that not one infant was reckoned to the Church, becauſe the [all] v. 1. are ſaid to bee toge- ther ὁμοθυμαδὸν with one accord, or one minde and consent, which is not to be said of infants.

From Acts 2. 41. I further argue, The Church did then consist of such persons onely as were of like sort with those who were added to it, which must be granted except it be said, the added and those who were added were of different sorts. But of those who were add d there was no one infant. This is proved from the words v. 42, 43. that they continued stedfastly in the Apostles doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers, and fear came upon every soul, v. 41. they gladly received the word, which cannot be said of infants; therefore no infant was reckoned then as a part or member of the visible Church Christian.

Again v. 44. the whole Church is meant by all that believed, who are said to be all together, to have all things common, sold and imparted their possessions, continued with one accord in the temple, brake bread from house to house, eat their meat with gladness and singleness of heart, praised God, had favour with all the people, v. 45, 46, 47. which cannot be said of infants, therefore no infants were then reckoned as parts or members of the Christian visible Church.

Again Acts 4. 4. it is said, many of them which heard the word believed, and the number of the men was about five thousand. That this is an enumeration of the whole Church then at Jerusalem, is more probable then that it is an enumeration onely of the newly added; however the addition being of the same sort of persons with those to whom they were added, and no one infant reckoned to the Church, but all men, that heard the word and believed, it is clear that in the number of the christians or disciples infants were not reckoned, and consequently no visible church members then.

V. 23, 24. Peter and John are said to go to their own company, and to report to them the speech of the chief Priests and Elders, and then upon hearing they lift up their voice with one accord to God, v. 31. to pray, to be assembled together, to be filled with the holy Ghost, to speak the word God with boldness; and the church is called v. 32. the multitude of them who believed, to be of one heart and one soul. All which shew, that the Church consisted of a company of praying people, of a multitude of believers, which is not to be said of infants, therefore they were no visible church members then.

Acts 5. 11. it is said, And great fear came upon all the Church, and upon as many as heard these things. Here the whole church is mentioned as contradistinguished from the many that heard these things. But no infant was a member of the Church, sith none was capable of the great fear that came upon all the Church from the notice of Ananias and Sapphira's death, therefore they were not then church-members.

V. 13, 14. They who were magnified by the people, who were joyned to the Lord, who were of the same sort with believers, who were the more added to the Lord, multitudes both of men and women, were not infants: But such were the Church then, therefore it did not consist of infants then.

Acts 6. 1. The Church is expressed by the number of Disciples, by the the multitude of Disciples, v. 2. the whole multitude, v. 5. the number of the Disciples obedient to the faith, v. 7. But none of these were infants, as their conventing, the speeches to them, and other acts shew; therefore infants then were not reckoned Christian visible church-members.

Acts 8. 1. The Church at Jerusalem are said to be all scattered abroad except the Apostles, v. 3. to consist of men and women haled to prison, which is not to be conceived of infants, therefore they were not then reckoned as visible church members.

Acts 15. 22. The whole Church is said to send chosen men of their own company. But this doth not agree to infants, therefore infants were not reckoned as part of the whole Church.

1 Cor. 14. 23. The whole Church is supposed to come togeter into one place. But this is not to be said of infants, they were no part of the company that met, they were not capable of the end and actions of the meeting, therefore they were no part of the whole Church, The same may be said of all other like places.

4. They were no part of the Christian Church visible, to whom the things ascribed to the whole Christian Church did not agree. But the things ascribed to the whole Christian Church visible did not agree to infants. Ergo. The major is of it self evident, as in like manner this is a plain truth, that they are no souldiers to whom what is said of the whole Army doth not agree. The minor is proved from many places of Scripture. Matth. 16. 18. Christ saith he will build his Church on this Rock, this is meant of the whole Church, and the building is meant of building by preaching, Ephes. 2. 20. & 4. 11, 12. But infants are not built by preaching, therefore they are not parts of the Church visible.

1 Cor 1. 2 The Church is of them who are called to be Saints which is by preaching the Gospel, v. 23, 24. But infants are not so called, Ergo, they are not of the visible Church Christian.

Acts 2. 41. 47. & 5. 14. They who were added to the Church did all hear the word and believe: But infants did not so, therefore they were not added to the Church, and consequently were not visible church-members.

They were not parts of the Church who did not come together, were not gathered together; for all the Church did come together with one accord in Solomons Porch, Acts 5. 11, 12. were gathered together by the Apostle, Acts 14. 27. But infants were no part of them, they were not with one accord any of those to whom the Apostle told what God had done with them, therefore they were not part of the visible Church.

They were no part of the Church of God, who were none of the flock of God to whom the Elders were to attend as made overseers over them by the Holy Ghost to feed them. For all these things are attributed to all the flock or Church of God at Ephesus, Acts 20. 28. But infants were none of the flock to whom the Elders were to attend as made overseers by the Holy Ghost to feed them, Nurses were to attend and feed infants, not teaching and ruling Elders, whose work was in the word and and doctrine, 1 Tim. 5. 17. therfore infants were none of the flock or Church of God visible at that time.

They were no part of the Church of God, who were not in duty to be sanctified by the Word. For the whole Church was in duty to be sanctified by the word, as Mr. B. plain Script. &c. pag. 342. gathers from Ephs. 5. 25. concerning Baptism. But no infant is in duty to be so sanctified, it were a ridiculous thing to tie Preachers to sanctifie or wash infants by preaching the Word to them, therefore they were no part of the Church. The Churches had rest, and were edified; walked, were multiplied, Acts 9. 31. Acts 12. 5. Prayer was made of the Church unto God for Peter. The Church at Hierusalem, Acts 11. 22. is said to hear tidings, to send Barnabas, who with Paul assemble with the Church, v. 26. fit persons to convene, Acts 21. 22. to receive orders, 1 Cor. 16. 1. With many more such attributes, which neither are, nor can ordinarily be said of infants, no nor any attribute in all the New Testament, which is said of the visible Church Christian is said of infants, therefore they were not accounted visible members in the first Christian Churches, nor are rightly now so taken.

5. They who were not reckoned as Christs Disciples, were not visible church-members; For as Mr. B. rightly saith, plain Script. &c. All church members are Christs Disciples. But infants are no where reckoned as Christs Disciples. This is proved, 1. from the places in all the Acts of the Apostles, and elsewhere, where there is mention of Christs Disciples, there are such things declared of them as do exclude infants from the number of them. I omit Acts 1. 15. & 6. 1, 2, 5, 7. before mentioned. Acts 11. 26, 29. It is said that Barnabas and Saul a whole year assembled themselves with the Church, and taught much people, and the Disciples were called Christians first in Antioch: And upon the prediction of a dearth it is said, Then the Disciples, every man according to his ability, determined to send relief unto the brethren which dwelt in Judæa, which they also did, and sent it to the Elders by the hands of Barnabas and Saul. From whence this is apparent, that the Church, the Disciples, the Christians were then Synonyma, or terms importing the same persons, so that he who was not a Disciple was not of the Church, nor a Christian. But no infant was then reckoned as a Disciple. This is proved from what is said of every Disciple, v. 29. they determined to send, and did send, which none will say infants did. Ergo, infants were not then reckoned among Disciples, Christians, or members of the visible Church Christian.

Acts 14. 20, 21, 22. it is said, that the Disciples stood round about Paul, that he and Barnabas taught many, or made many Disciples, and that they confirmed the souls of the Disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith. From whence it is manifest, that the Disciples then were such as stood round about Paul, that they were taught, or made Disciples by teaching or preaching the Gospel, that they were in the faith, capable of confirmation, and exhortation. But such were not infants. Ergo, they were not then reckoned as Disciples, and consequently not church-members. Acts 8. 3. made havock of the Church. Acts 9. 1. against the Disciples ciples, v. 18. the Saints at Hierusalem, v. 19. the Disciples at Damascus, v. 25. the Disciples, v. 26. joyning to the Church is joyning to the Disciples, v. 35. the Brethren, v. 31. the Churches, v. 38. the Disciples heard, v. 41. called the Saints. Acts 15. 1. it is said they taught the Brethren, v. 3. being brought on their way by the Church, they caused great joy unto all the Brethren; v. 4. they were received of the Church. v. 10. the Disciples are they whose hearts were purified by faith; the whole Church v. 22. are the Brethren, v. 23. who send greeting to the Brethren, v. 30. they were the multitude gathered together, v. 32. they exhorted the Brethren, v. 33. were let go in peace from the Brethren, v. 36. let us visit our Brethren, v. 40. recommended by the Brethren, v. 41. confirming the Churches. Acts 16. 2. well reported of by the Brethren, v. 5. And so were the Churches established in the faith, and increased in number daily, v. 40. and when they had seen the Brethren they comforted them. Acts 17. 10, 14. the Brethren sent away Paul. Which passages do shew, that these terms were then of the same extent, and synonymous, the Church, the Disciples, the Brethren, the Believers, the Saints: But infants were none of the Church, the Disciples, the Brethren, the Believers, the Saints as all the passages where they are mentioned shew; therefore infants were not then visible church members

Acts 18. 18. Paul took leave of the Brethren, v. 22. he saluted the Church, v. 23. strengthened all the Disciples, which strengthening was by teaching and exhorting, as Acts 14. 22. shews: Which infants were not capable of, therefore they were not Disciples. V. 27. the Brethren wrote, exhorting the Disciples to receive Apollos, who helped them much who believed through grace. Acts 19. 1, 2. Paul finds certain Disciples who were Believers, v. 9. separates the Disciples, v. 30. the Disciples would not suffer Paul to enter in unto the people. Acts 20. 7. upon the first day of the week, when the Disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them at Troas. Which shews plainly, that the Disciples did use to break bread on the first day of the week, and that those who were Disciples did break bread; which cannot be said of infants, therefore they were not Disciples, and consequently not visible church-members.

2. The same is proved by those arguments which are in the second Part of this Review, sect. 10. to prove infants not Disciples appointed to be baptized, Matth. 28. 19. and by the answers to the allegations of Mr. Cotton, Mr. B. and others, Sect. 11, 12, &c. to prove them Disciples.

6. If in the distributions of the members of the Church then, infants are not comprehended, then infants were not visible church-members, this must needs be granted, or exception must be taken to those distributions. But in the distributions of the Church, where all sorts of members are expressed, infants are not comprehended; Ergo. The minor is proved from the distributions according to the sex, Acts 5. 14. & 8. 12. men and women, among whom was no infant, for in the former place they are termed Believers, in the latter they are said to believe Philip preaching the things concerning the Kingdome of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ;

Christ; which is not to be said of infants. 1 Cor. 12. 13. they are distributed into Jews or Gentiles or Greeks, bond or free, but none an infant, as is proved before, in that all were baptized, and did drink the Lords cup. The like is Gal. 3. 28. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus: and that is by faith, v. 26. and therefore no infant meant. Col. 3. 11. where there is neither Greek nor Jew, circumcision nor uncircumcision, Barbarian, Scythian bond nor free; but Christ is all and in all, that is by faith, which is not to be said of infants.

To which I may adde, that in Tertullians time the children of believers were not accounted actually members of the visible Church, because he terms them in his book De anima, c. 39. Designatos sanctitatis, intended to be holy; that is, to be bred up to profess the faith, and so to be baptized. Which is the more apparent, in that Hierome expresseth the same as from Tertullians book de monogamia, in his Epistle to Paulinus, tom. 3*d. edit. Basil. That the children of believers are termed holy, because they are as it were Candidates of the faith.* And Erasmus in his Scholie on that Epistle saith, Therefore they which are born of Christians, are called holy also before Baptism, because they do as it were seek and expect Baptism. Which shews they were not counted actually church-members, but such as were designed to be believers, and so as it were seekers for Faith and Baptism, and consequently church-members onely in expectation.

2. I argue from the common received definitions of the visible Church. Artic. 19. of the Church of England, The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithfull men. In the answer of the Assembly to the reasons of the seven dissenting brethren, p. 48. of the Edition 1644. the first præcognitum is this; The whole Church of Christ is but one, made up of the collection and aggregation of all who are called out of the world by the preaching of the word, to profess the faith of Christ, unto the unity thereof: From which union there ariseth unto every one such a relation unto, and dependance upon the catholick Church, as parts have to the whole. Dr. John Rainold 1d. concl. The Church of Christ betokeneth a company called out from among the multitude of other men, to life everlasting through faith in Christ Jesus. Ball, trial of Separ. pag. 296. ch. 13. The Church is a society of the faithfull. Hudson, vindic. c. 1. p. 12. The universal Church is the whole company of visible believers throughout the whole world. ch. 6. sect. 3, 127. The Church visible is called entitive, not because of the inward grace, which is essential to an invisible member; but from the reception and embracing the Christian catholick faith, which is essential to a visible believer. Mr. B himself, plain Script. &c. part 1. ch. 26. The common definition of the Church, affirmeth them to be a people called out of the world. Hence I argue, All that are of the visible Church Christian are faithfull, called out of the world by the preaching of the word to profess the faith of Christ, visible believers receiving and embracing the Christian catholick faith. This is proved from the definitions of the Church, and positions received. And it is clear in reason, the Church being an aggregate, as a flock of sheep, a heap of stones; as it follows therefore every part of the flock is a sheep, every part of the heap a stone, so every part of the Church a believer. But no infant is such. Ergo. In this very manner doth Guliel. Apollonii considerat. controv. cap. 1. pag. 8. argue. Thus almost all the famous reformed Divines do affirm the matter of a visible Church to be men outwardly called, professing the faith of Christ. For they define it a company of men called out by an outward calling, or preaching of the word, and communicat on of Sacraments, to the worship of God, and to celebrate Ecclesiastical society among themselves.

To this Mr. M. in his Defence, part 3. sect 3 pag. 113. saith. "I re"ply, it overthrows it not at all; for they all include the infants of "such professors, as the visible Church among the Jews did include "their infants, male (and female too, lest you say that Circumcision
"made them members.)

Answ. Mr. M. should have shewed who, and in what words of their definitions Protestant Writers include the infants of professors. That some of them, especially of late, have asserted infants of believers to be a part of the visible Church, I grant: But I think Mr. M. cannot make it good, that the Elder Protestant Writers did include them in their definitions of the visible Church. I have produced some of the later, who have so framed their definitions as that infants must be excluded. And if any do include them, they erre from the Scripture, which never accounted them visible Christian Church members, as is proved before. And Sect. 51. of this Part of the Review doth sufficiently shew the Christian Church visible to have another call and constitution from the Jewish, and that no person is a member of the Christian Church visible by natural generation of a believer, but by profession of faith. Wherefore Mr. M. saith.

"I adde also, Baptism now (as well as Circumcision of old) is a "real, though implicite profession of the Christian faith.

Answ. That circumcision was a profession of the Christian faith either explicite in Elder proselites, or implicit in infants circumcision, doth not appear. The Apostles speech Gal. 5. 2, 3. and the tenet of the Jewish doctors Acts 15. 1, 5. is to the contrary. Baptism after a verbal profession of faith by the baptised being his act is a real, though implicit profession of the christian faith, it being used by the baptised to declare his putting on Christ, and so a signe of his assent to his verbal profession. But infants baptism is no profession of any faith either explicit or implicit, there being no act done by them tending to make any shew of faith, which they neither understand, nor take to bee true upon the trust of their teachers, as Papists do in their implicit faith (which yet we deny to be christian faith) but are every way passive, both in respect of the act of the baptisers, and the reason and end of it, they neither do any thing towards their baptism, nor understand any thing of it. Yea were it true that such an implicit profession of faith were in infants baptism, yet were it not enough to make them visible members of the christian church, no not according to the definition of Protestant writers, who when they define the church to be a company of professors of faith, do mean more then an implicit profession, to wit, an intelligent and free profeſſion; and do blame the b ptiſing of the Indians by the Spaniards, forcing them to own the Chriſtian Faith afore they underſtand it, though there bee more implicite profeſſion of the faith by them, then is or can be by an infant.

3. I argue. They are no viſible members of the chriſtian church, to whom no note whereby a viſib'e chriſtian church, or church-member ſhip is diſcernible doth agree. For that which is viſible, is diſcernable to the underſtanding, by ſome ſenſible note or ſigne by which it is known: But to infants of believers no note whereby a viſible church, or church-member is diſcernable doth agree, Ergo. The minor is proved 1 by ſhewing the right notes of the viſible church and church-members not to agree to infants. The right notes of the chriſtian church and church-members are the profeſſion of the whole Chriſtian faith, the preaching and hearing of the Word, adminiſtration and communion in the Sacraments, joyning in Prayer, diſcipline, &c. with believers. Hudſon. vindic. pag. 229. But none of theſe agree to infants. Not profeſſion of of the whole Chriſtian faith, For they neither underſtand nor ſhew by any thing they do that they aſſent to the chriſtian faith. Not the preaching or hearing of the Word: For infants can neither preach nor hear the Word. I mean as it is ſpeech or ſignificative language, though they may hear it as a ſound, much leſs as yeilding aſſent to it, which hearing alone is a mark of a viſible church-member. Nor do they adminiſter or have communion in the Sacraments: None will ſay they adminiſter, nor though they ſhould be baptiſed in water by a Miniſter, or eat bread or drink wine at the Lords ſupper, can it be ſaid they have communion in the Sacrament. For he onely hath communion in a Sacrament, who uſeth it as a ſigne of that for which it is appointed, and this uſe onely is a note of a viſible church-member, otherwiſe a Spaniards forcible baptiſing of an Indian without knowledge of Chriſt ſhould make him partaker of the Sacrament, or doing it in ſport or jeſt ſhould make a viſible church-member. See Mr. B. himſelt correct. ſect. 6. pag. 253. But infants neither uſe bap iſm nor the Lords Supper as a ſigne engaging to Chriſt, with acknowledgement or remembrance of him, therefore they have no communion in the Sacraments, no not in baptiſm, nor is their pretended baptiſm any note of viſible Church membership. Nor do they joyn in prayer, diſcipline, or any part of Chriſtian worſhip or ſervice, which might ſhew they own Chriſt as their Lord, and therefore they are not diſcernable to be of the viſible Church chriſtian by any right note.

2. By ſhewing that the notes whereby they are conceived to bee diſcernable as viſible Church members, are not notes of their viſible church-membership. Two notes are uſually alledged, the one the covenant of God, the other the parents profeſſion of faith, neither ſhew them viſible Chriſtian church-members, nor both together. Not the covenant or promiſe of God: For there is no ſuch covenant that promiſeth to every believers childe, much leſs to every profeſſor of Faith's childe ſaving grace, or viſible church-membership, and a promiſe to ſave indefinitely, not expreſſing definitely who, is not a note whereby by this or that person is discernable to be the person to whom it belongs. Besides, if there were such a promise to every childe of a believer, yet unless it were a promise of it to them in their infancy, it would not prove they were actually visible church members, but onely that in the future they should be. Nor is the parents Faith a note of the infants visible church membership. For whether it be a note of it self, or conjunctly with the covenant, it is a note of the infants visible church-membership because it is his child, and if so, then it is a note of his childs visible church-membership at twenty years of age, though he should be then a professed Infidel, as well as a day old, a note of an Embryo's visible church-membership in the mothers womb, as well as a childe born, which are absurd. Other reason then this I know not. But sure I am there is not the least hint in Scripture of a childes being discernable to be a visible Christian church member by the parents faith or profession, but to the contrary. To this argument briefly propounded in my Examen of his Sermon part. 3 sect. 3. Mr. M. replies not in his Defence, and therefore I see not but it stands good.

4. I argue. They who have not the form constituting and denominating a visible Christian church-member, are not visible Christian church-members. This proposition is most sure according to Logick rules, take away the form, the thing formed is not; if the form denominating agree not the denomination agrees not; Scheibler Top. c. 5. de forma Stieri. præc. doct. Log tract. 2. c. 4. But the form constituting and denominating a visible Christian church member, infants have not: Ergo. The minor is proved thus. They which have not the outward profession of Faith within, have not the form constituting and denominating a visible Christian church-member. For profession of Faith, is the form constituting and denominating a visible church-member, as is proved from the constant sayings of Divines. Ames Marrow of Divinity, first book c. 31. §. 11. Faith is the form of the Church. §. 25. visibility is the affection or manner of the Church, according to its accidental and outward form. §. 27. The accidental form is visible, because it is no other thing then the outward profession of inward faith, which may easily be perceived by sense. c. 32. §. 7. It is a society of believers, for that same thing in profession constitutes the visible Church, which in its inward and real nature makes a mystical Church, that is Faith. Ball trial of separat. c. 13. p. 302. A lively operative faith maketh a man a true member of the Church invisible; and the profession of faith and holiness a member of the Church visible. Norton answer to Apollon. c. 1 prop. 2. pag. 10 An unmoved position. That same thing in profession constitutes the Church visible, which in its inward nature constitutes the mystical Church, that is faith. Hudson. vindic. ch. 4. p. 90. Every visible believer is called a Christian, and a member of Christs visible Kingdom, because the form (viz. visible believing) common to all Christians and all members is found in him. And this may be proved out of Scripture, which denominates visible Christian church-members from their own profession of faith, in respect of which they are termed believers, 1 Tim. 2. 12. Acts 4. 32. & 5. 14. &c. nor is there any such denomination in Scripture, or hint of such a form constituting a visible Christian church-member or believer as the faith of another, of the parent, church, &c. It is a meer novel device of Papists, who count men believers from an implicit assent to what the Church holds; and Pædobaptists, who ascribe unto infants faith and repentance implicit in their sureties, the Church, their owners, the nation believing, their parents next or remote faith. Which is a gross and absurd conceit. For that in profession alone makes visible believers, which makes in reality true believers. But that's a mans own faith Hab. 2. 4. not anothers; therefore a mans own and not anothers profession of faith makes a visible believer. Again, the form denominating must be inherent, or in or belong to the person denominated, so as that there is some union of it to him, but there is no inherence, or union of anothers faith to an infant, Ergo. Naturally there is none, nor legally; if there be, let him that can, shew by what grant of God it is. Infants may have civil right to their parents goods, a natural interest in their mothers milk, parents, and masters may have power over the bodies, labour, &c. of their children and servants, they have no power to convey Faith, or Ecclesiastical right without their own consent. But this conceit is so ridiculous, that I need spend no more words to refute it. I subsume. Infants make no profession of faith, they are onely passive, and do nothing by which they may bee denominated visible Christians as experience shews, yea at the Font while the faith is confessed by the parent or surety, and the water sprinkled on their faces they cry, and as they are able oppose it, Ergo.

To this saith Mr. M. I answer, even as much as the infants of the Jews could do of old, who yet in their dayes were visible members.

Answ. The infants of the Jews were never Christian visible church-members, though they were visible members of the Jewish Church: But Mr. M. neither hath proved nor can, that the same thing, to wit natural birth, and Jewish descent and dwelling, which denominated the Jewish infants visible members of that church, doth denominate a christian visible church member. And till he do this, the force of the argument remains.

5. I argue. If infants bee visible Christian church members, then there may be a visible Church christian, which consists onely of infants of believers; for a number of visible members makes a visible Church entitive, though not organical. But this is absurd. Ergo, Infants of believers have not the form of a visible Church-member.

To this Mr. M, saith, I answer, no more now then in the time of the Jewish Church; it's possible, but very improbable, that all the men and women should die, and leave onely infants behinde them.

Answ. 1. It is no absurdity to say that of the Jewish church which it is absurd to say of the Christian: For the Jewish church was the people of God of Abrahams, or Israels house, which they might be, though but infants. But the Christian visible Church is a people or company that profess faith in Christ, which infants cannot do, and therefore it is absurd to imagine that a Christian church visible may bee onely of infants of believers, whereof not one is a believer by profession, not so of ths Jewiſh church. 2. The poſſibiliry acknowledged by Mr. M. is enough for my purpoſe, though it never were or ſhould bee ſo in the event, ſith the abſurdity followes upon that grant, as well as the actual event.

6. I argue. If infants be viſible Chriſtian church-members, then there is ſome cauſe thereof. But there is none, Ergo. The major is of it ſelf evident, every thing that is hath ſome cauſe by which it is. The minor is proved thus. If infants be viſible Chriſtian church members, by ſome cauſe, then that is the cauſe of all infants Chriſtian viſible church-membership or of ſome onely. But of neither, Ergo. I preſume it will be ſaid of ſome, ſith they account it a priviledge of believers infants. But to the contrary, there is no ſuch cauſe by which infants of believers are Chriſtian viſible church-members. Mr B. plain Script. &c. part. 1. c. 19. pag. 92 Denies that the parents faith is any cauſe (not ſo much as inſtrumental properly) of the childes holineſs, by which he means viſible church membership, but he makes it a condition (which is an antecedent or cauſa ſine qua non) of childrens holineſs. I anſwer, ſaith he, fully: If this be the queſtion, what is the condition on which God in Scripture beſtoweth this infant holineſs? It is the actual believing of the parent: For what it is that hath the promiſe of perſonal bleſſings, it is the ſame that hath the promiſe of this priviledge to infants: Therefore the promiſe to us being on condition of believing, or of actual faith, it were vain to ſay, that the promiſe to our infants is onely to faith in the habit: The habit is for the act, yet is the habit of neceſſity for producing of the act: therefore it is both faith in the habit (or potentia proxima) and in the act that is neceſſary. But yet there is no neceſſity that the act muſt be preſently at the time performed: either in actu procreandi, vel tempore nativitatis, vel baptiſmatis. It is ſufficient that the parent be virtually and diſpoſitively at preſent a believer, and one that ſtands in that relation to Chriſt as believers do: To which end it is requiſite that he have actually believed formerly (or elſe he hath no habit of faith) and hath not fallen away from Chriſt, but be ſtill in the diſpoſition of his heart a believer, and then the ſaid act will follow in ſeaſon; and the relation is permanent which ariſeth from the act, and ceaſeth not when the act of faith intermitteth. It is not therefore the meer bare profeſſion of faith which God hath made the condition of this gift, but the former act and preſent diſpoſition. Ch. 2. pag. 15. The parents faith is the condition for himſelf and his infants. The cauſes of this condition of Diſcipleſhip or Churchmembership, may improperly be called the cauſes of our Diſcipleſhip it ſelf; but properly Chriſt by his Law or Covenant grant is the onely cauſe efficient. Pag. 69. All theſe Church mercies are beſtowed on the ſtanding Goſpel grounds of the Covenant of grace entred with our firſt parents preſently upon the fall. Pag. 110. The ſeed of the faithful are Church members & Diſciples, and ſubjects of Chriſt, becauſe they are children of the promiſe. God having been pleaſed to make the promiſe to the faithfull and their ſeed. Pag. 59 It is of the very law of nature to have infants to be part of a Kingdome, and therefore infants muſt bee part of Chriſts Kingdome. Pag. 52. That infants muſt be Church members is partly natural and partly grounded on the Law of Grace and Faith. So that Mr. Bs. opinion is, Christ by his law of nature, or nations, or covenant grant on the standing Gospel grounds of the covenant of grace, the promise to the faithful and their seed not without actual faith, formerly and present disposition, beyond the meer bare profession of faith, is properly the onely cause efficient of infants membership in the visible Church Christian.

Against this I argue. 1. If there be no such covenant of grace to the faithful and their seed, nor any such promise upon condition of the parents actual faith the childe shall be a visible Christian churchmember, nor any such law either of nature or nations, or positive, which makes the childe without his consent a visible Christian church-member, then Mr. Bs. opinion of the cause of infants of believers visible Christian churchmembership is false. But the antecedent is true, ergo, the consequent. The minor I shall prove by answering all Mr. B. hath brought for it, in that which followes.

2. The Covenant of grace according to Mr. B. is either absolute or conditional; the absolute, according to Mr. B. is rather a prediction then a covenant, and it is granted to be onely to the elect, in his Appendix answer to the 8th. and 9th. object. and elsewhere, and by this covenant God promiseth faith to the person, not visible churchmembership upon the faith of another. The conditional covenant is of justification, salvation on condition of faith, and this promiseth not visible Churchmembership, but saving graces, it promiseth unto all upon condition, and so belongs to all according to Mr. B. therefore by it visible churchmembership Christian is not conferred as a privilege peculiar to believers infants on condition of their faith.

3. If there were a covenant to the faithful and their seed to be their God, yet this would not prove their infants Christian visible Church membership; because God may be their God, and yet they not be visible Churchmembers, as he is the God of Abraham, of infants dying in the womb, of believers at the hour of death, yet they not now visible Churchmembers. 2. The promise if it did infer visible Church membership, yet being to the seed simply, may be true of them though not in infancy, and to the seed indefinitely may be true if any of them be visible Church members, especially considering that it cannot be true of the seed universally and at all times, it being certain that many are never visible Churchmembers, as all still-born infants of believers; many that are visible Churchmembers for a time, yet fall away; and therefore if that promise were granted, and the condition and law put, yet infants might not be visible Christian Churchmembers.

4. If all these which Mr. B. makes the cause, or condition of infants visible Church membership may be in act, and the effect not be, then the cause which Mr. B. assignes is not sufficient. But the antecedent is true. For the promise, the parents actual believing, the law of nature, of nations, any particular precept of dedicating the childe to God, the act of dedication as in Hannahs vow may be afore the childe is born, and yet then the childe is no visible Church member, Ergo. The consequence rests on that maxime in Logick, That the cause being put, the effect is put. To this Mr. B. plain Script. proof, &c. pag. 100. Moral causes (and so remote causes) might have all their being long before the effect, so that when the effect was produced there should bee no alteration in the cause, though yet it hath not produced the effect by the act of causing. I reply this answer deserved a smile. 1. For Mr. B. as his words shew before cited, makes Christ by his law or covenant-grant, the onely cause efficient, therefore it is the next cause, according to him, and not onely a remote cause. 2. If the covenant or law bee as much in being or acting, and the parents faith and dedication afore the childe is born as after, and there is no alteration in the cause, though yet it have not produced the effect, then it is made by M. B. a cause in act, and consequently if the effect be not produced then it is not the cause, or the adequate sufficient cause is not assigned by assigning it. 3. Though moral causes may have their absolute being long before the effect, yet not the relative being of causes, for so they are together. So though the covenant and law might be a covenant and law, yet they are not the cause adequate, and in act (which Mr. B. makes them) without the being of the effect: nor is there in this any difference between moral and physical causes. And for the instances of Mr. B. they are not to the purpose. It is true, election, Christs death, the covenant, &c. are causes of remission of sins, imputation of righteousness, salvation, before these be, but they are not the adequate causes in act: For there must be a further act of God, forgiving, justifying, delivering, afore these are actually. They are causes of the justificability, the certainty, futurity of justification of themselves, but not of actual justification without mans faith, and Gods sentence, which is the next cause. A deed before one's born, gives him title to an inheritance, but not an actual estate without pleading entering upon it, &c. 4. I think Mr. B. is mistaken in making visible Churchmembership, the effect of a moral or legal cause. He imagines it to bee a right or priviledge by vertue of a grant or legal donation. But in this he is mistaken, confounding visible Church membership with the benefit or right consequent upon it. Whereas the Churchmembership and it's visibility are states arising from a physical cause rather then a moral, to wit, the call whereby they are made Churchmembers, and that act or signe what ever it be, whereby they may appear to bee Churchmembers to the understanding of others by mediation of sense. The priviledge or benefit consequent is by a law, covenant, or some donation legal or moral; not the state it self of visible Churchmembership. Which I further prove thus.

5. If visible Churchmembership bee antecedent to the interest a person hath in the Covenant, then the Covenant is not the cause of it; for if the Covenant be the cause it is by the persons interest in it. But visible Churchmembership is immediately upon the persons believing professed, which is a condition of his being in Covenant; therefore it is before the Covenant, and consequently the Covenant not the cause.

6. If the Covenant or law upon condition of the parents faith as the antecedent or cause without which the thing is not, be (as Mr. B. saith)

the cauſe of infants viſible Church membership the ſole efficient, then infants bought, orphans of Turks, &c. wholly at our diſpoſe, are not viſible Church members: For they have no covenant made to their parents, nor do their parents believe. But by Mr. Bs. doctrine pag. 101. where he would have them baptiſed, they are viſible Churchmembers, for ſuch onely are to be baptiſed, Ergo, the Covenant is not the ſole efficient, there may bee viſible Church membership without it. The ſame may be ſaid of foundlings, perſons of unknown progeny, &c.

7. If the Covenant or law with the parents actual faith without profeſſion, make not the parent a viſible Churchmember, neither doth it the childe; For the childe who is by vertue of the parents being a viſible Churchmember onely, a viſible Churchmember, cannot be ſuch without his being ſuch. But the parent by the law or covenant is not made upon his faith a viſible Churchmember without profeſſion, Ergo, The parents faith is not the condition on which God beſtoweth the infant holineſs, nor is it true that the actual believing which hath the promiſe of perſonal bleſſings, is the ſame that hath the promiſe of this priviledge to infants.

8. If perſons are viſible Church members and not by the Covenant of grace, then it is not true, that Chriſt by his Law, or Covenant of grace is the ſole efficient of viſible Churchmembership. The conſequence is plain, and needs no further proof. But the antecedent is true, Ergo. The minor is proved by inſtances of Judas and other hypocrites, who are viſible Churchmembers, but not by the Covenant of grace, for that promiſeth nothing to them.

9. If infants be viſible Churchmembers by the Covenant on the condition of the parents actual believing then either the next parents, or any in any generations precedent. If the next onely, let it be ſhewed, why the viſible Churchmembership ſhould be limited to it: if in any near generations, let it be ſhewed where we muſt ſtick, and go no further, why, ſuppoſe the viſible Churchmembership be ſtopped at the Grandfathers faith ſo as that we muſt go no further in our count, the great Grandfathers faith ſhould not infer the infants viſible Churchmembership as well as the Grandfathers: if there be no limit; why this viſible Churchmembership ſhould not be common to all the infants of the Jews, yea to all the world. If the ſucceſſion be broken off upon the Jews unbelief, why not upon the unbelief of each anceſtor?

10. If an infants viſible Churchmembership be by the covenant, upon the parents actual believing, and not a meer bare profeſſion, then it is a thing that cannot be known, becauſe the parents actual believing is a thing unknown. But that is abſurd. Ergo The major I have confirmed more fully in the firſt part of this Review, ſect. 35.

11. If other Chriſtian priviledges be not conveyed by a covenant upon the parents faith without the perſons own act or conſent, then neither this. But the antecedent is true, the child is not a believer, a diſciple, a miniſter, a ſon of God, &c. without his own conſent, Ergo. The conſequence of the major is confirmed in that there is like reaſon for them as for this.

12. If there be no Law or Ordinance of God unrepealed, by which either this infant visible Christian Churchmembership is granted, or the listing of infants, or entring into the visible Church Christian is made a duty, then that is not a cause of infants visible Churchmembership which Mr. B. assigns. But there is no such Law or Ordinance unrepealed, Ergo. If there be it is either by Precept or other Declaration, but by neither; Ergo. If by Precept, in the New Testament, or the Old: Not in the New, there is no Precept to Minister, or parents, or any other, to take infants for visible Churchmembers, or to list them as such: Nor in the Old, there is no such Precept I know but that of circumcision, which is repealed; vowing, praying, &c. did neither then, nor now of themselves make visible Churchmembers, although upon the prayers and faith, not onely of parents, but of others, God granted remission of sins, conversion, cure of plagues, yet did not these make any visible Churchmembers of themselves. If there be any other Declaration of God, it is either a positive law, or law of Nations, or of Nature: Not any positive law, if there be, let it be produced, not any law of Nations. This Mr. B. sometimes alledgeth, that as it is in Kingdomes and civil States the children are subjects and citizens as well as the parents, so in the Church: But if this were a rule in the Church of God, then not onely children must be visible Churchmembers, but also all the inhabitants where the Church is servants, and their children, as all in the territories and dominions of a King are his subjects; and sith Christs Kingdome is over all the world, yea if Mr. Bs. Doctrine were right in his Sermon of Judgement, pag. 14, 15. All are bought by Christs death, and are his own, every man in the world should be a visible Churchmember. Nor any law of Nature: For though Mr. B. sometimes pleads this, yet the vanity of it appears, 1. In that since the fall of man, the nature of man being corrupt, the call and frame of the Church is altogether by grace, and free counsel of God. 2. Churches if they should be fashioned after the way or law of Nature, where the husband is, there the wife should be a visible Churchmember, as well as where the paaent is a Churchmember, there the child should be so too. For the law of Nature makes them more nearly in one condition then father and child. But that is false, Ergo. 3. If the law of Nature should form Churchmembers then Churches should be by natural discent: But that is false, it is by calling, as is above proved. 4. Churches are by institution, therefore not by the law of Nature. This is proved from Mr. Bs. own hypothesis, that they are made Churchmembers by grant, covenant, gift on condition. 5. If they were by the law of Nature, all Churches should be domestical, not congregational or parochial; for they are not by nature, but by institution. 6. If Churches should be by the law of Nature, they should be formed by an invariable uniform way and model: But they are not so; they are called sometimes by Preachers, sometimes immediately by God, sometimes by authority; sometimes they are national, sometimes catholick; sometimes under one form of service and discipline, sometimes under another; sometimes the son is the means of making the father a visible Churchmember, sometimes times the father the son; sometimes the wife of the husband, sometimes the husband of the wife, by which the order of Nature is inverted.

To all these arguments against infants visible Christian Church-membership, this one may be added, That there is neither example, rule, nor hint in all the New Testament, of their admission into the Church, or ordering in it, or care of the Elders and Officers of the Church for them as members, nor any other sign that Christ would have them reckoned as visible members in the Christian Church: which is a strong presumption against it. I know none that hath disputed for it, so much as Mr. B. I will therefore go on to examine what he saith.

SECT. LIII.

Letters between me and Mr. B. are set down concerning the Law and Ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, which he asserts, whereby the point is stated.

THat the Reader may understand the true state of the Dispute between me and Mr. B. he is to take notice, that when at first in the Dispute at Bewdley, Jan. 1. 1649. Mr. B. urged for infant Baptism his argument of the ordinance or law or appointment of God, whereby infants were once to be admitted members of the visible Church, now Printed in his book of Baptism, ch. 5. part 1. I not knowing what other it might be, and he denying it was that of circumcision, urged him often to tell me what it was, which he would not, which occasioned the Dispute to be more confused then otherwise it might have been. After, in my Præcursor, I again told him, I found it not but in the peculiar national policy of the Jews, no universal law or ordinance for it. To which what elusory reply he made, is shewed in the second Part of this Review, sect. 2. pag 8,9. Which moved me, being then upon the examining of his 4th. and 5th. ch. from Bewdley within two miles of Kidderminster, to write and send April 3d. 1655. this Letter to him.

Sir, Not finding yet that Law or Ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership which you assert in your book of Baptism to be unrepealed, I do request you to set down the particular Text or Texts of Holy Scripture where you conceive that Law or Ordinance is written, and to transmit it to me by this bearer, that your allegations may be considered by him who is Yours as is meet;

April 3. 1655. John Tombes.

The next morning I received from him this Letter, directed to me.

Sir, I mean to see more said against what I have already written, before I will write any more about infant Baptism, without a more pressing call than I yet discern. I have discharged my conscience, and shall leave you and yours to take your course. And indeed I do not understand the sence

of your Letter, because you so joyn two questions in one, that I know not which of the two it is that you would have me answer to. whether there were any Ordinance or Law of God that infants should be Churchmembers? is one question: whether this be repealed is another: you joyn both into one. For the first, that infants were Churchmembers, as you have not yet denied that I know of, so will I not be so uncharitable as to imagine that you are now about it: And much less that you should have the least doubt whether it were by Gods ordination. There are two things considerable in the matter. First, the benefit of Churchmembership, with all the consequent priviledges. It is the work of a grant or promise to confer these, and not directly of a precept. Secondly, the duty of devoting and dedicating the child to God, and entring it into the Covenant which confers the benefit: and this is the work of a law or precept to constitute this duty. I am past doubt that you doubt not of either of these: For you cannot imagine, that any infant had the blessing without a grant or promise, (that's impossible;) nor that any parents lay under a duty without an obliging law, (for that's as impossible.) Taking it therefore for granted that you are resolved in both these, and so yeeld that such a grant and precept there was, there remains no question but whether it be repealed: which I have long expected that you should prove. For citing the particular Texts in which the ordination is contained, though more may be said then is said, yet I shall think it needless, till I see the ordination contained in those Texts which I have already mentioned to you, proved to be reversed. Nor do I know that it is of so great use to stand to cite the particular Texts, while you confess in general, that such a promise and precept there is, by vertue of which, infants were till Christs time duly members of Christs Church (for Christs Church it was) even his universal visible Church. Still remember that I take the word [law] not strictly for a precept onely, but largely, as comprehending both promise and precept, and I have already shewed you both and so have others.

So much of your endeavour as hath any tendency to the advancement of holiness, I am willing to second you in, viz. that at the age you desire people might solemnly profess their acceptance of Christ, and their resolution to be his: But I hope God will find me better work while I must stay here, then to spend my time to prove that no infants of believers are within Christs visible Church, that is, are no infant Disciples, infant Christians, infant Churchmembers. I know no glory it will bring to Christ, nor comfort to man, nor see I now any appearance of truth in it. I bless the Lord for the benefits of the Baptismal Covenant that I enjoyed in infancy and that I was dedicated so soon to God and not left wholly in the Kingdome and power of the Devil. They that despise this mercy, or account it none, or not worth the accepting, may go without it, and take that which they get by their ingratitude. And I once hoped, that much less then such an inundation of direful consequents as our eyes have seen, would have done more for the bringing of you back to stop the doleful breach that you have made. I am fain to spend my time now to endeavour the recovery of some of your Opinion who are lately turned Quakers, or at least the preventing of others Apostacy: which is indeed to prevent the emptying of your Churches, which I suppose will be a more acceptable work with you, then again to write against rebaptizing, or for Infant fant-baptiſm. Sir, I remain your imperfect brother, knowing but in part, yet loving the truth; Rich. Baxter.

Being the ſame day to return home, yet loth to be put off thus, I wrote immediately upon the reading of his Letter, this alſo to him.

Sir, I confeſs infants were by Gods fact of taking the whole people of the Jews for his people, in that eſtate of the Jewiſh Pædagogy (not by any promiſe or precept) viſible Church members, that is of the Congregation of Iſrael. I do not confeſs that there was any law or ordinance determining it ſhould be ſo, but onely a fact of God, which is a tranſeunt thing, and I think it were a fooliſh undertaking for mee to prove the repeal of a fact. Wherefore ſtill I preſs you that you would ſhew me where that law, ordinance, ſtatute or decree of God is that is repealeable, that is, which may in congruous ſence bee either by a later act ſaid to be repealed, or elſe to be eſtabliſhed as a law for ever. This I never found in your books, nor do I conceive that law is implied in any thing I grant; and therefore I yet pray you to ſet me down the particular text or texts of holy Scripture where that law is. Which need not hinder you from oppoſing the Quakers (in which I have not and hope ſhall not be wanting) of whom I think that you are miſinformed that they are Anabaptiſts, I think there are very few of them that were ever baptiſed, and have good evidence that they have been formerly Seekers, as you call them. And I think you do unjuſtly impute the direfull conſequences you ſpeak of to the denial of infant baptiſm, and to the practiſe of adult baptiſm, and that as your ſelf are deceived ſo you miſlead others. I yet expect your texts, knowing none in any of your books that mention that law of infants viſible Churchmembership which you aſſert either explicitly or implicitly, and am yours as is meet;

Bewdley this 4th. of April. 1655. John Tombes.

About a fortnight after I received this Letter to me from him.

Sir, If you will needs recall me to this ungrateful work, let me requeſt you to tell me fully, exactly and plainly, what tranſient fact you mean, which you conceive without law or promiſe did make Church members: that ſo I may know where the competition lieth. When I know your meaning, I intend, God willing, to ſend you a ſpeedy anſwer to your laſt. Your fellow-ſervant,

April 16. 1655. Rich. Baxter.

Upon the receipt whereof, I ſpeedily returned to him, on the day of the date of it, being then at Bewdley, this following Letter.

Sir, The tranſeunt fact of God, whereby infants were viſible Churchmembers, was plainly expreſt in my laſt to you, to be the taking of the whole people of the Jews for his people, which is the expreſſion of Moſes, Deut. 4. 34. Exod. 6. 7. And by it I mean that which is expreſſed Levit. 20. 24, 26. when God ſaid, I have ſevered you from other people, that you ſhould be mine. The ſame thing is expreſſed 1 Kings 8. 53. Iſai 43, 1. This I term [fact] as conceiving it moſt comprehenſive of the many particular acts in many generations, whereby he did accompliſh it. Following herein Stephen, Acts 7. 2. and Nehem.

hem, 9.7. I conceive it began when he called Abraham out of Ur, Gen. 12. 1. to which succeeded in their times the enlarging of his family, removing of Lot, Ishmael, the sons of Keturah, Esau, distinction by Circumcision, the birth of Isaac, Jacob, his leading to Padan Aram, increase there, removal to Canaan, to Ægypt, placing, preserving there, and chiefly the bringing of them thence, to which principally the Scripture refers this fact, Exod. 19. 4 Levit. 11. 45. Nehem. 1. 10. Hos. 11 1. the bringing them into the bond of the Covenant at Mount Sinai, giving them laws, settling their Priesthood, tabernacle, army, government, inheritance. By which fact the infants of the Israelites were visible Churchmembers as being part of the Congregation of Israel, and in like manner though not with equal right (for they might be sold away) were the bought servants or captives, whether infants or of age, though their parents were professed idolaters. And this I said was without promise or precept, meaning such promise or precept as you in your Letter say I confess, and you describe, a promise conferring to infants the benefit of Churchmembership with all the consequent priviledges, a precept constituting the duty of devoting and dedicating the childe to God, and entering into Covenant, which confers the benefit. For though I grant the promises to the natural posterity of Abraham, Gen. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. and the Covenant made with Israel at Mount Sinai, and Deut. 29. wherein Israel avouched God, and a precept of Circumcision, and precepts of God by Moses of calling the people, and requiring them to enter into Covenant, Exod. 19. and Deut. 29. Yet no such particular promise concerning infants visible Churchmembership, or precept for parents or others, concerning the solemn admission of infants as visible Churchmembers, besides Circumcision, as in your Book of Baptism you assert. Nor do I conceive that infants of Israel were made visible Church members by the promises in the covenants or the precepts forenamed, but by Gods transeunt fact which I have described. Which I therefore term [transeunt] because done in time, and so not eternal, and past, and so not in congruous sense repealeable as a law, ordinance, statute, decree, which determines such a thing shall bee for the future, though capable of continuance in the same or the like acts, or of interruption. Which continuance or interruption is known by narration of what God hath done, not by any legal revocation, or renewing, or continuance of a promise or precept concerning that thing. Now as the Churchmembership of the Israelites began as I conceive with Abrahams call, and was completed when they were brought out of Ægypt to God, Exod. 19. 4. so I conceive it ceased when upon their rejection of Christ as was fore-told Matth. 21. 43. they were broken off from being Gods people, which was completed at the destruction of Jerusalem, when the temple was destroyed, as Christ fore-told Luke 19. 43, 44. And instead of the Jewish people by the preaching of the Gospel confirmed by mighty signes, God gathered to himself a Church of another frame in a spiritual way, according to the institution of Christ, Matth. 28. 19, 20. Mark 16. 15, 16. in which he included not infants, the Jews themselves were no part of the Christian Church without repentance and faith in Christ professed at least.

Having

Having now fully, exactly. and plainly told you my meaning as you requeſt, I do now expect your ſpeedy anſwer to my laſt, and therein to fulfill my requeſt of ſetting down the particular texts of holy Scripture wherein that law largely taken comprehending promiſe and precept of infants viſible Churchmembership, which you aſſert to be unrepealed, is contained. If you ſhall in your anſwer ſet down wherein the bleſſing, benefit, and priviledges of infants viſible Churchmembership, which you aſſert unrepealed, did conſiſt; I may better underſtand you then I do: But I ſhall preſs you no further then you ſhall be willing in this thing. I am, Yours as is meet, Bewdley, April 21. 1655. John Tombes.

On May 29. 1655. I received this following anſwer.

Sir, A probability of doing or receiving good, is to me a call to action. Seeing no ſuch probability, I told you at firſt my purpoſes to forbear any further debates with you, till you had better anſwered what is ſaid. In your next you ſeemed to deal ſo plainly, as if ſome ſmall probability of good did yet appear: But in your 3*d. you fly off again and eat your own words, and jumble things in much confuſion, ſo that I now return again to my former thoughts. For you that expreſly ſay and unſay, and contradict your ſelf, are not likely to be brought to a candid management or fair iſſue of the Diſpute. You'l ſure think it no great matter to be driven to a ſelf contradiction (which with others is to loſe the Cauſe) who ſo eaſily and expreſly run it upon it your ſelf.*

Anſw. It was a call ſufficient to Mr. B. to do what I requeſted in my firſt Letter, in that a brother and fellow ſervant (as he takes me to be) deſired it of him. If he love the truth, as he ſaith, he ſhould be willing to let us know his Scriptures he alledgeth for that which he aſſerts as a truth. If he conceive himſelf imperfect, knowing but in part, why ſhould he not be jealous of his own opinion, eſpecially reſting on remote conſequences, rather then violently oppoſe mine, which his own acknowledgements do make plainly agreeing with the New Teſtament? If I were a ſophiſtical adverſary, yet I ſhould think it were meet Mr. B. ſhould debate that with me which he hath ſo clamourouſly and confidently oppoſed me in. What better anſwer I need make to what is ſaid then I have done, ſo far as I have gone (which is if not the greateſt part, yet the chiefeſt, and indeed for Scripture Texts all that requires an anſwer) I ſee not. I have ſet down almoſt all my Antagoniſts words, in Mr. Bs. book, at leaſt all that is argumentative and pertinent, with my anſwers diſtinctly, fully, and plainly, in the two foregoing Parts of this Review: And what way any man could take, more candid and agreeing to Logick rules, then I have gone in my anſwers, is yet to me undiſcernable. Mr. Firmin, in his Separation examined, pag. 31. ſaith thus, I can eaſily diſcern Mr. Tombes to diſpute more like a Sophiſter, then a Chriſtian, that did deſire to ſee truth: and he cites the words of Mr. M. in his Defence, pag. 147. which I have anſwered ſo fully in my Apology, pag. 78, 79. and ſhewed that very way which Mr. M. chargeth me with, to be as contrary to ſophiſtical diſputing as light is to darkneſs, that I had thought impudence it ſelf would not have charged me with that, in a book printed six years after the Edition of my Apology. Mr. Simon Ford, in his Epistle Dedicatory to his frivolous scribbled Dialogue, chargeth me with railing down rather then disputing, even in that which as he sets it down hath no shew of reviling, but a plain calling a straw a straw. And for my heavy censure, I still profess I know not how to conceive more favourably of Pædobaptists, but wish they would search their own hearts impartially. Mr. Gataker in his letter printed by Mr. B. to whom it was written, doubts in part it to be my disposition to blaze my forehead, not regarding at all what men deem or say of me, so I may seem to say somewhat, and have the last word; then which, a more unrighteous conceit could hardly have been entertained by him. Mr. Bs. printing it, together with other passages, makes me almost hopeless of ever meeting with any just, or candid dealing from Pædobaptists. Mr. B. here saith, I jumble things in much confusion, that I contradict my self, eat my own words; none of which is true: But he takes on him to prove it thus.

In your 2d. you say [I confess infants were by Gods fact of taking the whole people of the Jews for his people, in that estate of the Jewish Pædagogy, not by any promise or precept, then visible Church members, that is, of the congregation of Israel; I do not confess, that there was any Law or Ordinance determining it should be so, but onely a fact of God, which is a transeunt thing, &c.] In your 3d. you say [For though I grant the promises to the natural posterity of Abraham. Gen. 17. 4,5,6,7 8. and the Covenants made with Israel at mount Sinai, and Deut. 29. wherein Israel avouched God, and a precept of Circumcision, and precepts of God by Moses of calling the people, and requiring of them to enter into Covenant, Exod. 19. & Deut. 29. yet no such particular promise concerning infants visible Churchmembership, or precept for parents or others concerning the solemn admission of infants as visible Churchmembers besides Circumcision, as in your book of Bapt. you assert] Before there was no [Law or Ordinance determining it should be so, but onely a fact] now there are Laws or precepts and promises that it should be so, but [not such as I assert in my book] And if I should shew you never so many, you may reply, they are not such as I assert in my book, and waste the time in that trial, when it is better for me to see first what you say to that book: For this is but to lead us about to trifling.

Answ. 1. There is not a shadow of self contradiction in the latter words to the former. For though the latter acknowledge promises to Israel, yet not that by them they were visible Churchmembers; and Laws and Ordinances, yet not determining they should be visible Churchmembers. Had Mr. B. heeded my words, he had forborn this accusation, if he were not bent to find a knot in a bulrush. 2. If I should answer as he forebodes, I should answer rightly. And it is certain, that if Mr. B. should bring never so many promises, and not shew that they made infants visible Churchmembers, as he asserts in his book, he would waste time, and lead us about to trifling; and therefore it is just I should tie him to that, and his excepting against my so doing would would shew his wrangling, and will be taken for a losing of his cause. But I am resolved to follow him, even in his vagaries, and to examine whether it be true which he saith, that I jumble things in much confusion.

To make any clear work, saith Mr. B. upon the things in question we must necessarily speak to the questions distinctly, many of which you too much confound. The first question in order fit to be resolved is [whether infants before Christs incarnation were Churchmembers? or not?] you grant they were: and therefore this is past dispute with us. The 2d. Qu. and the first unresolved, is [what Church it is that infants were members of?] This you give me occasion to take in the way, because you twice explain your meaning, when you confess them Churchmembers, by an [i. e. of the congregation of Israel.] By which you seem to imply two things: First, that none but the infants of the congregation of Israel were Churchmembers: Secondly, that the infants of Israel were members of no Church but what is convertible with the congregation of Israel.] The 3d. Qu. is. What it is that gives the Israelites that denomination of [the Congregation of Israel] of which infants were members. For you jumble both together, both causes Civil, and Ecclesiastical, and of both those that make to the being and well-being. So that our enquiry must be, whether the Congregation and the Commonwealth be the same thing in your sense?] and what constituteth it formally? For in this you speak in dark ambiguities. The 4th. Qu. is, [whether there was any Law, Ordinance, or Precept of God concerning mans duty herein, or obliging him to the Covenant acceptance and engagement, and so to membership; and any promise, grant, or Covenant, conferring the right of Churchmembership and the consequent priviledges to infants?] To this you say both Yea and Nay, if I can understand you, or at least as to much of the Qu. concerning the being, and part of the effect of the precept and promise. Yet you conclude, that you [do not conceive that infants of Israel were made visible Churchmembers by the promises in the Covenants, or the precepts fore named, but by Gods transeunt fact.] I will not suspect that you imagine any other promise doth it besides that in the Covenant, because your tying the effect to the transeunt fact doth exclude them. Here we are cast upon these Qus. next. 5th. Qu. [whether there be such precepts and promises as you grant, (or as I shall prove) which yet make not infants Churchmembers?] 6th. Qu. [whether there be any transeunt fact of God, which without the efficiency of precept or promise did make the infants of Israel Churchmembers?] 7th. Qu. [whether those which you have assigned be such facts?] 8th [which are the Texts of Scripture that contain or expres the said laws, precepts, or grants which I maintain?] this you insist upon. 9th. [whether such laws, precepts, or grants as I shall prove, are capable of a repeal or revocation?] 10th. Qu. [whether they are actually revoked or repealed?]

Answ. The 8th. Qu. is the onely Qu. needfull to be resolved. All the rest are brought in to clog the Dispute, to weary me, and the Reader, in an indirect way most of them raised out of my words; in which if I should be mistaken, yet were it not thereby proved, that there is such a Law or Ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, as Mr. B. asserts. Nor by waving of these questions did I jumble things in much confusion, but decline drawing in things impertinent. Nevertheless, sith Mr. B. hath used these shifts to clog the Dispute, I am resolved to prosecute it in his method, having first premonished the Reader, that many things here said are not true, as, that I seem to imply that the infants of Israel were members of no Church but what is convertible with the congregation of Israel; that I jumble both causes Civil and Ecclesiastical, and of both those that make to the being and well being; that I say Yea and Nay to the 4*th.* Qu. that I tie the effect to the transeunt fact. He adds.

"Before all these Qs. are well handled, we should easily be convinced that it had been better either have let all alone, or else, if we "must needs have the other bout, at least to have agreed on our terms, "and the stating of the questions better before we had begun. And I "think that even that is not easie to do. For when I desired your plain "exact and full explication of one word [transeunt fact] and you tell "me you have plainly, fully, and exactly told me your meaning: It "falls out, either through the unhappy darkness of my own understanding, or yours, that I know but little more of your mind then I "did before, and that you seem to me to have raised more doubts and "darkness then you have resolved and dissipated. Yet being thus far "drawn in, I shall briefly say somewhat to the several Qs. not following your desires to answer one alone: which cannot be done to any "purpose while the foregoing are unresolved, because it is the clearing up of truth, and not the serving of your present ends in your writings now in hand that I must intend.

Answ. I affect no more bouts with such a captious wrangler, nor know I any need to Dispute so many questions, or to agree on terms; I shall answer him as I see meet. What he desired I gave him, not onely an explication of one word, but also of the thing, which that it raiseth so many doubts, seems not to be from the darkness of the understanding, but either from the lightness of the fancy, or the bent of the will to find a way to blunt the Readers attention ere he comes to the 8th. Qu. which it was just Mr. B. should have answered alone, sith otherwise it were an unjust thing for him to put me to prove a repeal of I know not what. His serving me hereby in my present ends of writing had been equal, my ends and writing being onely for the truth: His appear to be for a shift to uphold a while by indirect courses a tottering corruption, which must fall. I follow him.

SECT. LIV.

Infants were visible Churchmembers onely in the Congregation of Israel.

"THe first question (saith Mr. B.) being resolved that infants were "once Churchmembers, to the resolving of the second question, I "shall prove these two Propositions. 1. That it was not onely the

" infants of the congregation of Israel that were Churchmembers. 2.
" The infants of Israel were members of the universal visible Church, " and not onely of that particular congregation. The first I have proved " already in my book. And 1. Isaac was a Churchmember, yet none of " the congregation of Israel; it was not Israel till Jacobs days. If you " say that by the [congregation of Israel] you mean [the seed of A- " braham which had the promise of Canaan] yet 2. I say, that Ishmael " and Abrahams seed by Keturah and Esau had none of the promise, and " yet were Churchmembers in their infancy. [In Isaac shall thy seed be " called] that is that seed which had the promise of Canaan. And so it " was confined to Jacob, who got the blessing and the birthright, which " Esau lost, and was excluded, yet was of the Church from his infancy.
" The son of the bond woman was not to be heir with the son of the " free-woman, yet was Ishmael an infant member. If you say, that by " [the congregation of Israel] you mean all the natural seed of Abra- " ham: I add 3. The children of his bond men born in his family, or " bought with money, were none of Abrahams natural seed, and yet " were Churchmembers in their infancy. If you go yet further, and " say, that by [the congregation of Israel] you mean all that were at " the absolute dispose of Abraham or his successors, and so were his own:
" I add 4. The infants of free Proselytes were none such, and yet were " Churchmembers. If you yet go further, and say, that you mean by " [the congregation of Israel] any that came under the government " of Abraham or his successors: then I add 5. That the Sichemites,
" *Gen.*34. were not to come under Jacobs government, but to be his al" lies and neighbours, being so many more in number then Jacob, that " they concluded rather that his cattel and substance should be theirs;
" yet were they circumcised every male, and so were made members of " the visible professing Church. For it was not the bare external sign " that Jacob or his sons would perswade them to, without the thing sig" nified: For the reproach that they mentioned of giving their daugh" ter to the uncircumcised, was not in the defect of the external abcision;
" for so Moses own son, and all the Israelites in the wilderness should " have been under the same reproach, and all the females continually:
" But it was in that they were not in Covenant with the same God, and " did not profess to worship the same God in his true way of worship
" as they did. And therefore as Baptizing is not indeed and in Scrip" ture sence Baptizing, if it be not used for engagement to God, even " into his Name; so Circumcision is not indeed and in Scripture sence
" Circumcision, unless it be used as an engaging sign, and they be cir" cumcised to God.

Answ. By [the congregation of Israel] I meant the same with the Hebrew people, or house of Abraham, which I termed the congregation of Israel by an anticipation usual in Scripture; as when, *Gen.*12.8. it is said that Abraham removed unto a mountain on the east of Bethel, though it were not so named till Jacobs time, *Gen.*28.19. Which term I the rather chose, because it is most frequent in Scripture; and I remember not the phrase any where [the Church or congregation of Abra- ham,

ham, but of Israel] in Scripture, the phrase of which I thought best to use. Now taking the congregation of Israel for the Hebrew people or the house of Abraham, I say, the infants onely of the congregation of Israel, as I say here, Sect. 51. by birth property, or proselytism were visible Churchmembers. Nor is it any thing against this my Tenet, that the Sichemites infants, Gen. 34. were visible Churchmembers; for they were circumcised as consenting to become one people with them as is expressed v. 16, 22. and therefore of the congregation of Israel. So that what ever were the reason of the reproach, v. 14. what ever were the ends of Jacobs sons or the Sichemites, how ever the fact is to be construed, or it be to be judged that they were circumcised or not, yet that instance proves not visible Churchmembership of infants any where but in the congregation of Israel, sith the Sichemites if they were truly circumcised, and so visible Churchmembers, it was because they were by agreement one people, and so of the congregation of Israel. Mr. B. adds.

6. "It was then the duty of all the nations round about (if not of "all the nations on earth, that could have information of the Jewish "Religion) to engage themselves and their children to God by Cir- "cumcision. That all that would have any alliance and commerce "with the Jewes must do it, is commonly confessed: that it must "extend to infants, the case of the Sichemites (though deceitfully "drawn to it by some of Jacobs sons) doth shew, and so doth the Jewish "practice which they were to imitate: that the same engagement to the "same God is the duty of all the world, is commonly acknowledged, "though Divines are not agreed whether the distant nations were obli- "ged to use Circumcision the Jewish sign. The best of the Jews were "zealous to make Proselytes, and no doubt but the very law of nature "did teach them to do their best for the salvation of others. To think "such charitable and holy works unlawfull, is to think it evil to do the "greatest good. And if they must perswade the neighbour nations to "come in to God by Covenant engagement, they must perswade them "to bring their children with them, and to devote them to God as well "as themselves. For the Jews knew no other Covenanting or enga- "ging to God. As the Sichemites must do, so other nations must do: "For what priviledge had the children of the Sichemites above the rest "of the world?

Answ. This argument in form would be thus. If it were the duty of all the nations round about to engage themselves and their children to God by Circumcision, then it was not onely the infants of the Congregation of Israel that were Church members. But the antecedent is true, Ergo the consequent. Of this argument I deny the consequence of the major, and the minor also. I deny the consequence, because they that did engage themselves and children to God by Circumcision, did thereby ingraff themselves and children into the congregation of Israel. I deny also the minor. For though I acknowledge it was the duty of all the world to engage themselves to God by covenanting to take him for their God, yet I do not conceive that they were all bound to do it by circumcision. For I conceive that precept given onely to the Hebrews or house of Abraham. In which I am confirmed, in that I finde not that Sem, Melchisedeck, Lot, Job, ever did so or are blamed for not doing it. It is most certain that Cornelius, though a man that feared God with all his house, yet was neither he nor his house circumcised, Acts 10. 2. & 11. 3. and yet accepted of God. It is true, if any would keep the Passeover, and be admitted to the rites of the Tabernacle, he was to be circumcised with his males: But they might devote and engage themselves and children to God without it, nor was it necessary that God should be their God in covenant or to their salvation that they were circumcised, or joyned to the people of the Jews. I confess it was of much moment to reduce the nations, and to preserve them from the idolatry that defiled the world, to be of that people: for generally the uncircumcised who were aliens from the Commonwealth of Israel, were without God in the world, without Christ, without hope aliens from the Covenants of promise; and therefore it was a good office to endeavour to bring the nations to God by circumcision, and a desirable advantagious thing, as it is now to be in a well ordered fixed Church, yet I cannot say it is or was necessary for all, either as a duty or means of salvation to do either. Mr. B. goes on.

7. In Hesters time many of the people became Jews Hest. 8. 17. who yet were not under their government. And to be Jewes is to be of the Jewish profession. And it is well known that this was to be circumcised, they and their little ones (as the Proselytes were) and so to keep the Law of Moses.

Answ. Though they were not under the Jewes Government in respect of all power and command, yet they were incorporated into the Jewish people, and were under their government as far as other Jews by birth were, having some exercise and liberty of using their own lawes, though with subjection also to the Persian Princes. I confess their being Jews was by circumcising of them and their males, but hereby is not proved that any infants were visible Churchmembers but in the Congregation of Israel, but rather the contrary. Sith they were become Jews, that is of the Congregation of Israel.

8. Saith Mr. B. The scattered and captivated Jews themselves were from under the Government of Abrahams successors, and yet were to circumcise their children as Churchmembers.

Answ. Though they were from under the Government of Abrahams successor in respect of all power and command, yet they were under their Government so far, as they were permitted the exercise of the Mosaick Lawes, and were of the Congregation of Israel, and were Circumcised as members thereof; and therefore no infants yet proved visible Churchmembers out of that Congregation.

9. Saith Mr. B. when Jonas preached to Ninive, it was all the race of man among them, without exception, from the greatest to the least, that was to fast and joyn in the humiliation: Ergo, all, even infants as well as others, were to partake of the remission. If you say, the beasts were to fast too: I answer, as they were capable in their kinde of part of the curse,

ſo were they of part of the beneſit, but their capacity was not as mans: They faſted to manifeſt mans humiliation. And if by the humiliation of the aged the beaſts ſped the better in their kinde, no wonder if infants ſped the better in theirs, and according to their capacities, and that was to have a remiſſion ſuitable to their ſin.

Anſw. All this is quite from the buſineſs, for it proves not that either the aged or the infants were viſible Churchmembers out of the Congregation of Iſrael. If the faſting prove the viſible Churchmemberſhip, it proves the viſible Churchmemberſhip of the beaſts as well as the infant-men. If the repentance bee alledged to prove it, I hardly think ſuch a ſudden quickly paſt repentance will prove any of them viſible Churchmembers of Chriſt, any more then the Mariners prayer, fear, ſacrificing, making vowes, Jonah 1. 14. 6. If it do, yet it proves onely the aged who turned from their evil way, Jonah 3. 10. to be viſible Churchmembers; there's no proof yet of an infants viſible Churchmemberſhip out of the Congregation of Iſrael.

10. Saith Mr. B. What I have ſaid of Sem and many others, and their poſterity already, I ſhall not here again repeat: and more will be ſaid anon to the following queſtions.

Anſw. What is ſaid ſhall be anſwered in its place. Mr. B. goes on thus.

"The 2d. propoſition to be proved is, that [the Iſraelites children "were members of the univerſal viſible Church of Chriſt as well as of "the Congregation of Iſrael] But this you did heretofore acknowledge, "and therefore I ſuppoſe will not now deny. I ſuppoſe it paſt contro- "verſie between us; 1. That Chriſt had then a Church on earth. As "Abraham ſaw Chriſts day and rejoyced, and Moſes ſuffered the re- "proach of Chriſt, Heb. 11. 26. and the Prophets enquired of the ſal- "vation by Chriſt, and ſearched diligently, and prophefied of the "grace to come, and it was the ſpirit of Chriſt which was in thoſe Pro- "phets ſignifying the time, and teſtifying before hand the ſufferings "of Chriſt, and the glory that ſhould follow, 1 Pet. 1. 10, 11. So "were they part of the Church of Chriſt, and members of the body of "Chriſt. and given for the edification of that body: Though it was re- "vealed to them that the higher privigledes of the Church after the "comming of Chriſt, were not for them but for us, 1 Pet. 1. 12. 2. I "ſuppoſe it agreed on alſo between us, that there was no true Church "or Eccleſiaſtical worſhipping ſociety appointed by God in all the "world ſince the fall, but the Church of Chriſt, and therefore either "infants were members of Chriſts Church, or of no Church of Gods "inſtitution. Moſes Church and Chriſts Church according to Gods in- "ſtitution were not two, but one Church. For Moſes was Chriſts U- "ſher, and his ceremonies were an obſcurer Goſpel to lead men to "Chriſt: And though the fooliſh Jewes by miſ-underſtanding them "made a ſeparation, and made Moſes Diſciples to bee ſeparate from "Chriſts Diſciples, and ſo ſet up the alone [ſhadowes of things to come, "yet the body is all of Chriſt] Col 2. 17. and by ſo doing they viola- "ted Gods inſtitution, and unchurcht themſelves. 3. I ſuppoſe it a-

" greed also, that Christs Church is but one, and that even those of all " ages that are not at once visible, yet make up one body. 4. And that " therefore whoever is a member of any particular Church is a member " of the universal. (Though the Church was more eminently called " Catholike, when the wall of separation was taken down.) But I re- " member I have proved this in my Book, part. 1. chap. 20. and there- " fore shall say no more now.

Answ. I grant as I did heretofore, that the Israelites children were members of the universal visible Church of Christ, as well as of the Congregation of Israel, or rather in that they were of the Congregation of Israel, nor do I deny that Christ had then a Church on earth, nor that there was no true Church, or Ecclesiastical worshipping society appointed by God in all the world since the fall but the Church of Christ. But as for the third, though I grant that Christs invisible Church is but one by unity of the same spirit and faith, and that the visible Church is but one in some respect, namely in respect of the profession of the same faith and hope in Christ: yet they are not so one, as that whoever is a visible member of one particular Church, is a member of each particular Church; and though I yeild that whoever is a member of any particular Church is a member of the universal, yet it follows not, which is it that Mr. B. drives at, and vainly talks of his proving it elsewhere, as will be shewed hereafter) that every one who was a member of the universal Church, in that he was a member of the Jewish Church particular, was a visible member of every particular visible Church of Christ; nor that every one that was a member of the universal Church, in that hee was a member of a visible particular Church of Christ, was a visible member of the Jewish particular Church. As for instance, Cornelius and his house who feared God, Acts 10. 2. were visible members of that particular Church of his house, and so of the universal, yet were not visible members of the particular Church Jewish, as may bee proved from their uncircumcision and shunning as unclean by the Jews, Acts 10. & 11. 3. The reason is manifest: For the universal hath not a distinct existence from the parts, nor is any part existing in another part, because it is part of the whole, as the finger is not in every part of the body because it is in the body, in that it is in the hand, which is a part. And therefore Mr. Bs. arguing (which he confides so much in, part. 1. ch. 20. of plain Script. &c.) will appear to be vain; that because infants were visible members of the Church universal, in that they were of the Church Jewish, therefore they are in the Christian, properly so called, contradistinct to the Jewish. Which speech I use, as commonly Divines do, because though the Jewish Church were Christs Church, yet the appellation of Christians being not afore the dayes of the Apostles Acts 11. 26. we may fitly say the Church in the wilderness was not the Christian properly so called, that is, which is gathered out of the nations by the Apostles preaching, nor Moses in the Christian Church, nor Cornelius in the Jewish Church, as Ægypt though in Africa, and Persia though in Asia, yet are not said to be in Asia the less, or Africa propria. Mr. B. proceeds,

Concerning the matter of the third Qu. I assert that [it was not onely of the Jewes Commonwealth that infants were members of, but of the Church distinct from it.] This is proved sufficiently in what is said before.

Answ. As yet I do not finde it proved, that the Jewish Church was distinct from the Commonwealth, or that there was any member of the Church who was not of the Commonwealth. What is said about it, sect. 43. may be there seen by the Reader.

Moreover, saith Mr. B. 1. Infants were Churchmembers in Abrahams family before Circumcision, and after when it was no Commonwealth. So they were in Isaacs, Jacobs, &c.

Answ. Abrahams family, and Isaacs, and Jacobs, were a Commonwealth, although they were but small; they had government within themselves. Abraham had his trained servants and made war of himself, Gen. 14. 14. Isaac made a league as a Prince co ordinate, Gen. 26. 31. so did Jacob, Gen. 31. 53. These with other acts shew they were an independent Commonwealth.

2. Saith Mr. B. The banished, captivated, scattered Jews, that ceased to bee members of their Commonwealth, yet ceased not to bee of the Church.

Answ. They were then of the Commonwealth of the Jews, as they were of the Church, both de jure, and de facto, they acknowledging themselves to be of that people, and to adhere to their laws, although somewhat restrained of their liberty, as a captivated, imprisoned King or subject is head or member of that Republique to which he hath not access.

3. Saith Mr. B. The people of the land, that became Jews in Hesters time, joyned not themselves to their Commonwealth: Nor the Sichemites.

Answ. The contrary is true; as concerning the Sichemites is shewed before.

4. Saith he, Many Proselytes never joyned themselves to their Commonwealth.

Answ. Those Proselytes were not of the Jewish Church visible members.

5. Saith he, The children of Abraham by Keturah, when they were removed from his family were not unchurched; and yet were no members of the Jewes Commonwealth. But I shall take up with what is said for this already, undertaking more largely to manifest it, when I perceive it necessary and useful.

Answ. Abrahams children by Keturah, when out of the Commonwealth of the Hebrews were unchurched, at least, in respect of the Church of the Hebrews; nor do I conceive Mr. Bs. larger manifestation of the contrary, will be any thing but more words without proof.

SECT. LV.

Infants of the Jewes were not visible Churchmembers, by Promise, or Precept; as Mr. B. teacheth.

MR. B. proceeds. To the 4th. Qu. I assert that [1. There was a Law or Precept of God obliging the parents to enter their children into Covenant with God, by accepting his favour, and re-engaging and devoting them to God, and so entering them solemnly Churchmembers.] And [2. there was a Covenant, promise or grant of God, by which he offered the Churchmembership of some infants and actually conferred it, where his offer was accepted.] I should have mentioned this first, and therefore will begin with the proof of this. By these terms Covenant, promise, grant, or deed of gift, &c. we understand that which is common to all these, viz. [A signe of Gods will conferring or confirming a right to or in some benefit] such as we commonly call a Civil act of Collation as distinct from a mere Physical act of disposal. I call it [a signe of Gods will de jure] because that is the general nature of all his legal moral acts: they are all signal determinations de debito, of some due. 2. I say conferring or confirming right to some benefit] to difference it from precepts which onely determine what shall be due from us to God, and from threatnings, which determine what punishment shall be due from God to us.

Answ. That which Mr. B. asserts here, is in opposition to what I said in my 2d. Letter; I confess infants were by Gods fact of taking the whole people of the Jews for his people, in that estate of the Jewish pædagogy (not by any promise or precept) visible Churchmembers, that is of the Congregation of Israel; and in my 3d. I explain my self, a promise conferring to infants the benefit of Churchmembership, with all the consequent privileges, a precept constituting the duty of devoting and dedicating the child to God, and entring into Covenant, which confers the benefit (which were his own words in his first Letter) so that if we prove by any other grant or deed of gift, physical or moral, which is not a promise of it, by which it is conferred, or by any Law which is not such a precept, he contradicts not my speech, and so disputes not ad idem. Which whether he do or no, will be perceived by examining what follows.

Having thus, saith he, explained the terms, I prove the proposition. If infants Churchmembership with the priviledges thereof were a benefit conferred, which some had right to or in, then was there some grant, covenant, or promise, by which this right was conferred: But the antecedent is most certain: Ergo, so is the consequent. I suppose you will not deny that it was a benefit to be the covenanted people of God, to have the Lord engaged to bee their God, and to take them for his people, to bee brought so near him, and to bee separated from the common and unclean, from the world, and from the strangers to the Covenant of promises, that live as without God in the world, and without hope.

Answ. I do not deny it, but I deny that this is to be visible Churchmembers formally, or connexively. For men may be visible Churchmembers, and yet not have all this benefit, and they may have all this benefit who are not visible Churchmembers. Hypocrites may be visible Churchmembers, yet not be Gods covenanted people to have the Lord engaged to be their God, and to take them for his people, to be brought so near him, &c. And some believing Saints that are dumb, may have all this, and yet not be visible Churchmembers.

Mr. B. adds, If it were asked what benefit had the Circumcision? I suppose you would say, much every way.

Answ. I should, but I would add; that to bee the Circumcision is not all one as to be visible Churchmembers: Cornelius and his house were visible Churchmembers yet not the Circumcision: Nor were the benefits mentioned Rom. 3. 1 2. conferred to them as visible Churchmembers, (For then all visible Churchmembers had been partakers of the same benefits, they had had the Oracles of God committed to them, the giving the Law, Christ from them after the flesh, &c. Rom. 9. 4, 5. which is false) but as to a people specially loved and gratified with these priviledges.

He adds. If Infant-Churchmembership were no benefit, then they that had it, were not (when they came to age or their parents in the mean time) obliged to any thankfulness for it. But they were obliged to be thankful for it. Ergo, it was a benefit.

Answ. Visible Churchmembership simply notes onely a state, by which was a benefit. By the infant visible Jewish Churchmembership was a benefit of honour and special dignity above other people, which God then vouchsafed to the Jews, and doth not so now to infants of believing Christians as such, and for it the Jew parents and children were to be thankful.

He goes on. "The next thing in the antecedent to be proved is, "that there was a right conferred to this benefit, and some had "a right in it. And 1. if any had the benefit, then had they right to or "in that benefit: But some had the benefit, Ergo. The consequence of "the major is certain. 1. Because the very nature of the benefit consisteth in a right to further benefits. 2. If any had the benefit of Church-"membership, Covenant-interest, &c. without right; then they had "it with Gods consent and approbation or without it. Not with it: "For hee is just, and consenteth not that any have that which "hee hath not some right to or in, not without it: For no man "can have a benefit from God against his will, or without it. "2. If no infants had duely and rightfully received this benefit, God "would have somewhere reprehended the usurpation and abuse of his "ordinances or benefits. But that hee doth not as to this case, Ergo. "3. God hath expressed this right in many texts of Scripture, of which "more afterward.

Answ. Mr. B. is guilty of that which he chargeth me with unjustly, jumbling things together which are to be distinguished, visible Churchmembership, right to or of visible Churchmembership, to the benebenefits of it, duly and righ fully receiving of it. The infants of the Jews were visible Churchmembers, not by a legal right to it, anteceedent to their being such visible Churchmembers, which they or any for them might claim as due; nor was it capable of duly and rightfully being received or usurped: For it was nothing but a state of appearing to be part of that people, who were in appearance from things sensible, Gods people; and this they had by Gods fact of making them to be a part of that people visibly, to wit, his forming them and bringing them into the world, and placing them so as to be ranked among his visible people, and known by things obvious to sense to be of this people, from which this state resules without any such receiving as may be denominated duly or rightfully done or usurped. Yet I grant they had a right in it, that is, they had it by Gods donation, without any usurpation by them or any other; and they had right to the benefit consequent, as to the honour and esteem and dignity absolutely, and to other benefits, if there were any other annexed to it, whether absolutely or conditionally. Yet to the proofs of Mr. B. I say, 1. That it seems to me not true, that the nature of the benefit of infants visible Churchmembership consisteth in a right to further benefits. 2. That if it were true, yet I see not how it proves this consequence, If any had the benefit, then they had right to or in that benefit. A man may have a benefit without right, though the nature, or as I would speak, the condition of it be such as to draw with it a right to further benefits; as a man may have a Lordship without right, which gives him a right to further benefits. 3. That Mr. B. jumbles together Churchmembership, Covenant interest, &c. whereas a person may have no interest in Gods Covenant, who is a visible Churchmember; and he may have interest in Gods Covenant, who is no visible Churchmember. 4. His speech, God is just, and consenteth not that any have that which he hath not some right to or in, as the words seem to import, is not right. For 1. they intimate as if visible Churchmembership were given out of distributive justice, which gives to every man his own. But this I conceive to be very erroneous. For as Regeneration, so also visible Churchmembership are of bounty by God as Soveraign Lord, not of distributive justice by God as a Judge. 2. That all that any man hath from God, he hath of debt, contrary to the Apostle, Rom. 4. 4. 3. That visible Churchmembership is conceived as a thing offered, and to be duly and rightfully received, or to be attained by usurpation and abuse of Gods ordinances or benefits. But this I understand not how it is according to Mr. Bs. Doctrine. 1. He conceives visible Churchmembership distinct from Circumcision. What Ordinance is there then which may be abused by receiving visible Churchmembership? 2. The visible Churchmembership of infants among the Jews, doth not to me appear to be a thing tendered or offered by God upon condition of parents faith, and to be accepted or refused: but to be a state resulting from Gods fact forementioned without such offer. 6. What is in the Scriptures after expressed, shall be viewed in it's place.

Mr. B. adds, I am next to prove the consequence, that [this right was conferred by some grant, promise, or Covenant of God.] And this is as easie as to prove that the world was made by Gods power and efficiency or will; or to prove that God is the owner of all things, and no man can receive them but by his gift. 1. If there be no other way possible for right to be conveyed from God to us, but onely by his grant, promise, or Covenant, (which we call donation, and is a moral civil action,) then it is by this means that it is conveyed. But there is no other possible way of such conveyance: Ergo. we have no right till God give us right. His will signified createth our right. No man can have right to that which is wholly and absolutely anothers, but by his consent or will. This will is no way known, but by some signs of it. These signs of such a will for conveyance of right to a benefit, are a civil moral action, called a donation or gift simply. If the sign be in writing, we commonly call it a Deed of gift. If it be by word of mouth, conferring a present right, we call it a verbal grant or gift. If it confer only a future right, we call it a promise, and sometimes a Covenant; and sometimes the word Covenant signifieth both, that act which gives a present right, and promiseth the continuance of it. Right being a moral or civil thing, can be no way conveyed but by a moral or civil action. A gift that was never given, is a contradiction. So that this part of our controversie is as easie as whether two and two be four.

Answ. Visible Churchmembership is not a right, but a state of being; as to be healthy, strong, rich, &c. which are not given by a civil moral action, but by providence of God acting physically, as the soveraign disposer of all. It is certain, that it is by Gods will, as all things are; but this will is no otherways signified then by the event, as conversion and many other gifts of God are. My meaning is, though these things are by vertue of Gods will, and are signified in the general by some Declaration of Gods purpose and order by which he acts, which may be called his Covenant; yet in the particulars, I mean for the persons, time, &c. there is not any Covenant that assures these persons conversion or visible Churchmembership, or that estates infants in either of those benefits as their right by vertue of Gods promise as the sole efficient of it, upon that condition Mr. B. asserts, that is, the parents faith, as I have proved before, Sect. 52. I deny therefore that there is such a promise of God as conferred infants visible Churchmembership upon the parents faith. And to Mr. Bs. argument I say, that though it be easie to prove that visible Churchmembership is by Gods donation, or grant; yet to argue therefore it must be by a promise, such as Mr. B. asserts, follows not, it being no good argument which is drawn affirmatively from the genus to the species, it must be by Gods gift or grant, ergo by promise. Yea, according to Mr. B. here a promise confers onely a future right, and therefore it doth not make actually visible Churchmembers without some further act, and therefore not the promise or Covenant of God is the next adequate cause of it, but some other act of God, and consequently there is another possible yea manifest way, without the promise of it upon condition of parents faith, which Mr. B. asserts.

But Mr. B. saith. 2. God hath expresly called that all a Covenant or promise promise by which he conveyeth this right: which we shall more fully manifest anon when we come to it.

Answ. These are but words, as will appear by that which followes.

"The 2d. Proposition, saith Mr. B. to be proved, is, that [there was a "law or precept of God obliging the parents to enter their children "into Covenant and Churchmembership, by accepting of his offer, "and re-engaging them to God.] And this is as obvious and easie as "the former. But first I shall in a word here also explain the terms. "The word [law] is sometimes taken more largely, and unfitly, as "comprehending the very immanent acts or the nature of God, consi- "dered without any sign to represent it to the creature. So many call "Gods nature or purposes the Eternal Law: which indeed is no law, "nor can be fitly so called. 2. It is taken properly for [an authorita- "tive determination de debito constituendo vel confirmando.] And so "it comprehendeth all that may fitly be called a law. Some define "it, [Jussum majestatis obligans aut ad obedientiam aut ad pœnam.] "But this leaves out the præmiant part, and some others: So that of "Grotius doth, Est regula actionum moralium obligans ad id quod rectum "est. I acquiesce in the first, or rather in this, which is more full and "exact; [A law is a sign of the Rectors will constituting or confirm- "ing right or dueness.] That it be a sign of the Rectors will de debito "constituendo vel confirmando, is the general nature of all laws. Some "quarrel at the word [sign] because it is logical and not political: "As if politicians should not speak logically as well as other men! "There is a two-fold due; 1. What is due from us to God (or any "Rector;) and this is signified in the precept and prohibition, (or "in the precept de agendo & non agendo.) 2. What shall be due to "us; and this is signified by promises, or the præmiant part of the "law, and by laws for distribution and determination of proprieties. "All benefits are given us by God in a double relation, both as Rector "and Benefactor: or as Benefactor regens; or as Rector benefaciens: "though among men that stand not in such a subordination to one ano- "ther as we do to God, they may be received from a meer benefactor "without any regent interest therein. The first laws do ever constitute "the debitum or right: afterward there may be renewed laws and pre- "cepts to urge men to obey the former, or to do the same thing: and "the end of these is either fuller to acquaint the subject with the for- "mer, or to revive the memory of them, or to excite to the obedience "of them: And these do not properly constitute duty, because it was "constituted before; but the nature and power of the act is the same "with that which doth constitute it, and therefore doth confirm the con- "stitution, and again oblige us to what we were obliged to before. "For obligations to one and the same duty may be multiplied. 3. Some "take the word [law] in so restrained a sence as to exclude verbal or "particular precepts, especially directed but to one; or a few men; "and will onely call that a law which is written, or at least a well "known custome obliging a whole society in a stated way. These be

"the most eminent sort of laws: but to say that the rest are no laws, is "vain and groundless, against the true general definition of a law, and "justly rejected by the wisest politicians. That which we are now to en-"quire after, is a precept, or the commanding part of a law, which is "[a sign of Gods will obliging us to duty,] of which signs there are "materially several sorts, as 1. by a voice, that's evidently of "God: 2. by writing: 3. by visible works or effects: 4. by se-"cret impresses, as by inspiration, which is a law onely to him that "hath them.

Answ. Mr. B. undertook to explain the terms, and he onely, and that unnecessarily and tediously, explains one term, to wit [law,] which was not the term in my Letter, to which his Proposition was to be opposed, but the word [precept;] whereas he should have explained what he meant by the parents entring their children into Covenant and Churchmembership, and what offer he meant they were to accept, and how, and how they were to engage them to God, and how this entring, accepting, re-engaging did confer the benefit of visible Churchmembership to their children, and what precept it is that is unrepealed distinct from the precept of Circumcision, which I presume he doth not hold unrepealed. All these were necessary to have been distinctly set down, that I might have known his meaning, and thereby have known whether his assertion opposeth my position, and whether he prove it or not. But that the Reader may the better perceive where the point to be proved lies, I shall set down distinctly what I conceive Mr. B. means, and then what I assert, and what Mr. B. should prove in opposition to my assertion.

1. I conceive he imagines an offer of God to parents, which he calls a promise or Covenant, that upon their taking him to be their God, he would be a God to their children, even their infants. 2. That parents are and were bound to accept of this offer for their children. 3. That by it they do enter them into Covenant, that is, they do Covenant for them that they shall be Gods people, and consequently they partake of the Covenant that God is their God. 4. That by vertue of this entring into Covenant, accepting, and re-engaging them to God, they are visible Churchmenbers.

I assert 1. There is no such offer, promise, or Covenant. 2. That though there are precepts for parents to pray for their children, to breed them up for God by example, teaching, &c. yet they are not bound to believe this; that upon their own faith God will take their infant children to be his, and he will be a God to them, nor to accept of this pretended offer, sith there is no such promise or offer. 3. That though parents may enter into Covenant for their children, that is, they may do it as those, Deut. 29. 12. either by charge and adjuration, or by wishing a curse to them if they did not cleave to God, as Nehem. 10. 29. Josh. 6. 25. and this may have an obligation on them beyond the precept, and influence on them as a motive, as the Oath to the Gibeonites, Josh. 9. 16. yet by this their entring into Covenant for them, they do not make them partakers of the Covenant or promise that God wil be their God.

4. That

4. That if there were such a promise, and such a duty of accepting the pretended offer, and re-engaging; yet this neither did then, nor doth now make infants visible Churchmembers. So that the point between us is, Whether there be such a precept to parents besides Circumcision, of entring into Covenant, accepting an offer of God to be their God for their children according to a promise that he will be so, and re-engaging them to God, whereby they become actually visible Churchmembers? This Mr. B. affirms, I deny. He speaks thus.

"Having thus opened the terms [law and precept,] I prove "the Proposition thus. 1. If it was the duty of the Israelites to accept "Gods offered mercy for their children, to engage and devote them "to him in Covenant, then there was a law or precept which made this "their duty, and obliged them to it. But it was a duty: Ergo, there "was such a law or precept. For the antecedent, 1. If it were not a "duty, then it was either a sin, or a neutral indifferent action: But it "was not a sin, (for 1. it was against no law, 2. it is not reprehend-"ed;) nor was it indifferent, for it was of a moral nature, and ergo ei-"ther good or evil, yea sin or duty: For properly permittere is no "act or law, (though many say it is,) but a suspension of an act: and "so licitum is not moraliter bonum, but onely non malum; and ergo is not "properly within the verge of morality. 2. If there be a penalty "(and a most terrible penalty) annexed for the non-performance, "then it was a duty: But such a penalty was annexed (as shall anon "be particularly shewed) even to be cut off from his people, to be put "to death, &c. If it oblige ad pœnam, it did first oblige ad obedientiam: "For no law obligeth ad pœnam, but for disobedience, which presup-"poseth an obligation to obedience. 3. If it were not the Israelites "duty to enter their children into Gods Covenant and Church, then it "would have been none of their sin to have omitted or refused so to "do: But it would have been their great and hainous sin to have "omitted or refused it; Ergo. Now to the consequence of the major. "There is no duty but what is made by some law or precept as it's pro-"per efficient cause or foundation: Ergo, if it be a duty, there was cer-"tainly some law or precept that made it such. Among men we say, "that a benefit obligeth to gratitude, though there were no law: But "the meaning is, if there were no humane law, and that is because the "law of God in nature requireth man to be just and thankfull. If there "were no law of God natural or positive that did constitute it or oblige "us to it, there could be no duty. 1. There is no duty but what is "made such by Gods signified will, ergo, no duty but what is made such "by a law or precept. For a precept is the sign of Gods will obliging "to duty. 2. Where there is no law there is no transgression, Rom. 4. "15. ergo, where there is no law there is no duty; for these are con-"traries: it is a duty not to transgress the law, and a transgression not "to perform the duty which it requireth of us. There is no apparent "ground of exception, but in case of Covenants. Whether a man may "not oblige himself to a duty meerly by his consent? I answer, 1. He "may oblige himself to an act, which he must perform, or else prove

" unfaithfull and dishoneſt: but his own obligation makes it not ſtrict-
" ly a duty: ergo, when God makes a Covenant with man, he is as " it were obliged in point of fidelity, but not of duty. 2. He that ob" ligeth himſelf to an act by promiſe, doth occaſion an obligation to du" ty from God, becauſe God hath obliged men to keep their promiſes.
" 3. So far as a man may be ſaid to be his own ruler, ſo far may he be " ſaid to oblige himſelf to duty, (that is duty to himſelf, though the act
" be for the benefit of another;) but then he may as fitly be ſaid to " make a law to himſelf, or command himſelf: ſo that ſtill the duty
" (ſuch as it is) hath an anſwerable command. So that I may well " conclude, that there is a law, becauſe there is a duty. For nothing " but a law could cauſe that duty, nor make that omiſſion of it a ſin.
" Where there is no law, ſin is not imputed, Rom. 5. 13. But the omiſſion
" of entring infants into Covenant with God before Chriſts incarnati" on would have been a ſin imputed; ergo, there was a law commanding
" it. 2. If it was a duty to dedicate infants to God, or enter them into " Covenant with him, then either by Gods will, or without it: cer" tainly not without it. If by Gods will, then either by his will reveal" ed, or unrevealed. His unrevealed will cannot oblige; for there
" wants promulgation, which is neceſſary to obligation: And no man " can be bound to know Gods unrevealed will, unleſs remotely, as it " may be long of himſelf that it is not to him revealed. If it be Gods " revealed will that muſt thus oblige, then there was ſome ſign by " which it was revealed. And if there were a ſign revealing Gods will " obliging us to duty, then there was a law, For this is the very nature " of the preceptive part of a law, (which is the principal part,) ſo that " you may as well ſay, that you are a reaſonable creature, but not a " man, as ſay that men were obliged to duty by Gods revea'ed will, but " yet not by a law or precept. 3. We ſhall anon produce the law or " precept, and put it out of doubt that there was ſuch a thing. In the " mean time I muſt confeſs, I do not remember that ever I was put to " diſpute a point that carrieth more of it's own evidence to ſhame the " gain-ſayer. And if you can gather Diſciples even among the godly,
" by perſwading them that there were duties without precepts or laws,
" and benefits without donations, covenants, or promiſe confirming " them, then deſpair of nothing for the time to come: You may per" ſwade them that there is a ſon without a father, or any relation " without it's foundation, or effect without it's cauſe, and never " doubt but the ſame men will believe you, while you have the ſame
" intereſt in them, and uſe the ſame artifice in putting off your
" conceits.

Anſw. This te ious unneceſſary diſcourſe I have ſet together, leſt it ſhould be ſaid I omitted it becauſe I could not anſwer it, though I might have well done it, and granted him his concluſion without any revocation of what I had written to him. For his concluſion is, that there was a law or precept to the Iſraelites to accept of Gods offered mercy for their children to engage and devote them to him in Covenant, which I never denied, onely I denied that this was any other then Circumciſion, or that this conferred the benefit, that is, made them visible Church-members, or that this mercy, as he calls it, was offered by a Covenant to be a God to believers and their seed, or that parents did by their act enter the children into Covenant, that is, Gods Covenant to be their God, or Covenant to God, in proper speech whereby they covenanted to be his people. And for the first, it seems to me, 1. That Mr. B. can produce no other law or precept binding the Israelites to this duty besides that of Circumcision, because he neither here nor elsewhere that I know of produceth any other. 2. That he means no other by two passages in this discourse; 1. because he saith there was a most terrible penalty annexed to this law obliging Israelites for non-performance (as shall be anon particularly shewed) even to be cut off from his people, to be put to death, &c. which he neither shews to be any other, nor do I think he could mean any other then that of Circumcision: 2. He saith, the omission of entring infants into Covenant with God before Christs incarnation, would have been a sin imputed; his limiting it to the time before Christs incarnation, intimates he meant it of Circumcision. 3. That he deals like as if he meant deceitfully, in putting off the naming the law or precept to another place, which it had been requisite for the Answerer and Reader to have found here, that it might be discerned what law he meant. And for the 2d. I say, if he could prove or produce that or any other law or precept; yet if he did not prove that thereby the infants were made visible Churchmembers, he proves not the contradictory to my writing. The other two points belong to the two foregoing and following questions. As for his confession, though his injurious insinuations of me are so frequent and so frivolous, that I could pass by them as the hissing of a Goose, or the snarling of a Curre; yet because his speeches do much wrong the truth and way of God through my sides, I judge it fit to reply, 1. That I see not reason to be ashamed of my assertion, but Mr. B. hath cause to be ashamed of his own heedlesness, and misrepresentation of my assertion, and roving from the point he should prove. 2. That I gather no Disciples to my self; but endeavour to reform the abuse of Infant Baptism, and to restore the right use of Christian Baptism, according to the plain appointment of Christ in Scripture, and practice of his Apostles. 3. That he that will be perswaded by Mr. B. that infants are Disciples meant Matth. 28.19. and that in Gen. 1.26. & 3.15. is a law or ordinance of God for infants visible Churchmembership, will believe any thing that he saith. 4. That were it not for the opinion he hath obtained of godliness by his Book of Rest, the esteem he hath gained by his writings for the Ministery, and the advantage they have by his Book of Baptism to maintain their practice and station, it were not likely so vain a Book would be esteemed among Schollers. 5. That were it not for the affrightments of Mr. B. through his calumnies and slanders, as if Ranters, Quakers, and all sorts of errours and sects sprang from Antipædobaptism, godly tender conscienc'd persons durst not maintain as they do so gross a corruption as their Baby sprinkling is, nor neglect so great and fundamental a duty as Baptism is according to the Scripture.

eure; But the Lord will judge betweene us. I proceede.

The 5th Qu. saith Mr. B. requireth me to lay down this assertion, that [there is no law or precept of God which doth not oblige to duty; and no actual promise or donation, which doth not confer the benefit.] This I aver on occasion of your last Letter, where in contradiction to the former, you confess [the promises to the natural posterity of Abraham, Gen. 17. and the Covenants made with Israel at Mount Sinai, and Deut. 29. and a precept of Circumcision, and precepts of God by Moses, of calling the people, and requiring them to enter into Covenant, Exod. 19. Deut. 29.] Yet you [do not conceive that the infants of Israel were made visible Churchmembers by the promises in the Covenants, or the precepts forenamed.] If so, then either you imagine that among all those precepts and promises there was yet no promise or Covenant that gave them the benefit of Churchmembership, or precept concerning their entrance into that state; or else you imagine that such promises were made, but did not actually confer the benefit, and such precepts were made, but did not actually oblige. Your words are so ambiguous in this, that they signifie nothing of your mind to any that knows it not some other way. For when you say [there is no such particular promise concerning infants visible Churchmembership, or precept, &c. besides Circumcision, as in my Book of Baptism I assert,] who knows whether that exception of [Circumcision] be a concession of such a precept or promise in the case of Circumcision? or if not, what sense it hath? and what you imagine that precept or promise to be which I assert? and before the sence of your one syllable [such] is discerned by trying it by a whole volume, I doubt you will make what your list of it. However, if you should mean, that such precepts there are as have for their subject [the avouching God to be their God, the entring into Covenant Circumcision] of infants, but not their Churchmembership; then 1. I have proved the contrary to the negative before; 2. and more shall do anon; 3. and it's a palpable contradiction to the precedent affirmative. But if you mean that Churchmembership of infants as well as others is the subject or part of the subject of those promises or precepts, and yet that infants were not made or confirmed thereby; it is the contrary that I am asserting, and I have no further need to prove, then by shewing the contradiction of your opinion to it self. For an actual Covenant or promise that doth not give right to the benefit promised (according to it's tenour and terms,) is like a cause that hath no effect, a father that did never generate, and it's all one as to say, A gift or Covenant which is no gift or Covenant, seeing the name is denied, when the thing named and defined is granted. So a precept or law to enter infants solemnly into Churchmembership, which yet obligeth none so to enter them, is as groß a contradiction as to say, the Sun hath not heat or light, and yet is truly a Sun.

Answ. I grant his assertion, that there is no precept of God which doth not oblige to duty, nor donation which doth not confer the benefit; though sundry things which have the title of Gods lawes oblige not to duty, and an actual promise doth not put the thing promised in present being as the next cause, but the thing promised is thereby onely made future, yea a promise that it shall be doth suppose it not to be, and that there is something else the next and immediate cause of its actual being. The imagined contradiction in my later to my former Letter, is before cleared not to be so Sect. 53. Though I have said enough before in this and other fore-going Sections, yet to take away all colour of charging me with ambiguity, 1. I acknowledge that the Covenant at Mount Sinai, and the Covenant Deut. 29. did declare the people of the Jews to be Gods people, or his visible Church; in that the Covenant was mutual, and open between them and God. 2. That they were Gods visible Church not barely by Gods promise to them to be their God, but by their promise to God: Gods call of them made them his Church, their promise to God with other acts made them visibly so. 3. The promises of God Gen. 17. did not of themselves make the house of Abraham Gods visible Church. 4. The call of God, and such acts as whereby he separated them from others to bee his (which were many) made the house of Abraham Gods Church. 5. The infants were members of that Church, in that they were part of that people. 6. Such things as whereby they were visibly of that people, their birth, cohabitation, &c. did make them visible Churchmembers. 7. Circumcision was one sign not by it self but with other things, whereby the male infants and adult were known to be of Gods visible Church. 8. No promise of God, nor duty of parents did make the infants actually visible Churchmembers, as the next cause in act either formal or efficient. If Mr. B. or any Reader will heed these passages, with what goes before, hee may easily discern my minde, and acquit me from self-contradiction, if not I think it in vain for me to use more words. I pass on to that which follows.

SECT. LVI.

That the People, and thereby the Infants of the Hebrews, were made visible Churchmembers by a transeunt fact, is made good against Mr. Bs. exceptions.

"I Come next (saith Mr. B.) to the 6th. Qu. Whether indeed there "be any transeunt fact, which without the causation of any promise "or precept, did make the Israelites infants Churchmembers. This "you affirm (if you would be understood;) whether this your ground "of infants Churchmembership or mine be righter, I hope will be no "hard matter for another man (of common capacity) to discern. By a "[transeunt fact] thus set as contradistinct to a law, precept, or pro-"mise, either you mean the act of legislation and promise making, or "some other merely physical act. If the former, it is too ridiculous to "be used in a serious business: For you should not put things in com-"petition excluding the one, where they both must necessarily concur, "the one standing in a subordination to the other. Was there ever a "Law or Covenant made in the world any other way then by a transe-"unt fact? Sure all legislation is by some signification of the Soveraigns

"will. And the making of that ſign is a tranſeunt fact. If it be by voice "is not that tranſient? If by writing is not the act tranſeunt? If by "creation it ſelf, the act is tranſeunt though the effect bee permanent. "And certainly if legiſlation or promiſing be your tranſeunt fact, you "do very abſurdly put it in oppoſition to a law (or promiſe) it being "the making of ſuch a law. And the legiſlation doth no way oblige the "ſubject, but by the law ſo made: nor doth the making of a promiſe, "grant or covenant, confer right to the benefit which is the ſubject of "of it, any otherwiſe then as it is the making of that grant which ſhall "ſo conferre it. As the making of a knife doth not cut, but the knife "made: and ſo of other inſtruments. So that if the law oblige not, "or the grant confer not, certainly the legiſlation or promiſe-making "cannot do it. I cannot therefore imagine that this is your ſenſe, "without charging you with too great abſurdity. As if you ſhould "ſay, It is not the will of the teſtator, i. e. his teſtament, that entileth "the legatary to the legacy, but it is the tranſeunt fact of the teſtator "in making that will: or it is not the Soveraigns commiſſion that au-"thoriſeth a Judge, ſouldier, &c. but it is the tranſeunt fact of wri-"ting or making that commiſſion. It is not the ſign that ſignifieth, but "the tranſeunt fact of making that ſign. Were not this a contemptible "arguing? To charge you with this were to make you tantùm non un-"reaſonable. And yet I know not what to ſay to you, that is, how "to underſtand you. For if you mean a mere phyſical tranſient fact, "which is no ſuch legiſlation or promiſe-making, then it is far more "abſurd then the former. For if it be not a ſigne of Gods will obliging "to duty, or conferring benefit, then can it not ſo oblige to duty, nor "confer benefits. It is no other tranſeunt fact but legiſlation that can "oblige a ſubject to duty, nor any other tranſeunt fact but promiſe, or "other donation, that can convey right to a benefit, or oblige the pro-"miſer. A moral or civil effect muſt bee produced by a moral or civil "action, and not by a mere phyſical action; which is unfit to produce "ſuch an alien effect, and can go no higher then it's own kinde. What "ſenſe therefore I ſhould put on your words, without making them ap-"pear unreaſonable, even much below the rates of ordinary rational "peoples diſcourſe, I cannot tell. For to ſay, It is not a law but legi-"ſlation, is all one as to ſay, It is not the fundamentum, but the lay-"ing of that foundation that cauſeth the relation, or from which it doth "reſult. And to ſay it is an alien phyſical act, which hath no ſuch "thing as right for its ſubject or terminus, is to confound phyſick and "morals, and to ſpeak the groſſeſt abſurdities; as to ſay that the tran-"ſient fact of eating, drinking, going, building, &c. do adopt ſuch an "one to be your heir. I muſt needs think therefore, till you have bet-"ter cleared your ſelf, that you have here quit yr ſelf as ill, and for-"ſaken and delivered up your Cauſe, as palpably as ever I knew man "do, without an expreſs confeſſion that it is naught. When men muſt "bee taught by this obtuſe ſubtilty to prove that infants Churchmem-"berſhip needed no revocation, forſooth [becauſe their Churchmem-"berſhip was not cauſed by a law, precept, promiſe or covenant, but

" by a transeunt fact] then which as you leave it, the world hath scarce " heard a more incoherent dream. But I pray you remember in your " reply that you being the affirmer of this, must prove it. Which I " shall expect, when you can prove that you can generate a man by " spitting or blowing your nose, or by plowing and sowing can pro- " duce Kings and Emperours.

Answ. I make not the Jews infants visible Churchmembers by bare legislation or promise-making, but by the transeunt fact described in my Letters, which was without promise or precept, that is promise of it on condition of the parents faith, or precept of accepting that offered mercy, entering into Covenant, and re-ingaging them to God, which are the promise and precept Mr. B, derives their visible Churchmembership from. Infants were visible Churchmembers among the Jewes, in that they were visibly a part of that people, who were Gods Church. So that to visible Churchmembership was requisite, 1. that God should make that people his Church, this he did by the transeunt fact described. 2. That the Infants should be visibly a part of that people, this he did by their bringing into the world, ranking them among his people, so as that they were discernable by their birth, nursing, circumcision, habitation, genealogy, and such other signes, to bee part of that Church. Their visible Churchmembership imports a state of visibility in the relations, 1. of a part to the whole, 2. of a people that are Gods, that is 1. separated from other people, 2. called and taken or brought to God. These things are done by various acts, which I conceive I did fitly call a transeunt fact. A physical and moral cause are thus described by Scheibler, Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 22. tit. 13. Topic. c. 3. tit. 14. Stierius part. Gen. Metaph. c. 12. A Physical or natural Cause, is that which truly flows into the effect, and nextly reacheth it by its activity. A Moral Cause, is that which doth not flow into the effect so as to reach to it, yet so behaves himself, that the effect may be imputed to him to praise or dispraise, reward or punishment. Such are causes applying the agent to the patient, counselling, commanding, perswading exhorting, instigating, meriting, permitting when they might and should hinder, &c. Visible Churchmembership is not as Mr. B. conceives it, formally a right to a benefit, or a benefit, though it may be so consecutively, or they may follow on it. But it is a complex term, noting a state with a double relation and imports a natural effect or term of action, as well, if not more then a moral, and is from physical as well as moral causes; and in infants visible Churchmembership, I judge it altogether an effect of a physical cause, as not knowing any moral action of God or man that makes them such; though to the visible Churchmembership of the people or body of which they are a part acts physical and moral do concur: which I shall clear in answering Mr. Bs. exceptions to my last Letter to him. As for his outeries of grossest absurdities, incoherent dreams, unreasonable even much below the rates of ordinary rational peoples discourse, contemptible arguing, obtuse subtility, contradictions, palpable forsaking and delivering up my Cause, generating a man by spitting or blowing my nose, with the rest of his Canine Scoptical Rhetorick, I pass by it as being of ill savour, hoping Mr. B. will in time come to better consideration of his writings, and either shew me my errour, or discern his own.

Mr. B. goes on thus. In consideration of the 7th. Qu. I shall consider the nature and effect of the transient fact which you here describe. And first of the reason of that name. You say that you call it [transeunt] [because done in time and so not eternal, and past and so not in congruum sense repealeable as a law, ordinance, statute, decree, which determines such a thing shall be for the future.] And do you think this the common sense of the word? or a fit reason of your application of it to the thing in hand. Answ. I do.

1. Saith Mr. B. I think your intellection and volition are immanent acts, and yet not eternal.

Answ. Yet all Gods immanent acts (of whom I spake) are eternal.

we use, saith he, to contradistinguish transient acts from immanent, and that because they do transire in subjectum extraneum. Answ. So do I.

But it seems you take them here as distinct from permanent.

Answ. Yea and immanent too.

But use your sence as long as we understand it.

Answ. With your good leave then I may use this term, if you understand it, if not I must alter it.

2. Saith Mr. B. If it be onely [past] actions which you call [transeunt] it seems your long fact which was so many hundred years in doing, was no transeunt fact till the end of all those years, and so did not (by your own doctrine) make any Churchmembers till the end of those years.

Answ. It doth but seem so: the truth is, in this long fact each particular act was a transeunt fact in each year, and in each age and space of time in which those acts were done, Churchmembers were made by one or more of those and other acts used by God to that end, and yet the transeunt fact not so fully accomplished, but that there was an addition till that people came to their ἀνδρα, or full stature, in which respect I comprehended all those many acts which I set down under the name of a transeunt fact, which I hope when he understands it, Mr. B. will give me leave to do.

3. Saith he. But Sir the question is not, whether it were a transeunt fact that laid the foundation by legislation or promise making; but whether the effect were trasient, or the act as it is in patiente: whether the law were transeunt which was made by a transeunt fact? and whether the moral action of that law were permanent or transient? it being most certainly such a moral act that must produce a title, or constitute a duty. Gods writing the ten Commandements in stone was a fact soon past, but the law was not soon past, nor the moral act of that law, viz. obligation. There are verbal laws, that have no real permanent sign: and yet the law may be permanent, and the obligation permanent, because the sign may have a permanency in esse cognito, and so the signifying vertue may remain by the help of memory, though the word did vanish in the speaking.

Answ. The question between us is, Whether the infants of the Jews were made visible Churchmembers by a promise of God to be the God of believers and their seed, and a precept obliging the parents to accept of this mercy offered for their children, and to enter them into Covenant; or by the tranſeunt fact I deſcribe. The queſtions which Mr. B. here ſets down, ſo far as I underſtand them, are no queſtions between us: and therefore this exception is but roving from the matter in hand.

2. Saith he, when you come to point out this tranſient fact individually, you ſay [it is Gods taking the whole people of the Jews for his people,] which you term [fact] as conceiving it moſt comprehenſive of the many particular acts in many generations whereby he did accompliſh it.] 1. I did not well underſtand before that [a fact] did ſo vaſtly differ from an [Act,] as to contain the acts (rather then the facts) of many generations.

Anſw. Though I think in uſe there is ſome difference, that act is applied to the particular actions, fact to them as they amount to ſome thing brought to paſs by them; yet if there were no ſuch difference, me thinks if Mr. B. had not been minded to multiply exceptions unneceſſarily, he might have allowed me to uſe a term (which in Diſputes is frequent) for my purpoſe eſpecially ſith he underſtands it.

2. Saith he, This is a long fact according to your meaſure, even from Abrahams call out of Ur: but how long it ſeems you are not well agreed with your ſelf For in the firſt part of your Letter you enumerate to the other acts that compoſe this fact [the bringing them into the bond of the Covenant at Mount Sinai, giving them Laws, ſetling their Prieſthood, Tabernacle, Army, Government, inheritance:] But before you end, you change your mind, and ſay [the Churchmemberſhip of the Iſraelites began as I conceive with Abrahams call, and was compleated when they were brought out of Ægypt to God. Exod. 19. 4.] But ſure that was long before the ſetling their inheritance. Your fact according to your laſt account was about 430 yeares in doing; but according to your firſt opinion, it was about 470 years long.

Anſw. In my firſt and laſt account there is no change of my mind. I did conceive, that the taking the whole people of the Jews for his people was compleated when they were brought out of Ægypt to God, Exod. 19. 4. as Chriſt ſaid It is finiſhed, John 19. 30. and yet more was to be done, becauſe the chief or hardeſt thing then was done which would draw after it all the reſt. As after the great battel at Arbella, Alexanders conqueſt might be ſaid to be finiſhed, though more were after to be done. I never meant to limit the fact to the time of their bringing out of Ægypt to God, but included all other additionals, though it were the main, and which brought along with it the reſt.

3. Saith Mr. B. If it were one individual fact of about 470 years long that made infants Churchmembers, then they could not be Churchmembers till that fact was paſt: For the effect is not before the cauſe, or cauſality of the efficient; the relation cannot be before the fundamentum be laid: and it ſeems this long fact was the laying of the fundamentum: But the conſequent is certainly falſe; for infants were Churchmembers before the end or compleating of your long fact: For they were Churchmembers (you'l grant) when Iſhmael and Iſaac were circumciſed. Ergo, it was not this long fact that made them Churchmembers.

Answ. I said I termed Gods taking the people of the Jews a fact, as a collective term, comprehensive of the many particular acts in many generations whereby he did accomplish it. By which it may easily be perceived, that I did not make the fact an individual action, for I called it many acts, nor did mean that the Churchmembership was not till all the acts were past, but that it was accomplished by them, that is, they were brought to full stature and growth as a formed people and Commonwealth: As we say a child is a man accomplished when he is brought to the years of a man, and yet he is a man before. And I answer to Mr. B's. argument taken from my words; that when I drew out the fact so long, and said, by it the infants were visible Churchmembers as a part of the Congregation of Israel, my meaning was, that respectively as the Congregation of Israel were made a Church by that fact, so were the infants members. By the call out of Ur, whereby God separated Abraham and his house from other people, the Congregation of Israel began to be Gods Church, and if there had been infants they had been visible Churchmembers; but they were not a compleated Church till they were brought out of Ægypt to God, Exod. 19. 4. nor infants members of a Church compleated till then when they were become a great nation, and were formed into a Theocratical Commonwealth. And being thus rightly understood (as my words imported) I said nothing which infers the absurdity of putting the effect afore the case, nor the putting off infants visible Churchmembership till the end of 470 years.

4. Saith he, If you mean that it was not the whole, but some part of this long fact that actually made infants Churchmembers, then you would have assigned that part, when that was the thing desired, and which you pretended exactly to perform; or at least you would not have told us it comprehended all these acts.

Answ. I did exactly tell Mr. B. in my Letter, it began with the call of Abraham out of Ur; and when I told him that the fact comprehended all those acts, yet I added for explication, [whereby it was accomplished or compleated.]

5. Saith he, And if each particular act did make infants Churchmembers, or lay a sufficient ground of it, then it seems that it was done before the institution of Circumcision. For Gods calling Abraham out of Ur was before it. So that the children born in his house must be Churchmembers upon that; and a sufficient ground laid for his own to have been such, if he had then had a natural issue: And it seems then that Ishmael was born a Churchmember many years before Circumcision.

Answ. I grant all this,

6. Saith he, If this be your meaning, I pray you be so just and impartial as to accept of the proof which I shall give you of infants Churchmembership before Abrahams days, if I make it appear to be as strong as this call of Abraham from Ur.

Answ. I shall.

7. Saith he, If you should mean that some one of these comprehended acts should of it self make any infants Churchmembers, then it must be any one;

one; for you no more assign it to one of them then to another, (onely say [chiefly the bringing them from Ægypt:] But surely some of these acts particularly cannot do it, As the leading to Padan Aram, the removal to Canaan, to Ægypt, placing, preserving there, setling their Army, &c. Did any one of these make infants to become Churchmembers?

Answ. No: But I did assign it to one of them more then to another, to wit, the beginning to Abrams call, the accomplishing to the bringing of them out of Ægypt to God, Exod. 19. 4

8. Saith he, Nay, suppose you mean that all these acts must concur to make them members, (and so that they were no members till many hundred years after the institution of Circumcision,) yet could not your Doctrine hold good: For some of these acts are of an alien nature, and no more apt to cause infant Churchmembership, then a bull to generate a bird. What aptitude hath the setling of an Army to be any part of the causation of infants Churchmembership? None, I think; at least if it be such an Army as ours: For surely the setling of ours caused no such thing, as you well know. What aptitude hath the leading to Padan Aram, or removal to Ægypt, to make infants Churchmembers? Nay, how strange is it, that the removing of Churchmembers, and such as had been infant Churchmembers, as Ishmael, Keturahs children, Esau, must cause infant Churchmembership? Sure it was no cause of their own. Keturahs children were Churchmembers in infancy: I enquire of you by what act they were made such? You say [by Gods fact of taking the whole people of the Jews for his people] whereof the act of removing Keturahs children was a part. Very good. It seems then that removing from the Congregation of Israel a people of the Jews, is a taking of the removed to be of that people: or else it is not onely the taking that people, but also the removal from that people that maketh Churchmembers, even the removed as well as the taken, both which are alike absurd.

Answ. 1. I mean not as Mr. B. supposeth I might. 2. The setling of the Army had remotely causation of infants Churchmembership, for by it the Israelites were a well formed Congregation, Church, or Commonwealth, and by which the infants were a part, which is their Churchmembership. 3. I know that our Army hath done so much for the setling of the Church, as that the Antiprelatists congregations had been either none, or much oppressed, if they had not broken the force of the opposite party. Nor dare I be so unthankfull to God, or them, as not to acknowledge the great mercy and benefit we at this day enjoy thereby, however Mr. B. fret at our liberty, and jibe at the instruments. 4. The leading to Padan Aram, removal to Ægypt, were acts of providence whereby Jacobs house were encreased and preserved, which I conceive were some of those acts whereby he made them a people to himself. 5. Ishmaels, Keturahs children's, Esau's removal, were some acts whereby the congregation of Israel became Gods severed, or a peculiar people. 6. Keturahs children were visible Churchmembers while they were part of Abrahams house, called after the people of the Jews, by Gods taking of the people of the Jews, and consequently them as a part; and yet the removal of them was after one act whereby the people of the Jews were made to God a severed people from them; and consequently their infants Churchmembers. Distinguish the times and the different state of things and intentions of God in his providences, and these seeming incoherences will be found consistent.

9. Saith he, "And I pray you tell me yet a little better, how an "act can make a man a Churchmember that was one long before that "was done? You cannot here say, that it was before in esse morali, and "had a moral causation. How then could your chiefest act, the bringing "out of Ægypt, make those infants Churchmembers that were born in "Ægypt, and were Churchmembers before? Or how could it be any "part of the cause? Did the bringing out of Ægypt concur to make "Moses a Churchmember when he was in the basket on the waters? "And when you answer this, you may do well to go a little further, and "tell me, how such an act concurreth to make him an infant Church-"member that was dead an hunded or two hundred years before that "act was done. For example, how did the setling of the Israelites "Army, or inheritance, or the Covenant on Mount Sinai, make Ish-"mael, or Esau, or Isaac, or Jacob Churchmembers?

Answ. The infants of Israel were Churchmembers in that they were a part of the congregation or people af Israel, which was a fluent body, and was taken to be Gods Church by a succession of acts, whereof some were causes which began, some continued, some compleated, and the several acts made the Churchmembers of that age, yet all by vertue of the first call of Abraham, whereby God declared his intention to make his house a Nation, and his Church, first more obscurely, then more clearly. The bringing out of Ægypt tended to make the Israelites a severed people, and consequently all that were Churchmembers were by that act such; the setling of the Army, inheritance, Covenant at Mount Sinai, tended to make them a well formed people, and to the accomplishment of the taking the Jews to be Gods people, and consequently the infants to be Churchmembers which came after them. Which if so understood, there is nothing in my conceit which infers the making that a cause which is after the effect.

10. Saith Mr. B. "I desire you also to tell me by the next, what "be the nerves and ligaments that tie all these acts of 430 years at least "together, so as to make them one fact? And whether I may not as "groundedly make a fact sufficient for this purpose of the acts of an "hundred or two hundred years onely? and whether you may not as "well make all the acts from Abrahams call till Christ to be one fact, "and assign it to this office?

Answ. 1. These acts are knit together into one fact by the unity of end designed and work accomplished, as the many acts of several ages did make one fact, of which the Poet speaks, Tantæ molis erat Romanam condere gentem, to raise the Roman Empire. 2. You might, if God had so contrived it, and brought the thing to pass in that time which he did in a longer. 3. I may make all the acts from Abrahams call till Christs towards the Hebrews, one fact of making the Jews his people, and assign it to this office rightly, onely using the word fact or making, making, as it comprehends not onely the beginning, and increasing, and compleating of that people; but also the continuation, recovery from captivity, and preservation of that people.

11. Saith Mr. B. "You say that you call this fact [transeunt] be- "cause it's [past,] (and so till it's [past] it seems Isaac and Jacob "that were dead before, are no Churchmembers;) I would then fain "know whether it be this same transeunt fact, or some other, that makes "infants Churchmembers five hundred years after it is past? If it be "this same, then how comes a meer transeunt fact to work effectually so "many hundred years after it is past? unless it made a Law or Cove- "nant which doth the deed? If it be a new transeunt fact that must "make infants Churchmembers after the compleating of this (the set- "ling their Inheritances;) then I pray you let me know, whether it be "one fact exercised on the whole nation in gross, or must it be a fact up- "on every infant member individually? If on the nation, remember "to tell us what it was; and do not onely tell us the cause of the member- "ship of former infants. And seeing it must be such as the membership "of every infant till Christs time at least must be caused by, I pray you "remember to make your work sure and full, and be sure to assign "us no other kind of fact, then what you will prove to have been so "frequently repeated in every age, and so fully extensive to every in- "fant among the Jews, as that it have no gaps but may make all mem- "bers that were so in each age. And remember, that it is no law, pre- "cept, promise, or covenant that you must assign for the cause; for "that's it you are engaged against: but a constant succession of tran- "seunt facts extending to each individual member. O what work have "you made your self? and what a sort of new political Doctrine shall "we have from you, when these things are accomplished according to "the frame you have begun? Such as I believe the Sun never saw, nor "the wisest Lawyer in England ever read before? Which makes me the "less marvel that so many of your opinion are so much against the "Lawyers; for I dare say they will be but few of them for you, "if these be your grounds, or at least not for these your grounds.

Answ. I call the whole transeunt fact past, because it consists of many transeunt acts, which are past being done: But I do not limit the being of Churchmembers to the entire transeunt fact, as if none were Churchmembers till each act was past which I set down; but the accomplishing or compleating the Congregation of Israel to either all or the chief of the later acts. That which made Isaac and Jacob Churchmembers, was the transeunt fact or acts of Gods providence in their age, whereby they became to be part of Abrahams house, which God by his call of Abram, setting up his worship in it, and other ways had made his Church. The same transeunt fact in kind, though not individual, which made Isaac and Jacob Churchmembers in their age, made infants visible Churchmembers in the several ages till Christs time; to wit, the continuance of the Jews to be Gods people, in the continuing his ordinances, laws, worship, &c. among them: And each infant was made a visible Churchmember by such transeunt fact in each age renewed and repeated, repeated, by which the infant was made and known to be a part of that people, which what it is hath been often before said, and shewed not to be by such Covenant and precept as Mr. B. asserts. All which was plainly expressed in my Letter, (and is such work as I need not be ashamed of,) without any new political Doctrine or Law, as Mr. B. imagines, it being cleared by the History of the Bible, and other Histories which set down this fact of God: And if Mr. B. or any Lawyer gainsay this, they gainsay the plain narration of the Bible. His foolish exclamations I let pass, as shewing nothing but his own inconsiderateness and vanity. That many of my opinion are against the Lawyers, is more then I know; they know well that I honour their profession and study, though I do no whit flatter them in their injurious and covetous practises: Nor do I doubt but conscionable and understanding Lawyers will be for me upon my grounds, as soon as other men, if they peruse my writings with love to the truth; and so would all godly learned Divines also, if it were not for prejudice, and some other partial affection. But I must attend on Mr. B.

12. Saith he, "But all this yet is but a light velitation: The prin"cipal thing that I would enquire into, is, what your great compre"hensive fact is in the true nature of it, which you call [Gods taking "the whole people of the Jews to be his people.] Doth the word [ta"king] signifie a meer physical taking or fact; or a moral, such as "among men we call, a civil action? If it be a meer physical taking,
"then 1. it cannot produce a moral effect, such as that in question is.
"2. And then it must have an answerable object, which must be indi"vidual existent persons. 3. And then you cannot call it one fact,
"but many thousand: even as many as there were persons taken in to "the Jews in above four hundred years. 4. And then what was the "physical act which is called Gods taking? was it such a taking as the "Angel used to Lot, that carried him out of Sodome; or as the Apocry"phal Author mentions of Habakkuk, that was taken by the hair of the "head, and carried by the Angel into another countrey, to bring Daniel
"a mess of portage? If God must by a physical apprehension take hold "of them that he makes Churchmembers, we shall be at a loss for our "proof of their Churchmembership. But I cannot imagine that this is "your sence. But what is it then? Is it a physical action though a mo"ral causation of some physical effect? That it cannot be: For it is a "political or moral effect that we enquire after. It necessarily remains
"therefore that this be a political moral taking that you here speak "of. And if so, then the transeunt fact you speak of must needs be a "civil or political action. And what that can be, which is no Law, Pro"mise, or Covenant in this case, I pray you bestow some more diligence "to inform us, and not put us off with the raw name of a transeunt fact "opposed to these. Certainly, if it be a civil or legal action, the pro"duct or effect of it is jus or debitum, some due or right: And that "is either 1. a dueness of somewhat from us, (which is either some"what to be done, or somewhat to be given;) 2. or a dueness of some"thing to us, which is either of good or evil: If good, it is either by

"con

" contract or donation (whether by a Teſtament præmiant Law, or " the like:) if evil, it is either by ſome penal Law, or voluntary agree- " ment: Now which of theſe is it that your tranſeunt fact produceth? " To be a member of the Church, is to be a member of a ſociety taking " God in Chriſt to be their God, and taken by him for his ſpecial peo- " ple. The act which makes each member, is of the ſame nature with that " which makes the ſociety. The relation then eſſentially containeth 1. " a right to the great benefits of Gods ſoveraignty over men, Chriſts " headſhip, and that favour, protection, proviſion, and other bleſſings, " which are due from ſuch a powerfull and gracious Soveraign to ſuch " Subjects, and from ſuch a Head to his Members: As alſo a right to " to my ſtation in the Body, and to the inſeparable benefits thereof. " 2. It containeth my debt of obedience to God in Chriſt, acknowled- " ged and promiſed actually or virtually, really or reputatively. Now " for the firſt, how can God be related to me as my God, or Chriſt as " my Saviour, and I to him as one that have ſuch right to him and his " bleſſings, by any other way then his own free gift? This gift muſt " be ſome ſignification of his will: For his ſecret will is not a gift, but " a purpoſe of giving. This way of giving therefore is by a civil or mo- " ral action, which is a ſignifying of the Donors will; and can be by no " way, but either pure donation, contract, teſtament, or law. In our caſe " it muſt needs partake of the nature all theſe. It is not from one in any " equality, nor capable of any obliging compenſation or retribution " from us. Being therefore from an abſolute diſengaged Benefactor, it " muſt needs be by pure donation, or it cannot be ours. Yet as he is " pleaſed as it were to oblige himſelf by promiſe, or by his word, and " alſo to call us to a voluntary acceptance, and engagement to certain " fidelity, gratitude and duty, and ſo is the ſtipulator, and we the pro- " miſers in the latter part of the action: it is therefore juſtly called a " contract or Covenant, though indeed the word [Covenant] frequent- " ly ſignifieth Gods own promiſe alone. As it proceedeth from the death " of the teſtator (in natural moral-reputative being,) ſo it is called a " teſtament. And as it is an act of a ruling Benefactor giving this be- " nefit to the governed, to promote the ends of government, and obli- " ging to duty thereby, ſo it partaketh of the nature of a law. The com- " moneſt Scripture name for this act, is Gods Covenant or Promiſe, " and ſometimes his Gift; which all ſignifie the ſame thing here. It " follows therefore, that either by Gods [taking Iſrael to be his peo- " ple] you mean ſome civil political action, as a Covenant, promiſe, or " the like collation of the benefit, (and then you aſſert the thing which " you deny,) or elſe you know not what you mean, nor can make " another know it, without the diſcovery of the groſſeſt abſurdity. And " as for the other thing which is contained in Churchmemberſhip, the " profeſſed duty of man to God, it is moſt certain 1. That Gods " law obligeth us to that duty: 2. And obligeth all according to their " capacities to conſent to the obligation, and ſo to re-engage themſelves: " 3. That this actual conſent profeſſed doth therefore double the obliga- " tion. And thus by a mutual contract, Covenant or conſent (whereof

" our part is first required by a law,) is the relation of Churchmem-" bership contracted. Now to lay by and deny all this, and give us the " general naked name of [taking for Gods people,] is meerly delu-
" sory, seeing that [taking] means this which you exclude, or it means " nothing that's true and reasonable. And therefore tell us better what " it means.

Answ. All before being but a velitation or light skirmish, I looked here for some great battel: But I find it nothing but a rallying together the forces scattered before, there being not one thing I know of in this passage, but what was set down before, and is answered. I have distinctly shewed how moral and physical acts concur to the visible Churchmembership of the people, of which infants are a part, and natural to that visible Churchmembership which the Jews infants had, and what they were, both in my Letter, and in this answer. What M. B. replies, is vain. 1. It is not true that the effect in question is a moral, it is at least in infants meerly a physical effect; their Churchmembership is not by any act which reacheth not to the effect. 2. The taking is of individual persons existent. 3. By many particular acts, yet in a good sence before given, summed up into one transeunt fact. 4. The physical acts are none of those M. B. frivolously imagines, but such as are mentioned in the Scripture, and declared in my Letter. 5. It is not true that a meer physical taking cannot produce a moral effect: For supposing the Spirit should inspire faith immediately without any preaching, the effect would be moral, though produced by a meer physical taking or act. 6. The transeunt fact I set down doth not exclude, but did expresly include in my Letter both Covenants single and mutual, and laws, and precepts; yet (as I have said before) it doth exclude that promise of Mr. Bs. of Gods being a God to believers and their seed, and a precept of believing or accepting this for their children, which confer the benefit of visible Churchmembership. Yea, it is fully proved before, that if there were such a promise and precept, yet these would not actually make infants visible Churchmembers. 7. It is not true that the relation of visible Churchmembership essentially containeth a right to the great benefit of Gods soveraignty over men, Christs headship, and that favour, protection, provision, and other blessings, which are due from such a powerful and gracious Soveraign to such subjects, and from such a head to his members. For (to omit the unfitness of the expression of [right to the great benefits of Gods soveraignty over men] which contains these two fond conceits. 1. That great benefits are included in Gods soveraignty over men, whereas the soveraignty of God includes not any benefit but his own greatness, he is soveraign over the reprobate men and Angels as well as the elect, and yet they have no benefit, yea his soveraignty is shewed in their reprobation as well as the election of the other. 2. That visible Churchmembers have a right to the great benefit of Gods soveraignty over men, whereas what benefit soever it be yet right is not to us by visible Churchmembership) it is most false that that relation either constitutive or consecutive, doth essentially contain that right. For neither doth the term formally import any right at all, but a manner of being or state with relation as I have before distinctly declared; nor doth that right inseparably accrue to such visible Churchmembers. There are and may be visible Churchmembers, who have not that right; and there are who have that right, and are not visible Churchmembers. 8. Nor is it true that the relation essentially includeth a right to the members station, and to the inseparable benefits thereof. For though the station in the body be included, yet not a right to it, yea the actual station is oft times without right, which I think is sufficiently proved by Mr. B. himself in his dispute against Mr. Blake Sect. 39. asserting a dogmatical faith entitling to baptism. 9. That though visible membership bee by Gods gift, and this is to be by signification of Gods will, yet it is not necessary it should be by any promise or declaration which may be termed moral or political, sith the event it self is a signification of Gods will and of his gift. 10. That if Churchmembership be contracted by a mutual consent and covenant as Mr. B. sets down, 1. onely the elect can be visible Churchmembers, for to them onely God hath covenanted to be their God, or Christ their Saviour. 2. Infants are not visible Churchmembers, for they neither Covenant, nor by any intimation in Scripture is it shewed or can bee, that the parents or others obedience to God in Christ acknowledged or promised, is virtually or reputatively by any law of God taken for the infants Covenant or consent. Lastly, this law which Mr. B. here sets down concerning the duty of the parents, is not that law or ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership, which Mr. B. asserts to be unrepealed. For the law and ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership is not a precept of what another shall do, but what they shall have, not of what in duty a person is bound to, but of what God doth give and grant. And therefore all this tedious discourse of Mr. B. is but delusory, sith instead of a law and ordinance determining that infants shall be visible Churchmembers, he assignes another thing a precept of a duty, and thinks if I prove not it repealed I prove not the law and ordinance of another thing repealed.

Mr. B. adds. As for the texts you cite, Deut. 4. 34. & Levit. 20, 24, 26. 1 King. 8. 53. Isai. 43. 1. In Deut. 4. is mentioned not the moral act of God by which he made them his people or took them for his own, and founded the relation: but the natural actions whereby he rescued them from the Egyptian bondage and took them to himself or for his use, service, and honour out of that land. But I think sure they were his people, and all their infants were Churchmembers before that taking by vertue of a former Covenant taking.

Answ. The text expresseth that act of God whereby hee took the Jews for his people, and consequently whereby he founded the relation of Churchmembers, and if this act were a natural act, then it follows (contrary to Mr. Bs conceits) that a natural act may be it by which God takes a people to him, which is the Scripture phrase whereby is signified his making them his Church. If they were his people before, and all their infants Churchmembers, yet they might be made his people by repeated, continued, or new acts making or taking, noting a beginning or continuance or completing of the estate they had formerly. If they were by vertue of a former Covenant-taking, yet I think Mr. B. cannot shew before that time a mutual Covenant-taking, such as he said before the relation of Churchmembership is contracted by.

He adds. As to Levit. 20. God did perform a twofold work of separation for Israel. 1. By his Covenant and their entring Covenant with him. 2. By local separation of their bodies from others. It was the first that made them his people, and Churchmembers, and not the last: the last was onely a favourable dealing with them as his beloved. The same I say to the other two texts. Sure you cannot think that corporal separation makes a Churchmember. what if an Egyptian that had no part in the Covenant had past out with the Israelites, and got with them through the Red Sea, do you think he had been therefore a Churchmember? Suppose God had made no promise or Covenant with Abraham or his seed, but onely taken them out of Chaldea into Canaan, and thence into Egypt, and thence into the wilderneß, and thence into Canaan again: Do you think this much had made them Churchmembers? Then if the Turks conquer Greece, or the Tartarians conquer China, they are become Churchmembers, because this seems as great a temporal prosperity at least. And I think it s past doubt, that Lot was a Churchmember in the midst of Sodom, and the Israelites in Egypt before they were brought out, as truly as after.

Answ. I grant that they were, though not so complered, when they had not liberty to sacrifice to God, nor to keep any feast, and perform other worship to God as when they were brought out, unto which the texts refer the severing of the Israelites from other people that they should be Gods, although I did not in my Letter restrain it to that local separation (which yet the Scripture with me chiefly refers it to) but also to the bringing them into the bond of the Covenant at Mount Sinai, giving them Laws, setling their Priesthood, Tabernacle, Army, Government, inheritance. If the Turks or Tartars had such a local separation as I describe, they had been Churchmembers. The Egyptians that came out of Egypt with the Israelites, were Churchmembers with the Israelites they becomming Proselytes. If God had made no promise or Covenant with Abraham or his seed, but onely taken them out of Chaldea into Canaan, and withall made known his will concerning his grace in Christ, given them Lawes, and set up his worship among them, they had been Churchmembers. According to Mr. Bs. own arguings, the promise or Covenant with Abraham and his seed made them not Churchmembers, for they were Churchmembers before. The Covenant Gen. 17. was not a mutual Covenant, which is that by which according to Mr. B. visible Churchmembership is contracted. The texts that I allege, do sufficiently prove the people of Israel were taken to be Gods people by such a transeunt fact as I describe, and consequently the infants visible Churchmembers, as part of that people, without the promise to believers and their seed to bee their God, on condition of the parents accepting the mercy offered, and re-engaging them to God, which Mr. B. makes the sole efficient of their holiness or visible Churchmembership, as is shewed before. He proceeds.

As to Gen. 12. 1. Acts 7. 2. Nehem. 9. 7. which you also cite, as there is not one of them that gives the least intimation that Infant-Church-membership then began, so I shall further enquire anon, whether they contain any Covenant or promise.

Answ. They do each of them plainly shew the beginning of the taking of the Hebrews for Gods people, by severing them from Idolaters, and forming them into a Church, and consequently of the Churchmembership which infants had in that people or nation. For the texts do all expressly tell how God severed Abram from the Chaldees, how he made his house his Church, promising to encrease and to settle it, and neither Moses, nor the Levites, nor Stephan, do go higher in the narration of Gods calling of the Hebrews to be his people And I think it safest to go no higher then the Scripture. What Mr. B. adds after, shall have answer in its place.

He adds. So Exod. 19. 4, 5. hath no word that gives the least intimation that God by that act of taking them out of Egypt, did make Israel a Church, or the infants or any others, members of it: But onely that by fulfilling a former promise in the deliverance of a people formerly his own, he layeth further obligations to duty on them by redoubling his mercies. The same I say of Levit. 11. 45. Nehem. 1. 10. I will not believe yet, but that you believe your self, that the Israelites and their infants were as truly Churchmembers before, as after their deliverance out of Egypt. And mee thinks the texts you cite might put it out of doubt. What if God say, Hos. 11. 1. [when Israel was a childe I loved him, and called my Son out of Egypt.] Is it easie hence to prove, that calling him out of Egypt did make him his son that was none before: or to prove that Israel was Gods son before he called him out of Ægypt. If you should maintain the former, I might expect that you should say the like of Christ himself, to whom the Evangelist applieth this text; and so you may prove as fairly, That Christ was none of Gods son till he was called out of Egypt, but was made his son by that call. Certainly the Text termeth him Gods son that was called, as being so before that call. By this time I am well content that any waking man do compare your doctrine and mine, and try whether it be a Transeunt fact, or a Law and Covenant, that made infants and all others Churchmembers: and if they do not admire, that ever a learned man should harbour such a conceit as yours, and that ever a godly man should build such a weight on it, and go so far on such a ground, yea and that ever ordinary godly people should be so blinded with such palpable non sense or absurdities, then let them still follow you in the dark; for I expect not that reason should recover them.

Answ. My conceits were and are still, that infants were onely visible Churchmembers in the Church of the Hebrews or Congregation of Israel, and that they were such not apart by themselves, but as they were a part of that people which God took for his Church, which made a peculiar Commonwealth and Church to God consisting of the same persons. This God did not by a promise to be God to the faithful and their seed as the sole efficient, and a precept of the parents to accept of this offered mercy, and to dedicate them, and re-engage them to God, as Mr. B. conceives, but by a transeunt fact containing many acts of Gods providence whereby they were severed from other people, and appropriate to God. The prime act of Gods providence whereby God brought this to pass, was Gods calling of Abram out of Ur, whereby he severed them from idolaters, and by degrees established his worship in Abrahams house, upon which followed a long tract of providences, which I mentioned as tending to the same end: And this calling of Abram I refer the beginning of that people and Church to, and I think I follow therein the Scriptures. The other chief act of providence was Gods calling of Israel out of Egypt, wherein I comprehend all the acts mentioned by me in my Letter which followed, by which I said it was completed, and to that end I alleged many (as I conceive) express texts, not to prove that they then began to be Gods people (as Mr. B. contrary to my plain words insinuates) but to prove that then they were completed, that is, completely severed from other people, and formed into a Church or Commonwealth, with Lawes, distribution of Offices, order, and other things requisite thereunto, which they had not before. And thus I interpret their bringing to God, Exod. 19. 4. the bringing them up out of the land of Egypt to bee their God Levit. 11. 45. their redeeming to bee his people Nehem. 1. 10. their calling out of Egypt Hos. 11. 1. That is, from a miserable state among idolatrous oppressors, to be a people of themselves in a complete state of liberty under Gods rule, which I conceive described by Ezech. ch. 16. under the similitude of a childe cast out, relieved and educated. If Mr. B. can shew any non-sense, or absurdity herein, it is surely that which the plain Scripture affords, or else I am in a dream; and if Mr. B. bee awake, I think hee may espie non-sense and absurdity manifold in his conceit of visible Churchmembership as a right to a benefit, of such a Covenant, and Condition, and Precept, which hee imagines to confer it. I am willing Mr. Bs. Doctrine and mine bee compared, though I lay so little weight on this point, that I think if I bee mistaken, neither is Mr. Bs. cause gained, nor mine lost. I would have none follow me in the dark, nor would I have men befooled by Mr. Bs. misrepresentations of me, and others, much less by his frivolous Rhetorick, in which hee discovers a great deal of prejudice, rashness, confidence, and intemperate zeal, with which I think him so drunken, that I doubt whether reason will recover him, till some providence of God bring him to see his folly; which I think will much appear in that which followes, on which nevertheless I conceive hee builds the main or whole of his Cause of Infants visible Churchmembership.

SECT. LVII.

Mr. B's. Law of Infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, is not proved from Gen. 1. 26, 27, 28. or Gen. 3. 15.

I Come now, saith Mr. B. to the 8th. Qu. that is to speak to the point which you propounded. You urge me to cite to you the particular texts that contain this Law, Ordinance, Precept or Covenant. To which I answer thus. 1. There are two sorts of Laws; one which first make a duty; the other which suppose it so made, and do only call for obedience and excite thereto, or prescribe somewhat as a means in order thereunto. If I could shew you no written law or promise as first constituting the duty, or granting the priviledg of Church membership, it were not the least disparagement to my cause, as long as I can shew you those following laws which presuppose this. You know the Church of God did live about 2000. years without any written law that we know of: where then was Gods will manifested about such things as this, but in tradition and nature? If Moses then at the end of this 2000. years did find this tradition and find all the infants of Church-members in possession of this benefit, then what need he make a new law about it? or why should God promise it as a new thing? I confess if I should find by any new law or promise that it did begin but in Moses dys, I should think it some abatement of the strength of my cause (though yet I think there would enough remain.) 2. There are (yet higher) two sorts of laws: the one for the constitution of the Commonwealth it self, the other for the administration or government of it when it is so constituted. The former are called by some, Fundamental Laws as laying the frame and form of the Commonwealth, and the quality of the materials, &c. I think indeed, that as constitutive of the form of the Commonwealth, these are scarce properly called Laws; though as they look forward, obliging to duty, and prohibiting alteration, they may. But if they be not laws, they are somewhat higher, and lay the ground of all laws and obedience, and so are laws eminenter & virtualiter, though not actually and formally: And in our case, as this constitution did subject us to God, making it our duty ever after to obey him; so doth it oblige us to acknowledge that subjection. And the very constitution of the Church is an act of high beneficence, and performed by the fundamental grant or Covenant. Now if this Covenant and constitution could not expresly be shewed in writing, it were no diminution of the authority of it, seeing among men Fundamentals are seldome written and when they are, it is onely as laws obliging the subject to maintain and adhere to the first constitution. As long therefore as we can prove that it is Gods will that successively infants should be Churchmembers, it no whit invalidates the cause if we could not shew the original constitution in writing. Yet somewhat we shall attempt. 3. We have full proof of infants Churchmembership by laws and Covenants concerning it, ever since the time that there was a written word of God: and that is sufficient, if we could fetch it no higher. Having premised this, I come nearer to the Question.

Answ. Had Mr. B. meant fairly, and not either to prepossess the Reader with prejudice against me, or weary him afore he should come to the point, he had begun with this question: In the entrance to which he tediously sets down some postulata, which do shew, that we are not to expect any plain Scripture proof of a Law or Ordinance of Infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, which he so cracks of as to intitle his Book as if he would bring such. But I shall let pass his postulata, and attend to his proofs.

"The first institution, saith Mr. B. of infants Churchmembership de jure upon supposition of their existence, was in Gods first constitution of the Republick of the World, when he became mans governour, and determined of his subjects, and members of the Commonwealth: Which Republick being sacred, and devoted to Gods worship and service, was truly a Church of which God was head. This was performed by the first Law and Covenant made either in or upon mans creation, That such a Covenant or promise of felicity was made by God to innocent man, almost all Divines agree: But because it is rather implied then expressed in Moses brief History, some few cavillers do therefore contradict us. But 1. the threatning of death for sin, seems to imply a promise of life if he sinned not. 2. And the New Testament affordeth us divers passages that yet plainlier prove it, which to you I need not recite. But whether this promise of life were natural (as the threatning of death was,) or onely positive and more arbitrary, Divines are not agreed among themselves, Those that say it was free and positive, give this reason, That God could not naturally be obliged to bless or felicitate the most innocent or perfect creature, nor any creature merit of God. Those that think it natural as the threatning was, say, It's true that God could not be properly be obliged, because he is under no law, no more is he obliged to punish, but onely man obliged to suffer if he inflict it: And it's true that man cannot strictly merit of God. But yet, say they, as man may have a natural aptitude for such felicity, so God hath a natural propensity to do good according to the capacity of the subject, and his works do oblige him (improperly) in point of fidelity and immutability as well as his word. So that their reasons are these following. 1. Because God is as naturally prone to do good to the good, as to do evil to the evil, that is, to reward as to punishment, as his name proclaimed to Moses, Exod. 34. shews. 2. Because God making man capable of a higher felicity, and principling him with inclinations thereto, and giving him desires, love, and other affections for that blessed end, even the everlasting fruition of God, therefore they say, God did in this frame of his nature give him ground to expect such a felicity; if he sinned not. For else all these inclinations and affections should have been in vain: But God made not so noble a creature with vain inclinations and affections to act fallaciously and falsly. Also Gods works would not be harmonical: So that as Gods

" promise is but a sign of his will obliging him improperly in point of " fidelity and immutability, so, say they, the nature of man was a sign " of Gods will so far engaging him: So that as he could not let sin go " unpunished without some breach in the harmony of his sapiential " frame of administration, no more could he deny to perfect man the ob- " ject of those desires which he formed in him. So that although he " might have made man such a creature as should not necessary be pu- " nished for evil, or rewarded for good, that is, he might have made " him not a man; yet having so made him, it is necessary that he be " governed as a man in regard of felicity as well as penalty. 3. Our " Philosophers and Divines do commonly prove the immortality of the " soul from it's natural inclinations to God and eternal felicity. And " if the immortality may be so proved from it's nature, then also it's fe- " licity in case of righteousness. I interpose not my self as a Judge in " this controversie of Divines, but I have mentioned it to the end which " I shall now express. 1. It is most certain, whether the reward or " promise be natural or positive, that such a state of felicity man was ei- " ther in or in the way to, or in part and the way to more. And it's " most certain, that man was made holy, devoted to God, and fit for his " service, and that in this estate according to the law of his creation, he " was to increase and multiply: It's most certain therefore, that accor- " to the first law of nature, infants should have been Churchmembers. " 2. But if their opinion hold, that make the reward grounded on the " law of nature, and not on a meer positive law, (and you see the rea- " sons are not contemptible,) then the argument would be yet more ad- " vantagious. 3. But how ever it be of the title to glory or eternity, " it's most certain, that according to the very law of nature infants were " to have been Churchmembers if man had stood. The first text there- " fore that I cite for infants Churchmembership, as expressing its origi- " nal de jure, is Gen. 1. 26, 27, 28. [So God created man in his own " image —— And God blessed them, and God said unto them, Be fruitfull, " and multiply, and replenish the earth.] Here you see by the law of na- " ture infants were to have been born in Gods image and in innocen- " cy, and so Churchmembers. And note, that the first blessing that " God pronounceth on mankind, is, that they propagate children " in their owne estate, to bee as the parents were, even in Gods " image.

Answ. 1. If this prove their Churchmembership, it proves not their visible Churchmembership, of which onely is the question. 2. If it prove a law or ordinance, yet it proves not such a law or ordinance as is in question, which is not a law or ordinance de jure, but de eventu, that so it shall be, or they shall be so accounted. For such a law or ordinance of their visible Churchmembership onely can infer their admission as visible Churchmembers, they being to be actually visible Churchmembers afore admission, according to Mr. B. own dictates, and therefore not de jure onely such. 3. If it did prove such a law or ordinance, yet it proves it not to be by such a promise and precept as Mr. B. asserts. 4. If it did, yet it onely proves it of the Church by nature, which hath a great difference from the Church by grace, this being onely by election and calling, not by birth. 5. If this law or ordinance be unrepealed, then it is in force, and according to the law of nature invariable that man be born without sin. For man is born according to the law of procreation, Gen. 1.28. and if this were the law of nature, that the first blessing that God pronounceth on mankind, is, that they propagate children in their own estate to be as the parents were, even in Gods image; then still the law of nature continues, and so there is no original sin; or it is repealed, and so it is not such a law as Mr. B. asserts. 6. The words [God created, blessed,] do note onely a transeunt fact; and therefore, what ever Divines imagine about Gods Covenant with man, this passage onely tells what God did, but mentions no such law or ordinance by promise or precept as Mr. B. conceives, and therefore it is manifestly impertinent to his purpose. Let's view the next and main Text.

"The next institution, saith Mr. B. of infants Churchmember-"ship, was at the first proclamation of grace to faln man, or in the "first promise of redemption to sinners, in Gen 3.15. [And I will put "enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed: "it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.] I will prove that "this fundamental Covenant of grace or promise doth declare it to be "the will of God that infants should be Churchmembers: And to this "end, let us first consider what the words expresly contain, and then "what light may be fetcht from other Texts to illustrate them. It be-"ing a known rule, that an Expositor must not turn universals into "singulars or particulars, nor restrain and limit the Scripture gene-"rals, where the word it self or the nature of the subject doth not li-"mit them. I may well conclude that these things following are com-"prehended in this fundamental promise. 1. That the Devil having "played the enemy to mankind, and brought them into this sin and mi-"sery, God would not leave them remedilesse, nor to that total volun-"tary subjection to him as he might have done: But in grace or unde-"served mercy would engage them in a war against him, in which they "that conquered should bruise his head. 2. That in this war the Lord "Jesus Christ, the principal seed, is promised to be our General, whose "perfect nature should contain, and his perfect life express a perfect "enmity against Satan, and who should make a perfect conquest over "him. 3. The Lord Jesus is promised to do this work as the womans "seed, and so as conceived of her, and born by her, and so as an infant "first, before he comes to ripeness of age. So that here an infant of the "woman is promised to be the General of this Army, and Head of the "Church. This is most evident: By which God doth sanctifie the hu-"mane birth, and the infant state, and assure us that he doth not ex-"clude now that age from the redeemed Church, which he admitted into "the Church by the laws of creation. For the first promise is of an "infant born of the woman to be the Head of the Church, and growing "up to maturity, to do the works of a Head. Had God excluded the "infant state from the visible Church, he would not have made the

"Head

" Head first an infant. Where note, 1. That Christ is the great ex" emplar of his Church; and in things which he was capable of, he did " that first in his own body, which he would after do in theirs. 2. That " the Head is a Member, even the principal Member, one of the two parts " which constitute the whole. As the pars imperans and pars subdita do " constitute each Commonwealth. So that if an infant must be a mem" ber eminently so called, then infants are not excluded from member" ship, but are hereby clearly warranted to be members of a lower na" ture. If an infant may be Sovereign, no doubt he may be a Subject.
" If an infant may be the chief Prophet of the Church, then no doubt " but infants may be Disciples. If you still harp on the old string, and " say, They are no Disciples that learn not; you may as well say, He " is no Prophet that teacheth not. And if you will openly deny Christ
" in infancy to have been the Prophet of the Church, I will undertake to " prove the falshood and vileness of that opinion, as soon as I know you " own it. The promise then of an Infant Head, doth declare Gods mind " that he will have infants members, because the head is the principal
" member.

Answ. The thing to be proved by Mr. B. is that there is a law or ordinance of God unrepealed, that not onely in the Church Jewish, but in the Christian properly so called, the infants of believers, by vertue of Gods promise to be the God of the faithfull and their seed, and a precept to parents to accept of the mercy offered and re-engage them to God, should be, and be taken to be visible members. But that he takes upon him to prove, is, that it is the will of God that infants should be Churchmembers, that he doth not exclude now that age from the redeemed Church, that he excluded not the infant state from the visible Church, that it is his mind that he will have infant members; all which we might grant, and yet Mr. Bs. law and ordinance not thereby proved. For infants may be Churchmembers of the redeemed Church, and yet not of the visible Church; and the infant state may be not excluded from the visible Church, and yet there may be no law or ordinance for the inclusion of them; yea, there may be a law or ordinance for inclusion of them, and yet none for including them in the visible Church Christian. Nor is his proof of any validity: For the consequence holds not, Christ was by Gods promise Head of the Church in infancy, therefore infants were by Gods will to be Churchmembers, or the infant state is not excluded from the visible Church. It must rest upon some such positions as these: In what age God promised Christ to bee Head of the Church, in that age his will was that persons should be visible Churchmembers; the ordering of Christs age is an exemplar to the Church, or rather rule for the being and accounting of visible Churchmembers. Which are manifestly false, 1. Because there is no such thing declared in Scripture, and therefore it is to be taken as a meer fancy. 2. Because if these positions were true, 1. then an infant in the mothers womb should be a visible Churchmember, because then Christ was head of the Church, and as Mr. B. saith, The Lord Jesus is promised to do this work as the womans seed, and so as conceived of her: 2. Then an old man should not be a member of the visible Church, because Christ in the days of his flesh was not an old man; which are both absurd. And for the antecedent of Mr. Bs. enthymeme, though I deny not that Christ in infancy was Head of the Church, nor that he was the Prophet of his Church in infancy, understanding it of his being the Prophet habitually and by designation, nor that he in some respect, to wit, of rule and protection, the Head of the visible Church, even of that part which is not elect: Yet 1. I deny that in respect of that union which makes any members of his body in the Scripture acception, which is by his spirit, he is head of that part of the visibl: Church which is not elect; nor can he be said in this respect and after the Scripture speech to be Head of the visible Church as visible, but onely in respect of that part which is invisible, to wit, the true believers or elect persons, who alone are univocally members of Christ the Head, as the Doctrine of Protestant writers avoweth. Dr. Rainold, thes. 4. §. 26. Mali nulla corporis Christi pars sunt. Dr. Field, of the Church, book 1. ch 2. The wicked are neither parts nor members of the mystical body of Christ. Bellarmin himself de Eccl. milit. c. 9. makes them members not living, nor true according to the essence of members, but dead, and as ill humours in the body, and in respect of some outward use Christ makes of them. 2. Nor do I well know how to make a construction of this speech of Mr. B. [that the Lord Jesus is promised, Gen 3.15. to do this work of bruising the Serpents head, or conquering the Devil as the womans seed, and so as conceived of her, and born by her, and so as an infant first before he comes to ripeness of age;] according to which it may be true. For though I grant the man Christ Jesus who did this work to have been an infant first, yet I do not think it true that he did it as the womans seed, according to humane nature onely, but also according to his Divine, Heb 9.14. nor what he did was done in infancy, but at ripe age: For he bruised the Serpents head and conquered the Devil by his death, Heb. 2.14 which was not in infancy, but at ripe age. 3. Nor do I understand how it is true that [by Christs birth and infancy God doth sanctifie the humane birth and the infant state:] For though I grant children born and infants are sanctified by God through Christ, who was born and an infant; yet that the humane birth and the infant state should be sanctified thereby, seems not true; for then humane birth and infancy should be holy in any infants or persons born, and so the birth of a bastard should be holy, and his infancy holy, which I need not shew how absurd it is. 4. Nor do I conceive any truth, but gross falshood in that speech, [Had God excluded the infant state from the visible Church, he would not have made the head first an infant:] For this doth suppose, that either this was the onely end or chief end without which God had not made Christ an infant, and consequently this was more in Gods eye then the saving of sinners for which Christ came into the world, or the fulfilling of his promise, that a child should be born, a son should be given to us; and would infer, that they which hold infants not visible Churchmembers, must deny Christ to have been an infant. 5. Nor do I know that to be true, [that in things which Christ was capable of, he did that first in his own body, which he would after ter do in the bodies of his Church:] For he would and did innumerable things in the bodies of his Church, as to marry, beget children, &c. which he did not in his own body first, though he was capable of them. 6. I deny that Christ as man was in infancy the Prophet of his Church visibly, and in actu exercito. Let Mr. B. when he will assault it, there will appear in his contradiction vileness and manifold falshood, none in this opinion. And for his inference, if an infant may be the chief Prophet of the Church then no doubt but infants may be Disciples, I grant both, and yet deny that Christ was visibly, audibly, in actu exercito in his infancy in his humane nature the Prophet of his Church, or that any infants are actually Disciples visibly, till they hear the Gospel and profess the faith; nor am I ashamed to aver, that he is no Prophet that propheseth not, that they are no Disciples that learn not. But Mr. B. proceeds.

4. Saith he, "As the war is here proclaimed, and the General or "chief Commander constituted, so next here is a natural enmity put "into the whole seed of the woman, or humane race, against the whole "seed of the serpent that then was, or the Diabolical nature. This is "plain both in the text, and in the experience of the fulfilling of it. As "in the instrumental serpent, it is the whole serpentine nature, that hath "an enmity to the humane nature, and the whole humane nature to the "serpentine nature; they being venemous to us, and wee abhorring "them as venemous, and as such as our lives are in danger of: so is it "the whole humane nature that is at enmity to the Diabolical nature. "Vide Muscul. Calvin. Luther. in locum. All men have naturally as "great an abhorrence of the Devil, as of a serpent, they apprehend "him to be their enemy, they abhor the very name and remembrance "of him: If they do but dream of him it terrifieth them, they are a-"fraid of seeing him in any apparition. If they know any temptation to "be from him, so far they dislike it and abhor it, though for the thing "presented they may cherish it. This is not special saving grace, but this "is a great advantage to the work of special grace, and to our more ef-"fectual resisting of temptations, and entertaining the help that is of-"fered us against them, when our very natures have an enmity to the "diabolical nature: we now look on him as having the power of death "as Gods executioner and our destroyer and malicious adversary. And "if there be any Witch or other wicked person that hath contracted such "familiarity & amity with him, as that this natural enmity is thereby o-"vercome, that proveth not that it was not naturally there, but that they "by greater wickedness are grown so far unnatural. 5. As this enmity "is established in the nature of mankinde against the diabolical nature, "so is there a further enmity legally proclaimed against the diabolical "pravity, malignity, and works. Vide Paræum in locum. God will put an "enmity by his Laws (both natural and positive) making it the duty of "mankinde to take Satan for their enemy; to resist, and use him as an "enemy, and fight against him and abhor his works, and so to list them-"selves under the General that fighteth against him, to take his colours, "and to be of his Army: And this being spoken of the common world

" of mankinde, and not onely of the elect (for it is not they onely that " are obliged to this hostility and warfare) belongeth to each one ac" cording to their capacities: and therefore infants being at the parents
" dispose, it is they that are to list them in this army against the enemy of " mankinde, of which more anon. 6. A third and higher enmity is " yet here comprehended, and that is an habitual or dispositive enmity " against the diabolical malignity pravity and works, which may bee cal" led [natural] as it is the bent or bias of our new nature. This God " giveth onely to his chosen, and not to all. And it containeth not one-
" ly their consent to list themselves in his army against Satan, but speci" ally and properly a hatred to him as the Prince of unrighteousnes, and " a cordial resolution to fight against him and his works universally, to " the death, with a complacency in God and his service and souldiers.
" Here take a short prospect of the mysterious blessed Trinity. As God " is one in three, and in his entity hath unity, verity, and goodnes, and " in his blessed nature hath posse, scire, velle, power, wisdome, and love,
" so as from these is he related both to his created and redeemed ratio" nal creatures, as absolute proprietary, as soveraign ruler, and as " most gracious benefactour: As Lord of our nature he hath put the " foresaid enmity between the humane nature and the Diabolical: As " soveraign Ruler, he hath by legislation imposed on us a further enmity
" as our duty, that we should be listed in his army, profess open hosti" lity against Satan, and fight against him to the death. As Benefactor, " he giveth special grace to do this, to his chosen. As he is Lord of all,
" so the first is done on the natures of all: As he is Rector of all, but " not by the same Laws (as to positives) so he obligeth all to this hosti" lity, but not all as he doth those that hear the Gospel. As he is Bene" factor he doth with his own as he list, and makes a difference. If any " say that it is the same enmity that is here said to bee put in all, and " therefore the same persons in which it is put. I answer 1. there's no " proof of either. A general command or promise to a community, " may signifie a difference of duties or gifts to that community, though " that difference be not expressed: For the nature of the subject may " prove it. And 2. experience of the fulfilling of this promise or cove" nant, proves the difference before mentioned. And it's well known,
" 1. That Moses is so concise in the History of these matters. 2. And " that the mystery of grace was to bee opened by degrees, and so but " darkly at the first, that it is no wonder if we find the whole sum of the " Gospel here couched up in so narrow a room, and if each particular be " not largely laid open before our eyes. 7. That wee may certainly " know that this promise speaks not onely of the enmity that Christ " himself should have to Satan, and doth not engage a General with" out an army, God doth here expresly mention the woman her self, say" ing [I will put enmity between thee and the woman] so that as shee " stood in a threefold respect; she is here her self possessed with this three" fold enmity. 1. As she is the root of humane nature, from whence all
" mankinde must spring, she is possest with the natural enmity to the " diabolical nature, and this to bee naturally conveyed or propagated.

" 2. As

"3. As she was the root of the great Republick of the world, or that ra"tional society which God as Rector would sapientially govern, and her "self with her husband (who no doubt was also included in the pro"mise) were the whole then existent race of mankinde, so did she re"ceive a legal enmity of obligation, which she was traditionally to de"liver down to all her posterity, being her self hereby obliged to list
"her self and all her infant progeny in the Redeemers army, against the "proclaimed enemy, and to teach her posterity to do the like: For
"thus obligatory precepts must be brought down. 3. As she was one of "the chosen favourites of God, she received the habitual enmity of san"ctification: And this is not in her power to propagate, though shee
"may use some means that are appointed thereto, and whether a pro"mise of any such thing be made to her seed on the use of such means,
"I will not now stand to discuss. 8. It is not all that are possessed "with the natural enmity against the Divel himself that are the Church "of Christ; For this is but a common preparative which is in all; Nor is "it all that are obliged to the further enmity against the works of sa-
"tan: But all that on that obligation are duely listed in Christs army "against satan (by the obliged person) are visible members; and all "that are by sanctification at a hearty enmity (habitual or actual) with "the Kingdome of satan, are members of the Church called mystical "or invisible. This I put as granted. 9. Those that violate this funda"mental obligation, and to their natural pravity shall add a fighting a"gainst Christ and his Kingdome for Satan and his Kingdome, are be"come themselves the seed of the Serpent. And though they had the "natural enmity with the rest of mankind in general against Satan, "yet have they therewithal the habitual enmity against Christ. This "much I suppose as out of controversie. But whether also the first ori"ginal corrupted nature it selfe (before any sin against recover"ing grace) did contain an habitual enmity against the Kingdome of
"the Redeemer? or whether the sins of later parents may propaga e
"this as an additional corruption in our nature, I will not now stand "to discuss. Onely as to our present business, it's certain that the ge"neral natural enmity to Satan, may consist with an habitual friendship "to his ways and cause. And though as men they may have the first
"common advantage of nature, and as subjects de jure may be under the "common obligation, yea, and as listed in Christs Army may have man of "its priviledges; yet for the enmity of disposition to Christ, they may be "under a greater curse. 10. As it is certain, that it is not onely Christ "himself that is here made the object of this promise, and is here cal"led [the seed of the woman,] (as is before proved, and may be more,
"and is commonly granted;) so it is to be noted, that those others
"in whom this enmity are put, are called here [the seed of the wo"man,] and not the seed of Christ (though the chief of them are his "seed.) And so though the promise is made to none but the the wo-
"mans seed, and no exception put in against infants, or any age of "all her seed: Till you can prove that infants are none of her seed,
"we must take this fundamental promise to extend to infants, and

that:

"that very plainly, without using any violence with the Text.

Answ. This tedious discourse of Mr. B. is indeed serpentine with winding in and out, wrigling and wresting the Text; one while it is a promise, another while a precept; sometimes meant of one sort of enmity, sometimes of another; sometimes the woman under one consideration, sometimes under another; sometimes the seed of the woman comprehend all the natural seed, sometime onely one kind: with so many ambiguous speeches, and unproved dictates, and inconsequent inferences, that I know not what better to term it then the way of a serpent on a rock, which the Wiseman said was too wonderfull for him, and one of the things he knew not, Prov. 30. 18, 21. And sure when I seek to acknowledge this discourse as a convincing proof of the law and ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, which Mr. B. asserts, I shall deliver my self as a Pupil to him, take him for an infallible Oracle, and profess blind obedience. But let me see what I can make of this Riddle. The sum of it, so far as I can collect, is this: Here is an enmity proclaimed legally, against the Devils pravity, malignity, and works; hereby all the seed natural of the woman are obliged to list themselves in Christs Army, or the woman as a believer is to list all her infant progeny in the Redeemers Army; infants being part of her seed, and no exception put in against infants, or any age of all her seed, this fundamental promise extends to them, and all duly listed are visible Churchmembers: Ergo, here is the fundamental law or ordinance for infants visible Churchmembership by promise and precept unrepealed. To discern how silly and insipid these arguings are (if I may use Mr. Fs. own phrase) let us grant him here is a promise and precept implied, and inquire what listing is here enjoyned, of whom, by whom, and how far this makes the listed visible Church members. The listing is not here expresst, but in his book of Baptism, p. 14. he saith, They are first made Disciples, and then solemnly admitted, entred, or listed by baptism. P. 24 As every one that must be admitted solemnly into the Army, must be admitted by listing, as the solemn engaging signe; so every one that hath right to be solemly admitted into the visible Church, must ordinarily bee admitted by baptism, Christs listing engaging signe. The persons to be listed, are according to Mr. B. mankinde, the woman and her seed, even infants, no exception being put in against infants, or any age of her seed. The persons that are to list are each man, for he saith, It is the duty of mankinde to list themselves, infants being at the parents disposal it is they that are to list them in Christs army, and this listing (which he counts duely done) makes infants visible Churchmembers. Concerning which, I grant that God doth proclaim here an enmity against the Diabolical pravity, malignity and works, and that it is the duty of mankinde to fight against Satan, to joyn with Christ: For this is no more but that God forbids sin, and it's our duty to resist it, and to believe and follow Christ, and here is a fundamental promise, that they who do so shall bruise the serpents head, or prevail against Satan. Nor do I deny that it is the duty of parents, yea of all men to do what lies in them to engage persons, even infants to this war, provided they do it by wayes allowed and appointed, as by their prayers, vowes to God, or the like. But it is utterly false, 1. that there is any precept of listing by baptism here, for baptism is a mere positive rite of the New Testament, not enjoyned here. 2. That it is the duty of all mankinde to list themselves For then it is their duty to baptise themselves. 3. That it is the duty of the woman to list her self and all her seed, For then she had been bound to baptise her self, and the children of unbelievers as well as believers, Cains seed as well as Abels, and if it were supposed that she had lived to this day, she had been bound to list all the infants at least of the professed Infidels at this day; For if it were a precept unrepealed, it must have bound her still. 4. That such a listing as Mr. B's words import, is either duly done, or that the listed in that manner are all visible Churchmembers. 5. That here is any fundamental promise made to persons so listed. 6. That as listed in Christs army in the manner Mr. B conceives, infants have the priviledge of Christs soldiers. None of these things denied by me, have a word of proof in all this prolix discourse, nor do I imagine any proof for them can be from this text, and therefore conceive his discourse without proof, and like the dream of a sick man, or the dotage of a phantastick. He adds.

11. Some learned men do use contemptible arguments to prove further, That the sanctifying enmity is here promised to the seed of the woman as her seed (I mean those that go the way of Dr. Ward, Mr. Bedford, &c.) that is, that as the two former sorts of enmity are put into all the seed of the woman (as is explained) so the spiritual holy enmity promised to her seed as she is a believer. 12. And some learned men do accordingly conclude, That the impiety of parents may do much to hinder their children from that blessing more then by original sin they were hindered, and therefore their faith may further them. Of which though much may be said, I shall say no more, because I will not stand on things so much questioned.

Answ. I might then well have omitted this as of no validity, but to shew the multiplicity of Pædobaptists errours.

He goes on thus. I come next to prove from other parts of Scripture, That the fundamental promise of Grace is thus to be interpreted as including infants. 1. If the same Covenant of grace when it is more fully and clearly opened, do expresly comprehend infants as to be Churchmembers, then is this fundamental promise so to be understood (or then doth this also comprehend them.) But the antecedent is certain, therefore so is the consequent. The antecedent I prove from the Covenant of grace made to Abraham the father of the faithful, which comprehended infants for Churchmembers: The Covenant made with Abraham comprehending infants, was the same with this in Gen. 3. but in some things clearlier opened. which is proved thus: Both these were the Covenant of grace and free justification by faith in the Redeemer, therefore they were the same. For there is but one such. If Abraham had some special promises additional to the main Covenant, that makes not the Covenant of free justification by faith to be divers. That this in Gen. 3. is the promise or Covenant of grace and free justification is not denied, that I know of. That the promise to Abraham was the same, is evident from Rom. 4.10,11,12,13,14. 1. It is there expresly manifest, that the the Covenant whereof Circumcision was to Abraham the seal, was the Covenant of free justification by faith; Circumcision it self being a seal of the righteousness of Faith which Abraham had, yet being uncircumcised, that he might be the Father of believers, &c. 2. Yea the promise that he should be heir of the world was not made to Abraham or to his seed through the Law, but through the righteousness of faith. Now it's certain that this Covenant sealed by Circumcision and made to Abraham and his seed, did comprehend infants. The consequence of the major then is evident, that the same promise expressed more concisely, is to bee expounded by the same expressed more fully: And it's acknowledged that the Gospel light and grace was to be manifest by certain degrees.

Answ. That the fundamental promise of grace, *Gen.*3.15. did include infants, was never denied by me, and therefore Mr. B. doth but waste paper, and abuse me and his Readers by going about to prove it. This I deny, that it includes all infants, or all infants of believers, and that any infant is made a visible Churchmember by that promise as the next cause, or the sole efficient, which is Mr. Bs. term; neither of these is proved by him. I grant that the Covenant to Abraham was the Covenant of Evangelical grace, though mixt, as I have often shewed, and that it did include infants, and that they were Churchmembers, to wit, of the invisible Church of the elect, I mean so many as the Covenant of Evangelical grace was made to. I grant also that Abrahams infants in his house were visible Churchmembers, but not by vertue of the Covenant barely as Evangelical, but by vertue of the transeunt fact before asserted by me; and if in any respect by vertue of the Covenant, it was by it as containing houshold or civil promises, rather then Evangelical. So that although I deny that from *Rom.*4.10,11,12,13,14. it is proved that Circumcision was a seal of the Covenant, Gen 17. and that *the promises, Gen.*17.4.5,6,8. were additional to the main Covenant, and not as well the main Covenant as *v.*7 yet I grant Mr. Bs. conclusions which he here infers, that *the promises, Gen.*3.15. & 17.7. did comprehend infants, that there is but one Covenant of free justification by faith in both places, that the one may explain the other that infants were from the beginning Churchmembers, that is, members of the invisible Church of the elect: But this I deny, that this is true of all, or perhaps onely of the infants of believers, or that because they are of the invisible therefore they are members of the visible Church, there being more required to make visible Churchmembers, then election, the Covenant of grace, and parents faith. But Mr. B. adds.

2. That the first fundamental promise is thus to be interpreted, I further prove by Gods constant administration in the performance of it. Concerning which I do make this challenge to you (with modesty and submission,) to prove if you can, that there was ever one Churchmember that had infants born to him while he was in that estate, from the beginning of the world to this day, whose infants also were not Churchmembers? Except onely the Anabaptists, who refuse or deny the mercy, and so refuse to dedicate their infants in Baptism unto Christ. And whether their infants be Churchmembers bers, I will not determine affirmatively or negatively at this time. I do again urge you to it, that you may not forget it; to prove to me, that ever there was one infant of a Churchmember in the world, since the creation to this day, that was not a Churchmember, (except the Anabaptists that refuse the mercy or deny it.)

Answ. Mr. B. undertakes to prove Gods constant administration, but instead of proving sends me a challenge, and hotly urgeth me to answer it; which course indeed is ridiculous to the intelligent, yet subdolous, as taking much with shallow heads who know not the laws of Dispute, as if he got the better of me if I did not answer it. But let such know, 1 That it is Mr. Bs. part now to prove, mine onely to answer. 2. That if I could not answer, either through defect of reading, memory, histories in such matters, or such like cause; yet this is no proof of Mr. Bs. assertion. 3. That I have no reason to answer Mr. Bs. questions and challenges, but his arguments: 1. Because I find a meer captious spirit in him, seeking advantage to himself from my words (which he very seldome doth rightly represent to the Reader) when he wants proof of his assertions; as appears most evidently in this his answer to my Letter, in which he hath gathered almost half his answer (besides the business propounded) from my writing to him. 2. That the understandings of men, even of Schollers and Learned men are so superficial, or so partial, that without ever examining, yea or reading my writings, upon Mr. Bs. exclamations, and vile suggestions of me and mine answers, they do most unrighteously, and like men that seek not the truth, conclude on his side, scorn and speak evil of me and the cause I assert (which is indeed the cause of Christ) of which I have much experience. 4. Nevertheless I answer his challenge categorically thus. 1. No infant born of a Churchmember was a visible Churchmember in the Christian Church, or any other besides that of the Nation of the Hebrews, as I have proved before: And if we must needs take up a fashion of disputing by challenges, I challenge Mr. B. to shew me one infant who was a visible Churchmember out of the Nation of the Hebrews. 2. I conceive from Acts. 16. 1. 2 Tim. 1. 5. that Timothy was born of a Churchmember, yet no Churchmember visible in infancy. Anabaptists refuse not the mercy of visible Churchmembership, if God had offered it to their infants; nor would they refuse to dedicate their infants in Baptism, if God had commanded it: But they dare not challenge what God hath not granted, nor profane the Ordinance of Christ, by their altering it into that which he hath not appointed. Mr. B. goes on thus,

SECT. LVIII.

Infants visible Churchmembership is not proved by the Law of Nature.

BEfore I proceed to any more Texts of Scripture, I will a little enquire into the light or Law of Nature it self, and see what that saith to the point in hand. And first we shall consider of the duty of dedicating infants to God in Christ, and next of Gods acceptance of them, and entertaining them into that estate. And the first is most evidently contained in the Law of Nature it self (at least upon supposition that there be any hopes of Gods entertaining them;) which I prove thus. 1. The law of Nature bindeth us to give to every one his own due: But infants are Gods own due; Ergo, the law of Nature bindeth parents to give them up to God. By [giving] here I mean not an alienation of propriety, to make that to be Gods that was not so before; but an acknowledgement of his right, with a free resignation and dedication of the infant to God, as his own; for his use and service, when he is capable thereof. If you say, infants being not capable of doing service, should not be devoted to it till they can do it; I answer, they are capable at present of a legal obligation to future duty, and also of the relation which followeth that obligation, together with the honour of a Churchmember (as the child of a Noble man is of his honours and title to his inheritance) and many other mercies of the Covenant. And though Christ according to his humanity was not capable of doing the works of a Mediatour or head of the Church in his infancy, yet for all that he must be head of the Church then, and not (according to this arguing) stay till he were capable of doing those works. And so is it with his members.

Answ. It is a bold attempt to undertake to prove a law or ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed from the law of Nature, when Churches are onely instituted, not by any law of Nature, and consequently there can be no direction in the law of Nature who shall be visible Churchmembers, who not. Nor could both those things Mr. B. considers be proved, to wit, the duty of dedicating infants to God in Christ, and Gods acceptance of them, and entertaining of them into that estate, i. e. of dedicated persons, prove them visible Churchmembers: there's more required thereto, to wit, something discernable by sense, by which they may be said to be part of Gods people. Yet I shall examine his proofs The conclusion may be understood of giving up, devoting, dedicating to God by prayer or vow; or else by an outward sign, such as Circumcision or Baptism. This latter is not of the law of nature, being meer instituted worship; the former may be granted, without any hurt to my cause. Nevertheless I shall say something to the argument: Which hath at least four terms, and so is faulty in the form; and for the matter of it, the major is not true without limitation. For the law of nature doth not bind every man to give to every one his own own due, except it be that due which is due from the giver, or it belongs to him to give. A private man is bound to pay his own debt, not to pay every other mans debt to him to whom it is due Now infants may be said to be Gods due, either in respect of their persons, or their service. Infants in infancy can do no service, nor doth God require any service of them, and therefore there is none due, and therefore no parents do or are bound by any act of theirs for their infants service to give God his due of their infants service. And for their persons, they are Gods due in that he may of right dispose of them as he will, in life and death, health or sickness; and in this respect parents have no way of giving God his due, but by acknowledging his Soveraignty, and submitting to his will. Dedication to God for the future is no giving of God his due from infants; it is neither the giving of God the due of their persons, or their service: they are bound themselves when they come to understanding to do it by themselves; and if they do it not, the parents dedication cannot do it. I object not, that infants should not be devoted to to God till they can do service; but that whatever it be, it is not the giving God his own due from infants, nor doth make them visible Church makers.

Mr. B. adds. 2. The law of nature bindeth all parents to do their best to secure Gods right, and their childrens good, and to prevent their sin and misery: But to engage them betimes to God by such a dedication, doth tend to secure Gods right, and their childrens good, and to prevent their sin and misery: For they are under a double obligation, which they may be minded of betimes, and which may hold them the more strongly to their duty, and disadvantage the tempter that would draw them off from God.

Answ. To dedicate them by prayer, and thanksgiving, and vows to God, may tend to these ends: But to do it by Baptism not required of God, secures not Gods right, but abuseth his name; nor doth it tend to the childrens good, or prevent their sin and misery. For neither is there promise of God that the parents dedicating the child by Baptism shall have these effects, nor do these effects follow ex opere operato, nor is there any obligation real put by infant-baptism on the person, though there may be a putative obligation thereby: But really infant-baptism is a disadvantage, 1. In that it is the occasion whereby they take themselves to be Christians afore they know what Christianity is, by which means they are kept in vain presumption of their safe condition; and this constant experience, and the acknowledgement of observing men doth witness. 2. They are kept back thereby from the true Baptism of Christ, which hath had, and would have a strong tie on mens consciences, if it were solemnly and in a right manner performed as it should be. Surely a mans own engagement by himself, in all probability must have a stronger operation then an engagement by another for him, notwithstanding the fond conceits of Mr. Simon Ford, and Mr. John Goodwin, of edification by infant baptism. He is a very rare bird that makes any fruitfull use of infant baptism, which neither hath institution from God, nor promise of blessing, and was never known by the infant, nor perhaps any person living can tell him there was any such thing. Nor is there in this respect the same reason of it and Circumcision, for Circumcision makes such an impression on the body as keeps the memory of it, but by Baptism there is no print on the body by which it and the obligation by it may be remembred.

3. Saith he, The law of nature bindeth parents in love to their children to enter them into the most honourable and profitable society, if they have but leave so to do: But here parents have leave to enter them into the Church, which is the most honourable and profitable society. Ergo. That they have leave, is proved, 1. God never forbad any man in the world to do this sincerely, (the wicked and unbelievers cannot do it sincerely,) and a not forbidding is to be interpreted a leave in case of such participation of benefits: As all laws of men in doubtfull cases are to be interpreted κατ' ἐυμενειαν, in the most favourable sence. So hath Christ taught us to interpret his own: when they speak of duty to God, they must be interpreted in the strictest sence: when they speak of benefits to man, they must be interpreted in the most favourable sence that they will bear.

Answ. Entering into the Church invisible is Gods onely work: Entering into the Church visible Christian is by Baptism, Plain Scripture proof, &c. pag. 24. we have neither precept nor example in Scripture, since Christ ordained Baptism, of any other way of admitting visible members, but onely by Baptism. Mr. Bs. minor then here is this, that parents have leave to enter (which is all one with admission) their children into the visible Church by Baptism, that is, to baptize them. But this is false. For God hath forbidden parents to bring their infants to baptism, in that he hath not appointed baptism for them (as is proved at large in the 2d. part of this Review) much more to baptize them in their own persons, according to Mr. Bs. hypotheses, plain Scrip proof, &c. pag. 211. except they be Ministers. A not forbidding is not to be interpreted as leave in this case: but a not commanding is a plain forbidding. Mr. Collings, provoc. prov. ch. 5. Nothing is lawfull in the worship of God, but what we have precept or president for; which who so denies, opens a door to all Idolatry, and superstition, and will-worship in the world. If the law of nature bind parents to enter their children into the Church, then it is a law that speaks of duty to God, not of benefit to man; for such laws contain grants of something from God, not of what man is to do: Now if it be a law of duty, it must according to Mr. Bs. own rule be interpreted in the strictest sence, which is the right sence; they are bound to it as God appoints, and no otherwise. So Mr. B. against Mr. Bl. pag. 80. I take Gods precept to be the ground of Baptism, as it is officium, a duty, both as to the baptizer, and the baptized. Mr. Ball reply about nine positions, p. 68. The Sacraments are of God, and we must learn of God for what end and use they were ordained. But by the institution of Baptism recorded in Scripture, we have learned it belongeth to the faithfull, to Disciples, to them that are called. Mr. B. mistakes when he conceives of baptism as a benefit to which a man hath right by promise or Covenant grant: For though a benefit do follow to them that rightly do it, yet it self is onely a duty, and such a one as is onely by institution, not by the law of nature, nor belongs to parents for children, but to each person for himself. But Mr. B. goes on.

2. "It is the more evident, that a not forbidding in such cases is "to be taken for leave, because God hath put the principle of self pre- "servation, and desiring our own welfare, and the welfare of our chil- "dren so deeply in humane nature, that he can no more lay it by then "he can cease to be a reasonable creature. And therefore he may law- "fully actuate or exercise this natural necessary principle of seeking "his own or childrens real happiness, where-ever God doth not restrain "or prohibit him. We need no positive command to seek our own or "childrens happiness, but what is in the law of nature it self, and to use "this where God forbiddeth not, if good be then to be found, cannot be "unlawfull.

Answ. 1. Infant baptism tends not to the preservation, good, welfare, real happiness of them; but to their hurt. 2. It requires a positive command, sith it is not of the law of nature. 3. It is forbidden, in that it is not commanded. 4. There can be expected no blessing of God on it, sith he hath promised none to it.

3. Saith he, "It is evident from what is said before (and elsewhere) that it is more then a silent leave of infants Churchmembership "that God hath vouchsafed us. For in the forementioned fundamental "promise, explained more fully in after times, God signified his will "that so it should be. It cannot be denied, but there is some hope at "least given to them in the first promise, and that in the general pro- "mise to the seed of the woman they are not excluded, there be no "excluding term. Upon so much encouragement and hope then it is "the duty of parents by the law of nature to enter their infants into the "Covenant, and into that society that partake of these hopes, and to list "them into the Army of Christ.

Answ. The point to be proved was, that parents have leave to enter their children into the Church; but a leave of infants Churchmembership vouchsafed of God (if there be good sense in the expression) is another thing. Infants Churchmembership is the infants state, not the parents act, and leave of it intimates a willingness in the infant to be a Churchmember, to which God vouchsafes leave. But whether there be sense or not in the expression, it is not true that in the forementioned fundamental promise, explained more fully in after times, God signified his will that infants should be visible Churchmembers; nor is it true, that upon hope given in the first promise that they are not excluded, is it the duty of parents (without a positive command) by the law of nature to enter their infants into the Covenant, and into that society that partake of these hopes, and to list them (by baptism) into the Army of Christ. Hopes of what may be, is not a sufficient reason of baptizing a person. Nor by these hopes is any more duty put on the parent, then an other, who hath the same hopes and may do it, as viz. a Midwife: Yea, by this argument Midwives should be bound to baptize not only believers infants, but also all infants, if it be so much for their good, welfare, preservation, real happiness, and the law of nature ties them as well as parents to do what lies in them to do them good upon such hopes and encouragement;

ment; and ſith they are in their power as well as parents, yea before them, and they may liſt them into Chriſts army, enter them into Covenant and the Church, they are bound to do it. Yea, conſidering that Mr. B. of Baptiſm part 2. ch 8. holds, that by Chriſts commiſſion, Mat. 28.19. Diſciples ſhould immediately without delay be baptized as ſoon as they are Diſciples, and believers infants are Diſciples as ſoon as they are born, and none can do it ſo ſoon as Midwives, they ought to do it, according to Mr Bs. hypotheſes, immediately upon their birth. Which will go very far in juſtifying the Papiſts about their haſty baptiſm by Midwives.

Yet again ſaith Mr. B. 4. It is the duty of Parents by the Law of Nature, to accept of any allowed or offered benefit for their children. But the relation of a member of Chriſts Church or Army, is an allowed or offered benefit to them, Ergo, &c For the major, theſe principles in the law of nature do contain it. 1. That the infant is not ſui juris, but is at his parents diſpoſe in all things that are for his good. That the parents have power to oblige their children to any future duty or ſuffering, that is certainly to their own good: and ſo may enter them into covenants accordingly: And ſo far the will of the Father is as it were the will of the childe. 2. That it is unnaturally ſinful for a parent to refuſe to do ſuch a thing, when it is to the great benefit of his own childe. As if a Prince would offer Honours, and Lordſhips, and Immunities to him and his heirs: if he will not accept this for his heirs, but onely for himſelf it is unnatural. Yea, if he will not oblige his heirs to ſome ſmall and reaſonable conditions for the enjoying ſuch benefits. For the minor, that this relation is an allowed or offered benefit to infants is manifeſted already, and more ſhall be.

Anſw. If meant of viſible members in the Chriſtian Church properly ſo called, this laſt ſpeech is denied.

He goes on thus. "And this leads me up to the ſecond point, which "I propounded to conſider of; whether by the light or law of nature "we can prove that infants ſhould have the benefit of being Church-"members, ſuppoſing it firſt known by ſupernatural revelation, that "parents are of that ſociety, and how general the promiſe is, and "how gracious God is. And 1. it is certain to us by nature that in-"fants are capable of this benefit, if God deny it not, but will give it "them as well as the aged. 2. It is certain that they are actually mem-"bers of all the Commonwealths in the world (perfectè ſed imperfectè "membra) being ſecured from violence by the lawes, and capable of "honors and right to inheritances, and of being real ſubjects under ob-"ligations to future duties, if they ſurvive. And this ſhews that they "are alſo capable of being Churchmembers, and that nature revealeth "to us, that the infants caſe much followeth the caſe of the parents, e-"ſpecially in benefits. 3. Nature hath actually taught moſt people on "earth, ſo far as I can learn, to repute their infants in the ſame reli-"gious ſociety with themſelves, as well as in the ſame civil ſociety. "4. Under the Covenant of works (commonly ſo called) or the perfect "rigorous law that God made with man in his pure nature, the infants "ſhould have been in the Church, and a people holy to God, if the pa-

"rents had so continued themselves. And consider 1. that holiness and "righteousness were then the same things as now, and that in the esta-"blishing of the way of propagation, God was no more obliged to "order it so, that the children of righteous parents should have been "born with all the perfections of their parents and enjoyed the same "priviledges, then he was obliged in making the Covenant of grace "to grant that infants should be of the same society with their parents, "and have the immunities of that society. 2. We have no reason when "the designe of redemption is the magnifying of love and grace, to "think that love and grace are so much less under the Gospel to the "members of Christ, then under the Law to the members or seed of "Adam, as that then all the seed should have partaked with the same "blessings with the righteous parents, and now they shall all be turned "out of the society, whereof the parents were members. 5. God gives "us himself the reasons of his gracious dealing with the children of the "just from his gracious nature, proclaiming even pardoning mercy to "flow thence, Exod. 34. and in the 2d. Com. 6. God doth yet shew "us that in many great and weighty respects he dealeth well or ill with "children for their parents sakes: as many texts of Scripture shew (and "I have lately proved at large in one of our private disputes, that the "sins of nearer parents are imputed as part of our original or natural "guilt.) So much of that.

Answ. 1. All these considerations, if they were yeelded to be true, would as well prove that by the light of Nature infants should be invisible Churchmembers as visible (which would contradict the Scripture, Rom 9. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.) yea rather, sith the 4th. consideration upon which the inference rests chiefly, is from the state in which persons were put by creation and redemption, which is into the invisible rather then the visible. Now then if these considerations are not sufficient to assure parents who are in the invisible Church that their infants are in the same society, neither are they sufficient to assure them they are visible Churchmembers. 2. It is a calumny of Mr. B. which is insinuated as if I held that all the seed of believers shall be turned out of the society whereof the parents were members. 3. It is a gross conceit, and contrary to the plain doctrine of the Scripture, concerning election and reprobation of Jacob and Esau, which is intimated, as if the designe of redemption under the Gospel to the members of Christ should be, that as the members or seed of Adam, so all the seed should partake of the same blessings with the righteous parents. 4. What hee saith he hath largely proved in one of the private disputes at Kederminster among the associate Ministers in Worcestershire (as I conjecture) I do not contradict peremptorily, as not knowing how he stated the question, nor what his proofs were. Yet it seems to mee to be an errour, nor am I very apt to give assent to Mr. Bs. determinations, however the associate Ministers may perhaps take him for a Pythagoras, whose ipse dixit must not be gainsaid.

Once more saith he. "Yet before I cite any more particular texts, "I will add this one argument from the tenour of the Covenant of "grace,

"grace as expreſſed in many texts of Scripture. According to the te-
"nour of the Covenant of grace, God will not refuſe to be their God "and take them for his people, that are (in a natural or law ſenſe) wil"ling to be his people, and to take him for their God. But the infants "of believing parents are thus willing, Ergo. The major is unqueſtion-
"able. The minor is proved from the very law of nature before expreſſed.
"Infants cannot be actually willing themſelves in natural ſence, ergo,
"the reaſon and will of another muſt be theirs in law ſence, and that is "of the parents, who have the full diſpoſe of them, and are warranted
"by the law of nature to chooſe for them (for their good) till they "come to uſe of reaſon themſelves. The parents therefore by the light "and law of nature chooſing the better part for their children, and "offering and devoting them to God, by the obligation of his own na"tural law, he cannot in conſiſtency with the free grace revealed in the "Goſpel, refuſe thoſe that are ſo offered. And thoſe that thus come to "him in the way that nature it ſelf preſcribeth, he will in no wiſe caſt "out, Joh. . . . And he will be offended with thoſe that would keep "them from him, that are offered by thoſe that have the power to do it, "though they cannot offer themſelves. For legally this act is taken "for their own. Thus I have ſhewed you ſome of the fundamental title "that infants of believers have to Churchmemberſhip, and our obligati"on to dedicate them to God.

Anſw. They are (as I conceive Mr. B.) willing to be Gods people in a natural ſence, who do in their own perſons actually will this; in a law ſence, who having not uſe of reaſon themſelves, do will by another who hath the diſpoſe of them, as v. g. a parent. That ſome acts of a parent are legally taken for the childs, it's not denied. But in this argument of Mr. B. I deny the major. And whereas Mr. B. ſaith, it is unqueſtionable, I ſay, it is manifeſtly falſe, there is no ſuch thing in the tenour of the Covenant of grace; yea, God did refuſe Iſhmael, and Eſau, though Abraham and Iſaac prayed for them, and dedicated them (in Mr. Bs. ſenſe) to God. What Mr. B. dictates by way of proof, whether of the major or minor (which I think he did not well heed) is not true. Infants cannot will of themſelves, therefore the reaſon and will of another muſt be theirs in law ſence. For it follows not, unleſs the Law-giver do ordain it ſo. Nor doth it follow, that if the infants cannot will, and anothers will muſt be theirs in law ſence, it muſt in Church matters be the will of the natural parents. For in ſuch things it may be as well conceived that the will of the mother the Church (as it is termed,) the Church-governours, or as ſome will the Goſſips ſhould be their will in the law ſence, and that they have the power to diſpoſe of them, and are warranted by the law of nature to chooſe for them (for their good) as the natural parents. The ſpeeches [the parents by the light and law of nature chooſing the better part for their children, and offering them, and devoting them to God by the obligation of his own natural law, he cannot in conſiſtency with the free grace revealed in the Goſpel, refuſe thoſe that are ſo offered,] is falſe, the Goſpel no where aſſuring grace to thoſe that are offered by anothers will, but to thoſe who repent

and believe themselves. The speech [And those that thus come to him in the way that nature it self prescribeth, he will in no wise cast out, Joh. . .] is false, it being certain God hath cast out many so coming, as Esau, Ishmael, &c. and hath a tincture of Pelagianism; and the Text, *Joh.*6.37. to which Mr. B. alludes, is grosly abused by him, sith it speaks onely of those that come to Christ by their own faith, and of not casting out from the invisible Church, and everlasting life, as *v.*39,40. shew, not meerly from the visible Church. And the speech [and he will be offended with those that would keep them from him that are offered by those who have the power to do it, though they cannot offer themselves,] being meant of not baptizing them, is also false; and the contrary is true, that he will be offended with those who baptize infants which he never appointed, but profane the ordinance, being appointed onely for them who are themselves disciples and believers. And thus Mr. Bs. fundamental title to infants visible Churchmembership is blown up.

Mr. B. adds. You must now in reason expect, that infants Churchmembership being thus established, partly in the law of nature, and partly in the fundamental promise, what is after this spoken of it should not be any new establishment, but confirmations and intimations of what was before done, rather giving in the proof that such a law and promise there is that did so establish it, then being such first establishing laws or promises themselves. And from hence I may well add this further argument. If there be certain proof in Scripture of infants Churchmembership, but none except this before alledged that makes any mention of the beginning of it, but all speaking of it as no new thing, then we have great reason upon the forementioned evidence, to assign this beginning which from Gen. 3. we have expresse. But the former is true, ergo the later. You confess that infants were Churchmembers once. You onely conceive it began when Abraham was called out of Ur. Your conceit hath not a word to support it in the Text. The right to such a blessing was then new to Abrahams seed, when Abraham first believed: But when it began to belong to infants of believers in general, no Text except this before cited doth mention. Nor doth that promise to Abraham intimate any inception then as to the Churchmembership of infants, but onely an application of a priviledge to him that in the general was no new thing.

Answ. Mr. B. mistakes in conceiving visible Churchmembership to belong to infants of believers in general, and therefore it must be derived from Gen. 3.15. I retort his argument. If there be certain proof in Scripture of infants Churchmembership, but none except in the nation of the Hebrews, and that had its beginning at the call of Abraham out of Ur, and ended at the rejection of the Jews, then infants visible Churchmembership began with Abrahams call, and now ceaseth. But the antecedent is true. Ergo, also the consequent. The consequence is in effect Mr. Bs. In the minor the first and third propositions are proved by the dispute before: For the second [that the nation of the Hebrews began with Abraham,] besides the allegation before of Nehem 9.6. Acts 7.2. where he is called their Father, and the story of the Hebrews begun from Abrahams call, the words of the Prophet, Isa. 51. 1, 2. are expres to this purpose; calling Abraham and Sarah the rock whence they were hewen, and the hole of the pit whence they were digged, Abraham their father and Sarah that bare them, and mentioning Gods calling him alone, blessing him and increasing him as the cause of it (which doth prove that it was by the transeunt fact which I described, not by Mr. Bs. promise and precept that they were Churchmembers) and this as a new thing, God having chosen no other people of the earth as he did the Jews. Deut. 7. 6. And therefore I deny Mr. Bs. minor, and conclude, that visible Churchmembership of infants was onely in the nation of the Hebrews; not by a promise to be a God to believers and their seed, and a precept to parents to dedicate them to God, and list them in Christs Army; but by the transeunt fact of calling Abraham, blessing, multiplying him, bringing them out of Egypt to himself, which was to be demonstrated. Let's yet view Mr. Bs. confirmations, whether they be any better then his primitive establishments.

SECT. LIX.

The sayings of Adam, Eve, Noah, concerning Cain, Seth, Shem, the term sons of God, Gen. 6. 1. prove not Mr. Bs. law of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed.

NOw for the Texts, saith he, that further intimate such a foregoing establishment. 1. There seems to be some believing intimation of this in Adams naming his wife the mother of the living: For it is to be noted what Bp. Usher saith, Annal vol. 1. p. 2. Unde tum primum (post semen promissum) mulieri Evæ nomen a marito est impositum, Gen. 3. 20. quod mater esset omnium viventium non naturalem tantum vitam, sed illud quoque quod est per fidem in semen ipsius, Messiam promissum: quomodo & post eam Sara fidelium mater est habita, 1 Pet. 3. 6. Gal. 4. 31.] He put that name on her after the promise, because she was to be the mother of all the living, not onely that live the life of nature, but that which is by faith in the Messiah her seed. So that as she was the root of our nature, we are her natural seed; and as she was a believer, and we the seed of her a believer, so is she the mother of a holy seed, and we that are her seed are holy, as a people visibly dedicated to God.

Answ. Though the exposition were allowed, and the inference thereon, that we that are her seed, that is by faith in the Messiah, are holy, yet it follows not that we are so as a people visibly dedicated to God, much less that our infants are so without their own faith by vertue of their parents dedication: And therefore this Text, according to Mr. Bs. exposition (which yet may be questioned) yeelds no confirmation of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed.

2. Saith he, "When Cain was born, his mother called him [possession] because she had obtained a man of the Lord, that is, faith

" Ainſworth, [with his favour, and of his good will,] and ſo a ſon of " promiſe, and of the Church. And therefore it is to be noted, that " when Cain had ſinned by killing his brother, God did curſe him, and " caſt him out of his preſence, *Gen.*4.14,16. So that he was excommu- " nicate and ſeparated from the Church of God, ſaith Ainſworth, [that " is, from the place of Gods word and worſhip which in likelihood was " held by Adam the father, who being a prophet, had taught his chil- " dren how to ſacrifice and ſerve the Lord. So on the contrary, to come " into Gods preſence or before him, 1 *Chron.*16.29. is explained in " *Pſal.*96 8. to be the comming into his Courts.] Very many learned " men give the ſame expoſition of it. Now if Cain were now excom- " municate, then was he before of the Church: nay it's certain by his " ſacrificing, and other proof, however this Text be interpreted: But no " man can give the leaſt reaſon from Scripture to make it ſo probable " that he entred into the Church at any other time, as we give of his " entrance at his nativity.

Anſw. Eve doth not ſay, that ſhe poſſeſſed a ſon of God, member of the Church from the Lord, but a man, by vertue of the power given to the parents for procreation, *Gen.*1.28. notwithſtanding the curſe, *Gen.*3.16. which was from the Lord, Pſal 127.3. *Gen.*30.2. that is, by his providence, and in ſome reſpect with his favour and good will, conſidering her deſert, and danger it was that ſhe poſſeſſed him when both their lives were in ſo great hazard. That Cain was a Churchmember viſible from his infancy hath no probability, there being no hint of it in that Text, or any other. The proofs that infant viſible Churchmembership was onely in the Hebrew Nation, have beene ſhewed before.

" Alſo, ſaith Mr. B. When Eve bare Seth, ſhe ſo named him as a " ſon of mercy in faith, as appointed her by the Lord to be in Abels " room, faithfull as Abel, and the father of our Lord afte the fleſh, as " Ainſworth on *Gen.*4.25. And is there no intimation in this that Seth " was an infant member of the viſible Church? I confeſs he that ſhall " excommunicate this appointed ſeed, or faith, that Seth was without " the Church in his infancy, doth ſpeak in my eares ſo improbably, and " ſo unlike the Scripture, that I am very confident I ſhall never be- " lieve him.

Anſw Nor ſhould I, meaning as Mr. Ainſworth, ſeed] that is another ſon: that as Abrahams ſeed was called in Iſaac (Iſhmael being excluded) *Gen.*21.12. ſo Eves ſeed ſhould be in Seth, that is the elect ſeed, and ſo he a member of the invisible Church in infancy; and yet there's no intimation that he was an infant member of the viſible Church, from which Iſhmael was not excluded. In which though I place not Seth, yet I do not thereby excommunicate Seth, or ſay that he was without the Church in his infancy.

Mr. B. adds. " Note alſo, that as God had thus caſt out Cain, and " ſupplied Abels room by Seth and had given each of them poſterity; ſo " we find him in a ſpecial manner regiſtring the ſucceſſors of the righ- " teous, and putting two titles on theſe two diſtinct generations, calling

"some the sons of God, and others the daughters of men, Gen. 6. 2. "Supposing that you reject the old conceits that these sons of God "were Angels that fell in love with women, the current ordinary ex- "position I think will stand, that these were the progeny of Seth, and "other members of the Church, who are called the sons of God; and "that it was the progeny of Cain, and other wicked ones, that are cal- "led the daughters of men. Where note that they are not themselves "denominated wicked, but the children of men, as being a generation "separated from the Church from the birth. And the other are not "themselves affirmed to be truly godly ones, but sons of God, as be- "ing the seed of the Saints not cast out, but members of the Church, "or the sons of those who were devoted to God, and so devoted to him "themselves: a separated generation belonging to God as his visible "Church. Where note, that these that are called the sons of God, "even the line of Seth and other godly parents, were yet so wicked that "God repented that he made them, and destroyed them in the flood, "sparing onely Noah and his family. So that it was not their own god- "liness that made them called the sons of God, but their relation, "Churchstate, and visible separation from open unchurched Idolaters. "Compare this phrase with the like, Deut. 14. 1. 2 Cor. 6. 18. In the "former it's said [ye are the children of the Lord your God, ye shall not cut "your selves, &c.] where the whole people, infants and all are called Gods "children, as being a people separated to him from the Idolatrous "world; and so in the next v. called a holy people unto God, peculiar to "him, &c. And 2 Cor. 6. 18. Come out from among them, and be ye se- "perate, &c. and I will be a father to you, and you shall be my sons and "daughters, saith the Lord Almighty.] So that Gods sons and daugh- "ters are that society that are separated from Idolaters unto the wor- "ship of God as the visible Church is. And then it appears that the "generation of the righteous, even from the womb, were ennumerated "to the rest, in that they are not mentioned as a people called out here "and there, and initiated at age (there's no mention of any such thing:) "but as a stock or generation opposed to the daughters of men, or of "the unchurched, who were such from their infancy as all will grant. "For it was not the same men that were the parents of those here called "the daughters of men and the sons of God (though some of the later "might be excommunicate when they fell:) But it plainly intimates, "that it was another sort of men that these were the daughters of, then "those that were parents to the sons of God. So Ainsworth in loc. [The "sons of God, i. e. the men of the Church of God, for so such Moses "saith, Deut. 14. 1. &c. 1 Joh. 3. 1. Daughters of men, meaning of Cains "posterity that were out of Gods Church, Gen. 4. 14.] So our Annota- "tions, and many more.

Answ. 1. There is not sufficient evidence in the text to prove it, that the sons of God were of Seths, and the daughters of men of Cains posterity: they might be some of the daughters of men of Seths, and some of the sons of God of Cains progeny, notwithstanding what is in the text. And there is this reason against it, that 6th Gen. 4. 16. it is said, that

Cain went out from the presence of the Lord, and dwelt in the land of Nod on the East of Eden, and that he built a City called Enoch, that the posterity of Cain and Seth dwelt so far one from another, that they had not occasion to see one another so as to fall in love with their beauty. And whereas it is clear that Adam after he begat Seth begat sons and daughters Gen. 5 4. living 800 years, and that the great change in religion was about the time of Enos birth Gen. 4. 26. the sons of God and daughters of men might be of other races then Cain and Seth. But I shall not contend about this. 2. Nor is it manifest that either sort of persons are called so from their descent, or Church-state by birth. For the one are not called the sons of God from their birth, but practise or profession, διὰ τὸ μιμεῖσθαι μέχρι ἐκείνου τοὺς προγόνους τὴν εὐσέβειαν, saith Chrysostom hom 22. on Genes. Because until then they did imitate their progenitors vertue, Piscat. analys. Gen. 6. *Per filios Dei intelligendi sunt ii qui religionem puram profitebantur, præsertim ex Sethi & Enoshi posteris. Whence I infer, that in the judgement of these Authors they are termed the sons of God not from their Churchmembership by birth, but their profession and practise. On the other side, the parents of the daughters are termed men not from their discent by birth, or exclusion out of the Church by birth, but as the term [man] is taken for corrupt unregenerate men as Ainsworth, so Paul 1 Cor. 3. 3. Piscat. sch. in Gen. 6. 2. Nisi potius est ut nomine אדם Adam hîc intelligatur primus ille generis humani parens: ut significetur illas gessisse imaginem illam secundùm quam Adamus genuit liberos, non autem fuisse regeneratos spiritu Dei. Which exposition is very likely that they are termed daughters of Adam, not daughters of men, because they were corrupt as Adam, as Gen. 5. 3. Adam is said to beget a son in his own image corruptus corruptum, as Pisc. sch. in locum, in opposition to Gods image. v. 1. So Hos. 6. 7. and then daughters of Adam doth not note their discent but qualities and practise, as daughters of Sara 1 Pet. 3. 7. that is, that they revolted from the true worship of God, as Adam from God. Which things premised, I deny 1. that it is true that the women are not themselves denominated wicked, but the children of men, as being a generation separated from the Church from the birth. For there is nothing in the text that proves the men were the posterity of Cain, nor that all the posterity of Cain were out of the Church, nor that these men were out of the Church, though they were corrupt persons or degenerate members, and therefore nothing to prove they were excluded from the Church from the birth, by reason of their discent. And it may bee well conceived that the term [daughters of Adam] doth note their wickedness as treacherously departing from God as he did 2. I deny they are termed [sons of God] who chose the daughters of Adam for their beauty, as being the seed of the Saints, &c. but as being at least in appearance holy and true worshippers and chosen by God, they are so denominated not from their discent from the godly, for then they had been called the sons of the Saints rather then of God, but from their profession and practise, if the interpretation of Aben Ezra that they were the sons Elohim of the Judges or mighty, or that other that they were eminent persons, hold not. 3. I deny that it can be proved that these sons of God were not truly godly, or that that they were so wicked that God repented that he made them, and destroyed them in the flood. For neither doth their love of women prove they were not truly godly, Solomon is judged truly godly Nehem. 13.26. though hee fell perhaps more deeply into the same sin. Sampson was a believer Heb. 11. 32. yet sinned this way. Nor doth that which is said Gen. 6. 11, 12, 13. prove it, for that is rather to be understood of the Nephilim or Giants, or the posterity of the the sons of God mentioned v. 4. rather then of the sons of God themselves, v. 2. And therefore it is not proved that it was not their own godliness that made them called the sons of God, but their Church state. Nor is there any thing Deut. 14.1. that proves the sons of God Gen. 6.2. were such from their infancy as borne of Churchmembers. For they are the sons of Gods there either by profession or special choice v. 2. not from their parentage. Much less is there any thing 2 Cor. 6. 18. to that purpose, for the promise of son-ship there is not from birth but obedience v. 17. And as Gen. 6. 2. their being made sons of God is not expresst to be by calling, so neither is it said to be by humane generation, nor doth it follow if the daughters of men were such from their birth, the sons of God must be so from their birth, no not though sons of God noted a generation or stock, as it doth not follow that because that which is born of the flesh is flesh from the birth, that that which is born of the spirit is spirit from the birth, Joh. 3. 6.

"Also, saith Mr. B. an intimation of this priviledge, and that they "were sons of mercy and of the promise, appeareth in the very names "of many of the children of the righteous, both before and after the "flood, which I will not stand on particularly.

Answ. This is granted, but proves not their visible Churchmembership from their birth.

He adds. "And when all the world had so defiled themselves, that "God was resolved to cut them off, he spared Noah and his family or "sons. Though Cham was to be cursed, yet was hee of the Church

"which worshipped the true God, and spared as a son of Noah, and "one of that society. And if God so far spared him then for his fathers "sake as to house him in the Ark (the type of the Church) bee sure "took him to be of the same society in his infancy, and then bare him "the same favour on the same account.

Answ That the Ark was a type of the Church is not said in Scripture, it is rather made a type of Baptism 1 Pet. 3. 21. But let it bee granted the Ark was a type of the Church, and that Cham was in the Ark for his fathers sake and a member of the Church, yet it followes not he was so in infancy, he might be so as a worshipper of the true God, though himself in other things corrupt.

Again saith Mr. B. "As soon as Noah came out of the Ark God "blessed himself in his issue, as he did Adam, with an [increase and mul-"tiply] and made a Covenant with him and his seed after him. Which "Covenant though the expressed part of it be that the earth should bee "drowned no more, and so it was made with the wickedst of Noahs seed, "and even with the beasts of the field, yet doth it import a special fa-"vour to Noah and his seed, as one whom God would shew a more "special respect to, as he had done in his deliverance, and upon this "special favour to him the creatures fare the better. For though the "word [Covenant] be the same to man and beast, yet the diversity of "the promissary and his capacity may put a different sense on the same "word, as applied to each. And indeed it should seem but a sad bless-"sing to Noah to hear an [increase and multiply] if all his infant po-"sterity must be cast or left out of the visible Church, and so left as "common or unclean. This were to encrease and multiply the King-"dome of the Devil. If he that was so mercifully housed in the Ark "with all his children, must now bee so blest as to have all their issue "to be out of the Church, it were a strange change in God, and a strange "blessing on Noah! And an uncomfortable stablishing of a Covenant "with his seed, if all that seed must bee so thrust from God and dealt "with as the seed of cursed Cain.

Answ. Though the Covenant Gen. 9. 9. should import a special favour to Noah and his seed more then to the beasts (which yet the text expresseth not) yet that this should be infants visible Churchmembership followes not, nor is it likely, such then all the infant posterity yea all the seed of Noah, and consequently all the men of the world since then should be visible Churchmembers. Nor was the blessing of multiplying said to Noah, reduced to such a paucity, though his infant posterity were not of the visible Church, nor were they any more common and uncleen thereby, then they should have been if so taken, nor had this been to increase and multiply the Kingdome of the Devil, they that are not visible Churchmembers may be of the Kingdome of Christ and not of the Kingdome of the Devil. I say not all Noahs issue was out of the Church, yet the leaving out infants from the visible Church, shewed no change in God from what hee was to them when he housed the sons of Noah in the Ark, nor doth it any whit lessen the blessing expressed Gen. 9. 1. nor doth it infer that all that seed must be thrust from God and dealt with as the seed of cursed Cain. These are but frivolous inferences fit onely to scare weak heads.

" Moreover, saith he, it is certain that Noah did propheticially, or " at least truly pronounce the blessing on Sem and Japhet. And in Shems " blessing he blesseth the Lord his God, shewing that God was his God " and so in Covenant with him. And it is plain that it is not onely the " persons, but the posterities of his three sons that Noah here intended. " It was not Cham himself so much as Canaan and his succeeding poste- " rity that were to be servants to Shem and Japhet, that is to their poste- " rity. And the blessing must be to the issue of Shem, as well as the " curse to the issue of Cham. And indeed a Hebrew Doctor would take " it ill at that Expositor or Divine whatsoever that should presume to ex- " clude the infant seed of them out of Gods Church. And wel they may, " if in the blessing God be pronounced to be their God. Saith Ainsworth " in loc. [under this Sem also himself receiveth a blessing: for blessed " is the people, whose God Jehovah is, Psal. 144. 15. and eternal life " is implied herein, for God hath prepared for them a City of whom he " is not ashamed to be called their God, Heb. 11. 16. and Sem is the " first man in Scripture that hath expressly this honour.

Answ I grant that not onely the person of Shem, but his posterity were blessed; nor do I deny God was their God, nor that their infant seed was in Gods Church: But this doth not prove their visible Churchmembership in infancy, but rather their invisible Churchmembership, for that is imported by the phrase of being their God, as Mr. Ainsworths exposition intimates. God was God to Jacob in his mothers womb, yet he was not then a visible, but an invisible Churchmember.

" Moreover (saith Mr. B.) in Gen. 9. 27. in Japhets blessing there " is much, though in few words, to this purpose intimated. First, note " that the Jewish Church is called [the tents of Sem.] From whence " it appeareth, that the Church priviledges of that people begun not " with or from Abraham, but were before: And that it is the same " Church that was of Shem and of Abraham, and after all the additional " promises to Abraham, the Jewish Church is still denominated [the " tents of Sem:] now they were the tents of Sem before Abrahams " days. And therefore it is clear, that it being the same Church, must " be supposed to have the same sort of members or materials: and " therefore infants must be members before Abrahams days as well as " after. That Church which was Sems tents had infant Churchmem- " bers (for the Jewes Church is so called, into which Japhet was to " pass:) But the Church both before and after Abraham was Sems " tents, Ergo.

Answ. That the tents of Sem note the Jewish people, is not improbable: But then it is as certain that they are so called, not from what they were in Sems days, at least not what they were when Noah prophesied, but what they were to be afterwards when they were formed to be a peculiar people; and they are Sems tents, because they descended from him. And this is clear even from what Mr. B. and all grant, that what is here said was accompliſhed in the poſterity of Sem, Japhet and Cham. And therefore it followes not that if the Jewiſh people had infants Churchmembers viſible, it muſt be ſo in Sems dayes, becauſe they are termed Sems tents, ſith they are ſo termed from their diſcent, not from the ſtate of the Church in Sems time. Nevertheleſs if it bee granted that Sems tents are the Church of God in Sems family in his days, it will rather prove it to note the inviſible Church then the viſible. For the dwelling in the tents of Sem in Mr. Bs. and their ſenſe whom he follows, is by faith, and ſo the tents of Sem muſt note the inviſible Church of true believers, of whom God is God as he was of Sem, the Iſrael of God, as they are termed Gal. 6. 16. not the Jewiſh Church viſible, and they were joyned by perſwaſion, and therefore not infants, who were to dwell in Sems tents, and conſequently infants viſible Churchmembership is not hence proved. And to Mr. Bs. argument I anſwer by granting the concluſion, if by Sems tents be meant the inviſible Church, if the Jewiſh people, the minor is denied. He goes on thus.

" Yet further let it here bee noted, that it is into Shems tents that " Japhet muſt paſs. I ſuppoſe that the evidence is better here for that ex- " poſition that applieth the word [dwell] to Japhet then to God, and ſo " that this is ſpoken of the converſion of the Gentiles, as many Expoſi- " tors have cleered at large. And ſo, as Ainſworth ſaith, the ſenſe is " that Japhet ſhall be [united with the Churches of the Jews, the poſte- " rity of Sem, which was fulfilled when the Gentiles became joint heyrs, " and of the ſame body, and joint partakers of Gods promiſe in Chriſt, " the ſtop of the partition wall being broken down. &c. Eph. 3. 6. & " 2. 14, 19. Although it may further imply the graffing of Japhets chil- " dren into the ſtock of the Church, when Sems poſterity ſhould bee " cut off, &c.] vid. ult. Now if it be Sems tents even the ſame Church " that Japhets children muſt dwell in, then as Sems infants were Church- " members, ſo muſt Japhets, and not all his infant ſeed bee caſt or left " out. So that here is a promiſe of infant Churchmemberſhip unto the " Gentiles in theſe words.

Anſw. For my part, for ought I yet diſcern, Mr. Nicholas Fuller his expoſition in his 1d. Book of his Miſcellanies Theological ch. 4. ſeems more right then that which Mr. B. and many other Expoſitors follow, to wit thus, God ſhall enlarge the coaſts of the poſterity of Japhet in Aſia, Europe, and America, and God ſhall dwell in the tents of Sem, that is, Chriſt or God manifeſted in the fleſh, ſhall dwell in the tents of Sem; that is among the Jews, being of their ſtock, as it is John 1. 14. and Canaan ſhall be ſervant to the Iſraelites, and the poſterity of Japhet, as the Canaanites, Egyptians, Carthaginians and other people of Cham have been, being conquered by Joſhua, Alexander the great, the Romans, and other people. Nor do I ſee how Mr. Bs. interpretation can be right, ſith when Japhet was perſwaded to dwell in Sems tents, Chams poſterity alſo were perſwaded, and Canaan was no more a ſervant in a ſpiritual ſenſe, no nor ſo much as Sems tents the Jewiſh people; nor were the Gentiles perſwaded to dwell in Sems tents, that is, in the Jewiſh Church viſible; but it was quite diſſolved, and they a ſeparate Church from them. And therefore it is moſt manifeſtly falſe, that the children of Japhet muſt dwell in Sems tents, that is, the ſame viſible Church Jewiſh, and therefore the inference is wrong, there are infant viſible members in the Gentile Church Chriſtian: yea ſith according to Mr. Bs. own expoſition, the Gentiles were by the perſwaſion of the Goſpel, as it is Epheſ. 3. 6. of the ſame body, none of the Gentiles were of the ſame body but thoſe who were perſwaded by the Goſpel, which cannot be ſaid of infants, and therefore the contrary follows from Mr. Bs own expoſition, that infants were not to be viſible Chriſtian Churchmembers.

SECT. LX.

Mr. Bs. Law of Infants viſible Churchmemberſhip unrepealed, is not proved from Gen. 12. or 17, or 22.

"WE come next, ſaith Mr. B. to the promiſe made to Abraham, "which I ſhall ſay the leſs to, becauſe you confeſs it. But again "note, that whereas your ſelf make the beginning of Gods taking the "Jews to be his people, and ſo of infants to be members of the Church, "to be at Abrahams call from Ur. 1. There is no one word of that in "the text. 2. Lot came out of Ur with Abraham, yea and from Haran, "and lived with him: were not Lot and his infants Churchmembers "then?

Anſw. 1. I confeſs a promiſe to Abraham, but not that Abraham or his infants were viſible Churchmembers by it, as the ſole or next efficient cauſe. 2. What word is in the text for the beginning of the Jewiſh people to be Gods Church at Abrahams call out of Ur, is ſhewed above, from Iſai 51. 1, 2. Nehem. 9. 7. Acts 7. 1, 2. 3. Lot came along with Abram to Canaan, but was there parted from him, and all along they were ſevered, and therefore Lot though a righteous man, yet was not of the ſame Church with Abrams houſe, nor his infants if he had any, viſible Churchmembers, becauſe God intended not to make his houſe and poſterity his Church viſible.

3. Saith Mr. B. "The chief note I intend is this, that there is "no more ſaid then to prove infants Churchmembers, then what wee "have ſhewed was ſaid long before, and is ſaid after the Gentiles in- "fants, no nor ſo much. If therefore the paſſage of Abraham out of Ur, "yea or the promiſe made to him in Haran, Gen. 12. 2, 3. will prove "infants Churchmemberſhip, then have we as good proof of it to the "Gentile Church as to the Jews.

Anſw. I neither make Abrahams paſſage out of Ur, nor the promiſe in Haran (or rather in Ur Gen. 12. 2, 3.) to be that which made infants viſible Churchmembers in the Hebrew nation, but Gods ſpecial call, or taking the houſe of Abraham entirely to bee his people, which Mr. B hath not nor can ſhew to have been done to any other people.

"And here, ſaith he, I note further, that in the beginning before

"the

" the command for Circumcision, you plainly yeild that infants Church-
" membership is a thing separable from Circumcision, and begun not " with it, but before. And indeed I think I have evinced that to you in " my Book of Baptism. Abraham himself was not made a member by " Circumcision, but circumcised because a member of Christs Church
" by faith. Ishmael was a member before, and so was Isaac, and the in" fants born in Abrahams house.

Answ. I grant visible Churchmembership was before Circumcision in Abrahams house, but not that Abraham was circumcised under this formal consideration, as a member of Christs Church by faith, but as one to whom it was commanded by God.

Mr. B. goes on. " Whether there were any promise or precept of this
" (but a meer transeunt fact) let the text last mentioned, and the fol" lowing bear witness. Gen. 12. 2, 3. [In thee shall all families of the " earth be blessed] and Gen. 17. 7, 9, 10. [And I will establish my " Covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee — and I will " be their God. And God said to Abraham: Thou shalt keep my Co" venant therefore, thou and thy seed after thee in their genera ions. This " is my Covenant which you shall keep between me and you, &c.] to " vers. 13. In all this let these things be noted. 1. That here is an ex" press promise or Covenant to Abraham and his seed after him. 2. That " it is not onely de præsenti, but for the future, called an everlasting " Covenant. 3. That this promise or Covenant doth manifestly im" ply and include infants Churchmembership (as you confess.) 4. That
" yet here is not the least word that intimates an institution of it de novo,
" but rather the contrary plainly intimated. The promises before Gen.
" 17. are mainly about the multiplication of Abrahams seed. What is " that to Churchmembership? (except what intimates the promised " seed, of which anon.) Hagar hath a promise also of the multiplica-
" tion of Ishmaels seed. And the very precept of Circumcision is onely
" one part of the infant members, viz. the males, and therefore it can" not be foundation of their Churchmembership, which leaves out half " the members. 5. Note that the promise that God will be their God, " doth expressly contain the Churchmembership of the seed. 6. Note " that this is more then a transeunt fact, Ergo being an everlasting Co" venant. Had it been a natural transeunt fact, that had left no perma" nent title behind it in the obligation of the Covenant, then it had been
" null and void as soon as spoken: then the word of God is but a bare " sound and of no further force. 7. Note that the Apostle (as is said) Rom.
" 4. 10, 11, 12, 13. doth fully manifest to us, that this promise was " made to Abraham as a believer, and that Circumcision was a seal of the " righteousness of faith which hee had, yet being uncircumcised: and " therefore that the chief part of the Covenant of having God for our " God, and his taking us as his peculiar people, belongs to the Gen" tiles as well as to the Jews. 8. And he oft sheweth that the faithful are
" Abrahams seed, and therefore the chief blessings of the promise belong " to all the faithful. But one of the blessings was, that their infants " shou'd be comprehended in the same Church and Covenant, Ergo, the

" infants of the faithful who are the heirs of the ſame promiſe, muſt be " comprehended in it too.

Anſw. 1. I deny not the promiſe Gen. 17.7. to include infants Church-memberſhip, but that I confeſs that it doth manifeſtly imply and include infants viſible Churchmemberſhip Mr. B cannot ſhew. 2. The promiſe that God will bee their God, doth not expreſſly contain the viſible Churchmemberſhip of infants. For God may be God to them who are not viſible Churchmembers, and he may not be God to them who are. 3. If in the promiſes Gen. 12. 2, 3. Gen. 17. 7. and the precept Gen. 17. 9, 10. there be no inſtitution de novo, nor foundation of infants Church-memberſhip, then infants Churchmemberſhip viſible (which was not before Abrahams dayes) hath not foundation in the promiſes and precept, but the tranſeunt fact I have mentioned. 4. Though I conceive that a tranſeunt fact may create a permanent title, as a gift, a delivery into our hands without a promiſe for future, may create a permanent title, nor do I deny that the Covenant Gen. 17. 7 did leave a permanent title behinde it; yet I deny that the viſible Churchmemberſhip of infants in Abrahams houſe was by a title to be legally claimed, or by the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. as the cauſa procreans of it, though it might bee the cauſa conſervans of it, in that it aſſured ſome of thoſe acts whereby it was continued. 5. I deny that the Apoſtle Rom. 4. 10, 11, 12, 13. doth at all, much leſs fully manifeſt to us, that the promiſe Gen. 17. 7. was made to Abraham as a believer, though I grant what Mr. B. infers from it in his 7th. note. The Apoſtle doth plainly manifeſt, that in the Goſpel ſenſe it was made to Abraham a father of believers. 6. It is denied as moſt certainly falſe, that one of the bleſſings of the promiſe Gen. 17. 7. to the faithful Gentiles was, that their infants ſhould be comprehended in the ſame Church and Covenant, yea the Apoſtle concludes, and proves Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. That all the poſterity of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, were not comprehended in that promiſe, and therefore the viſible Churchmemberſhip Chriſtian of infants of Gentile believers, can have no ſhew of proof from the promiſe Gen. 17.7. and precept v. 9. 10.

9. Saith Mr. B. " I think it is not to bee made light of as to this " matter, that in the great promiſe Gen. 12. 3. the bleſſing from Abra-" ham in Chriſt is promiſed to all the families or tribes on earth [all " the families of the earth ſhall be bleſſed] as the Heb. Samar. Arabic. " or [all the kindreds] as the vulgar Lat. and Chald. paraph. or [all " the tribes] as the Sept. πάσαι αἱ φυλαὶ. And doubtleſs it is by Chriſt " that this bleſſing is promiſed, and ſo a Goſpel bleſſing (Ergo the Sy-" riac. adds [and in thy ſeed] and the Arab. hath [by thee.]) And the " Apoſtle fully teſtifieth that. So that as tribes, kindreds, families, do " moſt certainly comprehend the infants, and as it was to ſuch families " that the promiſe was made before Chriſt as to the Jewiſh Church, ſo is " it expreſſly to ſuch families or tribes that the promiſe is made as to the Gentiles ſince Chriſt.

Anſw. The bleſſing Gen. 12. 3. is not viſible Churchmemberſhip (which may be without juſtification) but juſtification, as the Apoſtle expreſſly expreſly expounds it, Gal. 3. 8. (which may be without viſible Churchmemberſhip:) Nations there doth not comprehend every member of a nation, nor every one of a tribe or kindred, as it is Acts 3. 25. but the elect, and believers of each nation, tribe, or kindred, as the Apoſtle doth both v. 7. & 9. ſhew, terming them that are bleſſed thoſe that are of faith. Therefore though the Scripture be not to be made light of, yet Mr. Bs. inference from thence is moſt vain, the promiſe being not of viſible Churchmemberſhip, nor to nations, families, kindreds entirely, nor to infants of unbelievers or believers as ſuch; but to ſo many of all nations, kindreds, and families, as are believers or elect. Whereby Mr. B. may ſee how infants can be excluded theſe families, and this promiſe, without apparent violence to the Text.

10. Saith he, Note that as infant Churchmemberſhip is here clearly implied in infant Circumciſion, ſo they are two diſtinct things; and as the ſign is here commanded de novo, ſo the thing ſignified (I mean the duty of engaging and devoting to God as their God in Covenant) is commanded with it, though not de novo, as a thing now beginning as the ſign did. So that here is in Circumciſion not onely a command to do the circumciſing outward act, but alſo to do it as a ſign of the Covenant, and ſo withal for the parents to engage their children to God in Covenant as their God, and devote them to him as his ſeparated peculiar people. So that here are two diſtinct duties concurrent. The one external newly inſtituted, the other internal not newly inſtituted. And therefore the former may ceaſe, and yet the later ſtand: and it's no proof that the later (Covenant engagement of infants to God) is ceaſed, becauſe the ſign of Circumciſion is ceaſed; no more then it proves that ſuch Covenant engagement did then begin when Circumciſion did begin; or that women were not Churchmembers ſeparated, engaged, dedicated to God in infancy, becauſe they were not circumciſed. And no more then you can prove that all Iſrael was unchurched in the wilderneſs when they were uncircumciſed for 40 years. So that here you have a a command for entring infants as Churchmembers. And ſo you ſee both promiſe and precept in Gen. 12. 3. & Gen. 17.

Anſw. I do indeed, but not ſuch as Mr. B. ſhould produce, a promiſe of infants viſible Churchmemberſhip, and a precept of their entring unrepealed; there being no ſuch promiſe of believers infants viſible Churchmemberſhip, or precept of admiſſion as viſible Churchmembers beſides Circumciſion, which Mr. B. will not ſure ſay is unrepealed. As for his diſcourſe of a duty of engaging, ſeparating to God, and dedicating, which is internal, and not inſtituted de novo, it is neither in Gen. 12. nor Gen. 17. nor if it were, is it any thing to the purpoſe. For neither doth ſuch an internal duty make or admit or enter an infant into the viſible Church, either Jewiſh or Chriſtian. According to Mr. B. himſelf, infants are viſible Churchmembers afore it, yea without it; nor is the admiſſion or entering into the Church viſible by it, but by an outward ſign, as he himſelf determines, part 1. ch. 4. of Baptiſm: And this ſure is now Baptiſm, which Mr. B. I preſume will not now allow to parents, for then they ſhould be Miniſters of the Seals, which he counts one of my ſix errours. I never denied an internal duty of faith, prayers, er, vowing, &c. for the engaging and dedicating infants to God, prayer for them is practised by me in publick, but I deny that this makes them visible Churchmembers, or admissable by Baptism.

He adds. And when I consider the parents, breeding, and manners of Rebeckah, I think it far more probable that she was a Churchmember from her infancy, then that she was entred afterwards at age, or that she was a heathen or infidel when Isaac married her.

Answ. What in the parents, breeding, and manners of Rebeckah Mr. B. observes, which should make it in any degree probable that she was a Churchmember from her infancy, I know not: There are such things related Gen 31. of Laban her brother, and Rachel his daughters Idols, as me thinks should move Mr. B. to conceive, that either in that house there was no Church of God, or at best a very impure one, though it is likely their idolatry and wickedness was not so great as that of the the Canaanites, which made them more desirable and eligible wives for Isaac and Jacob, then the daughters of the Canaanites, whom Esau chose.

Mr. B. adds. And as before we are before mentioned standing Covenants, so it is to be noted how God intimateth the extent of the main blessing of them to be further then to Abrahams natural seed, not onely in the express promise of the blessing to all the nations or families on earth (of which before) but in the assigned reason of the blessing which is common to Abraham with other true believers. For Gen. 22. 16, 17, 18. it's thus alledged [because thou hast done this thing, &c. And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice.] And Gen. 26. 3, 4, 5. the Covenant is renewed with Isaac, and the same reason assigned, [because that Abraham obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes and my laws.] How mans obedience is said to be a cause of Gods blessing, I am not determining; but taking the words as I find them in general, I may conclude, that they are here given as a cause or reason of it some way or other. And though a special mercy may be given on a common ground or reason, yet where there is no apparent proof of the restriction, we are to judge the blessing common where the reason is common: At least, if a special blessing be superadded to Abrahams seed (upon the freeness of Gods grace or the eminency of Abrahams obedience,) yet there goes with it a mercy common to all where the reason of the mercy is found. It being therefore the case of every true believer to be faithfull and obedient, yea, to prefer that before his own life, and not a few onely, it may be hence gathered, that God who blessed Abrahams seed on that account, will bless theirs on the same, with the same blessings in the main (as to his favour and acceptance of them) though not with the same in the variable superadditionals or overplus of external things.

Answ. Mr. B. like another Procrustes (though in vain) would fain rack the Texts Gen 22. 16, 17, 18. & 26. 3, 4, 5. to his purpose. Though I deny not but a common mercy may be granted on a special reason, and a special mercy on a common reason, God being a free agent; yet in this business, the reason of Abrahams mercy and the mercy it self are both so special and proper, that it is extream violence to the Texts, to apply Abrahams singular obedience in offering his son, so signally eminent, Heb 11.17. *Jam.*2.21. to every believers obedience; and the blessing granted to his seed, that it should be as the stars of heaven, as the sand on the sea shore, that in it all nations should bless themselves or be blessed, to every believers natural seed, and their visible Churchmembership. This kind of arguing is too ridiculous to deserve a serious refutation. Yet he hath not done.

In Exod. 12.48. saith he, there is a law for the circumcising of all the males of strangers that sojourn in the land, that will kee, the passover: which comprehendeth their Churchmembership, as is shewed.

Answ. I grant there is, but not a law unrepealed.

SECT. LXI.

Covenants, promises, and speeches in the Old Testament, of Israel, the righteous, prove not Mr. Bs. law of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed.

"THe promise (saith Mr. B.) to the whole people of Israel, infants "and all, that they should be [a peculiar people, a Kingdome of "Priests, and a holy Nation,] *Exod.*19.5,6. you cannot deny. This "is a promise, and not a transeunt fact which made no promise. And "the people are called to keep Gods Covenant, that they might have "this promise fulfilled to them. Yea, if you had said, that it was a meer "transeunt Covenant or promise, reaching but to the persons then ex-"istent, and dying with them, though you had spoken more sence, yet "no more truth then when you denied the law and promise, and sub-"stituted a transeunt fact. For 1, it is expressly a promise de futuro to "a nation. 2. Yea, and the Apostle Peter giveth the same titles to be-"lievers under the Gospel, intimating the fulfilling of the promise "even to them, as the promise to Abraham was to the faithfull who "were his uncircumcised seed. However, here is a Covenant granting "by way of confirmation the blessing of Churchmembership to infants "with the rest of Israel: For certainly, this peculiarity, and holiness, "and priesthood here mentioned, containeth their Churchmember-"ship: It is undeniable therefore, that such Churchmembership is "here granted by promise or Covenant, not as a thing then beginning, "but by way of confirmation of the like former grants. And it's to "be noted, that though this promise is made to all Israel, yet not to be "fulfilled to any of them, but on condition that they [obey Gods voice, "and keep his Covenant,] *ver.*5. on which conditions also any other "might have then enjoyed the same blessing, and therefore so may "do now, Answ. I never denied promises to be to the whole people of Israel; but deny that they were by a promise, as the sole efficient cause, Gods visible Church, and their infants members. The promise Exod.

19.5,6. presupposed their Churchmembership, and promiseth continuance of it in an eminent manner. The Israelites were Churchmembers without the condition of obedience before the Law was given; yea, Ahaz, Manasseh, &c. were visible Churchmembers though they were Idolaters, but they lost that peculiarity, holiness, priesthood, upon their disobedience, which was there promised; and so did the people, they lost the dominion, temple, priesthood, Urim, and Thummim, and other priviledges which are meant thereby, and should have been continued if they had not broken Gods Covenant by Idolatry. Yet no other nation could have had that state though they had been obedient and kept the Laws, God having given those laws peculiarly to that nation, and confined that honour to that people till the Messiah came. And though Peter, 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. apply these to believers, yet not in the same manner as they are meant Exod. 19. 5, 6. nor is any infant now of a believer a visible Churchmember by vertue of that promise.

"In Deut. 14. 1, 2. The infants (saith Mr. B.) with the rest are "called the children of God, and a holy and peculiar people to the Lord "their God.

Answ. Be it so, yet this is not ascribed to a promise or precept, but to Gods choise of them.

"And (saith Mr. B.) Deut. 26. 17, 18. the Covenant is expressed "[thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk "in his ways, and keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his "judgements, and to hearken to his voice. And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, "&c. [and that thou mayest be an holy people. &c.] Is here no "promise when the promise is expresst? and is here no Covenant, "where the mutual Covenant is described? And I think you grant that "infants are included.

Answ. There is a promise of God to them, but that did not make their infants visible Churchmembers, though I deny not their avouching the Lord for their God (which was a transeunt fact) did shew them to be visible Churchmembers, nor do I any where deny that our Covenant or promise to God doth make us visible Churchmembers, but Gods Covenant or promise to infants upon the parents faith, as Mr. B. asserts.

Mr. B. adds. "So Deut. 28. 4, 9. where the promise to the nation "is, that if they hearken to Gods voice and observe his Commande"ments, they shall be blessed in the fruit of their bodies, and the Lord "will establish them a holy people to himself, as hee had sworn unto "them.] Here is not only a Covenant and promise for the future, but also an oath confirming it, as annexed to the same before. Is this establishing Covenant or promise but a transeunt fact? or doth not this confirm their right to the benefit promised, which was received before by "the same means?

Answ. It doth, but the benefit promised v. 4. is not infants visible Churchmembership, but encrease, health, strength, such a blessing as they they had in their cattel as well as their children, as Psal. 127. 3, 4, 5. & 144. 12, 13, 14, 15. and many more places is expressed. And v. 9. though their Churchmembership was established according to Gods Covenant and oath, yet the establishing was not the Covenant, oath, or promise of God, but a transeunt fact of providence in preserving, teaching them, continuing his worship among them, and such like acts.

And, saith Mr. B. Ezra 9. 2. They are called the holy seed.

Answ. Not all the seed of Israel are called the holy seed, but those onely who were legitimate, that is, begotten by lawfull marriage according to Moses law: the rest were termed the mixed multitude, Neh. 13. 3. whom they separated from the rest, Ezra 10. 3. as being no Churchmembers, that is, part of the congregation of Israel according to the law, Neh. 13. 1. Deut. 23. 3. & 7. 3. Exod. 23. 32. of which more is to be seen in the first Part of this Review, sect. 25. So that those Ezr. 9. 2. are termed the holy seed, not barely by Covenant upon the parents faith, nor as all visible professors, as Dr. Hammond, in his Defence of Infant Baptism, pag. 78. but as begotten by an Israelite on an allowed wife by the law of Moses.

Mr. B. proceeds. Of that in Deut. 29. I have formerly spoke enough. It is called a Covenant. All Israel with their little ones did enter the Covenant and the oath with God, and which he made to them. It was a Covenant [to establish them for a people to himself, and that he may be to them a God, as he had before said and sworn.] It is a Covenant made even with them that stood not there, whether it be meant onely of the successive Israelites (and then it is not a transeunt Covenant) or of all people whoever that will accept of the same terms (and then it's not proper to Israel.) It's a Covenant not made to them as meer Israelites: but as obedient to the Covenant terms, and Covenant breaking would cut them off, v. 19, 20, 21, 23, 25, 26. Is not Churchmembership contained in [Gods being their God, and taking them for his people thus in Covenant?] Doth not the promise give them an established right in this blessing? Is all this then no promise, but a transeunt fact?

Answ. What hath been spoken of Deut. 29. by Mr. B. in the Dispute at Bewdley, and in his Book of Baptism, part 1. ch. 14 & 17. and his Corrective, sect. 5. will be examined in that which follows. For present, 1. it is sufficient to shew the impertinency of this Text, to prove that there the Covenant or promise of God upon condition of parents faith is the sole efficient of infants visible Churchmembership, in that the Covenant being then put, even with the children unborn, v. 15. yea and the parents then believing, yet the children unborn could not be then visible Churchmembers, as Mr. B. himself grants of Baptism, pag. 250. They that were not, could not be members visible or invisible. For the sole efficient cause being actually put (as the Covenant and the parents believing are, Deut. 29. even according to Mr. B.) the effect must be in act: but it is not so in the unborn, therefore the Covenant and parents faith are not the sole efficient. 2. The Oath or Covenant of God is a distinct act from his establishing them for a people unto himself, and being a God to them, which are the consequent upon it, and are by transeunt acts consequent upon the Covenant. So that though the Covenant give a right to a blessing, yet it doth not make actually visible Church-members without some other transeunt fact consequent upon it. The Covenant assures a future existence, but supposeth a present absence of the thing covenanted, and consequently without a further act consequent on it makes not any in present being visible Church-members. So that as yet I find no Text of Scripture setting down the law and ordinance of infants visible Church-membership by Gods promise upon parents faith or dedication commanded as the sole efficient unrepealed. Let's view the rest.

*Deut.*30.19. saith he, there is a law and promise [choose life, that thou and thy seed may live.] This is the same Covenant which Asa caused the people to enter, 2 Chron.15. and if there had been no law for it, there would have been no penalty, and then he would not have made it death to withdraw. It is the same Covenant which Josiah caused the people to enter, 2 Kin.23.2,3. 2 Chron.34.31,32. Of Levit.25.41,54,55. I have spoken elsewhere, and of some other Texts.

Answ. 1. There is a law and promise *Deut.*30 19. but not such as Mr. B. asserts as the sole efficient of infants visible Church-membership. The life there is not visible Church-membership, but a prosperous being in Canaan, v.20. And the distinction between [thou and thy seed] proves that *Deut.*29.12. [thou] notes the Captains, Elders, Officers, men of Israel, v.10. distinct from the little ones, wives, strangers, v.11. though represented by them, and that my speech so much exagitated by Mr. B. of Baptism, p.57,249, was justifiable. 2. The Covenants, 2 *Chron.*15. & 34.31,32. 2 *Kin.*23.2,3. of Asa and Josiah were Covenants of Israel to God, there's no mention of Gods promise or Covenant to them as then made, and therefore it is not that whereby infants are made visible Church-members according to Mr. B. and so is impertinent to the point in hand. 3. The futility of Mr. Bs. argument from *Levit.*25.41,54,55. is shewed in the 2d. part of this Review, sect 14. It follows in Mr. B.

The second Commandment, Exod.20.5,6. Deut.5.9,10. I think is a law, and containeth a promise or præmiant part, wherein he promiseth to shew mercy to the generations or children of them that love him and keep his Commandments: of which I have also spoken elsewhere, to which I refer you. I see no reason to doubt but here is a standing promise, and discovery of Gods resolution, concerning the children of all that love him, whether Jews or Gentiles, to whom this Commandment belongs: nor to doubt whether this mercy imply Church-membership: And that this is fetcht from the very gracious nature of God, I find in his proclaiming his Name to Moses, *Exod.*34.6,7.

Answ. If this mercy here imply Church-membership to the infants of them that love him to a thousand generations, then it implies it to all the infants in the world, which cannot be true without such limitations as take away the certainty of any infants Church-membership existent. But there is nothing to prove that this mercy must be Church-membership, or that it must be to all the children of them that love God

God, and are obedient, or that it must be to them in infancy, ſith it may be true of other mercies, as preſervation, proviſion, &c. to ſome onely, ſith the ſpeech is indefinite in a matter not neceſſary, and thoſe perſons at age, and loving God as their anceſtors, without which the promiſe is not made good; and therefore Mr. B. had occaſion enough to doubt whether this mercy implies viſible Churchmemberſhip of all infants of viſible profeſſors or true believers, yea, he had cauſe to aſſure himſelf that it doth not, ſith then it were not true in thouſands of Noahs, Abrahams, and other holy mens poſterity. Wherefore all things conſidered, I incline to conceive this a promiſe of temporal bleſſings, chiefly to the Iſraelites, to whom God intailed mercies more then to other people; and if it be extended to higher mercies, and to other people, yet with reſervation to himſelf of his free election, not without conditions and limitations as the event and other Scriptures make neceſſary to be included, which will make it unſerviceable for Mr. Bs. purpoſe.

He adds. In Pſal. 102. 28. It is a general promiſe [the children of thy ſervants ſhall continue, and their ſeed ſhall be eſtabliſhed before thee.] Its uſual in the Old Teſtament to expreſs Gods favour by temporal bleſſings, more then in the Goſpel; but yet ſtill they ſecure us of his favour. As [I will not fail thee, nor forſake thee,] might ſecure Joſhua more then us of temporal ſucceſſes, and yet not more of Gods never failing favour.

Anſw. The words are not a promiſe of God, for they are directed to God, as the expreſſions [thy ſervants, before thee,] beſides what is ſaid before, v. 24, 25, 26, 27. ſhew, and therefore are not of the ſame rank with Gods words to Joſhua, Joſh. 1. 5. yet they expreſs ſuch aſſurance as came either from a promiſe or a prophetical inſtinct. But whether the promiſe were general, or particular to ſome; whether of temporal, or eternal bleſſings, is uncertain. The occaſion ſeems to intimate this ſenſe, From thy continuance, though we be now very low, yet we aſſure our ſelves that thou wilt not utterly cut off our children, but that thou wilt raiſe them up, notwithſtanding our preſent deſolations and captivity, or thou wilt re-ingraff them (if meant of the converſion of the Jews to Chriſt, as hath been conceived) and they ſhall continue either here as thy people a long time, or be thine for ever upon their calling again. Either way, though they may intimate Gods favour, yet not general to all his ſervants children, but to the Jews; nor to them do they intimate infant viſible Churchmemberſhip, or to any other, but ſuch a ſtability of their poſterity in Gods favour, and their obedience as is quite different from meer infant viſible Churchmemberſhip, and may be without it.

Yet again ſaith Mr. B. There is a ſtable promiſe to all Gods people in general that have children, Pſal. 103. 17. [But the mercy of the Lord is from everlaſting to everlaſting upon them that fear him, and his righteouſneſs unto childrens children.] And to be ſecured by promiſe of Gods mercy and righteouſneſs is the ſtate of none without the Church.

Anſw. The promiſe muſt be underſtood of ſo many and ſuch mercy and righteousness as that it may be true. But it is not true of all the children of them that fears God, that they are visible Churchmembers, surely not of abortives and still-born children; nor that they are partakers of saving mercy and righteousness, for Ishmael, Esau, &c. were not so: And therefore it must be understood of such temporal mercies, and so indefinitely as may agree to some out of the Church, to whom God often shews mercy and righteousness of performing promises of preservation, increase, &c. which he shews not to others for their parents sake.

And, saith Mr. B. if they were all to be kept out of the Church, I scarce think that [children would be called an heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb his reward,] Psal. 127. 3. nor the man happy that hath his quiver full of them. Nor would the sucking children be called as part of the solemn assembly to the humiliation, Joel 2. 16. 2 Chron. 20. 13.

Answ. Children may be an heritage of the Lord, and his reward, though they be not visible Churchmembers, as the land of Canaan was an heritage, Psal. 135. 12. and he may be happy that hath many of them, with that happiness which is mentioned in the forepart of the 15th. v. of Psal. 144. though they be no Churchmembers: And yet the infants of the Israelites I acknowledge were members of that Church or people, and that the Psalmist speaks of them. And so do the Texts, Joel 2. 16. 2 Chron. 20. 13. though the assembling of them do no more prove them visible Churchmembers, then the cloathing of beasts with sackcloth, Jonah 3. 7, 8. doth prove the beasts Churchmembers, it being usual in such national fears and humiliations to have all whatsoever to be among the mourners, whether Churchmembers or not; as the men of Tyre were forced by Nehemiah, ch. 13. 19. to rest on the Sabbath.

Mr. B. adds. "There is a standing promise to all the just, Prov. "20. 7. [The just man walketh in his integrity, his children are blessed af- "ter him.] There is no sort of men without the Church that is pro- "nounced blessed in Scripture. A blessed people are Gods people, "and those are the Church separated from the cursed world. One "lower blessing will not denominate a man or society, a blessed man "or society.

Answ. It is a standing promise or observation: But that all his children are blessed, or that they are visible Churchmembers, much less that there is a promise or law that all visible Churchmembers infants should be visible Churchmembers cannot be thence inferred. That without the Church a person is pronounced blessed is apparent from Ishmaels blessing, Gen. 17. 20, 21. when he was excluded the Covenant and cast out.

Yet more saith Mr. B. "If it were a good argument then, Deut. "4. 37. [because he loved thy fathers, therefore he chose their seed after "them,] then it is good still as to favour in general. So Deut. 10. "15. Psal. 69. 36. Prov. 11. 21. The seed of the righteous shall be de- "livered.

Answ. It is no good argument, Because God loving the fathers of the Israelites chose their seed after them, therefore he chooseth the seed of every righteous man to be his people, or that he sheweth favour to them. The contrary is manifest in Lot, Job, and others, whose posterity God shewed not favour as he did to the posterity of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, whereof the former is termed Gods friend, James 2.23. and it is certain from Rom. 9.4,5. & 11.28. that God did and will shew them that favour that he never did nor will shew to the posterity of any the most godly persons of other nations. What is said, *Psal.*69.36. is said onely of the obedient Israelites; and if it be extended to others, it can be meant onely of those that love the Name of God, and therefore makes nothing for the visible Churchmembership of infants of believers either by profession or real. Whether it be read, delivereth himself, as Junius, or shall be delivered, it is neither universally true, as is manifest in the posterity of David, Josiah, and others; nor is any whit to the point of infants visible Churchmembership, which may be without it, and that may be without it. Nor is Mr. Bs. inference good, *In Psal.*37.26. there is a general promise to, or declaration of the righteous, that [his seed is blessed,] and then they are Churchmembers: For the Text neither speaks generally of any righteous man, but of him that is mercifull and lendeth, and the v. before sheweth it plainly to be meant of outward blessing, as in freedome from extream want of bread, and the like, which must have its limitations that it may be true; there's not a word of their infant visible Churchmembership.

There's yet a reserve of Mr. B. which he thus marshals. "In Isa. "61.8,9. it is promised I think of Gospel times [I will make an ever- "lasting Covenant with them, and their seed shall be known among the "Gentiles, and their off-spring among the people: all that see them shall ac- "knowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed. And "cap.62.12. They shall call them the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord: "and thou shalt be called, sought out, a city not forsaken.] Gospel pro- "mises then extend to [people and cities,] whereof infants are a part. "*Isa.*65.23. [they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their off- "spring with them.] This is plain, and full, and durable.

Answ. Be it so, yet is it all impertinent to Mr. Bs. purpose. If Isai 61. 8, 9. be a promise of a thing to be fulfilled in Gospel times, yet it cannot be meant of infants, sith it is affirmed that the seed shall be known among the Gentiles, that is, saith Mr. Gattaker in his Annot. They shall so grow and multiply, thrive and prosper, that they shall become very conspicuous, Matth. 5. 14, 16. and that it shall evidently appear to all that see them, that there goeth a blessing of God along with them, Acts 5. 13. Which are spoken of the Apostles and their preaching, not of infants and their Churchmembership, Isai 62. 12. is said of Zion and Jerusalem, v. 1. 11. and is thus by Mr. Gattaker in his Annot. paraphrased. And men shall call them (to wit Sions sons or those that belong to her, and shall now again people her, vers. 5.) The holy people, the redeemed of the Lord] Such as God by rescuing and delivering them out of the hands of so powerful adversaries, in so strange a manner, hath shewed that he owneth for his. Sought out] or, sought unto, or sought after, as one had in high estimation and regard; whom out of respect and regard men repair and resort unto.

to. See Psal. 112. 2. Contrary to that which was formerly said of thee in the time of thy low and dejected estate, Jer. 30. 17. A City not forsaken] as she seemed to be formerly in the time of her captivity. See v. 4. Which shews these things are meant of the Jews safety and honour after their return from captivity, not of infants visible Churchmembership under the Gospel. Yet if it were a prophesie of the Gospel times, it followes not infants shall be visible Churchmembers because Cities comprehend infants. For in the Gospel sense, Nation, House, City, comprehend onely believers, and not infants of believers, as such, as appears from these and other texts. Gal. 6. 10. Ephes. 2. 18, 19. 1 Pet. 2. 5, 9. Isa. 65. 23. is a prophesie of the welfare of the Jews after their return from captivity, as v. 21, 22. before shew, and the meaning is as Mr. Gataker, Diodati and others expound it, they shall not bring forth children as formerly to be consumed by war, pestilence and such evils, because Gods blessing, which makes rich, healthy, safe, prosperous, is with them and their children: which sense is quite wide from Mr. Bs. conceit of a law of infants visible Churchmembership in the time of the Gospel.

He yet adds, what is necessary to be said in answer to the common objections, as [that experience tels us all the seed of the righteous are not blessed] with the like, I suppose already done in my Book of Baptism. All the seed of the righteous are blessed, though not all with that blessing which cannot be lost and cast away by themselves when they come to age.

Answ. What is said in his Book of Baptism, will be examined when I come to it. For present it is but Mr. Bs. dictate that all the seed of the righteous are blessed, the indefiniteness of the Scripture expressions the matter being contingent, experience and the Apostles exposition of the promise Gen. 17. 7. Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. are against it; yet if it were true, it followes not it must be visible Churchmembership, it might be some other blessing, of which God hath store, yea it is certain it cannot be visible Churchmembership, sith abortives and still born infants, though the seed of the righteous, are never so blessed, and the children of the holy seed Ezra 9. 2. begotten on prohibited women were to bee cast out of the Jewish Church.

Mr. B. adds, If you say that the word [seed] doth not necessarily include infants. I answer, infants are part of the seed of the righteous, yea all their seed are first infants. If therefore God have made general promises as to age and person, who is he that dare limit it, without just proof that indeed God hath limited it? Doth God say, that the seed of the righteous are not blessed till they come to age? If he pronounce the seed blessed they must be blessed, when they are first such a seed: And if any one age might be more included then another, one would think it must bee that wherein they are so meerly the seed of such as that they stand not on any distinct account of their own actual faith or unbelief. For the seed of the righteous, as such, have a promised blessing: But the seed of the righteous turning themselves to unrighteousness, do turn from that blessing, and become accursed.

Answ. Mr. B. not holding children in the womb unborn to be visible Churchmembers all this may be retorted, they are part of the seed of the righteous, all their seed are such, how dare then Mr. B. limit the general general promises to infants born? The seed is blessed, and so must be visible Churchmembers when they are first such a seed, which is as soon as they are conceived in the womb, then they stand not on any distinct account of their own actual faith or unbelief. What Mr. B. replies to this will answer himself. However I deny that without just proof it is to be so limited I limit the promises, that if God pronounce the seed blessed, they must be blessed when they are first such a seed, for then if the blessing be justification, glorification, they must be justified, glorified, afore they believe, or are obedient, which Mr. B. condemns in Antinomians. And if infants stand not on any distinct account of their own actual faith, they are not Christian visible Churchmembers, for all such are in their own persons first believers. Nor is it true that the seed of the righteous as such (taking it reduplicatively) have a promised blessing. For then all and onely such should have it, and at all times, the contrary is manifest in Cham, Esau, &c. Mr. B. concludes.

I suppose I have already been more tedious then you expected: I will therefore add no more of these passages of Scripture, having said that which satisfieth me formerly to the same purpose, and having yet seen nothing that leaves me unsatisfied. And also because one text either containing such a Law or Covenant as you call for, or declaring to us that God did make such a Law or Covenant, is as good as a thousand in point of authority.

Answ. It is true Mr. B. hath been more tedious then was fit, considering the impertinencie of his allegations, yet not much more then I expected, knowing it to be his course especially in this controversie, to heap many texts impertinently. That he is satisfied with his former writings, especially after the answering of the chief parts by me and others, shews either his injudiciousness or his heedlesness, or unwillingness through prejudice to see his errour. That there is not one text for his purpose brought in his Letter to me, is made manifest by this answer, the rest shall be examined after the answer to the remainder of his Letter if God permit.

SECT. LXII.

Mr. Bs. 9th. and 10th. Qu. about the repealableness and repeal of his imagined Law of infants visible Churchmembership, and his eight additionals are answered.

"THe next Qu. saith he, that I should speak to is, whether these "Laws, or Covenants, or promises, are capible of a revocation, or "repeal? And I shall take this for a question that needs no further de- "bate, among men that know what a Law or Promise is. Gods immu- "tability and perfection may make some laws unrepealable, while "the subject remains: but otherwise the thing it selfe is capable of it. "Onely where a promise or law is but for a limited time, when the time "is expired it ceaseth, and the cessation is as to the nulling of it, equal

"to a revocation or abrogation. I put in this queſtion, leſt you ſhould "hereafter change your minde and ſay, that indeed it is a law, or pro- "miſe, or covenant, by which the right of Churchmembership is con- "ferred, and infants dedicated to God: but it is but a tranſeunt law or "covenant.] Anſw. If ſo then it is either immediately or preſently "tranſeunt, or at a certain limited time onely, when it will ceaſe. The "former is certainly falſe and intollerable. For 1. they are promiſes "and laws for the future, and therefore ceaſe not immediately. 2. That "were to make God the moſt unfaithful promiſer and mutable Law- "maker in the world, if his promiſe and his lawes ceaſe as ſoon as they "are made. Nay it makes them to be no lawes or promiſes. 3. It was "one ſtanding law and promiſe that belonged to the Nation of the "Jewes ſucceſſively. And God did not make his promiſe anew to eve- "ry infant that was made a Churchmember, nor renew his law to eve- "ry parent to enter their Children into his Covenant by the ſigne of "Circumciſion. Were not the circumciſed Iſraelites in the Wilderneſs "made members by the efficacy of the former Covenant of God remain- "ing in force. And did former Laws oblige to Circumciſion till Chriſt? "Elſe there were but few members, nor but few that circumciſed war- "rantably, if the promiſe and precept did extend but to the perſon that "it was firſt delivered to, and every one elſe muſt likewiſe have a per- "ſonal promiſe and precept. The mother of Chriſt cannot then be pro- "ved to have been a Churchmember in infancy. If it be ſaid that theſe "promiſes were limited in the making of them, to a certain time when "they were to ceaſe, I ſay when that's proved we ſhall believe it, which "I have not yet ſeen done.

Anſw. The occaſion of this queſtion I conceive to have been the words in my ſecond Letter, [Wherefore I ſtill preſs you that you would ſhew me where that law, ordinance, ſtatute or decree of God is, that is repealable, that is, which may in congruous ſenſe be either by a later act ſaid to be repealed or elſe to be eſtabliſhed as a law for ever.] The reaſon of my ſpeech was, becauſe I perceived by his former Letter, Mr. B. made his law unrepealed to be by promiſe and precept. Now though I conceived a precept might in congruous ſenſe be ſaid to be repealed, yet I conceived a promiſe (which it ſeems is the law he means) not in congruous ſenſe repealable. For though a promiſe be a law to the promiſer, yet I know not how congruouſly it ſhould be repealed. 'Tis true, the act of promiſing being tranſeunt ceaſeth, but that cannot be repealed; that which is done, cannot be infectum, not done. The obligation of the promiſe may ceaſe, if it were limited to a certain time, and that expired; or if it were upon condition, and that fails; or to a perſon not exiſtent, or of a thing not feaſible, or unlawfull: The former is not by repeal, but by expiration, which Mr. Cawdrey doth diſtinguiſh from repeal and ſubſtitution, Of the Sabbath, part 1. ch. 2. & part 3. ch. 3. The later are not by repeal of the promiſe (for it ſtands in force as much as ever, (but by accident through intervenient impediments there is for preſent an intermiſſion of the obligation. Repeal properly is by an after declaration, which cannot be congruouſly ſaid of God, that he did promiſe indeed ſuch a thing, but now he will not promiſe it, or will not ſtand to his promiſe, it were to make God fickle, and unfaithful. And therefore I expected a Law of Precept to make infants viſible Churchmembers, to bee aſſigned by Mr. B. for mee to prove repealed, and not a law of promiſe, which is not in congruous ſenſe repealable, and therefore a repeal properly ſo called not to be expected of me. Which being rightly conceived anſwers this queſtion, and ſaves me the reply to what he ſaith, to prevent an imaginary change of my minde and aſſertion not yet delivered.

He adds. "And it falls in with the laſt queſtion, which is, whether "theſe promiſes be indeed revoked and ceaſed, and theſe laws repealed "or ceaſed. And here it is that I have long expected your ſolid proof, "together with the ſatisfactory anſwer to my arguments to the contra-"ry. And ſo I ſhall leave this task in your hands. Sure I am that Chriſt "never came to caſt out of the Church, but to gather more in: much "leſs to caſt out all the infants, even all of that age in which himſelf "was head of that Church: But to gather together in one the children "of God that were ſcattered, Joh 11. 52. And therefore he would oft "have gathered all Jeruſalem and Judæa, even the national Church "that then was unto himſelf, as the true head, even as a hen gathereth "her chickens under her wings, and they would not. It was not becauſe "he would not (as intending a new frame, where infants could have no "place) but becauſe they would not, and ſo caſt out themſelves and "their infants. Certainly it is the joy of the formerly deſolate Gen-"tiles, that they ſhall have many more children then ſhe that had an "husband, and not fewer, Gal. 4. 25, 26, 27. And we as Iſaac are chil-"dren of the promiſe, even that promiſe which extended to the infants "with the parents. Gal. 4. 28.

Anſw. I have examined all that Mr. B. ſaith in his anſwer to the 8th. queſtion, and do profeſs that I finde no promiſe, no not in Gen. 3. 15. of infants viſible Churchmemberſhip, or any precept but that of circumciſion, Gen. 17. which Mr. B. confeſſeth to be repealed in reſpect of the outward act, and for the dedicating of a childe to God by prayer to God to ſanctifie it, or vow to bring it up for God if God give life, &c. or adjuration that they ſhould cleave to God left in writing, or any other way upon record, I ſtill allow it, and ſo need prove no repeal. So that in truth I ſee no reaſon Mr. B. ſhould expect that I ſhould perform his task, of proving a repeal of that which is not, but that he ſhould make good the task I impoſe on him to prove ſuch a law or ordinance of infants viſible Churchmemberſhip by promiſe or precept unrepealed, which I expect to be done at latter Lammas; And to his confident ſpeeches I reply. Sure I am from Luk. 2. 34. Joh. 9. 39. that Jeſus Chriſt came that many of the Jewiſh Church might be left or caſt out of his Church, from Matth. 28. 19. and other places before alledged, that he intended to leave all infants out of his viſible Church ſince his comming in the fleſh, though he were an infant head of the Church, that though he died to gather together in one the children of God that were ſcattered abroad, Joh. 11. 52. yet hee intended not to gather them into a viſible

Church national comprehending infants, that he preached not to any infants, nor by his Disciples baptised any of them, that it is false which Mr. B. saith, that he would oft have gathered all Jerusalem and Judæa, even the national Church that then was, unto himself as the true head, as his visible Church, from Matth. 28. 19. Mark 16. 15, 16. and the course he, John Baptist, and the Apostles followed, that he did intend a new frame of his Church visible, where infants could have no place, that Hierusalem which is above, the Covenant of the Gospel had more children in the Gentile Churches then the Covenant of the Law in the Jewish Church, though infants were not visible members in the Christian Church as they were in the Jewish; that the promise meant Gal 4. 28. is not a promise to a believer and his natural seed of visible Church-membership, much less to every visible professour and his seed, but a promise of righteousness and blessing, and the spirit through the faith of Jesus Christ upon all them that believe, as is plain from Gal. 3. 7, 8, 9, 11, 14, 16, 18, 21, 22, 29. But Mr. B. hath yet more work for me.

"Before I end, saith he, I shall be bold to put two or three que"stions to you out of your last Letter. Qu 1. whether the circumcised servants of Israel sold away to another nation, and so separated from the Civil State of Israel, did eo nomine cease to be Churchmembers, though they forsook not God? And so of the infants if they were sold in infancy? If you affirm it, then prove it. If you deny it, then infants might bee Churchmembers that were not of the Commonwealth.

Answ. Such servants and infants were members of the Jewish Commonwealth, as they were of the Church, in right undoubtedly, in fact if they owned the Jews God and Moses Laws, and submitted to the Senate of Elders, so far as they knew and could be permitted, if they did not, though they forsook not God, yet they were neither of the Jewish Church, nor Commonwealth, as Cornelius, Acts 10th, was not of the Jewish Church or policy. None was of right of the Jewish Church, who was not of the Commonwealth; even then when they were violently held under a forraign power (as when they were under the Chaldean Persian, Greek and Roman Empires) they did submit to both though with much reluctancy.

Qu. 2. If (as you say) it was on the Jews rejection of Christ that they were broken off from being Gods people, were those thousands of Jews that believed in Christ so broken off, or not, who continued successively a famous Church at Hierusalem, which came to be a Patriarchal seat. Whether then were not the children of the Disciples and all believing Jewes Churchmembers in infancy? If no, then it was somewhat else then unbelief that broke them off.

Answ. The believing Jews were not broken off from the people of God, but from the Jewish people or Church national which rejected Christ: these believing Jews continued a famous Church after some time of publishing the Gospel and the Jews prosecuting the faith, separated from the Jewish Church, not having infants Churchmembers, and they were broken off from the Jewish Church national not by unbelief, but by faith in Christ to which they did adhere, and could not bee conjoyned to the Jewish Church without rejection of Christ. Mr. B. addes.

If yea, then Qu. 3. whether it be credible that he who came not to cast out Jews, but to bring in Gentiles, breaking down the partition wall, and making of two one Church, would have such a Linsey woolsy Church of party colours, or several forms: so as that the Church at Hierusalem should have infant members, and the Church at Rome should have none. Jews infants should be members and not Gentiles.

Answ. Christ came to cast out the unbelieving Jews, not from the Jewish Church national, they continued still in it, but from the invisible Church of true believers which was in that nation, to which was joyned the Gentile Church of true believers, which were all of one sort, whether at Rome or Hierusalem, to wit, all that had one spirit, one faith, one baptism; not one infant in the visible Church Christian either at Rome or Hierusalem.

Qu. 4. If unbelief brake them, will not repentance graff them in? And so should every repenting believing Jews infants be Churchmembers?

Answ. Faith and repentance will ingraff every penitent believer into the Church invisible, the profession thereof will ingraff them into the visible Church, but not their infants, though the believer bee a Jew.

Qu. 5. was not Christs Church before his incarnation spiritual, and gathered in a spiritual way?

Answ. The invisible was, the visible Jewish national was not.

Qu. 6. How prove you that it was a blemish to the old frame, that infants were members? or that Christs Church then and now are of two frames in regard of the subjects age?

Answ. I say not that it was a blemish, but that it was a more imperfect state of the Church then in that and other regards. The later question is answered Sect. 50, 51, 52. before.

Qu. 7. In what regard is the new frame better'd by casting out infants which were in the old?

Answ. By leaving out infants and taking in onely believers, the Church is more spiritual.

Qu. 8. whether any Jew at age was a member of the old Church without professing faith (in the Articles necessary to salvation) repentance and obedience? And wherein the supposed new call and frame doth in this differ from the old; save onely that a more full and express revelation of Christ, requireth a more full express faith?

Answ. The former question is somewhat difficult, it being hard to determine what Articles were necessary to salvation, which is a question so hard, that I should not be unwilling to learn of Mr. B. This I can onely say, that I know not what profession each Jew did make, or was to make. I find a confession injoyned Deut. 26. and imprecation ch. 27. I finde idolaters, blasphemers, and some others adjudged to death, yet I finde not in the times of mal-administration of Moses Laws, that idolaters, and such great sinners were cast out of the Church, but were members of it. The later is answered before often enough.

Mr. B. tels me. You may see the words near the end of your Letter that occasion the 7. last questions, and towards the middle that occasioneth the first. As for your motion of my fully describing the priviledges of Churchmembers, I shall add no more at this time to what is already elsewhere said of it.

Answ. I knew Mr. B. so well, that I expected I should have questions enow, though I desired onely a few Texts, its his vain to multiply questions which might be omitted, and serve to weary the reader and respondent, and for advantage to himself to insult on his antagonist, though without cause. But how ill he deals with me in writing so many sheets about questions taken from my words, when I desired onely a line or two about his texts, and how ill he deals with me and the reader, who will not distinctly shew me the priviledges of his visible Churchmembership, the denial of which he makes so hainous, and from which he argues so much, I leave to the considerable Reader to judge. But Mr. B. is yet more severe to me, after all my work in answering him, I must be corrected ere I be dismissed.

SECT. LXIII.

Mr. Bs. ten Calumniatory questions, and Conclusion of his Letter, are answered.

"AND now (saith he) I have gone thus far with you, in an enquiry "into the truth, I entreat you be not too much offended with me, "if I conclude with a few applicatory questions to your self. Q. 1. Is it "not an undertaking as palpably absurd as most ever any learned sober "Divine in the world was guilty of, to maintain that [infants were vi- "sible Churchmembers not by any promise or precept, but by a tran- "seunt fact, and that there was no law or ordinance determining it "should be so, but onely a fact of God, which is a transeunt thing not "repealable?]

Answ. I am resolved not to be angry with Mr. Bs. interrogatories he ministers to me, imagining he doth it like an Ordinary in salutem animæ, though I pitty him that takes so much on him as thus magisterially to censure what he does not, or will not understand, presuming perhaps he may take on him to determine as an irrefragable Doctor, after so much magnifying of his writings by learned and unlearned ones. But to his question I answer negatively, and return it back to him: is it not an undertaking palpably absurd, to make visible Churchmembership to be a right to a benefit by Gods promise as the sole efficient, and anothers faith as the condition?

"But, saith he, either by this fact you mean Legislation and Cove- "nant making, or not: if you do: what a saying is it that infants were "made Churchmembers not by Covenant, but by a Covenant-making, "not by a Law, but by a Law-making. If not; either you must say, that

"God

"God makes duty without any law, and gives right to the benefit with"out any promise, or Covenant-grant as the cause; or else, that it is no "benefit to have right to Churchmembership, and no duty to enter in-
"to that relation, and to accept of that benefit, and to bee devoted to "God. Which ever of these wayes you chuse (and one you must chuse, "or change your opinion) hath the world heard of any more unreaso"nable and ridiculous, or else more unbeseeming a Divine, from a lear"ned sober man of that profession? Pardon the high charge: Let the "indifferent ju. ge.

Answ. That I need chuse none of the wayes hee mentions, nor change my opinion, is amply shewed Sect. 55. this high charge would have been left out had he more sobriety and humility. I look upon it and overlook it as ridiculous and contemptible, and go on.

Qu. 2. Is it not a great disgrace to all your followers, that they will be led so far into such ways of Schism, and be so confident that they are righter and wiser then others, and that by such unreasonable arguings and shifts as these, which one would think any man should laugh at that knows what a law, promise, or Covenant is? And do you not prove, that it is not because of the evidence of truth, but by your meer interest or confident words, these people are changed and held to your opinion? Do they know what [a transeunt fact is, that without law or Covenant makes Churchmembers?] I say, do they know this? which no man that ever breathed till now, nor ever man will know again? And do you not proclaim them men of distempered consciences, that dare go on in such a Schism, on the encouragement of such fancies as were hatcht so long after their perversion, and never waking man I think did before so solemnly maintain.]

Answ, Ne sævi magne sacerdos. The followers of me in the point of Baptism are not led by shifts, but the plain word of God, Matth. 28.19. Mark 16.16. Acts 2.38. & 8.37. from which Mr. Bs. dream of a law or ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, his conceit of infants discipleship mediate by the faith of the parent, is too silly a conceit to draw an intelligent man that will examine it, specially when they have so plain Scripture proof for their warrant, as the institution of Christ and practise of the Apostles, which they follow without Schism, endeavouring a reformation of that great corruption of infant Baptism, which hath been very pernicious to the Church of God. If any Schism have been, a great cause hath been in Mr. Bs. virulent charges of the truth, as if it were a damnable errour accursed of God, and his followers violent opposition (of which Bewdley hath had sad experience) of men for doing their duty in being baptized after profession of faith, and breaking bread together, though convinced by Mr. Bs. own arguing in his Book of Baptism, pag. 342. that it should be so. And if in this point they conceive themselves righter and wiser then others, they are not to be blamed, having the plain word of God as interpreted even by Pædobaptists themselves, yea almost all Commentaries, for their warrant. And truly though I delight not in recriminations, yet I may justly retort Mr. Bs. words. Is it not a great disgrace to all Mr. Bs. followers, that they will be led so far into such ways of Schism as Mr. B. leads them into, who would have none to have pastoral charge with publick pay, that will not admit to the Lords Supper the baby sprinkled, that inveighs against Baptism of believers now used as if it were murther and adultery, that represents them that deny infant Baptism in the most odious way he can to the world, and is so confident that he is wiser and righter then others, and that by such unreasonable arguings and shifts as these, a law and ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership by promise and precept unrepealed no where extant, a discipleship by the parents faith mediately without any learning of their own, which one would think any man should laugh at that knows what visible Churchmembership, or Discipleship is? And doth he not prove, that it is not because of the evidence of truth, but by his meer interest or confident word, the people of Kederminster, Bewdley, and elsewhere, are changed from the truth of the Scripture made known to them, and held to his opinion? Do they know what an ordinance or law of infants visible Churchmembership and mediate Discipleship is, which I find not any man vented afore Mr. B And doth he not proclaim them men of distempered consciences, that dare go on in such a Schism as Mr. B. and with him many persons are brought into by him from me, and the baptized in Bewdley and elsewhere, on the encouragement of such fancies as were hatcht so lately, and never waking man I think did before Mr. B. so solemnly maintain?

Qu. 3. Is it not a desperate undertaking, and dare you adventure on it, to justifie all the world before Christs incarnation except the Jews, from the guilt of not dedicating their children to God, to take him to be their God, and themselves to be his people? Yea, to justifie all Jews against this charge, that should neglect or refuse to engage their children to God in Covenant as members of his Church? And doth not he that saith there is no law, say there is no transgression?

Answ. He doth: But Mr. B. should remember there is a law against bearing false witness against his neighbour, which he much urgeth against Mr. Eyre and others; but himself is deeply guilty of it in his high charges, and particularly in this, that I justifie all Jews neglecting to engage their children to God in covenant as members of his Church, and all the world not dedicating their children to God. Let him prove either, if he can; if not, let him tremble at his desperate undertaking to uphold his lie of infant Churchmembership and Baptism by such lies as these, and fear the fate of liars. What I hold, may be seen in that which goes before.

Qu. 4 Dare you yet justifie also at the Bar of God, all the world since Christs incarnation from the guilt of sin, in not dedicating their children to Christ and entering them into his Covenant as members of his Church? Dare you maintain that all the world is sinless in this respect?

Answ. I dare justifie the non-baptizing them, and am assured Mr. B. cannot justifie the baptizing of infant children.

Qu. 5. Have you well considered of the fruit of your way apparent in England and Ireland at this day? Or have you not seen enough to make you

you suspect and fear whether indeed God own your way or not? And is it any wonder if posterity be left in controversie about the History of former times, when you can venture, even in these times when the persons are living in our company, to tell me that [you think I am misinformed that they are Anabaptists, and you think that there are very few of them that were ever baptized,] when of many that we know, and multitudes that we hear of, there are so few that were not before against infant Baptism, and the Seekers first such, and when the Quakers themselves commonly cry down infant Baptism; and it is one of the questions that they send to me, and others to answer, [how we can prove it by expreſs Scripture without consequences, or else confeſs ourselves false Prophets.

Answ. My ways in opposing infant Baptism, and endeavouring to restore believers Baptism, are such (setting aside my infirmities) as upon consideration I find cause not to be ashamed of, but to rejoyce in, and conceive by many evidences that God owns them. What fruit of them in England and Ireland they have had, I do not very well know; if they that are termed Anabaptists do hold unjustifiable positions or practises, they are not the fruit of my ways, any more then the Nicolaitans, Gnosticks, and others ways, were the fruits of the Apostles preaching. My conscience beareth me witness, and so will the people where I have taught, the brethren with whom I have walked yea, I think some of my Antagonists, with whom I have acted in the publick imployment of approving Preachers, and perhaps the most eminent persons in England, that I have opposed the errours risen, and have sought reformation without separation, have joyned upon all occasions in the common cause with dissenters; insomuch that I had hoped impudence it self would never have dared so to belie me, as to make Schism, Quakerism, and such like evils the fruit of my ways. If many rents and errours have sprung up by accident after my writings, they are no more to be charged on me, then Antinomianism, Swenckfieldianism, &c. were to be charged on Luther; or Brownism, Familism, &c. on the Antiprelatists. What I wrote to Mr. B. I think still, yea, Mr. Bs. own relations confirm me, they are not Anabaptists, though they be against infant baptism. Those very persons, or some of that society which sent to Mr. B. (if my intelligence do not deceive) though they they were against infant baptism, yet neglected baptism when convinced of it as their duty, and they might have been baptized; and as it was foretold them they were likely to be without the opportunity, so it came to pass, for they were after carried away with the deluſion of the quakers. It is not my observation alone, but it is the Authors conceit who wrote the book against them termed The quakers blazing star, who was carried away once by them, that the living above ordinances and as Seekers hath been one of the chief ways which hath brought it in, God justly leaving them to be deluded by Satan who would not submit to the way of Gods ordinances; and he adviseth persons, as to labour to be well grounded in faith and repentance, so to joyn in Church communion (of which he takes the Churches of the baptized to be most right, and accordingly hath himself been joyned by Baptism to them) as the best preservative against againſt it. For my part, I think Mr. Bs. and other Miniſters maintaining infant Baptiſm do give moſt advantage and encouragement to them, both to inveigh againſt them as men that will not yeeld to truth, but teach a manifeſt errour, and therefore not to be heard; and then Mr. Saltmarſh and others deluſions about water baptiſm as now ceaſed, living in the ſpirit, expectation of it, no true Miniſtry now without the ſpirit as the Apoſtles had, and ſuch like conceits driving them off from the Churches of the baptized, they are caught by thoſe emiſſaries from Rome, and other agents of Satan, with that Diveliſh deluſion, God juſtly ſuffering Satan to delude them with lies, becauſe they received not the love of the truth that they might be ſaved, 2 Theſ. 2. 10. So that I have as much cauſe to think quakeriſm the fruit of Mr. Bs. ways as of mine own. Nor will it be any wonder if poſterity be left in controverſie about the Hiſtory of former times, when ſuch a one as Mr. B. ſhall continue to load me with falſe accuſations, with which I have many wayes ſhewed my ſelf not chargeable; and not onely he, but alſo Mr. Robert Baillee in his Diſſuaſives, Mr. Edwards in his Gangrena's, and others ſhall in Engliſh and Latine heap ſo many untruths on godly perſons becauſe diſſenters, while they lived to ſhew the falſity of them.

Qu 6. "Have you felt the guilt which we too ſtrongly fear you "have incurred of the perverting of ſo many ſouls, opening them ſuch "a gap to ſchiſm, contempt of the Miniſtry and Apoſtacy, deſtroying "a hopefull reformation that coſt ſo dear: or weakening our hands in "the work, and filling the adverſaries mouths with ſcorn, enticing the "Jeſuites and Friars to ſeem your proſelytes, and liſt themſelves among "you, as the hopefull party to befriend their cauſe, hardning thou-"ſands both of the Papiſts and profane, and ſetling them again on "their dregs, when many once began to ſhake! O what a Church "might we have had, and were likely to have had? had it not been "for the Separatiſts and you? And what a lamentable confuſion "are we now brought into by theſe? Have theſe things toucht your "heart.

Anſw. How far theſe things have toucht my heart, I muſt give an account to God my Judge, and not to Mr. B. who with his fraternity I perceive would paſs a heavy doom on mee, and ſcarce award me a place in earth or heaven: And no marvel, if I were ſo pernicious an inſtrument as he deſcribes me. But may I not require Mr. B. to ſhew me by what actions I have done any of theſe things? Is Mr. B. allowed to accuſe in generals, and not to inſtance in particulars? may he without control accuſe and not prove? May he have liberty, as in a Chancery bill hath been wont, to put in all he can imagine, whether true or falſe? Is not this the manner of quakers and ſcolds? Are my anſwers often made of no avail to clear my ſelf, but that Mr, B. will ſtill be imputing that to me, which my writings and courſes do abſolve me from? No marvel Dr. Owen ſaid of him, Appendix to his Vindic. Evang. pag. 5. A man that doth not know him as I do, would by his writings take him to be immitis & immiſericors, a very Achilles, that will not pardon a man in his grave, but will take him up and cut him in a thousand pieces. I tell Mr. B. plainly, it is not my doctrine but Mr. Bs. which perverts souls, I mean his doctrine of Baptism and Churchmembership, besides his other errours; that neither my doctrine nor practise open a gap to Schism, but tend to the contrary, unity of Baptism being one of the bonds of Christians, Ephes. 4. 4. the restoring of which is the regular way to union: Mr. B. by his violent opposing it and the assertors of it, doth really open a gap to Schism, I open no gap to contempt of the Ministry, but they themselves do it by opposing truth, and other wayes, Apostacy from Christ or godliness is no fruit of my doing, but is rather caused by those that urge persons to renounce the right Baptism and Communion of the baptised, of which I fear Mr. B. is guilty. A right reformation according to Gods word, cannot be while infant Baptism continues, in seeking to destroy it I promote reformation, Mr. B. by maintaining it destroyes reformation, and by proposals shews his inclination to persecution, which if I hinder I rejoyce. I weaken not Mr. Bs. hands in preaching the Gospel, but strengthen them, if I enervate his errour I am glad; he hath most unbrotherlike endeavoured to weaken my hands, and to stop my mouth. I fill not adversaries mouths with scorn of him, but he hath thrown as much dirt as hee could on me, in his writings. I entice not Jesuites and Friers, and if they creep in among those of our judgement, is it any more then Jude v. 4. speaks of in his time? Can Mr. B. say they are not among his party? I harden no Papists, but shew their bottome errour, nor prophane persons, but take the right way to undeceive them; they that maintain their infant Baptism, settle them on their dregs, I mean their carnal presumption, by which they take themselves to bee Christians without knowledge of Christ. The Church that was likely to have been Mr. Bs. way, may be discerned by the Elders, by the Scottish Church, Mr. Bs. Church at Kederminster, the associated Ministers in Worcestershire and their Churches. Confusion is too great, for want of restoring Christs order, more would be if Mr. Bs. way were imposed, and no small oppression on tender consciences and dissenting brethren. I may say, oh what a Church might wee have had, if it had not been for Mr. B. and other such violent Pædobaptists as he is, opposing Christs way.

Qu. 7. Is [a transeunt fact, making infants Churchmembers without Law, promise, or Covenant] a sufficient medium to encourage you to venture on all these horrid things, and run such hazards as you have done? or is it possible that an humble sober man, and a tender conscience, durst make all this havock, and stand out in it, so many years considerately as you have done, and this upon such a palpably unreasonable pretence: when you should prove to us the revocation of infants Churchmembership, to tell us that they had it onely by a transeunt fact? Is this a safe ground to build so great a weight on? Sir, my conscience witnesseth, that it is not your reproach that is the end of speaking these unpleasing words to you, but some compassion on you (do not scorn it) and more on your poor followers; and most on the Church of God which you have so much injured and troubled.

Answ. I venture on no such horrid things, nor run such hazards as

Mr. B. imagines, not is the transeunt fact that I build on, but Christs institution Matth. 28. 19. though that transeunt fact I assigne is sufficient for the purpose I alledge it, and I cross interrogate Mr. B. Is it possible that an humble sober man, and a tender conscience, should make such foul work as he hath done by his writings, upon such a palpably unreasonable pretence, as a Law of infants visible Churchmembership, by promise and precept unrepealed, no where extant, and a mediate Discipleship hatch't in his brain? My reproach is a small matter, did it not tend to darken the truth I should neglect it, nor should I have answered these questions so fully, had not these things been imparted to the Preacher and others at Bewdley, ere they came to my hands. Though my reproach were not finis operantis, yet must it needs be finis operis. I thank Mr. B. for his compassion on me and my followers, I have the like on him and his followers. I do not scorn his compassion, but pitty his prejudice and pertinacy. If I have injured and troubled the Church my Antagonists have compelled me, the Lord knowes I had not a resolution to print, till the Assembly neglected the matter, and determined against me and the truth unheard. That I have injured the Church by printing I believe not, It is certain Mr. B. hath extreamly injured me and the truth, and troubled the Church of God, by printing his Book of Baptism. I should not have peace in my conscience did I not endeavour to detect his and other Pædobaptists fallacies, which I crave liberty to do, and shall easily pass by personal reproaches.

Qu. 8. Can you prove that ever there was one age, or Church (particular) on earth since Adam till about 200. years ago, that the Anabaptists rose, wherein infants were not de facto taken for members of the Church? If you can do it: Let's hear your proof.

Answ. I can, and for proof look back to Sect. 50, 51, 52, 57. besides Constantin, Augustin, mentioned by Mr. B. p. 329. Nazianzen, Hierom, &c., unbaptized though of Christian parents till adult.

Qu. 9. Can you bring us proof of any one infant of true Churchmembers, that was not rightfully a Churchmember himself from the creation till Christs dayes? or from the creation till this day? except the Anabaptists, who reject the benefit; whose case (as I said before) I will not presume to determine?

Answ. I can, for proof look back to Sect. 50, 51, 52, 57.

Qu. 10. Seing that infants have been de facto Churchmembers from the creation to this day (as far as any records can lead us) is it likely that the Lord, and head and all-sufficient Governour of his Church, would have permitted his Church till now to be actually made up of such subjects, as in regard of age he disallowed? and suffer his Church to be wrong framed till now? Or is it a reasonable, modest and lawful undertaking, to go about now in the end of the world to make God a new framed Church, as to the age of the subjects? And is it not more modest and safe, to live quietly in a Church of that frame as all the Saints in heaven lived in, till the other day, as a few Anabaptists with vile and sinful means, and miserable success, did attempt an alteration?

Answ. This question ariseth from these suppositions, 1. that infants have have been de facto Churchmembers from the creation to this day. 2. That all the Saints in heaven lived in a Church that had infants visible Churchmembers till less then 200. years ago. 3. That the Anabaptists in Germany in less then 200. years attempted the alteration first of of leaving infants out of the visible Church. 4. That they did it with vile and sinful meanes and miserable success. The first of these is not true, as is shewed in the fore-going Sections, chiefly those in which the 8th. question of this Letter of Mr. B. is answered, the second is shewed to be false Sect. 52. wherein it is proved the Apostles lived in a Church that had not infants. The third is false, for both Christ altered it, and when the corruption of infant Baptism had overspread the Western Churches, many besides the late Anabaptists, as Petrus de Bruis and many other Saints in heaven did alter it. The fourth is in part false, For I think the Anabaptists so called, did not alter infant visible Churchmembership with vile and sinful means, but some of them (not all) did by vile and sinful means seek to set up a temporal dominion of the Saints (as I fear some now called Quinto-monarchians do) which is not to be imputed to all that are of the same way in point of discipline and ordinances, and that though this thing of erecting a temporal dominion had miserable success, yet the restoring of Baptism hath had success as other reformations, as of the Waldenses, Hussites, Non conformists and others, who though by clamours of Preachers, and violence of Princes, they have been for a time suppressed, yet a remnant have been preserved, who have in time revived, and we hope notwithstanding all the clamours, accusations, and practises, used to corrupt & suppress them, will spread & grow up through the blesing of God. And to Mr. Bs. questions I answer, my aim is not to erect a new framed Church to God, but to reduce it to the frame Christ and his Apostles left it in, though it were after some ages altered by the corruption of infant Baptism, which had its original from the gross errour that by it Gods grace was given, and otherwise the infants should perish. And though in that Church, who were for infant Baptism many were Saints now in heaven, yet it is not safe to continue that errour, any more then to continue the errour of infant Communion now by Papists and Protestants rejected, though it were many hundreds of yeares practised in the same Churches. And sure I wonder if he condemn mee for seeking reformation of infant Baptism, how Mr. B. could justifie himself for not living quietly in the Church of England, as it was under the Prelates, though there were among them in that Church Saints now living in heaven, but seeking the reformation of discipline and ceremonies of humane invention, though greater troubles followed thereon, then I think hath followed this reformation I endeavour, and then I hope ever will. Surely if the way I take, and propound, and prosecute were followed, the reformation would be easie and safe, and that it is not followed, will be laid to the charge of Mr. B. and other Pædobaptists as their sin, nor can all his or their wit bee able to cleer them from it, nor from the guilt of breaking their solemn Covenant to endeavour the reformation of these Churches according to Gods word. Hee concludes,

Sir pardon the weakneſs, and bear with the plainneſs and freeneſs of Your faithful Brother (though not as is meet) Rich. Baxter. May 14. 1655.

Anſw. I pray the Lord to pardon Mr. Bs. violent and clamourous, though I hope not wilful oppoſing of the truth, and I love him not the worſe for his plain dealing, yet cannot patiently bear his falſhoods, wherein he accuſeth the truth and ſervants of the living God, and by ſhewing him his errours, and evil dealing, have endeavoured to acquit my ſelf as his faithful brother, as was meet, however he hath been, or ſhall be towards me affected.

He adds after, "Sir, if you have any thing of moment to ſay, in "reply to theſe, which you have not yet in your writings brought "forth, I ſhall bee willing to conſider of it: But if you have not, "I pray you tell me ſo in two words, and ſpare the reſt of your pains "(as for me) and trouble mee no more with matters of this nature. "For truly I have no ſufficient vacancy from greater works. Yea, I am "conſtrained to forbear much greater then theſe. R. B. After this, he "tels me, That whereas I preached a Sermon at Bewdley, in which "I refuted by many arguments infants viſible Churchmemberſhip, I "muſt be either mutable or hypocritical, if I deny ſuch a law and or-"dinance which I took on me then to refute, and deſires a Copy "of that Sermon, that hee may ſhew the ſad miſtakes and vanity of "thoſe my arguments.

To which I anſwer, 1. I refuted Mr. Bs. law of infants viſible Churchmemberſhip, as a thing pretended, not as a thing real, and ſo am neither mutable nor hypocritical, in denying ſuch a law. 2. I have no delight in Mr. Bs. writings of this ſubject, unleſs there were more ingenuity and ſolidity in them, then I yet finde, and therefore am willing to gratifie him with no more of my manuſcripts in this kinde. 3. As for the Copy of my Sermon he hath the matter of it with enlargement in the 50, 51, and 52. Section of this Book, which when he anſwers, fragili querens illidere dentem offendet ſolido. 4. What I had more to ſay then I have printed, he may perceive by my Books, and however Mr. B. conceives, yet I conceive that the reformation or confirmation of infant Baptiſm, is a matter of as great moment as the things Mr. B. is intentive on. However, hee might have anſwered my Letter without any of this trouble hee hath put himſelf to: But ſith hee choſe this way, I have thought it neceſſary to make this reply, and ſo to go on to the examining the reſt of his Book, not yet examined by me at large, though there be little which is not anſwered in this and other parts before.

SECT. LXIIII.

My Answer in the Dispute and Sermon to the argument of Mr. B. of Baptism, part 1. ch. 6. about the non-repeal of infants Churchmembership, because neither in justice nor mercy, is vindicated.

PLain Scripture proof, &c. part 1. ch. 6. Mr B. speaks thus. "My first "argument is this. If God have repealed this ordinance, and revo- "ked this merciſull gift of infants Churchmembership, then it is either "in mercy, or in juſtice; either for their good, or for their hurt. But "he hath neither repealed it in mercy for their good, nor in juſtice for "their hurt: therefore he hath not at all repealed it. I will hide no- "thing from you that Mr. T. hath ſaid againſt this argument, either in "our publick Diſpute, or in his Sermon. The ſufficiency of the enu- "meration in the major propoſition, he never offered to deny: nor "indeed is there any ground to deny it. It muſt needs be for the good "or hurt of infants that they are put out; and ſo muſt needs be in "mercy or juſtice, For God maketh not ſuch great alterations in "his Church and Laws, to no end, and of no moment, but in meer in- "differency.

Anſw. In the Diſpute at Bewdley, Jan. 1. 1649. and the Sermon ſhortly after, I did not underſtand Mr. Bs. opinion as I do now; nor did afore the writing of his laſt Letter, conceive of his law and ordinance of viſible Churchmembership what it was, and where it was to be found; nor do I yet conceive clearly what the benefit and priviledge is to infants by their viſible Churchmembership which he aſſerts. And therefore if I gave not ſo clear an anſwer to this argument as were requiſite, it is to be imputed partly to the unacquaintedneſs with it at that time, partly to Mr. Bs. artifice, who carried himſelf cloſe in the Diſpute for indirect advantage, and ſtill is unwilling to ſhew his mind fully, though deſired by me in the Letter before ſet down. What is his opinion about the law unrepealed, is conſidered before; what he imagines are the priviledges and benefit of his infants viſible Churchmembers, ſeems to be intimated in theſe paſſages of his Letter in the 4th. qu. ſet down here, ſect. 55. when he ſaith, I ſuppoſe you will not deny that it was a benefit to be the covenanted people of God, to have the Lord engaged to be their God, and to take them for his people, to be brought ſo near him, and to be ſeparated from the common and unclean, from the world, and from the ſtrangers to the Covenant of promiſes, that live as without God in the world, and without hope. In another paſſage, ſet down Sect. 56. To be a member of the Church, is to be a member of a ſociety taking God in Chriſt to be their God, and taken by him for his ſpecial people. The act which makes each member is of the ſame nature with that which makes the ſociety. The relation then eſſentially containeth 1. a right to the great benefits of Gods ſovereignty over men, Chriſts headſhip, and

that favour, protection, provision, and other blessings which are due from such a powerfull and gracious a Soveraign to such subjects, and from such a head to his members: As also a right to my station in the body, and to the inseparable benefits thereof. Which how false they are, is in part shewed above. He likewise expresseth the leaving infants out of the visible Church Christian, as if it were a casting out, excommunicating, by a punitive execution of a curse or law on them, ch. 5 part 1. of plain Scripture proof, &c. wherein how he is mistaken is shewed above. These things being premised, I say, that if Mr. B. understand by [mercy] remunerative mercy, and by [justice] punitive justice (as he seems to do,) I deny the major. And to his reasons I answer; 1. Simply, and of it self, the non-visible Churchmembership of infants imports neither hurt nor good to them: But by accident, in that their visible Churchmembership in the Church of the Hebrews obliged them to Circumcision and the yoke of the Law, so it imports hurt to them. 2. If it did import hurt or good to them, yet it might be neither by an act of remunerative mercy, nor punitive justice, that they are left out of the Church; but by an act of meer Soveraignty, as it is in election and reprobation, and in the disposing of the Gospel where God pleaseth. 3. God hath his ends in this alteration, as to shew his freeness, his intent to have his visible Church more spiritual then the Jewish, &c. though not to shew his remunerative mercy or avenging justice. 4. It is not in meer indifferency, but of moment to these ends that hee doth so.

Mr. B. proceeds thus. The minor I prove in both parts. 1. That God hath not repealed this to their hurt in justice, I prove thus: If God never revoke his mercies, nor repeal his ordinances in justice to the parties hurt, till they first break Covenant with him, and so procure it by their own desert; then he hath not in justice revoked this mercy to the hurt of those that never broke Covenant with him: But it is certain that God never revoketh a mercy in justice to the hurt of any that never broke Covenant with him, therefore to such he hath not so revoked it.

Answ. Gods revoking mercies in justice to the parties hurt, is sometimes without the particular persons breaking Covenant with him, or his desert. Are not the infants of Adam deprived of life in justice to their hurt, without their breaking Covenant with God, or their personal desert? Are not many infants and others deprived of the preaching of the Gospel, who yet are descended from faithfull ancestors who never brake Covenant with God, onely for that the nation of which they are a part, are over-run by barbarous people, they carried away captive, they and their children made slaves? Do not these things happen to the most godly Saints? Doth not Solomon tell us, Eccles. 9. 2. that all things come alike to all? Doth not the Apostle tell us, Rom. 9. 11, 12. For the children being not yet born, neither having done any good or evil, that the purpose of God according to the election might stand, not of works, but of him that calleth, it was said to Rebecca, the elder shall serve the younger; As it is written, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated: whence v. 18. he infers, therefore hath he mercy on whom he will have mercy, mercy, and whom he will he hardeneth? And again, Rom. 11.33. after he had considered the various ways of Gods dealing with Jews and Gentiles, he thus concludes, O the depth of the riches both of the wisdome and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgements, and his paths past finding out! From whence, and from innumerable experiments of thousands of godly Greeks whose children are taken from them and made Turks, and others, I may safely deny the minor of Mr. Bs. argument, which he saith is certain, as being most certainly false, and like the arguing of the Disciples, John 9 2. which Christ refuted v. 3. concerning the man who was born blind.

But Mr. B. goes on to prove it thus. That this is a mercy, and of the Covenant, is plain, Deut. 29,10,11,12. and frequently past denial.

Answ. That the visible Churchmembership of infants in the Jewish national Church was a mercy, its not denied; but that it was such a mercy as Mr. B. makes it above, to contain essentially a right to the great benefits of Gods soveraignty over men, Christs headship, and that favour, protection, provision, and other blessings, which are due from so powerfull and gracious a Soveraign to such subjects, and from such a head to his members, is neither true, nor proved from Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12,13. where the being a God to them doth not necessarily include all these benefits; nor if it did, do it ascribe them to their visible Churchmembership, but to their obedience to his laws, implied in the phrase that he may establish thee for a people to himself; that is, saith Piscator in his Scholie on the place, That he may require worship from thee by obedience towards his precepts, and so may bind thee to himself: Which sense the rest of Moses his speech in that and the following chapter shew, and consequently they presuppose not onely their Covenant with God, and their visible Churchmembership, but also their keeping the law so far as the blessings were legal, and their belief and obedience to the Gospel so far as they are Evangelical.

2. Saith Mr. B. That God doth not in justice revoke such to any but Covenant breakers, I prove briefly thus. 1. From the mercifull nature and constant dealings of God, who never casteth off those that cast not off him.

Answ. 1. Mr. B. doth most vainly intimate them to be cast off by God who are not visible Churchmembers, which if true, it would prove that all infants dying in the womb are cast off by God, with many more, who are not visible Churchmembers, and yet are blessed persons. 2. For Gods mercifull nature, it doth not hinder but that God may cast off them who cast not off him, sith his mercifull nature doth not act as a natural agent, but as a free agent; and he hath resolved us, Exod. 33. 19. Rom. 9.15. I will have mercy on whom I will have mercy, I will have compassion on whom I will have compassion, even then when he proclaimed his Name to be gracious and mercifull. 3. It is false, as hath been before proved, that the constant dealings of God are such, as that he never casteth off those that cast not him off.

2. Saith Mr. B. From his truth and faithfulness: For else we should make God the Covenant breaker, and not man; which is horrid blasphemy.

Answ.

Answ. This argument indeed were good if God had made this Covenant with men, That whoever of them believe in Christ, their infant children should be Churchmembers visible in his Church Jewish or Catholick. But there was never such a Covenant made by God, and therefore though he alters the frame of the Church, so as to leave out infants of beleivers from being visible members, he breaks no Covenant.

3. Saith he, From the immutability and constancy of God: His gifts and calling are without repentance.

Answ. God is indeed immutable and constant in his being and promises, and his gifts of election, foreknowledge, effectual calling, meant Rom. 11. 29. as v. 28, 27, 26, 7, 5, 2, shew, are without repentance, Rom. 8. 30. Rom. 9. 6. But the gift of visible Churchmembership is not such, even according to Mr. B. Cain was a visible Churchmember, yet cast off, with many more. Many a believers child is in infancy taken from him and made a Mahometan, so as that he never is a visible Christian, and yet God is unchangeable, and his gifts meant Rom. 11. 29. without repentance.

4. Saith he, Scripture frequently layeth all the cause of all evil of suffering upon mans sinning, Mic. 1. 5. Hos. 13. 9.

Answ. 1. He supposeth, but proveth not, that the non-visible Churchmembership Christian of infants is an evil of suffering, which I deny. 2. It is false that the Scripture ever layeth all the cause of all the evil of suffering upon the mans sinning, who suffereth; the contrary is manifest in the death of infants by Adams sin, Rom. 5. 12. 3. Some sufferings our Lord Christ denies to be from the special sin of children or parents, John 9. 3, 4. The Texts alledged prove not Mr. Bs. proposition; the former proves onely the destruction of Samaria and Jerusalem to be for their Idolatry, the other proves the same to have been the fate of Israel for the same sin, but neither Mr. Bs. universal proposition. So that hitherto Mr. B. hath proved nothing.

He applies his unproved dictates thus. Now you know there were many Jews that did believe, and did not forsake the Covenant of God, even most of the Apostles themselves, and many thousands more: Now how then can these or their infants be put out of the Church in justice to their hurt, who did not first break Covenant with God?

Answ. 1. God may in justice do it, because he is a Soveraign Lord who is no debtor to any, Rom. 11. 34, 35, 36. 2. God may in justice do it for the parents sins some ages before, or the national sin of the Jews in rejecting Christ might be a just cause for God to break off all infants Churchmembership, being onely a consequent of the taking the Hebrew nation for his people, though some parents believed, in common punishments and changes the obedience of some few not exempting them and theirs from them; as in the Babylonish captivity, it happened for Manasseh his sin, notwithstanding Josiahs reformation, 2 Kings 23. 26.

Mr. B. goes on. "I am brief in this, because Mr. T. doth not deny it. But that which he answereth is, that [It is in mercy for their good.]

"good.] I prove the contrary plainly thus. It can be no mercy to take "away a mercy, except it be to give a greater in the ſtead of it: But "here is no greater mercy given to infants in the ſtead of Churchmem- "berſhip; therefore it can be no mercy to them that it be revoked. "The major Mr. T. doth not deny, and I will fully tell you all that he "ſaith to the minor. 1. In his Diſpute he anſwered, that Churchmem- "berſhip of infants was revoked in mercy for their good; and that they "had a greater mercy in ſtead of it: And what do you think is that "greater mercy? Why, it is Chriſt come in the fleſh. I confeſs it "amazeth me to ſee the power of errour, how it can both at once be- "reave the underſtanding of ordinary light, and the conſcience of ten- "derneſs, or one of theſe at leaſt. Is it poſſible that the judgement "of ſuch a man as Mr. T. can take this for a ſatisfactory anſwer, or "his conſcience give him leave to deny Churchmemberſhip to all "infants in the world, and to raiſe a Schiſme in a poor diſtreſſed "Church; and to charge their own bloud on the heads of his peo- "ple that yeeld not to him, and all upon ſuch lamentable grounds "as theſe?

Anſw. 1. I deny that now which I did not deny in the Diſpute, neither underſtanding whereto Mr. Bs. argument tended, nor what his opinion was in the matter of his argument, nor having competent time to conſider his words. 2. I was ſomewhat amazed at firſt reading at Mr. Bs. dealing with me, who had ſo good an opinion of his godlineſs and tenderneſs of conſciences, and his pretences of friendlineſs, that if a man had ſworn to me, before he printed, that he would have thus abu- ſed and accuſed me ſo falſly, I ſhould not have believed it. But I ſee no hopes of any juſtice from ſuch an intemperate Zelot for his opinion, nor any right underſtanding of me, or any thing I ſay or do, from one ſo prejudiced, ſuperficial, in his conſideration of things, yet peremp- tory, and raſh in his determinations, as Mr. B. is. Suppoſe I had an- ſwered them as weakly as Mr. B. imagines I did, yet a little experience might have told him, that it might have commen from other cauſes then the power of errour, bereaving at once my underſtanding of ordinary light, and my conſcience of tenderneſs. Such cenſures, if there were no more, ſhew Mr. B. was carried with intemperate heat in his wri- ting, a thing which certainly corrupts a mans judgement, and male ve- rum examinat omnis corruptus Judex. To his accuſations I anſwer, It is falſe that I deny Churchmemberſhip to all the infants in the world, that I raiſe a Schiſm in a poor diſtreſſed Church, that I threten thoſe that yeeld not to me and all upon the grounds he mentions, which yet are not lamentable any otherwiſe then becauſe they are no better heed- ed. But to the argument. The major I ſhall conſider anon; the minor is that which is under preſent conſideration, which I deny, and avow what I then anſwered, with this explication and amplification. Infants viſible Churchmemberſhip was onely in the Hebrew nation. The end of God was in taking that nation to be his viſible people, that there might be a fixed nation among whom and from whom Chriſt ſhould be born. To that end he would have them diſtinguiſhed from other people by Circumcision, by laws, &c. He would have their Tribes distinguished, their inheritances fixed, their genealogie certain; this was the benefit of that nation, the honour and mercy to the infants and others, and God took it away after Christs comming as being useless, it being to usher it in, I mean the whole ordering of the Hebrew Churchmembership; and it was a greater mercy to the Church of God, and thereby to the infants, who had their Churchmembership onely a mercy before by consequence as a part of that people, without any feeling or enjoyment of it till they came to riper age: And this was a greater mercy then their former membership, 1. in that they were freed from the yoke of the Law; 2. Christ who was promised was a known person, and revealed and accomplished the will of God concerning the salvation of his people. Let's view Mr. Bs. refutation.

It Saith he. Was it ever heard before from the mouth of man, that Christ succeeded churchmembership, as a thing that was to give place for him? Doth Christ cast any out of the Church, onely that he may succeed them? Can he prove that their churchmembership was a type of Christ, that must cease when he was come? why doth he not prove it then from some Scripture or reason? cannot we have a room in the body without being cast out at the comming of the head? Are the head and members at such odds, that one must give place, and be gone when the other comes? why then is not the churchmembership of men and women to give place to Christs comming in the flesh? Sure the nature of churchmembership is the same in both. why did the Apostles never speak of this among the types of Christ that did cease, that all infants are put out of the Church or family of God, that Christ may succeed as a greater mercy to them then their room in his Church and family? Is not here comfort (but by a silly comforter) to all the Jewes themselves? though they are broken off from the Church, yet Christ is a greater mercy to them in stead of it.

Answ. Mr. B. keeps his wont of refuting me by frivolous questions and foolish scoffs, in stead of solid arguments. To them as they are, I return these answers. He himself ch. 30. saith, The dedication of the first born was evidently a type of Christ and the Church under him, and yet he can give no more Scripture or reason for it, then I can for this, that the Churchmembership of infants was but to endure till Christs comming in the flesh. To omit what I have already argued in the 50, 51, 52. sections before, in my apprehension the Apostle doth plainly teach, Gal. 3. 16. to the end, that the Churchmembership that was by the descent by natural birth from Abraham, continued onely till faith came, that is, till Christ was exhibited, and believed on as already come in the flesh, that now all are children of God, Abrahams seed by faith, that there is now no difference between Jew and Gentile, the Jews natural birth brings not him in the Church, nor the Gentiles uncircumcision excludes him; that so many as are admitted into the Church by Baptism do put on Christ, and consequently the Churchmembership by birth into the Jewish Church national now ceaseth, and there is no Churchmembership, but by faith in Christ. And this I might further confirm from Gal. 5. 6. Col. 2. 11, 12. & 3. 11. And to these Scriptures I add this reason, ſon, The courſe that God took in ſevering the Jewiſh nation from other people, circumciſing the males, keeping the diſtinction of tribes, and the inheritances in the families, and the genealogies ſo exactly till Chriſt came, ordering the tax of Auguſtus at the time of Chriſts birth, and after his aſcenſion ſcattering the Jews out of their land, overturning their Commonwealth, confounding their pedigrees, taking to himſelf another Church in another way, by preaching the Goſpel, and baptizing believers, and none elſe; doth plainly evidence to me, that infants Churchmemberſhip was but an introduction, type, ſhadow, fore-runner to Chriſts manifeſtation in the fleſh, and to ceaſe as John Baptiſts office did when Chriſt was exhibited and fully manifeſted to the world. And accordingly Mr. Bs. queſtions are anſwered; the firſt, that it was heard of before, that upon the comming of Chriſt believers Churchmemberſhip was to ſucceed to birth-Churchmemberſhip: To the ſecond, that though Chriſt caſt not any out of the Church that he may ſucceed them, yet by his comming he alters Churchmemberſhip by birth into Churchmemberſhip by faith: The third and fourth are anſwered by ſetting down my apprehenſion, and the Scriptures and reaſon of it. The fifth I anſwer affirmatively, the ſixth negatively: The ſeventh, that men and women are not Churchmembers now by birth any more then infants, and in that reſpect the nature of Churchmemberſhip is the ſame in both: To the eighth, the Apoſtle did ſpeak of it, in the places before cited: To the ninth, the ſilly comforter knows no reaſon why the Jews broken off ſhould be comforted; but thinks it was matter of comfort to the believing Jews, that in ſtead of infants viſible Churchmemberſhip and their own ſtanding in the national Church Jewiſh, they had Chriſt manifeſted in the fleſh as a greater mercy, the body in ſtead of the ſhadow, the Sun riſen in ſtead of the Day-ſtar.

Mr. B. goes on thus. But let us conſider a little what is the Church? Is it not the body of Chriſt? Even all the Church ſince Adams fall, and the making of a new Covenant is one body of Chriſt: Even the viſible Church is his viſible body, as 1 Cor. 12. and many Scriptures fully ſhew; therefore even the branches not bearing fruit are ſaid to be in him, that is, in his viſible body, Joh. 14. 1, 2, 3. Now doth Chriſt break off all infants from his body, that he may come in the fleſh to be a greater mercy to them? what's that, but to be a greater mercy then himſelf, who is the life, and welfare of the body?

Anſw. The inviſible Church is all one body of Chriſt; the viſible hath had ſuch differences, that one part, to wit, thoſe who feared God, and prayed continually, Acts 10 2. yet had no communion with the other, but were counted unclean, and ſhunned becauſe uncircumciſed, Acts 11. 2, 3. The Church of the circumciſed, which was by natural birth, is now broken off upon Chriſts comming; and another Church by faith of all nations is raiſed; Acts 10. 34, 35. in which infants are not till they believe; who though they are of the inviſible Church or body of Chriſt by election, and inviſible operation of the ſpirit, yet are not of the viſible till they profeſs faith in Chriſt as already come in the fleſh, who was the great mercy promiſed to Abraham, Joh. 8. 56. in which he rejoyced although a great part of his natural seed were broken off; and this was a greater mercy then was before exhibited, although then Christ was the life and welfare of the body.

Again, saith Mr. B. it seems by this, Mr. T. thinks that excommunication is a great mercy: If all the Jews infants had been excommunicate or cast out of the Church by God himself, it were no more then Christ did in mercy, never bringing them into any other Church in stead.

Answ. Nothing said by me gives any occasion to this imputation: Excommunication, if just, I count a curse; but the non taking of infants into the visible Church Christian hath nothing of a curse in it, it being onely an act of God according to his Soveraignty, who had liberty to appoint who should be of his Church, who not.

Against this strange fiction, saith Mr. B. I argued thus: If ordinarily God shew not so great mercy to those out of the Church as to those in it, then it is not a greater mercy, or for the parties greater good to be put out, then to be in: But ordinarily God sheweth not so great mercy to those out of the Church as to those in it: Therefore it is not for their greater good, nor in greater mercy to be put out. To this Mr. T. answered nothing.

Answ. What need I, when I grant the conclusion? Mr. B. makes a strange fiction of his own, as if I thought excommunication, to be cast out or put out of the Church, a great mercy; and held infants were excommunicated, cast or put out of the Church: Which is far from me, or any thing I say, who do not assert them put out by any judicial sentence, but by a free act of Gods soveraignty left out, for reasons best known to himself, but in part revealed to us.

Mr. B. adds. I argued also thus: If those that are out of the Church since Christ, have no such promise or assurance of mercy from him, as those in the Church had before Christ, then it is not to them a great mercy to be out of the Church: But those out of the Church since Christ, have no such promise or assurance of mercy from him, as those in the Church had before Christ: therefore it cannot be to them a greater mercy. To this Mr. T. answered, that it is a greater mercy to infants since Christ to be out of the Church, then before to be in it; and that they have as much assurance of mercy from Christ now, as then, (he should say more.)

Answ. This answer was right; infants now are in a better case, though not visible Christian churchmembers, then they were when in the Jewish Church, in which they were circumcised and obliged to Moses law; and they have as much assurance of mercy from Christ, to wit, righteousness and life as then; yea, more (though I need not say so in contradiction to Mr. Bs. minor) then before, sith Christs exhibition in the flesh is a greater assurance of saving mercy then was before.

To which, saith Mr. B. I replied thus, If those infants which were in the Church before Christ, had God engaged in an oath and Covenant to be their God, and to take them for his peculiar people, and those infants out of the Church since Christ have no such thing; then they before Christ in the Church had more assurance of mercy then those out of the Church since Christ:

But

But the former is true, as I proved out of Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. upon which text, what vain altercations there were, and what words were used against the expreß Letter of the text, you ſhall ſee in the relation of the Diſpute, if I be called to publiſh it.

Anſw. For my part I ſhall not conſent that Mr. B. publiſh the relation of the Diſpute, having found his dealing ſo injurious to me in that which he hath already done, and his partiality towards his opinion and party. I have looked over two ſuch relations of the Diſpute as I could get, and I finde in them that I did deny the minor, and when Mr. B. alledged Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. to prove it, I did diſtinguiſh of being God in reſpect of ſaving benefits, and thus God is engaged in Covenant to be God to infants now no viſible Churchmembers as he was then, to wit to the elect onely, or in reſpect of outward advantages, ſuch as were peculiar to the nation of the Jews, as that they ſhould poſſeſs Canaan, have Gods worſhip and preſence with them in a more ſpecial manner then other people, Chriſt to come out of that people, &c. as Rom. 9. 4, 5. the Apoſtle reckons them, and in this reſpect it was granted that infants in the Church before Chriſt had God ſo engaged, and that neither infants out of the Church Chriſtian, no nor believers in it, no nor all believers afore Chriſt, ſuch as Cornelius had God ſo engaged, and that in this reſpect the oath of God was meant, appeared from v. 13. which ſaith thus, that he may eſtabliſh thee to day for a people unto himſelf, and that he may be unto thee a God as he hath ſaid unto thee, and as he hath ſworn unto thy Fathers, to Abraham, to Iſaac, and to Jacob, which appears to be meant of their ſetling in Canaan and their proſperous ſtate there, as many places evince, where it is mentioned particularly Gen. 12. 7. & 13. 15. & 15. 8. & 17. 8. & 22. 17. & 26. 3. & 28. 13, 14. Deut. 34. 5, &c. beſides many other paſſages in the ſame ſpeech of Moſes, Deut. 29. 16, 21, 23, 24. 27. Deut. 30. 2, 5. 9, 10, 16, 18. and moſt evidently the concluſion of it Deut. 30. 20. From which paſſages it is as evident as the light, that the meaning Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. was this, that God did bring into Covenant by Moſes (the chief ſtanding for the reſt) the whole nation of Iſrael, that they might for themſelves and their poſterity unborn binde them to obſerve the lawes of Moſes given in Horeb, and thereby be eſtabliſhed a people to God, and he might be a God to them in ſetling, keeping and proſpering them in Canaan, if they did obey. Now Mr. B. aſſerted that God did covenant with all the little ones and others there preſent, to be their God, and that in reſpect of ſpiritual benefits, and to that end, urged Deut. 30. 6. which he made conditional, and to other then the elect. Againſt which I urged, that [to circumciſe the heart] is the ſame with writing Gods lawes in the heart Heb. 8. 10. which Dr. Twiß rightly concludes to be abſolute and to the elect onely, and that to aſſert it to be conditional is Pelagianiſm, and I deſired the Auditors to take notice of Mr. Bs. aſſertion in that thing: I confeſs I had not time to collect and to produce the texts here mentioned (which was one reaſon why I was ſtild averſe from extemporary verbal diſputes) but this was the ſubſtance of that altercation which Mr. B. cals vain, and ſaith, words were uſed againſt the expreß letter

ter of the text. Concerning which, although I will not undertake to justifie all I then said, yet the answer I then gave I still avouch as right, and conceive Mr. Bs. assertion of circumcising the heart, to love the Lord, to belong to other then the elect, and to be conditional to be very erroneous, and refer the reader to Mr. Bs. own words in answer to Mr. Bedford in the Friendly accommodation pag. 361, 362. to discern the errour of it.

Mr. B. saith, I further add out of Ephes. 2. 12. Those that were aliens to the Commonwealth of Israel, were strangers to the Covenant of promises, and without hope, and without God: and there is no Scripture speaketh of delivering any from this sad state but Churchmembers; therefore sure it can be no mercy to be put out of the Church.

Answ. Though the conclusion were granted it hurts not me, who do not assert the putting infants out of the Church, who were in, but the not taking of them into the visible Church Christian. However the text speaks of the Ephesians who were uncircumcised in the flesh v. 11. but doth not say that all that were uncircumcised, or aliens from the Commonwealth of Israel, were without God in the world. For it is certain that Cornelius and many other Proselytes uncircumcised, were not without God in the world, and therefore persons might then have Christ, though not be visible Churchmembers; and if Mr. B. say, that none but visible members in the Christian Church have Christ, God, hope, he must damn all abortives and still born children of believers, and all those that are converted, (and shew it not as dumb persons) on their death-bed, or any other way, in articulo mortis.

Again, saith he, God added to the Church such as should be saved: therefore to be cast or put out of the Church is no known way of mercy.

Answ. The conclusion is granted, and yet the text proves not that all who are added to the Church shall be saved, or that all that shall be saved, are or shall be added to the Church visible.

Again, saith hee, the Church is the family of Christ (even the visible Church is called the house of God 1 Tim. 3. 15.) But it is no known way of mercy to be out of Gods house and family.

Answ. I grant it, and yet a person may be in Christs house, and a temple to him, and not a visible Churchmember.

Again, saith he, the Church is the pillar and ground of Truth; therefore no mercy to be taken off it.

Answ. I grant it, yet doubt whether the Church be termed so, 1 Tim. 3. 15. and not rather either the mystery of Godliness v. 16. as Cameron de Eccles. c. de Eccles. durati, & de Eccl. Const. or Timothy as Gataker Cinni lib. 2. c. 20.

Again, saith Mr. B. the Church visible, is the visible body of Christ; but it is no mercy to be separated from Christs body.

Answ. True, yet it may be a mercy in respect of the yoke of the law not to be in the visible Church Jewish, yea by accident it may be a mercy to be separated from a visible Church Christian as when the Church is tyrannous in its rule, or unsound in the doctrine taught to it.

Again, saith he, the Church visible is Christs visible Kingdome: But it is no mercy to be out of Christs Kingdome; therefore it is no mercy to be out of the Church.

Answ. The same which was made to the former objection is to this.

Lastly, saith Mr. B. Do but read all those hundred glorious things that are spoken of the City of God, all those high praises that are given to the Jewish Church, in Deut. and the Psalms, and all the Scriptures (who is like unto thee O Israel, &c.) And then read all the far more glorious things, that are spoken of the Gospel Church since Christ: And if after this you can still believe, that God did in mercy cast infants out of one Church and never take them into the other, and that Christ came in the flesh to put them out of the Church in mercy, as if he could fitlier save them out of his Church then in it; I say, if after reading the foresaid passages, you can believe this, for my part I give you up as forlorn, and look upon your understandings in this as forsaken by God, and not onely void of spiritual illumination, but common reason: and pray the Lord to save the understandings of all his people from such a plague, and to rescue yours before you go further.

Answ. I say not that God did in mercy cast infants out of one Church, nor that Christ came in the flesh to put them out of the Church in mercy, as if he could fitlier save them out of his Church then in it; but that God never took them into his visible Church Christian, and that Christs comming in the flesh is a mercy recompensing the visible Churchmembership Jewish by birth, when God brake off that people from the olive for their unbelief, and that Christ can and doth as fitly save infants, though not in the visible Church Christian, as he did when they were in the visible Church Jewish, and yet fear not Mr. Bs. direful omen and sad despair of my understanding, but have as good hopes of mine and my followers understandings in this thing, as of Mr. Bs and his followers, and leave it to the intelligent to judge, whether we are void not onely of spiritual illumination, but common reason. I have read what is said of Israel, and yet think it a mercy now not to bee a visible Churchmember in it, no not though it were now as it was in the best state under David, Solomon, &c. And I conceive Mr. B. hath read many hundreds of as glorious things spoken of Moses Law as of the Church, and yet I think Mr. B. counts it a mercy now not to be under it. I finde the glorious things spoken of the Gospel Church since Christ, meant all or most of it, as it contains that part which is the invisible Church of true believers or elect persons. And I judge God hath dealt mercifully with infants, if he put them into the invisible Church, though hee put them not into the visible, if not, either their being in the visible benefits them not or aggravates their condemnation.

Mr. B. proceeds thus. "But let us see what Mr. T. answers to this in "his Sermon, which upon deliberation hee afterward preached to con-"fute my arguments, and therefore cannot lay the blame upon his un-"preparedness. And truly in my judgement he doth here plainly throw "down his weapons, and give up the whole cause (though not directly "confessing his errour: he is not yet so happy:) I were best give you his

" his own words, left I be thought to wrong him: they are these; [As for those petty reasons, if it be done, it must bee in mercy or judgement, I say in mercy in respect of the whole Catholike Church; now Christ being come, and wee having a more spiritual churchstate then they had; their churchstate was more carnal and fleshly, and agreeable to their time of minority: It is in mercy that it is taken away. And as for that exception, It cannot be taken away in mercy, unless some priviledge be to them in stead of it; we answer, It is in mercy to the whole Church, though no priviledge be to them] " So far Mr. Ts. words. I confess I never heard a cause more " plainly forsaken, except a man should say flatly, I have erred, or " I recant. 1. He much altereth the terms of my argument, as you may " see by it before. The argument is thus; It can be no mercy to any " to have a mercy taken away from them, except it be to give a greater " in its stead. But here is no greater mercy given to infants in stead of " Churchmembership; therefore it can be no mercy to them, that it be " revoked, or taken away. To call these [petty reasons] is the onely " strength of Mr. T. his answer. For I pray you mark. 1. Hee never " denied the major proposition [that it can be no mercy to any to have " a mercy taken from them, except they may have a greater in stead:] " He could not deny this with any shew of reason: For otherwise, If it " be a mercy meerly to deprive the creature of mercy, then wee shall " turn hell into heaven, and make it the greatest place of mercies, be- " cause none are deprived of mercy so much as they; no nor of this par- " ticular mercy: for none are further removed from being members of " the Church then the damned.

Answ. It is true finding the boastings concerning Mr. Bs. dispute Janu. 1, 1649. to be many, after my return from Leimster (to which place I was then designed and where I was Janu. 6.) I did though without any copy of the disputation or arguments in writing (which I could not obtain from Mr. B.) as well as my memory could bear them away, in the close of my Afternoons Sermon, Jan. 13. at Bewdley, recite and refute his arguments in the disputation. Wherein it is true I was somewhat more deliberate then in the dispute, yet for want of the arguments in writing, I could not then give so full and exact an answer to his arguments as had been requisite, nor perhaps shall now to this, because Mr. B. doth not plainly set down though requested by me, what that benefit, priviledge, or mercy is, which he conceives annexed to infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed. But that either I throw down my weapons or forsake my cause by my answer then to this argument, is but Mr. Bs. dream. Of what alteration there was of the terms of his argument he must bear the blame, who would not give me his arguments in writing under his own hand; nor am I to be blamed for drawing it so short, being fearful to wrong him by a fuller reciting. And I perceive I had great cause so to do, when I finde Mr. B. himself altering the terms of his own major in a few lines, in the former it is [except it be to give a greater in its stead] in the later [except that they may have a greater in stead] which are not the same. And for my answer. if my terming his arguments [petty reasonings] had been mine onely answer, yet it had had been a good and sufficient answer, if this be granted (which I conceive an evident truth) that of Divine institution, (and such is this of visible Churchmembership) there is no reason can be right but what is from Gods own appointment, though it may seem right to us it should be so. Papists argue that if God did not make one œcumenical bishop (as there was one High Priest among the Jews) to preserve unity, non satis discretus esset, he should not be discreet enough. Now this seems to our reason plausible, and yet we justly say, that in things positive our reason is deceivable, and Gods appointment onely is to be attended. And so it is in this; though this reason of Mr. B. seem plausible, yet it were no forsaking the cause though I cou'd not answer it any otherwise then thus, It is Mr. Bs. petty reasoning from his own conceits of what he imagines fit in a matter of meer institution, concerning which it is nevertheless manifest from the History of the New Testament, that God hath appointed otherwise then is Gods way according to his reason; which indeed is but arrogant presumption, when it prescribes to God. But I shall answer his argument more amply: And though I did not deny his major in the Dispute or Sermon, I say, if it be understood of a greater mercy in the same kind, and to the same persons, it is not true; the believing Jews were deprived of their possessions in Judea in mercy, yet had not a greater mercy in the same kind but another in the gifts of the spirit; it was in mercy that the Priests converted to the faith were deprived of their office in the Temple, and their children of the portion of the offerings there, which were mercies to them, and yet no such office or portion provided for them and their children, but the benefit redounded to the Gentiles converted, whose conversion was prayed for by David, Isaiah &c. and was a mercy to them, though their posterity might be broken off, and the national Church dissolved. I conceive that Gods ways are so free and various in this kind, that Mr Bs. major cannot be universally true, nor is Mr. Bs. reason cogent. For suppose God annihilate in mercy, there is no greater mercy given, yet Hell is not turned into Heaven, and made the greatest place of mercies, in this case there is a meer deprivation of mercy in mercy: But the thing is more apparent in deprivations of some temporal benefits. God may deprive in mercy, that is, not in judgement of some temporal benefit meerly because he will, out of his freedome to dispose of his own, yet give no greater mercy in stead of it then he should have had if that had not been taken away; and that God doth not do so, who can say? me thinks the Apostles determination, Rom. 11.34. should satisfie that he doth. And yet Hell should not be the greatest place of mercies, for there is not onely a privation of temporal, but also of spiritual and eternal mercies, and that too with accumulation of torments, which is otherwise in the case proposed. And for the particular mercy of Churchmembership, the infant visible Jewish Churchmembership was but a temporal mercy, and a comparative mercy in respect of the nations, it neither certainly assured their eternal, nor present welfare; yea, when Christ came, considering how the nation of the Jews was against Christ, it was then rather their danger then their mercy, and was recompenced sufficiently in being out of that Church, which consisted of a rebellious and gainsaying people, and being, though not visible Churchmembers in the Christian society, yet in the families where the spirit of God was given, and Christ known.

Mr. B. adds. 2. And observe next, that as Mr T. denieth not the major, so here he plainly grants the minor, and so yeelds the whole cause. For the minor was, [that here is no greater mercy given to infants in stead of Churchmembership:] Doth not Mr. T. acknowledge this? when he saith twice over: 1. That it is a mercy to the whole catholick Church (to have their infants put out of the Church:) And so if the mercy be onely to the catholick Church, that they be none of the Church (visible,) then it is not to them a mercy: So that he taketh it to be a mercy onely to others, but none to them, according to this answer. 2. Yea, he saith it more plainly the second time, that it is in mercy to the whole Church, though no privilege (much less a greater mercy) be to them (to the infants themselves:) So that for my part, I think I may well break off here, and take the whole cause as yeelded. For if it be no mercy to any to be deprived of mercy, except that they may have a greater: And if infants have no greater in stead of this, but onely their parents have a greater: and both these be confessed: then it must follow, that it is no mercy to infants to be deprived of this mercy of their Churchmembership; and consequently, God hath not taken it from them in mercy for their good (which is the thing I am proving:) And Mr. T. yeeldeth that it is not taken from them in justice to their hurt: and therefore it is not taken from them at all. And thus you see what is became of the cause that hath been driven on with such confidence.

Answ. However I onely denied the minor in the Dispute and Sermon, yet Mr. B. may see by the answer before, that here I deny his major in the first argument in this chapter, yea, and that he can prove that it is not in justice that the Churchmembership visible Jewish ceased, though I still adhere to it, that it was in mercy; and of this argument I have here denied the major, though I did not so before, and am ready to shew that I have not yeelded the minor, nor any whit of the cause, and therefore suppose Mr. B. hath need to manage his weapons better ere he gain this cause; yea, though he should have this argument yeelded, yet the cause is not gained, for the reason before given. But let us view his minor, and my answer. His minor is [that here is no greater mercy given to infants in stead of Churchmembership,] my answer was, That in mercy to the whole catholick Church the Jewish infant Churchmembership ceased, and therefore the infant visible Churchmembership Jewish in mercy ceased. To understand his minor, it is to be observed that Mr. B. asserts 1. a law or ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership antecedent to that of Circumcision. 2. That this is by promise and precept. 3. That this infant visible Churchmembership essentially contains a right to Gods soveraignty, Christs headship, favour, protection, provision, and other blessings due from such a Soveraign and head to his members. 4. That this belonged not onely to the infants of the Jewish nation, but also of believers in all ages. 5.

That

That this mercy belonged to the infants of the believers of the Jewish nation when they were made Christians, and so could not be in justice taken from them, though the nation of the Jews were broken off for unbelief. 6. That in mercy it cannot be said to be taken away, without a greater mercy to the infants of believrs in stead of it. 7. That the comming of Christ in the flesh, the extent of the Church over the world through faith, the changing of Churchmembership by birth into that by faith, and so making the Church more spiritual, is not a greater mercy to the infants of Jew believers in stead of that visible Churchmembership. 8. That without visible Churchmembership in the Christian Church catholick, the infants of Jew believers are in worse case then they were in the Jewish Church national. On the contrary, I deny 1. such a law or ordinance. 2. That the Hebrew infant visible Churchmembership was by promise and precept. 3. That this visible Churchmembership contained essentially such a right as Mr. B. asserts; though it was a mercy in comparison of the state of other nations, yet thereto was annexed a heavy yoke of legal impositions, the deliverance from which was a mercy, and in this respect it was in mercy not continued to believers infants of the Jewish nation. 4. That it belonged to any other infants then of the Hebrew people. 5. I assert that when the Jewish nation or Hebrew people were broken off for unbelief in Christ, visible Churchmembership of infants was in justice taken away from the whole people, and consequently from the infants of Jew believers, who were onely visible Churchmembers as a part of that nation, yet in mercy to them sith their visible Churchmembership in that nation was dangerous to them, yea inconsistent with Christianity, the Jewish nation being a rebellious and gainsaying people: as it was a mercy for Lot to be in Sodom, and he was in justice to the place outed; and yet in mercy to himself, when it was to be destroyed. 6. I assert, that it might be truly said that the infant Jewish visible Churchmembership may be said to be taken away in mercy from the infants of believers of that nation, though no greater mercy were given to those particular infants of the same kind barely in stead of it. 7. I assert, that it cannot be said to be taken away in justice from infants of believing Gentiles, sith it was never granted to any Gentile nation to be Gods visible Church, nor were their infants visible Churchmembers, except by proselytism they were incorporated into the Jewish people. 8. I assert, that the not taking in of believing Gentiles infants into the visible Church Christian was not an act judiciary of God as a Judge, but Gods free act of soveraignty changing Churchmembership by birth into Churchmembership by faith. 9. I assert, that the comming of Christ in the flesh, and the consequents thereof, the breaking down the partition wall, taking in the Gentiles by faith, &c. without taking in infants into the visible Church Christian, were greater mercies then the Jewish infant Churchmembership (which was clogged with legal burdens, and was an imperfect state) and did abundantly countervail the Jewish infant visible Churchmembership in the best state of that, and did bring as much benefit to infants as that relation did. 10. That the infants of believing Gentiles no members of the visible Church Christian are not in worse but better condition, in respect of any real Evangelical blessing, then the Hebrew infants were with their Churchmembership. 1. Because the spiritual blessings of regeneration, in dwelling of the spirit, justification, remission of sins, adoption, Gods favour, protection, provision, eternal life, are as much assured to them in infancy without visible Churchmembership, as they were with it. 2. They do actually enjoy sooner these mercies, if in the invisible Church (without which none ever enjoyed them) and in more ample manner without Jewish visible Churchmembership, then they did with it, the spirit being now more powred out, the Gospel cleared, the Church enlarged, onely legal ceremonies, and rest in Canaan with prosperity therein being taken away. Mr. B. and the reader hereby may fully understand what I deny, and what I grant, and how I answer this his petty reasoning without yeelding the cause, and when he hath refuted these assertions, let him sing his triumph, and not as he vainly and insolently doth afore the victory.

He adds. But yet let us follow it further. And 1. what means Mr. T. to talk of mercy to others, when our question is, whether it be a mercy to themselves to be unchurched? 2. By this arguing he may prove any thing almost in the world a mercy: For all shall work together for good to them that love God, Rom. 8. 28. And therefore if I should ask him, whether it be in mercy to wicked men, that God giveth them over to themselves, and at last damneth them, Mr. T. may thus answer that it is: for it is a mercy to the whole catholick Church, that is, to other men: but what is this to the damned? So Mr. T. saith, It is a mercy to the whole catholicke Church: But what is that to infants who are unchurched?

Answ. 1. What I mean, he may if he please discern by what is here said, and in what sense infants may be said to be unchurched, and how it may be a mercy to them and others. 2. The damnation of themselves cannot be a mercy to wicked men when it is a benefit to the elect, because it never produceth them good: But the mercy to the catholick Church is a mercy to believers infants, 1. in that it frees them from legal burthens; 2. in that there is a near capacity and probability of the best good for them remaining in their parents or others godly families.

He adds. And what a strange reason is that of Mr. T. to say, It is a mercy, because their Churchstate was carnal, fleshly and agreeable to their minority; but ours is spiritual.] what is this to them that are put out of that carnal Churchstate, and kept out of this spiritual Churchstate too? If they had been admitted into this better state (as no doubt they are) then he had said somewhat. Else is not this as great a mercy to the poor cast Jews? They are put out of the carnal Churchstate too. But did God give so many admirable Elogies of the Jews Church; and can Mr. T. yet think that it is better to be of no visible Church, then to be of theirs?

Answ. I alledge the more spiritual Churchstate as one reason of Gods changing of churchmembership by birth into churchmembership by by faith, and as a mercy to the catholick Church; For thereby they are free from the bondage they were in under carnal ordinances, which infants are partakers of in actual poſſeſſion, and capable of the ſpirit, though they be not actually viſible churchmembers; and therefore it is not true that by my doctrine they are kept out of the ſpiritual churchſtate. And Mr. B. doth much miſtake, as if the carnal churchſtate the Jew had when Chriſt was come was a priviledge or benefit: For though many admirable Elogies were given by God of the Jews Church, yet none of them were given of it in Chriſts time, they were a rebellious and gainſaying people, a generation of vipers, denied the holy one, and the juſt, and deſired a murtherer, made the temple a den of theeves, &c. And therefore I verily think it was better then to be of no viſible Church, then to be of theirs. As for the Jews who believed not, they were juſtly put out of Gods favour, their temple was deſtroyed, and they caſt out of their land for denying Chriſt: Yet they were not put out of their carnal churchſtate actually; for they adhere to it unto this day, and it is their curſe.

4. Saith Mr. B. And where did Mr. T. learn in Scripture to call the Jews churchſtate carnal?

Anſw. From 1 Cor. 10. 18. where the nation of the Jews are called Iſrael after the fleſh, in contradiſtinction to the Iſrael of God or in the Spirit, Rom. 9. 6. Gal. 6. 16. From Rom. 2. 28, 29. where there is diſtinction of the Jew outwardly from the Jew inwardly, of Circumciſion, which is outward in the fleſh, from Circumciſion that is of the heart in the ſpirit, not in the letter. From Gal. 4. 25, 26, 23, 29. where Hieruſalem that then was is contradiſtingued to Hieruſalem above, and the former is in bondage with her children, the later free, the children of the former born after the fleſh, the later after the ſpirit. From Gal. 3. 3. where to be of faith is to begin in the ſpirit, to be of the works of the law is to be perfect by the fleſh. From Epheſ. 2. 11. where their circumciſion is termed circumciſion in the fleſh made by hands. From Philip. 3. 3, 4, 5. where Hebrew diſcent, and churchmembership thereby are termed the fleſh. From Heb. 9. 10. where their ordinances are termed carnal ordinances. I had thought this had been ſo well known to Mr. B. that it needed not proof.

But he further demands, "Or what doth he mean by churchſtate? "whether the eſſential nature of the Church it ſelf? or any carnal or- "dinances of worſhip which were accidental to it? Is not this word "[churchſtate] like his former of [church call] deviſed terms to "darken the matter with ambiguities, and ſignifying what pleaſeth the "ſpeaker.

Anſw. Neither the term [Church ſtate] nor [Church call] were deviſed by me, but are terms ordinary in the writings of Divines. I have ſhewed the uſe of the later before, and proved that the Church hath its denomination and definition from it, and that according to Mr. B. himſelf: And for the former, me thinks Mr. B. ſhould not be ignorant of it, who its likely knows a Book of learned Dr. uſher, intituled, De Chriſtianarum Eccleſiæ ſucceſſione & ſtatu. And to imagine it to be deviſed to darken the matter with ambiguities is one of Mr. Bs. evil surmises, when the word is as apposite for its use as any term I think Mr. B. can give in stead of it; and if it signifie what pleases the speaker, it is so much the better, for that is the use of words, and this later accusation acquits it from darkening the matter with ambiguities, if it signifie; for that which signifies the speakers mind doth give light, and not darken with ambiguities: So ridiculous is Mr. Bs. accusation, that his later words cross his former. And to help Mr. Bs. understanding if I can, I tell him I mean by it neither the essential nature of the Church it self, nor any carnal ordinances of worship which were accidental to it; but the manner of being or qualification incident to it from providence, whereby it is denominated flourishing or decaying, numerous or small, rich in knowledge or poor, carnal or spiritual by reason of the way of entry into it as natural descent or faith, more or less of the spirit, the promises, ministery, rites, &c. it hath. Which term [state] comprehends innumerable terms, such as are rich and poor, noble or ignoble, fat or lean, and many more; which whether they are to be reduced to the predicaments of quality, relation, or passion, or to be called modi entis I leave it to Logicians to determine, I hope this will serve to indoctrinate Mr. B. in the meaning of my speech. But Mr. B. is resolved to follow me with more questions, which he must not expect I will answer, as I have done, after it is bout.

5. Saith he, "And how long might I wait before Mr. T. would "prove from Scripture, that it is a mercy to the whole catholick "Church to have all infants put out or unchurched? These are the "men that make their followers believe that we have no Scripture for "our cause, when themselves give us but their magisterial dictates. "But I wonder whence he should fetch such a Dream. What? are "infants such Toads or Vipers in comparison of men of years, that "it is a mercy to the whole catholicke Church to have them cast "out? Are not the aged worse then they? And were we not once all "infants?

Answ. I say not that all infants are put out of the catholick Church, and so need not prove it; nor had I asserted it was it either in the Dispute or Sermon my work to prove what I said by way of answer, but for Mr. B. to disprove it. Yet what I assert is distinctly before set down, not without some proof from Scripture; and I may wait long afore either I shall finde his pretended ordinance of infant visible Churchmembership unrepealed proved from Scripture, or my assertions disproved by any solid arguments without idle questions, and vain exclamations, which I resolve to neglect. And of the former sort are the questions here, which insinuate as if I conceived it were a mercy to the catholick Church that infants are not in the visible Church Christian as members, because they are Toads, Vipers, worse then the aged; whereas I onely say, that the dissolving of the Jewish Church national (in which and by reason of which infants were visible Churchmembers, and no otherwise) was in mercy to the catholick Church: Which is the very doctrine of the Apostle, Rom. 11. 11, 12. that through their fall salva-

sion is come to the Gentiles, the fall of them is the riches of the world, the diminishing, decay or loss of them the riches of the Gentiles. Which happened not through the wickedness of infants above other men; but partly through the wickedness of the Jewish people (of which the infants were a part, and onely Churchmembers there, and while that nation were Gods Church;) partly through Gods contrivance, which was, that the Gentiles should have their course of mercy while the Jews were broken off, and at last both have mercy in their season.

Mr. B. goes on in his cavilling vein. If this doctrine be true, why may we not expect to be taught, that infants must also be cast out of heaven, in mercy to the whole catholick church?

Answ. Because we find no such taught by the Apostle as the other doctrine of mine concerning the mercy to the catholick Church is by breaking off the Jewish Church.

If it be (saith he) no carnal churchstate to have infants in heaven, why is it a carnal Churchstate which containeth infants in it on earth?

Answ. That any are infants in heaven its not likely. 2. If there should be, yet being fully sanctified, they should not be carnal, but spiritual, and the Church there onely consist of spiritual persons by spiritual regeneration; whereas if the Church Christian should consist of infant visible Churchmembers by carnal generation, the state of it would be carnal as the Jewish was, and not spiritual by faith, as the Scripture makes it, Joh. 1.12,13. & 3.5,6. Gal. 3.26,27.

Again, saith Mr. B. And if it be no benefit to the Catholike Church to have infants kept out of heaven, nor no hurt to the Church to see them there; why should it be a benefit to the whole church to have them kept on earth? or any hurt to the church to see them here members?

Answ. It were no hurt if God had so ordered it; their non-visible Christian Churchmembership is a benefit to the Catholike Church in the manner before said, because God hath so ordered it.

But yet (saith Mr. B.) let us come a little nearer; what ever it may be to enemies or to man-haters (of which sort the Church hath none) yet me thinks to those that are love as God is love, and that are merciful as their heavenly father is merciful, and who are bound to receive little children in Christs name, and who are become as children themselves; to such it should seem no such mercy to have all infants unchurched. But such are all true members of the Church; and therefore to the Church it can be no such mercy.

Answ. I wish it were true that the visible Church (of which we are speaking) hath no enemies or man-haters. It is not true that wee are bound to receive little children in Christs name; nor do I say that it is a mercy to have all infants unchurched, or that they are all unchurched; nor do I thank it true that all true members of the Church visible, are such as Mr. B. describes. But this I say, the non-visible Churchmembership Christian of infants is such a mercy as I describe, however it seem to the Church.

"But yet nearer; saith Mr. B. Whatsoever it may be to strangers, "yet me thinks to the parents it should seem no such mercy to have their "children put out of the Church: Hath God naturally planted such "tender affections in parents to their children? and doth grace increase "it? and the Scripture encourage it? and yet must they take it for a "mercy, that their children are put out? when Mr. T. will not say it is "a mercy to the children.

Answ. To the parents notwithstanding their natural affection, it is a mercy, and ought to seem a mercy, that God hath dissolved the Jewish National visible Churchmembership, and by consequent their infant visible Churchmembership, and hath freed them and their infants from the legal bondage, and hath out of all nations gathered his Church by preaching the Gospel, without admission of infants into the visible Church Christian. And surely if this reason were good, parents might complain that their children are not admitted to the Lords supper as the Jews children were to the Passeover.

"Yet further, saith he, why then hath God made such promises to "the parents for their seed? as if much of the parents comfort lay in the "welfare of the children; if it be a mercy to them that they are kept out "of the Church, may not this doctrine teach parents to give their chil-"dren such a blessing as the Jews did? His blood be on us and our chil-"dren. For their curse is to be broken off from the Church; and if that "be a mercy, the Jews are then happier then I take them to be: And how "can we then pray, that they may be graffed in again?

Answ. I find no promises in all the New Testament, much less Evangelical promises, made to believing parents for their seed, nor any whit of the comforts of parents in the New Testament in the welfare of their children, but in Christ and in the fellowship of the spirit, Phil. 2. v. Yea, whereas in the Old Testament most of the promises were of increase of children, their prosperity, rest and peace in their dwellings, &c. in the New Testament an unmarried estate, if without sin, is rather preferred as more happy, 1 Cor. 7. 14. and the poor and persecuted rather adjudged blessed then the rich and those that live in peace, Matth 5. 4, 10. However parents have as much comfort by my doctrine rightly understood, as they can have by Mr. B's. Nor doth it teach parents to curse their children as the Jews did. The curse of the Jews was not in being broken off from the Jewish Church national, but in being not in the Olive, that is the Church of true believers, but in the national Church Jewish; and that they were not broken off from it, was their unhappiness: and we are to pray, not that they may be graffed in again into the national Church Jewish, but into the invisible Church of true believers and elect persons.

6. Saith Mr. B. "But what if all this were true? Suppose it were "a mercy to the whole Church to have infants put out; yet it doth not "follow that God would do it. He is the God of infants, as well as of "the aged; and is mercifull to them as well as others; all souls are "his: He can shew mercy to the whole Church in an easier way then "by casting out all their infants: And his mercy is over all his "works.

Answ. God is the God of the spirits of all flesh, yet he hath not

mercy on all flesh; all souls are his, yet he did not take any one nation for his people besides the Jewish; his mercy is over all his works, yet he hath broken off the Jews from being his people; he is naturally mercifull, yet sheweth mercy freely as he will. I say not, he casteth out all infants of the Church out of the Church; yet sure if it were supposed a mercy to the whole Church to have infants put out, it seems to follow that God would do it, sith all things work for their good, and with his son he gives them all things, Rom. 8. 28, 32. 1 Cor. 3. 22, 23.

I will tell you, saith Mr. B. how Mr. T. followeth this with examples. He saith, [that the release of the Jews servants, and the consecration of the Nazarites and first-born, and the land of Canaan, were all priviledges, and yet these are taken away.] To which I answer: There are abundance far greater given in their stead: And what is that then to those that have nothing in their stead? Besides, if Mr. T. think that the mercy of Churchmembership is of as low a nature as to be Nazarites, or to have Canaan, he is much mistaken.

Answ. Not onely these, but other examples, as namely of the Priests and Levites children, who were by inheritance to attend at the Tabernacle, and to be nourished by the offerings, and to be Priests; instead of which, Ministers infants have now no particular mercy, they are not visibly in the order of Priests, as the infants of Aarons house were: Of the poor, who had tythes and corners of fields, and sheaves fallen, and other provision, and so had the stranger; do shew, that a mercy was taken away from infants of Israel, and no particular mercy in the same or the like kind given to infants of Christian people or Ministers in their stead. When Mr. B. shews what those abundance far greater mercies are, which are given in the stead of the release of the Hebrew servants even infants, the restoring their inheritances at the year of Jubilee, the consecration of Nazarites and first born even infants, the reckoning the children of the Priests as heirs to the priesthood, provision for them, the poor, the strangers; it is likely the same he alledgeth will serve to shew how infants visible Churchmembership is recompensed by the mercies now given to the whole Church and them. Nor do I think I am mistaken in counting the mercy of infants visible Churchmembership to be of as low a nature as to be consecrated as Nazarites, or the first born male which was to be presented to God, or to be reckoned by discent Priests; but am sure Mr. B. doth over value the Jewish infant visible Churchmembership, and thereby misleads himself and others: And therefore I desired him in my Letter to set down distinctly what was the benefit and priviledge of infant visible Churchmembership which he asserted; the refusal whereof (when he desired to have a copy of my Sermon, that he might (as his fashion is) cavil; rather then answer it) shews his unwillingness to have his tenet examined, that truth might appear.

He adds. But he saith [that it was a priviledge to the Jews to be owned as Gods people distinct from the rest of the world, while others were passed by, yet this is repealed in mercy to us Gentiles.] Answ. In my distinctions before you may find this answered. 1. Then it was no mercy to the Jews you think, but to the Gentiles: But our question is, whether it be a mercy to the unchurched infants? 2. The Jews being a Church and people of God, was a mercy; and this God took not from any of them, but those that cast it away: But the restriction of this to them, and the exclusion of the Gentiles, was no mercy to them, and this onely (with the ceremonial accidents) did God take away by the change of his laws. It would have been rather an addition to the happiness of the believing Jews, to have the Gentiles taken in, by taking down the partition wall: And so it will be when the Jews are graffed in again, and both made one body. If by else doth the Jewish Church pray for her little sister that had no breasts? And Noah pray, that God would perswade Japhet to dwell in the tents of Sem? Though the restriction therefore and the exclusion (which are no mercies to the Jews) be taken away, yet no mercy is taken from them, but what is supplied with a far greater in Christ: And though they partake not of these, yet that is because of their own unbelief, who reject it, and not because the new law doth exclude them: For God hath in his new law or Covenant made a deed of gift of Christ and all his benefits, to all that will receive him, whether Jew or Gentile, without excluding or excepting any. And for his denying to particular persons the grace of conversion, that is nothing to our present business, as belonging to decree, and not to any change in the laws: And it was denied to many before Christ, and granted to many thousands Jews since Christ; and shall be at last to far more.

Answ. The vanity of his distinctions is shewed before; the repeal of the priviledge of the Jews mentioned was in mercy to the Jew believer, though chiefly to the Gentiles, and the infants of both, but in justice to the Jewish nation. The Jews being a Church and people of God, was a mercy, and to be the onely nation that were Gods people, was an aggravation of it: and this God took away from believers, they were put out of the Jewish Church national, *Joh.*9.22. It was a mercy that the Jews were the onely nation God took for his people, and this God did take away, not by change of his laws, though that followed, but by his severity, *Rom.*11.22. breaking off that nation from the Olive. It would have been a happiness to the believing Jews, to have had the Gentiles taken in without dissolving the national Church Jewish, if God had thought it good; but he otherwise determining, it was a mercy to the catholick Church, that they were dissolved. If no mercy be taken from them, but what is supplied with a far greater in Christ; then Christ in the flesh is, instead of the Jewish Church national, and consequently of the infants visible Churchmembership therein, a far greater mercy, which I said before, and Mr. B. gainsaid. That in Gods new Covenant there's no deed of gift of Christ but to the elect, is proved before.

Mr. B. ends thus. And thus you have heard all that Mr. T. upon deliberation hath said to this argument. And yet (would any man think it?) he concludeth that [that this abundant clear answer to all alledged from the visible Churchmembership of the children of the Jews.] O never let my soul be tainted with this errour, which so strangely bereaves men of common ingenuity!

Answ.

Answ. Let my answer and Mr. Bs. argument be compared, and the Reader judge of our ingenuity. I for my part hope and pray that God will never leave me to be carried away with such frivolous reasonings as these of Mr. B. are.

SECT. LXV.

Mr. Bs. Argum. from Matth. 23. 37. Revel. 11. 15. for infants visible Churchmembership Ch. 12, 13. are answered.

I Have answered Mr. Bs. 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th. Chapters of the first part of his Book of Baptism in this Review, Part. 1. Sect. 6, 7, 8, 9. I think it not needful as yet to make reply to the exceptions against my answers, and therefore go on to answer Mr. Bs. 12th. Chapt. which begins thus.

"My 7th. Arg. shall be drawn from Matth. 23. 37, 38, 39. From "whence I argue thus; If Christ were so tender over Jerusalem that he "would have gathered them as a Hen gathereth her Chickens, then "surely he would not have put them or their infants out of the Church "(or repealed the merciful gift and ordinance of their Churchmem-"bership. But Christ was so tender of them, that he would have so ga-"thered Jerusalem, &c. Therefore sure hee would not have unchur-"ched their infants. The antecedent is the words of the Lord Jesus: "The reason and strength of the consequence lieth here. 1. It is not "some particular Jews that Christ would have gathered to himself (and "so into his Church as accomplished with higher privileges then be-"fore:) but it was Jerusalem, whole Jerusalem (which is usually put "for all Judea and the Jewish Nation) now if Jerusalem were gathe-"red, then infants must needs be gathered. I know nothing of any mo-"ment that can be said against this; but leave it to any tender consci-"ence to judge, whether it be likely that Christ should have unchur-"ched all their infants, when he would have gathered to himself the "whole nation, or whole Jerusalem. If that contemptible answer "should here bee again returned [that Christ would have gathered "them onely into the invisible Church] I have answered it before; "they that are visibly or apparently gathered into the invisible Church, "are gathered also thereby into the visible: And if all Jerusalem had "been gathered, it had been doubtless a visible gathering: O that I "could see as clear evidence for many other controverted truths, as I "see in these words of the Lord Jesus, to convince me, that hee would "have gathered all Jerusalem into his visible Church, and consequent-"ly not have unchurched all their infants; I should tremble to think "of resisting so plain testimonies of God. If Christs own words will "not serve, I know not what will. If any say, that by Jerusa-"lem is meant onely the aged of Jerusalem; I answer: It is "vain to call for Scripture if they dare contradict it at pleasure;

" or ſo make it ſpeak onely what they liſt. It is not fully a nation or " City without the infants. Beſides, Jeruſalem had inchurched infants " when Chriſt ſo ſpake; therefore how could his words be otherwiſe un- " derſtood by them, unleſs hee had exeepted infants. 2. Yet further, " Chriſt doth not in vain uſe the ſimilitude of a Hen gathering her " Chickens; The Hen gathereth the youngeſt moſt tenderly: Yea " how long will ſhe ſit the very Egs? Now who dare expound this thus? " As a Hen gathereth her young ones under her wings, ſo I would " have gathered the aged of you, but none of your young ones vi- " ſibly. 3. And doth not their leaving of their houſe deſolate, " mean the Temple, and ſo the unchurching them, till they ſay, " Bleſſed is hee that commeth in the Name of the Lord: and then " Jeruſalem (and therefore infants) ſhall bee inchurched again? " So CHRIST JESUS himſelf hath made me believe that he " would have gathered all Jeruſalem, but unchurched none of them.

Anſw. It is not CHRIST JESUS, but Mr. Bs. own ſhallowneſs or prejudice that makes him believe that here is any thing for infants viſible Churchmembership. That Jeruſalem is uſually put for all Judea and the Jewiſh nation, is more then I finde. But that by Jeruſalem and her children are not meant infants, is apparent from the text. 1. They are meant by Jeruſalem who killed and ſtoned them that were ſent, but they were not infants, Ergo. 2. Becauſe the way whereby Chriſt would have gathered Jeruſalem was by preaching the Goſpel to them, as is manifeſt 1. in that hee uſed no other way. 2. This was the way which he often attempted, which is implied in the phraſe, how often would I? 3. This is the way they refuſed, implied in the phraſe [and ye would not] that is, yee would not obey my admonitions of repentance nor believe the Goſpel; and ſo Piſcator annal. loci ſæpiſſimè & benigniſſimè à me admoniti, non tamen obtemperare voluiſtis. 4. From verſ. 34. 35. where the way by which hee would have gathered them, ſeems to bee by ſending Prophets, and wiſe men, and Scribes or Apoſtles Luk. 11. 49. to them, which were not ſent to infants. How oft would I have gathered? That is (ſay ſome) by the external miniſtery of the Prophets ſent unto thee, verſ. 34, 35. Trap. on Matth. 23. 37. 5. The often attempt of gathering here, is the ſame with the viſitation, or over ſight Luke 19. 44. as the agreement of the expreſſions and matter in both places compared evidently ſhews, now that was by teaching, Luke 1. 78, 79. And thus the New Annot. Of thy viſitation] as if he had ſaid in thy viſitation, in which God manifeſted himſelf in my perſon offering thee mercy. 6. Thus Proteſtant Divines often expound it, anſwering Arminians and others, inferring hence reſiſtability of converting grace by mans free-will; as Diodati in his annot. on Matth. 23. 37. expreſſeth their minde, wee muſt of neceſſity underſtand this to bee meant of the diſpenſation of outward means by the word exhortations, commandments, &c. Now it cannot be ſaid that Chriſt would have this way gathered the infants of Jeruſalem, for hee had ſaid heoften by his own, and Prophets and Apoſtles preaching would or attempted to do it. But this he would not nor attempted to do to infants, Ergo, they are not meant under the term [Jerusalem.] 3. This is proved also from the end of his gathering, which was, that they might bee his Disciples, but hee never would or did gather any infants to him as his Disciples, Ergo. 4. It is proved also thus. Those onely are meant by Jerusalem, whom Christ would have gathered but they would not: But this cannot be said of infants, that they would not, there was no nilling of Conversion in them, Ergo. 5. They are meant by Jerusalem who are meant by the City Luk. 19. 41. and there they are meant, who v. 42. might have known in that their day the things belonging to their peace, but then they were hid from their eyes, who knew not the time of their visitation, v. 44. But this is not meant of infants, Ergo.

In answer therefore to Mr. Bs. argument altering the termes [put out, unchurch, which my doctrine doth not assert] into [reveal the ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership, or leave out of his visible Church] I deny the consequence of his major, and deny that which he alledgeth for proof of it, that by Jerusalem is meant all the people of Jerusalem, even the infants. And to his wish, I return a wish, O that I could see as clear evidence for many other controverted truths, as I see in these words to convince me that Christ means not infants by those he would have gathered unto him, and though I would not have Mr. B. of any man to turn Quaker, yet I think he should rather tremble at the allegation of this text so impertinent to his purpose, and not understand by [Jerusalem] Synecdochically the persons of years. Nor would this be any more to contradict the Scripture at pleasure, or to make it speak onely what we list, then for him to understand by [Jerusalem] Synecdochically (as he doth) the Jewish nation, or by [Jerusalem] to understand meronymically the people, even the infants of the City. To make the interpreting of speeches by tropes a contradicting them, or making them speak what they list is such a foolery, as I should rather have imagined to have come from some woman or Lay-preacher, then from a man of such magnified learning as Mr. B. is, had I not found it printed in his Book. As for what he saith, it is not fully a nation or city without infants, though it were true (as it is not) yet that proves not that infants are meant in every speech of a nation or city, any more then Matth. 24.7. infants shall rise against infants, because nation shall rise against nation, or Matt. 21.10. infants were moved saying, who is this? because the whole city was moved, saying, who is this? And hereby it may be seen how easily Christ might be understood without including infants, and so much the more easily, because though infants were in the Jewish Church, yet Christ who spake not of gathering into the Jews Church, but to himself (in whose visible Church were no infants) might be the more readily conceived to except infants, yea if he had meant infants could not be well understood by them. And for his challenge, I answer, I dare thus expound his gathering, of gathering onely the aged into his visible Church, if Mr. B. imagine (as he doth) the similitude of a Hen to be used in vain if infants be not meant, because the Hen gathereth the youngest, by this reason Christ should use the similitude in vain if he would gather any other then infants, ſith the hen gathereth not hens and old cocks under her wings, but onely little chickens. Me thinks by leaving their houſe deſolate, Mr. B. ſhould not mean the unchurching them. For then it will follow, that all the Jewiſh nation were unchurched (for ſo he will have meant by Jeruſalem) which will overthrow many of his conceits about making Jewiſh and Gentile Churches one body, the ſame. the Church not broken off, &c. and prove afore he is aware the repeal of his pretended ordinance of infants viſible Churchmemberſhip. But enough of the ſilly inſipid arguings (if I may uſe his language) of this Chapter, let's ſee whether the next have any better.

"Ch. 13. My 8th. arg. ſaith Mr. B. is from Rev. 11. 15. If the "Kingdoms of this world, either are or ſhal be the Kingdoms of the Lord "and his Chriſt; then infants alſo muſt be members of his Kingdom: "(and conſequently the gift and ordinance for their churchmemberſhip "is not repealed.) But the antecedent is the words of the text. What "can be ſaid againſt this that is ſenſe or reaſon? If they ſay, that by "[Kingdoms] is meant [ſome part of the Kingdoms] excluding all in-"fants: I ſay ſuch men need not look into the Scripture for their faith: "They may make their own Creed on theſe terms, let Scripture ſay what "it will: I know ſome places of Scripture may be produced, where the "word Kingdom and Jeruſalem, &c. is taken for a part: but if wee "muſt take words always improperly, becauſe they are ſo taken ſome-"time, then wee ſhall not know how to unde ſtand any Scripture, "and humane language will become uſeleſs; and by this any man may "put by any Teſtimony of Scripture, though it were to prove the moſt "fundamental truth: As the Arrians put off all teſtimonies for the God-"head of Chriſt, becauſe Magiſtrates are called Gods. But the circum-"ſtances of this text do evince to us, that Chriſt ſpeaketh properly "of whole Jeruſalem and whole Kingdoms, and not improperly of any "part onely.

"2. If they ſay, that [by Kingdom of Chriſt] is not meant the "Church of Chriſt, they then ſpeak againſt the conſtant phraſe of the "Scripture; which cals Chriſts Kingdom his Church and Converſim: "Chriſt is King and Saviour of the ſame ſociety. What is Chriſts "Kingdom but his Church? I know the Kingdome of Chriſt is more "large and more ſpecial: but here it cannot be meant of his Kingdom in "the larger ſenſe, as he is de jure, onely King (in regard of voluntā-"ry obedient ſubjects) nor as hee over ruleth common ſocieties and "things: For ſo the Kingdoms of the world were ever the Kingdoms of "the Lord and his Chriſt, and it could not be ſaid that now they are "become ſo. So that for any thing I can ſee, this text alone were ſuf-"ficient to decide the controverſie, whether infants muſt bee Church-"members.

Anſw. 1. I think this may bee ſaid with ſenſe and reaſon, yea and clear evidence out of the text, that by [Kingdoms of the world, Kingdoms of our Lord and his Chriſt, or as ſome copies have it, the Kingdom of the world is become] is not meant the men or members of either Kingdoms, and ſo neither infant, nor adult perſons, but the dominion, power, rule it ſelf which the men of the world had uſurped, chiefly Antichriſt, which was Chriſts before of right, but not till then become his by actual, full, and peaceable poſſeſſion, his enemies or the chief of them being not till then ſubdued, but tyranizing over his ſubjects. And though I confeſs the term connotes men over whom Chriſt ſhould have rule, yet the perſons over whom Chriſt ſhould rule then, were not onely the Church, but alſo his enemies, whom he ſhould ſubdue, and keep under, and judge, *Revel.*2 16,27. That by [Kingdome] is meant Rule, is manifeſt from many places, *Matth.*6.10,13. John 18.36. *Heb.*1.8. ſo *Revel.*17.17,18. And that this is the meaning here, ſeems to me to be manifeſt, 1. from that which is added, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever; which being the conſequent of the Kingdome or Kingdomes of the world becomming our Lords and his Chriſt, it ſhews, that the Kingdomes note the rule or dominion whereby he reigns, not the perſons over whom he reigns. 2. The ſame is confirmed from *v.*17. where the ſame thing is expreſſed in thoſe words, we give thee thanks, O Lord God almighty, which art, and waſt, and art to come, becauſe thou haſt taken to thee thy great power, and haſt reigned: And wherein that is, is expreſſed *v.*18, in judging all, rewarding his ſervants, deſtroying the corrupters of the earth. 3. From *ch.*12.10. where again the ſame or like thing is expreſſed thus, Now is come ſalvation and ſtrength or power and the Kingdome of our God, and the power or authority of his Chriſt; for the accuſer of our brethren is caſt down: Where Kingdome and power are put together, to ſhew, that by the Kingdome is not meant the perſons over whom the rule is, but the rule it ſelf. 4. It is ſo to be underſtood where it is mentioned as I conceive in the ſenſe meant *Revel.*11.15. as namely 1 *Cor.*15.24. 2 *Tim.*4.1. and other places. 5. Thus Diodati in his *Annot. on Revel.*11.15. The Kingdomes] that is to ſay, Now God reigneth with his ſon, and that abſolutely having ſubdued all his enemies. 1 *Cor.*15.24. that I omit others. 6. This ſenſe is the more confirmed, if it be read as ſome copies have it, the Kingdome of this world is become. On the other ſide Mr. Bs. interpretation ſeems to me either not ſenſe, or not true. For then it ſhould be thus, All the Kingdomes of the world, that is every perſon in the world, ſhould be Chriſts Church, that is, a ſociety of perſons ſeparated from the world to God, or called out of the world, &c. as he defines the Church, of Baptiſm, pag. 82. Now can this be good ſenſe to be all the world, the Kingdomes of the world, and to be called or ſeparated from or out of the world? Can all the world be ſeparated from the world? And there is no truth in this interpretation, ſuch it never was nor ſhall be, that the kingdomes of the world, that is, every perſon old and young in all the kingdomes of the world, ſhall become Chriſts Church. For then Chriſt ſhould have no enemies to remove out of his Kingdome, contrary to the Parable, *Matth.*13.30. expounded *v.*38,39,40,41,42. Now if this be the ſenſe, then it makes nothing for infants viſible Churchmembership, nor by [kingdomes] is all the members of a kingdome meant, and ſo infants, but both the conſequence of Mr. Bs. major is juſtly denied, and the inference from the conſequent of it. For if it be meant of

Christs rule (as the texts shew) though it connote the persons over whom the rule is, yet they are not thereby proved Churchmembers; for in the sense there meant, the rule or reign is over enemies as well as subjects: Yea, if the reign were over subjects, and infants comprehended, yet sith the reign over them is onely invisible, this cannot prove Infants visible Churchmembers.

Nor are Mr. Bs. reasons of any force to prove that *Revel.*11.15. by the kingdome of Christ must be meant the Church. For it is not true, that the constant phrase of Scripture calls Christs Kingdome his Church and Conversim. For though I deny not that the Church is termed the kingdome of Christ, yet I deny this is the constant phrase of Scripture to call the kingdome of Christ the Church, much less Conversim. The places alledged before, with many more, do evince the contrary; yea, there appear to me but few places wherein the Church is termed the kingdome of Christ. I am not yet fully resolved, that it is any where so meant, except in that *Matth.*13.41. though I deny not the fitness of the expression.

Nor doth his reason hold, that here it cannot be meant of Christs Kingdome in the largest sense, as he over-ruleth common societies and things; For though it be true, that in some sort so the Kingdomes of the world were ever his, that is, he did always so order them, that they passively did his will; yet it is certain, that in the reign of Antichrist the kingdomes of the world, that is, the rule which was exercised was not actively for God or Christ, but as it is expresly said, Revel 13.4. They worshipped the Dragon who gave power to the beast, blasphemed God, made war with the saints, overcame them; the beast had power over all kindreds and tongues and nations, so that all that dwelt on the earth should worship him, whose names were not written in the Lambs book of life: and so they gave their Kingdome to the beast, *Revel.*17.12,13,14,17. though they did Gods will But after the Lamb overcame them, v. 14. and the Kingdomes of the world were his, when the Kings did hate the whore, and make her desolate, &c. So that this may well be expounded thus, the Kingdomes of the world, that is, the rule which the Kings of the world have exercised for the Whore shall be so changed, that whether out of revenge of the mischiefs the Whore hath done them, or out of love to Christ, they shall hate her, and execute Christs doom upon her, which was not always done. And it seems a piece of inconstancy in Mr. B. who would not have the kingdomes of the world taken for a part in the forepart of this chapter, and yet denies it to be taken in the largest sense in the later part. And how the infant Churchmembership of Christians can be gathered from the terme, Kingdomes of the world becomming Christs, more then any others, I see not. But I proceed.

2. Suppose it were granted, that by the Kingdomes of Christ were meant men, and the Church of Christ, *Revel.*11.15. yet sure it is far more likely that by the Kingdome of Christ should be meant the invisible, then the visible Church. For the invisible Church either solely or chiefly is called the kingdome of Christ, and he is stiled the King of Saints;

Revel.

Rev. 15. 3. and Mr. B. saith here, Christ is King and Saviour of the same society. But in this sense I should grant the conclusion, that infants must be members of Christs Kingdome. And surely the visible Church-members who are not true believers, have not Christ to rule over them, but are enemies to Christ, and Satans subjects, and therefore not truly but putatively onely in Christs kingdome, nor they any part of it. They are not children of the kingdome, Matth. 13. 38.

3. But were it granted that Revel. 11. 15. is meant the visible Church, yet that therefore infants must bee a part of it, because they are a part of a Kingdome follows not, for Mr. B. saith, I know some places of Scripture may be produced where the word Kingdome and Jerusalem, &c. is taken for a part. Which is enough to shew that the argument is not good which he useth, For it must rest on this proposition, where Jerusalem is mentioned there all Jerusalem is meant, where Kingdomes are meant whole Kingdomes are meant, and therefore infants: which propositions are contradicted by Mr. B. himself, and therefore if the whole controversie were referred to these two texts Matth. 22. 37. Rev. 11. 15. to decide, Mr. Bs. cause would be lost for want of proof, even from his own confession. Nor doth Mr. B. produce any thing to prove that by [Kingdoms Revel. 11. 15.) is meant the whole of a Kingdome even the infants, but onely prattles that which me thinks a learned man should be ashamed of. For there is no colour of reason to charge them who expound [Kingdom] by a Synecdoche of the whole for a part, with making their own Creed without Scripture, taking words alwayes in an improper sense, making humane language useless, putting by any Scripture such as are produced for Christs Godhead, when he himself saith it is sometimes in Scripture so taken, and gives no proof of its being taken otherwise here. Yea, by rejecting such exposition without reason Mr. B. may be more truely said to make his own Creed without Scripture, to make the Scripture unintelligible, humane language useless, to fortifie Biddle and other deceivers, in their gross opinions of the Anthropomorphites, and others, insomuch that I think if the Arians were refuted no better then Mr. B. doth here the expounding of Kingdoms and Jerusalem synecdochically, Arianism would quickly prevail, and errours easily take, especially with Schollers.

4. Lastly, were it granted that by [Kingdoms] were meant the visible Church; and that infants were a part of the Kingdom thus meant, yet this very text, and that according to Mr Bs. own reasoning would prove the repeal of their Churchmembership till the accomplishment of the thing meant Rev. 11. 15. which whether it be yet, or shall be till the day of judgement is very uncertain, For Mr. B. here reasons thus, it cannot be meant of Christs kingdom in the larger sense for so the kingdoms of the world were ever the kingdoms of the Lord and his Christ, and it could not be said that now they are become so. In like manner I may say, if the visible Churchmembership of infants were meant Rev. 11. 15. then it was not so before the 7th. trumpet sounded; for it is said, then the kingdoms of the world were become the kingdoms of Christ, if they were then become they were not before, and consequently infants visible churchmembership not before.

Now when the 7th. trumpet sounded is uncertain; Mr. Brightman makes it to begin at Qu. Elizabeths reign, the New Annotations when Antichrist is weakened, Mr. Mede at the imperial reign of Christ in the great day of judgement, which v. 17, 18. do favour. And if infants be not visible Churchmembers till then, when perhaps there shall be no infants at all, Mr. B. will have but a very cold suit of it, if the deciding of the whole controversie, whether infants must be Churchmembers, be referred to this text alone. But enough, it not too much of these ridiculous though confident allegations of Mr. B.

SECT. LXVI.

Mr. Bs. 9th, 10th, 12 Arg. concerning infants better condition in the N. T. in his 14th, 15th, 16th, Chapters part. 1. of Bapt. to prove their visible Churchmembership, are answered.

"CHap. 14. saith Mr. B. my 9th. arg. is this: If the believing Jews "children (and consequently the parents in point of comfort) be not "in a worse condition since Christ, then they were before, then their "children ought still to be Churchmembers. (And consequently the gift "and ordinance is not repealed.) But certainly the believing Jewes "children (and consequently the parents in point of comfort) are not "in a worse condition since Christ then they were before: Therefore "their children ought still to bee Churchmembers. The antecedent I "scarce take him for a Christian that will deny. Christ did not come "to make believers or their children miserable, or to undo them, or to "bring them into a worse condition. This were to make Christ a de-"stroyer, and not a Saviour. Hee that came not to destroy mens lives "but to save them, came not destroy mens happiness but to recover "them. He that would not accuse the adulterous woman, will not cast "out all infants without accusation. 2. The consequence a man would "think should be out of doubt: If it be not, I prove it thus: it is a far "worse condition to be out of the visible Church then to be in it: there-"fore if the believing Jews children be cast out of the Church then they "are in a far worse condition then they were before: (and so Christ "and faith should do them a mischief, which were blasphemy to i-"magine.)

Answ. If Mr. B. had set down, as I desired him in my Letter, what the benefit, or priviledge is of infant visible Churchmembership which he asserts unrepealed, and what infants lose by not being in the Christian Church visible, the Reader with my self might have considered this argument more exactly: But till that be done, no man can exactly tell how to compare their former and later conditions wherein they are better or worse, nor how from the equall goodness of their condition their Churchmembership is interred. And for my part, I think such kind of arguings as these, to infer things that onely are by Divine inſtitution, are meer devices of mens wit, and Mr. B. in uſing them (as indeed they are his onely ſtrength he hath in this point, for all the texts hee brings are quite from the matter, and ſome ſo manifeſtly impertinent, that a good text man would bee aſhamed ever to produce them as hee doth) doth but ſhew that he reſts more on popular arguments which moves mens affections then Scripture proofs, though moſt deceitfully like an Impoſtor he entitle his Book, Plain Scripture proof of infants Churchmemberſhip and Baptiſm, when there is not a text that is plain for it, ſcarce any that hath any ſhew of it. But leſt this argument be thought unanſwerable, I ſhall examine it. A worſe of a better condition are comparative terms, and as Ariſtotle ſaith in his Categ. περὶ πρός τι nothing is ſaid to bee great or ſmall by it ſelf, but as compared with another, ſo nothing is better or worſe by it ſelf, but as compared with another. It is neceſſary then that we examine the eſtate of believing Jewes children before and ſince Chriſts comming: The eſtate of the believing Jewes children before Chriſt, may be conceived to bee either in actual poſſeſſions or in promiſes. In actual poſſeſſions they had this priviledge, that they were a part of that nation which was then Gods people, ſeparated from other people by circumciſion, lawes, temple, inheritance in Canaan, prieſthood, and the children of the prieſts had this priviledge, that the males were to ſucceed in the prieſthood, and their children to be nouriſhed of the tithes, offerings, firſtfruits, the poor by a tithe and other wayes. The promiſes were either of ſpecial priviledge, as that Chriſt ſhould come out of that nation, or of temporal bleſſings, as that while they kept Gods laws they ſhould dwell in Canaan and proſper there, or of ſaving bleſſings. Theſe did belong onely to ſome believing Hebrews children, not to all, to Iſaac not to Iſhmael, to Jacob not to Eſau, the reſt were onely temporal benefits, and were accompanied with a yoke of lawes and rites intollerable. The children of believing Jewes condition ſince Chriſt, is either in reſpect of ſaving bleſſings, and ſo it is either the ſame which was before, or better in reſpect of the eaſier way of comming to the knowledge of Chriſt, in reſpect of the temporals. So it is in ſome reſpect worſe, they are liable more to perſecution with their parents, in ſome reſpects better, in that they with their parents are exempt from the legal bon age, which they and their parents as part of that nation or viſible Church were obnoxious to. So that in ſome ſenſe the antecedent or minor is granted, in ſome ſenſe denied, without fear of forfeiting my Chriſtianity.

And to Mr. Bs. proofs I anſwer, Chriſt did come to make Jew believers children in ſome reſpect, that is, of their temporal enjoyments in Canaan miſerable, or under perſecution, and ſo in a worſe condition, and yet he is thereby no deſtroyer of mans happineſs, but a Saviour of them, this worſe condition working for their eternal good. Nor is it any abſurdity to ſay, he that would not accuſe the adulterous woman, would leave out of his viſible Church Chriſtian all infants without accuſation, ſith this leaving out was onely an act of Soveraignty as a Lord, not of punitive juſtice as a Judge.

But the consequence is that which I denied before and now also, and to his proof I give the same answer, which he thus exagitates.

Can you imagine what shift is left against this plain truth? I will tell you all that Mr. T. could say (before many thousand witnesses I think) and that is this, He saith plainly, That it is a better condition to infants to be out of the Church now, then in it then which I thought a Christian could scarse have believed. 1. Are all those glorious things spoken of the City of God, and is it now better to be out of any Church then in it?

Answ. It is no shift but a plain truth, which if there had been many more witnesses, I should still avouch as part of my faith, and mee thinks if Mr. B. be a Christian, and not a Jew, hee should believe it too. For were not the Jews infants by their visible Churchmembership bound to be circumcised, and to keep Moses Law? was not this an heavie and intollerable yoke? Is it not a mercy to be freed from it? What real Evangelical promise or blessing do infants of believing Jews now lose, by not being Christian visible Churchmembers? I challenge Mr. B. to shew me any one particular real Evangelical blessing, which doth not as well come to an infant of a believer unbaptized, or non-admitted to visible Churchmembership as to the baptized, or admitted, or any true cause of discomfort to parents by my doctrine, which is not by his own. Dare he say, that the promises of saving grace, or protection, or other blessings, are not belonging to them because unbaptized, not admitted visible Churchmembers? If he dare not, let him forbear to calumniate my doctrine as unchristian, and tragically to represent it as cruel, and uncomfortable to parents, and so not like a solid disputant or judicious Divine cleer truth, but like an Orator raise passion without judgement, and endeavour to make me and that which is a plain truth odious, which course will at last redound to his shame, if it do not pierce his conscience. I said not as Mr. Bs. question intimates, that it is now better to be out of any Church then it, but that it is a better condition to infants to bee out of the Church now, then to be in it then, meaning that nonvisible Churchmembership to infants now is a better condition then visible Churchmembership was to them then. And for that passage, that glorious things are spoken of the City of God, to prove the contrary it is ridiculously alledged. For that speech is meant of Jerusalem, or Sion preferred before all the dwellings of Jacob, Psal. 87. 1, 2, 3. not of all the Jewish Church, and to it may be well opposed that of the Apostle Gal. 4. 25. Hierusalem which is now in bondage with her children, which proves my position.

Mr. B. adds. 2. Then the Gentiles, Pagans infants now, are happier then the Jews were then; for the Pagans and their infants are out of the Church?

Answ. It follows not from my position, which was of Christian believers infants with those promises and probabilities they have, and from thence followes not that Pagans infants out of the Church without those promises and probabilities Christian believers infants have, are happier then the Jews were then.

But, saith he, I were best to argue it a little further. 3. If it be a better condition to be in that Covenant with God wherein he bindeth himself to be their God, and taketh them to be his peculiar people, then to be out of that Covenant, then it is a better condition to be in the Church as it was then, then to be out of that and this too: But it is a better condition to be in the aforesaid Covenant with God, then out of it: Therefore it is better to be in the Church as then to be in neither. The antecedent is undeniable: The consequence is clear in these two conclusions; 1. That the inchurched Jews were then all in such a Covenant with God: This I proved, Deut. 29.11,12. what Mr. T. vainly saith against the plain words of this Text, you may see in the end. 2. There is to those that are now out of the Church no such covenant, assurance, or mercy answerable. If there be, let some body shew it: which I could never get Mr. T. to do Nay he seemeth to confess in his Sermon, that infants now have no priviledge at all in stead of their churchmembership.

Answ. If the Covenant be meant (as I have proved before, Sect. 64. it is) of the Covenant of the Law concerning settling them in Canaan if they kept the law of Moses, then the antecedent is not undeniable; but it is most true, that the condition of believers and their children now with the exhibition of Christ, the promises and probabilities they have of saving knowledge of Christ and salvation by him, is better out of the aforesaid Covenant with God then in it. But the consequence was also denied, because Mr. B. means the Covenant of grace: And if it be meant of the Covenant of Evangelical grace, neither of his conclusions are true; nor is the former proved from Deut. 29.11,12. For if it were true, that all that did stand there before the Lord did enter into covenant, yet they were not therefore in the covenant wherein God bindeth himself to be their God. Their entring into covenant was by their promise to obey God, which they might do, and yet not be in the covenant wherein God bindeth himself to be their God, sith Gods promise is not to them that enter into covenant, but to them that keep it; yea, if it were that they were in that covenant, yet that covenant did not put any into a happy condition but those that kept Gods laws, it being made conditionally, and so not all the inchurched Jews were in that covenant wherein God bindeth himself to be their God. Yea, if it were as Mr. B. would have it, that the promise of being their God were meant of Evangelical grace; yet according to his Doctrine it is upon condition of faith, and so it is either universal to all in or out of the Church, or to none but those who are believers, who were not all the inchurched Jews. Nor is the second conclusion true; there is the same covenant of Evangelical grace made to infants who are now no visible churchmembers as was then, to the elect now as was then, to whom alone it was made then and now. And as for mercy answerable to visible churchmembership of infants, enough is said here, Sect. 64.

Mr. B. adds. 4. I argue from Rom. 3.1. what advantage hath the Jew, and what profit the circumcision? much every way, &c. If the Jews circumcised inchurched infants had much advantage every way, and those without without the Church have none; then it is better be in their Church then without the Church: But the former is plain in the Text; therefore the later is certain.

Answ. The advantage the Jew had, was when they were the people of God above them who were heathen infidels, not above Christian believers: Now it is true, that it was better to be in their Church, then to be without the Church, as heathen infidels and their children were, But this doth not prove what is to be proved, that the condition of Jews infants in their Church visible, is better then of Christian believers infants now no visible Churchmembers. Nevertheless the speech of the Apostle is not meant of Jew infants; for the instance he gives of committing to them the Oracles of God, is not true of the infants; and therefore it is denied, that Mr. Bs. anteceedent is plain in the text in respect of the forepart of it: And it is false also, that the infants of Christians, though not Christian visible churchmembership, have no such advantage as the Jews had; For in this thing the advantage of the Christians infant is more then of the Jews, sith the Scriptures being now more common and better cleared, they may sooner know them then the Jews infants could

5. Saith he, Again from Rom.9.4. I argue thus: If then to the Jews pertained the adoption, the covenants, the promises, &c. but no such thing to them without the Church; then it is worse to be out of the Church, then to be in it as they were: But the former is the words of the Holy Ghost; therefore the consequent is certain.

Answ. The consequence is denied, For if this were true, it would as well prove it to have been a better condition to be in the visible Church Jewish then, then to be in the Christian Church visible now. For now those things expressed *Rom.*9.4,5. belong not to them who are in the visible Church Christian; yea, it is now Christ is come the benefit of the Church to be freed from them, I mean some of them, as the services which were in sacrifices, &c. the glory which was the Ark, the Covenants, to wit, the Tables of stone, the adoption which excluded the Gentiles from being Gods people; and concerning the other three, the giving of the Law, discent from the Fathers, Christs consanguinity, they are such as cannot be to any other, and are all recompensed abundantly by the comming of Christ, the gift of the Spirit, preaching of the Gospel, without infants visible churchmembership. And therefore though there be no such thing as those things mentioned, *Rom.*9.4,5. to them that are out or in the visible Church Christian, yet there are better things to Christians, which make their condition, and their infants not actually visible churchmembers, better then the Jewish churchstate at the best.

6. Saith he, If it be bettter to be in Gods house and family then out, and in his visible Kingdome then out; then it is better to be in the Church (though but as the Jews were) then out: But the former is evident; therefore the latter.

Answ. It is true, it is better to be in Gods house and family then out, and so infants may be though they be not in the Christian Church visible;

ble; and though they be not in Christs visible Kingdome, yet they may be in his invisible, which is most truly his Kingdome and house, and this estate is better then to be in the Jewish Church visible. But it was not better with infants by vertue of their visible churchmembership, then it is with believers infants without it, sith they are freed from the yoke of bondage the Jews were under, and have equal portion, if not more of Evangelical grace then they had, and therefore the consequence is denied.

7. Saith Mr. B. If it be better to be a sanctified peculiar people of God, then to be none such (but an excluded common unclean people;) then it is better to be in the Church (though but as the Jews were) then out of the Church: But the former is most certain; therefore the later. The consequence is plain, in that all the Church, both Jews and Gentiles are properly a peculiar people separated or sanctified to God; and so are they still called in the Old Testament and New: And therefore those without the Church must needs be an excluded people (even as election of some implieth passing by or rejecting of others;) and therefore are called common and unclean frequently.

Answ. This being understood of the visible Church, it is false that those without the Church visible must needs be an excluded people from God; for then all abortives, and still born children, persons dying without signs sensible of faith and repentance though before God believers, excommunicate persons should be excluded from God. And as for Mr. Bs. proof, that the Church are properly a peculiar people separated or sanctified to God, this cannot be true in reality (which must make their condition better) but onely of those who are of the invisible also, of which infants may be, though not of the visible; of the rest it is true onely in appearance, which makes their condition not better in the Church, but worse then of those without, sith the odiousness of their hypocrisie provokes God against them the more, though cloaked from men by their fair profession.

8. Saith he. "If God do not usually bestow so many or greater "mercies out of his Church, as he doth in it; then it is worse to be out "of the Church, then to be in it (though but as the Jews were:) But "certainly God useth not to bestow so many or greater mercies out of "the Church, as in it; therefore it is worse to be out then in (though "but as the Jews.)

Answ. Mr. B. should prove the minor (which I deny) that God doth not bestow usually so many or greater mercies to infants now not visible Christian churchmembers, as he did to infants in the Jewish Church visible; (For so must his minor be, if his conclusion oppose my position:) which sith he proves not, my denial is sufficient answer.

9. Saith he, "If Christ have made larger promises to his Church "visible, then to any in the world that are not of the Church, (nay, if "there be no special promise at all, nor scarce common, to any without "the Church, but the conditional, upon their comming in,) then is it "worse to be out of the Church then to be so in it: But the former is "true, therefore the later.

Answ.

Answ. Mr. B. brings no proof for his minor, and therefore it is enough for me to deny it, as being false concerning abortives, still-born, infant children elect, and others.

10. Saith he, "If Christ have promised his presence to his Church "to the end of the world, and to walk among his golden candlesticks, "and take pleasure in her; but not so to those without the Church; "then it is better being within (though but as the Jews) then without. "But the former is true; therefore the latter. Did I not resolve on "brevity, it were easier to cite multitudes of texts for all these.

Answ. Mr. B. should prove his minor, that Christ hath promised these things to infants in the visible Church Jewish, and not to infants of believers, who are not visible churchmembers Christian; for which, though he talk of multitudes of texts, yet I shall not believe he hath any till he produce them.

He adds. "But upon this much I say to the contrary minded as "Joshua in another case, choose you of what society you will be of; but "as for me and my household, we will be of the Church of God.

Answ. And so say I, if I can prevail with them, or for them.

Mr. B. adds, "And had I children, I should be loth God should "shut them out. Answ. So say I.

Again Mr. B. "For without are dogs, extortioners, liars, &c. "Even Christ calls the woman of Canaan that was without, a dog; "though when he had admitted her into his Church, she became a "daughter.

Answ. The words, Revel. 22.15. without are dogs, the verse foregoing shews to be meant of being without the city where the blessed enter; and it being compared with Rev. 21.8. thence appears, that they that are without are cast into the lake burning with fire and brimstone, which is the second death: which if he say (as his words intimate) of all that are not visible churchmembers, he pronounceth a bloudy sentence against millions that are in heaven, and must be a hundred times more uncomfortable to parents concerning their abortive still-born children, then any thing I ever held. And his abuse of Christs words, Matth. 15.26. Mark 7.27. is yet more gross, in alledging them after that, Rev 22.15. as if dogs, Matth. 15.26. were of the same sense with dogs in the other, whereas Rev. 22.15. it is οἱ κύνες, and doth note such as rend them that give holy things to them, Matth. 7.6. but Matth. 15.26. Mark 7.27. it is τὰ κυνάρια, little dogs, and doth not note persons so called from their profane, mischievous, impious behaviour, but in opposition to children, that is Jews, such as were of Gentile discent, and therefore accounted unclean. And the application of them is as bad, as if the not making infants Christian visible churchmembers, made them dogs in either sense: Whereas to make them dogs, as Rev. 22.15. is meant, is not onely to make them non-visible churchmembers, but also of most wicked manners and damned wretches; and the term dogs, as used Matth. 15.26. might be applied as well to visible churchmembers not Jewish, such as Cornelius, Acts 10.2. as to those out of it. Nor doth it appear that our Lord Christ either admitted the woman of Canaan into his Church or termed her daughter (as Mr. B's. words intimate) but woman after her manifestation of faith. So that Mr. B. as his wont is, doth prophanely abuse the Scripture, to make his adversaries tenet appear odious without cause. What he adds, I say therefore as Peter whither shall we go, if we forsake the Church? It is good for us to be here: those that will needs think it better to be out of the Church then in it, let them go, they need no Anathema, nor excommunication, seeing they think it such a mercy to bee without the Church, I will not say of it as Paul of his ship, except ye abide in it, ye cannot bee saved, and so I conclude, Christ did not come to believers hurt, by unchurching their children, doth but shew his malignant disposition to spit as much venome as hee can against his antagonists and their doctrine, calumniating it as tending to forsaking the Church, thinking it better to be out of the Church then in it, thinking it a mercy to bee without the Church, Christ did come to believers hurt by unchurching their children, none of which followes from my tenet, but the charging of them on it shewing Mr. B's. spightfulness towards mee, and the truth, which the Lord forgive him.

Canaan

In the same vein of scribling, Mr. B. proceeds thus ch. 15. My 10th. arg is this from Heb. 8. 6. [Jesus is the mediator of a better Covenant established on better promises. Heb. 7. 22. And the Author of a better testament. Rom. 5. 14, 15, 20. where sin abounded grace much more abounded Ephes. 3. 19, 20. That ye may comprehend the height, and breadth, and length, and depth, and know the love of Christ which passeth knowledg] with a hundred the like places; from whence I argue thus, If the Church of Christ be not in a worse state now (in regard of their childrens happiness and their parents comfort therein) then it was before Christs comming, then our children ought to bee Churchmembers: (and consequently that ordinance and merciful gift is not repealed.) But all the said texts and many more shew that the Church of Christ is not in a worse condition now then it was then (but unconceivably better:) therefore our children ought to bee Churchmembers, as well as theirs was then. I have before proved that it is worse to bee out of the Church then in it; and then nothing else can bee said against this argument that I know of.

Answ. That Mr. B. hath not proved any thing he should have proved in contradiction to my tenet is before shewed. To the argument here made I answer, 1. by denying the syllogism to be right in form for want of putting in the minor, those words (in regard of their childrens happiness and their parents comfort therein) and adding in the minor those words (but unconceivably better) which were not in the major, whereby the syllogism is monstrous consisting of four or five terms. 2. Letting that pass I deny the consequence of the major, and aver that though our infants be not visible Churchmembers now, yet the Church of Christ is not in a worse state now (in regard of their childrens happiness and their parents comforts therein) then it was before Christs comming, but unconceivably better, in regard of the comming of Christ in the flesh, the gift of the spirit, the preaching of the gospel, &c.

3. That none of the texts speak any thing for Mr. Bs. purpose, but rather against it. In the first it is said the Covenant of which Christ is mediator is better then that of which Moses or Aaron were mediators, and that it is established on better promises, the former containing for the most part promises of earthly blessings in Canaan, and that promise which was of righteousness, was upon the condition of keeping the Law, without promise of the spirit; now the new Covenant promises righteousness, forgiveness of all sins through faith in Christ, with a promise of the spirit. But these promises belong not to the Church as it is visible, but as it contains the elect, of which sort infants may be though they be not visible Churchmembers, there's not a word of promise that the visible Church shall consist of a whole nation, of all sorts of people in a nation infants and elder, much less shall consist of more sorts of people then were in the Jewish Church, but of more ample mercies spiritual to the elect, who were all of the invisible Church though not of the visible, and among them infants, abortives, stil-born children, which could not be of the visible; and therefore to speak truth, parents have more comfort by this Covenant both for themselves and children, in that it assures more ample grace, and that to more then visible members under the New Testament. The same answer is to be given to Heb. 7. 22. though the word be not as Mr. B. here reads it [author] but [surety.] The next text speaks of the abounding of grace by Christ beyond the evil of sin by Adams transgression, nothing at all of the enlargement of the visible Church since Christs comming in respect of the sorts of members, over that which the visible Church Jewish had. Yea such a position as it hath not the least footing in the text, so would it not stand with Mr. Bs. and other Pædobap ists doctrine, that the visible churchmembership is a priviledge of believers children: but in respect of extent of persons, it was better with the visible Church then, sith it comprehended servants, and the bought children of strangers. And for the last text, to imagine that the love of Christ is every whit the less if infants be not visible churchmembers, is such a conceit as I judge a meer dotage. But there is more of it in that which follows.

Further, saith Mr. B. I might prove it out of Ephes. 2. 12. They that are out of the Church are said to be strangers to the Covenant, and without hope, and without God in the world, in comparison with those within the Church. O how little then do they apprehend that height and depth! &c. or know that love of Christ that passeth knowledge, who think that Christ will unchurch all the infants of believers now, that took them in so tenderly in the time of Moses? How insensible do they appear to be of the glorious riches of the Gospel, and the free abundant grace of Christ, who have such unworthy thoughts of him, as if he would put all our children out of his Church? How little know they the difference between Christ and Moses, that think they might then be churchmembers and not now? And yet (oh the blindness!) these men do this under pretence of magnifying the spirituality of the Gospel priviledges! As if to be a member of Christs Church were a carnal thing; or as if the visible Church were not the object and recipient of spiritual as well as common mercies!

Answ.

Answ. The Apostle doth not say they that are out of the Church any more then they that are uncircumcised are without hope, without God, nor doth he speak comparatively but absolutely. Nor doth he speak universally of all without the Church, but particularly of the Ephesians, nor of them as out of the Church universal but Jewish, nor this as they were merely negatively or privatively out for want of not taking on them the yoke of Moses Law, but as they walked after the course of the world v. 2, 3. So that these things are not said of them barely as non-visible churchmembers then in the Jewish Church as infants are now in the Christian (for then these things might have bin said of Cornelius and his house as well as of them, who were uncircumcised, not in the Commonwealth of Israel) but as they were idolaters, alienated from the life of God, and so were neither members of the Church visible, nor invisible of true believers at that time. Therefore to charge us with making the estate of infants of believers by our doctrine as the estate of those mentioned Ephes. 2. 12. is a meer calumny tending to nothing else but indirectly to create prejudice in men against the truth. And of the same kinde is that which followes, which insinuates as if by denying infants visible churchmembership, we lessened Christs love, were insensible of it, and the glorious riches of the Gospel, made Christ less tender now of infants of believers then in Moses time, and had such unworthy thoughts of Christ, as if he would put all our children out of his Church, and knew not the difference between Christ and Moses, all which are meer flams and frivolous false accusations, fit to take with shallow Pædobaptists, who are caught with flourishes of Rhetorick rather then solid reason. And for that which hee censures as my blindness, I may rather admire his in not discerning it. For however to be a member of Christs Church may be more then a carnal thing, yet to bee a visible Churchmember by natural discent without faith is but a carnal thing, and in this respect the Church Jewish was more carnal then the Christian Church, as the Scriptures intimate, though they were the object and recipient of spiritual as well as common mercies. The rest that follows is in the same calumniating vein, for wee say as the Apostle Gal. 4. 27. that is, that the new Covenant or Gentile Church hath more children then the Jewish, in that there were more believers in the world on the preaching of the Gospel as is said Revel. 5. 9. then in the national Church Jewish, nor do wee, as Mr. B. belies us, make all or any of the children of the new Covenant or Gentile Church cast out, for they onely are those who are by promise, born after the spirit, that is, true believers v. 28, 29. and not as ignorantly and fondly Mr. B. imagines all the infant children of Gentile believers. Nor do wee by our doctrine contradict the Apostles words Heb. 11. 40. which are ridiculously applied to infants visible Churchmembership. For the better thing provided for us is that which the believers afore Christ received not, which is by some conceived to bee heaven, but generally Protestant Divines understand it of the exhibition of Christ in the flesh, and the clear knowledge of him, which if true, proves what I aver, that Christs exhibition in the flesh, the gift of the spirit, and the revelation of the Gospel, and the taking in of the Gentiles, are in stead of that visible Churchmembership the Jewes had, and all the priviledges annexed. However it cannot bee infants visible Churchmembership as Mr. B. makes it, for that they had as Mr. B. asserts, and therefore the denying of it by me, makes not us in so much worse a condition then they. Nor do wee by denying infants visible Churchmembership aver the partition wall taken down Ephes. 2. 14. by Christ to be in part standing, For the partition wall is clearly meant of the body of Ceremonies, and necessitie of repairing to the Temple and taking the yoke of Moses Law on them, which kept the Gentiles from joyning with the Jewes in the worship of the same God, which I keep not up in any sort, much less pluck up the wall of the Church or vineyard it self, and as for our children to lay all waste to the wilderness, but Mr. B. by maintaining a national Church or visible Churchmembership by natural discent, doth keep up the partition wall in true construction, sith the way of pulling down the partition wall by God, hath been by making all one body through faith, the succession of which in the place of Circumcision and the Jewish Churchmembership, is the doctrine of the Apostle Gal. 3. and elsewhere, as is shewed before.

Mr. B. continues the same prattle Ch. 15. thus. "My 11. arg. is "this, If the children of believers be now put out of the Church, then "they are in a worse condition then the very children of the Gentiles "were before the comming of Christ: But that were most absurd and "false; therefore so is the antecedent. The consequent would plainly "follow, if the antecedent were true, as is evident thus: Before Christs "comming any Gentile in the world without exception, if hee would "might have his children to be members of the visible Church: But "now (according to Mr. T.) no Gentile may have his child a member "of the Church; therefore according to this doctrine, the very Gentiles "as well as the Jews, are in a worse condition now: and Christ should "come to be a destroyer, and do hurt to all the world, (which is most "vile doctrine.) That the Gentiles might have their children Church-"members before, if they would come in themselves, is not denied nor "indeed can bee: For it is the expres letter of Gods law, that any "stranger that would come in might bring his children, and all bee cir-"cumcised and admitted members of the Jews Church: This was the ease "of any that would be full proselytes; God in providence did deny to "give the knowledge of his laws to the Gentiles, as he did to the Jews, "but he excepted no man out of the mercy of his Covenant, that would "come in and take it (except some few that were destinated to wrath for "the height of their wickedness, whom he commanded them presently "utterly to destroy.) If any say that the Gentiles were admitted with "their infants into no Church, but the particular Church of the Jews, I "shall answer him 1. That it is false; for they were admitted into the "visible universal Church, as I shall shew more fully afterward. "2. If it were so, yet the Church of the Jewes was a happy Church "of God, in a thousand fold better state, then those without.

"So

" So that he that will be of the faith of our opposers, you see, must be" lieve that Christ hath come to deny the very Gentiles that priviledge " which for their children they had before. Yea, that you may see it " was not tied to the Jews onely, or the seed of Abraham, even when " Abrahams own family was circumcised, (and as Mr. T. thinks, then
" first admitted all into the Church;) there was but one of the seed of " Abraham circumcised at that time (for he had no one but Ishmael)
" but of servants that were not of his seed, there were admitted or cir" cumcised 318. trained men-servants that fought for him Gen. 14. 14.
" and how many hundred women and children and all he had, you may " conjecture. And all these were then of the Church, and but one of " Abrahams seed, and that one Ishmael. Therefore certainly though the " greatest priviledges were reserved for Isaac and his seed, of whom " Christ was to come, yet not the priviledge of sole churchmembership;
" for the very children of Abrahams servants were churchmembers.
" And so I think this is plain enough.

Answ. It is most vile doctrine, to say, Christ came to be a destroyer, and to do hurt to all the world; and it is most vile doctrine which Mr. B. insinuates, as if the denying of infants visible churchmembership did infer their destruction: which is most palpably false, such neither were all churchmembers visible saved, as v. g. Ishmael, Esau; nor all non-visible churchmembers damned, as v. g. abortives, still-borns. And therefore Mr. B. by these insinuations discovers nothing but his own virulency, and I can justly deny the consequence of his argument till he shew me what benefit the infants of believers now do lose by not being Christian visible churchmembers which tends to their destruction, and what is the benefit of infant visible Christian churchmembership which is for their salvation, which they have not though they be not visible churchmembers, I mean real and not meer putative benefit. For my part, 1. I think still that infants were not admitted into any visible Church but the Jews, and their being of the universal was onely in that they were of the Jewish. 2. I think it is a benefit not to be of the Church Jewish, in which men were entred by circumcision, and bound to keep the law; and that Cornelius, and such other as were not full proselytes, were in as good a case as the full proselytes; and that it is but vain talk of Mr. B. that the Church of the Jews was a happy Church of God, in a thousand fold better estate then those without onely as proselytes of the gate. 3. That though there were in the Jewish Church other then Abrahams seed, yet they were all of the Hebrew Commonwealth. 4. That many of those churchmembers had no part in any of the promises made to Abraham. And I think this argument of Mr. B. takes onely with them who superficially look into the thing, as Mr. B. hath done.

SECT. LXVII.

Mr. B's. 12th. arg. ch. 17. part 1. of Baptism, from Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. is answered, and my answers vindicated.

CH. 17. he proceeds thus. "My 12th. Arg. is from the forementioned Text, Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. where all the Jews, with all their little ones were entred into Covenant with God. From whence I argue thus. If the Covenant which those infants who were then churchmembers were entred into with God was a Covenant of grace (or a Gospel Covenant) then it is not repealed, (and consequently their churchmembership is not repealed, as being built on the Covenant, or inseparably conjunct:) But the said Covenant which the infants who were then churchmembers did pass into, was a Covenant of grace, (as distinct from the law, which was repealed;) therefore neither it nor their churchmembership is repealed. Here I shall prove, 1. That all the infants did pass into this Covenant. 2. That they were churchmembers that did so. 3. That it was such a Covenant of grace. 4. And then it will follow that it is not repealed.

Answ. The argument from this Text was urged very hotly by Mr. B. in the Dispute at Bewdley, Jan. 1. 1649. but in another manner, as I gather from two copies of the Dispute, which though imperfect, yet both agree, that the argument then was this, They who solemnly entred into Covenant with God were visible churchmembers: But the infants of the Jews in the wilderness uncircumcised did so, Ergo. Mr. B. himself in his Corrective, sect. 5. The Text in Deut. 29. was brought to prove that God entred into Covenant with infants to take them for his people, and to be their God, and consequently made them churchmembers. The form here used doth vary the conclusion, and the medium and particularly the term [who solemnly entred into Covenant with God] into this [were entred into Covenant with God] and in his Correct. sect. 5. into this [God entred into Covenant with infants to take them for his people, and to be their God] between which there is so great a difference, that as the argument was framed in the Dispute, I should not deny the major; but as there it is framed, I should deny the consequence, it being certain God may enter into Covenant with some to take them for his people, and to be their God, who neither are nor ever shall be visible churchmembers; as elect persons dying with death-bed repentance not manifested, &c. But I shall keep to the form as it is here used. And 1. I grant that the churchmembership of the infants which did pass into Covenant, Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. is not repealed: For it being an individual accident can neither in congruous sense be said to be repealed, nor it being non ens now is it capable of repeal if the speech were right. 2. I grant also that Gods Covenant of grace, or his Gospel covenant is not repealed, that is, changed into another Covenant. 3. I grant also that invisible church-churchmembership is built on the Covenant of grace, or the Gospel covenant, or is inseparably conjunct with it. But this I deny 1. that any law of infants visible churchmembership unrepealed is contained in Deut. 29. 10, 11, 12. 2. That the mutual Covenant entred into there was the Gospel covenant of grace. 3. I say, that if it were, yet it follows not that infant visible churchmembership is not ceased, or in Mr. Bs. dialect repealed. But let us view Mr. Bs. proof.

1. Saith he, Mr. T. denied long together in the face of many thousand people, that the infants were entred into any such Covenant, against the plain letter of the Text: Yet he persisted to deny it without any reason (as you may see in the Dispute, if out.) If plain Scripture will not satisfie these men, why then do they call for Scripture? The words are, Ye stand this day all of you before the Lord your God, your Captains of your Tribes, your Officers, Elders, and all the men of Israel, your little ones, your wives, and the stranger that is in thy camp, from the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water, that thou shouldst enter into Covenant with the Lord thy God, and into his Oath which the Lord thy God maketh with thee this day, that he may establish thee to day for a people unto himself, and that he may be to thee a God, &c. He that saith infants did not pass into this Covenant, I question whether he believe this to be the word of God: For how should it be spoken plainer?

Answ. The thing which I denied was, that infants did visibly and solemnly enter into Covenant, which Mr. B. affirmed, and I gave the reason, because they did by no visible sign declare their assent to the Covenant: And when Mr. B. replied, that the parents did it for them, I answered, the parents act for them might bind them, but yet it is not their act, nor that which makes a visible churchmember; and sure had I conceived his minor so meant [that the infants did by their parents visibly and solemnly enter into Covenant] I should have granted it, and denied his major [They who visibly and solemnly entred into Covenant with God by their parents act for them, were visible churchmembers] Now this answering of mine he endeavoured then and since to represent with as much disparagement as might be to me, though what ever imperfection there were in my answer (which I do not deprehend to have been such as Mr. B. hath made it) it was in a great part from Mr. Bs. ambiguous use of words, and his captious taking advantage from my words, and not explaining his own, which made me answer somewhat perplexedly. But the matter being now in print, let's view the Dispute as it stands in the Books. I had said in my Sermon, and after in my Antidote, sect. 5. that [thou] v. 12. doth not necessarily comprehend the little ones. To this Mr. B. in his Correct. pag. 249. replies, 1. that he either sets a low value on my conscience, or judgement; which is not worth answering, 2. Do you not know, saith he, that [thou] is a collective term, usually through the Books of Moses spoken of all the people, except any be particularly excepted? Answ. I do know it is a collective term, yet often used with exception of infants by the matter of the speech, though not particularly. And for this I need go no further then Deut. 29. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. Deut. 30. 1, 2, 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. And in some of these, v. 2. thou and thy children, v. 6. thine heart and the heart of thy seed, v. 19. thou and thy seed, Deut. 29. 29. us and our children, are so expressly distinguished, that I am much confirmed that [thou] Deut. 29. 12. doth not comprehend the little ones, v. 11.

3. Saith he, Are not little ones here named? and yet are they excluded?

Answ. They are named, v. 11. yet not meant by [thou] v. 12.

4. Saith he, why should Moses say, here stand your children and wives, that not they but you might enter into Covenant?

Answ. 1. Why should the strangers stand there, v. 11. and yet Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob not their fathers? v. 13. 2. I conceive God would have a general appearance for the more solemnity of the thing, but that some should act in the name of the whole people, and therefore mention of all, v. 11. yet the act of covenanting which was personal, v. 12. restrained onely to the representatives.

5. Doth not Mr. T. confess that the Jews infants were in Covenant? why else were they circumcised, which is the seal of the Covenant?

Answ. 1. Circumcision is no where called in Scripture the Seal of the Covenant, and how far I allow it, may be seen sect. 31. 2. Infants were circumcised, not because they were in Covenant, those who were not in Covenant were to be circumcised. 3. The Jews infants were in the political or domestical Covenant made to Abraham, all of them upon condition of their obedience to the law, some of them in the Covenant or promise of saving grace made to the elect, none of them in the Covenant by their own personal act of covenanting or promising, which is that alone which I deny, and which makes visible churchmembers in the Christian Church.

6. Saith Mr. B. I desire no means to convince any man of your strange abuse of the Text, but only that he will read it. [Ye stand this day all of you, &c. and that he may be to thee a God] He that can considerately believe Mr. T. that the word [thou] v. 12. doth not necessarily comprehend the little ones, if I knew him, I would tell him, that I will not undertake by Scripture to convince him of any thing at all. And I say again in sobriety, that if the Papists had as plain Scripture for their Religion as it differs from ours, I would not delay a week, but would turn Papist, &c.

Answ. Mr. B's. words onely express his confidence in his conceit, which in this and many more things I conceive to come from his hasty determinations, without weighing all objections to the contrary. But I desire both him and the Reader to let me know what that entring into Covenant is which may be termed the infants act, afore he censure my interpretation of [thou] as not comprehending little ones necessarily, but as noting some instead of the rest, as a strange abuse of the Text; sure it was no act of words or sign shewing any consent or assent to the Covenant or Oath of God: And if, as Piscator conceives in his scholie, it were by passing through (as the word in the Hebrew is) the parts of the divided living creatures in testimony of the covenant, I say again, surely neither little ones, nor all the rest did pass between the parts of the the beasts divided, but some in stead of the rest. I think they will not say, it was their bare presence which was the entring into Covenant; for their ſtanding there was before it, and the entring into Covenant a conſequent of it. I do not accenſe him, as he knows who hath done, of being a Papiſt; nor dare I abſolve Mr. B. from yeelding too much in ſome of his writings for Papiſts, Arminians, and Socinians advantage, in ſeeking to avoid Antinomianiſm and Anabaptiſm. But I hope both Mr. B. and his Reader will be more ſober and wiſe then to go over to the Papiſts upon this declaration of Mr. B. who if he did not ſuggeſt to the people as if it were my impudence to deny it at the Diſpute, I was miſtaken, and ſo were others, and I intreat him to pardon my miſtake. But Mr. B. adds.

Where he ſaith, that [you] v. 14. is diſtinguiſhed from [them that ſtand, &c.] I anſwer: 1. I think not; but from them that were abſent: q. d. not with you onely, but (both) with him that is here (that is you) and him that is not here.

Anſw. I find no interpreter who doth not render ו v. 15. by the adverſative, and the Tigurine Divines render it ſed et but alſo, which ſhews a plain diſtinction of [you, v. 14.] from him that ſtandeth here with us this day before the Lord our God; and if I underſtand any thing in this kind, Mr. Bs. expoſition is not good ſenſe, to expound not with you onely, but with him that is here with us that is you. For v. 15. him that ſtandeth here is oppoſed to you, v. 14. and you onely being an excluſive terme, muſt exclude the reſt, and when it is ſaid [with us] meaning himſelfe, and [you] v. 14. it is meere nonſenſe to expound it thus, him that ſtandeth with us, if us comprehend him that ſtandeth there, as it doth according to Mr. Bs. expoſition. Beſides, the different numbers of [him that ſtandeth here with us] and [you] do ſhew that they are not the ſame. And I thinke I may ſay as Mr. B. I deſire no meanes to convince any man of Mr. Bs. ſtrange expoſition, but onely that hee will read the Text.

But he ſaith. 2. were it otherwiſe, yet it were onely from the people of other nations that ſtood among them.

Anſw 1. If Mr. B. mean thy ſtranger which is in thy Camp, v. 11. I expect ſome reaſon why [you onely] v. 14. ſhould exclude them more then the little ones and wives; rather me thinks [you onely] ſhould include thoſe mentioned v. 10. and him that ſtandeh with us here this day ſhould mean thoſe v. 11. And the plain ſenſe ſeems to be this, that though the Captains, Elders, Officers, men of Iſrael who were to enter into Covenant, did by themſelves onely covenant, yet Moſes in Gods ſtead did make that Covenant and Oath not onely with them, to whom his ſpeech was directed, but alſo with the reſt, v. 11. 2. If he mean the ſtrangers not of that congregation or Church of Iſrael, ſurely the Covenant was not made with them, as here Moſes ſaith it was with him that ſtandeth here with us this day.

Mr. B. adds of me. where he ſaith [ſome entred into Covenant in behalf of the reſt] I anſwer: 1. God entred into Covenant on his part immediately, or by Moſes the Mediatour with them all, and not with ſome onely.

Answ. Be it so, yet on the other part some entred into Covenant in behalf of the rest, and so [thou] v. 12. comprehends not little ones, v. 11. for sure if in behalf of any some entred into Covenant, and [thou] comprehend not them, them they were the little ones.

2. Saith he, I doubt not but the parents entred their children into Covenant, and not the infants themselves; which shews, that God hath given parents this interest and authority.

Answ. 1. This is a confession of what I aver, and of which Mr. B. and his followers have made such exclamations against me. For if [thou v. 12.] entred themselves into Covenant, and infants entred not themselves into Covenant, then infants are not comprehended under [thou, v. 12.] But so it is. Ergo. The consequence is plain of it self, the minor is for the first part the words of the Text, unless Mr. B. will say, that thou shouldest enter into Covenant is not, that thou shouldest enter into Covenant thy self, which is a gross absurdity; and the other part is Mr. Bs. own: and thus Mr. B. hath justified me in that which he counted so strange an abuse of the Text. 2. For my part, I doubt whether the parents entred the children into Covenant, and do rather conceive that the Captains, Elders, Officers, v. 10. did enter into Covenant by some solemn act of passing between the parts of a beast divided, or otherwise in stead of the children, wives, and servants, v. 11. and not the parents for the infants, 1. because the distinct mention of those, v. 10. under the titles there used, do intimate that they were representatives of those v. 11. now v. 10 persons are not expressed under the title of parents, but under other relations: 2. Because it being a national covenanting, it seems most suitable to the end of it, that it was done by national Officers: 3. If there were any other then those persons, the solemnity could not be likely done with decency, the number being so great as could not hear Moses, nor do such acts as might signifie the covenanting: 4. Because it was so at other times, Exod. 19. 7. Josh. 9. 15, 19. which if true, this place proves not that God had given parents the interest and authority to covenant for their children: 5. The wives were parents as well as the husbands, but it is not probable that the wives did covenant for the children, therefore not the parents as parents, but under some other consideration.

3. Saith Mr. B. But that any other that had the use of reason should not enter their own consent is a fiction not to be admitted: And yet Mr. T. in his confutation Sermon, excludeth the wives from a personal covenanting, as well as the infants; but barely on his own authority: Nay, he saith, it was onely the captains and Officers, though the Covenant is made with the rest.

Answ. I have given my reasons for what I conceive, I impose them not on others, it is sufficient for present that I have vindicated my assertion so much inveighed against by Mr. B. that [thou] v. 12. doth not necessarily comprehend infants.

2. Saith Mr. B. "Mr. T. denied in our Dispute, that these infants "were visible churchmembers; for when hee had maintained that

"[none were churchmembers but those that were circumcised] and "that [churchmembership was not then without circumcision] I told "him, that the infants for 40. years in the wilderness were not circum- "cised, and yet were churchmembers, and proved it from this Cove- "nant; yet did he resolutely deny it, that the infants were church- "members: Whereupon seeing he wasted time in wrangling, I was "bold to say, I did verily believe that (contrary to our first agreement) "he disputed against his own conscience, seeing he could not believe "himself, that the infants then were no churchmembers, and that none "but the circumcised were churchmembers: But he took it ill, that I "should so charge him to go against conscience; and yet when I told "him, that women were churchmembers, though not circumcised, he "confessed all, and yeelded that the infants were so too. And indeed "else God had no Church, or almost none in the wilderness, when all "but Caleb and Joshua were dead of the old stock; and all of forty years "old were uncircumcised; yet Steven calls it the Church in the wilder- "ness, Acts 7.38. But I think it vain to prove that those were church- "members that entred such a Covenant. He that will deny this, is scarce "to be disputed with.

Answ. I do confess there was much time wasted in the Dispute, and that my answers were varied according to my several apprehensions of Mr. Bs. meaning, which by reason of his ambiguities and uncertain expressions I could not be assured of, nor would he be brought to explain any thing to me, but what I could force him to by distinction, which yet hee shifted off, that I might be still at a loss what to determine. First hee asserted a law of admitting infants visible churchmembers unrepealed, which I conceived was that of circumcision, and thereupon denied infants in the wilderness to have beene visible churchmembers, meaning solemnly admitted, in which sense I meant that churchmembership was not then without Circumcision. But when hee denied, hee meant Circumcision, I pressed him to tell what other law there was, which hee then did not, but went to prove them churchmembers, which I confessed, if not understood as to admitted, but as part of that people as the women were. Secondly, when I found hee used not the term visible churchmembers as it is taken by Protestant writers for those that professed the Christian faith, I denied infants were churchmembers visible by the way which made them such in the Christian Church, though they were visible churchmembers according to the way of constitution of the Jewish Church, which was a Commonwealth, of which all that were members were churchmembers. This is the true summe of what past between us in that time Mr. B. speakes of, in which nothing was spoken against my conscience (as hee unbrotherlike charged mee,) and such altercation as was, was necessitated on my part by his averseness from explaining his meaning, which I instantly pressed him to, but still hee put by with one flirt or another at mee, that hee might drive mee to speake something, which hee might represent (as hee still did) in the most odious manner hee could to the auditors, which injurious way hath been that which hath confirmed his party, though thereby they are abused by him. For present I grant the infants *Deut.*29.11. were then visible churchmembers, but not by that Covenant.

Against this Mr. B. in his *Correct. sect.*5. saith thus. "2. He saith, "Moses made that Covenant with him that was not there that day, that "is, their posterity not yet born; shall it therefore be said, that they "were visible members? &c.] I answer, 1. it is evident the Cove-"nant spoke de præsenti to those that were: but de futuro onely of those "that were not in being, but future: They that were not, could "not bee members visible or invisible. As they had a being, so "they had a membership; that is in posse, & in futuritione, non in esse. "By vertue of this deed of gift they should be born church members. "If a Landlord do by lease make over any land to you, and your chil-"drens children, paying so much rent; doth it follow that your chil-"dren (who are born) are none of this mans tenants, because your "childrens children (who are unborn) are not his tenants actually, "but potentially? Or, if a King be set over us, and our children, and "childrens children (by compact,) doth it follow, that our children in "being are not his subjects in being because our childrens children in "posse are not subjects in esse but in posse onely? Ah here is good ar-"guing!

Answ. I find Moses speaking of God's Covenant, but not the Covenant speaking, nor is that expression good sense; nor was the speech to any other then were there, though it was of what should be after, and that as well what should be after to them that were present, as to them that were to be after, *v.*13. and I think it true, that they which were not could not be members visible, though if the invisible Church be so from election, as most Protestant Divines say, they might be members invisible. And it is true, that as they had a being so they had membership (visible) not in being but potsibility and futurition. But this is no answer to my reason, but a strengthening of it. For whereas the the reason was this, That Covenant doth not make actually visible churchmembers, which is made with them who are not actually visible churchmembers: But that Covenant was made with them that were not actually visible churchmembers, for it was made with the unborn, who are confessed not to be actually visible churchmembers by Mr. B. himself; Ergo. The major is plain from the rule in Logick, The same as the same doth always the same. And for Mr. Bs. instances, it is true, that it follows not, the children born are not tenants or subjects actually because the unborn are not; but it follows, the lease and compact of themselves do not make actually tenants or subjects, because if they did they would do so the unborn as well as the born; so in this point, though the arguing be not good, the unborn are not actually visible churchmembers, therefore the born are not; yet this (which was my arguing) was good, By the Covenant which was made with the unborn they were not actually visible churchmembers, therefore by the same Covenant of it self, without any other cause, neither were the born infants actually visible churchmembers; and consequently Mr. B. cannot from the making of this Covenant prove the Jewish infants actually visible churchmembers.

To my saying, that an entring into Covenant by parents doth not make a visible member in the Christian Church however (not as Mr. B prints it though) it did in the Jewish, he saith much in the compass of a few lines, all which is answered before in several sections, chiefly 50,51,52,57. But he saith, 3. That this was a Covenant of grace is all the question. To which I say, though it be a question between us, yet it is not all the question. For both in the Dispute, and in all my writings, I denied that the Covenant of grace doth make visible churchmembers; and therefore Mr. B. if he would have made good his argument, he should have proved that visible churchmembership and the Covenant of grace are inseparably conjunct, which Mr. B. failing to do, fails in proving the chief point of his argument. But let's view what he saith, Correct. pag. 251.

"You add, saith he, [this proves not the Covenant a pure Gos"pel covenant, not including peculiar benefits to the Jewish nation.]
"I answer, if by [pure] you mean that it is not onely a Gospel cove"nant, but that and more, it yeeldeth as much as I need; for if it be a "Gospel covenant, no matter though there be more. But if you "mean, that it is not essentially a Covenant of grace, I could heap up
"abundance of arguments against you; you may find many in Mr. Ball
"of the Covenant. I add: That Covenant wherein God taketh them "to be his people, and engageth himself to be their God, is a Cove"nant of grace: (for since the fall God entreth himself into no such "Covenant with any but in Christ, and upon terms of grace.) But such "is this Covenant made with the Israelites and their little ones; there"fore this was a Covenant of grace.

Answ. I mean by pure Gospel Covenant, that Gospel Covenant which was without mixture of domestick or political benefits proper to Abrahams seed inheriting, which is set down *Heb.*8.10,11,12. out of *Jer.*31.33. and I say, that though there is perhaps an Evangelical promise or two intermixed in the enlargement of Moses his discourse, yet *Deut.*29.13,14,15. the Oath or Covenant there made was not purely Evangelical, or essentially a Gospel Covenant, but a political, legal, national Covenant, such as God doth not enter into now with all those to whom he vouchsafes Gospel grace. And I prove it thus. 1. That Covenant which contains promises of the land of Canaan, the inheritance of it, and prosperity therein, is not essentially a Gospel Covenant, or a pure Gospel Covenant. But so doth that, *Deut.*29.13,14,15. Ergo. The major is manifest: For the Gospel Covenant doth not promise those things. The minor is plain from the words [as he hath sworn unto thy fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.] But that was a promise of Canaan, as appears from *Gen.*12.7. & 13.15. & 15.8. & 17.8. & 22.17. & 26.3. & 28.13, 14. *Deut.*34.5. and many passages in Moses his speech, *Deut.*29.16,21,23,24,27. *Deut.*30.2,5,9,10,16.18. and most evidently the conclusion of it, *Deut.*30.20. & 28.11. 2. The Covenant and Oath made then, was the same which was said to them before, *Deut.*29.13. But that was the Covenant of the law in Horeb, *Deut.*29.1. Now that was not essentially the Covenant of grace, as is proved before, *sect.*43. 3. That Oath and Covenant which was of being God to them upon condition of their obedience to his laws given by Moses, that is not a pure Gospel covenant, but a legal, *Rom.*10.5. *Gal.*3.12. But such is this, *Deut.*29.8,29. & 30.2,8,10,11,14,16. where the judicial and ceremonial are meant as well as the moral. 4. That Oath and Covenant which had the legal threatnings annexed to it, was not a pure Gospel covenant, or essentially the Covenant of grace, *Gal.*3.10. But such was this, as appears from *Deut.*29.20,21,25. & 30.18,19. Ergo. What Mr. Ball hath written to prove Mr. Bs. position, I omit, 1. Because Mr. B. hath not set down the place. 2. Because I conceive Mr. B. hath produced the chief. To the first, I answer by denying the major, and the proof of it; and aver, that since the fall God did enter into a Covenant with the Jews which was not in Christ upon terms of Gospel grace. The minor is true, but God covenanted to be their God upon condition of their obedience to the law of Moses, as the words Deut. 29.13. imply, that he may establish thee to day for a people to himself by keeping the laws according to the Covenant they entred into.

He adds. 2. That Covenant wherein the Lord promiseth to circumcise their hearts, and the hearts of their seed to love the Lord their God with all their heart, and with all their soul, that they may live, was a Covenant of grace, (for the Apostle to the Hebrews, *ch.*10.16,17. so describes it:) But this was such a Covenant, as is written Deut.30.6. Therefore this was a Covenant of grace.

Answ. Besides the exceptions following, it should be proved, that the promise, *Deut.*30.6. was the Oath or Covenant mentioned Deut. 29.13,14. and not rather an interlocutory promise on a special occasion, to erect their hearts in expectation of mercy upon their return from captivity.

3. Saith Mr. B. That which St. Paul makes the words of the righteousness of faith, was the Covenant of grace: But this is such, as is evident by comparing Rom.10.6,7,8. with Deut.30.12,13,14. But to this you give two sorry answers, being resolved to say somewhat. 1. [It is spoken of the command.] Answ. 1. And is it not also of the promise foregoing? 2. And is not this from as great a mistake as the other, to think that Gods command is no part of his Covenant? That [he will be their God] is his promise: but is that all the Covenant? That [they shall be his people, and so take him for their God, and resign themselves to him] this is both commanded by him, and covenanted by them.

Answ. The answer was right that the speech of Moses, Deut.30. 12,13,14. however accommodated by Paul to another purpose, is meant of the word of the law, the commandments, and statutes which were written in that very book of the law, *v.*10. which Moses delivered, and it was nigh to them that they might hear it and do it: Which cannot be meant thus, Who shall ascend into heaven to bring Christ

from above, or who shall descend into the deep, that is to bring Christ again from the dead, that we may hear Christ thus brought down and up, and do it, it were not good sense, nor any way congruous to the speech of Moses. And to Mr. Bs. reply, 1. I say it is not spoken of the promise, for that is not a thing for us to hear and do, but for God. 2. Though the command may be a part of the Covenant in a large sense, as it includes all that pertains to a Covenant, yet in strict and exact sense, a Covenant being an aggregate of promises, the command is not part of the Covenant. 3. However it is no part of the Covenant and Oath which God swore Deut. 29. 13. For what God swore was that which he would do, not what he appointed them to do, and consequently no part of the Covenant of grace, for that is of what God will do for us; our faith, though it be the condition of the thing promised, yet is it not the Covenant of grace. 4. The word, Deut. 30. 14. cannot be meant of the Covenant of grace, sith the condition is the hearing and doing of all the law of Moses, that they might keep Gods commandments, and his statutes, and his judgements, (which reach to judicial, and ceremonial precepts, as well as moral) that thou mayest live and multiply, and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land, whither thou goest to possess it. Locus ille indubitanter de obedientia totius legis loquitur. David Parem castig. Bellarm. tom. 4. degrat. & lib. arb. l. 5. c. 6.

2. Saith Mr. B. "You answer [it is frequent with the Apostle to "accommodate words to his purpose that have a different sense in the "places whence they were taken, from that to which the Apostle appli-"eth them, as Rom. 10. 18.] Answ. A man would think here you "plainly mean, that it is frequent with the Apostle to wrest and per-"vert the Scripture to his own ends from its true sense; and you can "mean no better, except you mean that he alludeth to the words, ma-"king use of the meer phrase without the sense; and indeed that is usu-"al in common speech: and such is that, Rom. 10. 18. But that he doth "not barely allude to this in Deut. 30. is left undeniable. 1. He bring-"eth it in, v 6. as Gods description of the righteousness of faith, &c. "having before said, Moses describeth the righteousness which is of the "law, &c. 2. He addeth the very exposition to every sentence: [who "shall ascend into heaven] that is, saith he, to bring Christ down from "above? And who shall descend into the deep] that is to bring Christ "again from the dead? 3. He fully expresseth it v. 8. But what saith "it? The word is nigh thee, &c. that is, the word of faith which "we preach, that if thou confess with thy mouth, &c. Is not here a "full discovery, that the Apostle expoundeth, and not onely alludeth "to these words? Name mee one place in the New Testament, "that more evidently speaks in an expository way of any Text in "the Old?

Answ. As much is said by the most godly and learned Protestant interpreters of this place as by me, and therefore if I be chargeable with accusing the Apostle of wresting and perverting the Scripture to his own ends from its true sense, they are likewise so chargeable. Beza annot. ad Rom. 10. 8. By this term [the word] Moses understandeth the law which God by his voyce published, all his people hearing, so that they might pretend no ignorance, when they had the tables of it described, and so might every one recite it out of their mouth, and might have it within as it were engraven in their knowledge and mind. But what Moses spake of the law, all that Paul accommodates to the Gospel by allusion: that at length by the Gospel he may teach us to enjoy that indeed which the law promiseth, and be freed from that which it threatneth. Diodati annot. on Rom.10.6. St. Paul maketh use of this passage though spoken in another sense. The new Annot. on Rom.10.8. By the word, Deut.30.14. Moses understood the law which the Lord published with his own voice, and Paul applies it to the preaching of the Gospel, which was the perfection of the Law. On v.18. This place is taken out of Psal.19.4. and is properly meant of that knowledge of God, which all men may have by contemplation of the heavens, and the creatures therein; yet it is by the Apostle very fitly applied to the sound of the word preached by the Apostles. Trapp on Rom.10.8. Moses meant it of the Law, but it more fitly agreeth to the Gospel. Piscater analys. Paulus alludit ad verba Mosis, Deut.30.14. Willet on Rom.10. qu.10. Some think that Moses in that place, Deut.30.12. directly speaketh of the law according to the literal sense; and St Paul by a certain allusion applieth that unto faith, which Moses uttereth of the law. So Theodoret, Chrysostome, Oecumenius. Likewise Tostatus upon the place, Paul by a certain agreement hath translated this place, and applied it unto faith. Vatablus also saith, that Paul followeth not Moses sense, but some words. Yet Pareus inclineth to think St. Paul here useth but an allusion to that place of Moses, dub.6. Daniel Heinsius, Exercit. sacr. in Rom 10.6,7. E Rom. 10.18 patet verum esse quod non semel alibi monuimus, sed & a magnis observatum Theologis, in epistolam præsertim ad Hebræos, meminimus; novi fœderis scriptores verba veteris & eleganter & venuste non semel alio transferre. Quod tam usitatum est τοις ἐξω, ut vix ullus sit Homeri versus cujus verba non mutato sensu usurpentur. In his autem quod Matthæus, c.2. v.18. e Jerem.31.15. (quod & B. Hieronymus vult) usurpavit, neque pauca sunt in psalmis quæ pro instituto suo Paulus maxima cum venustate usurpat. Quod nec mirum est, cum utrobique idem spiritus, qui tanquam propria ac sua, ante dicta usurpavit. And yet none of these Authors did conceive Paul to have wrested and perverted the Scripture to his own ends from its true sense; nor doth my speech infer any such accusation. Nor do I mean that Paul alludeth to the words, making use of the meer phrase without the sense; but that he accommodates words to his purpose, that have a different sense in the places whence they are taken, from that to which the Apostle applieth them, which is no wresting of them. To the reason of Mr. B. I answer. To the first, that I do not find that the Apostle v.6. brings it in as Gods description of the righteousness of faith, but by a prosopopeia the righteousness of faith is brought in as directing the believer. To the second, it is true Paul addeth the very exposition to every sentence, but not an exposition of the Text in *Deut.*30.12,13,14. but an exposition of the words of the righteousness of faith as they are applied thence by the Apostle to his purpose. And yet plain Texts which are not so accomodated I cannot so put off as I will.

Your

Your laſt anſwer, ſaith Mr. B. is the worſt of all. You ſay, if the Covenant did contain promiſes purely Evangelical, yet the Covenant in reſpect of them cannot bee meant of all and every of the Iſraelites, that God would bee a God to them, that is, ſanctifie, juſtifie, adopt them to bee heirs of eternal life.] Anſw. 1. God ſaith, you ſtand all here, &c. to enter into the Covenant, and oath, &c And you ſay, it cannot be all, whom ſhall we believe God or you?

Anſw. Both, for we ſay in this point the ſame, that ſome in the name of all did enter into Covenant, and his oath to be a God to them, and yet he not be a God to them all that entred into the Covenant, but to to them onely that kept the Covenant.

2. Saith hee, You foully miſ-interpret the promiſe, to bee to them a God, as if it were ſuch as could bee verified to none but the elect. God hath promiſed to others to bee their God, who are not elect, as is undeniable in the text. Therefore in a larger ſenſe, as I have before in due place fully explained it.

Anſw. It is ſure foul language to tell me I foully miſ interpret the promiſe to be to them a God, when I interpret not at all the promiſe Deut. 29. 13. but onely infer from Mr. Bs. interpretation of it as purely Evangelical (which I count falſe) that then it in reſpect of promiſes purely Evangelical ſhould be meant onely of the elect, which I agree with him to be abſurd. Nor is the matter ſalved by telling me that God hath promſed to others to be their God who are not elect, For however hee hath not promiſed to be a God in reſpect of promiſes purely Evangelical to be a God by ſanctifying, juſtifying, adopting to eternal life, to any but the elect. Yet Mr. B. asks me.

And why may not God promiſe juſtification, adoption (and ſanctification in the ſenſe as Divines, and Scripture moſt uſe it, for the work following faith) and eternal life, and all on the condition of faith, and this to more then the elect? and hath he not done ſo? But of this and of infants condition before

Anſw. 1. By ſanctifying I meant the ſanctifying by which faith is produced, which is the ſame with regeneration, writing the lawes in the heart, Heb. 10. 16. and is uſed ſo 1 Cor. 1. 30. & 6. 11, &c. and thus he ſanctifieth onely the elect, Epheſ. 1 4. 2 Theſ. 2. 13. and I ſuppoſed Mr. B. had meant the ſame by circumciſion of the heart, to love the Lord, Deut. 30. 6. and that hee included it in the promiſe of being a God to them, Deut. 29.13 and this ſure is proper to the elect, if Mr. B. ſay true, Friendly accommod. p. 362. Cor novum is given to the elect onely. And ſure if Mr. B. did not mean this, he did not mean the Covenant of grace, or the Goſpel covenant, in which this is the firſt promiſe, Heb. 10. 16. 2. But let after-ſanctification be onely meant, and juſtification condition of faith, yet I think the promiſe is made of theſe to none but the elect, ſith none are believers but they. An offer may bee made to others by men, but no promiſe by which God is bound, and will performe it to any other. 3 If the Covenant bee on condition of faith, then it is not made to infants, for they believe not. Nor is the promiſe made to infants on condition of parents faith, for though Mr. B. dream so, yet the Scripture saith not so, nor is it true. For 1. the promise should then be made to Esau as well as to Jacob in infancy, which the Apostle refutes Rom. 9, 11, 12, 13. 2. If the promise were made to infants upon their parents faith, then God is engaged to sanctifie them in infancy, and if so he doth it, and if he do, either holiness by sanctification of the spirit may bee lost, or else they must all go to heaven, for all holy ones go thither, 3. The promise to the father is upon condition of his own faith, therefore so is the promise to the child, for there is not a different promise to the father and the child upon different conditions. But I haſten.

He adds, You would faine ſay ſomewhat too to that Deut. 30. 6. but like the reſt, 1. You confeſs it is a promiſe of ſpiritual grace, but to the Jewes after their captivitie, 2. And upon condition of obedience, 3. And not performed to all their ſeed, but onely to the elect.] Anſw. 1. But did God promiſe ſpiritual grace to the Jews after the captivity and not before?

Repl. The promiſe Deut. 30. 6. is to the Iſraelites to do it for them onely after their captivity, I ſaid not after the captivity as Mr. B. ſpeaks.

Was not the promiſe, ſaith he, made to them that then were?

Repl. It was.

Were not they, ſaith he, captivated oft in the time of the Judges, and ſo it might at leaſt be made good then?

Repl. I grant it.

If God, ſaith he would do as much for them before they forſook him, and brake the Covenant by rebellion, as he would do afterward when they repented, then he would circumciſe their hearts before as well as after: But the former is true, therefore the later.

Repl. I grant it, yet this proves not the promiſe as it is there Deut. 30. 6. to be made to them of what God would do for them afore their captivity.

2. Saith hee, And if it bee on condition of obedience, then you confeſs there are conditional promiſes, and then it was made to more then the elect.

Anſw. I deny the conſequence.

3. Saith hee, If it were not performed to any but the elect, no wonder, when it was a conditional promiſe, and the reſt performed not the condition: which God will cauſe the elect to perform.

Anſw. Sure it was not promiſed to any but to whom God performs it. For though it were on a condition of theirs, yet it was ſuch a condition as was to be wrought and was promiſed by him, which hee did onely to the elect. And thus Mr. B. may ſee my vindication of my deſcant on this text, and the Reader perhaps will wonder at the vanity and wilfulneſs of Mr. Bs. exceptions againſt it.

Sect. 68.

SECT. LXVIII.

Neither from Rom. 4.11. nor by other reason hath Mr. B. proved, ch. 18, 19. part. 1. of Baptism, That Infant Churchmembership was partly natural, partly grounded on the Law of Grace and Faith.

CH. 18. Mr. B. writes thus. "My 13th. arg. is from Rom. 4. almost "all the Chapter, wherein the Apostle fully sheweth, that the pro- "mise (upon which his priviledges were grounded) was not made to "Abraham upon legal grounds, but upon the ground of faith: "From whence I might draw many arguments, but for brevity, I "desire you to peruse the Chapter; onely from the eleventh verse: "And hee received, &c. From whence I thus argue. If infants then "usually were entred and engaged Churchmembers by that Circum- "cision which was a seal of the righteousnes of faith, and was not "given on legal grounds; then that Churchmembership of in- "fants is not repealed: (as beeing built on grounds of Go- "spel, and not Law, and sealed with a durable seal, that is, the "seal of the righteousnes of faith.) But the antecedent is plain in "the text.

Answ It is true Rom. 4. 13, 14, 16, 20, 21. there is mention of Gods promise to Abraham, and in particular two speeches are cited v. 17. Gen. 17.5. I have made thee a father of many nations (which implies a promise) & v. 18. Gen. 15.5. So shal thy seed be, & it is true the privileges of justification by faith, of the father of believers, of heir of the world, were by faith, and the promise, but that his visible Churchmembership or his infants was by promise is not said, nor is there a word in that Chapter or elsewhere, to prove that Churchmembership of infants was built on grounds of Gospel and not Law, or that it was sealed, or that the seal was durable which was termed the seal of the righteousnes of faith, or that the Circumcising of any person besides Abraham was a seal of the righteousnes of faith, and therefore I deny the minor, which hee termes the antecedent, and the consequence of the major also. For if his reason were good, I might by the same medium thus argue, If that Circumcision by which infants were usually then entred and engaged Churchmembers was a seal of the righteousnes of faith, and was not given on legal grounds then that Circumcision of infants is not repealed, But the antecedent is plain in the Text, Ergo. What answer Mr. B. gives to this argument will also answer his own, and I presume he will not hold Circumcision unrepealed, which hee must if his argument be good.

Mr. B. addes, "I urged this on Mr. T. many years ago, and "all his answer was, that Abrahams Circumcision was a seal to o- "thers that should come after, of the unrighteousnes of Abrahams "faith but no otherwise. A strange answer, and very bold! I hear that

" since he answereth, that it was onely such a seal of Abrahams righte-
" ousnes by faith, but not of others afterward.

Answ. I am sure Mr. B. in this (as he doth almost in every thing I have spoken, written or done, which he hath had occasion to mention) doth mis-report me, my answer to him and others was not as he and they represent it. This is my answer, 1. That Rom. 4. 11. no other persons Circumcision but Abrahams is termed the seal of the righteousnes of faith. 2. That to Abraham his Circumcision was a seal of that righteousnes by faith, which hee had afore hee was circumcised. 3. That Abrahams personal Circumcision is a seal of the righteousnes of faith to all that believe as he did, and to no other. 4. That the usual Circumcision of infants, was not a seal of the righteousnes of faith, or of the Covenant of grace to every circumcised person.

" But, saith Mr. B. 1. The Text seems to speak of the nature and use of " Circumcision, and the end of its institution: as being ordained at first
" of God to seal onely a Gospel righteousnes of faith, and not a legal " righteousnes of works or ceremonies.

Answ. 1. If Circumcision were at first ordained of God to seal a Gospel righteousnes of faith, then it did not seal visible Churchmembership of infants (for that is not a Gospel righteousnes of faith, sith it may bee without Gospel righteousnes of faith, and these may bee without it) as Mr. B. saith in this Chapter. 2. The nature, use and end of Circumcision in others, is not at all expressed Rom. 4. 11. but onely of Abrahams. 3. The use and end of Circumcision was at first to signifie that Covenant God entered into with Abraham, Gen. 17. after to binde the circumcised to observe the law of Moses, as the Apostle conceived it Gal. 5. 3.

2. Saith he, " Doth God institute a standing ordinance to endure
" till Christ, to have one end for him to whom it was first given, and " another to all others? Is not the nature, end, and use of Sacraments " or holy engaging signs and seals, the same to all? though the fruit be " not alway the same. These are poor shifts against a maniteſt truth, " which deserve not answer.

Answ. 1. Doth not Mr. B. of baptism p. 2. ch. 2. himself answer, that baptism, which he terms a Sacrament or holy engaging signe and seal, hath more ends and uses then one, and that the infant is capable of some, though not of others: yea though he make the end to be in the definition of Sacraments that it is of their nature to be signs, and so no Sacraments but what do signifie; yet hee will have baptism to bee a Sacrament to an infant to whom it never is any signe or signifies any thing, for the baptised infant either never saw it, or never saw it as a signe of the engagement Mr. B. speaks of, and so it is never a signe to the baptised, the Baptism leaving no visible impression on the body as Circumcision did, to signifie to the infant when hee comes to age. Whence I infer, 1. That according to Mr. Bs. own doctrine, the Sacrament of Baptism hath one end to those to whom it was first given, to wit, to signifie their owning of Christ as their Lord, and another end to almost all others, to wit, infants, to seal them Gods promise without their personal owning of Christ. 2. That according to him, the nature, end, and use of Sacraments, or holy engaging signs and seals is not the same to all; for Baptism is no holy engaging sign to an infant, who doth neither signifie by it, nor hath any thing signified to it by it, no nor is naturally capable of it, and consequently it is no Sacrament to it, sith it is not either actually or potentially a sign to the infant, no not when grown up of any thing signified by it. 2. Doth not Mr B. acknowledge, that Abrahams Circumcision did seal the righteousness of faith which he had being yet uncircumcised? sure he will not deny this, which the Apostle expresly teacheth. But sure it had not that end in all others, therefore he must acknowledge one end of Circumcision for Abraham which to all others it had not 3. About the nature, end, and use of Sacraments, I have expressed in part my mind before, sect 31. Nor either there or here do I use any shifts against a manifest truth, but Mr. B. hath levied a company of poor feeble arguments, which but for the shallowness or prejudice of Pædobaptists, deserved not an answer.

Ch. 19. he saith thus. My 14*th. arg. is this. If the law of infants churchmembership were no part of the ceremonial or meerly judicial law, nor yet of the law of works, then it is not repealed. But it was no part of the ceremonial law, nor meerly judicial, nor part of the law of works (as such.) therefore it is not repealed. The consequence is evident, seeing no other laws are repealed. The antecedent I prove in its parts.* 1. None will say it was part of the law of works; for that knows no mercy to those who have once offended: But churchmembership was a mercy.

Answ. 1. Mr. B. should have first proved any such law at all (which he hath not proved yet) distinct from the law of Circumcision; and this is my answer to this argument, that there is no such law at all, and this is enough. Yet I add, 2. If his pretended law of infants visible churchmembership be no part of the law of works, then it is not of the law of nature, which before and after he asserts; for the law and Covenant of nature, is the law and Covenant of works, which I think Mr. B. will not deny, surely it is not of grace in Christ; Ergo. That is not of grace in Christ which was afore the fall; but such is the law of nature, Ergo. 3. That the law of works knows no mercy to those who have once offended, is a dictate of Divines, which needs proof. That the law at mount Sinai was a law of works, is proved before, sect. 43. But that yeelded some mercy, Levit. 4. 2, 20, 26, 31, 35. Numb. 15, 22, 23, 24, 28. Ergo. 4. How far, and in what manner visible churchmembership of infants was a mercy, and how it is otherwise now, is shewed before, sect. 64, 66.

2. Saith Mr. B. If it were part of the ceremonial law, then 1. let them shew what it was a type of, and what is the antitype that hath succeeded it, and prove it to be so, if they can.

Answ. 1. I do not take every thing typical to have been ceremonial; nor every ceremonial thing to be typical: Or if it be so, yet I am sure, of every thing ceremonial which was typical, Mr. B. cannot shew what was the antitype in particular, at least he cannot prove it. When Mr. B. hath shewed and proved what was the antitype to all the dishes, bowls, snuffers, and other utensils about the tabernacle, and of every thing appointed concerning them, their colour, fashion, metal, &c. and of every rite prescribed Israel by Moses, there may be some equity in Mr. Bs. task. But till then it is enough to tell him, that to it with other things typified, Christ, Col. 2.17. succeeded. The churchmembership by birth hath had churchmembership by faith to succeed it, as is before proved from Gal 3. and if that be not enough, let Mr. B. answer, and not slight what Mr. Samuel Fisher writes in his Baby baptism meer Babism, about the ceremonial holiness of the Jews infants, pag. 112. 113, 114, 115, 116, &c.

2. Saith he If the very materials of the Church were a ceremony, then the Church it self should be but a ceremony. And so the Church in Abrahams family should be more vile then the Church in the family of Noah, Melchizedech, Sem, Job, Lot, &c. which were more then ceremonies.

Answ. The Levitical priesthood was ceremonial, and yet not the materials, that is the men, a ceremony; so churchmembership might be a ceremony, yet not the churchmembers. But I do not term either the one or the other a ceremony, it is sufficient that it was a meer positive thing alterable and that it was altered.

3. Saith he, And that it was no part of the meerly judicial law, appears thus. 1. As was last said, then also the Church in Abrahams family should be more vile then the aforesaid; for their churchmembership was not a piece of meer policy, as we call the judicials.

Answ. If it were by any law that infants were Churchmembers, it is more likely to be by a judicial law then any other of the three sorts of the Mosaical laws, which Divines do so distinguish. And to the argument I say, 1. By making infants Churchmembership to be by a mixt or meer judicial law in Abrahams family, it is not made a piece of meer civil policy not Ecclesiastical, for the Jews Commonwealth was a holy policy, and the members of the State were members of the Church, and consequently, it is rather made more excellent by referring it to the meer judicial laws, as the constitution of the Sanhedrin and other things are, and the admitting of the proselytes and their children was by the Elders of the Jews. 2. How to say concerning the families of Noah, &c. we cannot resolve, sith we find little or nothing of them, no mention of Noahs infants, or Melchizedecs, Sems, Jobs, or Lots except Ammon and Moab, nothing said of their Churchmembership, or of the government of the families, what it was, or by what law.

1. Saith he, It cannot be shewn that it hath any thing of the nature of a meer judicial law in it (except we may call the moral laws or Gospel promises judicial, upon which meer judicials are built:) why is it not as much of the judicial law to have women Churchmembers as children? yet who dare say that this is meerly judicial?

Answ. It can be shewn, that if there be such a law, it is a meer judicial law, because it belonged to the ordering of the Commonwealth or policy of Israel, as it is termed, Ephes. 2. 12. and the entring of proselytes was to be done by the eldership of the people, and not by the priests. And this we dare say of the womens visible Churchmembership as well as the infants, and that neither of them were by a moral law or Gospel promise as Mr. B. fancies.

3. Saith he, It is of the very law of nature to have infants to be part of a Kingdome, and the Kings subjects. And Mr. T. hath told me his judgement, that the Jews Church and Commonwealth was all one: therefore according to Mr. T. his grounds, it must needs be requisite even naturally that infants should then be Churchmembers. I thinke this is past denial.

Answ. Kingdomes themselves are not of the law of nature, no nor of the law of nations, if they were, all other government then of Kings were against these laws, much lesse can it be of the law of nature to have infants to be part of a Kingdome, and the Kings subjects. According to my judgment, the Jews Church and Commonwealth were not all one naturally, but by institution; and therefore, according to my grounds, it is not requisite even naturally that infants should then be Churchmembers. So that I find none of these things past denial.

4. Saith he, The promise that took them in, and the seal were both grounded on the righteousnes of faith, as is proved before; therefore not a meer judicial.

Answ. Neither were they taken in by a promise, nor was the promise or the seal grounded, that is, made or given by reason of the righteousnes of faith, to or in those to whom they were made or given. Nor is any such thing before proved by Mr. B.

5. Saith he, Infants were Churchmembers long before the time of Moses, when the Jews were formed into a Commonwealth, and the judicial laws given them. And as the Apostle argues, the law which was many hundred years after, could not make void the promise, and so it could not be that this was part of the meerly judicial law.

Answ. The Jews were formed into a Commenmealth, and judicial laws given, as may appear by the appointment of Onan and Shelah to take their brothers wife, Gen. 38 8. and the sentence of Judah concerning Tamar, v. 24. before Moses time, though then both were compleated. Though the law makes not void the promise, yet the law of infants visible Churchmembership, if there were any such, might be meerly judicial.

6. Saith he, That it is neither a meer judicial, nor proper to the Jews, appeareth thus. That which was proper to the Jews, was given to them onely; that is, onely to Isaac and his seed, on whom the Jewish priviledges were intailed. But many hundreds were circumcised as Churchmembers (among them many infants) in Abrahams family, before ever Isaac was born; and all the proselytes with their infants afterward that would come in. The children of Keturah and their children, and the children of Ishmael, &c. were once all Churchmembers; let any shew when they were unchurched, except when they unchurched themselves by their wickednes; or let any shew that the same sons of Keturah, who must circumcise their sons as Churchmembers while they were in Abrahams family, must leave them uncircumcised and unchurched when they were removed from that family. Did God change laws, and revoke such mercies and priviledges to the seed of Abraham, meerly because of their removing from his house, and change of place? who dare believe such fancies, without one word of Scripture? Remember therefore, that it is here plainly proved, that infants Churchmembership was not proper to the Jews.

Answ. That which was proper to the Jews was not proper to Isaac onely and his seed, but common to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacobs family, or the people that either by birth or proselytism were Hebrews: When Ishmael was cast out, and the sons of Keturah sent away from Isaac, Gen. 25.6. they were not Churchmembers, nor their children, no more then the circumcised children of the Jews by strange wives when they were separated from the holy seed, Ezra 10. & Nehem 13. which the Lord did for that reason which he judged fit, however it seem to us. Nor is this conceit a fancy, but plain from those Scriptures named and others, which still reckon the Ishmaelites, Edomites, Ketureans, and posterity of Jews by prohibited women and separated from the congregation of Israel, as a profane people, and so not Churchmembers. Nor do I think they were bound to circumcise their infants as Churchmembers, or did it when separated from the Hebrew people. So that Mr. B. hath not yet proved, that infants Churchmembership was not proper to the Jews, but that it is partly natural, and partly grounded on the law of grace and faith, as he speaks.

SECT. LXIX.

Mr. B. ch. 20. by his 15th. arg. from infants being once members in the universal visible Church, hath not proved their visible Churchmembership unrepealed.

CH. 20. "My 15th. arg saith he, is this: If all infants who were "members of any particular Church, were also members of the uni- "versal visible Church (which was never taken down;) then certain- "ly their Churchmembership is not repealed: But all infants, that "were members of any particular Church, were also members of the "universal visible Church; therefore their Churchmembership is not "repealed. The consequence is beyond dispute, because the univer- "sal Church never ceaseth here. And in my judgement, the whole "argument is so clear, that were there no more it were sufficient.

Answ. The very conclusion is so palpably false, that no man that understands it but will wonder that Mr. B. should shew himself so besotted, as to prove so industriously a thing contrary to sense, that the visible Churchmembership of no infants who were members of any particular Church is repealed, that is, ceaseth. For who knows not that Isaac, Jacob, Moses, David, with millions more are dead, and are now no members in any visible Church? If it be said, that Mr. B. means the species of infants, I reply, then he speaks non-sense and false. For the species is but one, and therefore to term the species which is but one

[all

[all infants] in the plural number is non-ſenſe. And falſe for the ſpecies was never a member of any particular Church, for members are individuals, nor is the univerſal viſible Church totum univerſale, which may bee thus divided into adult and infants as into two ſorts of Churches, but totum integrale, an integral whole conſiſting of parts exiſting, and when the parts ceaſed to exiſt then they were not members viſible, and the whole Church viſible muſt needs ceaſe when all the members exiſtent are deceaſed. It is falſe alſo that the ſpecies an be termed viſible: For that is viſible which may be diſcerned by ſenſe, but ſenſe diſcerneth not ſpecies, but individuals. If it be ſaid that Mr. B. means that the univerſal viſible Church is as a fluent body, as a river which continues the ſame from a ſucceſſion of other water in the ſame channel, neither will this ſerve for his purpoſe. For 1. in that ſenſe the infants that were members ceaſe, and other infants ſucceed; 2. it is manifeſt that the viſible Church is not now among thoſe people, to wit the Jews, who had heretofore infants viſible churchmembers, they are broken off from being Gods viſible Church, and ſo the ſucceſſion of churchmembers in that people ceaſeth, and it is that which is denied to bee in the other channel, to wit the viſible Chriſtian Church, infants do or ought to be taken to ſucceed in the place of the deceaſed Jewiſh infants, and if the ſenſe be thus, the whole argument is this; If infants viſible churchmembership be and ought to be taken to be in the Chriſtian viſible Church as in the Jewiſh, then it is not repealed. But infants viſible churchmembership is and ought to be taken to be in the chriſtian viſible Church as in the Jewiſh, ergo. of which I ſhould deny the minor. But this hath no likelihood to be Mr. Bs. meaning, whoſe words import plainly that which I count non-ſenſe and falſe. And therefore I anſwer to his argument, if the parentheſis (which was never taken down) be a part of the antecedent in the major, and the ſenſe be this [and the univerſal viſible Church exiſtent in the age wherein infants were members of a particular Church was never taken down or ceaſed not] and this be ſupplied in the minor, I deny the minor, if it be not ſupplied I deny the ſyllogiſm to be good, as not having the whole medium in the minor which was in the major, if it be underſtood in another ſenſe (which I count non-ſenſe) that the ſpecie of infants in the Jewiſh particular Church were members of the univerſal viſible Church Chriſtian, the minor is to bee proved. As for what Mr. B. ſaith, the univerſal Church never ceaſeth here, if it be meant of the univerſal viſible Church definite of that age (in which alone infants viſible members of a particular Church are members) it is falſe, if of an univerſal Church viſible indefinite, ſo as that the ſenſe be, ſome or other univerſal Church viſible never ceaſeth, or an univerſal viſible Church in ſome age or other ceaſeth not infant members in the particular Church are not members in ſuch an univerſal, but in the definite of one age, and the minor of Mr. Bs. argument in that ſenſe is falſe; Or if the ſenſe bee (as it ſeemeth by what followes) That the nature of the univerſal viſible Church ceaſeth not heere, I deny the conſequence of the major in Mr. Bs. ſyllogiſm; And ſay, That it is non-ſenſe to term the nature of the universal visible Church the universal visible Church, as it is to term humanity or manhood a man, or Peter humanity or the humane nature. All know that understand the Metaphysicks, that whatever the difference bee whether formal or modal or some other, yet the one is not rightly predicated or said of the other: no man saith the essence of a thing (which is all one with the nature) is the thing, but that by which it is. In like manner it is non-sense to say infants were members of the nature of the universal Church visible. For membership hath relation to an integral whole not to an essential, no man makes infants a part of the definition of the universal visible Church, but of the completeness of it. But let's view Mr. B. proof.

1. Saith he, "That there is a universal visible Church, Mr Rutherford "and others have largely proved: They of New England indeed deny "a universal visible governing or political Church; but not this that I "speak of (as you may see in Mr. Shepheard and Mr. Allens answer to "Mr. Ball) But lest any should deny it, I will bring one proof or ra- "ther many in one, 1 Cor. 12, 13. We are all baptised by one spirit in- "to one body, whether Jews or Gentiles. Here you see it is one and the "same body that all are baptised into: Now that this is the visible "Church I prove thus. 1. That one body that hath distinct visible mem- "bers with variety of gifts is the visible body: But this is such. 2. That "one body which is visible in suffering and rejoycing is the visible bo- "dy. But this is such v. 25, 26. 3. That body which is capable of schism, "and must be admonished not to admit of it, is the visible body; But "this is such v. 25. 4. That body which had the visible seals of Bap- "tism and the Lords Supper was the visible body; But this was such v. "13. 5. That one body which had visible universal officers was the visi- "ble universal Church or body; But this was such: Therefore, &c.

Answ. I list not to interpose my judgement in the controversies between Mr. Ball and Mr. Rutherford, and Mr. Hudson on the one side, and Mr. Allen, Mr. Shepheard, and Mr. Hooker on the other side, which rest much on the meaning of the term [Church] in such passages as these 1 Cor. 12, 28. & 10. 32. Acts 8. 2. Gal. 1. 13, &c. and some Logick notions of an universal and integral whole, of a similar and dissimilar whole, the distinction of a Church entitive and organical, and the like. Nevertheless because it concerns the present point that I should say somewhat in this thing, I shall thus far express my conceits. 1. I think by the word Church in none of the places alledged by Mr. Hudson vindic. th. 2. a particular fixed congregation organized is meant except the last, 3. Joh. 10. where I conceive the casting out could be onely out of that particular Church where Diotrephes did Lord it, and where alone he did and could forbid those that would receive the brethren, though perhaps the effect might extend further. Nor do I think on the other side, that in any one of them by [the Church] is meant the universal visible organical political Church collectively taken, which Mr. Hudson asserts not Acts. 8. 3. Gal. 1. 13. For Saul did not make havock, persecute or destroy the whole Church so taken, nor only the particular Church of Jerusalem, but the word [Church] there is taken without quantity, and so neither notes the universal nor particular, all nor some, but indefinitely in genere confuso, the disciples of Christ, or any of that way, Acts 9. 1 2. them that believed on Christ, Acts 22. 19. them that called on his name, Acts 9. 14. the Saints, Acts 26. 10. whersoever hee could reach them. And in the same sense it is taken Acts 2. 47. 1 Cor. 10. 32. 1 Tim. 3. 15. and I think the sense is the same Eph. 3. 10. whether [by the Church] be meant of what was done to or on the Church, that is the believers called out of the Gentiles, to whom hee gave his spirit manifestly as on Cornelius, or by the teachers in the Church, especially of the wonderful mysteries which were revealed in the exercise of gifts then given. Matth 16. 18. It is true, is meant the visible Church, but not the universal organical collectively taken, nor any particular Congregation organized, but the visible in respect of the part which is invisible, against which the gates of the grave or death shall not prevail, to keep them in, but they shall be raised up again to everlasting life at the last day. Nor is it said that the keyes should bee given to the Church but to Peter, the use of which was to bee in the calling of the Church effectually. The other text 1 Cor. 12. 28. cannot be meant of the Church visible universal organical collective, nor of a particular Congregation, not this latter for reasons given by Mr. Hudson, nor the former, for the Apostles, Prophets, Teachers, are distinct from the Church there taken: but they are not so from the Church universal visible organical collective, Ergo. Therefore I conceive Apostles, &c. are not said to be set in the Church collectively taken as a totum integrale organicum, but in the Church distributively taken, that is, in the several Churches where they were imployed, as Peter among those of the Circumcision, Paul among the Gentiles. To which the term ἔθετο hath set, gives me occasion to encline, which I conceive to be the same with ἔδωκε gave, Eph. 4. 12. and it notes not a setting, by way of law constituting such to be in the Church, but a setting or disposing by way of providence in several Churches for their profit, as he saw good. 2. I conceive the term Catholike or universal Church (between which Mr. Bl. Coven. sealed pag. 155. saith Divines distinguish) is sometimes taken in contradistinction to the Jewish National Church, sometimes as comprehending both the believers before and since the incarnation of Christ, and in both senses I conceive it notes the invisible Church, or the Church of the first born which are written in heaven, Heb. 12. 23. who are fellow heirs of the same body and partakers together of the promise of Christ through the Gospel, Ephes. 3. 6. and this is the Catholike Church in the Apostles Creed, which we believe though we see it not. 3. I acknowledge a Catholike visible Church both before and after Christs incarnation entitive, though I think not organical since Christs ascension and the Apostles decease, and that this Catholike visible Church consists of all the visible Church-members and Churches particular visible in all the world and that this is visible onely in the several parts, which exist, and because these parts are in fluxu as a City, Army, Commonwealth, there are sometimes more sometimes fewer, sometimes the same persons may be visible Churchmembers and sometimes not, some parts may be formed after one manner some after another, the same sort of persons may be (as infants) in a Church visible of one constitution and not in another, he may bee a member (as Cornelius) in one Church that is not in another. So that the Church universal visible which I acknowledge is not uniform, and is onely as in numbring a total sum of many particulars cast up. 4. I conceive the text Mr. B. alledgeth serveth not his purpose. For though I think it is meant of the Church visible, yet not in respect of all the parts of the Church visible, but those that are so visible as that they are also of the invisible Church, to wit, true believers. 1. Because it is said that they are by one spirit baptised into one body, and made to drink into one spirit, now this must be understood of that unity of spirit which unites to Christ, not barely in respect of common gifts to the sanctified and unsanctified. But this cannot bee said of all the visible members of the visible Church, therefore it is not meant of them. 2. Because the many members termed one body are termed Christ, v. 12. which can bee meant of Christ mystical onely, for those that are onely Christ by profession are not termed Christ, but those who are spiritually united to him now those are one spirit, 1 Cor. 6. 17. new creatures, 2 Cor. 5. 17. to whom there is no condemnation, Rom. 8. 1. of his flesh and of his bones, Ephes. 5. 30, 31, 32. And to his reasons I answer, that though they prove the body meant 1 Cor 12. 13. was visible, yet they prove not that all parts of the visible Church are comprehended in that body, but onely such as were also of the invisible.

2. Saith Mr. B. That the Jews infants were members of this universal visible Church, I prove thus: There is but one visible universal Church or body: therefore they must needs be of this one, or be unchurched. See Gal. 3. 16. Ephes. 4 4. 1 Cor. 12. 12.

Answ. The unity there ascribed is not visible but invisible, to wit, by the union of the same spirit, and the body though visible in respect of some parts, yet is not said to bee one in resp & of any but those who are invisibly also joyned to that body, or for their sake, as Mr. B. pag. 340 If Christ Gal. 3. 16. bee not meant of Christ personal, it is certain it is meant of no more then Christ mystical, or the Church invisible, and so 1 Cor. 12. 12. the like is to be said. And that it is so Ephes. 4. 4. appears from the words where these are joyned one body and one spirit. Therefore I deny that those texts are meant of the universal visible Church as visible, but onely of that part of the universal visible Church of that time which was also of the invisible, which is one by unity of the same spirit. As for the universal visible Church it cannot bee said to bee one in several ages numerically, for it is but the total of all the members then existent (for if they bee not existent among the living they are not visible) and they are sometimes the same, sometimes others (hee that is now of the visible Church may cease by death or apostasie to be so to morrow) sometimes more sometime fewer, but they are one in respect of profession of the same faith, or in some other visible appearance to be of Gods people. Now the infants of the Jews might be members of the visible Church universal of a former age, but were not of the universal visible Church of that age, which was not one numerically with the universal visible Church of a former age, nor meant to be so, 1 Cor. 12. 13.

2. Saith he, Every one that is a member of the particular, must needs be a member of the universal; else one might be a part of the part, and yet not a part of the whole.

Answ. It is true of the universal made up of those parts, but he may be a member of the particular Church of uncircumcised, as Cornelius, who is not a member of the particular Church of the circumcised; and he may be a member of the universal visible of one time, who is not a member of the universal visible of another time. A Jew before the offer of Christ might be a member of the Jewish Church national, as the Pharisees, to whom John Baptist, Ch. ist, and his Apostles preached; yet were not members of the universal Church visible when they rejected the offer of Christ. Infants were members of the visible universal Jewish Church, who were not so of the universal visible Christian in another age. Mr. B's mistake is I conceive in this, that he thinks the universal visible Church is one and the same in every age, which is a gross mistake.

But he saith, This is all beyond dispute; and Mr. T. denied none of it, when I urged it on him, he confesseth, 1. There is a universal Church visible. 2. That the Jews Church was not the whole universal. 3. That every one that is a member of a particular Church, is also a member of the universal. 4. And that the Jews infants were members of the universal. 5. And this universal Church is not dissolved.

Answ. I have made some search whether ever I confessed that this universal Church visible of which the Jews infants were members is not dissolved, and do not remember or find that ever I did so; if I should, I do revoke it, as being most false: and I rather think (if I did yeeld any thing that seemed like it) that what I confessed was, that the nature or essentials of the Church are not dissolved, in stead of which (as I guess by what follows) Mr. B. put this as my confession. He adds, what then remains to be denied? why this is all that he saith to the whole [that their membership in the universal Church was onely by reason of their membership in the particular; and therefore ceased with it.] And how is this proved? why Mr. T. saith it is so, and that is the best proof, and all that I could get.

Answ. It was enough when I was a respondent that I said so, it had been Mr. B's part to have disproved it: But I did then think, and do still think it so plain, that it needs not proof; and (as very a wrangler as Mr. B. is) I think Mr. B. grants as much when he saith, that every one that is a member of a part is a member of the whole, and that the individual Church that then was, was broken off for unbelief; and I know no visible Church but an individual. Me thinks it is all one as if I had said, the finger is onely a member of the whole body in that it is a part of the hand, and when the hand ceaseth to be a part of the body, the finger ceaseth to be a member. But yet M. B. will try whether he can disprove this any better.

3. Saith he, I think I have sufficiently proved, that even the nature of the Jews Church was not repealed, but onely the accidental ceremonies; and the individual Church that then was, is broken off for unbelief; but the Olive still remained.

Answ. The visible Church Jewish could be no other then the individual Church Jewish, which if broken off, though the nature of the Jews Church was not repealed, and the Olive still remained, yet the instant Churchmembership which came onely in with the Jewish national Church, might and did cease.

2. Saith he, If the Jews Church were repealed, yet he that will affirm that the whole species of infants are cast out of the universal visible church, must prove it well: For if I find that they were once in it, I need no more proof that they remain in, till some one shew me where it is revoked, which is not yet done by any that I know of.

Answ. The repealing of the nature of the Jews Church, and of the Jews Church (which intimate that the nature of the Jews Church and the Jews Church were a law capable of repeal) is a piece of Banterian non-sense, which I use not. That the Jewish Church national is broken off, and that churchmembership by birth is altered into churchmembership by faith, is so fully proved before, sect. 50, 51, 52. besides what elsewhere is said by me, that I count it superfluous to add any more. If it satisfie not Mr. B. it's to be ascribed to his pertinacy in his opinion, which to be his proper temper I was told long ago, and much experience of him by my self and others find to be true.

3. Saith he, The universal Church is more excellent far then any particular, and so our standing in the universal Church is a far higher priviledge then our standing or membership in any particular: Therefore it will not follow, that infants lose the greater, because they lose the lesser; and that they are cast out of the universal, because they are cast out of the particular.

Answ. The universal may be more excellent then any particular extensively, because the universal comprehend the most excellent part, and the rest also; but not intensively, sith all the excellency may be from one part. Christ the head is not the universal body, and yet the whole body is not more excellent intensively then Christ, that is, hath not more perfection then Christ; for all the excellency in all the members is Christs, and from Christ. Yet the standing in the universal is not a higher priviledge then in the particular Church; yea, if there be a standing in the universal besides the standing in the particular, yet the standing in the particular is a higher priviledge. Else why do Ministers exhort men to joyn with some particular Church, and to submit to their Pastors? is it not for their advantage? Sure Mr. B. who condemns Seekers and those that are separatists from a particular Church, and those that live out of communion with any particular Church as Christs body at large, and so members of the universal Church, should not think they have a higher priviledge then members of a particular Church. If he do, he doth wrong them in condemning them, and disswading them from that state which is a higher priviledge. Much lesse is true concerning infants, who are not visible Churchmembers, but as they ſtand in the particular Church. For they are now by their own profeſſion viſible Churchmembers, but meerly in that they are part of that nation which God takes for his people, as God did the Hebrew nation, and no other before nor ſince. This is clear, if we ſuppoſe the whole Hebrew nation deſtroyed except one male infant, this male infant would be no viſible Churchmember, there being nothing by which he is diſcernable to ſenſe to be more one of Gods people then another infant, though there were many Churches of Gentiles in other places: Whereas on the other ſide, if a Chriſtian by profeſſion were in no particular Church, but ſtood alone in an Iſland of unbelievers, remote from any particular Churches, I preſume Mr. B. would ſay he were a viſible member of the univerſal, though of no particular. Whence it follows, that if infants loſe their ſtanding in the particular Church Jewiſh, they loſe their ſtanding in the univerſal.

4. Saith he, Perſons are firſt (in order of nature, or time, or both,) members of the univerſal Church, before they are members of any particular. So was Noah, Lot, Abraham, and all men before Chriſt, and ſo are all ſince Chriſt. The Eunuch in Acts 8. was baptized into the univerſal viſible Church, and not into any particular. It is ſo with all others: It is the general uſe and nature of Baptiſm; they are baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, and ſo into the catholick Church, but not into any particular Church: If any ſuch thing be, it is ſecondary, and accidental and additional, and no proper end of Baptiſm. So that it being firſt in order, that we are entred into the viſible univerſal Church, it is likely to be of more durable continuance.

Anſw. Avoiding unneceſſary diſceptations with Mr. B. about the general uſe and nature of Baptiſm, and about the priority in order, or time, or both, according to which perſons are members of the univerſal viſible Church afore they are of the particular, I do agree, that perſons who were viſible Churchmembers by their ſenſible profeſſion of the true God, were members of the univerſal afore they were of the particular: But deny this concerning infants, for the reaſon before given.

5. Saith he, It is no good conſequence that is fetcht from the removal of a particular Church, or of the Jews particular Church, to breaking off from the univerſal; therefore this will not prove infants are broke off. If a Jew had been forced into a ſtrange countrey, yet there, both he and his children had been Churchmembers of the univerſal Church, when all the Jews were ſcattered abroad in captivity, ſo that they had neither temple, nor altar, nor prieſt, but perhaps one dive in one Town, and another in another, as they do at this day; you could not ſay, that theſe were of the viſible particular Church of the Jews, though you might ſay ſtill that they were Abrahams ſeed, and they and their children were members of the viſible univerſal Church.

Anſw. The conſequence is good as I frame it, Their churchmembership viſible ceaſeth, who were viſible Churchmembers onely in that they were part of that viſible Church which now ceaſeth; But ſo it was concerning infants viſible churchmembership, ergo, it ceaſeth: Which is different from that which Mr. B. impoſeth on me. To his ſuppoſitions

I say, that they were in that case members of the visible particular Church of the Jews, which was a particular Church, and so accounted even in their captivity, though not in a flourishing estate as in their own country. And for the instance of Keturahs children when they left the Church of Abrahams family, if their infants were visible Church-members (which I conceive they were not) then it was because they joyned themselves as proselytes to the Hebrew people, which I think is not true, and therefore conceive if any of Keturahs children who left the Church of Abrahams family, professed the God of Abraham, they were members of the universal, but not their infants. And for what Mr. B. adds, If a Jew then, or a Christian now, were cast upon the coasts of America, where he should never be a member of a particular Church more, yet he should be a member of the universal still; I grant it, while they profess God in Christ. And for what he adds, Neither Joseph, Mary, nor Jesus in his infancy were unchurched, because they lived in Ægypt (though I confess it is disputable whether Christ were ever a Churchmember properly; but I pass by that) I grant it, for they remained members of the Jewish Church then when they were in Ægypt. as I presume Mr. B. counts those of his Church of Kederminster members still, who may by imprisonment, traffique, service of the State in war, sickness, or otherwayes be absent thence in England, or forreigne parts against their will.

6. Saith he, "Again, to lose their standing in the visible univer"sal Church, is to lose their place in the visible body (1 Cor. 12. 13.)
"and in the house o the living God, 1 Tim. 3. 15. the pillar and ground
"of truth: But to be removed from one particular Church, or from "every particular Church, is no casting out of Christs body, or Gods
"house: therefore it will not follow upon the removal from a parti"cular Church, that they are removed from the universal; especially "when we are not speaking of individual infants, but of the whole spe"cies. So that I think this argument is unanswerable: Infants were "members of the universal visible Church (as Mr. T. confesseth)
"This is the Church that we are now baptized into; and this Church "constitution is not altered or taken down; therefore infants member"ship of this Church is not taken down, what ever it be of the Jews
"particular Church.

Answ. The consequence is good as I framed it in the paragraph next before, yea though Mr. B. two propositions here be granted: Nor can Mr. B. overthrow it, till he prove that the Jews infants had a standing in the universal visible Church, severed from their standing in the Jewish particular, for which he hath yet brought no proof. His saying that he spake of the whole species, not of individual infants, makes his speeches to appear ridiculous non-sense. For the whole species hath no standing in the visible Church universal or particular, nor can be said to be admitted in, or cast out, or removed from one or every particular Church. These things cannot be said of a species, but of individuals, such a species is conceived abstractively from all individuifica-ting circumstances of time, place, &c. which must be conceived in visible Churchmembership and removal or casting out. And that we are baptised now into that universal visible Church in which infants were members, is utterly false, and that the Church constitution is altered in that the Jewish particular Church ceaseth is proved before, therefore there is not ing in this argument unanswerable. As for what Mr. B. adds to this Chapter p. 339. I finde not that he brings any more strength in it which needs further answer. He refers me to Mr. Hudsons vindic. but tels me not what part he would have me answer, perhaps there is not any thing in the book that opposeth mee besides what is already answered, and I am not yet so obsequious to Mr. B. as to go over a whole book to finde an adversary to fight with; if Mr. B. knew any strength in it to oppose me with, he should have himself produced it or referred me to the particular place where I might finde it. As for the texts which hee cites out of Mr. Hudson, an answer is fully made to what hee brings them for in the 2d. part of this Review, sect. 9. in which Mr. B. and others may see how shamefully they abuse Scripture, to prove a church national comprehending infants like the Jewish in the time of the Gospel. And I add, that if Mr. B. weigh Mr. Hudsons words in his vindic. ch. 4 sect. 5. p. 93, 94. I acknowledge the Jews to be a national Church. But my description of the Church Catholike was of the Church as it is now, since the partitition wall is broken down, for then it became Catholike. I conceive there were believers of the sons of Keturah that did not partake of all the priviledges of the Jewish Church except they became proselytes. It is the Evangelical Catholike Church which my question is about; into which the Jewes themselves being converted were admitted by a new initial seal, viz. baptism, and did not stand in it by their former national membership, but received a Catholike membership by baptism, I conceive that a man of any nation, converted to be a visible believer is a member of the Church Catholike enitive, and hereby hath right to all Church priviledges that belong to the whole Church, Gods method used in the national Church of the Jews, being in populo Israelitico, must needs differ from the method in populo Catholico; hee will finde that learned man speaking as much for my purpose as his own. They that boldly affirm that Christs Covenant, his satisfaction, his Church, his sealing, extend to any more then elect, joyn with the Arminians against the Scripture and the most approved Protestants, and the contrary containe no desperate expressions, as Mr. B. being misled speaks. Mr. Hudsons words pag. 220. are not right. If any hold that the believing Jews children are still Churchmembers, and yet deny that the Gentiles children are so hee may hold it still notwithstanding the assault made by Mr. B. here. For by the taking down the partition wall, Ephes. 2. 14. and the removing the enmity v. 16. Jews and Gentiles are not made one visible Church after the Jewish frame, but one by faith, and by it the Gentiles are called, Acts 15.9. not a whole nation parents and children as the Jewish Church, but believers repenting, Acts 11.17, 18. one body, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, &c. Eph. 4. 5 6. proves not the Gentile and Jewish Church visible to be the same, but the invisible of both. Gal. 6. 15. hath not a word tending to prove that there is the same reason of Jews and Gentiles infant visible churchmembership, but of the equal interest in Christ of Gentiles who are new creatures, as of the Jews. It is no part of Pauls Epistles, and therefore not much of their substance to prove the taking in of the Gentiles, and grafting them into the Olive which the Jews were of, if by it were meant the visible Church Jewish, but it is most palpably false. The discipling nations, the Kingdoms of the world becomming Christs, Rev. 11. 15. prove not infant discipleship, or churchmembership. All hitherto brought by Mr. B. hath yeilded no sufficient proof, let's view the rest.

SECT. LXX.

Mr. Bs. 16th, and 17th. arg from the promise of mercy, Exod. 20. 6. and of blessing, Psal. 37. 26. are answered.

CH. 21. saith Mr. B. "The 16th. arg. then is this: Exod. 20. 5, 6. "From hence I argue thus: If God have made over this mercy (of "Churchmembership) in the moral law, to the children of all that "love and obey him, then it is not proper to the Jews children, nor "is it ceased: But God hath made over this mercy in his moral law to "the children of all that love and obey him; therefore it is not proper to "the Jews children, nor is it ceased. Nothing but the antecedent here "needeth proof. Every man I think among us will confess, that the mo"ral law was not proper to the Jews, and that it is not ceased. Even the "most of the Antinomians confess the ten Commandments are in force "as the law of Christ, though not as the law of Moses. However, if they "be against the preceptive part of the law, yet sure they will not bee a"gainst the promissary part. Though there be some clauses that were su"ted to the Jews peculiarly, yet I never yet met with man that would "say this was so. If the ten Commandments be not currant proof, there "is no disputing with them out of Scripture.

Answ. There is need of proof of more then the antecedent to make this argument good. For 1. the conclusion is not that which Mr. B. should prove, Churchmembership and visible Churchmembership, children and infant children being not all one. God may shew the mercy of Churchmembership to infants, and yet not make over to them visible Churchmembership, and he may make over visible Churchmembership to the children of them that love him, and yet not to them in infancy. So that the conclusion may bee granted as it stands, without any impeachment to my tenet. But if it be meant of visible Churchmembership of infant children, the minor is to be denied. And to the proof, 1. I except that this promise was proper to the Jews made to back the legal Covenant, and though it be a promise annexed to the observing a moral precept, yet as in the fifth Commandment termed the first commandment with promise, Ephes. 6. 2. So in this, the promise hath special reference to their prosperous and safe estate in Canaan, in which they

they were continued while they kept themselves from idolatry, and on the other side expelled, captivated, enslaved, when they served idols, unto the third and fourth generation, upon which considering the time of making this promise, the usual tenour of promises in the Books of Moses, as Deut. 7. 9, 12. to the same purpose, the place where this promise is put, the event which doth best expound it, and that no where under the Gospel promises are made to believers children, but onely to believers themselves of Evangelical mercy, yea the Apostle concludes that notwithstanding the promise to Abraham and his seed Gen. 17. 7. and to Israel, yet God hath mercy on whom he will have mercy, and whom he will he hardens, Rom. 9. 18. I do determine (without fear of Mr. Bs. censure) that this promise was suited to the Jews peculiarly. 2. I hence infer that if this mercy be meant of Churchmembership, yet it might bee, yea was proper to the Jews children. 3. The mercy here cannot be proved to be visible Churchmembership. 4. That it is onely to those mens children who love him and keep his Commandments, which is an invisible thing, and so whose infants are visible Churchmembers by this promise cannot bee known. 5. That this promise is made good though it be not performed to all those that love him, nor to all their children, nor to any in infancy. 6. That this promise is not true without the exception of election, and the expounding of it as conditional and not absolute, sith it must then follow that God exempts none yet from mercy, there being not a thousand generations from Noah to this day. So that till Mr. B. have proved the contrary to these (which he can never do) his proof from hence will appear to be of no force. But let us examine what he saith.

"Let mee try therefore whether this 3d. Commandment in the "words cited do not prove the minor: to which end I argue thus. If "God have assured his mercy by promise to the children of all them "that love and obey him, then he would have them be taken for mem-"bers of his Church. But hee hath here assured his mercy by pro-"mise to the children of them that love and obey him: therefore he would "have them bee taken for Churchmembers: The minor is plain in the "text. The consequence of the major I prove thus: (viz. that all those "must be taken for Churchmembers on whom God hath thus stated or "assured his mercy by promise) (the word [mercy] I shall explain a-"non:) If God have estated and assured his mercy by promise to no o-"ther society of men in the world but the Church, then all those are "members of the Church on whom his mercy is thus estated and assured: "But God hath estated and assured his mercy on no other society. Ther-"fore, &c.

"Here let me a little explain my meaning. Sometime when God pro-"miseth mercy, it is first to some particular person or family: Sometime "to a whole species or sort of persons. 2. Sometimes it is some particu-"lar named mercy, and sometime in the general naming no sort or in-"dividual mercy. 3. Sometimes it is upon a special ground proper to "some one person or to few; and somtimes it is upon a common ground. "4. When the mercy is specified, it is sometime meerly corporal and

" time ſpiritual. 5. And of ſpiritual mercies, ſometime it is common to o" thers beſides the ſaved; and ſometime ſpecial and proper to the ſaved.
" 6. Sometime it is mercy limited to a ſhort or certain time; and ſome-
" time eſtated and aſſured for continuance while the law ſtandeth. Now
" you muſt underſtand firſt, that God may beſtow on ſome particular
" perſon or family, on the ground of ſome ſpecial ſervice, which they or " their fathers have done, or of meer mercy ſome ſpecial corporal bleſ" ſing, eſpecially limited to ſome ſhort or certain time: And that his
" common preſerving ſuſtaining mercies are over all his works; and
" and yet none of this will prove men Churchmembers. 2. But when " God doth not name any particular perſon or family for his mercies,
" but eſtates them on a ſpecies or ſort of perſons; and when it is not a
" meer corporal mercy that is ſo ſtated, but either a ſpiritual mercy
" (common or ſpecial) or elſe mercy in the general without ſpecificati-
" on, and when this is not on any ground of any particular action or " ſervice done by any particular man, but upon a ground (or condi" tion) common to others not named; and all this not limited to " any ſhort or certain time, but ſtated to continuance, and that by
" a legal promiſe aſſuring it, and not onely a meer offer of it,
" in this caſe it will certainely proove them members of the " Church.

Anſw. 1 Mr. B. leavs out in the minor the term [all] which was in the major of the firſt ſyllogiſm: which if it had been put in the minor (as it was neceſſary hee ſhould do to prove the concluſion hee ſhould prove) it would not have been proved out of the text; which doth not aſſure mercy to all the children of all that love him, but to thouſands, that is, multitudes of them; and to thoſe mercy is not aſſured abſolutely without condition of their love of God, nor is mercy in the text promiſed perpetually, but as Andr. Rivet. on Exod. 20. 6. God doth not ſo extend the bounds of his mercy, that hee may not alſo deny it to the poſterity of ſome godly men. For theſe things are ſaid of thoſe things which for the moſt part happen, Gods liberty beeing alwayes reſerved in his judgements and the diſtribution of good things. So wee reade the ſonnes of Godly parents to have been forſaken of God and grievouſly puniſhed. 2. The conſequence of his major is denied, and to his dictates (for proof hee brings none but his own ſayings) I anſwer firſt, by denying that all thoſe muſt bee taken for viſible Churchmembers on whom God hath ſtated or aſſured his mercy by promiſe, Exod. 20. 6. no nor though it were ſtated as Mr. B. would have it, no promiſe, no not of ſanctifying graee making of it ſelf a perſon a viſible Churchmember, as I have ſhewed often before. 2. I deny that the mercy, Exod. 20. 6. is ſtated as Mr. B. imagines; but ſay, 1. That the mercy there meant, is ſtated on the Iſraelites ſpecially. 2. That it is not meant of ſpiritual but outward mercies, not now promiſed to the moſt holy Saint on earth. 3. That it was declared on a particular ground of Gods peculiar reſpect to Iſrael, whom hee brought out of Egypt. 4. That it is limited to a certain time, while they continued to be his people, which was not to be perpetually. 3. I deny that the words, Exod. 20. 6. Deut. 5. 10. do expresly contain a promise, but [only] a declaration of Gods frequent calling, which I confess doth imply a promise, as his declaration, Exod. 20. 5. Deut. 5. 9. doth imply a threatening; yet I think it not fit to call it a promise, sith the Apostle Ephes. 6. 2. termes the fifth commandment, the first commandment with promise. But Mr. B. adds.

certain

Now that it is the priviledge of the Church onely to have God thus engaged to be mercifull to them, (and that in a way of distinction from others, as it is in this commandment promise,) is to me a truth beyond dispute. And if any do doubt of it, I argue with them thus. 1. If no such promise of such mercy to any sort of men out of the Church can be shewn in the Scripture, then we must take it as proved that there is none: But no such promise can be shewn effating such mercy on any others; therefore, &c. They that can shew any such promise, let them produce it.

Answ. The assertion is not a truth beyond dispute, but may be questioned, nor is the consequence good, there being no such declaration of God that he hath made no such promise of such mercy to any sort of men but what can be shewn in the Scripture; and if it were, yet till Mr. B. hath shewed that the mercy Exod. 20. 6. is greater then God vouchsafes to persons out of the Church visible, it may be held (notwithstanding any thing Mr. B. produceth) that such mercy is promised to persons out of the Church. However, it is most false that God hath assured his mercy on no other society then the Church. If the promise, Gen. 3. 15. be understood of all mankind as meant by the womans seed (as he before in his third Letter to me, and after here, ch. 23. expounds it) then there is a promise of mercy stated on others then the Church; and the same may be said of Gen. 9. 12, 15, 16. besides what is implied in the speeches, Psal. 36. 6. Psal. 145. 9. 1 Tim. 4. 10. Till Mr. B. shew a greater mercy is stated on the children of all that love God then is on Cyrus, Isa. 45. 1, &c. there is a promise shewn in Scripture of such mercy to one out of the Church. The like to Nebuchadnezzar, Jer 27. 6. And the promises of calling the Gentiles, of re-ingraffing the Jews, Rom. 11. 26, 27. are promises to persons out of the Church, and yet of mercy, yea the chiefest mercy; and therefore Mr. Bs. dictates are but vain. Yet he goes on thus.

2. Briefly consider to the contrary: 1. Those without the Church are said to be without hope, without God, strangers to the Covenant of promises, Ephes. 2. 12.

Answ. It is said of the Ephesians, that they were once without hope, &c. and it is said also that they were Gentiles uncircumcised; but it doth not follow therefore that all Gentiles uncircumcised were without Christ not having hope, without God in the world: Nor doth it follow, that all Gentiles were out of any visible Church who were uncircumcised; nor doth it follow, they had no promises of mercy who were strangers from the Covenants of promise there meant. It is true, this Text proves that the estate of the Gentiles afore the Gospel was preached

preached to them, was as Paul describes it: Yet this neither proves that there were none who were out of the Commonwealth of Israel, and were strangers from the Covenant of promises made to Israel, had no mercy assured to them equal to that, Exod. 20.6.

2. Saith Mr. B. The promises are all Yea and Amen in Christ, 1 Cor. 1.20. And Christ is the head over all (indeed but onely) to the Church, Ephes. 1.22. To his called he giveth the precious promises, 2 Pet. 1.4.

Answ. The promises, 2 Cor. 1.20. are such as were in Christ, and must be understood of saving promises, which are not made to the visible Church as visible, much less to the children of visible churchmembers as such, but onely to those that are of the invisible, and therefore this Text proves not that no mercy such as is meant, Exod. 20.6. is assured to any society or persons but those of the visible Church. The same also may be said of 2 Pet. 1.4. where the promises are given to the effectually called, and that by them they are partakers of the Divine nature. And for the other Text, though there be no mention of promises in it at all, yet if any be implied, the speech is meant onely of the Church of Gods elect (not the meer visible Church) which alone is his body, the fulnes of him that filleth all in all; and therefore if these Texts prove no mercy promised but to the Church, they prove no mercy promised but to the invisible Church, which is contrary to Mr. Bs. purpose here.

3. Saith he, By faith it is that promises were obtained, Heb. 11.33.

Answ. It is said, by faith they subdued Kingdomes, in the same v. and therefore after the rate of Mr. Bs. reasoning, none should subdue Kingdomes but the Church. The faith there is such a faith as the just lived by, ch. 10.38. therefore if Mr. Bs. arguing be good, promises of mercy should be made to none, but those who believe with such a faith, and consequently it is not the meer visible Church but the invisible onely to whom such mercy is assured. The answer is by denying the consequence, that because promises were obtained by faith, therefore mercy is not assured to any by promise but the Church.

4. He adds. To Abraham and his seed were the promises made, Gal. 3.16. both common and special: The children of the promise are accounted for the seed, Rom. 9.8. Therefore if those without the Church were children of the promise, then they should be the seed. The promise is sure to all the seed, Rom. 4.16. The promise is to you and your children, and as many as the Lord shall call, Acts 2.39. The seed are heirs of the promise.

Answ. Mr. Bs. heedlesness still appears. He should prove, that such mercy as he conceives promised Exod. 20.6. (which he will not avouch to be saving mercy) is assured to none but the Church, and he means the visible Church: but here he brings promises of saving mercy, which he dare not lay to be made to the children of all that love him, Exod. 20.6. and are indeed made onely to those who are of the invisible Church, and therefore impertinently alledged. The promises, Gal. 3. 16. are such as are made to Christ either personal for his body mystical, or to Christ mystical, and the promises are those by which is the inheritance, v. 18. righteousness by faith, v. 21, 22. which can be true onely of the elect, and so that, v. 29. If ye be Christs, then are ye Abrahams seed, and heirs according to the promise. So Rom. 4. 16. is meant onely of true believers, and Rom. 9. 8. of the elect onely. Now it's not denied, that the promises of righteousness and life belong onely to the Church invisible; but these promises are far different from the promise to the children of them that love God, Exod. 20. 6. which Mr. B. will have onely meant of the visible Church, and of things much below saving benefits. The Text, Acts 2. 39. is as impertinently alledged, as hath been proved at large before, the promise there being not meant of any visible priviledge nor the fathers there considered as believers, or lovers of God, but as crucifiers of Christ, and the promise not said to be to any of either sort, but those who were called by God.

5. Saith Mr. B. The Church is the house and family of God, and the promises are his treasure, and Christs legacies, and the word of promise is his Testament; therefore not for those without. The Church is the pillar and ground of truth, and the word is the truth. In the middest of the Church are Gods praises, Heb. 2. 12. therefore in the Church are his mercies and promises. It is by the Church that the manifold wisdome of God is known, Eph. 3. 10. The Church onely is that body whereof the Lord of the promises is head, Col. 1. 18.

Answ. The promises of saving benefits are Gods treasure, and belong onely to the invisible Church; but it follows not therefore that God makes no promise, or the mercy Exod. 20. 6. belongs to none out of the visible Church. Let it be yeelded, the Church is the pillar of truth, and the word is the truth; yet that God makes no promises to Cyrus, Nebuchadnezzar, and others out of the Church, or that his promise to them is not true, or that he vouchsafes no mercy to them, follows not. God is praised in the Church, and his counsel made known, and Christ the head of the Church onely, and yet all praise, promise, and mercy not appropriate to the Church.

6. Yet again. They that are not in covenant, are not under the promises of this mercy, or have not this mercy stated on them by promise; But those that are without the Church are not in covenant. This argument is past contradiction. No man dare say but these are covenant mercies in this promise mentioned. Wicked men in the Church are within the covenant, as I have proved in the Appendix of my Aphorisms; but those without are not in covenant, though they may have some conditional promises offered. The covenant and such promises as these go together: Therefore it is called the covenant of promises, Eph. 2. 12. Rom. 9. 3, 4. So is mercy onely assured by the covenant, Deut. 7. 9, 12. and that to the Church onely, 1 Kings 8. 23. Neh. 1. 5. & 9. 32. Mic. 7. 20. Luke 1. 50, 72. 1 Pet. 2. 10. Many more Scriptures shew the conjunction between Gods mercy and covenant; and most certainly they are all out of covenant that are out of the visible Church.

Answ. If Paedobaptists had not a mind to mock rather then to teach people by their writings, me thinks being so often called upon to speak distinctly what covenant they mean, when they say infants and visible churchmembers are in covenant, and in what manner they are in covenant nant by Gods act, their own, or the baptizers, they would ſtill when they ſpeak of being in covenant clear their meaning. There are divers Covenants of God; that with Noah, Gen. 9. that with Abraham, Gen. 17. that with the Jews, Exod. 19. the new Covenant, Heb. 8.9,10,11,12. Being in Covenant muſt needs come from their own act of covenanting, and then the ſenſe is, Wicked men in the Church are within the Covenant, that is, they promiſe to God: But in this ſenſe no infant is in Covenant with God; for no infant promiſeth to God. Or being in Covenant is from Gods act of promiſing, and thus it is moſt certainly falſe that they are all out of Covenant that are out of the viſible Church: For all men and beaſts are in the Covenant with Noah, Gen. 9.11,12. Mr. B. himſelf ſaith thus in his Appendix to his Aphoriſms, anſw to the 8th. object. p. 48. There is a Covenant betwixt God and every living creature. If I ſhould inſtance in all the promiſes made to Ahab, Nebuchadnezzar, Cyrus, Darius, &c. it would be tedious. The Jews not yet re-ingraffed, not of the viſible Church, are certainly in Covenant in this ſenſe, Rom. 11.26,27. Iſaac, Jacob, afore they were born were in Covenant, and ſo all elect infants in their mothers womb, and men of years yet in infidelity are within the Covenant of Evangelical grace, even the new Covenant, Heb. 8. though not in the viſible Church. The minor therefore of Mr. Bs. argument is ſo far from being juſt contradiction, that it is in my apprehenſion manifeſtly falſe. I grant all mercies mentioned in any promiſe are Covenant mercies; but for the mercy, Exod. 20.6. it ſeems Mr. B. cannot tell what it is, though he tell us on his word it is more then corporal, if not ſpecial. Now he ſaith, Appendix, p. 8. 1 Sam. 10.4,5,6,7. The ſpirit of God and other favours are promiſed to Saul. And ſure as much is promiſed to Cyrus, Iſa. 44.28. & 45.1, &c. as was to Saul. Wicked men in the viſible Church, continuing ſo to the end, neither are, nor ever were in the Covenant of Evangelical grace, or new Covenant, though they have been in the Covenants with Noah, and ſome other Covenants, in ſome of which alſo wicked men without the viſible Church have been. The Covenants of promiſe (not as Mr. B. reads it, the Covenant of promiſes, Epheſ. 2.12.) were as it is moſt likely the Covenants Gen. 17. Exod. 19. and the meaning of the Apoſtle in ſaying the Epheſians were ſtrangers from them, ſeems to be, that they were not acquainted with them, and therefore in appearance further from God, as in like manner their uncircumciſion and alienation from the policy of Iſrael, are alledged to the ſame purpoſe. And yet when they were made believers, and were in the viſible Church, they were in neither Covenant as there is meant, I mean, they were not in the Covenant made to Abraham, Gen. 17. as it did contain ſpecial promiſes made to his natural ſeed, nor in the Covenant made at Horeb any more then they were circumciſed or in the policy of Iſrael. Rom. 9.1,2. hath nothing of Covenants or promiſes, but what is v. 4. is often before ſhewed to be meant of the Covenants and promiſes peculiar to the Iſraelites; and therefore, though the Covenant and ſuch promiſes go together, yet therein is nothing which pertains to the viſible church membership of our children, thoſe who are now in the Church being not in those Covenants which were peculiar to the Israelites. 'Tis true the mercy meant Deut. 7. 9. was assured by Covenant, but that Covenant was v. 12. it which God sware to the fathers, which so far as it was Evangelical, belongs onely to the elect whether of Jews or Gentiles, so far as political to the Hebrews onely. The same I say of 1 Kings 8. 23. Nehem. 1. 5. & 9. 32. Mic. 7. 10. The texts Luk. 1. 50. 72. 1 Pet. 1. 10. are plainly meant of saving mercy, and of the elect or invisible Church onely. So that though I grant a conjunction between Gods mercy and Covenant, and that saving mercy is assured onely by the Covenant to the Church invisible onely, yet I deny that God is in Covenant with none but those of the visible Church, that God hath not promised such mercy as is meant Exod. 20. 6. to any but in the visible Church, that what continuance of mercy is assured Exod. 20. 6. to posterity is assured to believers children now as it was to the Israelites, that they are all visible Churchmembers to whom that mercy is assured, and therefore infer that the pretended ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership hath no footing in that text.

Mr. B takes upon him to answer some objections, but very lamely. If any object, saith he, that this promise is to the children of them onely that love him and keep his Commandments; and wee know not who those be; I answer, it is true, but though God make the promise onely to such, yet quoad nos, it belongeth to others; that is, wee are bound to deal with all those that profess love and obedience by a serious probable profession, as if they were truly what they profess: This I shall prove afterwards. He that hath the face to say that God estateth here his mercy on the children of those that love, and obey him, and yet taketh them not for so much as members of the visible Church, hath too hard a forehead for me to dispute it with any further.

Answ. Though wee are to take such professours by a judgement of charity to have such love, and title to the promise, and are to exhibit all such offices of love as we are bound to by such a love as is due to them that truly love God, yet we are not bound to take them for visible churchmembers by that judgment of charity, but by a judgment of certainty sensibly perceiving their profession; nor are we to take their children as visible Churchmembers now not by Pædobaptists own grounds, for they are not so but upon their parents real love, they being not visible Churchmembers but by the Covenant which belongs not to them except they do truly love God, and not in shew onely, which is to bee known by a judgement of certainty not of charity onely, and that being not attainable it is not by Mr. Bs. own grounds knowable that any infant is a visible Churchmember. What he saith he shall prove afterwards hath been examined already in the first part of this Review sect. 35. I am not moved by Mr. Bs. censure, but take it for a speech of a man who loves to talk confidently when hee disputes weakly, like those who set out weak members with much bumbast.

He adds, Some may object, 1. That they know not what mercy it is that is here promised, whether common or special: To which I answer: what if they know not? yet it is mercy; and more then corporal if not spe- cial; what if God promise onely in general to bee to them a merciful God? sure it affordeth us ground of confidence and comfort: As it would do to a poor man to have a Prince promise to be merciful to him and his children.

Answ. That the mercy Exod. 20. 6. is more then corporal, if not special is said, but no proved by Mr. B. that he dare so confidently assert infants visible Churchmembership from a promise of mercy which hee cannot certainly resolve of what mercy it is, shews hee hath a bold face not fit for a man that seeks for truth. Especially if it be considered that no promise of it self doth make a man actually a visible Churchmember, no not of faith or profession, or visible Churchmembership. For a promise assures a futurity, puts not a thing in present being. 'Tis true a promise gives ground of confidence and comfort, that the thing shall be in its due time which is promised, but a promise of any mercy in general cannot assure the futurity of visible Churchmembership, no not though it were of more then corporal or special mercy, and therefore this argument his own words do sufficiently evince to bee onely added to make a number without strength.

2. Saith he, "They may object, that it is uncertain what is meant by "a thousand generations: whether it be the remote or the neareſt pro- "geny. To which I answer: 1. I judge it to be onely to the immedi- "ate children of godly or ungodly parents, that the promise and threat "in this Commandment is made to; else there would bee a contradi- "ction between them. For if the third generation of a wicked man "should have godly parents between, then the promise would belong "to them, and consequently not the threat; and so on the other side. "The meaning seems plainly to me to be this, that God will encrease "the punishment of the children of ungodly parents according as they "succeed their parents, remembring the sins of the grand-fathers in pu- "nishing their children (they being still the children onely of the wic- "ked.) And that he will multiply mercies on the posterity of the righ- "teous, the more still because they had righteous progenitors, suppo- "sing still that they are the children of such.

Answ. To interpret a thousand generations or the third and fourth by one onely, is such a piece of Arithmetick as I should conceive none but an Ideot or natural fool would use. The imagined contradiction is easily avoided by conceiving, that it is not a plain promise or threat of what God will constantly do, but a declaration of what hee doth often, or in some cases; which exposition is confirmed from hence, in that we see so much variation in Gods dealings, as necessitates us so to limit it. Though Josiah were a godly Prince, yet God would not shew mercy to his sons, and though Manasseh repented, yet for his sins wrath fell on his posterity and the whole people. But let Mr. Bs. interpretation, or mine, or any others be righter, yet the speech must needs have such limitations as wil disable it from yeilding a certain rule, whereby the children of all visible professors visible Churchmembership may bee proved, and therefore it is frivolously alledged by Mr. B. to that end.

2. Saith he, "But I further answer: What if this were not under- "stood "stood? must wee therefore reject that which may bee understood?

"There is somewhat doubtfull in the text, viz. what mercy it is particularly? and to how many generations? if ungodly progenitors intervene? And there is somewhat beyond doubt in the text, that is, "that God estateth his mercy on the immediate off-spring of his people. "Now must I throw away that which is past doubt because of that "which is doubtfull? So we may throw away all the Scriptures.

Answ. We must not reject that which may be understood, nor must we wrest the Scripture to infer from it that which cannot be inferred, but omit the allegation of doubtful texts, and urge that which is certain. That which hee conceives undoubted is I conceive uncertain, That God estateth his mercy on the immediate off spring of his people. The instance of Josiah.s children is sufficient to shew it not to bee universally true. That which he acknowledgeth doubtfull is enough to shew, that nothing can be from this text certainly inferd for Mr. Bs. purpose, and therefore in the close of this Chapter Mr. B. confesseth that which is sufficient to shew, that the visible Churchmembership of all infants of godly parents much less of meer professors, cannot bee gathered from Exod. 20. 6. I pass on to the next.

Ch. 22. he saith thus. "The 17th. arg. is drawn from Psal. 37. 26. "[His seed is blessed] that is the righteous mans seed; whence I argue "as before: If God by his unchanged law and promise, have pronounced the seed of the righteous blessed, then certainly they are members "of his visible Church. But hee here pronounceth them blessed; therefore, &c. 1. I have proved before that hee hath so done by no society "out of the Church: They that say he hath pronounced any other society blessed, let them shew it. But it is absurd once to imagine that "God should pronounce a society blessed, and yet take them for none "of his visible Church. 2. That this promise is an unchangeable promise, I take for past doubt, till Mr. T. shew me where it is repealed "a little better then he hath shewed mee the repeal of infants Church-membership. It is made to the righteous and their seed in general, "and not to the Jews onely: it is writ en in the Book of Psalms from "whence Christ and his Apostles fetch many texts for confirmation of "their doctrine. And if it had been spoken but to the Jews, yea or to "one particular person, yet if it cannot be proved to bee restrained to "them as being from a reason proper to them, the Scripture teacheth us "to apply it to all the people of God, Heb. 12. 5. The Apostle applieth "that to all believers, which was spoken onely to Joshua, I will never "leave thee nor forsake thee. So Heb. 13. 6. from Psal. 118. Heb. 10. 16, "17, Rom. 10. 6.

Answ. 1. That the speech Psal. 37. 26. compared with v. 25. seems rather to be a narration of what the Psalmist found by experience, then a promise of God. Nevertheless sith there are promises to like purpose elsewhere, as Psal. 112. 2. Prov. 20. 7. I will not deny the speech Psal. 37. 26. to imply a promise, nor will I say God hath revoked (or as Mr. Bs. language is) repealed it. 2. Nor will I say that this promise was proper to the Jews, though I conceive that the promises to posterity have more reference to the Israelites then other people by vertue of the national and legal Covenants made to that people, and I think Mr. Br. reason of no force, that it is not made to the Jews onely, because it is written in the book of the Psalms; for promises proper to them are there, as *Psal.89.4,21,&c. Psal.132.11,&c.* 3. I deny not promises to one particular person may be safely applied oft times to others. 4. I deny that when *Psal.*37.26. it is said his seed is blessed, and *Psal.*112.2. the generation of the righteous shall be blessed, this must be understood of every one of their seed, or at all times, as in their infancy, the speech being true onely of that which happens often, though not always. Mr. B. himself, p.149. saith, Even as when he saith [the seed of the righteous are blessed] he doth not tie himself to make every one blessed with his special blessing, though he do it ordinarily. And therefore it is most frivolously alledged to prove an ordinance of every infants visible churchmembership unrepealed, though the parent be no righteous person, but a visible professour, and very vicious, even an enemy to godliness. 5. There's not a word that intimates any society here pronounced blessed, much less the society of the Church. Nor doth the term [blessed] prove it must be meant of the Church. For others then the Church and churchmembers are sometimes blessed, as Psal. 137.9. *Psal.*144.15. Mr. B. here *ch.*24. *They that dash the children of Babylon against the stones are blessed, Psal.*137.9. Luke 23.29. 6. Mr. B. himself tels us, *p.*330. That he affirms onely a certainty of churchmembership, and a strong probability of the justification of the infants of the righteous. But if we urge the word strictly, they onely are blessed whose sins are forgiven, *Psal.*32.1. *Rom.*4.6,7. and therefore this Text may as soon prove justification of every righteous mans seed (which Mr. B. asserts not) as visible churchmembership. Yea, nowhere is any termed blessed by reason of his visible churchmembership, but many times for their outward prosperity, as *Psal.*144.15. *Deut.28.2,&c. Gen.*17.20. & 27.38,39. And that in this respect the blessing is meant, *Psal.*37.26. may be gathered 1. from the constant tenour of the promises made to the righteous and their seed, which either are altogether or for the most part in blessings of this life, and accordingly the performance: 2. Because in the New Testament in which spiritual blessings are assured, there is no promise of them to a believer and his seed, but to believers onely: 3. The occasion and scope of the Text, *Psal.*37.25,26. leads plainly to this sense, that the righteous is not so forsaken, nor his seed, as to be destitute of bread, that though he be mercifull and lendeth, yet his seed is blessed with sufficient provision of outward things: 4. The Texts, *Psal.*112.2. *Psal.*128. 1,2,3,4. *Psal.*144.15. lead us to this sense. From all which I answer by denying the consequence of the major in Mr. Bs. argument, and to his proof say, that it is no absurdity to pronounce persons blessed, and yet none of Gods visible Church.

Sect. 7.

SECT. LXXI.

Mr. Bs. 18th. arg. from the priority of infants churchmembership before Circumcision: His 19th. from Gods proneneſs to mercy: His 20th. from bleſſing and curſing, Deut. 28. are anſwered.

MR. B. proceeds thus, ch. 23. "The 18th. arg. is this: If infants were "churchmembers before ever Circumciſion was inſtituted, then cer-"tainly it was not proper to the Jews, and conſequently not ceaſed ac-"cording to Mr. T. his own Doctrine: But infants were churchmem-"bers before Circumciſion was inſtituted; therefore it was not proper "to the Jews, nor is ceaſed. Here at our Diſpute Mr. T. ſeemed to "yeeld all, if I would prove infants were churchmembers before Cir-"cumciſion.

Anſ. So far as I can diſcern by my memory and ſuch notes I have of the Diſpute, this was my conceſſion, That if Mr. B. would prove admiſſion of infants as churchmembers before Circumciſion, I ſhould yeeld to what he averred, that the law and ordinance of infants as viſible churchmembers was not repealed. Yet I confeſs, by reaſon of Mr. Bs. quickneſs of ſpeech, his unheeded altering terms, uſing often [viſible churchmembers] for [admiſſion as viſible churchmembers] which in that time in the conflict of Diſpute I did not always take notice of, or through wearineſs mention, it not to be unlikely I did ſay as Mr. B. ſaith I did. However by my writings it appears this is and was my conſtant judgement, that infants were viſible members of no Church but that of the Hebrews, nor ſuch till by Gods call of Abraham and his houſe they were taken to be his ſeparated people; and that infants were not admitted viſible churchmenbers, nor any law of admiſſion till that of Circumciſion, Gen. 17.

Mr. B. adds, But in his Sermon ſince among much of the ſame ſtuff, he made the poor deluded people believe (I mean thoſe that will believe him) that by infants being churchmembers, I mean nothing elſe but that they ſuck of the breſts of godly parents, and are brought up in the family of godly parents; juſt as in our Diſpute he would have faced me down, before thouſands of people, that by churchmembership I meant nothing but Circumciſion; I told him I did not, and he told the people ſtill that I did. Is it any intemperance or harſhneſs upon ſuch dealings to ſay, that it is ſad that (I will not ſay eminent holineſs, but) a very little tenderneſs of conſcience, and fear of God, and love of truth or charity to a brother, yea or common modeſty ſhould not reſtrain this! but that Mr. T. durſt, firſt, take on him to ſearch the heart, and know a mans thoughts to be contrary to his profeſſion; ſecondly, and contrary to the plain ſenſe of his terms of ſpeech; thirdly, and perſwades multitudes of people that it is ſo. what hope can I have that ever Mr. T. ſhould be brought to the truth, when he hath not ability enough to underſtand what is the meaning of [a member of the viſible Church] and that after I had so fully told him! I was long before I could get him to confess, that Circumcision and Churchmembership were two things, and separable, till I gave him instance in women.

Answ. 1. In the Dispute I confess I did conceive that Mr. B. could mean nothing but the command of Circumcision by his ordinance of infants visible churchmembership, not imagining that he should magnifie such a toy, as he hath in his Letter to me devised from Gen. 1.26,27. & 3.15. &c. which, and not defect of truth, tenderness of conscience, modesty, or charity (in all which whether of us be defective the Lord will judge) made me so confident he did mean as I then said. 2. But that I ever said in my Sermon, that by infants being churchmembers he meant nothing else but that they suck the brests of godly parents, and are brought in the family of godly parents, I do not yet believe. This I might, and I think did say, and do say it again, That I knew no sign whereby infants are visible churchmembers, except those be signs which are mentioned. 3. That I was long in yeelding the separation of Circumcision and visible churchmembership, it was because I conceived that he meant infants of other people besides the circumcised, were visible churchmembers; but when I found he meant that they were distinct and separable in the people of the Jews, I yeelded it.

He proceeds thus. And now must I be fain to shew, that churchmembership is neither sucking the brest of a godly woman, nor being brought in the family? what a hard word is this [Churchmember?] when I know not possibly how to speak it plainer. why, Sir, where is the difficulty? Is it in the word Church? I suppose we are agreed what a Church visible is? at least you understand it? Or is it in the term [member?] why, do you not know what a [member] is? How understand you Pauls discourse about the members and body? Do you understand what is totum aggregatum & pars totius? Do you understand what it is to be a member of a City, or of a family? and why not of a Church? If I say children are members of this Kingdome (or (to please you) Commonwealth) or if I say children are members of every City in the land, and of every family where they are, this is all true; and me thinks a man of your parts should understand it. And why not when I say, that infants are members of the Church? But if you will not understand, there is no remedy.

Answ. That Mr. B. and I are not agreed what a visible Church is, hath appeared before in the 2d. part of this Review, sect. 17. I think I understand others when they speak of a visible churchmember, and I think I now understand Mr. B. But in the Dispute I confess I did not understand Mr. B. when he termed infants visible churchmembers, not because of the difficulty of the thing, but because Mr. B. had a language (as I then imagined, and now find) of his own, of a mediate Disciple and a visible Churchmember by anothers faith, without any note in their persons whereby they are discernable sensibly to be Christians more then infidels children: Nor did he in the Dispute or since clear it to me, that anothers faith could be a form or note whereby an infant might be denominated or discerned sensibly to be a visible Christian churchmember, or a Disciple of Christ. This if he shall yet do, I shall not trouble him to shew that churchmembership is neither sucking of the breast, nor being brought up in a godly family, but shall (passing by his jeer at the Parliaments altering the term Kingdome into Commonwealth) confess infants members of the visible Church as of civil Kingdomes and Cities. Till then, I take Mr. Bs. language of infants discipleship and visible churchmembership by a promise and parents faith to be frivolous gibberish and false doctrine.

But Mr. B. attempts to prove his minor, 1. from Mal. 2. 15. where he would have [a seed of God] to be visible churchmembers. But 1. he no where shews this to be the sense: 2. this is not the sense: For here the proper end of marriage is expressed, which is common to believers and infidels. But it is not the end of the marriage of infidels to seek a seed which should be churchmembers visible or invisible, neither their nor any others marriage is to propagate godliness or the profession of it, but to propagate a legitimate posterity, who are called, a seed of God, because according to his institution. But of this interpretation I need say no more then what is said in answer to Mr. M. in the first part of this Review, sect. 13. and to Mr. Bs. exception against my interpretation here, in the 17th. section. 2. Because infants in Abrahams family were churchmembers before Circumcision. Which I grant after the time of Abrahams call, and Gods separating his house to be his people; and therefore if limited to the space of time between Abrahams call, Gen. 12. and the institution of Circumcision, Gen. 17. I should grant the minor in Mr. Bs. argument, and deny the consequence of the major. Nevertheless in the proof of his minor there are sundry things, which I think not meet to pass by without animadversion. 1. That which he saith Circumcision did not not make infants churchmembers, I grant it; yet it made them visible churchmembers, though not of it self alone, yet with other signs: So that although I deny not other signs also to have concurred, yet this sign in part made them visible members of that Church. 2. When he saith the Covenant maketh churchmembers, how far it is true is shewed above at large, and withal how Mr. B. is mistaken in making it the sole efficient cause. 3. If it be true that Circumcision is but a sign of the Covenant (as he saith) how is it a seal (as is commonly asserted and by Mr. B. himself) as somewhat more then a bare sign? 4. If it be not a sign chiefly of that Covenant which maketh churchmembers, but which promised Abraham the extraordinary priviledges after his believing, then it is some other Covenant which Circumcision was chiefly a sign of, then the Covenant which maketh churchmembers; which being as I conceive the Covenant of grace in Christ, it follows, 1. That the Covenant, Gen. 17. according to Mr. B. was not the Covenant of grace. 2. That it promised extraordinary priviledges to Abraham. 3. That Circumcision was chiefly a sign of this promise, and consequently the use of circumcising infants was not out of a reason common to believers infants, but peculiar to Abraham and his seed, which cross sundry of Pædobaptists prime hypotheses. 4. Neither doth the Apostle say, Rom. 4. that the promise went before Circumcision; nor doth it follow, if he did, that churchmembership then went before it. 5.

It

It may be, and by learned men is questioned, whether the infants or the parents be termed the breakers of Gods Covenant, Gen. 17. 14. and if they were, it follows not they were of that people and in the Covenant before, the breaking the Covenant being not a breaking off from being in Covenant, but a breaking of Gods command in that Covenant; and their cutting off from Gods people, might be by preventing from being Gods people, as well as by making them not his people who were. 6. Though the Scripture do not intimate, that Abrahams family was then first made a Church, yet in calling that Church the Circumcision, it intimates, that then when they were circumcised they were solemnly declared to be Gods people: And if the Scripture do not intimate, that then infants were first admitted members, as Mr. B. saith here, it will concern him to shew where the Scripture intimates their admission before, and how. I did conceive by Mr. Bs. words, p. 24. and elsewhere, that as he now avoucheth no other way by precept or example of admission but by Baptism, so he avouched formerly no other way but by Circumcision. I wish he had in the beginning told us his mind plainly, the concealing of which in the Dispute, and since, hath occasioned the misleading of many, and a great part of my trouble.

3. Mr. B. argues thus. That infants were churchmembers before Circumcision, I prove most likely thus: If God had before the same tender love to the faithfull and their seed as he had after, and there be no mention in Scripture when the churchmembership of infants did begin (since the first infants) then we are to judge that it did not begin at the institution of Circumcision (but rather with the first infant of faithfull Adam, though he after fell off) because Gods love to the faithfull and their seed, was as great before as after: But the antecedent is true, therefore the consequent. He that will prove a beginning of infants churchmembership since the first infants; let him bring any Scripture or good reason for it, and I will believe him (which I never expect to be done.)

Answ. 1. This reason, if it were good, might as well prove the invisible as well as visible churchmembership of all infants of believers, and the visible churchmembership of the seed unborn as well as born, and of the most open profane children of believers, as well as the youngest children born into the world. 2. The love of God was never to the faithfull and their seed universally, I mean the special distinguishing love of God, nor to any of them but according to his election of grace. 3. God might and did love the faithfull and their seed, and yet the infant seed were not visible churchmembers afore Abrahams time. 4. The reason of that regard God had to Abrahams inheriting posterity to take their infants for visible churchmembers, was from his peculiar design he had on that people, to make them the people from whom his sons comming should be expected, which he vouchsafed not to believers of other people, whom yet he loved and their seed in respect of Gospel mercies. 5. The beginning of infants visible churchmembership is sufficiently shewed before, in that it is not shewed to have been any where but in the Hebrew nation. 6. If Adams infants, he standing in integrity, had been visible churchmembers, yet they had been such onely in the the Church by nature, which is nothing to the present point of visible churchmembership in the Church instituted by electing some to be of the Church, and some not. From hence I answer to the argument, 1. by denying the antecedent, that there is no mention in the Scripture when the churchmembership visible of infants did begin. 2. The consequence of the major, if it did not, it proves not the visible churchmembership of infants afore Abrahams time; much less from Adams creation, sith then there was no such Church to be as now we enquire of, and Gods love might be to believers seed, and yet they no visible churchmembers.

The last argument, whereby Mr. B. would evince infants visible churchmembership before Abrahams time, which he saith here he had not leisure to improve largely, he hath, in his Letter to me before recited, I think to the utmost he could, urged in, and the answer thereto is fully made here, sect. 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59. and thereby it may appear, not onely to a man of common sense, but of acute sense, that there is likelihood that infants should be visible churchmembers in Abrahams family, and yet not in the foregoing Patriarchs, and that from the Scripture, and yet Gods love as great to Noah, Sem, and their seed as to others. Nor is it true that all these churchmembers are bestowed upon the standing Gospel grounds of the Covenant of grace entred with our first parents presently upon the fall, but visible Churchmembership of infants was upon the special transeunt fact of God in taking the Hebrew nation to bee his people. And though the promise Gen. 3. 15. comprehend infants, yet not all infants; and I wonder how Mr. B. beeing a man of common sense, should not discern that if hee will have the whole seed of the woman comprized in the promise Gen. 3. 15. and that they are thereby Churchmembers, hee must baptize all the posterity of Eve, which hee makes a thing to bee avoided p. 110. and gives cautions against it. And it is to me a sign of his palpable inconsiderateness in this his hasty scribling, that he cites Revel. 12. 17. to prove Satans enmity against the whole seed of the woman, against our infants no doubt, when the woman, Revel. 12. 17. is not Eve, as Gen. 3. 15. but the woman cloathed with the Sunne commonly conceived to represent the Christian Church, and the seed are said to keep the commandments of God, and to have the testimony of JESUS CHRIST, which cannot bee said of infants. But I leave him to the Lord to give him either repentance for his abuse of Scripture and perverting the truth, or to let him fill up the measure of his iniquity, and proceed to the next.

"Ch. 24. arg. 19th. If God bee not more prone to severity then "to mercy, then hee will admit of infants to bee members of the "visible Church. But God is not more prone to severity then to mercy: "Therefore he will admit of infants to be visible Churchmembers. All "that needs proof here is the consequence of the major proposition, which "is made evident thus: God hath cut off multitudes of infants of wicked "men, both from the Church and from life (for the sins of their pro-"genitors) therefore if he should not admit some infants of faithfull men,

" ſo much as into the viſible Church, then hee ſhould bee more prone " to ſeverity then to mercy: (except it bee proved that God giveth
" ſome greater mercy out of the Church, which is not yet proved:) All
" the children of Dathan and Abiram and their accomplices, were ſwal-
" lowed up with them for their rebellion, and ſo cut off both from the " Church and life. Achans ſons and daughters were all ſtoned and bur" ned for his ſin, and ſo cut off both from the Church and life, Joſ. 7.
" 25, 6. Yea it was the ſtabliſhed law of God concerning any City that " ſhould ſerve other Gods (by the ſeducement of whomſoever) that is,
" if they ſhould break the Covenant (for the Covenant is that they take " God onely for their God) then that City ſhould wholly be deſtroy-
" ed, and not ſo much as the infants ſpared, Deut. 13. 12, 13, 14. &c.
" And God concludeth it in his moral Law, that he will viſit the iniqui" ty of the fathers on the children to the third and fourth generation of " them that hate him. All the infants of Amalek are ſlain with the pa" rents by Gods command, Num. 31. 17. they that daſh the children of " Babylon againſt the ſtones are bleſſed, Pſal. 137. 9. The children of " Daniels accuſers are caſt unto the Lions, Dan. 6. 24. Yea God com" manded Iſrael to ſave the life of no one infant of all the nations that " were given them for inheritance; the Hittites, Amorites, Canaanites, " Perezites, the Hivites and Jebuſites, Deut. 20. 16, 17. (How all this " is reconciled with that of Eze. [the ſon ſhal not bear the iniquity of the " father] is ſhewed by our Divines that write on the 2d. Com.) And if " God will not admit the infants of believers ſo much as to bee mem" bers of his viſible Church, or Kingdom, then hee ſhould not onely
" ſhew more ſeverity to the ſeed of the wicked, then mercy to the " ſeed of the faithful; but ſhould even caſt out all infants in the " world from being in any viſible ſtate of Church mercies. And how " that will ſtand with the tenderneſs of his compaſſions to the godly
" and their ſeed, and the many promiſes to them, and the enlargement
" of grace in Goſpel times I know not.

Anſw. 1. The ſpeech of Gods proneneſs to mercy more then ſeverity, is according to my apprehenſion of Gods attributes not right, nor however it may paſs among the vulgar is it true in exact ſpeech, ſuch as ſhould be uſed in Diſputes. For though I acknowledge juſtice vindicative to be natural in God, and goodneſs; yet the term of proneneſs to ſeverity, intimates an inclination or deſire to it, which is ſtopped by a contrary inclination; whereas Gods attributes are all equally in him, nor hath he any propenſity of deſires to exerciſe one more then another, but he doth work all things according to the counſel of his own will. 2. It is falſly ſuppoſed, as if viſible Churchmembership were an act of remunerative mercy and not the taking of infants into viſible Churchmembership, were an act of ſeverity againſt the infant for the parents ſin, whereas the taking or not taking into viſible Churchmembership is as election to eternal life, or reprobation an act of ſoveraignty and li-berty, which God uſeth as hee pleaſeth without reſpect to any perſons or parents good or bad actions. 3. It is alſo as falſly ſuppoſed that by not taking infants into viſible Churchmembership they are call out from being in any visible state of Churchmercies. For their being in the families of the godly though not visible Churchmembers, puts them into a visible state of Churchmercies, even as well as if they were taken to be visible Churchmembers and baptised. 4. That God giveth some greater mercy then visible Churchmembership, to wit, eternal life, out of the Church visible is easily proved in that he saves elect infants which die in the womb, are abortives, or still born. And if Mr. B. do deny it hee must hold a tenet like the Papists, that without his visible Churchmembership infants are damned. 5. The grace of God in Gospel times is enlarged in the extent of it to all nations, in the doctrine of the Gospel concerning the Messiah comen already, freedom from the bondage of the law, in the powring out of the spirit, in the new Covenant, &c. although infants be not visible Churchmembers. 6. Gods tenderneß of compassions to the godly and their seed may and doth stand with the non-visible membership of their infants in the Christian Church, it being not out of any defect of mercy in God, or deprivation of mercy to them, which they may not have without it, but because it is his good pleasure that the Church Christian should not bee by natural descent, but by faith, not national but of believers of all Nations. 7. How God is said to admit into visible Churchmembership infants needs explication, admission, as I have hitherto conceived it, beeing the act of the administratour of baptism, according to Mr. Bs. doctrine pag. 24. and therefore his conclusion seems to have this sense, that God will baptise some infants with water, which is a friolous conceit. 8. If Mr. Bs. suppositions on which his argument rests should bee granted him, the conclusion should bee rather, that God will not permit the infants of the godly to bee put to death, but will keep them alive from the hands of persecutors, for otherwise hee should be more prone to severity to the wicked, then to mercy to the godly and their seed. For all the instances hee gives of Gods severity to the children of wicked men is in the taking away of their natural lives; and therefore his inference if there were any force in it, would conclude not the visible churchmembership of the infants of the godly, but the preservation of their lives in common calamities and persecutions; which it is certain he doth not, but as the Wiseman saith All things happen alike to alike to all, Eccles. 9. 2. Which things being premised, though the minor of M. Bs. first syllogism may be well questioned, yet waving it, I deny the consequences of the major in both the syllogisms, which rest on such futile dictates as he hath not proved, except by saying he knows not how it should be otherwise, which seems to intimate this fond conceit of himself, as if none could know what he doth not.

He goes on in his frivolous arguings thus. Ch. 25. "The 20th. arg. "I draw from Deut. 28. 4, 18, 3. Those that keep the Covenant are "[blessed in the fruit of their body;] and of Covenant-breakers it is "said [cursed shalt thou be in the fruit of thy body; thy sons and thy "daughters shall be given to another people, and thy eys shall look, "and fail with longing for them, &c. Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but thou shalt not enjoy them, for they shall go into captivity.

"The argument that I fetch hence is this. That doctrine which maketh "the children of the faithful to be in a worse condition (or as bad) then "the curse in Deut. 28 doth make the children of Covenant-breakers to "be in is false doctrine: But that doctrine which denieth the infants of "the faithful to be visible Churchmembers, doth make them to bee in "as bad or a worse condition then is threatned by that curse Deut. 28. "Therefore it is false doctrine. The major is undeniable. The minor "I prove thus: The curse on the children Deut. 28. is, that they go "into captivity: Now to bee put out of the whole visible Church "of Christ is a sorer curse then to go into captivitie: therefore "that doctrine which puts infants out of the Church, doth make them "in a more accursed state then those in Deut. 28. They might bee "Churchmembers in captivity as their parents were; or if they were "not, yet it was no worse then this; To bee in captivity is but "a bodily judgement directly; but to bee out of the Church is di-"rectly a spiritual judgement: Therefore to bee out of the Church, "is a greater judgement (which I must take for granted, having "before proved that it is far better to bee in the visible Church then "out.)

Answ. The minor of the first and second syllogism are both denied. For though to be put out of the whole visible Church of Christ, either by just excommunication or voluntary defertion is a heavie curse, yet to be put out doctrinally, that is, to teach that infants are not visible Christian churchmembers is not to put them under any curse at all, neither is it to be so, any judgement spiritual or bodily, nor are they in any better case by their being accounted visible Churchmembers and baptised then they are without both, nor hath Mr. B. proved any such thing before, but what he hath scribled to that purpose is before shewed to bee vain.

"Another argument, saith hee, this text would afford in that "the judgement on the children is part of the curse on the parents "(cursed shalt thou bee in the fruit of thy body) now GOD "doth not curse the faithful; but hath taken off the curse by "CHRIST (though corporal afflictions are left.) But I must "haste.

Answ. That non-visible Churchmembership of infants now is any part of judgment or curse for the parents sin hath not the least colour of proof from this text or any other. The purport of the whole chapter is quite besides the present businesse, it being to assure the Israelites of prosperity in Canaan, while they kept Gods Commandments and adhered to him, and curses on them and theirs, if they fell off from God; the curses are for the most part corporal and on the Israelites, and therefore the thing belongs not to the present point, nor is it true that always the judgment on the children is part of the curse on the parents neither in corporal nor spiritual evils.

And though the truly faithful are not cursed with the great curse of condemnation, yet those that are onely so visibly may bee so, yea and the faithfull themselves are not altogether free from some curſes both on themſelves and their children, as on the other ſide, wicked men may have ſome bleſſings on them and their children. Mr B. himſelf ſaid in the next ch. 24. before, They that daſh the children of Babylon againſt the ſtones are bleſſed, Pſal. 137. 9 yet were they Idolaters. Chriſt hath taken off the curſe oppoſite to the bleſſing of righteouſneſs, Gal. 3. 9, 10, 13. not every curſe from the faithfull. Out of all which I infer, that were it granted that the non viſible churchmemberſhip of infants were a judgement for the parents ſin, and that Chriſt hath taken off the curſe from the faithfull, yet it would not follow, that believing parents infants muſt be Chriſtian viſible churchmembers, ſith ſome curſes ſtill ſtay on the children for the parents ſin: Yea, Mr. B. before in his Letter tels me, that it was determined in one of their private Diſputes (by himſelf no doubt, the Dr. of the Chair in the Colledge of Worceſterſhire Miniſters at Kidderminſter) that the ſins of nearer parents are imputed as part of our original or natural guilt. I haſt after Mr. B.

SECT. LXXII.

Mr. Bs. 21*th. Arg. ch* 25. from the abſurdity of my Doctrine making all infants to be members of the viſible Kingdome of the Devil, is anſwered.

CH. 26. ſaith he, "The 21th. arg. That doctrine which mak th all "infants to be members of the viſible Kingdome of the D vil, is falſe "doctrine: But that doctrine which denieth any infants to be members "of the viſible Ch rch, doth make them all members of the viſible King-"dome of the Devil: Therefore it is falſe doctrine. Mr. T. taketh the "like reaſoning hainouſly from Mr. M. as if were injurious ſo to charge "him: And he ſaith, 1. Conſequences remote muſt not be faſtened "on men when they deny them, 2. Many unbaptized are not in the viſi-"ble Kingdome of the Devil; and asketh, whether children be in or out "of that Kingdome before Baptiſm: If out, then by not baptizing he "leaves them not in it, &c. To this I anſwer, 1. He that ſaith, infants "are all ſhut out of heaven, may well be charged for teaching that they "go to hell, becauſe the conſequence is not remote, but direct, among "thoſe that acknowledge not a third place. 2. I will onely lay a true "charge on the doctrine, and not the perſons: The doctrine ſure may be "charged with the conſequences, though the perſon may not. 3. It is "not your denial of Baptiſm directly, that leaveth infants in the viſi-"ble Kingdome of the Devil; but your denial of their churchmember-"ſhip: Therefore to thoſe vain paſſages I anſwer, That it's true, that "many unbaptized are in the Kingdome of Chriſt, and ſo many infants "alſo, and ſo not in the viſible Kingdome of the Devil: But that no man "who is known to be out of Chriſts viſible Church, ordinarily can be "out of Satans viſible Kingdome, I ſhall now prove; and ſo that your doctrine

" doctrine is guilty of making (I mean not really but doctrinally ma" king) all infants to be members of Satans visible Kingdome, in that
" you deny any infants to be members of the visible Church.

Answ. 1. That which I said about remote consequences not to be charged on men as their sentence, was spoken not from his charge of leaving all the infants to have their actual standing in the visible Kingdome of the Devil, but of putting them all out of the Covenant of grace; and this was made the bloudy sentence of the Anabaptists, though no such thing can be proved of them by any of their sayings. And therefore the two answers here of Mr. B. are impertinent, my speeches being about another point, though perhaps somewhat like it, and charged on us with it. And to Mr. Bs. answers I reply, 1. Mr. B. seems to me to oppose ineptly a direct consequence to a remote, whereas a near consequence is opposed to a remote, not a direct; for a remote consequence may be direct, as well as a near. But it is frequent with Mr. B. to abuse words. 2. If a person acknowledge a third place they that shut infants out of heaven may not be charged with it as their sentence, that they go to hell, which Mr. Bs. limitation intimates he acknowledgeth. And then by like reason this is not to be charged on me, for that I deny infants visible churchmembership, that I leave them in the visible Kingdome of the Devil, sith I leave them in a neutral state, of which more anon. 3. I shall examine the charge on my Doctrine, which I deny by denying the minor of Mr. Bs. syllogism. 4. Though Mr. B. call the passages in my Apology, p. 64. vain, yet it will appear there's no vanity in any of them. 5. The argument by which I proved that unbaptized persons may be in Christs visible Kingdome, which (Mr. B. confesseth) did fitly oppose Mr. Ms. imputation of leaving them all in the Devils visible Kingdome to whom we denied Baptism, I think will serve against Mr. Bs. opinion. For if it be true that infants are admitted into the visible Church by Baptism (which is his position, p. 24, 25.) then they are out of it afore they are baptized, (for afore admission none is in, but without,) and if so, according to Mr. Bs. doctrine, infants are in the visible Kingdome of the Devil, sith he denies a third estate, and the horrid consequence is to be charged on Mr. Bs. doctrine, not on mine. 6. Mr. Bs. way of charging my doctrine is as vain as Mr. Ms. Thus it proceeds.

For if it be certain (as you say) that no infants are members of the visible Church, they are out of it: And then I argue thus. If there be no third estate on earth, but all are either in the visible Church of Christ, or in the visible Kingdome of the Devil; then that doctrine which puts them out of the visible Church of Christ, doth leave them in the visible Kingdome of the Devil. But that there is no third state, but that all the world is in one of the two Kingdomes, I prove thus. The common definition of the Church affirmeth them to be a people called out of the world, and Christ saith, he hath chosen them out of the world, and that they are not of the world, and in the same place divers times calls the Devil [the Prince of this world,] Joh. 12.31. & 14.30. & 16.11. & 15.19. & 18.36. & 17. 6, 16. And the Apostle calleth him the God of the world, 2 Cor. 4.4. So then, if the Devil be the Prince and God of the world as it is distinct from the Church, and out of which the Church is taken: then all those that are not taken out of the world with the Church, are still of the world where Satan is Prince: But the antecedent is before proved, therefore the consequent is true. The world and the Church contain all mankind according to the ordinary Scripture distribution.

then,

Answ. 1. The world and the Church are not in all the places cited contradistinct. For Joh. 18.36. this world comprehends the Church as well as them without, Christs Kingdome was not from the Church by their weapons, or other procurement; but this world is opposed to heavenly power, and gift, from whence Christ had his Kingdome. 2. Nor in the rest of the places where the Devil is termed the God of this world, or the Prince of this world, or the Disciples are said not to be of the world, can the speech be meant of infants; for of them of whom it is said that the Devil is the God of this world, by the world are meant, 2 Cor. 4.4. those that believe not, in whom he hath blinded their minds, that the light of the glorious Gospel of Jesus Christ should not shine unto them; and so must the rest be understood, where he is said to be the Prince of this world, according to what is said Ephes. 2.2. which is not to be said of infants; and in other places, as John 15.19. John 17.14 16. they are said to hate the Apostles, which is not to be said of infants: And therefore from hence they are not proved to be in the Devils Kingdome, though they were reprobates. 3. The world is not in these places opposed to the visible Church, so that who ever are in the visible Church are not of the world, and they who are of the world are not of the visible Church. For 1. the world out of whom the Apostles were called, were the Jewish Church, which if Mr. B. do not (as I conceive he doth) make the visible Church of God when the Apostles were called, sure Mr. Bl. Mr. Cobbet, and others do, as I have shewed before, and therefore the world is not put as contradistinct to the visible Church. 2. The world is in the places cited so described by their actions of hating the Apostles, by their exclusion out of Christs prayer, Joh. 17.9. by their Prince Satan, by the Apostles calling and choosing out of them, that the world cannot be construed onely to note non-visible churchmembers, but a party that are obstinate enemies to Christ, and so reprobates, whether in the visible Church, or out of it; and if it stand in direct contradistinction to the Church (which I find not in any of the places cited) it is to the invisible, not to the meer visible Church: so that they who are without the visible Church, may be no part of the world therein meant; and they that are within the visible Church, may be part of the world. 4. The definition, that the Church are a people called out of the world, being expounded of the visible Church, is meant of outward call, which infants are not capable of, and so the definition excludes infants from being a part of the Church there meant, and yet they are not in the world in the sense in which it is taken in the Texts mentioned (except Joh. 18.36.) For they are not haters of Christ or his Apostles, nor recusant unbelievers, nor such as obey Satan as their Prince. But if it be expounded of the invisible Church, and the calling meant of invisible operation of the spirit, I deny not but elect infants may be so called out of the world, and be part of the invisible Church.

These things premised, I answer 1. The conclusion is not in the latter syllogism the same with the minor in the former syllogism which should have been proved. 2. The antecedent or minor in the later syllogism, which is this, [the Devil is the Prince and God of the world as it is distinct from the Church, and out of which the Church is taken.] if it be meant of the visible Church I deny. For neither is the world in any of the Texts distinct from the visible Church, but the visible Church or some members of it are the world there meant, and the Devil the Prince of them, and the visible Church in respect at least of many perhaps most of their members not taken out of the world, but in it still; nor is the Devil the Prince of them that yet are uncalled by an outward call from the world, if as infants they be not by their choice and actions conjoyned to the world, but of them that voluntarily adhere to and act with the wicked world. Infants are neither in the world as it is there taken, nor without, that is, they are neither with them nor against them in their present state; but (as they say in Logick) a whelp till the 9th day is neither blind nor seeing, so an infant till it act is neither within nor without the world visibly, in which Satan is Prince. Nor are those dictates of Mr. B. true, or proved by the Scriptures cited, that no man who is known to be out of Christs visible Church ordinarily can be out of Satans visible Kingdome, that the world and the Church visible contain all mankind according to the ordinary Scripture distribution. But if [the world] be taken for reprobates, and the Church be taken for the invisible Church of the elect, I grant it is true that infants are in one part, and that Satan or God is Prince of them: But this is nothing for Mr. B. purpose, though it be most agreeable to some passages, as Joh. 17.9, &c. about the world and the Church.

Mr. B. proceeds thus. If it be said, that yet they are not visibly in Satans Kingdome: I answer, If no infants be of Christs visible Church, and this be a known thing, then they are visibly out of it; and if they be visibly out of that Church, then they are visibly of the world which is Satans Kingdome, seeing the world and the Church contain all.

Answ. Neither is it true, that if it be a known thing that infants be not of Christs visible Church, then they are visibly out of it except it be so known from their sensible action; nor do the world, taken in the sense opposite to Gods people, and the visible Church contain all, as Mr. B dictates. Mr. B. adds.

If it be said, they may be of the invisible Church, and yet not of the visible, nor of Satans Kingdome; I answer, 1. it is visibly and not invisibly that the aforesaid distribution is to be understood. 2. I shall anon prove, that the visible Church is wider then the invisible, and that ordinarily we may not judge any to be of the invisible Church, who are not of the visible.

Answ. 1. How far the former speech is true or false, is shewed before. 2. As for the later, though we may not judge ordinarily these or those particular persons to be of the invisible Church who are not of the the visible, yet we may judge some infants at least are so, though non be of the visible Church.

"Again (saith Mr. B.) it appears that infants generally were of Sa-
"tans kingdome visibly till Christ fetcheth them out: Therefore those "that are not fetcht out are in it still: And no man can say they are fetcht
"out except by some means or other it be visible or discernable, Heb.
"2 14. Christ destroyed by death him that had the power of death, that "is the Devil. Satan had this power of death visibly over infants as well "as others. Therfore seeing Mr. T. buildeth so much on this Apol. p. 66.
"That infants are neither in the kingdom of Christ, nor Satan, visibly "till profession, either he must prove that God hath left it wholly in the "dark, and not revealed that any infants are of Satans visible kingdom, "or of Christs (the contrary whereof is abundantly proved) or he must find "out some 3d. kingdom or society, and so find out some 3d. King besides "the King of the Church, and the Prince of this world; and it's like he wil
"bee put to finde out a third place for them hereafter, besides heaven "and hell.

Answ. It is a weariness to the flesh to write books, it is much more when a man is to answer such scriblings as this of Mr. B. which being so magnified as it hath been, and written with so much confidence and insolent provocations, is a monument of the boldness and shallowness of readers and writers in this age. What frivolous arguing are here? Christ destroyed him that had the power of death, Satan had this power of death visibly over infants as well as others, Ergo they were of Satans kingdom as it is contradistinct to Christs visible Church till Christ by death fetcht them out? If Satans power of death visibly over infants, shew them to be in Satans visible kingdome as contradistinct to the visible Church, doth not the same prove all the infants of believers to be in Satans visible kingdome, as well as the infants of unbelievers? yea doth it not prove the visible Church to be in Satans visible kingdome? For over them Satan had this power of death as visibly as over the infants of unbelievers. Yea wherein doth the power of death visibly shew a persons being in the visible kingdome of Satan more then Jobs smiting in his body by Satan, or the womans who was a daughter of Abraham and bound by Satan 18. years, shewed them to have been then in the visible kingdome of the Devil as contradistinct to the visible Church? Besides those that Christ is said to have fetcht out or delivered are those who through fear of death were all their life-time subject to bondage, Heb. 2. 14. Doth Mr. B. interpret it is of infants? Besides if it appear that infants generally were of Satans kingdome visibly till Christ fetcheth them out, therefore those that are not fetcht out are in still: And no man can say they are fetcht out, except by some means or other it be visible or discernable, How can Mr. B. say any infants of believers are fetcht out of Satans kingdome visibly? By what means is it visible or discernable that a believers infant is fetcht out of Satans visible kingdome and not an unbelievers? Christs death was visible it's true, but that either Christs death did destroy visibly Satan, or visibly delivered those who were subject to bondage, or that by it is visible or discernable that a believers infant and not an unbelievers is fetcht out of Satan's visible kingdom, is unknown to me. The ordinary meanes whereby it is visible that a person is fetcht out of Satans visible kingdom, is in that he hears, obeys, and professeth the Gospel. Surely by this means or any other it is not visible or discernable, that any infant of the most sincere believer is fetcht out of Satans visible kingdome, therefore by Mr. Bs. own suppositions hee cannot say that any believers infant is fetcht out of the visible kingdome of the Devil, and so his argument is retorted on him: That doctrine which leaveth all infants in the visible kingdome of the Devil is false: But such is Mr. Bs. according to his own suppositions. Ergo. As for what hee would impose on mee, it is false, that God hath left it in the dark, it is clear as light at noon, that infants are neither in Christs nor Satans visible kingdome, and yet they have Christ or Satan for their King, and are to bee in heaven or hell, as they are elect or reprobate; And therefore his talk of what I must finde out is but his prattle, and of what hee hath abundantly proved, is but his idle vapouring of himself.

3. Saith hee, Sure the Apostle calls the world [them that are without] as distinct from the Church visible, who are within, Col. 4. 5. 1 Thes. 4. 12. And hee speaks it as the dreadfull misery of them, those that are without God judgeth, 1 Cor. 5. 12, 13. Now infants are either within or without, and to bee without is to bee of the world which the Devil is by Christ said to be Prince of.

Answ. To bee without Mark 4. 11. is to bee without, not within Gods election; to bee without Revel. 22. 15. is to bee without the gates of the city the new Hierusalem, which I take to bee all one as to be cast into outer darkness as Christ terms it. Either of these ways all infants are within or without, but [those without] in the places cited by Mr. B. cannot bee said of infants, for they are not persons towards whom wee are to walk in wisedome, Col. 4. 5. or honestly, 1 Thes. 4. 12. this beeing required that our example may not harden them, but it were ridiculous to require this in respect of infants. The Apostle doth not speak it as the dreadfull misery of them that are without that God judgeth them 1 Cor. 5. 12. but onely mentions it as an intimation why they belonged not to his judgement, nor doth hee in any of the places term them the world, who are without the visible Church, or Christ say that Satan is Prince of all that are not visible Churchmembers, but of the world of reprobates, and such as are contrary to Christ and in whom he rules nor is the term [those that are without] in any of those places taken for them that are without privatively for want of capacity to understand, profess, and act for Christ, but for those who are positively without by the acts of their own will, not receiving Christ, nor embracing the profession of him, such as were unbelievers, fornicators, idolaters, &c. 1 Cor. 5. 10, 11, 12. Such as could observe and did stumble at the evil practises of the Christians, Col. 4. 5. 1 Thes. 4. 12. in which sense it is not true that infants are without, though they be privatively or negatively without the visible Church.

SECT. LXXIII.

Mr. Bs. 22. arg. Ch. 27. that my doctrine leaves no ground of hope of ſalvation of infants dying, is anſwered.

CH. 27. Mr. B. goes on thus. The 22th. arg. That doctrine which "leaveth us no ſound grounded hope of the juſtification or ſalvation "of any dying infants in the world, is certainly falſe doctrine. But "that doctrine which denieth any infants to bee members of the viſible "Church, doth leave us no ſound grounded hope of the juſtification "or ſalvation of any dying infants in the world; therefore it is certainly "falſe doctrine. No reaſonable temperate Chriſtian will deny the ma-"jor, I think. The minor I know will be paſſionately denied. Mr. T. "takes it hainouſly at Mr. M. and Mr. Bl. that they pinch him a lit-"tle in this point, as if it were but to raiſe an odium upon him: And "yet when hee hath done all for the mitigation of the odium (which "hee ſaith was his end Apol. pag. 62.) yet he doth ſo little towards the "vindication of his doctrine, that hee confeſſeth [it ſuſpendeth any "judgement of infants, wee can neither ſay they are in (the Cove-"nant of grace) nor out, Apol. pag. 62.] Hee labours to prove that "there is no ſuch promiſe or Covenant in Scripture as aſſures ſal-"vation to the infants of believers; but that God would have us to "ſuſpend our judgement of this matter, and reſt on the Apoſtles de-"termination Rom. 9. 18. yet that there is a hope, though not certain, "yet probable and comfortable, taken from ſome general indefinite pro-"miſes of the favor of God to the parents, and experience that in all a-"ges hath been had of his merciful dealing with the children of his ſer-"vants, Apol. p. 112.]

Anſw. What I took hainouſly at Mr. M. and Mr. Bl. I did juſtly; what I ſaid that there is no ſuch covenant or promiſe in Scripture as aſſures ſalvation to the infants of believers, I meant it of them as ſuch, or univerſally what I ſaid that God would have us to ſuſpend our judgment of this matter, I meant whether this or that particular infant be in the Covenant of grace. To Mr. Bs. arg. I ſay if his major be meant of ſuch a grounded hope as is certain from faith, believing a particular promiſe of God concerning believers infants dying in infancy (as Mr. B. ſeems to underſtand it) I deny the major, if very probable and likely from ſuch declarations and promiſes and experiments as we have, I deny the minor, and ſhall follow Mr. B.

I will firſt, ſaith he, proſecute my argument and then conſider of theſe words. Underſtand therefore that 1. I do not charge their doctrine with a poſitive affirmation, that all infants do certainly periſh; but with the taking away of all poſitive Chriſtian well grounded hope of their ſalvation.

Anſw. Yet by your charging us with this, that by our doctrine they are not ſo much as ſeemingly in a ſtate of ſalvation, you do charge our doctrine with a positive affirmation that they all certainly perish. And it will appear by that which follows that with you no hope of their salvation is Christian and well grounded, but what is certain upon a promise of God apprehended by faith, in which is the chief difference between us.

You add, That the question now is not of particular infants of believers, but of the species or whole sort that so die; not whether this or that infant be certainly saved, or we have any such hope of it but the question is, whether there be a certainty or any such hope that God will justifie and save any infants in the world or any infants of believers at all?

Answ. Between whom the question is, as Mr. B. here saith, I do not understand: the question between me and my Antagonists is not as Mr. B. here sets it down. I have always asserted that there is a certainty and hope that God will justifie and save some infants in the world, some infants of believers, and have often acknowledged those that Christ prayed for, laying on his hands were elect ones, but the question is whether there be any such promise to a believer and his natural seed which assures salvation to them as the seed of believers, and consequently whether there be a certain hope of them all dying in their infancy that they shall be saved. This I have denied because I know no such promise in Scripture, and if there were it would prove the salvation of those at age though prophane as Esau: For if the promise belong to the seed as such, and it includes salvation, then it assures it to all the seed of believers, whether dying at age prophanely or in infancy. So that it is not true, that the question is not whether this or that infant be certainly saved, or we have any such hope of it, nor is it true that the question is of the species or whole sort that so die, or whether there be a certainty or any such hope that God will justifie and save any infants in the world, or any infants of believers at all, yea Mr. B. in the words next before would not charge our doctrine with a positive affirmation that all infants do certainly perish. But the question is whether there be a certainty from a promise that he will save them all dying in infancy, nor is the question of the species or whole sort of infants, but of the particular infants of believers.

Now, saith he, I affirm, 1. that there is a ground of Christian hope left us in this, that God doth save some infants (yea and that particular ones, though that be not now the question.

Answ. Now this I affirm too, though I assert not such a certainty by promise to infants of believers, as Pædobaptists do.

2. Saith he, That they that put them all out of the visible Church leave us no such hope. I will begin with the later, which is the minor in the argument. And 1. I take it for granted, that to be a visible member of of the Church, and to be a member of the visible Church, is all one. He that denieth that, will but shew his vanity; And that the invisible Church, or the sincere part is most properly and primarily called the Church, and the body of Christ; and the Church as visible containing also the insincere part, is called the Church; secondarily and for the sake of the invisible, and so it is called the body, because men seem to be of the invisible

Church, therefore they truly are of the visible: If we were fully certain by his own external discoveries, that any man were not of the invisible Church, that man should not be taken to be of the visible. Therefore the properties and priviledges of the invisible Church are usually given to the visible (as to be Saints, holy, all the children of God by faith, Gal. 3. 26. to be Christs body, 1 Cor. 12. 13. to be branches in Christ, Joh 15. 2, &c. because as the sincere are among them, so all visible members seem in the essentials of Christianity to be sincere; therefore if any converted Jew or Pagan were to be taken into the Church upon his profession, we ought not to admit him except his profession seem to be serious and so sincere; for who durst admit him, if we knew he came but in jest, or to make a scorn of Christ and Baptism? So that to be a member of the visible Church, or of the Church as visible, or a visible member of the Church are all one, and is no more but to seem to be a true member of the Church of Christ (commonly called invisible) or of the true mystical body of Christ. Therefore even Cardinal Cusanus calleth the visible Church, Ecclesia conjecturalis, as receiving its members on conjectural signs. And our Divines generally make the unsound hypocrites to be but to the Church as a wooden leg to the body, or at the best as the hair and nails, &c. and as the straw and chaff to the corn: And so doth Bellarmine *himself, and even many other whom he citeth of the Papists (Aquinas, Petr. a soto, Joh. de Turrecremata, Hugo, Alex. Alensis, Canus.) And when* Bellarmine feigneth Calvin and others to make two militant Churches, our Divines reject it as a calumny and manifest fiction; and say, that the Church is not divided into two sorts, but it is a two fold respect of one and the same Church; one as to the internal essence, the other as to the external manner of existing as Amef. speaks.

Answ. Though much of this passage be yeelded by me, yet I reject those speeches [because men seem to be of the invisible Church, therefore they truly are of the visible; to be a visible member of the Church, is no more but to seem to be a true member of the Church of Christ (commonly called the invisible) of the true mystical body of Christ] For to be a visible member of the Christian Church is not all one as to seem to be of the invisible Church. For, 1. a person may be of the visible Church, according to Mr. B. who lives alone in America, and therefore seems to no man to be of the invisible Church, no man knoweth or judgeth probably or certainly him to be of Christs mystical body. 2. A person may seem to be of the invisible Church, and yet not be of the visible, as an Indian while a Christian preacheth, who yet professeth not Christ, yet seems by his gestures to be affected with it, and sundry others. Therefore it is necessary to be a visible Churchmember, that his profession be visible, that is, be discernable to mens understanding through the sensibility of it. 3. To some a person may seem to be of the invisible Church, to others not, is he of the visible Church or not? or are both true? and if not, how shall we know which is true, which not? 4. To seem to be of the invisible Church is but accidental to the visibility of a Churchmember, though he should seem to none to be of the invisible Church, yea though through mens ignorance or uncharitableness the person should seem to be a reprobate or hypocrite, yet he might be nevertheless a visible Christian, and so a churchmember of the catholick visible, which Mr. B. avoucheth. Mr. Bs. reasons here go upon a gross mistake, as if it were all one to be a visible churchmember, and to be received or admitted as a visible churchmember: and that a person were denominated visible from what men apprehend or what seems to them, whereas the denomination is, as Ames saith truly in the place meant by Mr. B. from the external form or manner of existing. Though a person be not to be received as a visible member of the Church because he seems not to be sound, yet he may be a visible churchmember: Nor is he such because they pass a judgement on him, but because his profession is such as might shew him to be a Christian, if any did observe it, or would candidly interpret it. But how far Mr. B. errs from the true understanding of the main point of his book, what it is to be a visible churchmember, sometimes making it the same with a seeming to be of the mystical body of Christ, sometimes a right to a benefit, and how indistinctly he speaks of this thing (which if he had minded any exact disquisition of truth, he should in the beginning of his Dispute have first cleared) is shewed in the second part of this Review, sect. 17. at large pag. 128, &c. In this part, sect. 55, &c. And for want of observing this his mistake, I judge many learned men and others have been misled by him.

He saith, Again, you must understand, that to be a member of the visible Church is not to be a member of any particular or political body or society, as Rome would have it. And to be a visible member, doth not necessarily import that he is actually knowne to bee a member; for hee may live among the blinde that cannot see that which is visible. But that he is one so qualified, as that bee ought to bee esteemed in the judgement of men to belong to the Church of Christ: therefore a man living alone in America, may yet bee a member of the visible Church. For hee hath that which constituteth him a visible member, though there bee none to discern it.

Answ. 1. This passage doth overthrow Mr. Bs. definition of a visible Churchmember, which is, that he is one that seems to the judgement of man to be of the invisible Church: Now he that seems such, is actually known or discerned to be such; that seems so, which is thought to be so; Videtur quod sic, videtur quod non, in the Schools are expressions of a mans opinion; but according to Mr. B. to be a visible churchmember doth not necessarily import he is actually known or discerned, therefore he may be a visible churchmember who doth not seem to the judgement of man to be of the invisible Church, and then the definition is not right, as not agreeing to every thing defined. 2. His speeches He may live among the blind who cannot see that which is visible, that he is one qualified so as that he ought to be esteemed in the judgement of men to belong to the Church of Christ, a man living alone in America hath that which constituteth him a visible member though there be none to discern it, do plainly intimate, that visible churchmembership is constituted by some qualification which is visible, so that he ought thereupon to be esteemed in the judgement of men to belong to the Church of Christ

therefore visible churchmembership is from some qualification sensible, and is before the esteem in the judgement of men to belong to the Church of Christ; and though such esteem should not follow, yet the person is a visible churchmember: and therefore Mr. B. doth most unskilfully define a visible churchmember to be one that seems, or is esteemed to be of the invisible Church. For though this be, and ought to be a consequent upon the other, yet it is not the same; but as I have shewed, even according to Mr. B. they may be severed. And if that which constituteth a visible churchmember be a qualification visible, so as that he ought to be esteemed in the judgement of men to belong to the Church of Christ (which can be no other then his serious, sober, free, and intelligent profession of the faith of Christ) then my description of a visible churchmember is right, and infants that have no such qualification are not visible churchmembers. To say that their parents are visible professors, is insufficient: For there is no Scripture that makes the profession of the parent the childs qualification, nor any Scripture that for it makes it our duty to esteem him in our judgement to belong to the Church of Christ; nor is the parents profession any qualification of the child visible, neither is the relation of the child visible or sensible. (For relations, say Logicians, incur not into the sense) nor is the Fathers profession any more his own childes profession then any other mans childes profession. So that Mr. Bs. own words beeing well heeded, overthrow his tenet and confirm mine. I go after him in the rest.

These things, saith he, explained, I proceed, and prove my minor thus. They that are not so much as seemingly (or visibly) in a state of salvation, of them so dying we can have no true ground of Christian hope that they shall be saved: But they that are not so much as seemingly or visibly of the Church, they are not so much as seemingly or visibly in a state of salvation: Therefore of them so dying, we can have no true ground of Christian hope that they shall bee saved.

Answ. 1. Mr. B. makes here seemingly and visibly in a state of salvation, of the Church to be all one, whereas there is a great difference, seemingly being in order to the understanding, visibly to the sense, he may be seemingly in the state of salvation, and of the Church, who is not so visibly, there being many arguments which may make a thing seem to the understanding, besides that which is discernable by the outward sense. Therefore if Mr. B. mean by seemingly all one with visibly (as his words import) I deny his major as false; and to the contrary assert, that we may have true ground of Christian hope that they shall be saved, who yet die not visibly in a state of salvation, that is, do not any thing incurrent into the sense which may shew they are in a state of salvation, as infants born, abortives, still-born, children dying in the womb, natural fools, phrenetiques: Yea we conceive hopes of the salvation of persons dying raving, cursing by reason of their disease, destroying themselves, dying excommunicate justly from the Church, though visibly they are in a state of damnation. The minor is also false, they that are not visibly of the Church, may yet be visibly in a state of salvation, vation, as an Indian yet not profeſſing Chriſt, nor baptized, being affected with the preaching of Chriſts love to man, ſo as to lift up his eys to heaven, knock his breſt, liſten to the preacher, weep, kiſs the preacher, follow him, keep company with him, &c. this man is not yet viſibly of the Church, yet he is viſibly in a ſtate of ſalvation, and ſo dying we have ground of Chriſtian hope that he ſhall be ſaved.

But Mr. B. tels us, "The major is evident; and confirmed thus: "1. Sound Hope is guided by judgement, and that judgement muſt "have ſome evidence to proceed on: But where there is not ſo much "as a ſeeming or viſibility, there is no evidence; and therefore there "can be no right judgement, and ſo no grounded hope.

Anſw. 1. Mr. B. doth ſtill unskilfully put ſeeming for ſeemingneſs, and confound it and viſibility. 2. Where there is no ſeeming, there may be evidence; he ſhould rather have ſaid, Where there is no ſeeming, there is no judgement; for where nothing ſeems to a perſon, he paſſeth no judgement or opinion. 3. I preſume Mr. B. takes evidence largely for any argument which ſhews a thing and not in that ſtrict ſenſe in which it is denied by learned men that faith hath evidence, and in the large ſenſe there may be and is in innumerable things evidence in which is no viſibility, as that corn will be ſown and reaped though we ſee it not, &c. And in this preſent argument, Mr. B. himſelf a little after reckons up many reaſons beſides viſibility of the ſtate of ſalvation, and of the Church, which he makes evidence for a judgement upon which there is a grounded hope of infants ſalvation, p g. 77, 78. as Gods declarations, promiſes, &c. And therefore I deny that ſpeech, where there is not ſo much as viſibility there is no evidence.

2. Saith he, "Again, to judge a thing to be what it doth not any "way ſeem or appear to be, is (likely actually, but alway) virtually "and interpretatively a falſe judgement: But ſuch a judgement can be "no ground for ſound hope.

Anſw. Yet a man may truly judge that to be which doth not viſibly appear to be.

2. Saith he. "The minor is as evident, viz. [that they that are "not ſeemingly or viſibly of the Church, are not ſeemingly or viſibly "in a ſtate of ſalvation.] For 1. if they that are not of the true Church "are not in a ſtate of ſalvation, then they that ſeem not to be of that "Church do not ſo much as ſeem to be in a ſtate of ſalvation: But the "antecedent is true; therefore the conſequent The antecedent might "be proved from a hundred Texts of Scripture. It is the body that "Chriſt is the Saviour of, and his people that he redeemeth from their "ſins, and his ſheep to whom he giveth eternal life, and thoſe that ſleep "in Jeſus that God ſhall bring with him, and the dead in Chriſt that "ſhall riſe to ſalvation, and thoſe that die in the Lord that reſt from "their labours, and the Church that Chriſt will preſerve pure and unſpotted, &c. He that denieth this, is ſcarſe to be diſputed with as a "Chriſtian: Even they that thought all ſhould at laſt be brought out "of hell and ſaved, did think they ſhould become the Church, and ſo be "ſaved. The conſequence is beyond queſtioning.

Anſw.

Answ. 1. Seemingly and visibly are still mis confounded by Mr. B. 2. If the antecedent bee meant of the visible Church (of which alone the conclusion is to bee) then it is denied, and the proofs are all impertinent sith they speak not of the visible Church as visible, but of the invisible.

2. Saith hee, I next argue thus: If there bee no sure ground for faith concerning the salvation of any out of the Church, then there is no sure ground of hope (for faith and hope are conjunct; wee may not hope with a Christian hope for that wee may not believe) But there is no sure ground for such faith: (they that say there is let them shew it if they can) Therefore there is no sure ground of hope.

Answ. 1. Mr. B. doth ill to change the term [well grounded hope] in his first syllogism, into [a sure ground of hope.] For there may bee a well grounded hope of many things, as that God will deliver from death in a battle, provide in a siege bread, &c. though there bee no sure ground of hope cui falsum subesse non potest, that God will do these things. 2. Wee have sure ground for faith concerning the salvation of some out of the visible Church, though not of all infants of believers. And this wee have from Gods declaration of the election of some not visible churchmembers and consequently of their salvation, as Isaac and Jacob. Rom. 9. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. which is urged by Mr. B. himself pag. 78.

3. Saith he, "Again, if there be no promise in Gods word for the "salvation of any without the visible Church, then there is no ground "of our Christian hope that they shall be saved: But there is no such "promise (as I think they will confess) Therefore there is no ground "for any such hope. That Christian hope must rest upon a word of "promise, mee thinks should not bee denied: It is plain Rom. 15. 4, "13. Ephes. 1. 18. & 4. 4. Col. 1. 5, 23, 27. 2 Thes. 2. 16. 1 Tim. 1. 1. "Heb. 6. 18, 19. Heb. 7. 19. 1 Pet. 1. 3, 21. & 3. 15. Rom. 4. 18. "& 5. 2. Tit. 1. 1, 2. Heb 11. 1, &c. Ps. 119. 43, 74, 147, &c. "In natural things wee may have a common natural hope upon natural "grounds: But in supernatural things, as are justification and salva- "tion, we must have the ground of a Divine revelation to support all "true Christian theological hope.

Answ. 1. I deny the consequence of the major, and to Mr. Bs. proofs I answer: 1. There is not one of all the texts that saith there is no ground of true Christian hope but a promise in Gods word, though there are that prove the promise of God to bee a ground of Christian hope: It would bee too tedious to shew the impertinency of each of them, it is sufficient to acquaint the Reader wherein the defect of proof is. 2. Wee may have the ground of a Divine revelation to support our hope, as of what God hath done, of his attributes and other declarations, although we have not a promise, which Mr. B. seems too unskilfully to confound with a Divine revelation which may bee the ground of Christian hope. 2. The minor is not confessed by me to Isaac and Jacob God promised salvation afore they were born, therefore to them without the visible Church, the like to the Gentiles, to the Jews, Rom. 11. 26. afore they are called, or in being: to all the elect there is a Covenant or promise in Christ of salvation, whether they be of the visible Church or no.

4. Saith he, Again, if God do add to the Church such as shall be saved, then we can have no true ground of Christian hope of the salvation of any that are not added to the Church: But that God doth add to the Church such as shall be saved, is the plain words of Scripture, Acts 2. last. Therefore we have no true ground of such hope of the salvation of those that are not so added to it. If any say that the text speaks of the invisible Church. I answer: 1. Then it would hold of the visible much more for the visible Church is far larger then the invisible, and contains the invisible in it. 2. But the Text expresly speaks of the visible Church: For it was such a Church. 1. As were baptised. 2. And as the 3000. souls were in one day added to; 3. And as continued in the Apostles doctrine, fellowship, breaking of bread, and prayers; 4. And were together and had all things common; 5. And sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to them that needed; 6. And continued daily in the Temple, and breaking bread from house to house did eat with gladness, &c. 7. And as did praise God and had favour with all the people. And doubtless this was the visible Church; to this such as should bee saved were added; yet not onely such: for many false teachers and others did after go out from them; and such as Simon Magus were baptised; and false brethren was one cause of their sufferings. So that I doubt not but it is clear, that they that deny any infants to be members of the visible Church, do leave us no true ground for any Christian hope of their salvation.

Answ. The consequence of the major is denied, and the reason of the denial is because the speech is not simply convertible, bee added to the Church such as should bee saved, therefore all that shall bee saved are added to the visible Church. Yea Mr. B. by confessing that they were not onely the saved that were added to the Church acknowledgeth the proposition to bee particular, some were added to the Church which should bee saved, and this is convertible onely thus; Ergo some that shall bee saved were added to the Church, not universal, all that were added to the Church should bee saved. So that wee need not betake our selves to the answer of understanding it of the invisible Church. Nor is there a necessity to understand it of eternal salvation. For the word being σωζομένους in the present tense may bee translated the saved, that is as 2. 40. by relinquishing of that crooked or perverse generation, and if Beza's conjecture hold that τοὺς is put for τοιοὺς, the reading is to be, and some bee daily added to the Church to bee saved. Let the reading bee either way, it proves not that there are none to bee saved who are not added to the Church visible. And indeed such a proposition were false, so it is otherwise in the case of infants dying in the womb, still born, &c. Mr. B's inference, if Acts 2. 47. bee meant of the Church invisible then the speech, they that are to be saved are added to the Church holds much more of the visible, is vain. And the reaſon is as vain. For it is uncertain whether the viſible Church be far larger then the inviſible, conſidering the number of dying infants and the uncertainty how far their election and ſalvation extends, and though there bee many of the viſible Church who are not of the inviſible, yet the viſible doth not contain the inviſible in it, there being many of the inviſible Church who are not in the viſible, and therefore it proves not that if they that are ſaved are of the inviſible then they are much more of the viſible. So that however it bee that Mr. B. doubt not of the contrary, I am aſſured that the denying infants viſible Churchmembership, leaves ſufficient ground for Chriſtian hope of their ſalvation.

"Next, ſaith hee, let us conſider how far their own arguments "will exclude all hope of the ſalvation of any infant. If it were true "which Mr. T. ſo much ſtandeth on, That the onely way now ap- "poin ed by Chriſt to make Churchmembers, is by teaching the per- "ſons themſelves; and that none elſe may bee members of the viſible "Church, but thoſe that have learnt: then 1. it will much more fol- "low that they are not of the inviſible, as I have ſhewed; or at leaſt "wee are not to judge them to be of the inviſible Church at all. 2. "And if from Matth. 28. 20. they may argue, that none but thoſe "that are taught are Diſciples and are to bee baptiſed; why may "they not as well argue from Mar. 16. 16. [Whoſoever believeth "not ſhall bee damned] that all infants are certainly damned? where- "in lieth the difference in theſe two arguments? Sure the later "ſeems to mee to have more ſhew from Scripture though but lit- "tle: I dare invite Mr. T. to prove to mee from Scripture that a- "ny infants in the world are juſtified and ſanctified, and try if I "ſhall not in the ſame way prove that ſome infants are members of "the viſible Church? Or let him anſwer the argument from Mar. 16. 16. "that is brought for their damnation, and ſee if it will not afford him al- "ſo an anſwer to that from Matt. 28. againſt their being diſciples and to "bee baptiſed.

Anſw. 1. He hath no where made good this conſequence, if infants be not of the viſible Church, it will follow much more they are not of the inviſible, or at leaſt that wee are not to judge them to bee of the inviſible Church at all. 2. It doth not follow whoſoever believeth not ſhall bee damned therefore infants, becauſe the text it ſelf ſhews the ſpeech to bee limited onely to thoſe unbelievers to whom the Goſpel is preached, v. 15. yet it followes none are diſciples and to bee baptiſed but the taught, Matth. 28. 19, 20. becauſe Chriſt firſt appointed perſons to bee taught by preaching the Goſpel, whom hee appointed to bee baptiſed and accounted diſciples. 3. Let Mr. B. take theſe arguments and try whether hee can prove infants viſible Churchmembership from them. They of whom is the kingdome of heaven are juſtified and ſanctified. But of ſome infants is the kingdome of heaven, Ergo. They who are elected to life, for whom Chriſt died, are juſtified and ſanctified ere they die. But ſo ſome are infants, Ergo. 4. The argument is anſwered from Mark 16. 16. Let M. B.

try how he can answer mine from Matth. 28. 19, 20. Mark 16. 15, 16, &c. as it is in the second part of this Review, sect. 5, &c. or as it is in my Præcursor, sect. 16. pag. 66, out of his words, which is shewed in the 2d. part of the Review, sect. 4. pag. 66, 67. not to be answered by him in his Præfestinantis moratur. Hee that nullifies that argument must make reformation of humane additions to the worship of God as part of it void.

Mr. B. adds, But why do I expect this when hee suspendeth his judgement? If hee mean it of particular infants, it is not home to the question; for so hee must suspend his judgement concerning the salvation of every particular person, as certain, seeing hee is uncertain of the sincerity of any: And yet I hope he will not conclude it uncertain whether any man bee saved? But if hee mean it of all the species of infants, then I must say he suspendeth much of his faith, hope and charity; and that doctrine which suspendeth our belief of God and charity to our own children, shall be none of my Creed.

Answ. The suspension of judgement which in my postscript sect. 4. I said God would we should have, was concerning the certainty of salvation of all infants of believers dying in infancy, which was meant of particular infants, to wit the infants of believers, and it was home to the question between me, and Mr. M. and Mr. Bl. whether there were such a certainty of salvation of every believers infant dying so, by vertue of the promise I will be thy God and the God of thy seed Gen. 17. 7? There was no such question as Mr. B. would impose on mee, as if I doubted whether any infant should bee saved? But this I did and do still conceive, that there is no promise of salvation to every believers infants, and therefore we are to suspend our judgement concerning this or that particular infant, not of all the species of infants as hee speaks. And though I am certain of every believers salvation, yet I am not certain of this or that professour that he is a sincere believer, and therefore concerning this I am to suspend any peremptory judgment of science, yet I am not to suspend my judgment of charity, which yet I am to suspend towards infants, there being no actions of theirs which may occasion such a judgment. Nor hereby do I suspend any act of faith, hope or charity which I ought to have towards God or my own children; and if what I hold be no part of Mr. Bs. Creed, yet it may be part of the Creed of as holy and learned a man as he is.

Hee adds, " And where hee thinks wee must take up with that " Rom. 9. 18. Hee will have mercy on whom hee will have mercy. I " answer: 1. This is no other ground of hope, then of any heathen " in America wee may entertain. 2. It is no ground of hope for in- " fants at all: For it neither directly nor indirectly promises any mer- " cy to them, nor saith any more of mercy then of hardning: and ra- " ther would afford such disputers an argument against mercy to any in- " fants, because it is mercy put in opposition to hardning, which infants " in that sense are not capable of.

Answ. I said God would have us to rest on the Apostles determination Rom. 9. 18. to wit concerning the salvation of all believers infants, and and to this I was induced by the Apoſtles arguing, v. 11, 12, 13. concerning Jacob and Eſau. But this was not alledged by me as a ground of hope, and therefore though Mr. Bs. conſequences be granted, there is nothing againſt what I ſaid: which I think very agreeable with the words of wickliff, cited as an approved ſpeech by Mr. B. himſelf, p. 291. which if he like, he cannot gainſay my ſpeech.

But he ſaith, "Yet Mr. T. tels us [there is hope for all this, though "not certain, yet probable and comfortable] and he ſheweth us three "grounds for it: If this be ſpoken of the ſpecies of infants, as if there were "no certainty, but a probability that any of them ſhall be ſaved, then I "will prove it falſe and vile anon: If it be ſpoken of particular individu-"al infants, then 1. it is as much as can be ſaid of any men at age; for no "other man hath any certain, but a probable hope of their ſalvation.

Anſw. I have often ſaid, I mean it not of the ſpecies, but the individual infants of believers, and I appeal to Mr. B. himſelf whether he do not ſay as I ſay, Plain Scripture, &c. pag. 116. in thoſe words: Though yet for my own opinion, I have reſolved no further then this, that we are to judge the remiſſion, juſtification, and ſalvation of particular infants of true believers moſt probable, till the contrary appear by them; and for the full certainty, I leave it as to me uncertain. If we have but a probable hope of the ſalvation of men at age, it is no abſurdity, in my apprehenſion, to ſay we have but probable hope of their ſalvation; yet we have a greater degree of probability in our hopes of the ſalvation of ſuch as have in appearance ſpent their lives in a holy courſe, then of infants ſo dying.

2. Saith he, "It is as much as I deſire; for if their ſalvation be "probable, then they are viſibly or ſeemingly, or to our judgement in "a ſtate of ſalvation, and ſo muſt needs be viſible members of the "Church. How dare Mr. T. refuſe to take thoſe for viſible Churchmem-"bers, whoſe ſalvation is probable, when he hath no more but probabi-"lity of the ſalvation of the beſt man in the world.

Anſw. 1. I have often told Mr. B. that to be ſeemingly, or to our judgement in a ſtate of ſalvation, is not all one as to be ſuch viſibly, and that ſuch may be no viſible Churchmembers whoſe ſalvation is ſeeming or probable to our judgement. 2. Though I have but probability of the ſalvation of the beſt man in the world, yet I have a certainty of his profeſſion, by which I take him to be a viſible Churchmember, and not by the probability of his ſalvation; and this I dare do, and I wonder how Mr. B. againſt the current of all the N. T. dare do otherwiſe.

3. But, ſaith he, doth not this contradict what went before? And I wiſh he do not contradict it again in his proofs. His firſt proof of the probability, is from ſome general indefinite promiſes; but what theſe promiſes are, he tels us, Apol. pag. 64. By general and indefinite promiſes he means ſuch as determine not the kinde of good promiſed, nor the particular perſon; and therefore are true, if performed to any perſon in any ſort of good; and conditional upon condition of faith and obedience. Anſw. 1. If it determine not the kind of good formally nor virtually, nor contain it generically, vically; then how doth it make it probable? 2. And if it neither determine the person, nor give in ground to determine, how then doth it become probable to that person? 3. And how then can that promise give hopes to the faithfull of the salvation of their infants, which is verified, if performed to any person in any sort of good? as if it were but to one infant in a nation in reprieving him a day from damnation? If it intend more then this, then it is not verified or fulfilled in this much; if it intend no more, then how doth it make their salvation probable? 4. And sure the conditional promises which he mentioneth, requiring faith and repentance, are little to the benefit of infants, if these conditions are required of themselves in their infancy. And for his other two grounds of hope, viz. the favour of God to the parents, and experience, they are comfortable helps to second the promise; but of themselves without a word, would give us no ground of Christian hope in such matters as justification and salvation are.

Answ. I perceive no contradiction in my words. 1. By putting in those words [nor contain it generically] he intimates as if I had denied the promises I mention to contain generically the good of justification and salvation; whereas I termed the promises expresly general, and cited Psal. 103. 17, 18. Psal. 112. 2, &c. which mention Gods righteousness and blessedness, and so may comprehend eternal righteousness and blessedness, and thereby the justification and salvation of infants becomes probable, though it be not certain, sith Gods righteousness and blessedness may be conferred in another kind. As if a rich King promise money to a mans children, it's probable he will give them gold, though it be not certain. 2. Though the particular person be not determined, yet sith the qualification of the person is expressed to be the generation of the righteous, it is probable that it is meant of each till the contrary appears; as if a man promise to make such a mans children heirs, this is probable of every one till it appear otherwise, and yet not certain. 3. I have shewed how, especially if we consider that favours are wont to be amplified to the most. Though Gods intentions are not fulfilled perhaps with so little, yet the words may be verified if no more but temporal blessedness be given. 4. The conditional promises I confess give us but slender hope of infants by themselves; yet with general indefinite promises, declarations of Gods favour to his people, and experience, they yeeld a strong ground of hope of the justification and salvation of infants of believers, though not certain and sure, as Mr. B. would have, but how short he is in proof will appear in that which follows.

Sect.

SECT. LXXIIII.

Mr. Bs. allegations, p. 76, 77, 78. ſhew not a ſtronger ground of hope of infants ſalvation, ſo dying, then mine: His 23d. Arg. ch. 28. his 25th. ch. 30. are anſwered.

HE tels us, "That he hath a ſtronger probabilty then I mention, of "the ſalvation of all the infants of the faithfull, ſo dying, and a "certainty of the ſalvation of ſome, in that God admitted them viſible "members of his Church. For Chriſt is the Saviour of his body, and he "preſent his Church cleanſed and unſpoted to the Father: And if God "will have them to be viſible members of his Church, then he would "have us take or judge them to be members of it: And withal, there is "leſs danger of miſtake in them, then in men at years; becauſe they "do not diſſemble, nor hide any hypocritical intents under the vizor of "profeſſion, as they may do. And it is certain alſo, that if God would "have ſome and many to be of the true body of Chriſt, and ſo be ſaved, "then hee would not have all to bee viſibly out of that body. That "he would have have them church-members is proved, and ſhall be, "God willing, yet more. If God add to the Church ſuch as ſhall be ſa-"ved, then there is a ſtrong probability of their ſalvation whom he ad-"deth to the Church.

Anſw. Mr. B. here, p. 74. in his arguments 2d. and 3d. intimated that he aſſerted a ſure ground for faith concerning the ſalvation of believers infants ſo dying, and that to be a promiſe in the word of the ſalvation of thoſe within the viſible Church; and here he aſſerts a ſtronger probability then I mention of the ſalvation of all the infants of the faithfull ſo dying, and a certainty of the ſalvation of ſome, in that God admitteth them viſible members of his Church. Yet pag. 78. he dares not ſay there's a full certainty of the ſalvation of all believers infants ſo dying: Yea, pag. 110. he ſaith, Rom. 9. 8. the Apoſtle pleadeth that ſalvation is not by the Covenant tyed to all Abrahams ſeed. Out of which I infer, 1. That Mr. B. hath no ſure ground for faith, to wit, a promiſe in the word concerning the ſalvation of all the infants of believers ſo dying. For the Apoſtle pleads, that ſalvation is not by Covenant tied to all Abrahams ſeed, and if not to Abrahams, then to none elſe; and the certainty of the ſalvation of ſome is acknowledged by me as well as by him. And ſure if the Covenant aſſure not ſalvation to all, and neither it nor any other revelation of God tell us ſalvation belongs to this infant of ſuch a believer or to that, there is no certainty concerning the ſalvation of this or that particular infant of a believer dying, nor is there a ſure ground for faith concerning it, nor is the hope of it certain, and we are to ſuſpend our judgement concerning it, which Mr. B. carps at ſo much in me to make me and the truth I hold odious, which is almoſt all the work he does (for he proves nothing he ſays in oppoſition to what I hold) hold) and though his ſpeeches are inconſiſtent, yet when he ſets down his opinion he agrees with me, that he dares not ſay there's a full certainty of the ſalvation of all believers infants; nor dare he I think ſay, that he is certain of any one believer on earth his infant dying, that he is ſaved. 2. That he hath a ſtronger probability then I mention of the ſalvation of all the infants of believers ſo dying, in that God admitteth them viſible members of his Church, is ſaid by him: But 1. he ſhews not what degree of probability I deny which he aſſerts: 2. I never oppoſed the ſtrongeſt probability Mr. B. aſſerts, onely I declared my ſelf unſatisfied concerning the certainty, which Mr. B. dares not aſſert: 3. That God hath admitted them viſible members of his Church Chriſtian, is not yet proved by Mr. B. nor ever will be: 4. If he had, yet this proves the certainty of the ſalvation of none now exiſtent; for the ſpeeches, Epheſ. 5.23,27. muſt be underſtood of the Church which is ſo viſible, that it be alſo the inviſible. Now though it be certain, that ſome viſible Churchmembers are ſaved, yet it is neither certain that all, or any viſible Churchmembers or Churches now exiſtent ſhall be ſaved, and therefore no more then a probability of the ſalvation of all or ſome infants of believers now exiſtent can be inferred, though their viſible Churchmembership were granted. As for the ſtrength of the probability, I ſtick not to grant it as ſtrong as he would have it, ſo that he aſſert not a certainty. And therefore, did not Mr. B. mind to pick a quarrel with me, and to affright people from my doctrine, this Chapter of Mr. B. might have been ſpared.

Yet Mr. B. adds. And the promiſes to them are fuller then Mr. T. expreſſeth, and give us ſtronger ground of hope. 1. God hath, as I have proved, aſſured that he will be merciſull to them in the general, and that in oppoſition to the ſeed of the wicked, on whom he will viſit their Fathers ſins: Now this giveth a ſtrong ground of hope that he will ſave them. For if the Judge or King ſay, I will hang ſuch a traytor, but I will be merciſull to ſuch a one, it is an intimation that he meaneth not to hang him. If your friend promiſe to be good to you and merciſull, you dare confidently hope he means not to deſtroy you.

Anſw. This proves not Gods promiſes any fuller then I expreſs, for thoſe I alledge not excluding but including in an &c. this, are as full as this, Exod. 20.6. Nor doth this give a ſtronger ground of hope then I do, who yeeld as much as Mr. B. infers, though I like not Mr. Bs. inſtance, which intimates that God ſhould ſay, I will damn the children of the wicked to the 3d. and 4th. generation, v. 5. and ſave the children of them that love me to a thouſand generations.

He adds. 2. God ſaith (as I have ſhewed) that the ſeed of the righteous is bleſſed. Now is not that a ſtrong ground of hope, that ſo dying, they ſhall not be damned? It is not likely that God would call them bleſſed whom he will damn eternally, after a few days or hours life in a ſtate of infancy, which is capable of little ſenſe of bleſſedneſs here.

Anſw. What mercy is meant, Exod. 20.6. and what bleſſedneſs, Pſal 37.26. hath been conſidered before, and thence it may appear, that a certainty of ſalvation to all infants of believers, or to any definitely now existent cannot bee inferred. Yet I oppose not the inferring thence a strong ground of hope. Nevertheless that God should call them blessed in a sort and yet damn them, is no inconsistency, nor doth it appear much less likely then that hee should reprobate Esau afore hee was born or had done good or evil, Rom. 9. 11, 12, 13.

3. "God (saith Mr. B.) entreth Covenant to be their God, and to "take them for a peculiar people to himself, Deut. 29. 11, 12, 13. And "this giveth strong hope of their salvation. For as if the King promise "to bee your King, and to take you for his subject, it is likely hee "intends all the benefits of Kingly government to you: or if a "man promise a woman to bee her husband, it is likely that hee "intendeth to do the office of a husband: And so when God pro-"miseth to be their God.

Answ. Though I yeild that there is ground for a strong hope of the salvation of infants of Christian believers so dying, yet in the text cited there is nothing to that purpose. For 1. that Covenant was made onely with the people of Israel, and was a peculiar Covenant with that nation. 2. For the Covenant was of Gods being God to them while they owned him, and kept his Commandments and so was conditional. So that this Covenant is not a Covenant with every believer and his issue, nor did Gods promise to bee their God assure the salvation of all the Israelites infants so dying, much less the salvation of infants of Christian believers, to whom all the promises in the new Covenant are personal, none that I remember national or domestical as were to the Jews.

4. Saith hee, And Paul 1 Thes. 4. 13. would not have the faithfull mourn for the dead as those that are without hope: now what dead are these? And what hope is it? 1. Hee saith the dead in general, which will not stand with the exclusion of the whole species of infants. 2. Hee speaks of those dead for whom they were apt to mourn. And will not parents mourn for their children? And for hope, it is evidently the hope of resurrection to life. For resurrection to damnation is not a thing to be hoped for. This seems plain to me.

Answ. Though I oppose not a strong hope of the salvation of believers infants so dying, yet to shew how vainly he talks of his shewing more for it then I do, the reader may take notice, that if the Apostle be interpreted of the hope of the resurrection to life of the dead in general and those they were apt to mourn for, as Mr. B. arguing intimates his mind to be, then the Apostle would have them hope for the resurrection to life not onely of the infants of believers so dying but also of their ripe aged children though infidels and profane, yea for their wives, kindred, neighbours, servants; whereas the Apostles speech is plainly meant onely of them that are believers, who as they are said v. 12. to sleep so v. 14. to sleep in Jesus, whom God will bring with Jesus, v. 16. dead in Christ, that is for Christ, as M. Mede conceivs, applying it peculiarly to the martyrs, or as most in the faith of Christ, such as shall be for ever with the Lord, v. 17. From whence with many other instances in his writings it may appear how slightly and superficially Mr. B. opens and infers from texts of Scripture.

5. Saith Mr. B. David comforteth himself concerning his dead child, because hee should go to the child, but the child should not return to him. To say that this was onely that hee should bee buried with it, is to make David too like a Pagan rather then a Christian: However it seems hee was confident that hee should not bee damned: or else hee would not say, I shall go to him. And to say David knew his salvation as a Prophet, is a groundless fiction that cannot be proved: Prophets knew not all things, not ordinarily things of another world by such revelation. Therefore what ever ground of hope David had, other faithfull parents have the like.

Answ 2. That David in those words 2 Sam. 12. 22, 23. did express any ground of hope of the salvation of his child, and that thereby hee comforted himself concerning his dead child, is more then I think can bee evinced from the text. Rendering a reason of his not fasting any longer, hee doth not alledge any thing concerning the happiness of the childe, but the bootlesness of his praying and fasting sith the childes life could not bee recovered. And the whole speech considered, the words import no more then this, can I bring him back again to life? I shall go to him, that is to the state of the dead, as counterfeit Samuel is brought in, saying 1 Sam. 28. 19. To morrow thou shalt bee with mee, that is dead as I am, and as Jacob said Gen. 37. 35. Hee should go down to his sonne into the grave, or state of the dead. And in these speeches though no more were meant, yet there is nothing that relisheth of Paganism, not so much as other speeches seem to do, Psal. 6. 5. Psal. 30. 9. Isai. 38. 18, 19. Job 14, 7, 8, 9, 10, 14. For though they the express not the expectation of the resurrection or the present estate of happiness, yet it was not because they believed it not, but because it was sufficient to give a reason of his present action, in which hee gives first an account of what hee did before, hee fasted and wept while the childe was alive, for hee said, who can tell whether God will bee gracious to mee that the childe may live? In which words if wee may argue after Mr. Bs. mode, wee may as well say hee was too like a Pagan rather then a Christian, sith hee mentions no prayer for his childes happiness, but his natural life. 2. An account of his not fasting, because God had frustrated the end of his prayer and fasting. And yet in both hee shewed faith in GOD, in his prayer acknowledging GOD the authour of life and death, and in the other the sentence of death passed on himself, and his acquiescence in Gods will concerning both. All which hee understood as one acquainted with GOD and his word. So that wee need not assert that David knew the happiness of his childe by special revelation, sith hee expresseth not any thing of it. And if hee did, yet hee might speak this not as an assured thing, but as probably hoped for, and yet not upon common grounds to all believers, but out of special favour to him (of which hee had more then common experience) and Gods wont of hearing his prayers. So that yet Mr. B. hath brought no stronger grounds of probability of the salvation of all believers infants ſo dying, then I have done notwithſtanding his cracks. Let's view the reſt.

6. Saith hee, Again, if there were not farre more hope of their ſalvation, then fear of their damnation; it would never bee ſaid, That children are an heritage of the Lord and the fruit of the womb is his reward; And the man bleſſed that hath his quiver full of them, Pſal. 127. 3, 4, 5.

Anſw. 1. Mr. B. pretended to ſhew a ſtronger probability of the ſalvation of the infants of believers then I have done, but wherein doth hee exceed mee in his aſſertion in this place or his proof? Did I ever ſay there is leſs hope of their ſalvation, then fear of their damnation? If I did not, why doth hee ſuggeſt as if in this concluſion hee aſſerted more then I do? If I have ſaid ſo, let him ſhew it, or elſe let him bee taken for what hee is, a calumniator. 2. For his proof, would any man alledge this text to prove more hope of ſalvation of infants of believers then their damnation, if hee had any heed to what hee writes? when the text expreſly makes the bleſſedneſs of the man hath many children to bee not at all in this place, in reference to hope of the ſalvation of the children, but in reference to his own ſafety and protection by his children, who may oppoſe enemies, and bee as arrowes or weapons to drive them back, or as helps to right his wrongs, and to embolden him to contend with them in the gate, which was counted a great bleſſing then, and agreeable to the promiſes of the legal Covenant, as Deut. 28. Pſal. 144. 12, 15, &c. may bee ſeen. But this is not meant of infants but of ſuch as were grown up and able to defend their parents, and chiefly if not onely of males, nor is the man ſaid to bee bleſſed by reaſon of the goodlineſs of them, but the multitude of them, and they are ſaid to bee an heritage as the land of Canaan, Pſal. 136. 21, 22. and his reward whether for their obſerving his law, or for other reaſon, ſuch as for which Nebuchadnezzar was rewarded with Egypt, Ezek. 29. 18, 19, 20. or as Pſal. 137. 8, 9. or as reward taken Catachreſtically for any gift. Bee it meant of true believers (though no words in the text evince it) yet the children are ſaid to be their heritage and reward not Gods heritage, nor is there any intimation of happineſs to the childe, and therefore not a word intimating more hope of their ſalvation then fear of their damnation, but of outward benefit to the parent ſuch as may bee common to infidels with believers, and conſequently not a word for a ſtrong ground of hope of the ſalvation of believers infants ſo dying, much leſs more then I bring to that purpoſe.

7. Saith Mr. B. "And why ſhould children be joyned in ſtanding "Church ordinances, as prayer, faſting, &c. if there were not ſtrong "hope of the bleſſing of theſe ordinances to them? 2 Chron. 20. 13. "The children that ſuck the breaſt were to bee gathered to the ſolemn "faſt, Joel 2, 16. (this will prove them alſo ſtanding Churchmem-"bers, ſeeing they muſt joyn in ſtanding ordinances;) ſo why recei-"ved they circumciſion, a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, if there " were not ſtrong probability that they had the thing ſealed and ſigni-

" fied? God will not fail his own ordinance where men fail not.

Anſw. There's nothing here endeavoured to bee proved but what I have alſo granted, that there is a ſtrong probability that infants of believers ſo dying are juſtified and ſaved, and yet I ſee no ſtrength in theſe allegations to prove it. For though the little ones and ſucking children were to bee preſent to ſhew an univerſal humiliation, as did the beaſts alſo, Jonah 3. 8. yet the infants did not joyn in prayer, nor was the end of their preſence any ſpecial bleſſing of the Ordinance to them, but the moving GOD to ſpare the whole people, invaded or in danger of periſhing by famine, nor were the prayer and faſting ſtanding Church-ordinances, any more then the Covenanting Deut. 29. Nehem. 9. but occaſional, nor doth this preſenting of infants prove them ſtanding Churchmembers any more then the like Jonah 3. 8 proves thoſe infants, or the Ninivites beaſts ſtanding Churchmembers. As for Circumciſion, that infants received Circumciſion as a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith, is no where in Scripture affirmed; and how much Pædobaptiſts are miſtaken in their inference of the nature of Sacraments in general, or Circumciſion in ſpecial, from Rom. 4. 11. hath beene often ſhewed before Sect. 31, &c. The ends of Circumciſing of infants, was to diſtinguiſh the Hebrews from other people, and to fore-ſignifie from what people CHRIST was to come, and to engage them to obſerve the Law of Moſes which they were to receive by reaſon of Gods command whether they hoped for their childrens ſalvation, or not, Abraham was to circumciſe Iſhmael, though hee knew hee was not a childe of the promiſe, and Iſaac Eſau, though hee were rejected by God. The ſpeech God will not fail his own ordinance where men fail not, is like the Popiſh Schoolmens conceit, that Sacraments confer grace where no bar is put, and intimates that Circumciſion was Gods ordinance to aſſure at leaſt rigteouſneſs of faith to each infant circumciſed, which is a falſe conceit.

8. Saith Mr. B. why elſe doth God ſo oft compare his love to that of a mother or father to the childe? 1 Theſ. 2. 7. Num. 11, 12. Iſa. 49. 15. Pſ. l. 103. 13.

Anſw. Though I grant a ſtrong probality of the ſalvation of believers infants ſo dying, yet to ſhew the vanity of Mr. Bs. ſcriblings, as if hee brought more for it then I do, I cannot but obſerve the ſlighty dealing of Mr. B. in this point. For firſt, whereas hee alledgeth theſe texts as if GOD did therein compare his love to that of a mother or father to the childe, in the firſt Paul (not God) compares himſelf to a nurſe; in the ſecond, Moſes ſpeaks of himſelf as if God had put an impoſſible burthen on him, as if he could as a nurſing father bears his ſucking childe, carry all that people to the promiſed land. In the third, God ſaith he, would not forget Sion, who had ſaid hee had forgotten them, though a mother ſhould forget her ſucking childe; and Pſal. 103. 13. the love of God as a father is ſpoken of them that fear him. So that the two firſt texts were through heedleſneſs miſ-alledged groſly by him, the other two expreſs Gods love onely to his obedient and ſeeking people, mention nothing of his love to their infants. 2. God doth compare his love to a Fathers or Mothers, not becauſe he is engaged to believers infants to ſave them, nor becauſe he hath natural affection as they have, but to ſhew his gracious care and dealing towards his elect children. 3. Gods love is no more compared to a believing parents love, then to an unbelievers; and therefore if this prove a ſtrong probability of the ſalvation of a believers infant ſo dying, it doth prove the ſalvation of an unbelievers as probible. 4. Gods love and care is compared to an Eagles in carrying her young ones, *Deut.*32.11,12. Chriſts to an Hen, *Matth.*23.37. According to Mr. Bs. reaſoning, this ſhould prove then the ſtrong probability of the ſalvation of Chickens. But I am aſhamed that the world ſhould ſee the nakedneſs of theſe magnified reaſonings, though I be neceſſitated to uncover it.

The 9th. from *Matth.*19.14. is no more then I have alledged often for thoſe infants; and what Mr. B. here alledgeth to prove this a right of other infants, is anſwered at large in the ſecond part of this Review, *ſect.*17.

10. Saith he, we read of ſome that have been ſanctified from the womb, and therefore were in a ſtate of ſalvation; and Jacob was loved before he was born, and therefore before he had done good or evil was in the like ſtate of ſalvation.

Anſw. Have not I alſo granted this thing, and that upon the ſame reaſons? Why then doth Mr. B. ſuggeſt, to draw parents hearts from me to him, as if he ſaid more in this then my ſelf? Yet I cannot be very confident of the reaſon from Jerem 1.15. to which *Gal.*1.15. is parallel, ſith the ſanctification was to the office of a Prophet, which is appliable to infants ſo dying.

11. we find promiſes of ſalvation to whole houſholds, where it is probable there were infants, Act.16.34.

Anſw. 1. Acts 16.31. is no probability that infants ſhould bee meant, ſith in the next v. it is ſaid, he ſpake the word to all that were in his houſe, which is not to be ſaid of infants; and *v.*34. he rejoyced with all his houſe, believing God. 2. If they ſhould, yet this can be no more then a particular promiſe to him, unleſs this were true, that God will ſave every believer and his houſe: And Mr. B. overlaſheth in ſaying, we find promiſes of ſalvation made to whole houſholds, when there is no more but this one.

The 12th. is from 1 *Cor.*7.14. and it is built on Mr. Bs. interpretation of [holy] as if it noted a ſeparation to God as a peculiar people. But I have fully anſwered Mr. Bs. 29th. ch. and have ſhewed his miſtake in the firſt part of this Review, *ſect.*22, &c. and need to anſwer no more in this place.

Mr. B. goes on thus. It cannot be ſaid, that theſe promiſes are verified according to their ſenſe, if any mercy be given to any infant: Here the perſons are determined, that is, all the ſeed of the faithfull; and we have large ground given probably to conclude, that it is eternal mercy that is intended to all that living to age do not again reject it, but that either at age keep Covenant, or die in infancy before they break it. And we have certain ground to conclude, that this salvation belongeth to some infants, and visible Churchmembership to all the seed of the faithfull. And I think this is more then Mr. T. doth acknowledge them.

Answ. It is indeed, finding the argumen s frivolous which Mr. B. hath brought for the visible Churchmembership of infants, though I acknowledge salvation belongeth to some infants. It is before shewed how the promises may be verified according to the sense of the words if any sort of mercy be given to any children of the faithfull: Nor is it true, that in the promises brought by Mr. B. the persons are determined to be all the seed of the faithfull, and how the contrary is determined by the Apostle, Rom. 9.7,8. according to Mr. B. himself, is shewed before, and what reason there is to understand Exod. 20.6. of temporal mercies, is shewed above, so that here is nothing new to be answered.

He adds, "If that Matth. 18.10. be well considered, it may make "another argument full to the point. If little ones have their Angels "beholding the face of God in heaven, they shall be saved: For that is "a mercy proper to the people of God. And that the Text speaks of "infants, others have fully proved.

Answ. I grant the conclusion and argument, but deny that it is at all to the point in question between us, and that any one hath proved that by little ones, Matth. 18.10. are meant infants. Though the contrary be proved concerning Matth. 18.5,6. in the second part of this Review, sect. 15. where Mr. Bl. and Mr. C. are answered: Yet to shew the frivolousnes of Mr. B. talk, I add 1. that Matth. 18.10. cannot be expounded one of these little infants; for such a speech would shew that then there were more little infants before them: But it appears from v. 2,4. there was but one set before them 2. From v. 14,11. the little ones were such as Christ came to save, and that it was Gods will none should perish: But this is true onely of the elect and true believers, not simply of infants as such. 3. The words following, v. 15, &c. shew they are meant of a sinning brother, ergo, not of infants.

Mr. B. adds: That though he dare not say there is a full certainty of the savation of all believers infants so dying, yet he professeth to think it better grounded then mine, who (he saith) shut them out of the Church. But this I take to be and effect of that antipathy he hath against me, who still chooseth that opinion which is most opposite to me, and prefers it; as p. 141. the opinion of the old and new Socinians, who take away an ordinance, and whom he censures pag. 24. as above obedience, and so Gods; and the opinion of baptizers in infancy and at age too, pag. 143. and professeth he would have nothing to do with me when I offered assistance to him in another point, as if he were like Maldonat the Jesuite that could have liked an interpretation had it not been Calvins. But I leave him to the Lord to judge him and me; and do not despair but that he may yet live to see his errour, and perhaps wish he had been better advised then so disdainfully to have rejected a friends offer.

He

He saith, He would urge another argument here from the universality of redemption, Christ dying for all, for every man, for the sins of the whole world, as the Scripture speaketh; but that it would require more time to explain himself in it then he could then spare. However he thinks no man should deny that Christ died for every sort of men, and every age, and so for some infants. To which I reply, Did he ever hear me deny it? And if he did not, why doth he talk of proving it here where he disputes against me? But he is willing to pick what quarrels he can with me. However when he intends to urge this argument, I hope I shall be provided to answer it, if it oppose my thesis. That the Scripture saith Christ died for every man, for the sins of the whole world, is more then I find: If I mistake him not, his Universal redemption he holds is conditional onely, which I think to be a fiction, redemption and election in Scripture being absolute in respect of persons, and commensurate, redemption being as well from impenitency and unbelief as damnation: Yet were it granted him, that he should thence infer, not the salvation of all, but of believers infants so dying and never performing the condition, is yet a Riddle to me; and I cannot yet imagine it to be any better then a sick-mans dream in Mr. B.

Ch. 28. He urgeth his 23d. arg. from Christs being head of the visible Church in infancy, that infants may be members; which I deny not: Nor is it the thing in question what they may be, but what they are. But this argument is answered before, sect. 57. And what he saith here out of Irenæus, proves not what he would infer, That Irenæus took them for visible Churchmembers, because he saith, Christ by the example of his age sanctifieth them. For every one sanctified by Christ is not a visible Churchmember: Mr. B. saith before, pag. 78. we read of some that have been sanctified from the womb, were they visible Churchmembers in the womb? I know no absurdity in it to assert that Christ was head of the Church when an infant, and worshipped as such, and yet no infants should be visible Churchmembers. Mr. Bs. perswasion that they know not Gods will that think otherwise then he doth, is but an effect of his fond affection to his own brats. And yet when he himself saith, pag. 62. I confess it is disputable whether Christ were ever a Churchmember properly, he should not be very confident in asserting Christ in infancy to have been head of the visible Church. And for Irenæus his speech, it is so false, that were not Mr. B. willing to catch at any shadow for his purpose, he would have concealed it.

Ch. 30. He tels us, that his 25*th. arg. is probable at least, that the Scripture doth frequently and plainly tell us of the ceasing of Circumcision; but never speaks one word of the ceasing of infants visible Churchmembership, therefore we are not to judge that it is ceased.* That the antecedent or minor in this argument is false, is proved at large, sect. 50, 51, 52. The consequence is shewed to be invalid, in that other things of which the cessation is certain, as the freeing of servants, the dedication of the first born, are ceased, and yet not expressed so much in Scripture as that of Churchmembership. To this saith Mr. B. The year of Jubile was one of their Sabbaths, and so a type, Col. 2.17. But I reply, Though the year of Jubile were a Sabbath, yet this proves not that freeing servants then is any more said to be ceased then infants visible Churchmembership. 2. Saith he, The dedication of the first-born was evidently a type of Christ, and the Church under him: Of both these many Scriptures are plain. But let it be proved, that the admitting of infants into the visible Church is a meer type, or a meer judicial law proper to the Jewish Commonwealth, any more then the admitting of men or women into the Church. I reply, 1. Admitting of infants into the visible Church, was no other then by their circumcising, or presenting at the Temple; and these are ceased, as proper to the Jewish Church or Commonwealth. 2. A thing may cease though we cannot prove it a meer type, nor a meer judicial law, as the receiving tythes, and paying them; and things may remain though they were types, as mount Sion, the land of Canaan, the people of Israel, which were types, Heb. 12.22. Gal. 6.16. &c. 3. That the Jewish infant Churchmembership was not by a law, but by a fact of providence which took in the whole people of the Jews into the Church visible Jewish, and consequently the infants as part of that people; which by the breaking off that people, and taking into the Church onely believers, is now ceased, as is shewed before, sect. 50, 51, 52, 64.

What Mr. B. adds, If all Nations should have become Churchmembers they should have been circumcised, and then it had not been peculiar to the Jews; and that Sichemites being circumcised, would not have been subject to Jacob, and that when in Esthers time the people of the land became Jews, they were not of the Jewish Commonwealth, and under their Civil government; is answered before, sect. 54.

That which he saith, p. 108. That he hath sufficiently proved that infants ought to be admitted visible Churchmembers, hath so little truth, that if the Reader observe it, he shall find scarce any of his arguments so much as to conclude the admission of infants into the visible Church, much less to prove it, but that they are visible Churchmembers. Whereby it is evident now (which I could not observe in the Dispute) that Mr. B. did leave the point to be proved, that infants ought to be admitted visible Churchmembers; and prosecuted another point instead of it, that they are visible Churchmembers. But enough is done in answer to that also, which I pray the Lord to bless for the undeceiving of the people of these nations, who have been so shamefully misled by Mr. Bs. toy of an ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed, no where extant, that were they not either willing to be deceived, or left to errour by God for their want of love to the truth, they could hardly have been deluded by such vain arguings as he hath vented.

SECT. LXXV.

My Arguments to prove the ingraffing Rom. 11. 17. to be into the invisible Church by giving faith, are vindicated from Mr. Bls. exceptions Vind. fæd, chap. 38. and Mr. Sidenham's Exercit. chap. 8, 9.

ALthough Mr. Bls. manner of diſputing hath been ſhewed to bee ſuch as requires not any full anſwer, and would learned men compare, as men that ſought truth, mine and his writings together, they would perceive the inſufficiency of his reply, yet becauſe I perceive ſome learned men do yet value his writings (without good reaſon) which oppoſe mine, I ſhall add ſomewhat more to ſhew how ſhort his writings are of weakening any thing of mine.

Vindic. fæd. ch. 18. ſect. 1. Having made an analaſis of part of Rom. 11. from v. 16. he takes on him to ground ſeveral undeniable poſitions. The third is the root of this tree (viz. the firſt ſupreme univerſal root) is Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, not Abraham alone ſo Iſhmaelites would bee of the body. Nor Abraham with Iſaac alone, ſo the Edomites from Eſau would have been taken in. But the Apoſtle in this Chapter (from Old Teſtament authority) excludes both of theſe, Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob are therefore joyntly the root.

Anſw. 1. That Abraham onely is the root meant Rom. 11. 16, 17, 18. I prove from Rom. 4. 11, 12, 16. where Abraham onely and no other of the Patriarchs is termed the Father of believers. But to bee the root Rom. 11. 16, 17, 18. is all one with the Father of believers. That the root notes a Father Mr. Bl yeilds, that it notes not barely a natural father, is proved in that the Gentiles ſhould not be in that root, if it noted barely a natural father, and that believers onely are branches of that root is proved from the text. 1. In that their ſtanding is by faith. 2. That by unbelief ſome were broken off, verſ. 20. which do plainly prove that they who were branches were believers, who were unbelievers were not branches. 3. That the partaking of the root could bee no otherwiſe then by faith, nor any other way ingraffing can bee meant is manifeſt, in that the Gentiles (who had no other relation to Abraham as a father then by believing as hee did) partake of the root and are ingraffed into the Olive. Secondly, To Maſter Bls. Argument, I anſwer by denying that the Apoſtle doth in that Chapter or any other exclude the Iſmaelites or Edomites from the body. Job, and other believing Edomites were in the root and Olive. Yea if it were meant of the viſible Church and natural deſcent, Iſhmael and Eſau muſt be of the body who were of Abraham by natural deſcent and circumciſed, and ſo viſible Churchmembers. If Mr. Bl deny they were in the body, becauſe they were not of Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, by this reaſon Iſaac and Jacob ſhould be excluded.

For they were not from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: they were not from themselves and yet were branches, and consequently they were not the root, but Abraham alone, the root noting such a Father as from whom all branches have descent.

His fifth position is, the fatneß of this tree is the glory of ordinances, of which the whole Church partakes. Answ. By ordinances hee means outward ordinances, as Baptism, the Lords Supper, preaching the word, &c. By the whole Church hee means the Church visible. For that is his tenet all along, that the olive tree is the Church visible, not the invisible. This is then Mr. Bls. position, that when it is said Rom. 11. 17. and wast partaker together of the root and fatneß of the olive tree, the meaning is, thou Gentile Church or believer art made partaker of outward ordinances, of which the whole Church partakes. Now under the whole visible Church he undoubtedly comprehends infants, and sure there is no ordinance of which infants are partakers according to Mr. Bls. tenet but Baptism, so that then the Apostle according to Mr. Bls. exposition, should mean no more by the fatness of the tree, of which the whole Church partakes, but Baptism. Which is of it self so manifestly frivolous an exposition, as that I shall not need of set purpose to refute it. Though, it is true, there is a glory and beauty in the ordinances of the new Testament: Yet first some of them, as the preaching of the Gospel (which is the most glorious) those that are out of the visible Church may partake of, and those which Mr. Bl counts within may not partake of, I mean infants and some others. Secondly, that fatness which is meant Rom. 11. 17. passeth from the root to the tree, and thence to the branches, and therefore he that is said to bee partaker of the fatness of the olive tree, is first said to bee partaker of the root, but be the root Abraham or as Mr. Bl. would have it Isaac and Jacob with him ordinances pass not from them. It is true Circumcision was first begun in Abraham, but all the rest of the Jewish ordinances are according to Scripture rather derived from Moses then Abraham, and to say they were partakers of the root, that is of Circumcision (which was the onely ordinance Abraham, Isaac and Jacob did partake of) is both false, for they were not circumcised; and being so empty a thing as that it's termed with all the Jewish ordinances, a shadow Col. 2. 17. Heb. 10. 1. it had no glory then at all. And for Baptism, the Lords Supper, &c. they passed not from Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; nor were they partakers of them, but were instituted by Christ in the New Testament. Thirdly, the partaking of the root and fatness of the olive tree was by the ingrafting and consequent of it. But the ingrafting according to Mr. Bl. doth not make them partakers of outward ordinances. For the chief of ordinances, to wit, the preaching of the Gospel, was the instrument of their ingrafting, as his own allegation shewes pag. 278. from Acts 11. 21. and so was antecedent to the ingrafting, nor by the ingrafting were they partakers of the other outward ordinances. For though the heart were wrought to a professed subjection to the way of God in ordinances (which is Mr. Bls. ingrafting) and so ingrafted. Yet they might bee never partakers takers of outward ordinances such as Baptism and the Lords Supper, if either sickness or death prevented the administration or want of an administratour, or the elements, &c. hindered. Fourthly, the fatness of the olive tree makes the partakers fresh and fruitful. But that is not outward ordinances, but the spirit of God, righteousness by faith, &c. of which I shall speak more in vindicating my fourth argument.

Mr. Bl. saith farther, That the holiness Rom. 11. 16. is such as is communicable from parent to childe, that is, necessarily communicated, as a root communicates to branches. This is so plain, that if it be denied all the Apostles dispute falls.

Answ. It is true, that if the holiness bee not communicated from Abraham to all his children by faith, who are believers as he was, the Apostles dispute fals, but the Apostles dispute holds though it bee not communicated to every childe of every believing father, which is Mr. Bls. conceit, as his following words shew. Yea hence is a good argument to prove the holiness not to bee meant of meer visible Churchmembership, nor the root of every parent professing faith, because many of their children are never Christian visible Churchmembers, as experience abundantly proves, and so have not this holiness communicated to them. Yea, Mr. Bl. saith, who knowes not that holy fathers have unholy children? regenerate parents have issue unregenerate? I may add, abortives, natural fools, still-born, bred up in Mahometanism, renegado's, unbaptised, excommunicated, and consequently not visible Churchmembers or federally holy. And it is most false in this holiness of visible Churchmembership, or as Mr. Bl. cals it federal that the proposition holds, as is the Father so is the childe, the Father being without the childe is without; the Father being within the childe is within in regard of Church estate, Covenant holiness, eo nomine, because a branch of such a root, a childe of such a Father; which Mr. Bl. dictates here, but proves not, and hath been often refuted by me, nor is there any thing in Rom. 11. 16. for it. Yea Mr. Bls. own interpretation overthrowes this position. For if the root bee (as his position is) Abraham, Isaac and Jacob] then it is not every believing Father, and if the root bee every believing Father then all the branches of the tree are natural, and they derive their holiness by descent of nature, whereas it is plain from the text (and Mr. Bls. fourth position is to the same purpose) that the Jews onely are natural branches, the Gentiles are all ingraffed branches.

Mr. Cuthbert Sidenham in his exercit. ch. 8. takes upon him to demonstrate holiness and Churchmembership of the children of believing Gentiles from Rom. 11. 15, 16, 17. and to answer my arguments ch. 9. Against my opinion of the ingraffing into the invisible Church he urgeth, then persons may be broken off from the invisible Church, and takes notice of my answer in my Examen p. 64. but saith nothing to my answer in my Apology p. 76. though he could not but know of it, taking on him to answer my arguments in the next pages before. The rest he brings is from Mr. B. and is answered by me in my Review part. 1. sect. 6. &c. I agree with him in the position, that Abraham is the root meant Rom.

11. 16. and that he is a root exemplary onely, nor do I deny that the Apostles arguing is from a special prerogative to Abraham to whom the promise was given Gen. 17. 7. and that the promise did comprehend the elect of his natural seed, and that God had a more special regard to his natural seed in that promise then to other mens natural seed: yet not universally to his seed, nor is it true that the Apostle makes the branches holy Rom. 11. 16. by a prerogative of grace grounded on the promise of God made to believing Fathers and their seed: which is the same in the New Testament and the Old, as hee urgeth out of Dr. Willet. For there is not that promise in the New Testament, or old. And therefore the Argument upon this conceit can have no strength in it.

Pag. 71. he layes down this position, wee believing Gentiles are ingraffed into Abrahams Covenant in the room of the natural branches which were broken off.

Concerning which I say, that though I deny not the believing Gentiles to have interest in Abrahams Covenant Gen. 17. 7. that is, God is their God, and they have righteousnes by faith as Abraham had; yet the Apostle doth not speak of their ingraffing into Abrahams Covenant, that's Mr. Sidenhams mistake, but into the olive tree, that is as Mr. Bl. the whole body of the Church, which he would have meant of the visible, I of the invisible. Now to Mr. Sidenhams arguments to that position; I yeeld the conclusion of the first, that believing Gentiles and their children are graffed in, but not all, or any as their children, and that the ingraffing is sutable to the breaking off, that is, that as the Jewes and their children were broken off from the invisible Church, in which the elect Jewes and their children who were elect in former ages were for the greatest part, so the Gentiles believers and their children are graffed in. Yet Mr. Sidenham himself pig. 75. confesseth a very great disproportion, taking it as he doth for ingraffing into the visible Church.

For, saith he, there is this difference between the conveyance of priviledges of the Jewes as natural branches, and the engraffed Gentiles; That the whole body of the Jewes good and bad, were called branches; now onely believers of the Gentiles, who are called by the Gospel, with their children, are ingraffed into that root. Which is enough to shew that the Gentiles were not ingraffed into the root or tree, as the Jews by natural descent, but by calling of the Gospel, and that the body of the Gentiles or any nation of the Gentiles is not ingraffed, but so many as are called. The ingraffing of the infant children with their parents into the visible Church by an outward ordinance is but his own dream, and is overthrown by this, that the Church Christian visible is not by descent but calling; not national but Congregational, by voluntary Covenant; nor can the Churches called Independent hold this, which Master Sidenham, and Master Cobbet, and others of their way hold, that the ingraffing of the Gentiles into the visible Church is sutable to that of the Jewes as being in their stead, but they must hold a national Church, which quite overturns the frame of their Churches, and the Reformation they contend for. To his second argument, the some that were broken off might be parents and children, or parents and not children, or children and not parents; and of these there might be infants broken off without their own sin, or their parents, according to Gods good pleasure onely. But of this I have said enough in answer to Mr. Geree and Mr. Baxter, in the first part of this Review, sect. 4, 6. The conclusion of the third argument is granted, understood of ingraffing into the Church invisible, not into the visible. To the fourth, that [the fatnes of the Olive] should note priviledges and outward advantages such as this, that the child should be visible Churchmember with the father in the Christian Church, or that any other parent then Abraham should have a seminal vertue to convey such Church priviledge or fatnes as the root mentioned Rom. 11.17. is a meer fancy; nor is there any thing Ephes 3.6. or any where else in Scripture for it.

To the objection, That now believers are onely branches, Abraham onely the roote, and therefore the argument holds not, If the parent be holy so is the childe, being understood of other then Abraham and his seed; hee answers, That yet the branches well ingraffed become natural branches, and receive as much from the roote as those which grew naturally on it, so Gentile believers must have the same priviledge, and that there are sprigges which grow out of branches which may bee termed immediate rootes. But hee doth not shew that the Apostle or any wise man ever termed greater boughes of trees rootes to lesser; neither dare hee say, the Apostle meant every believing Father by the root, Rom. 11. 16, and therefore all this is impertinent to answer the objection, which was to invalidate the interence concerning the holines of every believers infant, because the Apostle saith, if the roote bee holy so are the branches, because Abraham onely is the roote there. As for Mr. Bls. saying, I value it not, it being without Scripture. It's sufficient for present to shew the insufficiency of Mr Bls. and Mr. Ss. proofes. I pass on to vindicate my arguments from their pretended answers.

How the Dispute concerning the proof from Rom. 11.16,17. for infants of believing Gentiles visible Churchmembership and Baptism, was brought to this issue, Whether the ingraffing Rom. 11.17. into the Olive tree, be meant of joyning a person to the invisible Church of the elect by giving faith according to election, so that none are ingraffed but true believers or elect persons as I assert, is shewed in the first part of this Review sect 1. Mr. Bl. and Mr. Sydenham take on them to answer my arguments.

The first is, That act of ingraffing to the Church which is made Gods act by his sole power with such an Emphasis as implies it hopeless and impossible without the intervention of his omipotency, is, and can be no other ingraffing then into the invisible Church by giving of faith according to election. But such is the ingraffing Rom. 11.17. as appears from v. 23. Ergo.

Mr. Sydenham answers, that to argue from Gods power to his will, or to election, or from his power in general to the putting it forth absolutely in such a determinate act, is strange, unsound in Divinity, and reason. But this is no answer. For there is no such arguing made by me. My arguing is none of those ways he mentions, but from the ascribing the act to God as done by his sole power, without which it were hopeless and impossible, to prove that it is more then man by his ordinary power can do, which can in this business be no other then the working of faith in the heart. And this the Contraremonstrants thought sound arguing in the conference at the Hague, and so do generally pleaders for irresistable conversion. And Mr. Sydenham makes it like to the resurrection of the dead, from v. 15. which sure no act of man can perform. But admission to the visible Church may be performed by men, therefore the ingrafting cannot be admission into the visible Church, but an higher act of giving faith according to election.

But saith he, It is a work of mighty power to take away the prejudice against Christ, in Jews and Gentiles, to bring to outward confession. To which I reply, it is no such work but may be done by moral suasion of Orators or Preachers, specially backt with the encouragement and commands of Kings and Emperours, as experience hath often shewed, therefore this cannot be all which is meant by the ingrafting.

But saith he, It will require an act of power to gather them but visibly once again, and bring them into one entire body to make a visible Church, when they are so scattered up and down all nations. To which I reply, 1. The gathering them together into one place, is not ingrafting them into the visible Church; for ingrafting them imports joyning them to others, but this gathering is a making them a distinct body of themselves; the gathering into one place is accidental to their ingrafting into their own Olive, he ingrafting may be without it; and if they go together, it is likely the ingrafting will be before that gathering, and therefore that gathering and this ingrafting cannot be the same. 2. That gathering may be by the power and favour of Emperors and Kings, as it was by Cyrus his Proclamation heretofore in their return to Jerusalem, and therefore is not this act of ingrafting which is ascribed to God by his sole power with such an Emphasis as implies it unfeasable but by his omnipotency.

Mr. Bl. saith, that I do vainly make this engrafting to be in their sense no more then baptizing. But 1. whether I wrong my Antagonists, may be perceived from Mr. Ms words in his Defence, p. 135. To what I said, the Jews infants were grafted in by Circumcision; therefore ours are to be ingrafted by Baptism. You answer, by demanding whether in good sadness I do think the Apostle here means by grafting in, baptizing, or circumcision, or insition by outward ordinances; for if that were the meaning, then breaking off must be meant of uncircumcising, or unbaptizing. To which I reply, that in good sober sadness I do think that grafting in is admission into visible membership, or visible communion with the Church of Christ; and that the external seal of their visible grafting in was Circumcision, and of ours Baptism. And he disputes against the ingrafting into the invisible Church, therefore he can understand it of no more then baptizing. 2. Nor can Mr. Bl. conformably to his tenet. For if the ingraffing be such as is common to infants and parents, and it be admission into the visible Church of both, and infants are no way else admitted then by baptizing, the ingraffing is no other.

But, saith he, we understand a discipling of Gentile nations, working the heart to a professed subjection to the way of God in ordinances tendered, and assent of heart unto all that is there promised, and acknowledge it a work above the power of man, and confess it to be solely in the hand of God, as Gen. 9.27. Acts 11.21. we do not speak of the bare admission of one that stands intituled, but the working of them to such a title; and if an outward profession bee in the power of mans will, yet to bring men or nations to such a profession cordially to embrace the Gospel. so farre as to assent to the truth of it, is above man, and a worke of no such ease.

I reply, 1. If it be not bare admission, but such a work as he saith, then infants are none of the branches ingraffed, nor doth their ingraffing belong to them, sith they have onely bare admission into the visible Church by Baptism. 2. If the profession be onely from fear, or carnal hopes, this may be wrought by Teachers, Orators, especially the favour and power of Princes concurring, and then it is no act above mans power to ingraff. But if the heart be brought to assent cordially, and so to profess Christ in sincerity (as some of Mr. Els. words seem to mean) then it is by giving faith according to election, and the ingraffing into the invisible Church: And so Mr. Bl. while he seems to answer my argument, doth unawares confirm it, through the irrefragable force of the truth. Which might have been further cleared from the Text, Rom. 11. 23. where it is said, they also if they abide not in unbelief shall be graffed in, for God is able to graff them in again. Whence it follows, while they abide in unbelief they are not graffed in, when they believe they are; Ergo, God ingraffs by giving faith according to election.

My second argument was from v. 15, 16, 17. where the ingraffing is termed reconciliation opposite to casting away.

To this Mr. Sydenham answers, 1. If I mean reconciliation in the strictest sense, as it denotes pardon of sins, and being made friends with God by Christs atonement and mediatorship, then many absurdities may follow: 1. That the Jews and their rejection was the ground of the Gentiles reconciliation unto God. 2. That no reconciliation was obtained for the Gentiles before the Jews were broken off. 3. That those which are reconciled and their sins pardoned, may be cast off; for so were the Jews and the Gentiles threatned with the same misery on the same ground.

Answ. 1. If by [ground] be meant [cause,] I deny that to follow on the exposition of reconciliation in the strictest sense; if by [ground] be meant onely [occasion] I grant it follows, but count it no absurdity, it being the plain declaration of the Apostle. 2. I grant the second, if understood of the fulness or body of the Gentiles, and count it no absurdity; after the time of Gods separating of Israel to be his people, there were onely some proselytes reconciled to God, but no full and ample number, so as to make any numerous Church of themselves. 3.

The

The third I yeeld as no absurdity, understanding the casting off of the same people, not the same persons, from what their ancestors were, not themselves.

But Mr. S. answers 2*ly. by distinction of reconciliation into outward and inward, and he would have it meant of outward reconciliation, by bringing them in under the means of the Gospel and the outward dispensations of the Church, which is Gods common way to salvation, and is to some effectual to inward grace, unto others onely to outward* privi*ledges.*

Answ. 1. This reconciliation would exclude infants, for they are not so reconciled and consequently not ingraffed, and so the argument for their ingraffing hence is evacuated. if the reconciliation (which is confessed to be the same with the ingraffing) be such as agrees not to infants. 2. He doth noth not so much as offer to produce one place of Scripture in which reconciliation is so taken, nor one approved writer so expounding it. 3. Nor can it be expounded so. For it is no reconciliation at all which he describes. In reconciliation there is still taking away enmity, but in the bringing under the meanes of the Gospel there may be no taking away of enmity, either from them to God, for they may hate him as much, yea more then before; or from God to them, for he may hate them as much or more then before. 4. Nor in this place can it be the meaning. For the reconciliation of the world, v. 15. is v. 12. the riches of the world, of the Gentiles. But their riches imports something opposite to their fall, diminishing, or detriment; and their fall must be to damnation, for it is v. 11. opposed to salvation, their riches must needes therefore bee to salvation, so termed vers. 11.

But, saith he, "The body of the Gentile world (which I mean) are "not so reconciled as by election and saving grace, though the sound of "the Gospel hath gone through all the world.

Answ. The body of the Gentiles, that is a full ample part of them incomparably greater then the number of the proselytes to the Jewish Church is reconciled, and hath been for many ages to God by election and saving grace.

Mr. Bl. also answers by distinction of reconciliation gradual, either to take in, or hold a people in visible communion; or total, to receive them with an everlasting delight in them. The former he exemplifies out of Exod. 32. 10, 11 12, 13, 14. And thus applies it. "Reconciliation is "opposite to casting away. The Jews then by reconciliation are brought "into that state, out of which they were once cast; but they were not "cast out of the Church invisible; not out of election and justificati-"on, but out of a visible Churchstate and fellowship. Breaking off, as "Mr. T. well saith, is the same as casting away, and reconciliation the "same as ingraffing. Their reconciliation or ingraffing is then into "that condition from which they were broken, out of which they were "cast; now they were cast out of the Church visible, not out of the "Church invisible; when they were in a Churchstate they were nigh "unto God, Deut. 4. 7. Psal. 148. 14. Ephes. 2. 17. Their reconciliati-

" on brings them into the ſame Churchſtate, which is a reconciliation " gradual not total.

Anſw. The caſting away v. 15. is the ſame with the caſting away v. 1, 2. which is oppoſite to Gods fore-knowledge v. 2. to the election of grace v. 5. which obtained, and the caſtaway were hardned or blinded v. 7, 8, 9, 10. which he that underſtands of any other caſting away then from the grace of election, and effectual calling, and the inviſible Church ſeems to me to pervert the Apoſtles meaning very groſly. Nor do I conceive it any abſurdity to ſay that the Jewiſh people in Pauls time were broken off or caſt away from that election, and ſtate in the inviſible Church which they never had in their own perſons, but their anceſtors had, and they in courſe had obtained but for their unbelief. As for the reconciliation in all places where he mentions it in his Epiſtles, hee means it of that reconciliation which is by effectual converſion, and juſtification, through Chriſts death, on which followes ſalvation, Rom. 5. 10, 11. 2 Cor. 5. 18, 19, 20. Col. 1. 22. and not of Mr. Bls. gradual reconciliation, of which hee hath not brought one inſtance for the uſe of the word in his ſenſe, nor is his example any thing like to the buſineſs in hand: For it was not a reconciliation ſo as to bring them to the priviledges of a viſible Churchſtate, but ſo to pardon the ſin of worſhipping the golden Calf, as not utterly to deſtroy that people, though the ſinners fell in the Wilderneſs: which was onely an abatement of puniſhment, not an eſtating in priviledges as Mr. B. would have it.

But Mr. Bl. to my urging any one to ſhew mee in Scripture or any approved Proteſtant Writer, ſuch uſe of the word reconciliation as his is, and my alledging Proteſtant approved Writers for my expoſition, thus ſaith.

1. when Mr. T. pleaſeth, hee can heap up phraſes which are onely once uſed in a ſelect ſenſe in Scripture, and that to uphold his interpretation of holy and unclean, 1 Cor. 7. 14. when the context clearly evinces the contrary. But that this is falſe, and that the text clearly evinceth my interpretation is fully proved in the firſt part of this Review, Section 22, &c.

Secondly, ſaith hee, Maſter T. when hee pleaſes, dare undertake the defence of an opinion held unanimouſly by all Papiſts, and as unanimouſly oppoſed by Proteſtants, as in that of Covenant holineſs.

But this alſo is another of Maſter Bls. calumnies and unbrotherly taunts which hee frequently uſeth inſtead of anſwers, and if there had been in him any candour of minde towards mee he had been ſatisfied with my anſwer in my poſtſcript, Sect. 13. But ſith hee writes againſt me in a Cynical humour, I paſs by his ſnarlings, and leave the cauſe to the Lord.

Thirdly, ſaith he, Gomarus, Tom. 1. p. 111. obſerves that world is taken in that ſenſe, in Rom. 11. 12, 15. as in no other Scripture. But I think this is not true, it is taken in the ſame ſenſe 1 Tim. 3. 16. and I think 2 Cor. 5. 18, 19. 1 Joh. 2. 2.

Fourthly, ſaith he, if reconciliation in no other place be ſo uſed, yet little is gained; seeing as wee have seen there are paralel phrases that hold out the same thing to us.

Answ. 1. Those paralel phrases were never yet seen by me. 2. The thing is gained which is here contended for, if reconciliation still signifie total reconciliation in the Scripture when it speakes of Gospel reconciliation, and there is no cogent reason to move us to recede from that sense here, and reconciliation be the same with ingrafting, surely ingrafting is by giving faith according to election, and the Church into which the ingrafting is, is the invisible.

Mr. Bl. produceth a speech of Ravanellus (which I have not) for his sense. But the words as hee produceth them seem not to mee to have that sense which Mr. Bl. alledgeth them for, but rather my sense, and a passage in the Annotations, and another in Dr. Featley the Author of them on those Epistles. But in neither doth Dr. Featley say by the reconciliation to God Rom. 11. 15. is meant bare vouchsafing a visible Churchstate; and by casting away, and breaking off a loss of visible priviledges, nor do Peter Martyr or Bucer say so. And however I finde Protestant Writers do expound the ingrafting and breaking off in many of their writings of the visible Church, yet those speeches which I alledged out of Mr. Ball and Dr. Ames are full to prove the reconciliation Rom. 11. 15. to be saving, and they that understand by breaking off there, more then the loss of visible priviledges, may notwithstanding Mr. Bls. censure without any shift in that point be acquitted from Arminianism.

My third arg. was from v. 20. ingrafting must be by giving faith, because it is by faith that the branch stands in the tree. To this Mr. S. and Bl. both answer by granting the conclusion, that it is by giving faith. But this faith Mr. S. makes profession of faith, Mr. Bl. a faith of profession.

To which I reply. 1. If it were faith professed by which the branches stand in the tree, yet infants are excluded from being of the branches, for they stand not by faith professed. 2. That it is not profession of faith, or faith barely dogmatical which is meant Rom. 11. 20. I prove 1. thus. That standing which is a perseverance unto salvation is not by bare profession of faith, but true justifying faith. But the standing Rom. 11. 20. is that standing which is a perseverance unto salvation, ergo. The major is manifest; for it is not a bare profession of faith whereby a man perseveres to salvation, but that which is justifying. The minor is plain from the text. The standing which is opposed to falling in which God shews his severity, is standing by perseverance unto salvation. This I presume will be yeilded, direct opposite termes being according to Logick rules to bee understood in a direct opposite sense. But the standing Rom. 11. 20. is opposed to falling in which God shews his severity vers. 22. Ergo. 2. The standing which was to bee prevented by beeing not high minded but fearing, and the losing of which was to bee feared, is not a bare standing in the visible Church, nor by bare profession of faith, But the loss of the standing was to be feared, and to be prevented by not being high minded but fearing, fearing, v. 20. For the loſs of ſtanding in the viſible Church needs not bee ſo much feared, and a leſs care would ſerve turn to prevent it. 3. That ſtanding which would not prevent Gods not ſparing, is not the ſtanding meant Rom. 11. 20. For that would prevent Gods not ſparing, v. 21. But the ſtanding onely in the viſible Church by profeſſion of faith, would not prevent Gods not ſparing, Matt. 7. 23. Ergo. 4. That faith and ſtanding are meant here, which in other places in that and other Epiſtles are meant by the Apoſtle, when hee ſpeakes of the ſame thing. But in thoſe places ſtanding ſo as to perſevere to ſalvation, and juſtifying faith are meant, as Rom. 5. 2. and 14. 4. 2 Cor. 1. 24. Ergo. 5. That ſtanding and that faith is not meant of which it may bee ſaid the root beareth them not, verſe 18. But of them who onely ſtand in the viſible Church by a profeſſion of faith, it may bee ſaid the root beareth them not. For the root is Abraham, and hee is a root or father to none but thoſe who have juſtifying faith, Rom. 4. 11, 12. Ergo. 6. By that faith the branches ſtand which is directly oppoſite to the unbelief by which others were broken off, verſ. 20. But that was unbelief of heart, and not of mouth onely, ergo, the faith is in the heart, and not in the mouth onely by which the branches ſtand. 7. That faith the branches ſtand by v. 20. by which they are partakers of the root and fatneſs of the Olive. But that is juſtifying faith, as ſhall be ſhewed in the vindication of the next argument, Ergo.

Mr. S. takes upon him to prove it meant of the viſible Church by profeſſion of faith by ſome of Maſter Bs. arguments, which becauſe they are anſwered already in the firſt Part of this Review, Sect. 6, &c. I let paſs: onely whereas hee ſaith, Can any man conceive that they ſhould boaſt becauſe the branches the Jewes were broken from election and true faith, that they might be graffed in by a new act of Gods election, and by true and ſaving faith?

I anſwer, though they might not thus boaſt, yet they might boaſt that God having broken off the Jews, had in their ſtead ingraffed them, by giving ſaving faith according to his eternal election.

And to what hee ſaith from v. 20, 21, 22, 23 what, are they exhorted to look leaſt they bee cut off from Gods election, &c? will M. T. turn a downright Arminian, that hee may have any plea againſt the baptiſing of poor infants?

I anſwer, 1. that I ſcarſe think that ſcribler did well know what Arminianiſm was, and that I have ſufficiently acquitted my ſelf from that which is indeed Arminianiſm, and better then his magnified Aurthor Mr. B. 2. That he might with as good reaſon impeach the Apoſtle of downright Arminianiſm, in that he exhorts us to give all diligence that we make our calling and election ſure, 2 Pet. 1. 10.

Mr. Bl. when he cannot untie this knot, endeavours to cut it aſunder by this aſſertion, after many words which need no anſwer; That there is no ſuch thing in all Scripture as ingraffing into the Church inviſible by faith; all ingraffing is into the body viſible, and therefore by a faith of profeſſion. And yet his three firſt arguments whereby hee would prove this propoſition, do conclude no ingraffing but into Chriſt, and conſequently neither into the inviſible nor viſible, which is directly to contradict his own ſaying, All ingraffing is into the body viſible. But let's view his proofs about this poſition concerning which it pleaſeth Mr. Bl. to enter into the liſts with me.

1. Saith hee, " All ingraffing is into that ſubject, which immediately receives what is ingraffed, as the ſtock receives the " ſyens, but it is CHRIST, and not the Church inviſible that " receives the elect believer; Chriſt dwels in us by faith, ſo wee in " Chriſt, Epheſ. 3. 17.

Anſw. This argument is made by Mr. Bl as if hee on purpoſe meant to refute himſelf. For 1. he would prove there is no ingraffing of elect believers into the inviſible Church but into Chriſt, becauſe hee onely receives the elect believers; which if true it would follow; First, that elect believers are not ingraffed into the viſible Church, but onely non-elect profeſſours of faith who are hypocrites, and ſo the viſible Church ſhould have no elect ones in it, but all reprobates. Secondly, if the reaſon were good there ſhould bee no ingraffing of profeſſors of faith into the viſible Church contrary to his aſſertion, that all ingraffing is into the body viſible. For it is Chriſt that immediately receives, that is owns or acknowledgeth bare profeſſours of faith as viſible Churchmembers, as well as he receives, that is owns and acknowledgeth as his inviſible members, them who are ingraffed into his inviſible body. 3. If wee be ingraffed by that faith by which Chriſt dwels in us and we in Chriſt, Epheſ. 3. 17. then we are ingraffed into the olive by that faith which is juſtifying (for by no other faith doth Chriſt dwell in us nor wee in him, nor is any other meant Epheſ. 3. 17. as is apparent from the text, the prayer of the Apoſtle being not for a bare dogmatical faith, which they had already, but juſtifying, perſevering, whereby Chriſt might dwell in their hearts by his ſpirit, &c.) and the ingraffing is into Chriſt, and conſequently into the inviſible Church. But ſo it is by Mr. Bls. argument, ergo.

2. I anſwer ingraffing is a metaphor and it notes uniting or joyning, and this joyning is not natural but ſpiritual or moral, and may bee at a remote bodily diſtance, and without the knowledge of thoſe to whom the perſon is ingraffed, and may be to Chriſt, and to his inviſible body or viſible, without any act of the Church viſible or inviſible which may bee termed receiving; yea if Mr. Bs. poſition bee right, Plain Script. proof, &c. part 1. ch. 27. that a man living alone in America may yet bee a member of the viſible Church. For hee hath that which conſtituteth him a viſible member though there bee none to diſcern it, a man may bee ingraffed into the Church viſible though neither hee know any other Churchmember, nor any other know him, and therefore I deny Mr. Bls. major poſition in his argument, if underſtood (as it muſt be if it be to the purpoſe) of that metaphorical ingraffing which is Rom. 11. 17, &c.

2. Saith he, All ingraffing is into that which gives ſap and juyce to the ingraffed, as the ſtock from the root to the ſyens; now Chriſt gives ſap to the

elect believing, not the Church; and therefore it is not into the Church, but into Christ.

Answ. 1. This argument also gainsays Mr. Bls. proposition, that all ingrafting is into the body visible; for it is not the body visible that gives sap to the elect believing, or professors of faith, but Christ; and therefore by this argument there is no ingrafting into the body visible. 2. Christ onely gives sap and juice effectively, Abraham exemplarily; the Church doth it onely as a vessel receiving it, as the stock receives it first, then the branch; the veins receive the bloud, then the other parts of the body: And if Mr. Bls. major be understoood of any other giving juice, it is denied; if of this, the minor.

3. Saith he, If saving faith ingraff the branch into the Church invisible, then the Church invisible is the proper object of such faith; but the Church is no such object of faith, but Christ.

Answ. 1. The same argument holds thus, If profession of faith ingraff into the Church visible, then the Church visible is the proper object of such profession: But the Church visible is no such object, but Christ; therefore there is no ingrafting by profession of faith into the Church visible, contrary to Mr. Bls. tenet. 2. To say the Church invisible is the object of faith, is no more then to say, to believe the Holy Catholick Church is an Article of the Creed, and this I think Mr. Bl. counts no absurdity. 3. The consequence of the major proposition is denied. Faith that saves hath the object Christ, and as it respects Christ doth unite or ingraff us to him as to our head, and to the invisible Church as his body.

4. Saith he, That supposed ingrafting into the invisible Church, is either known to the body invisible, or unwitting; if known, then it is not invisible. They have no light to discern an invisible work; if unknown, then there could not be such a dispute about the new ingrafting of Gentiles, nor complaint of breaking off of the Jewes, all being done by an invisible translation, and so the subject of the question is taken away.

Answ. It was known to some of the invisible, to others not; though it were known yet it might be invisible, they had light to discern an invisible work: Though the work were unknown to some, yet there might be a dispute about the new ingrafting of Gentiles, and complaint of breaking off the Jews, as there was Acts 11. though all were done by an invisible translation: So that there is no truth or strength in this rope of sand Mr. Bl. makes, and the subject of the question still remains. There is as much futility in the rest of his dictates. Scheibler saith in his Topicks, A not-being cannot be a part dividing; yet he saith, in case any defend that to be which yet is not, in controversies such a division is to be supposed. But how vainly Mr. Bl. hath disputed against an ingrafting into the invisible Church, may be discerned, and thereby how frivolously he compares it to a mountain of ayr. And what he saith, that the acceß of the Gentiles in the Acts was an ingraffing into the Church visible, may be granted, and it may be true that it was into the invisible Church also. One new man, Ephes. 2. 15. is true onely of the invisible

Church; for the Gentiles were never one visible Church with the Jews, except some few proselytes of them. That the visible Church communicates sap and juyce which is the fatness of the Olive in ordinances, and that faith dogmatical looks upon the Church (meaning the visible) as the partial object, are dictates, which I need not refute, sith there is no proof brought for them. As I conceive he means them, they are false; so much for the vindication of my third argument.

My fourth argument is from *v.*17. thus, That ingrafting is meant v. 17. whereby the wild Olive is co-partaker of the root and fatness of the Olive tree: But such is onely by giving faith according to election; Ergo. I proved the minor by shewing that Abraham is there the root as the Father of the faithfull, and the fatness of the Olive not priviledges of outward ordinances, but righteousness.

Mr. Sydenham answers it by referring to Mr. Bl. and censuring my answer to him as a poor evasion, which I shall free from this censure in my reply to Mr. Bl. Yet Mr. S. scribles somewhat besides, which I shall reply to. He begins with questions, 1. were not the natural branches which were broken off partakers of the fatness of the root? Answ. No. And were they all elected and partakers of saving graces, or outward priviledges onely? Answ. None of the branches broken off were elected or partakers of saving graces, though some were of outward priviledges. And why then should it be thought absurd for the Gentiles by ingraffing to partake of the fatness of the root onely in outward priviledges, seeing it was so with the natural branches, and they all grow on the same root? Answ. The natural branches as natural did not grow on the same root with the ingraffed; Abraham was not a natural Father to the ingraffed branches, they descended not from him by natural generation, nor did the natural branches which were broken off grow on the same spiritual root with the ingraffed. Abraham was indeed the Father of the faithfull Gentiles, and they his seed spiritually; but so he was not to the Jews broken off, nor they ever in their own persons in the Olive tree, as it notes the Church of true believers, or in Abraham the root as is meant Rom. 11.17. nor were ever partakers of the fatness of it, but the Gentiles were; nor did the Jews fall from election and saving graces which they had in their own persons, but which they had in course been partakers of if they had believed, which I have cleared more fully in my answer to Mr. Cobbet, in the first part of this Review, sect. 10.

He tels me further, It's improper to call a root an exemplary cause; there is no harmony between them; and example conveyed nothing; here is a conveyance of fatness.

Answ. It is improper to term an exemplary cause a root, for it is a metaphor; but it is no more improper then to term an exemplary cause a Father, as the Apostle doth Abraham the Father of believers, Rom. 4.11,12. when yet the Text makes him only such by his exemplary believing; and if there were harmony between a Father and an exemplary cause, though Abraham conveyed not faith or righteousness, but as an example; there is harmony between a root and an exemplary cause, though though it convey nothing but as an example: Nor is it unsuitable to good language to say, the ingraffed branches are partakers of the fatness or fulness of Abraham as an example. That fatness the Jews had from Abraham which is meant Rom. 11.17. they had not from him as a natural father, nor did God make the Evangelical Covenant with him and his natural seed, nor do the ingraffed branches ever become natural branches, though they partake of Evangelical benefits as well as the believing Jews, who were natural branches. What Mr. S. adds in answer to my objection, that if it were meant of outward priviledges it were false; for the Gentiles were not partakers of the outward priviledges of Abraham, that Abraham is a root in the New Testament as well as in the Old, I grant; but deny what he adds, and still stands by vertue of the Covenant to believers and their children: For neither is there such a Covenant, and if there were, yet Abraham could be a root onely to his natural seed, not to Gentiles by vertue of that Covenant. And what he adds, that though old Testament ordinances were taken away with the Jews and that Church-state, yet the root is not taken away; but the New Testament priviledges grow on the same root; and our ingraffing in gives us to be partakers of the fatness of them, as well as it gave to the Jews the participation of former priviledges until they were broken off; letting pass the vanity of the speeches, that our ingraffing gave to the Jews the participation of former priviledges, which they had not by our ingrafting, but their own propagation from the root, and that the Jews had the priviledges till they were broken off, whereas the persons broken off never had the fatness meant Rom. 11.17. all this answer avoids not the objection, but plainly grants the argument. For if the Old Testament ordinances and the Jewish Churchstate were taken away (which all that are against a national Church-frame must aver) then if by fatness be meant outward ordinances and Churchstate, the Gentiles cannot be said to partake of them, nor they be meant by the fatness, Rom. 11.17. Let's examine what Mr. Bl. saith to this argument.

1. He denies that he ever said every believing parent is the root, a root he makes them, not the root. But by his leave I charge him with nothing but what doth plainly follow from his words. For that is the root according to him which communicates Covenant holiness and Churchstate, and of whom it is verified if the root be holy so are the branches. But this is said by him in his Vindic. Fæd. p. 277. and elsewhere, of every believing parent; therefore if Mr. Bl. avouch his own arguings, he makes every believing parent the root, Rom. 11.16,17.

What Mr. Bl. speaks, that other parents are roots to their posterity, is granted, and needed not to be proved by Mr. Bl. But that they being holy persons are holy roots communicating Covenant holiness to their children, is not proved by Mr. Bl. That the Covenant or promise of God made to Abraham, Gen. 15.5. & 17.4,7. did assure and so constitute Abraham to be the root of the Church of true believers, is not denied, nor that Circumcision did seal to him the righteousness of faith as a believer and the father of believers, Rom. 4.11,12. But the form denominating him Father of believers, or root of the Olive, is propagating them by his exemplary emplary faith: Nor was David by his Covenant, or Jesse, or any other believing parent a root or father in the sense *Rom.*4.11. & 11.16,17. Though they were natural roots to their posterity, and builders of the house of Israel, and the Fathers 1 *Cor.*10.1. by natural generation; yet none are said to build as Abraham, from whom the fatness, *Rom.*11.17. is derived, and not from any other intermediate father. For Abraham had been father though he had had no child by natural generation, Mat. 3.9. descending from him: Nor can it be true, that he is termed the root by reason of natural generation; For then the Gentiles had not been branches and children, and all the branches had been natural, contrary to *v.*21,24.

To this saith Mr. Bl. "He makes them wild onely at their first in-"grafting, and so was all Terahs race wild likewise, till that change of "faith wrought in Abrahams call, and the Covenant God entred with "him; we now are natural as they were, and cannot be called wild, but "in our first original.

Answ. They that were ingraffed were still branches of the wild Olive, and so are we that are believers of the Gentiles, for that title is by nature and natural descent, *Rom.*11.24. which is not changed by grace, though the fruit and sap be changed that is the qualities and actions by ingrafting: We that are believers of the Gentiles are not the branches according to nature, for that is plainly meant of the Jews onely, *Rom.*11.24. when it is said, they that are according to nature shall be graffed in their own Olive. Which shews that the term they that are according to nature is proper to the Jews: But if every believing parent should be the root, *Rom.*11.16,17. then every Gentile believers child should be a natural branch, contrary to *v.*24. for they are all besides nature, and no believing Gentile nor his child is now or hath been a natural branch in the sense the Apostle means, *Rom.*11.24.

But Mr. Bls. chief objection is this, "If the ingrafting be by a "saving faith onely, to derive saving graces personally inherent, as a "fruit of election from Abraham, then it must needs be that we are elect "in Abraham. Abraham may say, without me ye can do nothing, and "he that believeth in me, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living wa-"ter: And we may say, the life that we live in the flesh, we live by faith "in the son of Terah. This must necessarily follow, if Abraham be the "root, not onely respective to a conditional Covenant, but to the gra-"ces under condition covenanted.

Answ. 1. This objection may be thus retorted, If the ingrafting be by a faith of profession onely, to derive onely outward ordinances, outward priviledges, Covenant holiness, visible Churchmembership, as a fruit of the Covenant from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob the root, then we are in Covenant in Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: They may say, without us ye cannot be visible Churchmembers, &c. he that professeth faith in us, shall have outward Church priviledges; the priviledges we have in the visible Church, we have by profession of faith in the son of Terah. This must necessarily follow, if Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob be the root respective to the Covenant and Covenant holiness, as Mr. Bl. asserts.

when Mr. Bl. hath freed himself from these absurdities, I shall have somewhat more to answer him. 2. In the mean time my answer in my Apology is, that the absurdities follow not on my opinion, who make not Abraham a roo. as communicating faith by infusion or impetration mediatory as Christ, but as an exemplary cause of believing, in which sense he is stiled the father of believers, Rom 4 11, 12.

To this Mr. Bl. in his flirting fashion replies thus, A root not by communication, but example; an ingraffing not to have any thing communicated from the root, but to imitate it, is such a catachresis as may well make all Rhetoricks ashamed of it; and if the Sun ever saw a more notable piece of non sense, I am to seek what sense is. A root is too low in the earth to have its examples followed, and a fyens sucks in juyce, but knowes not how to imitate.

Answ. 1. Mr. Bl. grosly abuseth me by insinuating as if I mentioned a root not by communication, but example: and ingraffing not to have any thing from the roo, but to imitate it: But this I said, that Abraham is not termed the root as communicating faith by infusion, or impetration mediatory as Christ, but as an exemplary cause of believing, and the ingraffing I make to bee Gods act of giving faith after Abrahams example, whereby righteousness is communicated from Abraham as the precedent or pattern, according to which God gives both, though the branches do not themselves imitate Abraham. Now this is no more nonsense then to term him a father without any other begetting or communicating then as an exemplary cause, which the Apostle doth, Rom. 4. 11, 12. and (as I shew in the first part of this Review, Sect. 2. pag. 1.) Dr. willet, Diodati, Pareus, do so expound the root and father of the faithfull; so that if there bee non-sense, these learned men with the Apostle are to bee charged with it, as well as my self, which may redound more to Mr. Bls. then to the shame of Rhetorick. And if a root bee too low in the earth to bee as an example, so is a fathers begetting too hidden a thing to bee our example, yet Abrahams believing and justification may bee Gods example according to which hee gives faith and righteousness. 2. When Mr. Bl. makes Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, the root as communicating Ordinances, visible Churchmembership, &c. I would know how hee makes them communicating roots of these to believing Gentiles infants. Sure not by natural generation, for neither mediately nor immediately are they roots to them that way: not by teaching or example, for they are not things imitable, nor are they to them teachers, or visible examples: not by communicating to them the Covenant, that is, Gods act. What way soever hee make them the root according to his opinion there will bee as much non-sense and shame to Rhetorick, and less truth in his explication then in mine. What hee adds, that whatsoever kinde of root I make it, yet it is a communicative root, vers. 17. I grant it in the sense expressed, not of communication by infusion or mediatory impetration, but as an Idea.

And what hee saith further, that the term Father and root are not full synonyma's, yet in the main they agree; is as much as I need to shew that it is no more non-ſenſe to term him a root who communicates ſap onely as a pattern, then it is to term him a Father who begets onely as an example.

And whereas hee ſaith, both metaphors aptly ſet forth what the branches as from a root, the children as from a Father receive, namely their title to the Covenant from him; and therefore as to Abraham, ſo to all Iſrael pertained the Covenants and the Adoption, Rom. 9. 4, 5. And ſo to all that are become children and branches with them. I grant the metaphors ſet forth what the branches and children receive from the root and father: But that the thing received is title to the Covenant in Mr. Bls. ſenſe, that is to be partakers of outward ordinances (which is more truly non-ſenſe then my expreſſion of a root by exemplarity, or that to Abraham and ſo to all Iſrael pertained the Covenants and adoption, Rom. 9. 4, 5. or that to the ingraffed branches or Gentile children of Abraham, belonged the Covenants and adoption and other priviledges which are there appropriated to Iſrael after the fleſh, though not imparted to all) there alledged, is denied. Title to the Covenant of grace is not communicated to Gentile believers any otherwiſe, then in that they are made Abrahams ſeed by faith, and this is communicated to them no otherwiſe from Abraham then as an example, and therefore he is a root no other way then I aſſigne, if there bee any other way it is more then yet Mr. Bl. hath ſhewed.

Yet hee adds, the title Father is yet extended to a greater Latitude, as hee doth impart to his iſſue (as before) ſo hee is a pattern and example as even natural parents are likewiſe according as Rom. 4. 12. (quoted by Mr. T.) is ſet forth, yet that place is too palpably abuſed.

Anſw. Though Fathers bee examples and patterns to their children in their actions, yet not all nor onely parents are ſuch, nor is Abraham called a Father there becauſe hee was a good pattern onely, but becauſe hee as the Archtype or primitive pattern begat Jews and Gentile believers as his ſeed to faith, nor in this or any thing have I abuſed the Apoſtle.

Mr. Bl. tels mee. "The ſteps of the faith of the Father Abraham "is the doctrine of faith which Abraham believed, or the profeſſion "of faith which hee made. All that were profeſſedly Jews, and all that "were profeſſedly Chriſtians, walk in the ſteps of that faith: All "circumciſed believers had not that faith that juſtifies, nor yet all "the uncircumciſed; and Abraham is a father of both. Hee could "bee exemplary as a pattern to bee followed, onely in that which "is external; his faith quà juſtifying could not bee ſeen to bee "imitated.

Anſw. I abhor it to abuſe the Apoſtle ſo palpably as Mr. Bl. doth here. For it appears not onely from the main drift of the Apoſtle in the whole Chapter precedent, ſpecially v. 9, 10. but alſo from the very words v. 11. that righteouſneſs might be imputed to them alſo, that the Apoſtle ſpeaks of that faith onely which is juſtifying, which is believing with the heart, Rom. 10 10. And therefore thoſe ſpeeches are palpably falſe, that the ſteps of the faith of the Father Abraham is the doctrine of faith, faith which Abraham believed (which may be by a Teacher that neither believes nor profesſeth) or the profeſſion of faith which he made (which a Judas or Simon Magus might have, and ſo ſhould have righteouſneſs imputed to them as Abraham had) that all profeſſed Jewes or Chriſtians walke in the ſteps of that faith, that Abraham is Father of thoſe uncircumciſed believers who had not that faith that juſtifies. As for Mr. Bls. reaſon, it is againſt himſelfe; for Abrahams profeſſion could no more bee ſeene to bee imitated in the Apoſtles dayes then his faith as juſtifying: both might be known by Gods word, and be followed as a pattern, though I conceive the Apoſtle makes thoſe to walk in the ſteps of Abrahams faith, who do believe as hee did, though they never ſaw or heard of Abrahams believing, as he may be ſaid to write after a Copy who writes the ſame, though he never ſaw the Copy.

He adds, "And the like he hath pag. 78. I make Abraham onely "the root, as he is onely the Father of believers exemplarily; and "that which made him the Father of believers, was not the Covenant, "but his exemplary faith, as I gather from the words of the Apoſtle, "Rom. 9. 16, 17, 18, 19, 21. Did none but Abraham give an example unto "others of believing? The Apoſtle to the Hebrews ſets him out, chap. 11. "as one example among many; we find many that went before him, A-"bel, Enoch, Noah; and more that followed after him. And I ſhould "rather think that the Text by him produced, proves without any con-"tradiction, that the Covenant made Abraham the father of believers; "he is the called three Father of us all, and a Text quoted for it, which "is Gen. 17. 5. A Father of many nations I have made thee: And whe-"ther that be not by vertue of Covenant, let the context be conſulted, "together with the Apoſtles words, Rom. 4. 11. He cloſed with God in "Covenant, and accepted the ſeal of the Covenant, that according to "Covenant he might be the Father of all them that believe.

Anſw. 1. If Abel, Enoch, Noah, be ſet out as examples of believing with a faith juſtifying, Heb. 11. 4, 5, 6, 7. by which Noah became heir of the righteouſneſs which is by faith, then it is not true which Mr. Bl. ſaith a little before, that Abraham could be exemplary as a pattern to be followed onely in that which is external. 2. Many before and after did believe as Abraham, and they are examples to us, Heb. 6. 12. Yet we find not any whoſe faith was remarkably tried and approved as Abrahams, and therefore none denominated the Father of believers beſides him. 3. It is granted the promiſe or Covenant was the object of Abrahams faith, and that it did aſſure that he ſhould be the Father of believers both of Jews and Gentiles; yet the reaſon of the denomination of Father of believers is made onely his eminent faith, and the form denominating him is his relation to them, the foundation of which was his begetting believers exemplarily. 4. Rom. 4. 11. It is neither ſaid Abraham cloſed with God in Covenant, nor that he accepted the ſeal of the Covenant, nor is there in that v. any mention of the Covenant, or of the ſeal of the Covenant, but v. 16. the Apoſtle having termed Abraham the Father of us all, v. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21. he lets out his faith as moſt eminent, and that as the reaſon of his Fatherhood.

Mr. Bl. to what I said, the fatneſs of the Olive tree, Diodati ſaid truly, it the bleſſing and promiſe made to Abraham and to his ſeed, and ſo the Apoſtle expreſſeth, Gal. 3. 14. ſaith, This we grant, and priviledge of ordinances contained this bleſſing and this promiſe; we know the Goſpel to be the power of God to ſalvation. To which I reply, The bleſſing, Gal. 3. 14. is juſtification, v. 8, 9. and the promiſe is of the ſpirit through faith, which a man may be without, though he have the outward priviledge of ordinances, and therefore are not contained in it: Nor is the Goſpel the power of God to ſalvation without faith; and therefore if the ingraffing be onely into the viſible Church and a perſon have onely the priviledge of ordinances, he may be without the bleſſing and promiſe made to Abraham and to his ſeed, Gal. 3. 14. which is granted by Mr. Bl. to be the fatneſs meant Rom. 11. 17. and therefore the fatneſs is more then outward priviledges and ordinances, and I ſaid truly it is too waſhy and frigid an expoſition which doth ſo expound it, and this waſhes away the duſt Mr. Bl. caſts on Rom. 11. 17.

But he argues thus. "That wherein the Jews exceeded the Gentiles, "is the fatneſs whereof the Gentiles partake, when they are ingraffed "inſtead of the Jews; this none can deny, for this makes them their "equals and copartners: But it is priviledges of ordinances (how frigid and waſhy thing ſoever Mr. T. little better then profanely makes it) is the priviledge wherein Jews exceeded Gentiles, Rom. 3. 1. "Deut. 4. 7, 8. Pſal. 147. 19, 20. Therefore this is the fatneſs of the Olive.

Anſw. The major is not true, if univerſal: and Mr. Bl's. reaſon proves it. For the Gentiles when ingraffed, were not made equals and copartners in many things wherein the Jews before exceeded the Gentiles. All thoſe things mentioned Rom 9. 4, 5. were prerogatives of the Jewes never imparted to the Gentile believers, yea that priviledge mentioned Rom. 3. 1. the committing the Oracles of God, the Chriſtian Gentiles were never made equals and copartners with the Jews in, God did never give oracles and anſwers to the Chriſtian Gentiles, nor the Tables of the Covenant, and the Book of the Law to be kept, as hee did to the Jews. But that wherein the Jews and Gentiles were made equals and copartners, was juſtification by faith, and union with Chriſt by his ſpirit, as Epheſ. 3. 6. Gal. 3. 28, 29, &c. and therefore this argument is rightly retorted thus on Mr. Bl. That wherein the Gentiles ingraffed were equals and copartners with the Jews is the fatneſs meant Rom. 11. 17. But this is not the priviledges of Ordinances, but juſtification and oneneſs in Chriſt, ergo that is the fatneſs mean Rom. 11. 17.

To what I ſaid, that the Gentiles were not partakers of the outward priviledges and ordinances of Abraham and the Jews, they being taken away, hee ſaith, if that of the Apoſtle bee true, that the Goſpel was preached to Abraham, Gal. 3. 8. then this cannot bee falſe. If the Rock and Manna in the wilderneſs bee the ſame, as that on which we feed, 1 Cor. 10. 2. the outward priviledges of that people may well then bee the ſame with ours.

Anſw. 1. If the outward priviledges and ordinances of Abraham and the the Jews be the same with ours, then not onely the preaching the Gospel, but also Circumcision, the Passeover, the Temple, High Priest, sacrifices, &c. must be the same to us as to them. 2. Though the Gospel be preached to us which was preached to them, yet not in the same manner; it was preached to them as future, to us as accomplished; nor by the same ordinances, not by the slaying the Paschal Lamb, the High Priests going into the most Holy place with bloud once a year, &c. 3. Nor is it true that the Rock and Manna in the wilderness is the same as that on which we feed, 1 Cor 10.3,4. though it be true the same Christ or spiritual meate and drinke was signified by the Manna they ate, and the water out of the Rocke which they dranke, which is signified by the Bread and Wine wee receive in the Lords Supper: But this doth not shew the same outward privileges of the Jews and us, but the same spirituall benefits signified to them which are to us.

He next tels me, I have taken pains for my own full refutation; for if Abraham be the root, then the natural posterity of Abraham must of necessity be the natural branches which were cut off: which he endeavours to prove from Rom. 9.2,3. & 11.1,14. though the conclution be not denied, but oft asserted by me; and then brings in Paul thus disputing, Pauls kinsmen after the flesh were the Church visible, not invisible: But Pauls kindred according to the flesh were the branches cut off; Ergo, the Church visible not invisible was cut off: Which conclusion doth not contradict any thing I assert, who never made the Church invisible cut off, but some branches broken off from the Church invisible which was formerly in that people. So that Mr. Bl. hitherto hath made no answer to my arguments, but talkd at randome quite besides the matter urged in them.

My 5th. argument was. If the breaking off the Jews were by blinding, then the ingrafting was by giving faith; but the former is true, v. 25. Ergo, the later.

To this Mr. S. saith, There is not the same reason, seeing he takes it of giving saving faith; their blinding was judicial, a punishment for their unbelieving rejecting of the Gospel, though they had not saving faith to embrace the Gospel; the giving of faith is not in such terms; neither is saving faith so absolutely antecedent to make a man a member of the visible Church, as blinding to Gods final rejection.

Answ. He saieth there is not the same reason, but shews not why if the breaking off be by blinding, the ingrafting should not be by giving a saving faith. Sure according to all the Logick I ever learned it is as clear an argument as can be in this case, that where opposite effects are put, the one effect being from one cause, the other should be from the opposite cause. Tis true, I take the inlightning opposite to blinding to be the giving saving faith: yet do not think the blinding v. 25. to have been judicial a punishment for their unbelieving, rejecting of the Gospel, but as it is v 32. the veery shutting up in unbelief, the antecedent to unbelief, consequent on reprobation opposite to election, as v 7,8,9,10. do plainly shew, not consequent to unbelief. What he means by the giving ving of faith is not on such terms, I cannot readily divine; the speech seems to me to be either non-sense, there being no terms forementioned that I can perceive to which it may be referred, or else it is impertinent to the answering the objection, and so as that which follows. For though the giving of saving faith be not on such terms as Mr. S. means, or that it be not so absolutely antecedent to make a man a member of the visible Church as blinding is to Gods final rejection, doth it follow, that if the breaking off be by blinding, v. 25. the ingrafting is not by giving faith, v. 24? But Mr. S. adds.

2. Blindness came but in part on Israel; it fell onely on the meer visible members, not the invisible and elect: therefore the ingraffi g must be onely of visible members into the visible Church, v. 7. The election hath obtained it, but the rest were blinded.

Answ. There is no shew of consequence that I know in it, that if blindness fall not on the elect, therefore ingrafting is not of the elect onely; the argument is plain on the contrary even from vers. 7. alledged by him, the rest to wit the non-elect were blinded, therefore the ingrafted who obtained were onely the elect, and their obtaining and ingrafting was by such enlightening as wrought saving faith in them.

Mr. Bl grants the conclusion, that the ingrafting is by giving faith, but a faith of profession into a Churchstate, as he answered to the 3*d. arg.* To which I reply, 1. If it were giving of such a faith, yet infants would be excluded, sith they are not so ingrafted. 2. The ingrafting notes more then admission by an outward ordinance. 3. I proved from the Text v. 7, 8, 10. that the blinding was of those who are not elect; and therefore the inlightening by which the election obtains, or the Gentiles are ingrafted is that, as Dr. Ames saith Antisynod. animadv. in art. 1. c. 16. whereby they obtain faith and salvation from election. And I used these words, If the blinding be the effect of reprobation, and the breaking off be by blinding, then the ingrafting is by inlightening, and that inlightening is according to election, and so is all one with giving of faith, by which I mean justifying or saving faith.

At this passage Mr. Bl. lays about him thus, "Here is Divinity "which calls for patience in a degree above all that is Christian; which "one of the Contraremonstants, worthy the name of an adversary of the "Arminians, hath taught this Doctrine? It is that which their adversa- "ries indeed charge upon them, but that which they unanimously do dis- "claim. I have heard that reprobation is the antecedent of sin, but ne- "ver that it was the cause; and that sin is a consequent of it, but never "an effect. Reprobation is the act of God; and in case it be the cause "of blindness, then God is the cause: So that the Contraremonstrants "have got a sweet Advocate to cast that upon them, that none of their "adversaries (though they have turned every stone to it) could never "prove by them.

Answ. 1. I did onely use this expression [if the blinding be the effect of reprobation] which causeth all this insulting, which doth not positively assert it, onely Mr. Bl. gathers it from the assumption which he

ſuppoſeth I would have put, which is not very candid dealing. 2. The aſſumption he ſets down thus, then his aſſumption can be no other, but that blindneſs is the effect of reprobation: But herein he doth greſly abuſe me. For I did not ſay, if blindneſs be the effect of reprobation, but if blinding be the effect of reprobation, between which there is a great difference. For blindneſs is mans ſin, but blinding is Gods act, aſcribed to God *v.*8. when it is ſaid, God hath given them a ſpirit of ſlumber, eys that they ſhould not ſee. And *Joh.*12.40. He hath blinded their eys, and hardened their heart. And this act being no other then the certain permiſſion of ſin, is commonly made by Proteſtants an effect and means executing the decree of reprobation, which is no other then blinding. *Potav. ſynt. l.*4. *c.*10. *Reprobationis effectus eſt permiſſio lapſus. Ames. med. Theol. l.*1. *c.*25. §. *Tertium reprobationis actus eſt intentio dirigendi media illa, quibus juſtitia poſſit in reprobas manifeſtari. Media hujus generis maxime propria ſunt permiſſio peccati, derelictio in peccato, Rom.*9 18. 2 *Theſ.*2.11,12. *Calvin. Inſtit. l.*3. *c.*23. §.1. unde (from *Rom.*9.18.) ſequitur abſconditum Dei conſilium obdurationis eſſe cauſam. Yea, § 4. he ſaith, Cujus rei (defectionis Angelorum) *cauſa non poteſt alia adduci quam reprobatio, quæ in arcano Dei conſilio abſcondita eſt. Vide Andr. Rivet. ſum. contro. tract.*4. *q.*6,7. And *Piſcat. obſerv.*9. *e Rom.*9.10,11,12,13. Errant igitur qui putant prædeſtinationem pendere a prævisis operibus, vel a prævisa fide, vel incredulitate. Imo hæc omnia prædeſtinationis effecta ſunt: quomodo igitur poſſunt ſtatui prædeſtinationis cauſæ? So that if I had taught (as Mr. Bl. miſreports me) that Gods reprobation cauſeth blindneſs; yet I had Authours worthy the name of adverſaries to the Arminians ſo ſaying: Nor have I done any ſuch high diſ ſervice to the anti-Arminians as in the Table at the end of his Book he chargeth me with. 3. If Mr. Bl. had not minded to pick a quarrel, he might have interpreted (as indeed I meant) the term effect not ſtrictly or rigourouſly, as Scheibler ſpeaks, but in the ſenſe in which Logicians call the Eclipſe of the Moon, the effect of the interpoſition of the Earth between it and the Sun, though it be rather a conſequent, then an effect; after which manner I explained the term cauſe in the ſame Book, Review, part 1. *ſect.*35. *p.*238. 4. Let the word [effect] be left out, and let the word [conſequent] be put in, my argumen hath the ſame force; and therefore this was in Mr. Bl. a meer wrangling exception.

Let's view what he ſaith in anſwer thereto. He ſaith, "Mr. T. lays "all upon God, Gods reprobation cauſes blindneſs, and their breaking "off is by blinding; here is no hand but Gods in their deſtruction. "And now the blaſphemy of the conſequence being denied, ſo that blind-"neſs is no effect of reprobation, breaking off being not by blinding; "what becomes of the rule of oppoſites here produced? And Mr. T. "ſhould not be ignorant, that election and reprobation in the work of "ſalvation and damnation do not per omnia quadrare, otherwiſe as e-"lection leads to ſalvation without any merit of works, ſo reprobation "ſhould lead to deſtruction without any merit of ſin; which Contrare-"monſtrants unanimouſly deny, though Mr. T. here will have them to "affirm, having before quoted *v.*8. & 10. of this chapter, he ſaith from "which Anti-Arminians gather absolute reprobation, and then explains "himself what this absolute reprobation in his sense is in the words "spoken to. And then in opposition to me cite Gomarus denying ab. "solute reprobation in my sense, that God absolutely reprobates any "man to destruction without subordinate means, to wit, sin; that God "doth not effect sin, or decree to effect it: And Dr. Prideaux, that sin "follows not on reprobation as an efficient, but deficient; is a conse- "quent, not effect of reprobation: And Mr. Ball, that Gods decree is "not the cause of mans sin.

Answ. In all this there's not a word that takes away the force of the argument; if that word [effect] had been left out, as it was left out in the first framing of it, and [consequent] had been put in, though the argument had been as strong if that word had been used, or, as it was in the first framing, neither used. He accuseth me of blasphemy here as asserting blindness to be the effect of reprobation, that I lay all upon God, no hand but Gods in mens destruction; that I make Contraremonstrants to affirm an absolute reprobation without any merit of sin; and that I explain absolute reprobation gathered by them from Rom. 11.8,10. in this sense, of all which charges there is not one true; so that here is nothing but a fardel of manifest calumnies. And as for what he alledgeth, that breaking off is not by blinding, because blindneß was their guilt, and casting off their just sentence, and the guilt and punishment are not one, it doth no whit intringe my argument. For these may well stand together, that Gods reprobation is executed by blinding, and yet blindness their guilt, and upon their unbelief or blindness God breaks them off by a just sentence; as on the other side, election is the cause of Gods enlightening, whereby the ingrafted branches believe, and through faith they are by Gods act of grace ingrafted in to the invisible Church of true believers: And in this manner the rule of opposites holds evidently, although election and reprobation in the work of salvation and damnation do not per omnia quadrare, nor there be any such absolute reprobation as leads to destruction without any merit of sin. Which kind of absolute reprobation I never asserted, nor ascribed to Contraremonstrants who onely make reprobation absolute, in that the reason why God in his eternal decree or purpose did choose one to life and not another, is not the foreseen belief and obedience of one, or the foreseen unbelief or disobedience of the other, but his own will, Rom. 9.11,12,13,18. Nor do I make sin in proper or strict acception the effect of Gods act; I never said, blindness is the effect of Gods reprobation, as Mr. Bl. misreports me, nor that God doth by any positive influx work it in man as an efficient; but I said, blinding was the effect of reprobation in a larger sense, as effect is taken for a consequent, and that it was by blinding, which doth not at all gainsay the sayings of those learned Writers alledged by Mr. Bl. And if Gods severity in not sparing the natural branches were explicitely no more then what Christ threatned, Matth. 21.43. yet my argument holds good. For the taking away of Gods Kingdome is not onely the taking away of the preaching of the Gospel, but also the being of the Church of true believers among them as heretofore; and so the breaking off was by blinding, and the ingraffing into the invisible Church of true believers by giving of faith according to election, which was to be proved.

My 6th. arg. was, If reingraffing of the Jews produceth salvation, is by turning them from iniquity, taking away their sins according to Gods Covenant, then it is into the invisible Church by giving faith, but the former is true v. 26, 27. Ergo, the later.

Mr. S. saith, "To which I give a fair answer, that doubtless accor-"ding to those promises, when the Jews shall be called in to be a visi-"ble Church again, there shall bee abundance of more glory brought in "with them, then ever yet the world saw; and the new heavens, and the "new earth, the coming down of the new Jerusalem and all those glori-"ous things are fitted to fall in with that time. And from these consider-"rations many do interpret v. 26. litterally, And so shall all Israel bee "saved. But get 1. they shall be ingraffed in as a visible Church, else A-"braham and the Fathers would never be mentioned as roots. 2. They shal "be ingraffed as they were broken off: now they were broken off as a "visible Church. 3. All that can be gathered is this, that the fulnes of "salvation, and the vertues of the promises shall more fully and univer-"sally take effect on the Jews, even to the salvation of all of them; and "so the invisible & visible Church be more pure and as one in the earth; "but this fulnes shall be to them as a visible Church and on the earth.

Answ. 'Tis a fair answer, but such as hath nothing to weaken the argument, there being neither of the premises denied, but the minor granted expresly, that the vertues of the promises shall take effect on the Jews even to the salvation of all of them, which if true, then none are ingraffed but elect persons, and their ingraffing into the invisible Church, now the ingraffing of the Gentiles, was the same with the re-ingraffing of the Jews, if then the Jews re ingraffing were into the invisible Church according to election, so is the ingraffing of the Gentiles. What hee saith, yet they shall be ingraffed as a visible Church, and this fulnes shall be to them as a visible Church, taking [as] reduplicatively cannot bee true, for then every visible Church should have all in it saved, and for the reasons he brings to prove, they are answered before, the fathers are not mentioned as roots, but Abraham, who is a root not of the visible Church as such, but of the invisible of true believers, and they are ingraffed as the other were broken off from the invisible Church.

Mr. Bl. saith, "This arg. well husbanded, might have made three; "to the first I say, that a Churchstate in Scripture phrase is salvation, "Job. 4. 22. seeing Churchmembers are partakers of saving ordinances; "And the fruition of ordinances under Gospel dispensations is a great "salvation, Heb. 2. 3. And so that text Rom. 11. 26. And so all Israel shall "be saved, must be understood as I told Mr. T. p. 67. of my answer out "of the last annotations, and so Diodate.

Answ. This then is the meaning of Rom. 11. 26. All Israel shall bee saved, that is, they shall be in a visible Churchstate partakers of saving (outward) ordinances under Gospel dispensations. But can Mr. Bl. or any sober man think this to be the meaning, they shall be saved, that is, they ſhall be in ſuch an eſtate in which they may bee damned, and in which many are damned? or that God where hee mentions the effect of his his great Covenant of the Goſpel, means no more but ſuch an eſtate? Is this all or any part of the new Covenant Heb. 8 10, &c. Heb. 10. 16, 17. to have a meer viſible Churchſtate? I did alwayes think the Covenant of Grace had promiſed the ſpirit of Chriſt, that the Miniſtery thereof was of the ſpirit, 2 Cor. 3. 6, 8. of righteouſneſs, v. 9. not of a meer viſible Churchſtate. And ſure if we look to the place whence theſe words are quoted (as Mr. Bl ſaith) Iſai. 59. 20. Jerem. 31. 34 there is an expreſs promiſe of the ſpirits continuance upon them, which is ſure much beyond a viſible Churchſtate. As for what he brings out of Scripture, it is ſhamefully wreſted. For Job. 4. 22. a meer viſible Churchſtate is not termed ſalvation, but whether by it bee meant by a metonymy, the doctrine of ſalvation, or the authour of ſalvation Chriſt himſelf, it is certainly another thing then a meer viſible Churchſtate, yea in that ſenſe the ſpeech were abſurd to term a meer viſible Churchſtate ſalvation, and falſe to ſay that the viſible Churchſtate was of the Jewes. And for the other text Heb 2. 3 it doth not term the fruition of outward Ordinances under Goſpel diſpenſations great ſalvation, but the great beneſit purchaſed by Chriſt termed eternal ſalvation, Heb. 5. 9. declared and offered in the Goſpel. Diodati annot. on Heb. 2. 3. So great] namely everlaſting redemption, revealed and communicated by the Goſpel, and implicitely oppoſed by the Apoſtle to the temporal deliverance out of Egypt, for the contemning of which the Iſraelites were puniſhed in the wilderneſs. And though the new Annot. and Diodati paraphraſe Rom. 11. 26. by [put into the way of ſalvation] yet they do not reſtrain this to a meer viſible Churchſtate; yea both add, that by [all Iſrael] may be underſtood the Iſrael of God, Gal. 6. 16. of Jews and Gentiles, which is the inviſible Church. And Dicſon thus paraphraſeth the words, And ſo all Iſrael, that is, the multitude of Jews comprehending the body of the people diſperſed ſhall be converted. And Piſcator in his Scholie, The fulneſs of Iſrael ſhall be ſaved, to wit being effectually called by the preaching of the Goſpel, and juſtified by faith in Chriſt. But what is ſaid of all Iſrael, is not to be extended to each, but to be underſtood of the greateſt part, from which the denomination is wont to be made.

Mr. Bl adds, "And ſuch men brought into a Churchſtate are turned "from iniquity partially, from their former way of iniquity; their con- "tradicting and blaſpheming; having eſcaped the pollution of the world, "2 Pet. 2. 6. of the world that remains out of the Church of God.

Anſw. 1. Were this the meaning, yet infants ſhould be excluded, who are not thus turned. 2. That ſuch a partial turning cannot be meant, is manifeſt, in that the term is ἀσεβείας ἀπὸ Ἰακὼβ, ungodlineſſes, that is, all ſorts of ungodlineſs from Jacob that is, as Piſca or in his ſcholie, by pardoning or remitting and juſtifying by faith, and this to be done by the redeemer which ſhall come out of Sion who ſo turns from iniquity as to bleſs them whom he turns, Acts 3. 26. which doth not agree to Mr. Bls. partial turning. More rightly Dicſon thus paraphraſeth the words. He foretelleth that ſo it ſhould be, that the true redeemer ſhould free his nation from the guilt and ſervitude of ſin, the iniquities of that people being pardoned; and that it ſhould be, that he would receive them into the Covenant of grace to the full aboliſhing of ſin.

But, ſaith Mr. Bl. " Their ſin is pardoned quoad hoc: and when Moſes prayed for the pardon of the ſin of Iſrael, Exod. 32. and God promiſeth it, 2 Chron. 7. 14. it is ſo to be underſtood of a national pardon.

Anſw. A partial pardon quoad hoc of ſome particular ſin, and releaſing onely of ſome particular evil, cannot be meant Rom. 11. 26, 27. ſith it is a taking away of their ſins, by the agency of the redeemer that comes out of Sion, and according to Gods Covenant to them; which is the ſame with that, Jer. 31 33. Heb. 8. 12. & 10. 16, 17. in which eternal redemption and inheritance are aſſured, Heb. 9. 12. 15. I grant it ſhall be a national pardon, underſtanding by nation the greateſt or chiefeſt part of the nation, but different from the pardon obtained by Moſes, Exod. 32. or promiſed, 2 Chron. 7. 14.

To what I ſaid in anſwer to Mr. Geree, that I thought at the Jews reſtauration there ſhall be ſome of them formaliſts and hypocrites, but none of the re-ingraffed, Mr. Bl replies, The re-ingraffing here is in their ſtead that fell away by multitudes, and therefore were hypocrites and formaliſts, and the ingraffed ſuch as might fall, which is not ſpiritual Iſrael, but carnal. But the text doth not ſay, the Jews ſhall be re-ingraffed in their ſtead that fell away by multitudes, but onely that the Gentiles be graffed into the Olive in ſtead of the Jews broken off, v. 17. and the Jews ſhall be re ingraffed when the fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come in, and both be ingraffed together, not the one broken off to make room for the other, as in the calling of the Gentiles, v. 19. Yet were it ſo as Mr. Bl. ſaith, how doth it follow, the re-ingraffing here is in their ſtead that fell away by multitudes, Ergo the re-ingraffed were ſome of them formaliſts and hypocrites? I conceive it follows rather on the contrary, thoſe that fell away were hypocrites, therefore they that are ingraffed in their ſtead are living branches, or ſincere believers. As for what he ſaid before about the falling away of the ingraffed, is anſwered before.

But Mr. Bl. yet adds, " There is a national pardon, and a perſonal: " pardon is oft applied to a national return, as 2 Chron. 7. 14. & Jerem. " 18. 7, 8. there it is the removal of drought, locuſts, peſtilence; here " their judgement was the vail of blindneſs, not aſſenting to the Goſ- " pel light; and they ſhall be ſaved from this blindneſs, as the text " expreſly hath it, v 25, 26.

Anſw. This blindneſs is no way removed but by giving of faith, as is proved before; and therefore this proves for me, the ingraffing to be giving faith according to election, and all the ingraffed to be elect.

Yet once more ſaith Mr. Bl. " The words quoted out of v. 26, 27. are " partly from Iſa. 59. 20. and partly from Jerem. 31. 34. as I conceive, " which in the Prophets are directly ſpoken of a national return, and na- " tional pardon, as Mr. B. of one of them hath well obſerved: but in New " Teſtament Scriptures variouſly applied, as all know that text of Habak- " kuk is, ch. 2. 4. That of Jeremy is applied perſonally: but here, as the context is clear, it, must bee applied nationally to Israel according to the flesh. The vail shall be taken from them on whom it lies; it lies on Israel according to the flesh: what mystery had the Apostle revealed in case he had onely shewed that all elect believers should be saved?

Answ. Though that were no mystery, yet it was a mystery, that God should contrive it so that Israel Gods people formerly should now be blind, and the Gentiles see, and when their fulneß is come in, then all Israel should be saved, who were then broken off. And this salvation is to be national, and yet spiritual, there being a national effectual conversion to God, although all of the nation be not converted, as well as there is a national return from captivity, and yet not all return. The words being quoted from Isai. 59. 20. Jer. 31. 34. there being no reason to the contrary they should be applied personally here, as they are Heb. 8. 12. & 10. 16, 17. I shall close up the vindication of this argument with the words of Dr. Owen of perseverance Ch. 7. §. 24. The force then of this promiſe, Isa. 59. 20 and the influence it hath into the eſtabliſhment of the truth we have in hand, the perpetual abiding of the ſpirit with the Saints, will not be evaded and turned aſide, by affirming, that it is made to the whole people of Israel. For be des, that the ſpirit of the Lord could not bee ſaid to bee in the ungodly re ected part of them, nor his word in their mouth, there is not the leaſt in text and context, to intimate ſuch an extent of this promiſe as to the ob ect of it, and tis very weakly attempted to bee proved from Pauls accommodation, and interpretation of the v. fore going in Rom. 11.26. For it is moſt evident, and indiſputable to any one, who ſhall but once caſt an eye upon that place, that the Apoſtle accommodates and applies theſe words to none, but onely thoſe who ſhall be ſaved, being turned away from ungodlineß to Chriſt, which are onely the ſeed before deſcribed. And thoſe hee cals all Israel; either in the ſpiritual ſenſe of the word, as taken for the choſen Israel of God, or elſe indefinitely for that nation, upon the account of thoſe plentiful fruits, which the Goſpel ſhall finde amongſt them, when they ſhall fear the Lord and his goodneß in the latter dayes.

My ſeventh argument was, If the re-ingraffing bee by vertue of Gods election and love, his gifts of calling, then it is into the invisible Church, by election and giving of faith; But the former is true v. 28, 29 Ergo, the latter. Mr. S. anſwers, 1. "It's ſaid, that as touching electi-"on the Jews are beloved for their fathers ſake; hence it follows, God "hath a love of election to believers and their natural ſeed; for ſo the "Jews were the natural ſeed of Abraham.

Anſw. It followes not of believing Gentiles and their natural ſeed, for this is ſpoken peculiarly of the Jews. Nor doth it follow of all the natural ſeed of Abraham, the contrary is determined Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8. nor of any at all times, as in the time of their great Apoſtaſie. Much leſs doth it hence follow, as it hath been pleaded for Pædobaptiſm, that becauſe God loved the Jews for the fathers ſake, therefore wee are to take in the parcels, all the infants of inchurched believers, to bee elect and in the Covenant of Grace, and thereupon to baptiſe them, this to my apprehenſion hath not a ſhadow of conſequence.

But,

But saith Mr. S 2. It's granted that the calling of the Jews shall be according to Gods election and first love; and that Gods election shall more fully take hold of the Jews at their recalling, then of any nation: but yet still the argument is of no force to prove that their re-ingraffing and so ours is onely or firstly into the invisible Church; for they are elected as well to be a visible Church, as to be partakers of inward graces; and their re-ingraffing must be specially and firstly into the visible Church from which they were broken off, or else there will be no correspondence between their rejection and re-ingraffing.

Answ. Yet the arg. is of force to prove it is into the invisible Church, so as none are re-ingraffed but the elect and partakers of inward graces, though it were granted that their re-ingraffing be specially and firstly into the visible Church: Yea, Mr. *S*s reason is against himself, to wit their re-ingraffing be not firstly and specially into the invisible Church by faith, there will be no correspondence between their re-ingraffing and rejection, which was firstly and specially from the invisible Church by unbelief.

Mr. Bl. answers thus. His election, love, and gifts of calling, did at the first put them into a visible Churchstate and condition, Deut. 7.7,8. And the same love, election, and gifts of calling, now they are broken off, doth re-ingraff them; if this argument hold, it was an invisible Church that was brought out of the land of Ægypt.

Answ. According to Mr. Bl. the Apostle should mean that the election and love, Rom. 11.28. are meant of such election and love as may be to them that perish, and such a calling and gifts as may be lost, for such the election into a meer visible Churchstate and condition, and calling, and love, and gifts are, which Mr. *Bl. p.*302. will have to be the meaning of the Apostle here. But this is not meant here, 1. because that election, love, gifts and calling are here meant, as are from the Covenant of the Redeemer, v 26,27. and whereby all Israel shall be saved; this is manifest from the connexion, the words v 28,29. being a confirmation of the proposition all Israel shall be saved, v 26. from the Covenant to turn away impieties from Jacob, and to take away their sins, for this reason, because they are beloved according to the election and calling of God, which are unchangeable. But such salvation, election, love, gifts and calling never happen to them that perish, the Covenant, turning away from impieties, and taking away sins, belong onely to them who are eternally saved; therefore they are not an election, love, gifts, and calling which put into a meer visible Churchstate and condition.

2. Such gifts and calling of God are not here meant which are revocable, or of which God repents; for to be without repentance is to be without revocation, or change: But the gifts and calling which are into a meer visible Churchstate, are revocable and with repentance, as both the Scripture and experience shews, therefore they are not here meant.

3. That calling and election are meant here which are ascribed to God in the passages where there is speech of Gods election and calling of persons before in the 8th. 9th. and 11th. chapters; for it is manifest, that the dispute about election and calling of the Jews and Gentiles, ch. 9,10,11. arose from the words of the Apostle, Rom. 8,28,29, &c. But the election and calling in all the passages signifies such an election and calling as is to eternal life and righteousness, as is manifest from *Rom.*8.28,30,33. *Rom.*9.7,11,24,25,26. *Rom.*11.5,7. Therefore not an election or calling into a meer visible Church state.

4. That calling and election is meant here, which is usually, if not always, meant by the Apostles in their writings. For it's likely Paul would speak here in the sense in which the word is commonly used, there being no cogent reason to the contrary. But the words election and calling in the Apostles writings are taken usually, if not always, for election and calling to righteousness and eternal life, as may appear by these places, 1 *Cor.*1.2,9,24,26,27,28,29. & 7.15,18,20. *Ephes.*1.4,18. & 4.1,4. *Gal.*1.6,15. & 5.8,13. *Phil.*3.14. *Col.*3.12,15. 1 *Thes.*1.4 & 2.12. & 5.24. 2 *Thes.*1.11. & 2.11,14. 1 *Tim.*5.21. & 6.12. 2 Tim. 1.9. & 2.10. *Tit.*1.1. *Heb.*3.1. & 9.15. James 2.5. 1 Pet 1.1,15. & 2.9 & 5.10. 2 *Pet.*1.3,10. Jude 1. *Revel.*17.14. Therefore the meaning is in like manner, *Rom.*11.28,29.

That which Mr. Bl. alledgeth from *Deut.*7.6,7. doth not weaken this. For though it prove that which is not denied, that there is an election of a people to a visible Churchstate; yet it proves not such an election and love to be meant *Rom.*11.28. nor by my argument doth it with any colour of reason follow, that the Church brought out of Ægypt was the invisible Church, because they are said to be chosen, *Deut.*7.6,7. any more then because Judas is said to be chosen by Christ, John 6.70. therefore election, *Rom.*11.28. is into a meer visible Churchstate or Apostleship.

But Mr. Bl. after his calumny of my disservice to the Anti Arminians wiped away before, tels us that the Apostle there delivers an universal proposition, and applies it to such election, love, and gifts that belongs to bodies or nations, yet it is a truth that equally holds, when it is applied to election to salvation, and with just warranty is applied by Divines to that purpose.

Answ. It is not true that the Apostle delivers, *Rom.*11.29. an universal proposition concerning any election, love, calling, gifts, for then it would be false, there be many gifts and callings of God which are not without repentance in the Apostles sense; but a proposition of the gifts and calling which are to salvation, according to that love and election which are to everlasting salvation according to the Covenant mentioned v. 26 27. and therefore those Divines who understand it of election, love, gifts and calling to a meer visible Churchstate and condition, have no warranty to apply it to prove that election and perseverance which the Text, if they speak true, speaks not of; and the argmuent from thence for that purpose is utterly enervated by that interpretation, sith the assumption is by it made confessedly false, if the argument be thus framed, That decree is immutable, and that gift and calling of God do certainly continue which the Apostle saith are without repentance. But the Apostle saith the decree of election to eternal life, and the gift of taking away sins and the calling which is inward are without repentance. Ergo. As for Pareus his forming it as from the less to the greater, it is, as for the moſt part ſuch arguments are, liable to many exceptions; and in this matter hath no ſtrength; for then it would follow, that if Gods gift and calling to viſible Churchſtate is without repentance, calling to the office of a Presbyter, which is more, is without repentance. I deny not but Commentators do ſpeak ſome of them as Mr. Bl. alledgeth, and ſome doubtfully of which election and calling to underſtand it, and ſome ſpeak diſjunctively as if it were meant of either; and ſome one while means it of the one, and another while of the other. But it is not worth while to ſearch into or ſet down their words. It is ſufficient that I have demonſtrated that it muſt be meant of ſuch election, love, gifts and calling as are to ſaving holineſs, and righteouſneſs, and eternal life. Yet thoſe which I alledged as writing againſt the Arminians, and underſtanding it of the decree of election unto life and perſeverance in ſaving grace, Mr. Bl. denies not that I have rightly cited them, onely he will not have Ames ſo peremptory as I am, by reaſon of ſome words of his, from which Mr. Bl. doth moſt falſely inter thus, [ſo that it appears according to him that they ſpake truth in the denial of this to be meant of the unchangeable decree of eternal election,] which they who read Ames his words in his Coronis, art. 5. cap. 4. may eaſily diſcern. I add to thoſe I cited in the firſt part of this Review, ſect. 2. pag. 15. Dr. Owen, of perſeverance, c. 2. §. 7. &c. Dr. Kendal, of redemption, ch. 8. pag. 20, &c. The reaſon why ſome will not have it meant of election and effectual calling to ſalvation is their miſtake, that particular perſons may not be ſaid to fall away from ſuch election and calling. For though it be true, that the particular perſons never fall away from their perſonal election and calling, yet they may fall away from that election and calling to eternal life which they in their anceſtors had; which ſenſe I have ſhewed to be agreeable to the Apoſtles meaning, in the firſt part of this Review, ſect. 3. And Dr. Twiſs in his Vind. Grat. l. 3. err. 8. ſect. 3. acknowledgeth that when the Apoſtle ſaith, Rom. 11. 23. they ſhall be graffed in, he means it not of thoſe individuals in their perſons, but their poſterity.

But Mr. Bl. argues thus. The Fathers for whoſe ſake they are beloved are the ancient Fathers from whom after the fleſh they did proceed, ſpecially Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, the word is for the Fathers: Then election muſt needs be underſtood of an external grace of the Covenant, whereby God choſe this nation to himſelf, according to that of Moſes, Deut. 7. 6. unleſs we are elect in Abraham to ſalvation and not in Chriſt. And Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob are our mediators of reconciliation: and when the Apoſtle ſaith, we are accepted in the beloved, Epheſ. 1. 6. it is to be underſtood of acceptation in Abraham: and we are to conclude our prayers, not in and through Chriſt, but Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob; we are not for their ſakes beloved to ſalvation.

Anſw. 1. That the election, Deut. 7. 6. muſt be underſtood of an external grace of the Covenant, needs better proof then Mr. Bl. brings. For God may be ſaid to chooſe a nation, and yet not chooſe every one of the nation, it being uſual, as Mr Cobbet obſerves, Juſt. vindic. part 2. ch. 2. that things ſaid of a people collectively are meant of the greater or better part diſtributively. 2. The abſurdities will preſs Mr. Bl. as well as me. For if, as Mr. Bl. saith, the election and love be to a meer visible Churchstate and condition, we may say by the same reason which he useth, We are elected in Abraham to Churchstate, and not in Christ; he is our mediator of reconciliation; we are accepted in Abraham the beloved; we are to conclude our prayers not in and through Christ, but Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, which are absurd: We are not beloved for their sakes in the sense in which we are beloved in Christ, to visible Churchstate, any more then to salvation. 3. Though we are not for their sakes or for them beloved to salvation, yet the Jews are. 4. We are elect in Christ as the first-born among many brethren, Rom. 8.29. as the head of many members, as the mediator the second Adam, by whom the life we are elected to is conveyed, in which sense we are said to be accepted or favoured, he is the mediator of reconciliation by his bloud, we conclude our prayers in and through him as the High Priest of our profession: But they that say, the Jews are beloved to salvation for the fathers sakes or for Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, need not, nor do mean it in these senses; but thus, they are beloved to salvation by reason of Gods Covenant to them, *Exod.*32.13. *Levit.*26.42. their fidelity to him, *Nehem.*9.8. so that Abraham was called the friend of God, James 2. 23. which are no whit derogatory to the prerogative of Christ, in whom alone we are elected, reconciled, favoured, heard, as the onely begotten son of God, and the alone mediator between God and man.

What Mr. Bl desires me to consider that Moses interceded for the whole body of Israel, *Exod.*32.13. and that God promiseth to remember the whole nation under suffering, *Levit.*26.42. is nothing for Mr. Bls. purpose. For if it were granted, that Moses interceded for the whole nation, yet it follows not, that Gods promise was to every individual of that nation, *Levit.*26.42. And if it were, yet it follows not that it must be so *Rom.*11.26,27,28,29. Nor if it were granted (though the contrary is to me more probable) doth it follow, that the election, love, gifts, calling, cannot be to salvation, but must be into a meer visible Churchstate and condition, or, as Mr. Bl. terms it, external grace of the Covenant, sith there is no absurdity, that I know of to conceive, that at the calling of the Jews every individual Jew shall be a true believer, and saved. Nor doth my opinion impute any errour to Moses or Paul, but Mr. Bl. doth in this as in other things, egregiously trifle as one that writes without heed of what he saith.

My 8th. argument is this. If the ingraffing both of Jews and Gentiles be the fruit of Gods mercy, the breaking off by shutting up in unbelief, then the ingraffing is into the invisible Church by election and giving faith: But the former is true, vers. 30, 31, 32. Ergo, the later.

Mr. S. rather slights then answers this argument. For he takes no notice of that part of the medium, [the breaking off by shutting up in unbelief,] which shews what mercy it was by which they were ingrafted, to wit, converting and reconciling mercy proper to the elect, as the very opposition of the terms shews. v. 32. they were before shut up in unbelief by severity, now by mercy they are brought to faith and favour,

but tels me, this proposition is unsound on which the argument is built, what ever is a fruit of Gods mercy is from election and ingraffing into the invisible Church, because that health, &c. are fruits of Gods mercy. But it is not true, the proposition on which the argument is built is as hee saith, but thus; That mercy which doth take away the shutting up in unbelief, is converting reconciling mercy from election, whose effect is the ingraffing into the visible Church by giving saving faith, ergo, if the ingraffing, &c. And this Mr. S. hath not disproved, nor do I think can be disproved.

Mr. Bl. saith, He hath answered this before, and onely desires meet give him a Comment on Hos. 1. 6, 9.

But first if he have answered this before, then his answer is also refelled, and it is shewed that the mercy here is more then the priviledge of a visible Churchstate. 2. Mr. Bls. desire I shall not refuse to yeild to, when I finde any argument drawn by him from Hos. 1. 6, 9. to make void my argument from Rom. 11. 30, 31, 32.

But to my additional confirmation of my arguments in my Apology p. 73. that the whole scope and series of the Chapter and the frequent mention from v. 1. to 13. of termes importing election, reprobation and their consequents, with the Apostles exclamation v. 33. do fully shew the ingraffing to be into the invisible Church, by election and giving faith; Mr. Bl. replies thus.

Mr. T. might do well to tell us what ingraffing is by election: I take that to be an immanent act in God, which is terminated in himself, and not on the creature; such expressions do not sute with Mr. T. his high pretendings to scholastical learning.

Answ. Where and when I made high pretendings to schol stical learning, if Mr. Bl. had informed mee it might have done mee good to humble mee for such folly, but this dealing of Mr. Bl. by quips to mis-represent me as an arrogant man, hath no better appearance then a shew of a malevolent minde in him towards mee. I hope I have so much scholastical learning as to vindicate my own writings, from his and others Cavils, and sure I am that what ever my learning bee, Master Bl. hath shewed more of a surcosticall bitter spirit in his writings against mee, then of scholastical learning, in which how much hee is defective, I had rather Mr. B and such birds as are of the same feather should tell him then my self. As for this exception it's so frivolous, as that it deserves not a reply.

I did not say the ingraffing is by election alone but by election and giving faith, which sometimes I do express suitably to Ephes. 1. 4. thus [by giving faith according to election] and even in the first part of this Review, pag. 14. where I repeat this very thing, and do often tell what the ingraffing is which is by election, to wit effectual calling, converting, reconciling, giving saving faith, so that Mr. Bl. were hee not disposed to quarrel, might have omitted this exception. As for that hee takes election to bee an immanent act in GOD, so do I, and conceive that the will or counsel of God Acts 13. 36. is an immanent act in God, and yet it is said that

David having served his generation by the will or counsel of God fell a-sleep, and though election as the will of God be not in another subject then himself, yet it is terminated on the creature as the object, it being one of those acts of God that are ad extra though not extra, which mee thinks Mr. Bl. should understand, if age and disuse have not worn out his Logick and Theologick notions.

Mr. Blake saith of me, To have made up his argument he should have taken in by way of assumption; The Jews in their fall from Church-fellowship, cannot bee said to be rejected, hardened, given to a spirit of slumber, or that their eyes are darkened, or that they have stumbled; And that for their call into Church-fellowship, neither election or grace shall have any hand in it: This must bee his reasoning if there bee any shew of reason in his heap of words, and then all men will admire Mr. T. while he is in his admiration of Mr. M. I shall say no more but that hee is very weak both in Divinity and Logick, that cannot presently upon the first sight discover the weakness, and return a satisfying answer to this flourish of words.

Answ. The words were as few as the matter would bear, without any flourish at all. The assumption would not have been as Mr. Bl. makes it, but thus, that the Jewes by bare fall from visible Church fellowship, cannot bee said to be rejected, hardened, given to a spirit of slumber, or that their eys are darkned, or that they have stumbled. (For a person may fall from visible Churchfellowship onely by excommunication, putting out of the Synagogue, and yet bee neither rejected by God, nor hardened, nor given to a spirit of slumber, or his eys darkened, or he stumble, as in the case of the man born blinde, Joh. 9. 34, 35.) and that the election and grace mentioned Rom. 11. 5, 7. are meant there or in any part of the Apostles discourse of these things, Rom. 8, 9, 11. ch. of election into meer visible Churchfellowship, or grace that extends to no more then outward priviledges of Churchstate is not likely. And if any do take this reasoning to bee weak, I must needs say that I or hee are stark blinde in Divinity and Logick, and omitting my admiration of Mr. M. who I think after his edition of his Defence gave over the dispute, I admire not that Mr. Bl. (whose superficialness I perceive plainly enough) but that any man that accurately studies Rom. 11. should interpret the ingraffing there meant of the bringing of persons into a meer visible Churchstate by a dogmatical faith, or outward ordinance without giving saving faith according to Gods election.

Mr. Bl. proceeding to vindicate Mr. G. recites the words of the first part of this Review pag. 14. and then saith, It is well that Mr. T. yeilds so much, and being now imbarqued in this business, if hee did not plus consulere famæ quam conscientiæ, hee would yeild more, and freely confess that the mercy here is no other, nor no more then that which is general, and that the faith here is historical and not saving; I am sure there is enough to convince, but it is God alone that must perswade.

Answ. If Mr. Bl. had never known me, this censure might have been the more excusable, but his many criminations and censures, and misreports of me in his preface to his Book of the Covenant and throughout

throughout his Book do fully assure me he hath an evill eye towards me, and that he is indisposed to put any fair construction on what I do or write. Of which malignity in him I know no reason, but my opposing his dabling of infant perfusion, for sprinkling it seems he owns not, and baptism he useth not. As for what hee here saith of me, if this reply of mine acquit me not, I have no remedy but to appeal to my witness in heaven. I do again protest, that I see no reason to convince me of that Mr. Bl. here saith, but abundant reason to the contrary, if Mr. El. or any other shall detect my errour, I am willing to be convinced and perswaded; but such flirting, quipping answers as Mr. Bl. makes, I shall hereafter pass by as the froth and some of an angry satyrist, not the dispute of a scholastique.

He saith of me, His reason to assert it to bee meant of saving faith, is worthy of consideration, being opposed to their former hardning, &c. And is there not a hardning that reaches so high to hold men from so much as faith historical and dogmatical, as well as there is an hardning to hold men from that which is saving?

Answ. There is, but no hardning meant Rom. 9. or 11. which doth not deprive of saving faith together with historical, and consequently the shewing mercy opposite must bee not a giving an historical faith onely, but also a saving faith.

Mr. Bl. adds, The vail is (as the Apostle tels us) on the heart of the Jews to this day, when Moses is read 2 Cor. 13. 15. And does not this vail so far blind their eyes that they see not so much as with faith historical? That which the Jews to this time want, is that from which they fell, let Mr. T. take that into consideration; But to this day they want even a faith historical, had they kept faith in Christ so far as an assent in their whole nation, so that they had past in name and dignity for Christians, and had yet wanted among them that faith that was saving, then there had been colour for what Mr. T. saith. But their being as it is, and as it is here affirmed, I cannot but wonder as the vail before Mr. T. his eyes, that what is thus clear, should be thus held from him.

Answ. I shall forbear wondering hereafter, forasmuch as I discern the reason of Mr. Bls. wrangling, prejudice out of his affection to his brat termed Birth-priviledge, makes him imagine a vail over mine eyes, which is indeed over his own. What colour or proof rather is for my saying is shewed before. My argument is no whit infringed though the state of the Jews were such as that they wanted both historical and saving faith, hardning being opposed to giving saving faith, and no person said to be hardned but he that wants saving faith, and he that wants being hardned though hee should have historical, so that if hardning be a privation of both, yet it hath its denomination onely from the privation of saving faith. And for Mr Bls. reason hee would have me consider, first the conclusion of it is not to the present point. For if the Jewes might not bee said to fall from a saving faith, yet their unbelief mentioned Rom. 11. 30. might bee and was a privation not onely of historical faith but also a saving (else Mr. Bl. must say they had a saving faith though not historical, which is a palpable absurdity, for then a perſon may have a ſaving faith and not an hiſtorical, and the unbelieving Jewes had a ſaving faith) and conſequently the ſhewing mercy muſt bee not onely a conferring an hiſtorical faith, but alſo a ſaving. 2. The major is not true univerſally taken. All that which the Jews to this time want is that from which they fell; For they want their Temple, ſacrifices, Prieſthood, &c. and yet they fell not from them. Third the argument is thus retorted, That which the Jewes to this time want, is that from which they fell, let Mr. Bl. take that into conſidera ion. But to this day they want even a ſaving faith, Ergo, they fell from a ſaving faith. Such ill hap hath Mr. Bls. arguing: yet as one whoſe fingers did itch to bee dealing with mee he ſcribbles further.

Whereas I alledged Epheſ. 2. 12. to prove the unbelief of the Gentiles in times paſt mentioned Rom 11. 30. was not onely a privation of hiſtorical, but alſo of ſaving faith, Mr. Bl. puts theſe frivolous queſtions to mee, were they not without a dogmatical faith? were they not aliens and ſtrangers ſo much as from the Commonwealth of Iſrael?

To which I anſwer, they were; and ask him, Whether they were not without a ſaving faith? And if ſo the ſhewing mercy is oppoſed to the no. giving a ſaving faith, and Mr. Bls. poſition moſt abſurd, that the faith here (to wit Rom. 11. 20 where alone the word faith is uſed in that Chapter) is hiſtorical and not ſaving.

Mr. Bl. adds, " And though in ſome ſenſe every regenerate " profeſſing Chriſtian is without CHRIST, without God, with- " out hope, reſpective to ſaving fruition, and acceptable communi- " on with him, yet that text is manifeſtly abuſed when it is applied " to any of Chriſtian profeſſion. The whole muſt be carried on in a " due application of it, Gentiles in the fleſh, aliens from the Common- " wealth of Iſrael.

Anſw. Though I finde no emendation of it in Mr. Bls. Table of Errata, yet I do conceive [regenerate] is printed for [unregenerate] otherwiſe the ſpeech were more groſly falſe then I ſhall imagine Mr. Bl. would thus deliver. And it beeing ſo, I conceive no abuſe of it to have applied it to meer viſible profeſſors of Chriſtianity among the Gentiles, if the words were added to it which Mr. Bl. would have joyned. For they were Gentiles in the fleſh, aliens from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, without Chriſt, without God, without hope. Nevertheleſs I know not what this makes to infringe my inference from Epheſ. 2. 12. to prove the unbelief Rom. 11. 30. to have been a privation of ſaving faith.

Maſter Bl. denies not this ſenſe of the words, that the Epheſians in their infidelity were without Chriſt, without God, without hope, reſpective to ſaving fruition and acceptable communion with him, and ſure they that were thus were without ſaving faith, except Mr. Bl. imagine they had a ſaving faith, who had not ſo much as an hiſtorical: Nor is it denied the ſame ſtate to bee deſcribed Rom. 11. 30. which is deſcribed Epheſ. 2. 11. and therefore my inference ſtands notwithſtanding this paſſage of Mr. Bl.

He further saith, And for his observation, that it occasioned the Apostles exclamation, O altitudo! O the depth, &c. v.33. Sure the goodness of God bringing the Gentiles who were dogs, Matth.15.26. unto the glory of children, and the severity of God in casting out the children of the Kingdome, Matth.8.12. might well occasion this exclamation in the Apostle, as he had called to behold the goodness and severity of God, on them which fell severity, but towards the Gentiles goodness. He might well cry out upon the greatest turne of providence that ever the world saw (which in ages past had beene hid, and the Angels desired to looke into) O the depth! &c.

Answ. True: but was this goodness or severity in respect of a meer visible Churchstate? or was it not also in respect of their state in the invisible Church? Sure the thing had not been so admirable, if it had not been in respect of the later as well as the former; and Writers and Preachers usually apply it to silence the objection against absolute election and reprobation concerning their everlasting state, as if it imported unmercifulness and injustice incompetent to God; and it seems so like the passage, *Rom.*9.19,20,21,22,23,24. that me thinks if Mr. Bl. did compare them, he should judge both places meant of the same thing: and which is an irrefragable argument, it is clear Rom. 11.33. hath reference to what he said before, *v.*11,12. which is manifestly meant of their estate of salvation and reprobation, and therefore must be so meant *v.*33.

What Mr. Bl. adds concerning my speech about Mr. G. and the Assembly, is through mistake, as if I had censured Mr. G. as like Plautus his miles gloriosus in his disposition; whereas I censured him onely in respect of those words there used, which was right, however in other things he were without gall, from which nevertheless that in his writings against me he was not altogether free, is shewed in my *Apology, sect.*6. And for Mr. Bls. conceit, that where one degree of boasting is ascribed to Mr. G. one hundred will be ascribed to me by them that read our writings, it is not unlikely, if they see through Mr. Bls. spectacles, which make things seem black that are white, and make small hillocks seem hills: But I find cause to make it part of my Letany, From the unrighteous and hard censures of Mr. Bl. Mr. B. and others of my Antagonists, good Lord deliver me.

What I said of the Assembly shewed no more boldness then was meet; It is too apparent by the dealing with Mr. Coleman, my selfe, and others, that the stream of voices in the Assembly went to establish all after the Scottish mode, without a through examination of what was alledged to the contrary, except what was objected were backed by a very considerable party in Parliament, or Army, or City of London. It is no more boldness in me to assault such an Assembly, then it was in a particular dissenting brother. My weapons I assault them with, are such as the Holy Scriptures yeeld, and my interpretations such as my adversaries themselves give, and my arguments and answers are the very same which they use in other disputes against Prelates and Arminians; and with these weapons which M. Bl. disdainfully like a Goliath, scorns reeds or bulrushes, I am no more afraid to assault the Assembly of Divine at Westminster, then to assault Bakewel, Hussey, and such like scriblers.

To my 9th argument from parallel places, Mr. Bl. tels me, Mr. Hudson, pag. 132. hath not onely affirmed, but proved, that the Text 1 Cor. 12.13. is meant of the Church as visible.

Answ. I have viewed the place, and find Mr. Hudson speaking thus in answer to the objection: But this is meant of the invisible company of believers he saith, it is true, but it is spoken of them as visible. So that Mr. Hudson affirms the same with me, that 1 Cor. 12.13. must be understood of the invisible Church, yet in respect of that which is there said of them, something is spoken of them as visible.

To my allegation of Ephes. 3.6. that the Gentiles were made fellow-heirs of the same body, and co-partakers of the promise of God in the Gospel; not by an outward ordinance, but by giving of faith according to election: Ergo, the ingrassing Rom. 11.17. parallel to it, is not by an outward ordinance, but by giving faith according to election: Mr. Bl. thus in his flirting fashion answers, Ob that Mr. T. spake truth; then (as the Apostle saith of Israel at their restauration, all Israel shall be saved, Rom. 11.26.) All England in statu quo, should be saved in the sense that Mr. T. would understand salvation, whether we be by descent Brittains, Saxons, or Normans, we are Gentiles, and consequently by his Divinity partakers of the Gospel by faith according to election.

Answ. Not so, unless by Gentiles were meant every Gentile, which a fresh man in the University would correct Mr. Bl. in, who knows an indefinite proposition not to be equipollent to an universal incontingent matter. It is said, Acts 11.18. then hath God given to the Gentiles repentance unto life; yet it follows not, he hath done so to every Gentile. Mr. Bl. adds: Sure I am this Text is meant of Gospel glory in ordinance dispensed by the Apostles ministery. Answ. Sure I am, that to be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers together of his promise in Christ by the Gospel, imports more then a meer visible Churchstate, even an estate of righteousness, union with Christ, and inheritance of eternal life: And I doubt not but many of his Auditors would correct Mr. Bl. if he taught otherwise at any Lecture of Christians of ordinary understanding.

Yet he he saith further, "And as to the Jews appertained the glory "and the promises, Rom. 9.4,5. so now the glory and promises belong "to the Gentiles: And as many Jews as fell not off, still enjoy "this glory with the Gentiles, and so both make one new man, E-"phes. 2.15. The visible state of the Jews was a distinct body from "the Gentiles: Now upon this glorious call they are one new man, or "new body.

Answ. The glory and promises meant Rom. 9 4,5. did never belong to the Gentile believers in the Christian Church, nor do the believing Jews still enjoy that glory with the Gentiles, though both make one new man, yet not the meer visible Church is that one man, or body, but the Church invisible reconciled to God by Christs death, as the Text it self shews, Ephes. 2.15,16,17,18,19.

Mr.

Mr. Bl. tels me, "The ingraffing is not by giving faith of election, "nor is it an act of admission into the visible Church by an outward "ordinance; but it is by Gods giving of faith in and by Gospel ordi- "nances, to give assent to Gospel mysteries, and make profession of "them.

Answ. I have proved before it is more then the giving of an histo- rical faith, however this concession in the close serves my purpose. For if this be the ingraffing, then they onely that thus do assent and make profession, are ingraffed: But infants do not thus assent and make profession; Ergo, they are not ingraffed, and consequently the Text Rom. 11.16,17. alledged by the Assembly, Mr. G. Mr. M. &c. for admis- sion of infants with parents as with the Jews, is brought obtorto collo plainly against the meaning of it.

What Mr. Bl. adds, that Gal. 3.14,26,28,29. there is an ingraffing into Christ mentioned, but none into the Church, is as vain as the rest, there being no ingraffing into Christ by faith, but it is also into the Church invisible, who is Christ mystical, 1 Cor. 12.12. The Scriptures I have produced are proved to be meant of the Church invisible, because the things said in those Scriptures are such as agree to none other; and they appear to be parallel by the indentity of the matter, all expressing the state of Gentile believers upon their effectual calling. It is Mr. Bls. false charge, that the Reader will hereafter find me reasoning with my full strength against the force of all arguments a pari: This calumny is refelled in the 2d. part of this Review, sect. 3.

As for my 10th. argument, whether the faith in the testimonies cited be meant of justifying, and the election to eternal life, needs no other decision then the very words, which I took from Marlorat without sear- ching into the Authors own books because I had them not of my own, and I saw it needless to look further. If the words be ambiguous, the Au- thors intended to deceive; if elsewhere they speak against me, they gainsay themselves: neither of which Mr. Bl. should charge them with, if he regarded their credit.

In Mr. Bls. arguments, sect. 3. the first is answered before in vindi- cating my 4th. argument. I deny the major of the 2d. which is answered in the 2d. part of this Review, sect. 6. pag. 66,67. In the 3d. the minor is false that the priviledge of ingraffing is the priviledge of every member of the visible Church: in that which is added to prove it to be the pri- viledge of ordinances, if the major be universal, it is false; besides, the argument may be retorted. In the 4th. I deny the major, and have of- ten answered the inference [that then I must maintain falling away from true faith] that by my exposition the falling away of particular persons from the true justifying faith they had in their own persons, is not main- tained; but the falling away of the people of one age from that which their predecessors in a former age had. In the 5th. if the minor be meant of a casting onely out of a visible Churchstate, it is denied; nor is it proved, Matth. 21.43. For the Kingdome of God not onely notes the outward Churchstate, but also the rule of Christ in their hearts, and pro- tection of them by his spirit. In the 6th. the conclusion is granted. That which Mr. Bl. saith, that the body of believing Jews and Christian Gentiles, called by the Apostle one new man, Ephes. 2. 15. are capable of no other ingraffing then that which is visible, and the body of them entitled new, as the Jews before, onely to priviledges of ordinances, is not true. Nor is it true, that in my speech recited by him pag. 312. is taken for granted, 1. that the whole visible body of Christian nations are truly ingraffed into the Church invisible, if by whole body be meant all the parts, or every part. 2. Nor is it true, that it is taken for granted by me, that in after ages the same body, though not the same persons, may be cast off, and yet no particular person rejected, without this explication, that no particular person who was an elect person or true believer, is rejected.

But against this 2d. imagined grant of mine, Mr. Bl. thus argues. "The 2d. must be examined; this Church thus cut off, either continues "in the invisible body as before, or else is degenerate by the death of "those numerical persons, that made up a body invisible, and succession "of others that are no more then visible members. If it continue in "the invisible body till the time of breaking off, then Mr. T. is not holpen with his distinction of a consistent and a fluent being, nor with "his similitude of Euphrates; for so a Church invisible is still broken "off and rejected, and falling away is maintained. If it be degenerate, "then 1. they fall off themselves, and are not broken off by God; "their own sin then should be noted, not Gods act as their punishment: "But their breaking off, or rejection is the act of God laying waste his "Vineyard, Isa 5. taking away his Kingdome, Matth. 21 43. removing the Candlestick, Ephes 2. 5. (it should be Revel. 2. 5.) All noting the act of God punishing upon the peoples act of sinning, which "is of the Church, not invisible, but visible. 2. For the similitude of "Cyrus his turning of Euphrates, that he turned the same River that "God created, this will not serve Mr. T. his purpose; for Euphrates "continues a River of the same kind and nature as it was at the first "creation, and the Church in his expression is changed from the invisible body of Christ, to a visible company of bare professors. The "Church had changed her own channel. 3. Mr. T. indeed grants the "question, for he confesses that the Church is visible that God breaks "off; and whatsoever it had been, now it hath no more then a visible "interest; so that a visible Church falls off, and Gentiles are ingraffed into that which is visible. Sect. 4. M Bl. adds these words "That "wild assertion pag. 19. That the branches were broken off from electi"on and true faith, and the invisible Church in which they were, with "this limitation; understanding it not of the same singular persons, "but the same people or nation, is a thread that runs through almost "the whole, and enough I suppose is spoken to it: And when he shall "shew me an invisible nation (of which he speaks) from which there "may be a breach; I will either yeeld it all, or he shall hear more. "Till then I shall look on his words as such a ——— unworthy the pen "of such a Writer; an invisible nation it must be, a visible nation cannot "be cut off from the Church invisible.

Answ. Speak out man, let me know the worst you can say, I expect no no favour from you having found neither charity nor equity in your writings against mee. The assertion is such as will endure your strongest battery, what you say here is merre wrangling, like a Sophister perverting my words when they are truly repeated, though thy are very plain. The Argument is quite from the matter. The Conclusion is, that the Church cut off is not the invisible Church but visible, which is not contradictory to my assertion; who never asserted that the Church cut off was the invisible Church, but often asserted the contrary, alwayes making the Olive tree the invisible Church to abide the same, though some branches were broken off, others were ingraffed, as in the first part of this Review Section 9. page 83. with this explication page 66. yet not as a rock that abides the same, but as a river which is in flux, and I often deny in expres termes, as pag. 21, 74. that my meaning was that the Church of God is broken off from the invisible Church; but this I say, that the Nation of the Jews, of which the body or most part in some ages were in the invisible Church as branches in the Olive in a continued succession, in the time of the Apostle that people, to wit the most part of that nation were broken off from the invisible Church or Olive tree, in which that people in the individual persons of a former age did stand. Which thing having been so often and so plainly expressed by mee in that book which Mr. Bl. takes on him to answer, it is an extremely shamefull abuse hee offers mee in going about to refute that as my assertion which is disclaimed by mee. Now this being premised and the term [this Church] (as it should be) being changed into [this people or nation] that is a great or the greatest part of them, I answer they are broken off from the invisible Church, in that the numerical persons that made up the invisible Church in a former age being dead, the successors degenerated from their faith, and were neither visible professors nor invisible believers in Christ: which not believing was their own act from their own will, yet consequent on Gods act of reprobation, and the breaking off, to wit the deprivation of them from the membership and priviledges of his invisible Church, was Gods act of punitive justice for their unbelieving. And thus the similitude of Cyrus his turning Euphrates, serves my purpose, to shew how I am free from holding Arminian Apostasie, the same people like that river beeing turned from their old channel, though not the same persons; not as Mr. Bl. falsly chargeth mee, that in my expression the Church is changed from the invisible body of Christ, to a visible company of bare professours, or that the Church had changed her own channel. Nor do I grant the question, or confess that the Church is visible that God breaks off. and whatsoever it had been, now it hath no more then a visible interest; so that a visible Church falls off, and Gentiles are ingraffed into that which is visible; but what I say is of the Jewish people, who had not so much as a visible interest when God brake them off, or they fell off, and the Gentiles are ingraffed into the invisible Church in their stead. Nor need I shew an invisible nation broken off, it being neither true that I spake of an invisible nation, nor that a visible nation cannot bee cut off from the Church invisible, but these are Mr. Bls. dotages for want of heeding mine and his own words (as I conceive) through hast to insert some thing against me in that book ere it was printed. Which is so far from being enough to answer me, that as Solomon said of him that answered a matter afore he heard it, so it may be said of Mr. Bl. answering me afore he had studied my writings, he hath said enough to shew his folly and to work his shame. My Candour p. 23. is ordinary where there is the like cause: I conceive the election of bodies, societies, or nations, in the sense I have often given, may bee as well into the invisible Church of true believers, as into the visible Church of true professors, and that the election of the Gentiles, by which they were ingrafted, was into the invisible Church of true believers. Of Calvins and Bucers words I shall say no more having not the books. Mr. Bl. p. 314. adds.

Mr. G. syllogistically concluding that the seed of Christians by a pure Gospel Covenant should enjoy outward Church privileges, Mr. T. sect. 4. replies, that it is not either formally or equivalently the thing to be proved, which is, that the Christian Jews and their seed were in infancy to be baptised. But by his favour, he that concludes the whole; concludes the parts of the whole. Outward Church-priviledges is the whole, baptism is a part of the whole; concluding Church privileages he concludes baptism, as hee that can conclude Mr. T. is at Lempster or Sudbury, concludes also that his head and shoulders are. And if any priviledge bee concluded, then baptism is concluded, which is the leading one among Church-priviledges.

Answ. Omitting Mr. Bls. snarling at my dwellings in Lemster and Ledbury (for so hee means) I observe how well he pleads for Mr. G. who would have him conclude, that the seed of Christians by a pure Gospel Covenant should enjoy in infancy outward Church-priviledges as a whole, and consequently Baptism as a part. Which if it were Mr. Gs. arguing, hee should by the same reason have concluded their enjoying the Lords Supper, and Church office. Nor is the other plea much better: For some priviledge may be concluded, as laying on hands for a sign of prayer as Christ did, and yet not baptism. For though baptism be the leading priviledge after a person is brought to the faith, yet afore a person is a believer, if there be any leading Church-priviledg competent to infants, it must be laying on of hands, the Scripture giving no hint of any other.

The distinction I give in the first part of my Review, sect. 4. p. 28. is handsome, being set down as it is by me there, though Mr. Bl. carp at it, for those priviledges which Mr. G. termes Gospel priviledges, and I term so in answer to him as keeping his term, I may say of them (if they may be so called, and not rather legal.)

Mr. Bs. words, the breaking off from the Church is an unavoidable consequence of the revoking of the gift of Churchmembership, and the repealing of the ordinance: therfore where there is no breaking off from the Church, there is no such revoking or repealing; do justifie the title of the 6th. sect. of the first part of my Review. That the breaking off Rom. 11. 17. was not by repeal of an ordinance concerning infants visible Churchmembership bership as Mr. B. conceives, which Mr. Bl. opposeth with me. And his first reason, the deserving cause of that breaking off is unbelief, now unbelief is not in infants, much less proper to infants, serves to prove that the infants of unbelievers are not broken off, for unbelief is not in them, and that infants of believers are not grafted in. For as the deserving cause of breaking off is unbelief which is not in infants, so the means of graffing in by the rule of opposites is faith, which is not in infants. And when in his 2d. reason he saith this breaking off was of the general body of the Church of the Jews, that is the major part. Now infants were not the generality, they made not up the major part of that body, this serves to answer what Mr. Bl. before p. 307. and elsewhere would infer, that if the Gentiles or the body of them be elect then all must be so, whereas the body according to himself may stand for the major part or generality, which he denies infants to be, and therefore the body and generality may be ingraffed and not infants.

Mr. Bls. exceptions against my distinctions of breaking off because breaking off implied a former union are vain, for there may be a breaking off from that union which they had not in their own persons, specially when the breaking off is of a people, nor is it usual to term those acts privations of habits which take not away habits that were, but might have been, as when we are said to be redeemed, delivered from hell, to be cast out into outer darkness, Matth. 8. 12. though never in heaven. But were not this right but non-sense, yet Mr. Bls exceptions against the distinctions is frivolous. For in those distinctions I do not set down the wayes of breaking off that were actually, but such as are imaginable, which is necessary when we go about to argue by a disjunctive syllogism, as all Logicians know.

Yet what Mr. Bl. saith, excommunication is not the breaking off meant Rom. 11. 17, 20. For that is the act of the Church on some particular member; But this here is the act of God, which is by taking away the Kingdome, by removing their Candlestick, departing with his presence, is right, if understood of the subtracting of the presence of his spirit, as well as his word. Which is to be conceived, for the word was offered and preached to them when they were broken off, and therefore they were not broken off barely by subtracting that. Besides the ingrafting is not by bare outward ordinances, for they were vouchsafed even to the broken off, and consequently the fatness of the Olive is not the bare priviledge of outward Ordinances. And if it be not the Churches act, but Gods by which there is ingrafting, then infants are not ingrafted, who have no act of God to ingraff them, but onely that of the Church or administratour of Baptism.

Mr. Bls. talk of the Ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership, begun in the great Charter of heaven, and continued, is but vapourings; Mr. Bl. mis recites Mr. Bs antecedent which was not as hee repeats it, That the Jews were cast off for unbelief, but that none of the Jews were broken off but for unbelief, which I denied, and Mr. Bls. exceptions is frivolous. But the text assignes unbelief, Mr. T. assignes no other cause, then that must stand. To which I reply, and so it doth by my answer, and yet I do assigh another cause, Gods act of executing his decree of reprobation.

To what I ſaid, that the unbelief being poſitive Rom. 10. 21. if none were broken off but unbelievers here meant, no infants no not of infidels that never heard of Chriſt were broken off, he ſaith we eaſily yeild his concluſion, if he frame it in a ſyllogiſm; thus the infants of infidels that never heard of Chriſt were never broken off. They could never be broken off that were never taken in, A branch of a bramble was never broken off from a vine or olive. Anſw. 1. They may be ſaid to be broken off who were never taken in in their own perſons, ſure the abortives and ſtil-born were never taken into the viſible Church of the Jews, and yet if other infants were broken off ſo were they, and if they were broken off though they were never taken in in their own perſons but their anceſtors, then the infants of infidel Edomites might be ſaid to be broken off, who were in Eſau, Iſaac, and Abraham taken in: But they were not poſitive unbelievers, therefore other then poſitive unbelievers are broken off, which oppoſeth Mr. B. 2. If infants of infidel Edomites be not broken off, then according to Mr. B. the ordinance of viſible Churchmembership is not in reſpect of them revoked and repealed, and conſequently they are viſible Churchmembers according to the tenour of Mr. Bs. arguing. 3. If God will not puniſh the children for the fathers ſins (as Mr. B. ſaith) much leſs for a ſtrangers, then he would not break off the unbelieving Jews infant children, then they are viſible Churchmembers if Mr. Bs. arg. hold. 4. Mr. Bls. reaſon is anſwered before, by ſhewing how there may be privations of habits not in being; And if his reaſon were good, and unbelieving Jews infant could not be broken off, for that it was never in the viſible Church Chriſtian, and is the branch of a bramble. To my words, that the breaking off is not revoking of an ordinance about viſible churchmembership, but the execution of the decree of reprobation in excluding them from the inviſible Church, M. Bl. replies 1. By demand; Is there any ſuch decree as to caſt out of the Church inviſible? I am ſure that chapter hath no ſuch thing. Anſw. There is a decree of breaking off from the Church inviſible, and that decree is plainly expreſt in that chapter, v. 7, 8, 9, 10. For what comes to paſs in time that God decrees. But they were broken off in time from the inviſible Church of believers, v. 7, 8, 9, 10, 15, 17, 19, 22. 2*ly.* Saith he, I demand did they continue in the Church viſible, when upon execution of ſuch a decree they were caſt out of the Church inviſible? or was their ſtation in the viſible Church loſt, and that of the inviſible Church never gained, and therefore they were not broken off from it. Anſw. They continued in the viſible Church Jewiſh in oppoſition to the viſible Church Chriſtian, which they perſecuted when they were caſt away and broken off from the Church inviſible of true believers, according to Gods decree of reprobation, though they never gained a ſtation in the inviſible Church in their own perſons. Mr. Bl. adds 3*ly. The Jews adhering to circumciſion, &c. though God changed the rites* Moſes gave them, refuſed the way of God, re ected the counſel of God in not being baptiſed, doting upon elements beggerly, and ſo their eys are held, that they ſee nothing into glorious Goſpel myſteries; And this their unbelief is their breaking off from that viſible Churchſtation, in which they ſometimes ſtood, upon which account they are kept out from intereſt in the Church inviſible. And when this blindneſs ſhall be removed, they ſhall then be ſaved.

Anſw.

Answ. Their unbelief was the means of their breaking off, but not of their breaking off from that visible Church station in which they sometimes stood; the visible Church-station in which they stood, is, as Mr. Bl. himself describes it, their station in the Jewish Church visible in the way of Church ordinances, Circumcision, Sacrifices, &c. changed by God; yet, as he himself saith, the Jews stuck thereto, and therefore stood still in their former visible Church-station. Besides, their unbelief was not their breaking off from it. For 1. as Mr. Bl. said before the breaking off was Gods act, so was not their unbelief. 2. According to Mr. Bl. breaking off was Gods act of punishment, but it was no punishment but a mere to be broken off from that visible Church station. Nor upon the account of their breaking off from that visible Church station in which they sometimes stood, were they kept out from interest in the Church invisible, but for their unbelief, and their keeping that Church station. However, if they were kept out from interest in the Church invisible, their breaking off is more then depriving of a visible Churchstate, yea the same which I assert, a breaking off from the invisible Church.

If there be any mazes in my 8th. and 9th. sections of the first part of my Review, Mr. B. led me into them, whom I was necessitated to follow: Mr. Bs. arguments are answered without confusion, and with so much strength, as neither Mr. Bl. nor Mr. B. are able to refute.

Mr. Bl. asserts contrary to me, that the Christian visible Church and the Jewish are one and the same, 1. because Japhet dwells in Shems Tents, which are the Church visible, and this he saith needs no proof. But I require proof that by Shems tents are meant, Gen. 9.27. the visible Church Jewish or Christian.

2. Because they are one sheep-fold, Joh. 10.16. and to the objection that it's meant of the invisible Church, because Christ gives notes of those that were indeed his sheep, he saith, "Christ speaks to those that "were Disciples onely according to profession, and gives notes, Joh. 8. "31. of Disciples indeed; and it is against all reason, that Christ should "in discourse point out the invisible Church with the demonstrative "This, and that to those that were malignant enough in the Church visi- "ble, the Pharisees, as appears in the close of the former Chapter. And "the mention of thieves creeping into it, hirelings employed in it, doth "contradict it. The visible Church of the Jews and Gentiles in which "Christ hath true sheep for whom he dies, and others that thieves and "hirelings do deceive, makes up one sheep-fold.

Answ. The Text rather proves the contrary as Mr. Bl. expounds it. For if the fold be the visible Church, and the other sheep are not of that visible Church, then there is not one fold or Church of Jews and Gentiles, but some sheep are of one fold, or visible Church, and some of another. As for Mr. Bls. arguments, they are of no force. For Christ might well enough in his discourse point out the invisible Church with the demonstrative [this] it being usual to point out invisible things by it, as Joh. 6.29, &c. This God is our God: And yet I do not think [this fold, John 10.16.] notes the invisible Church, but the people or nation of the Jews, as Piscator, Grotius, &c. expound it, or rather the place. For the fold, αὐλὴ, notes not the sheep, and therefore not the Church, but the place or country where or whence they are. Nor were deceivers, hirelings, thieves, or wolves, in or of the Church meant Joh. 10. 15, 16. though they might get into the place and company of them. Nor is it truly translated by our Translatours [there shall be one fold,] though (which I somewhat marvel at) they follow therein the vulgar Latine: For the Tigurine Divines note, ποίμνη in Greek signifies the flock, not the fold. And Beza excepts against the vulgar for it, and against the Romanists, who would have that one fold to be Rome. And Grotius observes that the speech is proverbial, One flock one shepheard, to which he makes Ezek. 37. 24. to be like. Now that the one flock is not the meer visible Church, but the invisible, it appears from many things in the Text, that Christ laid down his life for them, that they follow him, hear his voyce, his Father and he knows them distinguishingly from others who do not believe because they are not of his sheep, that he gives them eternal life, none can pluck them out of his Fathers hands, v. 14, 15, 16, 26, 27, 28, 29. out of which many Protestant Divines gather absolute election, particular redemption, effectual conversion and perseverance, against Arminians. And Diodati in his annot. on Joh. 10 16. hath it thus. Other sheep] namely, the elect among the Gentiles, who are to be called by the Gospel, and incorporated into the Church with the elect of the Jewish nation. One body, 1 Cor. 12. 13. one new man, Ephes. 2. 15. are the invisible Church as is shewed before. Matth. 8. 11. The Kingdome of heaven is the Kingdome of glory. Matth. 21. 43. The Kingdome of God is either the Gospel by a metonymy, or the rule of God in their hearts, which was taken from them, that is that people, with whose ancestors it was, though not in those persons from whom it was taken. The visible Church cannot be meant by the Kingdome, for the fruits of the Kingdome are not the fruits of the meer visible Church, they are not bare profession, but real faith, holiness, and obedience, which are fruits of the Spirit, not of the Church; or if of any Church, of the invisible, not the meer visible. And though all invisible members bring forth fruit, yet that nation which had invisible members bringing forth fruit in a former age, may in an after age not bring forth fruit, and for that reason the Church invisible may be taken from them, with whom it was in respect of their ancestors.

To what I said, If the Christian Gentiles were grafted into the same visible Church with the Jews, then they should have been circumcised, &c. contrary to the determination Acts 15. Mr. Bl replies, "That is "of no force, as though we may not be in the same Kingdome, and yet "under a new way of administration. Law-givers on earth are some-"times pleased to change their Laws, and so doth the Law-giver of Hea-"ven; or if he will limit his instance to Circumcision, taking in no "other Laws. The same house may have a new door or porch. Let "Mr. T. then know that he is in the same visible Kingdome as Abra-"ham, Isaac, and Jacob, and their posterity after the flesh in Israel "were."

Answ.

Answ. That which Mr. Bl. saith of the sameness of a Kingdome under a new way of administration, of Law givers changing their laws, of Gods doing so, the identity of a house with a new door, is all granted; but doth not take away the force of my reason, unless he could shew that any were grafted or to be grafted into the visible Church Jewish without Circumcision, if he were a male. Doth not Mr. Bl. maintain here in answer to my 4th. argument, that we are partakers of the same outward priviledges and ordinances with the Jews, as he expounds Rom. 11.17. which opposeth his speech here of a new way? Doth not Scripture term the Jewish Church or people, the Circumcision, because those that were in that Church, if male, were circumcised? Was not Cornelius taken for unclean, and not of that Church, because uncircumcised? or was he ever in the Jewish Church after his Baptism? God might admit into the Jewish Church another way then by Circumcision, but Mr. Bl. cannot shew he or the Jews did so. We are in the same invisible Kingdome of true believers, and elect persons, with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: but I do not yet know by any thing Mr. Bl. hath hitherto said, that I am in the same visible Kingdome with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and their posterity after the flesh in Israel. Every one in the visible Kingdome of Israel after the flesh, did partake of the Passeover; the Apostle saith, 1 Cor. 10 18. Behold Israel after the flesh: are not they which eat of the the sacrifices partakers of the altar? Which intimates that Israel after the flesh did then when he wrote eat of the sacrifices, which Christians did not, and therefore were not adjoyned to Israel after the flesh, but in that very place, v. 16,17. distinguished from them. I take Mr. Bls. assertion to infer Judaism: and if he or any other be not satisfied by my answer to Mr. Cobbet, I have more reason to impute it to their prejudice, then to defect in my answer.

SECT. LXXVI.

My sense of matrimonial holiness, 1 Cor. 7 14. is vindicated from Mr. Blakes exceptions, Vindic. Fæd. ch. 39. and Mr. Sydenhams Exercit. ch. 7.

MR. Bl. ch. 39. avoucheth, still his sense of federal holiness, 1 Cor. 7. 14. I proceed to view what he saith. Sect. 1. he sets down the Apostles resolution and the reason of it rightly, which because it will tend much to the clearing of the sense which I give, I shall here transcribe it. Let him not put her away, let her not leave him, unbelief breaks not the marriage band, renders it not a nullity, Religion being not of the substance of marriage. But what he saith, that their scruple and ground of their fear was the condition of their issue, lest that they should not be reckoned with the Saints, but of the fellowship of the unclean Gentiles, is fictitious. For the resolution of it rightly given before by Mr. Bl. himself, shews that their scruple arose not from fear of their childrens condition, but the nullity nullity of their marriage, or unlawfulneſs of continuing in it by reaſon of the unbelief of the one party; elſe the Apoſtle had not made his reſolution appoſite to the removing their ſcrup'e. Yea, Mr. Bls. own ſpeech is againſt his own conceit, when he ſaith, Reaſon is ſtrong for this, for they well knew, as it is with the parent, ſo it is with the child for Church ſtate and condition, being a priviledge communicable and deſcendable from parent to child. If the parent were without, and of the Gentiles, the child was ever ſuch; and in caſe they were of the people of God, their children were reckoned ſo in like manner: Now parents being divided, the one holy, the other unclean, they feared that the iſſue would follow the worſer part, a ſtain would lie upon them, they would be accounted unclean with the unbelieving parent. In a like caſe it had been ſo determined, Ezra 10.3. For if they well knew as it is with the parent ſo it is with the child for Churchſtate, they knew that the believing parent being a Churchmember, notwithſtanding the yokefellows unbelief, their children were Churchmembers, and ſo made no ſcrup'e of that, nor did Paul, or need he to reſolve that ſcrup e aboue their childrens condition. Yea, the very form of the Apoſtles reaſoning, elſe were your children unclean, doth plainly import, that they took the uncleanneſs of their children as an abſurdity deprehended by them, and the contrary out of doubt; as when, 1 Cor. 15. 29. the Apoſtle ſaith, Elſe what ſhall they do that are baptized for the dead, if the dead riſe not? he ſuppoſeth they took it for an abſurdity, and the contrary out of doubt, that they that are baptized for the dead do it in vain. And though that the parents being divided they might fear that the iſſue would follow the worſer part, a ſtain would lie upon them, yet that this ſtain ſhould be in reſpect of their Churchſtate, could not be, if they well knew, as Mr. Bl. ſaith, as it is with the parent ſo it is with the child for Churchſtate, their own ſtate in the Church being manifeſt and certain. That the caſe of the Corinthians and thoſe, Ezra 10.3. is not like, is ſhewed in the firſt part of this Review, ſect. 17, 18. and will come into further conſideration in that which follows.

What Mr. Bl. adds, That the Apoſtle tels them, that the unbelieving party doth not (as they fear) defile the iſſue, but is ſanctified as to iſſue by the believer, is a meer fiction. For the Apoſtle onely tels them they did not defile each other, but were ſanctified to each other, by reaſon of their marriage ſtate, not the faith of one party. And it is as falſe, that by reaſon of the parents faith the Apoſtle tels them the child is not reckoned with the unbelieving parent who is a Gentile, or that by unclean is meant a ſinner of the Gentiles, for the child of both parents Gentile believers is ſtill a Gentile; and if unclean be a ſinner of the Gentiles, by holy ſhould be meant a Jew by nature, which is a ridiculous conceit of Mr. Bls. as if the parent being a believer, the child were a Jew by nature, and not a ſinner of the Gentiles. What he adds, that by believer in that place, 1 Cor. 7.14. is meant a profeſſor of the true faith, is vain, when the word believer is not uſed in that v. or any v. of that Chapter about that matter, nor in that ſenſe there. If to be ſanctified, 1 Cor. 7.14. be not to be ſet apart for God, as Mr. Bl. determines, then the term ſanctified is not uſed in the common if not onely uſe of the word in Scripture and pro-

phane writers, and by him conceived here, as Mr. B. asserts Plain Script. proof, &c. part. 1. ch. 29. p. 81.

In answer to the 2d. sect. of the 39th. ch. of Mr. Bls. vindic sad. I say first, that I do not yeild that the Corinthians had any scruple at all about their issue. 2. That my waving the examining of the occasion of the doubt resolved 1 Cor. 7. 12, 13, 14. was not because of any strength I found in Mr. Bls. allegations, but because I conceived neither of our opinions any other then a conjecture, and therefore the thing not material, nor in the framing my postscript had I time enough to do what I did after, not out of a mind to quarrel, but to shew the invalidity of Mr. Marshals 4 h. arg. for his interpretation from his conceit of the occasion of the doubt, to have been by reading the fact mentioned Exr. 10. 3. Mr. Bl. here endeavors to confirm his exceptions against my allegation of 1 Cor. 5. 9. as the occasion of the doubt resolved 1 Cor. 7. 12. Yet replies nothing to my answer to the two first, but to the 3d. saith. If their scruple was concerning conversing with their idolatrous yoke fellows, upon occasion of those words not to keep them company; they must needs scruple their conversing with covetous, and extortioners, husbands or wives upon the same account; and the Apostle being silent in his answer, it is clear they were silent in their letter, and moving no scruple, they had no scruple; when it is impossible for them to scruple one upon those words and not scruple all. Here is the wildest of fancies, when hee names four evils respective to civil social converse; they should startle at one (respective to their marriage society) and question no more. To which I answer, it is neither impossible nor very unlikely, much less a wild fancy to imagine it of them, that the Corinthians either did not scruple at using their covetous husbands, from 1 Cor. 5. 9, 10. though they did their idolatrous, if they did not heed the explanation after added v. 10. but onely the precept v. 9. and understood by fornicators idolaters, which they might easily do; or if they did heed the explanation, yet did not conceive the like reason of relinquishing covetous yoke-fellowes as idolatrous, which they might well do, finding precepts against marriages with idolaters, none against marriages with them that were onely covetous and not idolaters, or they might not put the doubt of any other to the Apostle then the idolatrous, because there were none that had covetous yokefellows who were not idolaters, and they would put the case onely about that which was the chief cause of their scruple, or because they could easily resolve themselves, that coveteousness and extortion from men do not so defile or are so inconsistent with marriage society as idolatry, and going a whoring from God, or they might put the case about the covetous as well as the idolaters, yet the Apostle resolve the one onely expresly, because the resolving the one would resolve the other; for which and for other reasons which might occur, though not discernable now, they well either startle at one onely, or not seek for resolution of any more, or if they did, yet Paul resolve no more. And this being understood, the Apostle needs not write to them as Mr. Bl. imagines he must, if my conjecture hold, and he took in every part of their scruple, though not what Mr. Bl. conceivs must be their scruple upon my conjecture.

And hereby Mr. Bls. replies of wonder of my thoughts, of the Apostles need of resolving both scruples, of the same evident ground of scruple concerning each, as one are plainly answered without reply to his taunting quips. The rest also is answered concerning B. Hewson, Bunney, my Uncle Whately; for it goes upon this supposition, that if the Corinthians took occasion to doubt, from 1 Cor. 5. 9. then they must doubt whether they must live with fornicating yoke-fellows, and the Apostle must resolve them, that if any brother have a wife that is a fornicator let him not put her away, which may not follow if by fornicators they understood onely idolaters and so doubted of them onely, or chiefly doubted of them, or resolving themselves otherwise propounded the doubt onely of them, or the Apostle thought it needful onely to resolve concerning them, knowing that they might from his resolution of them be resolved of the rest, especially if the words let him not put her away, be not a prohibition forbidding him to put her away, but as a permission allowing him not to put her away, which hath its likelihood. But of this enough, if not too much about a conjecture not very material. My words in my Postscript page 111. have not Mr. Bl. in hand of any further answer then hath been given him, my censure of his absurd glosses, dictates, flirts incoherent, impertinent passages, little solid nervous disputing is delivered in language meet to express the truth.

If Mr. Calamy and Mr. Vines in their Epistle used not vain crackings of Mr. Marshal, and Mr. Bls. answer to my Letter besides their misrepresentations of my Examen, I never met with any. Were their worth far greater then it is, and mine far less, I shall take liberty however my ingeny be questioned, as freely to censure Mr. Calamy and Mr. Vines, as I did in this, if they shall hereafter by their names and big words disparage the truth as they did in this. Who of my nearest friends have told mee to my face, that they have been ashamed of that which I have written in my Apology, whose honesty and judgement Mr. Bl. hath seeen attested under my own hand, I do not yet know, nor by ghess yet imagine. I know I have had censures hard enough of persons afore this controversie arose taken for my friends, and have laid them more to heart then I hope I shall do hereafter, finding upon the Review of this Dispute how unequal they have been, and if that eminently learned man who observed that I had Denum impudentiæ, were hee who wrote the second Epistle to Mr. Baxter printed at the end of his Confession of his faith, or any other did censure mee without well weighing my writings (as I have many reasons to conceive they do) as they are the more unrighteous, so they are deservedly the less regarded by mee. It was no impudence in mee to publish that men call on mee to answer Mr. Bl. or that his writing was commended when others had done it before. The most frivolous treatise that is, if it bee against me, yet it wants not some to magnifie it, Mr. Hussey's, Mr. Horns, Dr. Savages in Latin and others want not applauders. I discern the spirit of Pædobaptists even in those, whom I had taken to be moderate, judicious, friendly, yet in this point many of them shew neither equity to me, nor love to truth, nor judgement in according their opinion of Pædobaptism dobaptiſm with their former and later principles and practiſes. But I ſhall wait till God awake men, and ſpecially thoſe who have been ſo forward to reform Diſcipline and Ceremonies, and have by ſolemn Covenant vowed to endeavour reformation according to Gods Word, that they may ſee from what they are faln. I go on.

Next Mr. Bl. ſpeaks ſomewhat of the occaſion of the doubt from Ezra 9. 10. "Let me premiſe, ſaith he, this as an undoubted truth, that "theſe Corinthians had their ſcruples concerning their iſſue upon their "marriage in this diſparity. That which the Apoſtle ſatisfies in his an-"ſwer, that the Corinthians ſcrupled in their letter; This no man can "deny, for he writes to give ſatisfaction, as is plain v. 1. to their let-"ter caſes: But we ſee in the text that he ſatisfies as ſcruples concern-"ing themſelves, ſo alſo concerning their iſſue.

To which I anſwer, the contrary is to me an undoubted truth, and ſo it was to Dr. Thomas Goodwin, whoſe reaſon with mine ſhould have had ſome anſwer from Mr. Bl. As for his ſyllogiſm the major is not certain, ſith the Apoſtle might give ſatisfaction on the by, about other things then the caſes which they ſcrupled and wrote to him about. But the minor I do directly deny, and ſith Mr. Bl. hath brought nothing to prove it, I ſlight it as a vain dictate.

As for Mr. Bls. refuſing to determine peremptorily, that the occaſion of the ſcruple was that, Ezra 9. & 10. it ſerves my turn to prove that no argument drawn from thence to conclude federal holineſs of infants of believers is valid. I have often ſhewed how wee can imagine the Corinthians hit upon their ſcruple, and were affected with it without reſpect to the fact, Ezra 9. & 10. and therefore need not again anſwer that queſtion. Mr. Bls. not ſaying that the Iſraelites and the Corinthians caſe was wholly the ſame, tends to ſhew Mr. Marſhals miſtake, and the defect of his argument.

And for what Mr. Bl. obſerves that the Chriſtian Corinthians were under the moral Law of Moſes and it was not ſo eaſie for them to determine that the Command Deut. 7. was judicial, I grant it, and thence infer that notwithſtanding the words 1 Cor. 10. 15. yet they might not be ſo underſtanding in gathering conſequences, or diſcerning the meaning of Scriptures, but that they might conceive otherwiſe then rational men uſually do, contrary to what Mr. Bl. ſuggeſts of them ſect. 3. Mr. Bl. having cenſured rather then refuted Dr. Goodwins opinion of the childrens real holineſs, 1 Cor. 7. 14. He tels me my interpretation is firſt childiſh, to tell the Corinthians if their marriage ſociety were adulterous, then their children were baſtards, if their marriage were null children were illegitimate, this is too low a way of reaſoning, ſuch as every childe well knew before the Apoſtle told them. To which I anſwer, if it were ſo eaſily underſtood it was the fitter for the Apoſtles purpoſe to ſatisfie the tender conſciences of doubting Chriſtians, who are beſt ſatisfied with that which is obvious, and eaſily diſcernable, eſpecially when the perſons are women, and men of ordinary capacities. And therefore this way of arguing ſhewed not childiſhneſs in the Apoſtle but fatherly wiſedome, and is a very good reaſon for my interpretation, not againſt it, ſith it is acknowledged that the Apostles arguing as by me framed is right, and serves his purpose.

Secondly, saith Mr. El. It is incongruous to bring phrases fully answering the Churchstate and condition of either parents, believing and unbelieving (which in the Scripture is holy and unclean) and yet to understand them of holiness and uncleanness of another kinde of legitimation and bastardy, if they may be (as I think they never were) so called is incongruous: That these words fully answer the Churchstate of parents and the Churchstate and condition which the children derive from them, is plain in that parallel text Gal. 2. 15. Jews by nature, that is holy by birth from believing parents, not sinners of the Gentiles, not unclean by birth from unbeleeving ancestours; so Mr. Cartwright on these words, in his answer to the Rhemists. If you will know what this holiness of children new born is, the Apostle telleth you, it is through the Covenant to be a Jew by nature, or birth: and if you will further understand what this uncleanness of children is, the Apostle in the same place telleth you, it is not to be sinners by nature as those which are born of the heathen.

Answ What I said before I say still, without any jeer or disregard to Mr. Cartwright, that the conceit that 1 Cor. 7. 14. and Gal. 2. 15. are two full parallel Scriptures, is but a dream, there being neither agreement in scope, matter, words or sense between them. Not in scope. For 1 Cor. 7, 12, 13, 14. the Apostles scope is to resolve a doubt about continuance of married persons in disparity of religion, Gal. 2. 15. his scope is to determine by what we are justified, not in matter, for the one speaks of the sanctifying of husband and wife to each other, and the holiness or uncleanness of the children; the other of Jews and Gentils acding to their different national state, nor is there one word used Gal. 2. 15. which is used 1 Cor, 7. 14. nor can the sense be agreeing. For Jew by nature cannot be as much as holy 1 Cor. 7. 14. because then the children of the Corinthians should bee Jews by nature, which was impossible, they being born of Gentile parents, for such were the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 12. 2. Nor is Mr. Els. sense Jew by nature, that is holy by birth from believing parents, any where else found in Scripture; Nor doth Jew by nature intimate their Churchstate, as if hee meant it thus; we who are members of the visible Church, or have this priviledge to bee in the Covenont of grace by nature, in that wee are born of believing parents. For they are said to bee Jews by nature by reason of their natural descent, without any respect to the faith or unbelief of their parents, even those whose parents were idolaters, as Ahaz, Manasseh, or any other of that line were Jews by nature, and not sinners of the Gentiles, and the children of the most holy Proselites, yet were not Jews by nature: nor were they Jews by nature through the Covenant of grace, they were Jews by nature without respect to the Covenant of grace, for that was alwais to them who were believers, whether Jewes or Gentils, and the covenant whereby the Jews had priviledge was not the Covenant of Evangelical grace, but the Covenant of peculiar national blessings, but here the opposition to the Gentiles, and the occasion shews Jews to bee taken as a term appropriate to natural Jews by natural deſcent from Jacob in contradiinſtction to Gentiles from other roots. If any ask who are meant by [we,] and why here is mentioned [Jews by nature,] and why they are oppoſed to the Gentiles, and they termed ſinners, I anſwer, the words ſeem plainly to be a part of Pauls ſpeech to Peter, and that by we are meant himſelf with Peter termed a Jew, v. 14. and other believers of the Circumciſion, mentioned v. 12, 13. and the ſenſe is, We though we are Jews by nature, or even we who are Jews by natural birth; and this mentioned, becauſe they had the Law peculiarly given them, as Piſcator in his Analyſis, Nos quantumvis Judai ſumus, quibus nimirum lex peculiariter a Deo data eſt. Or as the oppoſite term [ſinners of the Gentiles] intimates, knowers and keepers of the Law of Moſes, and therefore if any, certainly much more then ſinners of the Gentiles, we ſhould ſeek and expect to be juſtified by the Law; yet if we know that a man is not juſtified by the works of the Law, but by the faith of Chriſt, and even we have believed on Chriſt Jeſus, that we might be juſtified by the faith of Chriſt, and not by the works of the law, it is not equal that wee ſhould as Peter did at Antioch, diſſemble our liberty in Chriſt, compel the Gentiles to Judaize or keep the law for righteouſneſs, and ſo not walke uprightly or rightfoote it according to the truth of the Goſpel. Now the Gentiles are termed ſinners in the ſenſe, in which, in the ordinary acception among the Jewes, it was taken for men that obſerved not the law, oppoſed to the righteous, Matth. 9.13. Luke 15.1,2,7,10. & 18.9,13. and many more places: And in this ſenſe it is taken, v. 17. we our ſelves alſo are found ſinners, that is, we our ſelves alſo are deprehended, convinced, or proved to be prophane breakers, or deſpiſers of the law: which the Gentiles did, and which I think is meant Epheſ. 2.1,2,3. and that Paul doth not any more reckon himſelf with them Epheſ. 2.3. then he doth with them that are alive at Chriſts comming, oppoſite to them who are dead in Chriſt, 1 Theſ. 4.17. though he uſe the firſt perſon plural in both; for I ſee not how that could ſtand with his ſpeeches of himſelf, Acts 23,1. Philip. 3.4,5,6. and therefore do conceive a conception or an enallage of perſon, Epheſ. 2.3. uſed often in ſpeeches, whereby a ſpeaker takes that to himſelf which is proper to others, whether to avoid diſtaſte as if he upbraided them, or to inſinuate into their affections, or for ſuch like reaſon. Out of all which I infer, 1. That [Jews by nature] is not put Gal 2.15. to intimate a birth-priviledge of the children of believers, whether Jews or Gentiles, concerning their Eccleſiaſtical ſtate even in infancy as viſible Churchmembers; but it is put to note either the advantage peculiar to the Jewiſh nation in that the law of Moſes was given to them, or rather the greater likelihood and meetneſs or congruity to ſeek or claim righteouſneſs by the law then the Gentiles. 2. That he meant not they were Jews by nature through the Covenant of grace. For that were clean oppoſite to his intention, which was to ſhew that their eſtate of being Jews by nature did not confer to their juſtification, which doubtleſs it would have done if it had been by the Covenant of grace, but to intimate, that the law was given to them, or rather they ſtudious of it, and Zelots for it, and therefore if any, they ſhould be juſtified by

it,

it, as Paul in a like place, *Phil.*3.3,4,5,6,7,8,9. So that whatever advantage or precedency is intimated by it, it is ascribed to the law, and their observing of it, not to the new Covenant of grace. 3. The deteriority or worse condition of the Gentiles is ascribed to them, not barely in respect of their birth from unbelievers, and so agreeing to their infants, much less as agreeing to infants of unbelieving Jews as well as Gentiles, but in respect of their manners either onely or chiefly, and so not competent to infants. And therefore notwithstanding Mr. Bl. thought *Gal.*2.15. a fit Text for his Sermon, in which he asserted infants birth-priviledge of believing Gentiles, though Mr. Calamy and Mr. Vines crack in their Epistle before Mr. Bls. answer to my Letter, that he hath truly stated the the question, set it upon the right basis, and well fortified it, and Mr. Bl. hath produced somewhat from Mr. Cantwright to colour his parallelling 1 *Cor.*7.14. with *Gal.*2.15. yet I say still, and have such a gift of impudence as to aver, that both Mr. Cartwright was mistaken, and Mr. Calamy and Mr. Vines did vainly crack of Mr. Bls. Birth priviledge, and Mr. Bl. hath grosly abused *Gal.*2.15. as he did also Gal 4.29. and there is no parallelism of 1 *Cor.*7.14. and *Gal.*2.15. to interpret the one by the other.

3. Saith Mr. Bl. "The argument thus understood is untrue: The "stress is wholly laid upon the believing party, as to the holiness of the "issue, twice over; the unbeliever is meerly passive in it, when the "child hath legitimation equally from both. Against his interpretati-"on, and for mine (which Chamier affirms to be Calvini & omnium re-"formorum) take these arguments. 1. That holiness which necessarily "follows to the issue, from the sanctification of an unbelieving by a be-"lieving yokefellow, is Covenant holiness, and not legitimation: But "the holiness in this place of the Apostle necessarily follows to the issue "from the sanctification of an unbeliever by a believer; Ergo, it is "Covenant holiness, not legitimation. 2. That which is derived from "the eminency of one parent above another, and not equally from both, "is not legitimation: But this holiness is derived from the eminence of "one parent (viz. the believing parent) above the other; Ergo, it is "not legitimation. 3. The result or fruit which follows from a belie-"vers faith is not legimation: But the holiness in the Text is a result "of the faith of the believing yokefellow. The minor is evident, seeing "faith is twice hinted at in the believer. I know that Mr. T. denies that "the unbelieving husband or wife is sanctified in the believing: It is "(faith he) in the husband, not in the believing husband; in the "wife, not in the believing wife, that is not in the Text. The mar-"riage is between a believer and an unbeliever, the unbeliever is sanctifi-"fied, whether husband or wife by their yokefellow, but not by their "believing yoke fellow; the Reader that puts off his reason may mat-"ter such denials.

Answ. The Reader that puts on his reason, will easily see good reason for my denial of each of the minors in each of Mr. Bls. three arguments, and the vanity of Mr. Bls. arguings, laying the stress wholly upon the believing party, which is not expressed in the Text, but onely hinted;

tes; and upon a translation of the particle ἐν by, which is not denied but may be translated in or to. Will any man of competent reason conceive, that the Apostle being to give reason of his resolution of an important point of conscience, about which he was by Letter consulted, would so loosely argue as to leave out the chief word from whence he inferred his conclusion, and conclude holiness as resulting from that which is not named, yea though he named the opposite term twice, and express a causality or antecedency by a term that had ordinarily another respect, when there was a proper and usual particle διὰ to express it by? And on the other side so precisely name the terms of husband and wife twice, and your children expressly, and yet lay no part of the stress upon the conjugal relation so often and so plainly mentioned? Yea, do we think that the Apostle giving a reason why the husband and wife might live together in disparity of Religion, would lay the whole stress upon that which was meerly accidental to their marriage state, to wit, the ones being a believer, and the federal holiness of children, without which their marriage might be good at first, and they lawfully continue together, and not ascribe it to that conjugal relation, continuing which alone made their living together lawfull as their comming together at first? That Chamier did overlash in saying the interpretation of federal holiness was omnium nostrorum, is manifest by the words of Musculus, Melanchon, and Cameravius, cited by me in my Exercitation sect. 5. That it was Calvins and many more Protestants opinion, is a prejudice against our opinion, but should not be with those that determine upon evidence of reason, not the authority of men. Calvin was an excellent man, but we may say of him, Non videt omnia. I follow Mr. Bl. in his next section.

Whereas Mr. Bl. saith, I put the Apostles argument into this form, If the unbelieving husband were not sanctified by the wife, then were your children unclean; But they are not unclean, but holy; Ergo, the unbelieving husband is sanctified by the wife: Had he dealt fairly with me, he would have rectified the major, and changed [by] into [to,] the conclusion of the syllogism, and the words next before and all along in that section of my Examen having [to the wife] which I contend for in that section, and pag. 14, 15. of my Exercitation, as the genuine reading, disclaiming [by the wife,] and of this advertise Mr. M. p. 97. of the first part of this Review. The rest of the section is spent about the proposition proving this sequel, [If the unbelieving husband be not sanctified in or to the wife, your children were unclean,] and so included in the Apostles consequence. Mr. Bl. would have it to be thus, Answer to my Letter, p. 38. [All the children of an unbeliever are unclean, unless for generation he or she be sanctified by a believer.] I conceive this proposition to be included in the Apostles consequence, [All the children of those parents whereof one is not sanctified to the other, are unclean;] or [none of the children of those parents whereof one is not sanctified to the other are holy.] The point in difference between us, is, whether it be necessary to insert [of an unbeliever, unless for generation he or she be sanctified by a believer.] This I deny for these reasons, 1. That is not necessary to be inserted, without which the Apostles conclusion is inferred: But the Apostles conclusion is inferred without Mr. Bls. addition; Ergo. The major is of it self evident. The minor is thus proved. The Apostle in his argument doth not at all mention sanctification for generation, there may be and was sanctification without generation, else no husband and wife could be sanctified one in or to another except children were begotten, and so the Apostle should not resolve the lawfulness of their living together who were barren, which is absurd. Nor is it necessary to add [by a believer,] sith the Apostle hath omitted it, and that as it is very probable of set purpose. Nor is it necessary to add [unbeliever] because it is false then even according to Pædobaptists hypotheses. For then it would follow, the children of two believers are unclean, and so Isaac and Jacob should be unclean, or out of the Covenant; if this were added all the children of those parents, whereof one is not an unbeliever sanctified for generation by a believer, are unclean.

2. The second reason I form thus. That is not necessary to be added, which would make the Apostles proposition false: But Mr. Bls. addition would make the Apostles proposition false. For it is false, which he makes the Apostles proposition, All the children of an unbeliever are unclean, unless for generation he or she be sanctified by a believer. For whether by uncleanness we understand non-admissibleness into the Church, it is false; for the children of unbelievers bought with money by Abraham, though infants, yet were in Mr. Bls. sense federally holy: and me thinks Mr. Bl. who asserts against Mr. Firmin the baptizability of the infants of the generality of English though the parents be openly profane, and hate godliness, should not deny it: however, the case is clear in the Circumcision of professed infidels children bought with money, Gen. 17. 27. And for federal real holiness, I suppose Mr. Bl. will not deny, but that many of them, as Rahab, &c. were in the Covenant of saving grace.

To the first of these, Mr. Bl. 1. saith thus, pag. 338. I pray leave generation out, and see whether there can be any sense in it, unless it be understood; their sanctification will confer no legitimation, without generation; if I say not believer, I must say husband or wife that is a believer.

Answ. If generation be left out, and believer, it may be good sense according to my interpretation. An unbelieving husband may be sanctified to his wife, that is, may lawfully use her though she were an unbeliever as his wife, and may continue to live with her, and she with him, though they never had or should have children, else your children which you might beget should be unclean; but this being put, they are legitimate. But according to Mr. Bls. interpretation it is not good sense in the case of the barren; for she or he are not instrumentally sanctified for generation, there being no generation there is no being an instrument for generation, nor sanctification thereto. And an instrument is an efficient, and where there is no effect there is no efficient, nor instrument: And to be sanctified instrumentally must be as an instrument to a principal agent, which in this thing cannot be any other then God; now now no inſtrument of God fails to produce its effect, therefore without actual generation, no wife can bee ſaid to bee inſtrumentally ſanctified for generation. And for the leaving out the term [believer] it is good ſenſe as I expound it without it, and if the Apoſtle had not conceived it good ſenſe without it, hee would not, as hee did, have left it out. But I confeſs it is not good ſenſe according to Mr. Ils. interpretation, who ſaith (though falſely) p. 334. The ſtreſs is wholly laid upon the believing party, as to the holineſs of the iſſue twice over. I confeſs their ſanctification would confer no legitimation actual without actual generation; yet their might bee legitimation of iſſue (which is enough to ſhew the conſequence to bee good and for the Apoſtles purpoſe) without actual generation, the legitimation being onely upon ſuppoſition (as it is uſual in ſuch arguments) and ſo the generation onely ſuppoſed. Doubtleſs the Apoſtle reſolved the Corinthians of the lawful living together of the barren as well as they that had or ſhould beget, which will not agree with Mr. Ils. expoſition of inſtrumental ſanctification for that is not true but of actual generation paſt or future, as I have proved.

But Mr. Bl. adds, the Apoſtles major is of an unbelieving husband and a believing wife, and I make the propoſition univerſal, according to the capacity of the ſubject of all believing wives joyned to unbelieving husbands, not with Mr. I. of all husbands and wives. And this is the Apoſtles included propoſition, which muſt bee the baſis of ſo many inferences and refutations, when yet all mens Logick (except what Mr. T. hath learnt) will utterly diſclaim it.

Anſw. That the Apoſtles major is not of an unbelieving husband and a believing wife, is manifeſt by the words in which the term [believing] is in both ſpeeches left out. And ſure if the Apoſtle would have aſcribed any thing to the believer as ſuch, hee could as eaſily have put it in as the term unbeliever, or the terms brother or ſiſter, uſed v. 12, 15. And though I deny not that the wife, or husband oppoſite to the infidel yoke-fellow were believers, yet I have learned ſo much Logick and Divinity, that what attributes do agree materially do not always agree formally in each ſpeech, as though Iſhmael was the ſon of Abraham, yet what is ſaid of him Gal. 4 23, 24, 25, 29, 30, 31. is ſaid of him not as Abrahams ſonne, but as Hagars. And ſo it is here, though the husband or wife were a believer, yet they are not there conſidered as believers, nor the things there ſpoken of them aſcribed to them under that conſideration, but under the conſideration of husband and wife: and if any diſclaim this Logick, he will diſclaim ſuch Logick as the holy Scripture uſeth in theſe and other places.

I alleged in my Examen part. 3. ſect. 8. p. 78. the words of Chamier: tom. 4. pauſtr. cath. l. 5. c. 10. §. 67. againſt Auguſtines interpretation of 1 Cor. 7. 14. of a ceremonial holineſs, as appoſite to refute his own of federal. For ſaith hee, that interpretation is ridiculous if theſe propoſitions bee not true, that all born of thoſe parents whereof one is not ſanctified in the other, are begotten in the time of the womans monethly courſes, Infidel husbands never uſe their wives but at ſuch time, for ſo the Apostle is made to speak by Augustines interpretation. Now the self same I shewed to follow on his own interpretation, the words being changed which should bee changed in such a retorsion. For then according to it the Apostle should say, All the children born of those parents of whom one is not sanctified in the other, are out of the Covenant of grace, infidel parents never beget of their wives children within the Covenant of grace. Both which are false, and consequently the interpretation of Chamier, whence it is apparent that Chamier made these propositions in the Apostles arguing to be included, Those children whereof one parent is not sanctified in the other are unclean, none of the children of those parents whereof one is not sanctified in the other are holy. I said also in my Antidote pag. 16. that Mr. Bl. confessed these propositions included in the Apostles consequence. Against this Mr. Bl. thus riseth up.

" What can I imagine but that Mr. T. knowingly fastens this gross " untruth upon mee? Seeing he so well knowes that I both deny it and " have argued against it (having made such defence as he could in his " Apology of it) yet now in his Antidote says I confess it. I am over- " much honoured to be named (if I may say so) the day that Chamier is " mentioned, but as much wronged to have such a Monster of absurdi- " ties (as is contained in that proposition) obtruded upon mee; my " thoughts are over-high of Chamier to believe any such weakness " in him, when Mr. T. shewes it in him (having yet given his Rea- " der no account where it may bee found) I shall subscribe to " that Proverb; Nullum magnum ingenium sine aliqua mixtura de- " mentiæ.

Answ. Chamiers words in the place cited, making the Apostles arguing with Augustines exposition to include the two propositions before named, do plainly shew, that in his Logick the Apostle asserted these propositions, All the children whereof one parent is not sanctified in the other are unclean, none of them are holy; and Mr. Bl. in his answer to my Letter ch. 7. sect. 2. pag. 36. to my fourth argument against instrumental sanctification thus made, in this form of reasoning this proposition is included; Their children could not bee holy without that sanctification, which could not bee true of instrumental sanctification and federal holiness, replies never denying the proposition to bee included, but avers it true of instrumental sanctification and federal holiness, yea most true, necessarily and universally true: Now hee that saith without that sanctification (of one parent in the other) the children could not be holy, saith none of the children of those parents whereof one is not sanctified to the other are holy, to which is equipollent all the children of those parents whereof one is not sanctified in the other are unclean. And thus it is shewed Mr. Bl. where hee and Chamier confessed those propositions to bee included, which indeed have no monster of absurdities in them, but are the genuine medium of the Apostles argument, and Chamier without any mixture of madness did acutely discern to be included in the Apostles reasoning, though hee heeded not how this very observation overthrowes his own interpretation as well as Augustines.

The

The reſt of this ſection not anſwered about the reaſon I gave why the propoſition included in the Apoſtles ſequel is to be conceived without the terms of believer and unbeliever inſerted by Mr. Bl. and the illuſtration of it I ſhall make no further reply to here, but refer the Reader to what is ſo largely ſpoken in vindication of my ſelf in the firſt part of this Review ſect. 21. pag. 170. ſect. 36. pag. 249, 250. I proceed to examine Mr. Bls. fifth Sect. of the 29th. Chapter, although there are ſome things in the ſixth Section which perhaps might bee more fitly anſwered firſt.

Mr. Bl. Sect. 5. having ſaid that I alledge, that the Apoſtles in this text brings a formal argument to prove the marriage ſociety of theſe yoke-fellowes lawful, which in the two former verſes hee had determined, hee then adds.

"And it cannot be denied but the words at the firſt ſight, ſeem to "carry ſome colour to underſtand them ſo far in Mr. T. his ſenſe, as to "make them formal, concluding reaſons of his former determinati-"on having ſaid v. 12, 13. then hee adds v. 14. But the way of infe-"rence will as well bear it, that the Apoſtle doth firſt determine in "the controverſie by revelation (as Mr. T. will have it) as an Apo-"ſtle, then takes off their ſcruples which occaſioned their fears, both "reſpective to their poſterity and themſelves; Mr. T. indeed challen-"ges this way of interpretation to make the Apoſtle immethodical, but "what better method then to determine a point, and then anſwer "reaſons againſt it; The Apoſtle meeting with their fears in reſpect "of their poſterity and themſelves, it muſt needs bee that they ſignified "them and hee anſwers them; The Apoſtles method (it is true) and "manner of inference indifferently favours either interpretation; But "the words themſelvs clearly evince, that they are a removal of ſcruples "againſt their marriage ſociety, and not a formal concluding argument "againſt it.

Anſw. It is true it is a bottome I build much on, 1. That the Apoſtle brings the media or middle terms of two Syllogiſms or formal arguments v. 14. to prove the lawfulneſs of the continuance in marriage ſociety of the believing yoke-fellow with the unbeliever, determined by him v. 12, 13. and that they are not as v. 16. a Rhetorical argument onely to move the affections to embrace what before their judgements were ſetled in, but a Logical proof of the reſolution by ſetting down the medium out of which a ſyllogiſm is to be framed to infer the concluſion. 2. That the Apoſtle doth not at all reſolve any doubt about their poſterity, but takes the ſtate of their poſterity as out of doubt with them, and thence infers that which was doubtful to them concerning their own marriage ſtate. Now Mr. Bl denies not the words at firſt ſight ſeem to carry ſome colour to underſtand them ſo far in my ſenſe as to make them formal, concluding reaſons of the Apoſtles former determination, and confeſſeth the Apoſtles method and manner of inference indifferently favours either interpretation. But that the words are to bee analyſed and conceived onely in the form I have reſolved them, I prove, firſt by the particles, for, elſe, but now: all theſe particles are argumentative.

[For] in many places, as Rom. 3. 20. & 4. 15, &c. 1 Corinth. 7. 9, 31, &c. ἐπεὶ ἄρα tranſlated elſe, or otherwiſe, or for then are argumentative, as 1 Cor. 5. 10. & 15. 15, 29. Rom. 11. 6. in which places it notes an abſurdity conſequent, if the antecedent bee not granted: νῦν δὲ but now, is uſed alſo frequently as an argumentative particle, as 1 Corinth. 12. 18, 20. Rom. 3. 21. Heb. 8 6. & 9. 26. there are both theſe uſed, as ἐπεὶ & νῦν δὲ, ſo 1 Corinth. 15. 20. And accordingly Paſor in his Lexicon on the word νυνὶ, dici ur etiam νυνὶ, 1 Cor. 15. 20. interdum ſervit aſſumptioni ſyllogiſmi, 1 Cor. 7. v. 14 & 15. v. 20. Mr. Cobbet Juſt. vindic. part. 1. chap. 1. ſect. 1. where the words ἐπεὶ ἄρα uſed in argumentation, as 1 Cor. 5. 10. and the particle νῦν δὲ in like ſort uſed, 1 Cor. 12. 18, 20. So Rom. 3. 21. Heb 8. 6, & 9. 26. & 11. 16. Do declare that that ſentence (in the latter part of 1 Cor. 7. 14.) is annexed in way of argumentation to the propoſition immediately before. Beza annot. ad 1 Cor. 7. 14. particula νῦν hoc in loco non eſt temporis adverbium, ſed eſt conjunctio quæ adhiberi ſolet in argumentorum aſſumptionibus. 2. This is proved from the matter, it is agreed on that the Apoſtle determines the doubt of the Corinthians v. 12, 13. and it is apparent that the firſt part of v. 14 is a reaſon of his determination. Let us conſider the determination v. 12, 13. let him not put her away, let her not leave him. Now this determination may be underſtood either as a plain prohibition forbidding the believer to put away or leave the unbelieving yoke-fellow at all, being contented to dwell with the believer. But this ſenſe ſeems not to me to be the Apoſtles intent; 1. Becauſe it might then be a hard yoke, that a believer muſt not put away his wife which will dwell with him though ſhe play the harlot; or it may be underſtood as a determination of their liberty, Let him not put her away, let her not leave him, that is, there is no neceſſity that he ſhould put her away, that ſhe ſhould leave him, conſcience and duty to God ties them not to do ſo, and this ſenſe ſeems moſt probable to me, though I reject not the other, if ſome limitation more be added, as thus, let him not put her away, nor ſhee leave him, that is, I forbid them to leave each other barely for the diſparity of religion. Now the reaſons of this later explication are theſe. 1. Becauſe the phraſe v. 15. let him depart is not an abſolute command but a permiſſion, as the words following, a brother or ſiſter is not under bondage in ſuch caſes, ſhew, and the like is to bee ſaid of the reſolution v. 17. ſo let him walk, that is, ſo hee may walk, and that it is the ſenſe, I gather from the inſtances in the following verſes, whereby the Apoſtle illuſtrates his determination v. 17. Is any man called being uncircumciſed? v. 18. let him not become uncircumciſed: Is any called in uncircumciſion? let him not be circumciſed. Which ſpeeches do not abſolutely forbid the drawing up the fore-skin or the cutting it off, there might bee caſes in which either might be lawful, but leave it at liberty, and ſo much the words following alſo intimate circumciſion is nothing, and uncircumciſion is nothing but the keeping the commandements of God, which expreſſion intimates the indifferency of theſe, and the non availing to ingratiate us to God, which is not a fit reaſon for an abſolute prohibition, but for a determination concerning the liberty of either.

Then

Then the Apoſtle v. 20. repeats his determination v. 17. Let every man abide in the ſame calling wherein he was called; which (though true of it) is not meant of his Chriſtian general calling, as if he had ſaid, Let every man abide in Chriſtianity wherein he was called, which the words ſeem at firſt reading to import; for the words following, v. 21. Art thou called being a ſervant? do ſhew, that the term [calling] v. 20. notes the ſtate of life antecedent to his being a Chriſtian, which by an elegant Antanaclaſis is termed by the Apoſtle his callin : And this the Apoſtle doth not enjoyn ſo as that he forbids any ſervant to be free; but the meaning is, as Diodati in his Annot. rightly expounds it, He may abide therein with a ſafe conſcience, and ought not raſhly to change it, neither through ſuperſtition, nor by doing another any wrong: but if he can do it for any juſt cauſes, or through any lawfull means, it is then lawfull for him to do it. The ſame is repeated v. 24. and is to be underſtood, not (as oft preachers do underſtand it) of a mans trade, or imployment onely, and as an abſolute command, that a man ſhould not leave his imployment, trade, or function in which he was bred, as of a tradeſman to become a preacher, &c. but the calling is any ſtate of life in which the perſon was found, who was called to be a Chriſtian, as to be circumciſed or uncircumciſed, a ſervant or freeman, married or unmarried, ſubject or Magiſtrate, and ſo proves that Magiſtracy or any other ſtate of life is conſiſtent with Chriſtianity. And the Apoſtles determination is not of neceſſity, as if a Chriſtian might not alter the calling or ſtate of life he was in when he was converted, for then the ſervant might not become free, nor the unmarried marry; but of liberty, that Chriſtians ſhould not think themſelves bound by their Chriſtian profeſſion, to forſake theſe eſtates, but they might continue in them. And ſo is the reſolution v. 12, 13. to be expounded. 2. This expoſition is agreeable to the occaſion of the Apoſtles determination, which was the Corinthian Chriſtians doubt of the lawfulneſs of their living together, not of the inconvenience or convenience (for in that they could have beſt reſolved themſelves) and ſo the Apoſtles reſolution is of the lawfulneſs of living together. 3. This is further confirmed from the reaſon of his determination, v. 12, 13. in the firſt part of v. 14. which is apparently ſet down to meet with the reaſon of their doubt: they thought that they might not live with the unbeliever, becauſe unholy. The Apoſtle on the contrary determines though hee were unholy in himſelf, yet he was to his wife as if hee had been holy: and the reaſon is thus, The wife may live with him as her husband, who though an unbeliever, is in reſpect of marriage uſe as if he were ſanctified: But ſo is the unbelieving husband; Ergo. Which reaſon cannot be a meer Rhetorical argument to move the affection, for it ſuppoſeth the unbeliever continuing ſuch, which was their vexation; but an argument to ſatisfie their conſciences: Yet not of their duty that they muſt live together, for it is heterogeneous to that end, they were not bound to live together by reaſon of the ſanctifiedneſs of the unbeliever, but Gods command, which alone makes duty; but of the lawfulneſs notwithſtanding his infidelity, by determining againſt the ground of their doubt,

doubt, the unlawfulneſs of living together with an unſanctified infidel. As for the words following, [Elſe were your children unclean, but now are they holy,] they cannot be the reſolution of another doubt: but 1. the forms of expreſſion [ἐπεὶ ἄρα, elſe or otherwiſe, and but now,] do plainly ſhew, that thoſe words do confirm what was ſaid next before, [the unbelieving wife is ſanctified to the husband.] 2. They ſhew that the thing was certain even to them, that their children were not unclean, and that it was abſurd in their conceits that their children ſhould be unclean. Mr. Bl. himſelf ſaith, Vindic. Fæd. pag. 323. Elſe implies a certainty, that upon this account of ſanctification of the parent, from whom the ground of fear aroſe, the children are holy; a like certainty, that were it not that they were thus ſanctified they were unclean. Which words do plainly ſet down the two propoſitions I conceived in the Apoſtles argument, which Mr. Bl. terms a monſter of abſurdity; for [It is certain that upon this account of ſanctification of the parent from whom the ground of fear aroſe, the children are holy,] is equipollent to this, [All the children of thoſe parents whereof one is ſanctified to the other, are holy;] and [it is certain, that were it not that they were thus ſanctified, they were unclean,] is equipollent to this, [none of the children of thoſe parents whereof one is not ſanctified to the other, are clean or holy:] and hereby their fear is confeſſed to have been about their own living together, and the ground of it the imagined non ſanctifiedneſs of the parent, and that [elſe] doth imply a certainty of the childrens holineſs upon this account of ſanctification of the parent; which evidently ſhews, that the childrens holineſs is a conſequent of the parents ſanctification, and brought to prove it, and not to reſolve another doubt of them. Yea, it were ridiculous to reſolve a doubt by a doubt, to reſolve them their children were holy, becauſe they were holy. Rightly ſaith Piſcator in his ſcholie on the place. The argument is from the effect, to wit a conſequent abſurdity, and it is after this form, If the unbelieving husband were not ſanctified in the wife, their children would be unclean: But they are not unclean, for they are holy; therefore the unbelieving husband is ſanctified in the wife. Whence it is apparent, that the words are not a reſolution of a doubt of their children, for then the childrens holineſs would have been the concluſion, whereas it is the aſſumption, and conſequently that the Apoſtle uſeth formal arguments, or gives the middle-terms of them, and that he doth not reſolve two doubts, but one of the lawfulneſs of the living together of yokefellows in diſparity of Religion, and that the firſt argument is taken from that which obviates the ground of their fear, and the later confirms that argument from a conſequent abſurdity even in their apprehenſion, if that were not granted. This to be the true Analyſis of the Apoſtles words, the words of Chamier, Beza, Zegedin in his tables, and many more do ſhew, which I forbear to alledge as conceiving it needleſs. What ſaith Mr. Bl. to this?

" Let us look firſt into v. 16. where the [for] may lay as fair a claim " to a formal reaſon as this in the 14th. and M. T. himſelf ſays is a reaſon, " Antipol. pag. 110. But I would fain learn how he can make it up in- " to a reaſon; he muſt thus draw it up. Whom a man in marriage

" ſociety may have hopes to ſave from idolatrous ways, with ſuch a one " he may continue in marriage ſociety: But a believing husband in " marriage ſociety may have hopes to ſave his unbelieving wife from " idolatrous ways; Ergo. This propoſition as to ſuch a concluſion is " 1. vain; for though there were no ſuch hopes, yet marriage ſociety " is to be continued, Gentiliſm being not of the ſubſtance of marriage, " which Mr. T ſeems to yeeld, Examen, pag 121. 2. This propoſition " is falſe as to this purpoſe; the inceſtuous Corinthian might have had " hopes to have converted his fathers wife (if a heathen) and yet ſuch " hopes would not conclude the lawfulneſs of their ſociety together. " Herod might have had like hopes to have converted his brother Phi- " lips wife, and yet this was not objected againſt John Baptiſt, and had " it been objected, it had been frivolous. We have many caſes put about " marriage, if ſuch an argument would ſerve the turn, it would ſalve " them all.

Anſw. Though I ſay 1 Cor. 7.16. is a reaſon to perſwade to the reſolution *v.*13. yet I do not ſay it is a reaſon to conclude the lawfulneſs of living together, but to perſwade them the rather to live together from the poſſibility or hopefulneſs of that event, which he urgeth in a Rhetorical way in an interrogation, not in a Logick way as he did *v.*14. and yet it may be drawn up Logically thus. They are the rather to live together, it being otherwiſe determined lawfull, whereof one, if they live together, may ſave the other: But ſo it may be if the brother or ſiſter live with the infidel yokefellow, Ergo. So that by my maintaining that *v.*14. [for] notes the medium of a formal argument, and that thereby the lawfulneſs of the believing and infidel yokefellows continuing together in marriage ſociety is concluded, and that [for, *v.*16.] notes a reaſon of the reſolution, *v.*16. yet it follows not the concluſion inferred *v.*16. is the ſame with that inferred *v.*14. nor the reaſon to be drawn as Mr. Bl. would, nor is there any need I ſhould retract my Analyſis of *v.*12,13,14. nor anſwer Mr. Bls. objections againſt an argument which I neither aſcribe to the Apoſtle, nor is deducible out of any of my grants.

Mr. Bl. adds. " And for *v.*14. though I cannot ſay, but in caſe it " were made up (into Mr. Ts. his ſenſe) into a reaſon of the former " concluſion, it would contain a truth, and ſo far might paſs in the " way of a reaſon: Yet I have many material exceptions againſt it; " 1. from the thing it ſelf, it would be a reaſon ſilly, childiſh, vain, " your married condition is lawfull, elſe your children were baſtards; " what child in Corinth but well underſtood it? 2. From the phraſe in " which it is delivered altogether unſuitable to a reaſon of this doctrine, " 1. being onely to tell them, that the legitimation of their iſſue pro- " ved the lawfulneſs of their marriage ſociety, he ſhould attribute all " (as to either ſex) to the believer, when the child owes his legitima- " tion equally to either parent: 2. That being to give a reaſon of the " lawfulneſs of marriage in ſuch a ſpecial caſe, he ſhould give his rea- " ſon of equal concernment to all marriages, where both are unbelie- " vers, both believers, as well as this between a believer and an unbe-

" liever: 3. When he is to ſpeak onely of legitimation and baſtardy, " he ſhould phraſe it in ſuch uncouth language, and in words fit " it onely ſuteable to their parents Eccleſiaſtical capacity, whether " title to it, as in the believer, or want of it, as in the unbelie- " ver. Now on the other hand interpret the Apoſtles words (as " his method will equally beare) accordingly as you have heard " before, and no ſuch inconvenience follows from the words either " *v.*14. or 16.

Anſw. Mr. Bls. confeſſion that my analyſis and expoſition would contain a truth, and that it might paſs in the way of a reaſon, and therefore is appoſite to the Apoſtles purpoſe, and his exceptions though termed by him material, yet, as I ſhall ſhew, having no weight, and his method and expoſition neither agree with the words nor matter, is a very good evidence for me againſt him. As for his exceptions, they are the ſame which he brought before, ſect. 3. and are anſwered by me in this ſection, that it was the fitter for the Apoſtle to uſe if the reaſon were ſo eaſily underſtood, that the Apoſtle doth not attribute all to the believer, that no reaſon was ſo fit to ſettle them about their ſpecial caſe, as that which evinced, that the marriage ſtate was not made void by the unbelief of the parties, that the Apoſtles phraſes are not uncouth language after my ſenſe, but very agreeable to ſuch language he uſeth in the ſame Chapter; as when *v.*20. by an Antanaclaſis he terms the civil ſtate of the Chriſtians the calling wherein they are called, and to other expreſſions, as I ſhew in the firſt part of this Review, ſect. 12, 23, 24, 25, 26 and that the phraſes are not ſuitable to the parents Eccleſiaſtical capacity; and the Apoſtles ſpeeches and argument do imply ſainthood, and are inconſiſtent with the terms and matter of them, if expounded and reſolved as Mr. Bl. would.

Mr. Bl. adds. " And now Mr. T. may eaſily receive anſwer to that " odious inference, which he makes from our interpretation of Covenant " holineſs. According to this interpretation (ſaith he) the medium of " the Apoſtle to prove the lawfulneſs of the living of a believing wife " with an unbelieving husband, will as well prove the lawfulneſs of a " believing fornicatrix living with an unbelieving fornicator, as may " appear (ſaith he) by a ſyllogiſtical analyſis of the Apoſtles argument " the major whereof is this, That man and woman may live together, " notwithſtanding the unbelief of one party, whereof one is ſanctified " to the other for begetting an holy ſeed. This is manifeſtly the Apoſtles " reaſon after our interpretation. But Mr. T. is manifeſtly miſtaken, " not to mention the liberty that he will ſcarce allow another, to leave " out husband and wife expreſt in the Text, and inſtead of it to put " man and woman: The Apoſtle doth not conclude the lawfulneſs of " their marriage ſociety by the federation of their iſſue, but ſhews that " the ſuppoſed and feared non-federation doth not conclude the unlaw- " fulneſs: And I dare yeeld that any man and woman may live toge- " ther, notwithſtanding any fear of the unholineſs of their iſſue; where " one is ſanctified by the faith of another to the begetting of an holy " ſeed. And if Mr. T. will apply this, which the Apoſtle ſpeaks, of a

"mans living with his wife (ad faciendum populum) to the living with "his whore, there is no danger to yeeld it; Pharez his iſſue had belon-"ged to the Commonweal of Iſrael, if Thamar had been an infidel, as "for ought wee know, in all probability it was with Jephtaes mother. "If Sampſon had iſſue by the harlot of Gaza Judg. 16. 1. ſuch iſſue "had belonged to Iſrael, ſuch iſſue male had right to circumciſion. To "gratifie Mr. T. I ſhall put it under my hand, that if a man have no o-"ther reaſon from Scripture to leave his harlot then the non-federati-"on of his iſſue, he may ſtill abide with her.

Anſw. There is no miſtake in my argument, nor is there any anſwer at all made by Mr. Bl. to it, which hee either wittingly or unwittingly I judge not, certain I am he doth manifeſtly miſtake. He tels me, the Apoſtle doth not conclude the lawfulneſs of their marriage ſociety by the federation of their iſſue, whereby he intimates as if I ſaid he did, and that therein was my miſtake: But let my words be viewed Apol. ſect. 18. p. 96. Poſtſcript. ſect. 7. p. 122. Review part. 1. ſect. 22, 36. and it will appear that I frame not the argument ſo according to the Apoſtle, lightly underſtood, but as Mr. M. and others interpret him. I ſaid the Apoſtle concludes the lawfulneſs of their living together by the ſanctification of the husband though an unbeliever to or in the wife, and that the propoſition of the Apoſtle is, They may live together whereof one is ſanctified in the other, the aſſumption is, But the unbelieving husband is ſanctified in the wife, Ergo. Now the major with Mr. Ms. and Mr. Bls. expoſition hath this ſenſe, They may live together whereof one is ſanctified by the faith of the other for the begetting a holy ſeed, for ſo they expound the Apoſtle. But according to them the vnbelieving fornicator is ſanctified by the believing fornicatrix for the begetting a holy ſeed, which is confeſſed by them. By Mr. Bl. here, when he ſaith, The iſſue of Tamar, Jephtha's mother, the Harlot at Gaza were holy federally: and for the major there is no neceſſity of putting in [huſband and wife] ſith as Mr. Bl. ſaith p, 334. The ſtreſs is wholly laid upon the believing party, as to the holineſs of the iſſue, and here, I dare yeeld, ſaith he, that any man and woman may live together, notwithſtanding any fear of the unholineſs of their iſſue; where one is ſanctified by the faith of another to the begetting of an holy ſeed. Now put all theſe together. The Apoſtle argues the believer may live with the unbeliever, becauſe the one is ſanctified in the other, and this ſanctifying is according to Mr. Ms. and Mr. Bls. expoſition for the begetting a holy ſeed, and this begetting of a holy ſeed according to Mr. Bl. is aſcribed wholly to the faith of the one parent, it's a reſult or fruit of the parents faith whether married or unmarried, therefore according to Mr. Bls. expoſition of the Apoſtle, the lawfulneſs of living together is deduced from that which doth as well agree to fornicators as the married, and conſequently the lawfulneſs of living together in fornication is inferred from the Apoſtles reaſon as Mr. Bl. and Mr. M. and others expound it as well as of husband and wife. It is true I would not allow another to leave [husband and wife] expreſſt in the text out of the argument framed by me according to my expoſition, which is the Apoſtles meaning as I conceive, becauſe I lay

I lay the whole ſtreſs upon thoſe terms, and ſtill contend that no perſons are ſanctified one in or to another but the husband and wife, and that theſe are ſo ſanctified, whether one or both or neither are believers. But if I frame the reaſon according to Mr. Ms. Mr. Bls. and others interpretation of the Apoſtle, I am to be allowed to leave them our, ſith by them no ſtreſs is laid on the husband and wife or conjugal relation, but the faith of one party. That there was any ſuch fear of non-federation of iſſue, or ſuppoſition of it in the Corinthians if they livid together cannot be evinced from the text, but the contrary is manifeſt by the arguing from the uncleanneſs of their children, as an abſurdity in their apprehenſions, and the holineſs of them as a thing known and certain to them, as the particle [elſe] ſhews: and therefore that the Apoſtle ſhew, that the feared and ſuppoſed non-federation doth not conclude the unlawfulneſs, is but a fiction, nor doth the Apoſtle make any ſuch diſtinction between concluding the lawfulneſs, and the not concluding the unlawfulneſs, between which if there bee any diſtinction (which yet I perceive not) yet it is certain that the words v. 12, 13. let him not put her away, let her not leave him, are a poſitive reſolution of the lawfulneſs of their continuing together in marriage ſociety, and the reaſon ſhews v. 14. that the doubt was of the believers conjunction with the unbeliever, becauſe he was an unſanctified perſon, and conſequently the reaſon of the doubt was not the fear of the non-federation of iſſue but the unlawfulneſs of marriage ſociety with an infidel unſanctified: and conſequently it is a monſtrous addition which Mr. Bl. ſeems to put either into the concluſion thus, let her not leave him if this be all the fear the non-federation of iſſue, or in the reaſon, They may live together whereof one is ſanctified by the faith of the other party, ſo as that there is no fear of the non-federation of their iſſue, there being nothing in the text for this addition. Yet if it were put in it will juſtifie my odious inference as hee terms it. For let the major be thus after Mr. Bls. minde, They may live together whereof one is ſanctified by the faith of the other, ſo as there is no fear of non-federation of their iſſue, the minor is thus expreſly after Mr Bls. minde; But the unbelieving fornicatrix is ſanctified by the faith of the believing fornicator, ſo as that there is no fear of non-federation of their iſſue, Ergo they may live together according to Mr. Bl. and conſequently Mr. Bl. blaſphemouſly by his expoſition makes the Apoſtle juſtifie the living together of a believer with an unbeliever in fornication; which is enough to ſhew the falſhood of that expoſition, yea and of any other which aſcribes the ſanctifiedneſs v. 14. (which is the reaſon of their lawful living together, v. 12, 13.) to the faith of the one party, and not to the conjugal relation. The reſt of Mr. Bls. talk of my willingneſs to have him waſte his time, his falling on my ſapleſs tree, the readineſs of his axe, his pains in applying it, is vain and trivolous talk, ſith the tree ſtill ſtands after all his hacking and hewing at it, and his axe appears to bee very blunt, or elſe he ſtrikes beſides the tree. As for my ſixe years ſpace, Mr. Bl. might have underſtood that the reaſon of my not publiſhing the firſt part of my Review till 1652. ſix years after the printing of Apology, was (beſides my constant labours and extraordinary publike and private employments) from the necessity of my removing my dwelling from the Temple to Bewdley, from Bewley to Ledbury, thence to Lemster, besides my frequent flittings by reason of the wars, travels to regain my plundered goods, difficulty to get my treatise printed, the variety of Antagonists I had to answer, which is yet the reason of my slowness in publishing this part of the Review, and comes from the venemous spirit of such as Mr. Bl. Mr. B. and other Pædobaptists, who would never comply with me in the fair motion in the Epilogue of my Examen to joyn together in a brotherly way of ventilating the point, but what they can bait me with calumnies tending to discredit me as covetous, arrogant, &c. with multitude of replies, and magnifying them though trivolous, vilifying my writings that men might not reade them, and discern the truth, nor Book-sellers be willing to print or sell them, stirring up Parliaments and Rulers to remove those of our way, out of all places which have publike salary, that our hands may be weakned; which I may truly call wicked practises, of which too many of them have been guilty, and for which God will judge them. I go on.

Mr. Bl. sect. 6. to my argument against his instrumental sanctification, that barren persons cannot be said to be instrumentally sanctified for producing an holy seed pressed by me in the 1. part of this Review p. 150, 151. sect. 19: saith thus, And I will appeal to any, yea the meanest Christian, whether persons that have children born in wedlock bonds, in such disparity may not have their fears and scruples about them, notwithstanding others in the same condition of marriage are childless, or unable to bring forth children? whether the seed which came of those marriages Ezra. 10. were not unclean, notwithstanding many so married had no children; Many of the Priests had herein transgrest, and it was but some of them had wives by whom they had children, Ezra 10.44. All which I grant, but there is not a jot in all this which answers my objection; that the barren by accident or nature could not bee said to bee sanctified to produce an holy seed, and yet the reason of the Apostle must bee conceived to reach to the proof of the lawfulness of their living together in disparity of religion as well as the fruitful, and therefore the sanctifying must be expounded in another sense then Mr. Bls. which agrees not to their case.

But hee adds. And because this is the medium for proof of the Apostles determination, v. 14. that they might live together, pag. 152. hee will have it to be from a future contingent; but when this is no medium for proof of the Apostles determination, as hath been sufficiently shewn it is not, this fals with the other.

Answ. That it hath been sufficiently shewn that the first part of v. 14. is not a medium for proof of the Apostles determination, is said without any colour of truth. All the reason I finde given is, v. 16 is not a formal reason, ergo, neither v. 14. towhich answer hath been given by denying both the antecedent and the consequence, it is a formal reason though not as Mr. Bl. frames it, and if it were not, yet the term [for, else, but now] being argumentative terms, shew there is formal reasoning ning v. 14. v. 14. and the producing an holy seed being a contingent event, if the Apostle should, as Mr. Bls. exposition makes him, prove their lawful living together, because the unbeliever is sanctified instrumentally to produce an holy seed, hee should argue from an uncertain event, which Chamier tom. 4. paustr. Cath. lib 5. chap. 10. sect. 46. disapproved in another case, as I shew in my Examen pag. 73.

To my argument against instrumental sanctification, that it cannot be meant of it, sith the barren cannot bee said to bee Gods instrument, for that always effects, and when God sanctifies hee specially designes some, whereas this is common to all husbands and wives, and the unbeliever is said to bee sanctified, whereas it is the believer according to them who is the instrument of producing a holy seed.

Mr. Bl. saith, "I am sure they bring forth children unto God, Ezek. 16. 20. and this they do not independently of themselves, so "Christ would not have warned Matth. 23. 10. call no man father upon earth, for one is your father who is in heaven. All natural parents "are instruments of God to produce a seed to people the world, according to that blessing of Gen. 1. 28. Gen. 9. 1. Bee fruitful and "multiply and replenish the earth; All believing parents are instruments of God for an holy seed, it being of his free grace that the "promise is to them and their seed.

Answ. What is said Ezek. 16. 20. was said onely of Israelites and those manifest idolaters as well as true believers, and the words do import no more but this, that the Israelites children were born of right to him, that is, to be at his disposal for his service, Levit. 25. 42. because bee brought them out of Egypt, and therefore it was unjust in them to alienate them from him by offering them to idols, which is not to be said of the Corinthian believers children. Matth. 23. 9. is as impertinently alledged, for it speaks not of Gods being a Father in respect of natural generation, nor forbids calling any man a father in that respect, but in that manner in which the Jews termed their teachers fathers and themselves their children, in respect of absolute subjection of their consciences to their dictates, as Diodati rightly in his annot. This teacheth the believers not to yeeld that absolute reverence, nor power over their consciences to any living man which belongeth to God onely, as ignorant people did use to do to the Pharisees. If all natural parents be instruments of God to people the world, yet Mr. Bl. will not say they are instruments to produce a holy seed to people the Church for then all children and not believers onely should be federally holy: so that all this is meerly impertinent. That all believing parents are instruments of God for an holy seed, is said without proof, there being no such promise to them and their seed produced, nor if there were did it follow they were all federally holy in Mr. Bls. sense: But were this granted, yet it is nothing to prove the unbelieving parent to bee Gods instrument to produce a holy seed, who is said, and not the believer to bee sanctified, and that signanter considered as an unbeliever, much less every unbelieving wife though barren who hath a believing husband, much less to bee specially designed for that end, end, and therefore the ſanctification inſtrumental which Maſter Bl. conceives meant 1 Corinth. 7. 14. is quite beſides the Apoſtles meaning.

Mr. Bl goes on thus of me, " The 2d. argument he hath in his Apol. " p. 123. where he ſays that the Apoſtles propoſition underſtood of fe- " deral holineſs were moſt certainly falſe, giving in his reaſon, for many " children of both unbelieving parents are federally holy; he ſaith that I " anſwer, they are not ſo at their birth. My anſwer is, if afterwards " by grace they are changed; this is no fruit of their birth (of which " the queſtion is in this place) but the work of the Goſpel through grace, " Mr. T. ſays, This is nothing to the purpoſe, ſith the propoſition hath " not thoſe words in it, nor the Apoſtle; the Apoſtles reaſon ſuppoſeth " it cannot be at any time; It ſeems then that the Apoſtles propoſition " hath this in it, that their children ſo born cannot bee clean at any " time, or elſe Mr. T. his exception is leſs to purpoſe, who does not ſee " that the Apoſtle ſpeaks of uncleanneſs or holineſs, as as a product of " their birth without conſideration of any thing which after by provi- " dence (through the omnipotence and free grace of God) might hap- " pen, as a mean woman given in marriage to a Senator or Peer, ſhe " is enobled by her husband, otherwiſe her iſſue were Plebeians; " yet ſo as they are capable of honour by the Princes munificence, or " their own merit; It ſeems that propoſition of Chriſts, That which is " born of the fleſh is fleſh, Joh. 3 6. will not hold, unleſs it muſt for " ever continue fleſh, and no omnipotence of God ſhall be able to make " it otherwiſe.

Anſw. It is true that it ſeems to me the Apoſtles propoſition hath this in it, that their children born unclean cannot be clean at any time, and I grant that the Apoſtle ſpeaks of uncleanneſs or holineſs as a product of their birth or generation, without conſideration of any thing which after by providence (through the omnipotence and free grace of God) might happen, and therefore of illegitimation and legitimation by birth, and not of federal holineſs which is no product of birth, and yet that propoſition, That which is born of the fleſh is fleſh, Joh. 3 6. will hold, though after the perſon born after the fleſh be made ſpirit or ſpiritual, there being no contradiction in this, that the perſon born after the fleſh ſhould become ſpiritual in his qualities, but it is impoſſible that that which hath been illegitimate in birth, ſhould not be illegitimate in birth, it being a thing paſt, and therefore cannot by God be made not a thing paſt, or not done, for then it ſhould be true that a thing hath been at birth, and hath not been, been and not been, which is a contradiction.

Mr. Bl. ſaith, I farther add, And yet it may be certain that the child of two unbelievers may be federally holy at birth, whether it bee underſtood of election, inherent holineſs or outward holineſs, if God pleaſe to work and declare it, I would Mr. T. would ſpeak, whether there were ever any ſuch a thing as the child of two unbelievers, at the inſtant of their birth, declared of God to bee of thoſe whom hee took to bee federally holy, and of the number of his Covenant people, let that propoſition ſtand till God by ſuch a miracle confute or contradict it.

Anſw.

Answ. 1. Though I could not speak there was such a thing, yet it is enough for me to shew that and how it might be. 2. I doubt not but many a captive woman gotten with child by an infidel, and she her self an infidel, hath been delivered in Abrahams house, and those children were in Mr. Bls. sense federally holy at the instant of their birth, for for they were, if males, capable of Circumcision on the eighth day, according to the law, *Gen.*17.12,13. and this is to be federally holy according to Mr. Bls. doctrine, who makes all to be in the Covenant at their birth who are capable by reason of their birth of the sign of the Covenant.

He yet saith, Mr. T. adds, But the issue of them that are not lawfully conjoyned as husband and wife cannot be made legitimate by God, because it is contrary to the definition of legitimation, which is a state consequent upon birth by the lawfull copulation of lawfull husband and wife. This must conclude for his interpretation, and against ours, because God by his omnipotence can make our unclean ones holy, and to make his unclean ones holy, is without the verge of omnipotence: If we should put case in Mr. T. his manner, that God should appear in approbation of a mans enjoying a woman out of marriage society, then there were a legitimation of the issue, as he did the marriage of the brothers wife, Deut.25.5. otherwise against the moral law, Levit.18.16.

Answ. It concludes for me if it be true (which Mr. Bl. disproves not) that the holiness is meant 1 *Cor.*7.14. which cannot be without the sanctification there spoken of, and Mr. Bls. holiness may be without his sanctification, and the proposition is true of no other holiness but that which I assign. If the definition of legitimation be a state of birth from parents generating in lawfull marriage, though God should approve of a mans enjoying a woman out of marriage society, there were no legitimation of the issue, and yet the marriage *Deut.*25.5. were lawfull, and the issue legitimate. I am sorry Mr. Bl. hath tyred himself and me with so many impertinent words, which have shaken nothing of my Fabrick: I am glad I am so near an end with him, and pass from him to Mr. Sydenham, who in the 7th. ch. of his Exercit. thus speaks,

The scope of the Apostle here is to hold forth some special Gospel priviledge annexed to the state: and he frames his argument by no ordinary medium, of the lawfulness of the marriage according to a natural, moral, or positive rule; but a majori, from an eminent advantage they had together in the Gospel. For 1. the unbelieving husband is sanctified in, or to, or by the wife. 2. The children in such a state are holy, as if they had been both believers.

Answ. The scope of the Apostle, 1 *Cor.*7.12,13,14. can be no other then the resolving of the doubt in the Corinthians, which Mr. Sydenham truly saith *he answered, v.*12,13. *and then gives, v.*14. an argument to prove it. Now therein is no special Gospel priviledge held forth; For 1. if any priviledge be there assigned it is to the unbeliever remaining an unbeliever, for he is said to be sanctified: But sure an unbeliever remaining an unbeliever hath no special Gospel priviledge; Ergo. 2. The unbeliever is put there, not to shew any meliority of condition to himself, but to take away the doubt which was concerning him, as defiling their society: So that the meaning is not, the unbeliever is a gainer by his wife, but the unbeliever brings no damage to her in respect of the thing in doubt concerning the lawfulness of continuing together in marriage use by his unbelief; there is no advantage mentioned to either of them, but a determination that there is not that disadvantage from the one as necessitated to leave the other. Nor is there any thing that carries the shew of an argument a majori: The Apostle doth not say, they have an eminent advantage together in the Gospel, therefore much more may live together. Yea, such an argument had been far from being strong, there being no argument usually weaker then such, if any disparity may be shewed they are quickly enervated. And in this thing the proposition would have been false upon which such an argument must turn as its hinge, to wit, They that have an eminent advantage together in the Gospel may much the rather live together. For 1. it would have been from that which is meerly extrinseeal and accidental to marriage society, Gospel priviledges neither establishing nor dissolving marriage society, which is lawfull as well among them who have no Gospel priviledge as those that have. 2. The proposition were false, for then if the unbelieving whore have Gospel advantage (as I conceive Mr. S. will not deny any more then other Pædobaptists do) by the believing fornicator, they may live together; so that if the fornicator being a believer beget a holy child on an unbelieving whore, or what ever other Gospel priviledge it is the unbeliever hath by the believer, imagine to cast out Devils in Christs name, though she be not joyned to the Church, to propheſie in Christs name, or to do wonders, by this Gospel priviledge they are allowed to live together in fornication: Which are monstrous absurdities following Mr. Ss. conceit.

But he tels us. That the Apostle holds out a Gospel priviledge, not common to meer unbelievers in their marriage state is clear; 1. because the Apostle puts the advantage on the believers side, and there fixeth it; The unbelieving husband is sanctified in the wife, as believing; and so contrarily, the unbelieving wife in the husband: So Beza affirms, that in two special Copies he finds the words thus read, ἐν τῇ γυναικὶ πίστει ἐν τῷ ἀνδρὶ πίστῳ: Neither can it hold sense with the former words, but as thus read: And if it had not been the Apostles proper meaning to shew the special priviledge the believing party hath notwithstanding the unbeliever, he would have onely said, the husband is sanctified to the wife, and the wife to the husband; that would have been the plainest and least ambiguous expression of such a sentence: And the Apostle would never have made an argument of four terms, when three could onely satisfie; for all know, that an argument with four terms is most deceitfull and false.

Answ. 1. The reason hath no strength in it, the Apostle puts the advantage on the believers side, Ergo the Apostle holds out a Gospel priviledge not common to meer unbelievers in their marriage state. For there may be expressed an advantage on the believers side, as suppose her liberty, her quiet of conscience, &c. and yet the thing from whence it is inferred no Gospel priviledge, but a thing common to unbelievers, as in case, a believer doubt of the lawfull eating of an infidels meat offered to an Idol, and it be resolved as the Apostle doth 1 Cor. 10.25,26,27. from the right God hath to all creatures, here is the advantage on the believers side, the quiet of his conscience, and yet no Gospel priviledge held forth but such as is common to unbelievers, the lawfull eating of what was sold in the shambles. 2. Mr. Ss. antecedent, that the Apostle puts the advantage on the believers side, and there fixeth it, is contrary to what he said before, that the argument is from an eminent advantage they had together in the Gospel; for if they had the eminent advantage together, it was no more put or fixed on the believers side then on the unbelievers. 3. It is so far from being true that the Apostle puts the advantage on the believers side, that it is true rather on the contrary, if any advantage be expresst it is put on the unbelievers side, for the unbeliever is said to be sanctified, not the believer. 4. It is not true that the unbelieving wife is sanctified in the husband as believing, and that which Mr. Sydenham alledgeth to prove it is of no force. For the reading in two Copies is not sufficient to countervail the multitude of Copies which have it otherwise, it being more likely that the addition of τῇ and πιστῷ was made by some Scribe then by the Apostle at first, who *v.*13. used γυνὴ without it. And for the sense it holds as good sense without it as it did *v.*13. The unbeliever is mentioned not to shew a special priviledge to the believer, but because the occasion of the doubt was from his infidelity, and therefore that could not be omitted without omitting that in which was the force of the objection, which could not be distinctly satisfied without mentioning it; and by putting it in there are not four terms, as unskilfully Mr. S. intimates, but by omitting it there come to be four terms, the conclusion to be proved being this, The wife may live with her unbelieving husband, and the premises these, That wife may live with her husband who is sanctified to her, But so is the unbelieving husband to his wife, Ergo. But of this the Reader may see more at large the first part of this Review, sect. 14.

2. Saith Mr. S. The Apostle doth use higher terms and phrases in this argument, then is ever used in Scripture to express a meer lawfull or common priviledge; as to be sanctified in the wife, and the children to be holy; expressions of another dialect then to hold forth a civil or natural, or legal conjunction: being singled out in Scripture, to hold forth the best state of persons in relation to God and his use.

Answ. 1. Were all this true, as it is not, yet Mr. Ss. conclusion is not proved thereby. For though the terms should never express a meer lawfull or common priviledge, a civil or natural, or legal conjunction, and that they are singled out in Scripture to hold forth the best state of persons in relation to God and his use; yet it follows not the Apostle holds out by them a Gospel priviledge, sith they may hold out a Jewish priviledge, which is not a Gospel, but rather a legal priviledge, as the term [holy seed] doth Ezra 9.2. 2. How fitly these terms sute to the exposition I give without holding forth a Gospel priviledge, may be ſeen in my Examen part. 3. ſect. 8. in the firſt part of this Review, ſect. 12, 13, 24, 25, 26.

Mr. S. adds, 1. That the term unclean notes the ſame it doth Acts 10.14. where Cornelius being a Gentile without the pale of the Jewiſh Church, is called common and unclean, as all the Gentiles were before they came under the promiſe, he was no baſtard, he was without the Church juſt in the ſame phraſe with the Apoſtle here, when he ſaith that children are not unclean, he muſt needs mean they are not of common uſe or to be excluded from outward priviledges of the Church. 2. That [unclean] is uſed for legal pollutions and uncleanneſſes, which made men to be ſeparated from the Congregation, and excommunicated from the priviledge of ordinances untill they were waſhed and ſanctified: Thus in Levit. 5. 1, 3, 4. ch. 7. 19. & 14. 7, 8. Iſa. 52. 1. Hag. 2. 13. with many other places, where unclean is oppoſed to a preſent ſuitable capacity for Church priviledges.

Anſw. 1 In all thoſe places, Levit. 5. 2, 3, 4 & 7. 19. & 14. 7, 8. Hag. 2. 13. Iſa. 52. 1. the uncleanneſs is not oppoſed to a Goſpel privileege, but a legal or Jewiſh, nor were the unclean out of the Covenant or the people of God even when they were unclean, and therefore if 1 Cor. 7. 14. he ſhould tell them their children were not unclean in that ſenſe, he ſhould not tell them of a Goſpel priviledge, but a Judaical Legal Moſaical priviledge, which had been both falſe, for they were uncircumciſed Gentiles, and therefore were unclean in that ſenſe, and vain to tell them of that as a priviledge, which was no priviledge, but which hee counts nothing of 1 Cor. 7. 19. 2. Cornelius is not termed unclean as wanting a Goſpel priviledge, he was in Covenant with God and accepted with him, and in the viſible Church, ſith he with his whole houſe feared God, prayed continually, Acts 10. 2. But he is termed unclean as one not meet by reaſon of his uncircumciſion for a Jew to go into, or eat with Acts 11 3. and therefore if the Apoſtle ſhould 1 Cor. 7. 14. mean it juſt in the ſame ſenſe with Acts 10. 14. he ſhould tell them their children were not unclean, that is, were perſons with whom they might eat and converſe which underſtood of infants were ridiculous. If meant in the ſenſe God tearmed Cornelius clean, then it is as unfitly applied to infants, who are not clean as Cornelius, in that fearing God and working righteouſneſs he was accepted with him, Acts. 10 34, 35. which is more then an outward Church priviledge and another thing then Mr. S. and his fellow Pædobaptiſt conceive the Apoſtle meant 1 Cor. 7. 14.

That which Mr. S. brings of the uſe of the word holy that it expreſſeth the Hebrew word קדש and that it ever ſignifies that which is appropriated to a Divine uſe, and that it is the proper notion of holineſs in the Old and New Teſtament, and never taken otherwiſe: and that for proof of it he hath compared above 100 places in the Old Teſtament according to the Septuagint, and all the N. T. places where the word is generally taken in Scripture to expreſs a ſeparation of things to God. how falſe or inſufficient it is to his purpoſe, is ſo amply ſhewed in the firſt part of this Review ſect. 12, 13, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26 that I conceive it unneceſſary at this time to add any more In which places it may be ſeen what I grant concerning the word generally taken, and that I bring more places then 1 Tim.

4 5. 1 Thes. 4. 3, 4, 7. for another use then Mr. S. asserts, to bee the proper notion of holy in the Old and N. T. that it notes that which is appropriated to Divine use, and is never taken otherwise, to shew it to bee taken otherwise, as 1 Sam. 21. 5. Isai. 13. 3. Ezra 9. 2, &c. But let's view what hee saith to my allegation of 1 Tim. 4. 5. 1 Thes. 4. 3, 4, 7. for a different use from his sense.

From 1 Tim. 4. 5. saith Mr. T. is meant onely the lawful use of the creature in opposition to what is to be refused. It is a wonder, but that God leaves men to blindness when they leave truth, how any man of common understanding, finding the word holy and sanctified alwayes used in a religious sense, should flye to this place to make an exception

Answ. I have so far as I thought needful looked into my former writings, and do not finde any place where I say as Mr. S. here saith I do, what I yeelded at the Dispute at Bewdley, and for what reason is shewed in the first part of this Review sect. 27. p. 203. and if Mr. S. took from Mr. B. this which he here so unbrotherly chargeth me with, hee might have there found an answer, which should have been taken notice of, if my answer printed 1652. came to his knowledge afore the publishing his Exercit. 1653. But I never could finde in my Antagonists Mr. B. M. I. &c. any such candor as to construe any thing that came from me, since this controversie arose between us, in the better part, but I think I may say almost in every thing I have done or said that they mention, they pervert my words and deeds, and aggravate them in the worser sense, when they might have had a good or at least excusable construction. As for this thing which Mr. S. here makes an instance of Gods leaving me to blindness when I left truth, the true state of it is thus. I had said in my Examen part. 3. sect. 8. p. 73, 74. That this may be the sense, I gather from the like use of the word ἁγιάζεται used 1 Tim. 4. 5. where the creature of God is said to be sanctified, that is lawfully used in opposition to that which is to be refused; so here the unbelieving husband is sanctified, that is lawfully enjoyed as a husband by, or to, or in respect of his wife, whether believer, or unbeliever, in this case there is no difference, and alledged some words of Mr. M. in his Sermon p. 24. to the same purpose. Which when Mr. M. in his Defence p. 155. framed an argument from against me, I shewed him his mistake in the first part of this Review sect. 13. p. 115. denying the sanctification 1 Cor. 7. 14. to bee such a sanctification as that place 1 Tim. 4. 5. means, but onely make them like thus far, that as 1 Tim. 4. 5. it signifies lawfully enjoyed, so here, though in a different manner, and from a different reason or cause. And for the concession in the Dispute at Bewdley, my yeilding Mr. Bs. conclusion doth prove that Mr. S. doth here falsely charge mee to say that 1 Tim. 4. 5. is meant onely the lawful use of the creature. Nor is it true that I fled to this place to make an exception against the taking the word holy in a religious sense. For neither did I make use of 1 Tim. 4. 5. about the sense of the word holy, but the word sanctified, nor do I conceive the word sanctified used in any other then a religious sense, yea I have often said that [sanctified] 1 Cor. 7. 14. is taken for religiously sanctified, as 1 Cor. 6. 11. as baptised, 1 Cor. 10. 2. mother, mother, Mark 3. 35. dead, Heb. 11. 12. made himself Eunuch, Matth. 19. 12. son, Exod. 2. 9. and many more places, the words are taken in their proper notion, onely they are applied in a limited sense, or in some respect by an impropriety or abuse of speech to those to whom absolutely and in propriety or exactness of speech they do not belong, and therefore this which Mr. S. here suggests of me is but his calumny which he was willing to take up that through my sides he might wound the truth.

But Mr. S. adds. "The Apostle saith first, Every creature which God "hath made is good in it self, and none to be refused: that is, all may "be lawfully used without any legal pollution as formerly: But then "he goes higher, speaking of a religious use of outward things, they are "sanctified by the Word and Prayer; they are all good and lawfull in "their use to every man; but they are onely sanctified by these holy "means, the Word and Prayer. And he might have as well said, that the "Word and Prayer are not holy means, but onely lawfull to be used; as "that the sanctification which is by the word and prayer, is to make the "creatures onely lawfull to be used. If a wicked man eat his meat with-"out seeking a blessing on it, or giving thanks, will any one say that he "hath not a lawfull use of the creature? but any man may say, it's not "sanctified to him. The Apostle in these 2 ver. goes on gradatim by "degrees, from a lawfull use to a holy use of the creatures; All is good "and may be used, but they are sanctified by the word and prayer. Thus "you see the nature of this priviledged place.

Answ. What word it is which is meant 1 Tim. 4:5. whether the word of Gods power creating them, which the words v. 3. which God hath created for receiving seem to lead to, or the word of Gods declaration, whether by our Lord Christ, Mark 7. 15. or to Peter, Acts 10. 15. or promise of blessing, it is manifest that the Apostle in that place doth not make any distinction between a sanctified and a lawfull use, nor doth he say they are created for any to be received but with thanksgiving of them who believe and know the truth; nor doth he make the creature good or not to be refused but being received with thanksgiving, nor sanctified but by the word of God and prayer: Nor do I find but that interpreters take lawfull use and sanctified for the same. So Beza in his Annot. It is made holy, to wit, in respect of us, so as that we may use it with a good conscience, as duly received from the hand of God. For other men do enjoy it no otherwise then as thieves and sacriledgious persons goods usurped. And he lawfully useth goods, who acknowledgeth and invocateth the giver of them after his word. Piscat. anal. He minds which is the lawfull and allowed use of meats, to wit, when we receive them with thanksgiving and prayer proceeding from faith. Diodati, Ditson, and others speak to like purpose. Nor is there any thing here that intimates any gradation from a lawfull use v. 3, 4. to a sanctified use v. 5. For v. 3, 4. to the receiving of them thanksgiving is required of them that believe and know the truth, and the creature is not said to be good and nothing to be refused but being taken with thanksgiving, which is the same with sanctified by the word and prayer, v. 5. and v. 5. is a reason of that which is said v. 4. and therefore no gradation or rising higher, as Mr. S. imagines.

4 5. 1 Thes. 4. 3, 4, 7. for another use then Mr. S. asserts, to bee *the proper notion of holy in the Old and N. Which I do not produce to shew that I conceive no distinction between a lawful use and a holy use of things (which I do acknowledge in the first part of this Review p. 114. and elsewhere) but onely to shew how insufficiently Mr. S. opposeth me, whom he so severely censures, even in that which I spake rightly enough, and his own blindness made him to judge hardly of me, as left by God to blindness.

Mr. S. saith further, "But the main place Mr. T. alledgeth for holiness to be used for what is barely civil or lawful, is that 1 Thes. 4. 3, 4, 7. Here uncleanness is taken, saith he, for fornication, and holiness for chastity. To which I answer with Mr. M. that chastity among the heathen is never called sanctification, but among believers it is, being a part of the new creation, and one branch and part of their sanctification wrought by the spirit of God. And though Mr. T. saith this is but a shift, yet he shall see it demonstrative, if he observe the phrases in the text, and the nature of sanctification: in the 1 and 2. v. the Apostle beseecheth and exhorteth them to walk as they had received from him how to walk and to please God according to the rules of Jesus Christ; and he urgeth it in v. 3 with this; It's the will of God, even your sanctification, that is, that you should walk in all holiness, suitable to the blessed rules of the Gospel, and as one part and expression of holiness, to abstain from sin: And he instanceth specially in fornication, which was the common and reigning sin among the Gentiles: so that if you view the place you shall find, that 1. He speaks of sanctification in general, in it's full latitude v. 3. as suitable to all the will and mind of God; This is the will of God, even your sanctification; that is, it is Gods command, and Gods delight to see you sanctified; then he brings in abstinence from fornication (the sin of the times) as one part of that holiness God requires: For sanctification may be considered as it lies in vivification, or in mortification, which for distinctions sake we we may call the two parts of sanctification. Now chastity in it self, as in the heathens and natural men, is not properly a part of sanctification; some other Epithite becomes it better: would Mr. T. call all the abstinencies and actings of the heathens by the name of sanctifications, and speak like a Christian and a Divine? Would it be proper to say in his Pulpit (when he was speaking of the nature of holiness and chastity) sanctified Socrates, holy Aristides? And can he think the Apostle would express that which is common among heathens, in such a high Gospel dialect as sanctification is appropriated always in Scripture to God, Angels, Saints, and their highest graces and workings, and to things raised above common use, dedicated to God and his service, but that he meant it according as the whole tenure of Scripture defines holiness? How much will the phrase of holiness and sanctification be debased and made common, if that sense should be admitted, contrary to the Scripture use of the word? But that is a weak cause that puts men to such extraordinary shifts to maintain.

Answ. It's the property of some persons, like Thersites in Homer, to speak much and to performe little, and so it befals Mr. S. here. He saith, 1. I alledge 1 Thes. 4. 3, 4, 7. as the main place for holiness to be used for what is barely civil or lawfull, whereas I alledge it not as Mr. S. ſaith, but to ſhew that it is not true which Mr. M. ſaid, that holineſs is always taken in a ſacred ſenſe, for a ſeparation of perſons and things from common to ſacred uſes. 2. Though I ſay, Mr. Ms. anſwer to be but a ſhift, yet I ſhall ſee it demonſtrative, if I obſerve the phraſes in the Text, and the nature of ſanctification. But if all ſhould be yeelded, that 1 Theſ. 4. 3,4 7. holineſs were but a part of the new creation, that chaſtity in heathens is never called ſanctification; yet this were but a ſhift to avoid the proof againſt Mr. Ms. aſſertion, that holineſs is always taken in a ſacred ſenſe for a ſeparation of perſons and things from common to ſacred uſes; for the chaſtity of regenerate perſons, confeſſed to be termed holineſs and a part of ſanctification, is not taken in a ſacred ſenſe for ſeparation from common to ſacred uſes: But of this more may be ſeen in the firſt part of this Review, ſect. 12. pag. 108. And as for Mr. Ss. reaſoning, it is far from demonſtrative, it being indeed againſt himſelf. For if *v.*1,2. be an exhortation to pleaſe God in general, and v 3. expreſs one part and expreſſion of holineſs to abſtain from ſin, and no other ſin be named but fornication, he doth particularly term abſtaining from fornication holineſs; which is more fully confirmed *v.*4. where chaſtity is termed poſſeſſing our veſſel in holineſs and honour, oppoſite to poſſeſſing our veſſel (that is our body) in the luſt of concupiſcence as the Gentiles, among whom fornication was frequent, and thus is *v.*7. termed uncleanneſs, and the oppoſite to it holineſs, that is chaſtity. And for the other thing, that chaſtity in it ſelf as in the heathens and natural men is not properly a part of ſanctification, and that ſanctity is aſcribed to the higheſt things, it is but frivolous. For though it be no part of true ſanctification, yet it may be termed holineſs, as there be many called Gods who are not the true and everliving God, to whom though the term [God] do properly belong onely, yet Magiſtrates and Angels are ſometimes termed Gods without any debaſement, and though I would not in my pulpit without diſtinction term Magiſtrates, Angels Gods, or call an unlawfull aſſembly of Idolaters a Church, yet who knows not the term Elohim, and Eccleſia or Church to be applied to them? So that however Mr. S. prattle of his demonſtration and of the weakneſs of my cauſe and extraordinary ſhifts, yet this is but frivolous talk without any performance.

He adds. "But to go on a little further; The ſame word is uſed by "the Apoſtle in all his ſalutations and inſcriptions of his Epiſtles to all "the Churches; τοῖς ἁγίοις to the Saints or holy ones at Rome, at Co"rinth, Galatia, Epheſus, &c. which when appropriated to perſons, al"ways ſignifies a viſible Saint: So here when he calls children of be"lieving parents holy, he cannot but mean, they are to be accounted "as viſible Saints, until they do profeſs the contrary: and I know no "reaſon can be given, why the meaning of the Apoſtle in his Epiſtles, "when he writes τοῖς ἁγίοις, to the Saints, ſhould not be as well un"derſtood written onely to the legitimate, and thoſe that are not baſtards "at Rome, Corinth, &c. as well as for them to interpret the ſame word "ſo in this place: For ἅγιοι when applied to grown men, muſt ſigni-

" fie visible and Evangelical holiness, and must be translated Saints:
" but when applied to children, it must onely signifie legitimacy, that " they are not bastards; when all men know, that magis & minus non " variant speciem; and the word is of the same import in every place of " the New Testament.

Answ. It is not true, that the same term is used by the Apostle in all his salutations and inscriptions of his Epistles to all the Churches, it is not used in the Epistles to the Galatians and Thessalonians; and in the titles where it is appropriated to persons, signifies a Saint called, sanctified in Christ Jesus, faithfull, which rather note an invisible then a visible Saint: and if they do note a visible Saint, they note one by calling, sanctified in Christ, believer in profession, none of which are to be ascribed to infants of believers as such, nor can be meant 1 *Cor.*7.14. where children are termed holy by birth, not by calling; and are not said to be holy in Christ, but in respect of their parents. Whence apparent reason is given, why the term [holy] in the titles of the Epistles cannot be translated legitimate in opposition to bastardy, but Saints, or men who are set apart for God by the love of God, and therefore termed beloved of God, *Rom.*1.7. and the sanctification of the spirit by the Gospel: and on the other side, why [holy] 1 *Cor.*7.14. cannot be translated Saints, or visible Saints, not for that frivolous conceit of Mr. S. as if they might not be termed Saints 1 *Cor.*7.14. for want of age; whose gross application of a Logick rule, shews he was but a smatterer therein: For if visible saintship had been given to elder persons in respect of grown age, and denied to infants, yet there had been no variation of kind from more or less growth, saintship being not the species or kind of such persons, but humanity. And what he saith, that the word is of the same import in every place of the New Testament, it is so false a speech, and so ill becomming him that said, *p.*53. he had compared all the places in the New Testament where the word is used, that no other excuse but of heedlesness or forgetfulness can acquit him from deceit. For besides the places alledged, Luke 2.23. 2 *Pet.*1.18 &c. and his own distinctions of federal and inherent holiness, together with the holiness intentional meant *Rom.*11.16. shew it to be false.

What he adds, By the same reason we account grown men holy, we may account infants of believers; for these that make a profession, may have no inward and inherent holiness; and a bare profession is not holiness; we onely account them holy by a judicious charity; and we are often deceived, and have cause to repent of our judgements: Infants may be inwardly sanctified, and God hath taken them into Covenant with their parents, and would have us look on them as separated to himself; which is ground enough to build our charity on, as to esteem them holy, as grown persons. There is no difference but this in it; That concerning the holiness of persons at age, we trust our own judgements; and in judging of infants, we trust Gods word, who hath comprehended them under the promise with their parents; there hath been as many deceits in the event in our judgement of those of riper years, as in that which is acted through a mixture of faith on infants. And Gods promise, though never so indefinite, is a surer ground for hope then my probable judgement; which is the most I can have of the generality of professors of ripe years, is much of it false, as that God hath taken infants into Covenant with their parents, thay are comprehended under the promise with their parents, God would have us to look on them as separated to himself, by the same reason we account grown men holy we may account infants of believers, we onely account them holy by a judicious charity, and all impertinent, forasmuch as professors of faith are accounted visible Saints not by a judgement of charity, but of certainty from their profession which is visible, and so are qualified for Baptism, not from hopes of real holiness, or faith of Covenant holiness, which do not entitle to Baptism without certainty of profession.

What he adds. That holy is a pure religious word, that in my sense it would be no considerable medium for argumentation. that else were, &c. hath force from the specialneß of the priviledge to their issue to be in a peculiar state of seperation to God, visible Churchmembers with the believing parent, contains nothing but unproved dictates often before refuted. What he adds of cold comfort in my sense, and of strength and sweetneß in his, is alike frovolous. For the speech of the Apostle was to be no otherwise consolatory, then so far as it might satisfie their consciences of the lawfulness of their continuing together, which is clearly done by my Analysis and exposition of the Apostle, and not done at all by his way. For what is a priviledge of the children which perhaps they shall never have; or if they have, it is nothing to take away the defilement by the infidel for satisfaction of their consciences concerning living together in disparity of Religion? I have done with this scribler: I shall a little examine what some others have said, with as much brevity as the maintenance of the truth will permit, and hasten to an end.

SECT. LXXVII.

Mr. William Carters attempt of proving the Christian Sabbath from Heb. 4.7,9,10. is shewed to be succeßleß, and so uſeleß for proof of Infant Baptiſm.

THere is a Treatise intituled, The Covenant of God with Abraham opened by Mr. william Carter, which pretends to clear the duty of Infant Baptiſm, and in his Epistle to the Reader saith, the root of this matter is the Covenant of God with Abraham; which because of the eminency of the Author, and the publishing it in observance (as is said) of the commands of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Sheriffs of the City of London, rather then for any shew of strength in the discourse, I shall examine, that if this Review come to their hands, they also may discern their mistakes. Which I think necessary to be done, because he also (as other Pædobaptists use to do) is not afraid upon his own conjectures (for they are no better) to charge us who baptize not infants as breaking Abrahams Covenant, as small friends to Christs Kingdome, waving and neglecting the right way of increasing that Kingdome, and of exalting his Throne and power in the world, taking up ways unnatural, unsafe and false. Let's then see what he writes.

Afore he meddles with the point of infant Baptism (which he saith is the thing he especially intended in his discourse) he endeavours to deduce the Christian Sabbath, as it is termed, from Heb. 4. I omit that he saith, p. 3. that Heb. 12.15,16. the birthright vendible is their priviledges in the Church, and worship of the Gospel, and that p. 6. he expounds the holding fast the confidence or liberty and the rejoycing of the hope, Heb. 3.6. by holding fast the ordinances and priviledges of the Gospel: Which if he mean (as he seems to do) of the outward priviledges and worship, it appears that he mistakes, sith the birthright not to be sold, and the confidence and rejoycing of hope are greater matters, which no hypocrite may attain to, and are plainly intimated Heb. 12.14,15. to be the seeing of God, the attaining his grace, and the estate Evangelical mentioned v. 22,23,24. which they might sell, though they never had it, by their Apostacy from their profession of Christ, through whom they were in expectation of it, at least in appearance. And in like manner the boldness, liberty, confidence, or rejoycing of their hope, must needs be of something yet attainable, and not to be attained without holding it to the end, v. 6, 14. and which no unbelievers could attain to; which are not true of bare outward Church priviledges and Gospel worship, but of that salvation mentioned Heb. 1.3. the grace brought in the revelation of Jesus Christ 1 Pet. 1.13. whereby we are Gods house, Heb. 3.6. are partakers of Christ, v. 14. But I shall insist somewhat on that he saith p. 8. that by to day if ye will hear his voice, in that Psal. 95.7. is meant the Christian Sabbath day, by which he means the day which in the New Testament is termed the Lords day or first day in the week; which I conceive not right for these reasons. 1. The day, Heb. 4.7. is a limited or definite day, and that must needs imply this meaning; [This is the day in which if ye hear his voyce and harden not your hearts, ye may enter into Gods rest; if ye do not this day, ye will come short.] Which if true, then (as Mr. C. expounds it) though they should hear the voice of Christ, and not harden their hearts on the week day, yet they should not enter into the rest promised, which I think will be counted absurd, and evacuate the hopes by all the week day Lectures. 2. From Heb. 3.13. I thus argue. To day, Heb. 3.7. is the same with the space of time which is called to day, v. 13. This is so evident in the Text, that every one that reads the Text will easily perceive it, sith it is plain, that the calling it to day is meant of the calling it in that place v. 7. and the words, lest any of you be hardened, shew it. But [to day, Heb. 3.13.] is meant of any day, or every day wherein Christians might exhort one another, therefore not restrained to the Lords day: but either extended to the whole space of time they live on earth, or to any opportunity in any day whatsoever, whether week day or Lords day, wherein they might exhort. 3. By comparing these places with 2 Cor. 6.2. where it is said, [Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation,] which seem plainly to intimate the same day with that which is meant Heb. 3.7,13.

and that day being manifestly meant of the time wherein the Embassadours for Christ do beseech men to bee reconciled to GOD, 2 Cor. 5. 20. it is very probable or rather certain, that to day, Heb. 3. 7, 13. & 4. 7. is not meant particularly the Lords day or first day of the week, but any day of a mans life wherein the Gospel of Christ is preached, and reconciliation to God offered him; and received by him. Or as Cameron. quæst. in Epist. ad Heb. 3. 7. That time which by the Prophets and Apostle is called the last dayes and fulnesse of time, which is the time of the Messiah exhibited, not precisely the Lords day or first day of the week. Let us view Mr. Carters reasons for his conceit.

First, it is evident that it is meant of a day of rest chap. 4, 7, 8. for if Joshuah had given them rest, namely that rest of which David speaketh, then hee would not afterwards have spoken of another day, therefore of a day of rest it must bee meant, else the Apostles argument had not been concluding nor pertinent, because many other days might have afterwards been spoken off, although Joshuah had given them all the rest that was ever to bee expected.

Answ. It is true that the Authour of that Epistle doth rightly gather from the word [to day] that there was another day of rest yet remaining for the people of God besides the seventh day rest, and the rest in the Land of Canaan which they possessed by Joshuah's conduct, yet doth not imply that the day in which the word was spoken was the day of rest. But thus hee gathers it, These words were spoken by David many hundreds of years both after God sware in the Wilderne's they should not enter into his rest who believed not, and after Joshuah had setled the posterity of the unbelievers in the land of Canaan, and therefore the rest in the land of Canaan is not that which is meant in Davids speech, but there is implied a future day of rest to bee attained by believing in JESUS the Messiah. For David if it had been meant of the rest in Canaan would not have spoken to them not to harden their hearts for fear of being excluded from Gods rest.

" Secondly, saith Mr C. It is meant of such a rest as GOD " can and sometimes doth swear in his wrath against his own people, " who are his house, and the people of his pasture, that they shall " not enter into it: this cannot bee said of what they enjoy in their per- " sonal interest by faith onely; but as for the comfort of his ordinances " and Sabbath.

Answ. To omit the unfitnes of the expression, sith the comfort of Gods Ordinances and Sabbath is a personal interest enjoyed by faith onely, it is not true, that what is said of the rest cannot bee meant of what the people of God enjoy in their personal interest by faith onely, because of Gods oath. For that oath doth not imply that believers shall not enter into the rest, yea the Apostles inference is to the contrary v. 1, 6. sith some were not to enter in, others were to enter in, and sith GOD sware some should not, hee promised some should, and chap. 3. 18. sith some entred not through unbelief, others in whom the word is mixed with faith, ch. 4. 2. do enter in. And this is a good argument that the rest mentioned is not the Christian Sabbath day which is the first day of the week; sith they that believe not come short of it; it's a consequent upon the holding the boldneß, confidence and rejoycing of our hope firm to the end, it was then in promise to the Hebrews, and remained to the people of God, who were to bee warned that they came not short of it; where as the Sabbath dayes rest was then in possession, not to bee expected afterwards, but then in use when this Epistle was written, and yet such as hypocrites, unbelievers, and Apostats did in some sort enjoy as well as sincere persevering believers.

"Thirdly, saith Mr. C. That it is meant of a Sabbath dayes rest, "appeareth by the manner of the Apostles arguing in this place, in as "much as the Apostle proveth it to be another day of rest, besides what "was in use in the Church before. Another in opposition to the 7th. "day Sabbath, and that because David speaketh of it as a rest to bee "entered into a long time after; although the 7th. days rest was en"tered into from the beginning of the world, in as much as hee spake "as it is Heb. 4. 4, 5. implying a promise that some shall, though o"thers shall not enter into it. Now, sayes the Apostle, this being spo"ken by the Propher David of a time then to come: and again, as "Heb. 4. 7, 9. over and beside the seventh dayes Sabbath. Now from "this his manner of arguing it is evident, that he supposeth this day of "which David speaketh, saying, To day if ye will hear his voice, to "be a day of the same kinde as the seventh dayes Sabbath was; because "else there had been no such opposition to bee made, nor would there "have been place for an although, or a notwithstanding, in the case, as "in v. 31. because any other rest might have also been entred into from "the beginning of the world, as a believers personal rest by faith was; "but that which maketh the opposition is, that David speaketh of a Sab"baths dayes rest, to be entred into now a long time after, even in the "times of the New Testament, of which times that Psal. 95. is a pro"phesie, as appeareth by the Apostles application of it in this place, "and thereupon hee concludes it to bee another day of rest remain"ing for us besides the seventh dayes rest. By this wee see that "by to day if yee will hear his voice is not meant onely of a Chri"stians personal rest by faith, which is every days enjoyment, and was "entred into from the beginning of the world, but of another Sabbath "dayes rest besides what was in use before.

Answ. It is not denied that Psal 95. is a prophesie, nor that it speaks of a rest to be a long time after Davids time, even in the times of the New Testament, nor that [although] doth imply a distinct rest from the seventh day Sabbath rest, and an opposition of that kinde which some Logicians call disparata, though others will not have it called opposition but distinction; yet the words Heb. 4. 3. are not as Mr. C. cites them, [although the seventh days rest was entred into from the beginning of the world] but [although the works were made or finished from the foundation of the world.] Nevertheless, this doth not prove that that either the rest is not a believers personal rest by faith, or that it is of the same kinde with a meer weekly Sabbath dayes rest, but rather the contrary. It is distinguished from the seventh day Sabbaths rest, and so it is also from the rest which the Israelites had by Joshuah's conduct in the land of Canaan, which the Author mentions v. 8. as well as the seventh dayes rest v. 4. and therefore the seventh dayes rest opposed to the rest v. 7, 9. doth no more prove the day of rest to be a day of the same kinde, as the seventh day Sabbath was then the day of rest in Canaan by Joshuahs leading. Yea, sith the seventh days rest mentioned Heb. 4. 4. is onely Gods rest, it is apparent the day of rest is of different kinde from an ordinary Sabbath dayes rest. Neither doth the term [although] import any such identity of kinde, but that God spake of another rest of his, although hee had rested long ago when his works were finished from the foundation of the world. Yea the words Heb. 4. 10. Hee that is entred into his rest hath also ceased from his works as God did from his, (which expresseth the rest for the people of God yet remaining v. 9.) do shew that the day of rest is not till a mans works bee ceased, which I know not how to understand of any other works then his works of labour and sufferings, which are not till the end of this life; and therefore the sabbatism or day of rest is not here the keeping of a weekly sabbath, but a day of rest, as is meant Revel. 14. 13. which though it bee not every dayes enjoyment, yet it may bee a Christians personal rest by faith onely, that is that rest which by faith onely is entred into or obtained. And though it were entred into by all believers from the foundation of the world, yet it was not so conspicuously as when Christ entred into the heavens; However those Hebrews and the believers to come after had not then entred into it. That the Sabbath days rest was in use before, proves against Mr. C. that the rest was not of the same kinde, unless in manner of a type or shadow, as one thing like that's resembled by another may in a Catachrestique manner be termed of the same kinde with that which resembles.

Mr. C. adds. "Fourthly it is meant of a day of rest to bee cele"brated in Gods house in his worship. So the Apostle concludeth v.
"9. There remaineth therefore a Sabbatism σαββατισμὸς the celebra"tion of a Sabbath for the people of God: a word comprehending
"the Sabbath and worship put together as was before observed. And "the coherence of the words Psal. 95. implieth as much Heb. 95. 6, "7, 8. It appeareth also from the Apostles wherefore, Heb. 3. 7. His "house are we; wherefore, as the Holy Ghost saith, To day if ye
"will hear his voyce, &c. So as if the question bee what it is? Or "what day? The answer from the Psalm and from the Apostles infe"rence must bee this, the day of worshipping the Lord our God then, and
"of resting with him in his house, and his voice, which in his word we are,
"inviting us to it.

Answ. Sabbatism in the notation of the word imports no more then rest: what it imports in the use of it I cannot discern but from this place, sith I know not where it is used in the New Testament but here, nor in any other authour afore this. Here it appears not to import any more then rest, sith it expresseth but what is expressed by κατάπαυσις, v. 8, 10, 11. though I conceive that the matter shews it to bee meant of a holy rest, it being the rest of Gods people. But that the word comprehends rest and worship put together, I do not conceive. For the word alludes to the Sabbath Gen. 2. 2, 3. quoted Heb. 4. 3, 4. Now Gods rest imported not worship, though his appointing us to rest on the Sabbath, and to sanctifie it, doth import our worship of him. Nor do I think the coherence of the words Psal. 95. 6, 7, 8. doth imply that Sabbatism Heb. 4. 9. comprehends the Sabbath and worship put together, or that Psal. 95. 7. To day if yee will hear his voyce, is meant of a day of rest to bee celebrated in the house of God in his worship, sith in those words there is not the word Sabbatism, and the Exhortation, To day if yee will hear his voyce, doth not appear to have been on the weekly Sabbath day, the Psalm being not (as the 94th. Psalm) intituled A Psalm for the Sabbath, and it is more likely that [to day if you will hear his voyce] intimates the day at the end of every seven years in the solemnity of the year of release in the feast of tabernacles, when all Israel was come to appear before the Lord in the place which he should chuse, and the Law was to bee read before all Israel in their hearing, Deut. 31. 10, 11. at which time of the year every year they had gathered in their Corn and Wine, Deut. 16. 13. and then they had no harvest, and so it was the fittest time to resemble the rest remaining to Gods people; yet so far was it from being the weekly Sabbath day, that as Ainsworth notes on Deut. 31. 11. The Jewish Doctors say that if the day of the assembling of the people happened to bee the Sabbath day, the reading of the Law was put off till after. Yet were it the Sabbath day, it doth not follow, that it is meant of a day of rest to be celebrated in the house of God in his worship, for the weekly Sabbath was not celebrated in the house of God, that is, the Tabernacle or Temple, but in their dwellings, Exod. 16. 29. And therefore if the term [Διὸ wherefore, Heb. 3. 7.] did refer to whose house ye are, v. 6. (though I conceive the inference is made from the words, if wee hold fast the confidence and rejoycing of the hope firm unto the end) yet it proves it not to bee a weekly Sabbath of rest to bee celebraged in the house of God in his worship. For the weekly sabbath was not celebrated in Gods house, and if it were, each Christian or the Church were not fit to answer Gods house in which it was celebrated; sith they are not the place where, that made the worship of God accepted as the Tabernacle or Temple that is proper to CHRIST and his body, John 2. 19. Heb. 8. 2. but the persons by whom it is celebrated and who worship God. Lastly, were all this granted, that Heb. 4. 7. were meant a day of rest to bee celebrated in the house of God in his worship, yet this might be meant of the rest in heaven often called Gods house, where the Elders cast down their crowns before God and worship and praise him, and not the weekly Sabbath.

Fifthly,

" Fifthly, saith Mr. C. Because the Apostle understands it of a day " to be kept upon the same ground, in relation unto Christ his ceasing " from his works and entring into his rest, as the 7th. day Sabbath was in " relation to God his ceasing from his works, after his making the first " creation, and entring into his. So it followeth v. 10. Which to be " meant of Christ, and his entrance into his rest (which he makes to be " his passing into heaven, v. 14.) inferred from his entring into his rest " v. 10. he endeavours to prove by 5 reasons.

Answ. 1. The coherence between Heb. 4. 9. and v. 10. doth rather intimate that [he that is entred into his rest, v. 10.] is a term common to all the people of God mentioned v. 9. and the exhortation v. 11. doth also import, that the person that enters into his rest v. 10 is meant every believer. Nor is any one of Mr. Cs. reasons convincing of the contrary. For 1. let the translation be mended as Mr. C. would have it, yet it may be true of every believer, that he also hath ceased from his works, as God did from his own works. 2. Seeing then, v. 14. may point out to what is said, Heb 3. 12, 13. 3. If Heb. 4. 10. cannot be meant of ceasing from sin, yet it may be from laborious works and sufferings as Revel. 14. 13. and such rest may be participate with refreshing, and looking upon them as good. 4. That v. 10. should be taken for a proof of v. 9. is not necessary, γὰρ being not always causal or rational, yet if it were, it might be thus, The rest of the people of God in heaven shall be a Sabbatism like Gods; for such of them as shall enter into their rest, shall cease, or have ceased from their sufferings and painfull works, as God did from his in the beginning. 5. What he saith, that Christ were not Lord of the Sabbath, as he saith Mark 2. 28. Luke 6. 5. unless he had entred into his rest, or as p. 75. he could not be Lord of the Sabbath, unless he also had a rest which he entred into as God did into his, is without proof, and is false; sith Christ speaks of his being Lord of the Sabbath at that time afore he entred into his rest; and doth imply that which some would call blasphemy, that Christ as God had not been Lord of the Sabbath unless he had entred into his rest as man. But were it granted, that Christ by reason of his entring into his rest as man, was Lord of the Sabbath, doth that prove that Heb. 4. 10. is meant of Christs entring into his rest? or is it not rather a baculo ad angulum? But were it granted that Heb. 4. 10. were meant of Christs entring into heaven, yet the rest before mentioned is rather thereby confirmed to be meant of rest in heaven with Christ, then rest on earth on a weekly sabbath, sith the argument is strong thus, Christ is passed into his rest in the heavens, therefore there is a rest remaining for the people of God there; but hath no strength thus, Christ is entred into the heavens to rest, therefore there remains to the people of God a weekly day of rest on earth. Lastly, this very reason quite overthrows Mr. Cs. building. For he would ground the week day Sabbath upon Christs entring into his rest, and this day he would have to be the first day of the week, and the reason for inferring a week day Sabbath upon Christs entring into his rest is taken from the rest of God after the first creation, whereby the 7th. day Sabbath was sanctified: Now if there be the like reason of keeping a week day

Sabbath

Sabbath becauſe of Chriſts reſt, as there was of keeping the 7th. day Sabbbath becauſe of Gods reſt, then it will not be the firſt day of the week which muſt be the Sabbath, for that was not the day of his entring into his reſt, but another day, to wit, the fifth day of the week, as may be gathered from Acts 1.3. Mr. C. himſelf, p. 76. though he ſay that it is very probable that the aſcenſion day was on the firſt day of the week, yet confeſſeth it not to be clear; and the reaſon of the probability from Act. 1. by the computation of the forty days from his reſurrection, and the mention of a Sabbath days journey, from Mount Olivet to Jeruſalem, occaſioned (as is likely) from their making that journey then upon that day, v. 12. is ſo ſlender, that I know not that ever any learned man did conceive ſo with him; and the computation of forty days from his reſurrection, being on the firſt day of the week (though the day of the reſurrection contrary to the common computation ſhould be excluded) will not fix the Aſcention day on the firſt day of the week, but two days at leaſt ſhort of it. And for the mention of a Sabbath days journey, Act. 1.12. it is clear from the words that it was onely to ſhew the diſtance of the place from Jeruſalem, not to ſhew that day to have been the Sabbath day. I liſt not to trouble my ſelf about the reaſon of uſing that expreſſion rather then another, it being not material. Yet were it granted it had been on the Sabbath day, it had not been the firſt day of the week, for that is not termed in Scripture, certainly not in the Acts of the Apoſtles, the Sabbath day. What Mr. C. adds, But albeit his reſt was not compleated till he paſſed into the heavens, yet he firſt entred into it at his reſurrection, which being upon the firſt day of the week, there needeth no more to fix the command of the Sabbath on that day, doth overthrow his arguing from Heb. 4.7,9,10,14. whence he would deduce the Chriſtian Sabbath becauſe of Chriſts entring into his reſt at his paſſing into the heavens. Which hurts not others, as Mr. Cawdrey, Sabb. Rediv. part 4. ſect. 23. who confeſſeth the words Heb. 4.10. not to be ſpoken of Chriſt, though he allude to them. I have inſiſted on this point by the way, becauſe Mr. C. makes uſe of it for infant Baptiſm, but to how little purpoſe the ſequel will ſhew.

Mr. C. for proof of infant Baptiſm, p. 20. layes down this poſition, that what the Lord confirmed by oath to Abraham, he confirmed it to us, even to all believers after Chriſt to the worlds end; which I grant if underſtood of ſpiritual Evangelical promiſes which accompany ſalvation, but not if meant of thoſe peculiar bleſſings and privileges which were promiſed to Abrahams natural ſeed. Yet in his proof of that poſition I conceive ſundry things not right which are vented by him, as p. 18. that the voice of Chriſt meant Heb. 3.7. is an inviting us to celebrate his day of reſt in his houſe in the worſhip of the Goſpel, which he means of a weekly Sabbath, and a particular Congregation, and outward worſhip, as ſundry paſſages following ſhew; and this he makes a part of the Goſpel, p. 21. and the believer that neglects it comes ſhort of the promiſe of entring into Gods reſt, and is a departing from the living God, Heb. 3.12. in tanto, though not in toto. In which ſpeeches as there is much miſtake, and wrong interpretation of the Text, which ſpeaks not of ſuch a week day rest, or the house of God in the second capacity as he terms it, or of entrance into his rest as his house in that capacity, so that speech is very dangerous, Now this entrance into his rest as his house in this second capacity, is that which the Apostle chiefly speaketh to here, when he saith, Take heed brethren of an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. And that in case the people of his pasture, and sheep of his hand, even his own children, will not hear his voyce, but forsake his worship, refusing his offer in this Gospel rest as they did in Canaan rest, he will also swear against them as he did against these, that they shall not enter into his rest. Which if true, then they that are not convinced of the weekly Christian Sabbath, as many godly and learned Divines in forreign parts, and in these Nations are not, those who do not on that day joyn in the publike and solemn worship, as prayer, preaching, breaking bread, and that too in a particular gathered Congregation, as Sectaries, and many other persons, whereof we cannot but judge many of them to be godly, these are chiefly meant by the Apostle as those that have an evil heart of unbelief, depart from the living God, God will swear they shall not enter into his rest. Nor will the limitation in tanto help to free his speech from those horrid consequences, which it is liable to, if it be true which he saith, that the Apostle chiefly speaketh to that entrance in his rest as his house in the second capacity, Heb. 3.12. and to expound Gods swearing that they should not enter into his rest in that sense, if they did not hear his voyce inviting to keep the Sabbath, makes the speech inept thus, If ye will not keep the Sabbath, I swear ye shall not keep the Sabbath. Nor do I conceive what he saith, p. 34. is right, that Christ gave his Saints the Keys of the Kingdome of Heaven, Matth. 16.18. and from that gift to Peter the Saints do claim their Church power, each according to their place and station in the Church; for they have it as Peters, that is, as stones in that building, or if you will, as confessours, which makes them to be stones in the house of God: For neither by the Keys is meant all Church power, nor are the Keys given to the Saints, much less to them as stones or confessours, though such things are supposed oft times, but not proved. But I hasten to the view of what follows, being the chief thing Mr. C. infers his infant Baptism from.

SECT. LXXVIII.

Mr. Carters exposition of Gen. 22.16,17,18. as if God promised to make every believer a blessing, so as to cast ordinarily elect children on elect parents, is refuted.

THat which is Mr. Cs. basis for his fabrick of Infant Baptism, is from the Covenant of God with Abraham, Gen. 22.16,17,18. which he saith contains four things. "1. That God would bless Abraham, and "with him all believers, with all spiritual blessings in Christ, Rom. 9.7. [illegible] Gen. 3.15.] Which I yeeld.

"Secondly

"Secondly (saith he) more particularly in Gods promise to Abraham "is contained something peculiar unto him, and which believers are to "claim particularly from his promise made to Abraham; as namely, in "the second place, that God would not onely bless Abraham, and in him "all believers, but also would make them blessings, and that chiefly and "in the first place to their families; and not onely so, but also to Na- "tions, *Gen.*12.1,2,3. So *Gen.*18.18. This promise Peter alledgeth "and explaineth to the Jews, *Act.*3.25. The word is all the families of "the earth. The same word we have, *Ephes.*3.15. The Covenant made "with Abraham therefore, as by this place we see, that we have it in "that of *Gen.*12.1. where it was first made and given, so also that it re- "specteth families and posterity; else he had said all the b lievers, or "all the people of the earth, not all the families of the earth shall be "blessed. And he could not have said to the Jews, ye are the children "of the Covenant, had it not respected the children of the people of "God. Nor is it to be restrained onely to the Jews; for the promise is "concerning all the fami ies of the earth, therefore it tolloweth in the "next words, *v.*26. unto you first. And this blessing as it is first laid "down, *Gen.*12. and here repeated by the Apostle, we see is a blessing "both upon the people of God themselves, and upon their families. "Nor is this promise to be restrained onely unto this, that of Abraham "and his seed should Christ come, (although that also be included, be- "cause what we receive from Abraham we have it all in Christ,) for so "all those of the line of Christ were blessings to the world as well as "he. And because here is something intended applicable to all belie- "vers, namely, that they also shall be blessings in their generations; "and because a blessing upon families is intended also, for so the words "run, thou shalt be a blessing, and in thee shall all the families of the "earth be blessed; therefore I say it must not be so restrained. But "the meaning is, that in his Covenant with Abraham he hath thus far "limited himself, and discovered his mind and purpose, that his choice "shall not be proportion bly all over the world alike, but that it shall "be by families and nations; so as he will ordinarily cast elect chil- "dren upon elect parents; and the lot of the Saints in neighbourhoods "and places together, and not by equal numbers in each part of the "world alike. Had not his election been so limited to families and na- "tions, neither Abraham nor believers could have been said to be bles- "sings in spiritual things, either to their families or to any other where "they live, as now they are, because God so blesseth onely his elect, E- "*phes.*1.3,4.

Answ. The sum of this I conceive to be, that God promising to Abra- ham he should be a blessing, Gen.12,2. that in him all the families of the earth, Gen.12.3. all the nations of the earth, Gen.18.18. shall be blessed, in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, Gen.22.18. did promise that every believer should be a blessing in his generation in spiritual things to his family and neighbourhood, and thereby God hath limited himself to cast ordinarily elect children on elect parents, and the lot of the Saints in neighbourhoods and places together, and not by equal numbers in each part of the world alike. Which exposition is many wayes faulty, and the conclusion inferred from it either false or uncertain, and yet if it were true and certain, would not yeeld a sufficient reason for infant baptism, as will be shewed in the sequel.

The first thing I except against this Exposition, that when it is said Gen. 12. 2. והיה ברכה he takes it for granted, it is to bee understood actively, as if the meaning were that Abraham should be a blessing to others, whereas (as Pareus in his Com saith) it may be an amplification of the things going before, thou shalt bee altogether and very blessed: in which sense we use often the abstract for the contract, as a man very honest is called honesty. Yea the LXX render it καὶ ἔσῃ εὐλογημένος, and thou shalt be blessed. Piscat. schol. Vel, esto in benedictione, hoc est benedictus. Diodati annot. Blessed every way: as if all blessings were gathered together in thee, or a pattern of a compleat blessing.

2. That he takes it as if what is said must bee applicable to all believers, that they shall be blessings in their generations. But this is not proved from the text, which onely speaks of Abraham being a blessing, and though it is true Heb. 6. 14. the promise of blessing to Abraham is made a promise of which all believers are heyrs, v. 17. yet is it plain from many passages in that Chapter v 9, 11, 12, 15, 18, 19. that it is meant that they are heirs of the promise of blessing to themselves in enjoying salvation as Abraham did, not of imparting blessing to others.

3. That he takes it as if it must follow, that if "Abraham were "a blessing to others, it must bee in that spiritual blessings according to "election were in some proportion entailed to the posterity and neigh- "bourhood of all true believers. But Pareus thus; "Some expound "it actively, thou shalt be a blessing, that is, thou shalt bless others: "my blessing shall not bee shut up in thee alone; but out of thee it "shall flow also to others. Blessing shall so stick in thee whereſoever "thou comest, that by thy ministry others may also come to a bless- "sing. Nor do the exposition of some Hebrews seem to bee refused, "that Abraham shall be a publike example of all sort of blessing in "the world, so that all that wish well to themselves or others, may "wish for the happiness of Abraham: Or as the new annot in Gen. 12. 2. shalt be a blessing] "That is, more then thou shalt have a blessing, "for in this blessing is virtually comprised the happiness of both worlds, "and of all that are truely blessed in all ages; whereof though God be "the onely Author, Abraham is honoured to bee a principal means "under him to bring it to pass in being the progenitour of the promised "seed, and setting such an example of belieſe as might qualifie "him to be stiled father of the faithfull, Rom. 4. 11, 12. The world "shall receive by thy seed, which is Christ, the blessing which it lost "in Adam.

Mr. C. himselfe denies not to bee included in this promise, that of Abraham and his seed the Lord CHRIST should come, but saith, if it bee restrained onely to this then it will follow that all those of the Line of CHRIST were blessings to the world as well as bee.

To which I reply, 1. if the ſenſe given be included as he grants, then his ſenſe is not neceſſary, nor can any thing be proved by it. 2. Though the ſpeech in the ſenſe given bee reſtrained, yet the abſurdity followes not, ſith the being a bleſſing by begetting Chriſt is not ſo inveſted in any as in Abraham, who is made the firſt Truſtee as it were, of this bleſſing by the Covenant, or Charter granted to him. 4. I except that in the promiſe, In thee, or in thy ſeed ſhall all the families or Nations of the earth bee bleſſed. Mr. Carter conceives thee and thy ſeed to comprehend every believer: Whereas the Apoſtle expounds Acts 3. 25. [in thy ſeed] of Chriſt onely, and [in thee] Galath. 3. 8, 9. of Abraham onely, with whom as the pattern of believing and beeing bleſſed, they which bee of the faith are bleſſed. I deny not that by Abrahams ſeed believers are meant Gen. 17. 7. and Gen. 15. 5. and that the Apoſtle Rom. 4. 18. Gal. 3. 29. and elſewhere ſo expounds it; But nowhere do I finde the promiſes Gen. 12. 3 & 18. 18. & 22. 18. expounded ſo as that in thy ſeed ſhould note every believer, and the ſenſe in which Mr. Carter takes it, as if in every believer all the families of the earth ſhould bee bleſſed, it is derogatory from Abrahams peculiar priviledge one way underſtood, another from Chriſts, and not much ſhort of blaſphemy. 5. That hee makes families and nations of the earth to bee different in the promiſes mentioned, as appears by his words [and that chiefly and in the firſt place to their families; and not onely ſo, but alſo to nations] whereas the holy Ghoſt makes no ſuch difference. For as the ſame promiſe which is expreſſed by families, Gen. 12. 3. is expreſſed by nations, Gen. 18. 18. ſo in the new Teſtament the promiſe Gen. 12. 3. where the word is rendred families, is expreſſed Gal. 3. 8. by nations and the term which is Gen. 22. 18. all the nations of the earth is Acts 3. 25. all the kindreds or families of the earth, as Mr. C. would have it. 6. Mr. C. ſeems by families to whom believers ſhould be a bleſſing, children, as when hee ſaith, God will ordinarily caſt children elect upon elect parents, and by nations neighbourhoods, as when hee ſaith, the lot of the Saints in neighbourhoods and places together, whereas families in the Hebrew מִשְׁפָּחוֹת whether rendred by φυλαὶ as the LXX Gen. 12. 3. that is, tribes, or πατριαὶ Acts 3. 25. notes more then poſterity or houſholds, even whole tribes, and kindreds that draw their line from one great Anceſtour, and עַם notes a whole people of one language, though in their dwellings ſo remote as to have no entercourſe one with another. I will not trouble my ſelf to enquire what difference there is between the words in Hebrew and Greek which are tranſlated families, tribes, kindreds, nations: This I am ſure they contain greater and more ample numbers of men then thoſe who live together under one roof or one town, and if from thence the extent of the Covenant be inferred to poſterity of believers and their neighbours, and ſo the ſeal of the Covenant (as Mr. C. doth) becauſe believers are promiſed to bee a bleſſing to poſterity and neighbours, it will follow from the termes families and nations, that they are bleſſings to whole parithes, townes, cities and nations, and they are to be Diocaeſed and parochial, city, national Churches to bee ſet up again, againſt which which Mr. C. with his brethren have ſo much hitherto contended. 7. By Mr. C's. expoſition whereas the promiſes are that all the nations of the earth ſhall be bleſſed in a believer, this is brought to ſo narrow a compaſs, as that it is reſtrained to poſterity and neighbourhood. 8. The manner how in believers their poſterity is ſaid to be bleſſed, and he a bleſſing to them is expreſſed to be, in that God caſts elect children upon elect parents, which I know not well how to underſtand. It ſeems to bear a ſenſe if not the ſame yet very near that in which we are ſaid to be choſen in Chriſt, Epheſ. 1. 3, 4. which Mr. C. alledgeth to this purpoſe, and 1 Cor. 1. 30. we are of God in him, who is made to us of God wiſdom, and righteouſneſs, and ſanctification, and redemption, which were near blaſphemy. Which to avoid it concerned Mr. C. to have more clearly and diſtinctly expreſſed himſelf.

What he ſaith [that the Covenant made with Abraham Gen. 12. 2, 3. reſpecteth families and poſteritie; elſe he had ſaid all the believers, or all the people of the earth, not all the families of the earth ſhall bee bleſſed] ſhews his overſight in not obſerving that it is Gal. 3. 8. all the nations of the earth, which is equivalent to all the people of the earth, and yet v. 9. by all the nations of the earth, are meant no more then they that are of faith. And when he ſaith, that the Apoſtle Acts 3. 25. could not have ſaid to the Jewes, ye are the children of the Covenant, had it not reſpected the children of the people of God, hee heeded not that they are ſaid as well to bee children of the Prophets, and therefore the ſenſe is not that they were deſcended from the Covenant or Prophets by natural generation, but ye are they to whoſe Anceſtours the Covenant was at firſt given, and the Prophets ſent, which are not common things to all the children of the people of God or true believers, the Gentile believers children are not children of the Covenant and Prophets in the ſenſe there meant, but proper to the Jews.

Nor is the propoſition true which Mr. C. would gather from the Covenant to Abraham. For, 1. God hath plainly diſcovered his mind Rom. 9. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 18, 24, 25. that he chuſeth at his pleaſure children of unbelievers as well as believers, and of the poſterity of believers, either none or which he will, arbitrarily and by no ordinary or certain rule, but as a potter doth with his clay, according to his ſoveraignty, not out of ſpecial grace to the children of his elect for the parents ſake, and accordingly the ſaints praiſe him for their redemption out of every kinred, and tongue, and people, and nation, Rev. 5. 9. without reſpect to their Anceſtours.

2. Our Lord Chriſt foretold Matt 10. 34, 35. that he came to divide a man againſt his father, and the daughter againſt her mother, and the daughter in law againſt her mother in law, and a mans enemies ſhould be they of his own houſe. And in the families of the moſt godly, how few were found elect may appear by the poſterity of David, Joſiah, Jehoſhaphat, Eli, Samuel, Abraham himſelf, with many more. As for our own experience in our own times it is ſo uncertain, that no good eſtimate can be made thereupon, concerning Gods ordinary way. Perhaps in ſome families it falls out, that the poſterity, and neighbours, and ſervants are godly, but many complaints of degenerating, of back-sliding, shew it as often to be otherwise.

I wish it were true which Mr. C. writes, though I find no proof of it, "That in all ages God hath cast it so in his providence, that his people "are not to be found in all places alike: but we finde them together "in some families and nations. Now this is not falu out by chance, but "because God hath so made his choise, hath been a God to believers "and their seed in their generation; and hath made them blessings for "the conversion and edification of their children, neighbours and ac-"quaintance, and that not onely by a common providence, as he bles-"seth the corn and grass of the field, but it is by vertue of a special word "of blessing a creating word of promise, which giveth a being to the "things promised, even this promise made to Abraham and in him to "all believers, Gen. 12 2, 3. without which, good examples and other "means of education and conversion, had not had such efficacy and power "in turning sinners to God. But I do not believe it, sith neither hath the Covenant such a sense as Mr. C. gives it, nor is there such experience proved, and it is found that what good is done among children of believing parents, is done as often by servants, ministers, good company, remarkable providences and other wayes, as by parents endeavours, and if without such a promise as Mr. C. imagines, such means had not such efficacy, I think not onely parents who believe no such promise, but also ministers, and others who expect a blessing upon their endeavours without Mr. Cs. promise, would be discouraged in their work.

That which is said Psal. 105. 8. though it prove the perpetuity of Gods Covenant with Abraham, yet proves not the sense Mr. C. gives of the Covenant. Nor doth that Luk. 19. 9. yeeld any clearness to it, For salvation came to Zacheus his house in respect of his person, and if it did to others in his house, yet it is not said by vertue of the Covenant to Abraham as Mr. C. imagines, and what Mr. C. saith about Act 16. 31. that it was spoken because of this promise to Abraham is his own gloss without any hint from the text, and would infer this proposition, that by vertue of Gods promise to Abraham upon the faith of an house-keeper his house should be saved, which is contrary to constant experience of believing masters, husbands, parents having unbelieving servants, wives, children.

I grant Abraham to be the holy root, Rom. 11. 16. and that v. 28. the Jewes as touching the election are beloved for the Fathers sake and that they shall be graffed in again because the guift once given to them, God will not repent of, and though I say not the Church bringeth forth children to Abraham, yet I yeeld Jerusalem which is above the Evangelical Covenant doth, and that the children of promise, or of the free-woman are Abrahams seed all believers even of the Gentiles, but this is so far from proving the blessing upon families and kinreds, and Gods ordering in such manner his election, as Mr. C. devised, and would have perpetual from Psal. 105. 8. that it rather proves the contrary. For the breaking off the Jews, and the ingraffing the Gentiles, not of the families or kinred of the root Abraham but a wild Olive by nature, proves the blessing not to

to be to families, nor election so ordered, as that to a thousand generations, to all generations even to the worlds end, God ordinarily casts elect children upon elect parents. Nor doth the citing of *Isa.*59.20. which is *Rom.*11.26,27. with the inference thereupon, prove that God entails his blessing upon families from generation to generation; but that God hath such a special love to the family of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that after a long breaking off that nation shall be restored again and re ingrafted for the Fathers sake, which is there made the peculiar priviledge of Israel after the flesh. But there is not a word in the Apostle, *Rom.*11. that shews that priviledge to have been enjoyed by believing Gentiles since their being grafted into the same root and Olive tree from whence the Jews were broken off. Nor is it true. For God hath removed his Candlestick from many places where there were famous Churches, and from many kindreds, families, and people, where there were formerly godly company and society; so that now the progeny are become profane, and Apostates, and the Churches repleniſhed with plants out of families in which a little while since Popery, profaneness, and viciousness did abound. Nor do 1 *Cor.*7.14. Acts 2.38. make any thing for Mr. Cs. purpose, as shall appear in the sequel. Nor doth the application of Circumcision to the child, or Abrahams title of Father of all them that believe, prove the Covenant with Abraham in Mr. Cs. sense: Nor is it true, the application of Circumcision to the child is a necessary and essential part of that Ordinance. For that is not an essential part of an Ordinance without which it might be: But the Ordinance of Circumcision might be, and perhaps was at first without application to a child, if thereby be meant an infant; however, if none but parents were circumcised, as when the Circumcision was *Josh.*5. it had been the Ordinance of Circumcision nevertheless: when onely one proselyte at age was circumcised it was the Ordinance. Ergo.

As for what Mr. C. answers to the objection from experience, it is indeed a pulling down of what he had spent so much time to build up. For if Gods blessing do not take effect through mens sin, or defect of using means, then the promise is not to families and kindreds in that absolute manner Mr. C. before described it, then the promise is to the quality and diligence of the persons, not to the relation; then is the promise as well to any other so qualified and diligent, as to the parent; then is it false which he said before, *pag.*38. that the success was not from example and other means, but a special word of blessing the promise to Abraham. Finally, if that be true which he hath *pag.*35. (which is false printed) G 2. that although Gods promise be to carry his election so, as to cast elect children upon elect parents, yet he reserveth to himself, and also useth in this a liberty, namely, ever and anon to be still breaking of some, and grafting in others into this holy root; then what he said before, p.37. F 3. that God hath thus far limited himself, and discovered his mind and purpose, that he will ordinarily cast elect children upon elect parents, is false: For what God reserveth to himself, and useth a liberty in, he hath not limited himself so far; and if he ever and anon useth this liberty, to be still breaking off some, and grafting in others, then he doth not ordinarily cast elect children upon elect parents; for what is otherwise ever and anon and still, is not so ordinarily, much less still in being to a thousand generations, to all generations, even to the worlds end, as he said pag. 33. G. So that Mr. Cs. discourse from his own words is found hitherto to contain mistakes, uncertainty, and in the main, inconsistency with it self. Let's view whether in the rest there be any thing worthy of a Lord Mayors imprimatur.

A third thing Mr. C. observes as contained in the Lords promise unto Abraham, is, "That by thus blessing and making believers blessings, "God would multiply his seed, *Gen.*22.16. So *Gen.*17.2,5. That this "is part of the Gospel, and contained in the promise made to him and "us, is proved from *Heb.*6.14. A further proof we have *Gen.*15.5. al-"ledged *Rom.*4.3,18,22. as belonging to believing Gentiles, the in-"crease of whose number by means of Gods blessing believers so as to "make them blessings as Abrahams seed, was intended in that promise, "and as part of that Gospel, which God preached unto Abraham: "There's a promise that the Kingdome of Christ shall fill the world, "*Dan.*2.35,44. To this purpose is that of our Saviour, *Matth.*13.31, "32,33. Now the Lords making believers blessings, and thereby "multiplying Abrahams seed, is that which makes his Kingdome thus "to be like leaven, whereby the whole world at last will be seasoned "with the knowledge and love of Christ. Therefore this multiplying "of believers, so as to fill the world, is made by the Apostle, Rom. "4.13. to be part of Abrahams promise; then mark what follows, "*v.*16,17,18. This promise was made sure to all believers, as well Gen-"tiles as Jews.

Answ. 1. Why Mr. C. makes that the 3d. thing in Gods promise *Gen.*22.17,18. which is the 2d. and puts that as the 2d. thing which is after the rest *v.*18. and so the 4th. I see no reason, but onely that he foresaw that otherwise there had been no colour for this which he here infers, that *by thus blessing and making believers blessings God would multiply his seed, Gen.*22.16. But the right order of the promises shews this conceit to be only Mr. Cs. fancy. For in that the promise *v.*18. is put last, it is shewed thereby that it is a distinct promise, and that it doth not express the manner how God would multiply Abrahams seed, as Mr. C. conceives. 2. It is true *Gen.*15.5. is a Gospel promise to believing Gentiles, *Rom.*4.18. but not in Mr. Cs. sense, that the increase of the number of believing Gentiles, should be by means of Gods blessing believers so as to make them blessings as Abrahams seed, in that God would cast ordinarily elect children on elect parents, and the lot of the Saints in neighbourhoods and places together: But in this sense, that Abraham should have an innumerable company of children, or his seed among the Gentiles by faith, who should be blessed with faithfull Abraham, *Gal.*3.9. in their own persons, but no mention is there of their being a blessing to others. 3. That *the Church of Christ should fill the world, Dan.*2.35,44. that the Kingdome of Heaven as a grain of mustard seed, or leaven, Matth. 13.31,32,33. shall fill or season the world, is granted; but that it is meant in those places to be done in Mr. Cs. way, is denied: I do conceive conceive it to have been meant of the Apostles preaching, as me thinks Christs words, Matth. 24.14. do import. 4. That the promise of being heir of the world was to Abraham and his seed believing Gentiles, is granted; but that his or their being heir of the world did import any such blessing as Mr. C. imagines, as if God would ordinarily cast elect children on elect parents, or that any such thing is intimated by the Apostle v. 16, 17, 18. is denied: Nor do I yet find any interpreter afore Mr. C. who hath so expounded the promise.

In the opening of the 4th. promise, that the seed of Abraham should possess the gates of their enemies, though his exposition be granted, I see not what advantage it gives him for proof of infant Baptism, and therefore let it pass; onely I take notice, that when p. 43. he makes the multiplying of the seed of Abraham, and the conquest of the world to be a spiritual work to be effected by the sword of the spirit the word of God, it follows, that it is to be done by preachers rather then by parents, and consequently not in that way Mr. C. imagines, but in the way which Christ took, by sending his Apostles to preach the Gospel to every creature. What he saith p. 45. of the meaning of Gen. 9.26. hath been shewed before to be uncertain, and to be proved false by the History of the Church, in that in Affrica the posterity of Cham were in the Church of Christ as well as Shems and Japhets posterity; and how Abrahams seed shall fill the world at last, and rule over it, is so doubtfull, as that I conceive no certainty can be thence deduced. The conceit of the four Kings Gen. 14. as if their people became afterwards the four Monarchies is such a fancy, as a waking man that knows the distance between Rome, Greece, and Canaan, and the voyage they must take by sea, and other circumstances which the story Gen. 14. and other Histories suggest, will take onely for a dream. Mr. Cs. gloss, p. 50. on the words of Christ, Mark 10.15. whosoever shall not receive the Kingdome of God as a little child; that is, as a child receiveth it, shall not enter therein; whether he mean it of the visible Church or Kingdome of glory, it cannot be true. For let the way of entring the Kingdome of God be by birth, or Baptism, or any other way, yet a true believer by faith and profession may enter into the Kingdome of God in a way different from that a little child receives it in who hath no understanding of Christ: And though both be passive in the first work on their souls, yet believers of age are not meerly passive as little children who have no understanding at all of Christ. But for the true meaning of Christ, I need say no more but refer the Reader to Christs words, Matth. 18.4. whence the meaning appears to be, that no person not endued with that qualification of self-humbling, of which a little child is a fit embleme, Psal. 131. 2. shall become an inheritour of glory. Nor is there any proof made by Mr. C. of his dictate, that because Christ would that little children also should be members of his Kingdome, therefore hath he made it ever branch of the Gospel of this Kingdome, that the families of the righteous shall be blessed. His reason he gives, p. 51. is no reason; for God might have gone further then ordinarily to cast elect children upon elect parents, even to have done so universally and perpetually, and yet we might no more have been sons of God

by natural generation, and as much by nature born children of wrath as now we are conceived. Though God had not so far, as Mr. C. imagines, confined his choice to families, kindreds, and nations, his elect had not been destitute of means of education, sith God could have provided Catechists, Preachers, and others to that end, in other families, kindreds, and nations: Sure in some ages of the Church there was so little provision made to that end in families, kindreds, and nations, that it appears that almost all the means of education was from Monasteries in Scotland and Ireland, by the Histories that remain, as may be seen by Seldens Epistle before the Histories collected by Twisden, Ushers relation of the Irish Religion, and elsewhere. If it were the most natural and ready way to multiply the spiritual seed for the increase of Gods Kingdome, by making believers a blessing to families and nations, as Mr. C. saith p. 52. sure God by sending Apostles, and not using Kings and Masters of families for that end, omitted the readiest and most natural way; and I see not why it should be judged the best way to propagate the Gospel, to gather Churches out of Parishes, and set Pastors over them, or to send itinerant preachers, but to reduce all Churches to family and national Churches, and to make Kings and Masters of families Elders and Rulers over them. Nor do I find that either God so casts the lot of his Saints together, as Mr. C. imagines, or that by that means the gifts of Gods people are improved, and light increased; but by raising up holy Teachers and Pastors, and associating of the Saints from their several dwellings into a well ordered assembly. If as Mr. C. saith p. 55. the Israelites destroyed the Canaanites not by common rules of righteousness among men, but by special revelation and command from God; then either they did it not by the promise Gen. 12. 17. or that promise did not assure them of the possession of Canaan by common rules of justice, as Mr. C. conceives. That the people of God in the times of the N. T. may not make war against Antichrist or Babylon and their party as an Anathema, but upon a natural and civil account, for the just liberties opposed and invaded by them, may be well doubted, considering sundry passages which are Rev. 17. 16, 17. & 18. 6, 24. That the dominion which the Saints shall at last obtain, shall need no force either to get or maintain it; but it shall naturally fall upon them, as from other causes, so also by reason of their number, according to the law of nature, and common rules of righteousness, is not proved from Isa. 2. 3. and how much it may tend to denying the lawfulness of Christians fighting in wars, especially if the chief or onely cause be to preserve the Godly from oppressions in Religion, is to be considered. And that power is naturally devolved upon the Saints because of their numbers, (as p. 60. is intimated,) seems to me an unsafe speech, as resting on this position, That power is naturally devolved on the greatest number. It is enough that I have onely by the way noted these things, that what men preach and print may be better considered: I pass on to the examining of Mr. Cs. application.

Sect. 79.

SECT. LXXIX.

Neither did Circumcision seal Mr. Cs. additional Promise, nor was Abraham thence termed Father of Believers.

THe first thing Mr. C. obserues is, that "in the promise to Abraham "there's an addition made to the former promise to Adam, Gen. 3. "15. which I grant, but not such an addition as Mr. C. conceives.

The next is, that "to this promise of making believers blessings to "families and nations, God made an addition of the seal of Circumcisi-"on, and the application of this seal to infants is part of the seal, there by "signifying and confirming that promise of such blessing. So Gen. 17. 10, "14. Had not the application of it to the infant been part of the token "of the Covenant the childs not being circumcised had not been a "breach of the Covenant; nor could the Lord have said, this is my Co-"venant, that the manchild be circumcised, if the application of that "ordinance to the child, had not in it a signification and confirmation "of something in the Covenant.

Answ. There are these things to be proved: 1. That Circumcision was a seal of the Covenant made to Abraham Gen. 17. 2. That Circumcision was a seal of this promise of God, of making believers blessings to families and nations in order to the multiplying the seed, and encrease of the Kingdome of Christ. 3. That the application of this seal to infants is part of the seal. 4. That thereby was signified and confirmed that promise of such blessing. But the proof is of other things, 1. that the application of Circumcision to the infant is part of the token of the Covenant. 2. The application of that ordinance to the child, had in it a signification and confirmation of something in the Covenant; For neither is it all one to bee a token and to bee a seal of the Covenant, there being other tokens then seals; and signe and token being the same, though distinguished Rom. 4. 11. they are unfitly confounded by Mr. C. nor is it all one to signifie something in the Covenant, and to signifie this thing in the Covenant, that God would make believers blessings in Mr. Cs. sense. Nor do neither of Mr. Cs. middle terms prove either of his conclusions. For the childs not being circumcised had been a breach of the Covenant, as being a breach of the command of God enjoyned then, though circumcising the child had been no part of the token of the Covenant, and the Lord might have said, this is my Covenant that the man child bee circumcised, that is, this is my command in my Covenant, if the application of that ordinance to the child, had not in it a signification and confirmation of something in the Covenant. But allowing that Circumcision is called the Covenant by a meronimy of the thing signified for the signe, and that it signified something in the Covenant beeing applied to infants, yet not one of Mr. Carters propositions is proved thereby;

For 1. it may be a signe and not a seal. 2. It might be a seal of the Covenant Gen. 17. yet not of that promise Gen. 22. 18. which is in another Covenant, not in that Gen. 17. 3. If it were a seal of that promise Gen. 22. 18. yet not in Mr. Cs. new devised sense. 4. To omit the ineptness or non sense of the speech, the application of this seal to infants is part of the seal. For what doth hee mean by the application of this seal to infants but onely Circumcision, and hee before called Circumcision the seal which hee meant; so that his speech can have no other construction then this, Circumcision of infants is part of Circumcision, which is inept or non-sense, I say further that the speech is not true. For if it bee a part it is either essential or integral, I know no other sort of parts it can bee meant of; But it it is not a part essential, for then without application to infants there should bee no seal, and so a Proselyte had not the seal though hee were Circumcised, unless hee had an infant manchild and hee circumcised, nor integral, for the Circumcision of a Proselyte was entire Circumcision or seal (as they speak) without his manchilds Circumcision.

Thence also, saith Mr. C. is that in Acts 7. 8. that is, he did it according to that Covenant of Circumcision, so as the application of the seal to the infant was part of the Covenant to bee performed on the part of Abraham and his seed in their generations, even by his spiritual seed to a thousand generations, in that which is the same for substance, and equivalent to circumcision, as we shall see anon.

Answ. That God gave Abraham the Covenant of Circumcision, and so, or accordingly, or he (according to the Copies that have ὁ θ῀ς not οὗτος) begate Isaac, and circumcised him the eighth day is not denied, nor that he did this according to the Covenant of Circumcision, that is according to the command of God concerning Circumcision as a signe of his Covenant Gen. 17. in which sense it is granted that the application of the seal (meaning circumcision) to the (male) infant was part of the Covenant to be performed on the part of Abraham and his seed in their generations, but this proves not what Mr. C. undertook to prove, that it was part of the seal, or part of the token of the Covenant (it being not all one to bee part of the Covenant and part of the seal or token of the Covenant) unless Mr. C. confounds them (as he seems to do) nor is there any word of God for application of any seal to the infant but Circumcision, the text is expres for Circumcision, this is my Covenant which ye shall keep between me and you and thy seed after thee, every man child shall bee circumcised, which can bee understood of no other then Circumcision, without making God to speak non sense, and making God command a thing in words which they signifie not, and making God to command a thing indefinite and indeterminate, which no wise Law-giver doth, and making a pronoun demonstrative to impore not the definite thing expressed, but some other individuum vagum, of which it is uncertain what it is, contrary to the very exposition of the Holy Ghost Gen. 17. 13. where it is expresly said, that Abrahams Circumcising was as God had said unto unto him, contrary to what Abraham, and all interpreters Jewish and Christian (that I have ever met with afore Mr. C.) have conceived, and which if it be granted it will follow that if the male child of Abrahams posterity had not been circumcised, but had another seal of the Covenant applied to it, the Covenant or Command Gen. 17. 9, 10, 11, 12. had not been broken, Moses had kept the command if he had baptised his son, though he did not circumcise him. These and many more absurdities follow on that portentous opinion, which I guessed long since by some words of Mr. Cawdrey and Palmer in the first part of their Sabb. Rediv. ch 2. §. 32. to have been hatching to maintain the Judaizing conceit of infant Baptism from infant Circumcision, that they might not seem therein to run on the rock of holding the Law of Circumcision yet in force; yet might have some colour for a command of infant Baptism, Gen. 17. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. where infant Circumcision is commanded and nothing else, but I found it not so expressly vented by any afore Mr. C. Now what saith he for it? 1. That this part of the Covenant was to be performed by Abrahams spiritual seed. But hee doth not prove that it was to bee performed by Abrahams spiritual seed of the Gentiles after Christs comming. Hee urgeth the words of the Psalmist Psalm. 105. 8. Hee hath remembred his Covenant for ever: the word which hee commanded to a thousand generations. But first, The word is not meant of the command of a seal to bee applied to Infants, but of his own promise, which hee will have firme as his Command, Psalm. 133. 3. & 42. 8. & 44. 4. as the New Annotat. and Piscat. on the place, which also appears from the words following, which terme it Gods Covenant hee made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac, which is expressed vers. 11. which cannot be understood of his Command to us what we should do, but his promise of what hee himself will do. Secondly, the word commanded signifieth Gods decree within himself; Or as Diodati in his note on the place, Hee commanded] which hee appointed by his soveraign and irrevocable decree, as the word commanded is used Psalm. 133. 3. and elsewhere. Thirdly, To a thousand generations, notes not just so many; But as Piscator in his scholia on the place, it is by a synecdoche of the kinde, as if it were said unto many ages. And this must needs bee granted, sith the Covenant however it bee granted to imply in the latent sense the promise of the heavenly inheritance, yet in the patent sense must bee understood (as v. 11. 44. compared shew) of the earthly Canaan: which they had not a thousand generations, but for many ages; as Exod. 20. 6, To thousand generations is meant not precisely so many and no more, but a long time indefinite, beyond three or four generations: and thus must also bee understood the promise of the land of Canaan to bee for ever, to be an everlasting possession, that is, for a long time, as frequently it is used Exod. 21. 6. Exod. 40. 15. 1 Sam. 2. 35. Levit. 23. 14, 21, 31, 41. &c. What hee saith of Baptism being the same for substance and equivalent to Circumcision, unless hee mean it, that infant Baptism and infant Circumcision are one equivalent to the other, and the same for substance in this sense [they are of no force not obliging Christians nor benefiting them] it will be found in examining that which follows, to have no truth.

Mr. C. adds, And that this blessing upon families and posterity was signified, held forth, and sealed by circumcising the child, appeareth further by that promise uttered in that phrase, Deut. 30. 6. which kind of expression intimates, that the promise of the conversion of their children was held forth, and confirmed in that seal. As when the Apostle saith we are baptized into one body, is signified and sealed in Baptism our union with Christ in one body, because else those words had been in no capacity to have been so used in that sense, as they are used both by the Apostle and by Moses.

Answ. 1. The phrase of circumcising the heart, Deut. 30 6 being used to express conversion or change of the heart, doth shew indeed that there is some resemblance between them, yet that it is so by institution is not proved, no more then because by breaking up our fallow ground, together with circumcising, the same thing is signified Jer. 4. 3, 4. and by washing, Isa. 1. 16. therefore plowing and washing are by institution to bee used to that end, 2. But be it granted that Circumcision was instituted to signifie the change of the heart, as baptism our union with Christ in one body, yet this proves not that it was to signifie and seal a promise of something future, but rather what was already done. For if it signifie as Baptism, then it signifies conversion already effected, Baptism being a sign that the person was united to Christ and to all his members by one spirit, as the very terms 1 Cor. 12. 13. ἐβαπτίσθημεν wee have been baptized, ἐποτίσθημεν we have been drenched, shew. And though the words Deut. 30. 6. are a promise, yet the term [circumcise] of it self, and in like manner the use of circumcision, according to the institution, may as well note a thing done, as a thing promised to bee done. 3. Nevertheless let it bee granted that circumcision did in the institution of it note conversion of the heart, and signified a promise of it as being a token of the Covenant in which that was covertly promised, yet this proves not that it held forth a blessing upon families and posterity. For there is no mention Deut. 30. 6. of families, though there be of posterity, and that mention which is of posterity, is of them not in their infant, but adult estate, and upon condition of the childs returning to God, and obeying his voice as well as the parents, as Mr. Baxter rightly observes in his Friendly accommodation with Mr. Bedford p. 361. I may add, that the promise there is expressed onely concerning one case, to wit repentance in captivity, v. 1, 2. 3, 4. and the promise (as appears from v. 5.) is a promise peculiar to the Israelites. 4. But were this further granted, that thence might be proved that circumcision by institution signified the promise of conversion of posterity, and that this were to Gentile believers, yet this is not that which Mr. C. would evince, that the application of the seal to infants in that it was to infants sealed this promise, or that the promise was sealed in Mr. C. sense, so as that God would ordinarily cast elect children on elect parents, and make parents a blessing, so as that Abrahams seed by faith should be multiplied in families and nations by them.

What

What Mr. C. adds, That the sign had not held proportion with the thing signified; namely, there had been nothing in the sign to signifie and seal that blessing upon posterity, had the application of it to infants been left out, is but a vain dictate. For 1. if the sign held similitude with the thing signified, though it held not proportion so as to be applied to all whose conversion was signified it might serve for the use of a sign, as a conveyance to a Father may assure the childs interest; and therefore that which Mr. C. dictates, that for this reason infants were to be circumcised, to seal that promise of believers being a blessing, added to Adams Covenant, is a vain conceit without proof, which it might have been as well assured if the parents had been circumcised onely, as well as when the male infants onely were circumcised.

And that which he saith further is most false, and vain, Nor indeed had there been any use of the application of it to the infant, nor that made a part of the Ordinance, had there not been such a branch in the Covenant as a blessing upon families and posterity to be thereby signified and sealed. For besides this, that Mr. C. proves neither that branch in the Covenant, nor that use of infant Circumcision, it is clear by Stephens speech, Act. 7.5,6,7,8. that Abraham circumcised Isaac in assurance of the land of Canaan, and that he received the Covenant of Circumcision to that end: and that the circumcising of infants had this use, to signifie Christ to come, seems plainly to be delivered by the Apostle, Col. 2.17. and by the general consent of Divines. Much more vain is that which he adds, So as if that priviledge be denied unto infants, that which was given to us in Abrahams Covenant is rejected, as he saith Gen. 17. The uncircumcised man-child shall be cut off from his people, he hath broken my Covenant. For neither if Mr. C's. sense of the promise Gen. 22.18. Gen. 12.2,3. be rejected, is there any thing which was given to us in Abrahams Covenant rejected, nor had the denying of Circumcision to infants necessarily inferred the rejecting of that which was given in Abrahams Covenant, nor do the words Gen. 17.14. import, that by not circumcising the person omitting it had rejected that which was given in Abrahams Covenant, for so Moses not circumcising his son had rejected the Covenant; but the breaking the Covenant was onely meant of breaking the command of that which was the token of the Covenant. Much less is this true of those that deny infant Baptism, that they reject the spiritual blessings given in Abrahams Covenant, Baptism being not by Christs institution a seal of Gods Covenant or promise to us, unless by consequence, much less the mixt Covenant of Abraham, as it contained domestical benefits proper to Abrahams house, much more less the new conceited promise of Mr. C. Nor was infant Baptism ever commanded by God, but invented by men in a fond imitation of Jewish Circumcision; and as long as we keep close to the institution Matth. 28.19. and baptize and are baptized upon believing in testimony of our union with Christ and his Church, 1 Cor. 12.13. we may securely slight Mr. C's. doom of being cut off from Gods people, which after Mr. Cotton refuted by me in the second part of this Review, sect. 11. he hath vainly here renewed to affright silly people with.

Mr.

Mr. C. adds, "That Abraham was called father of believers, 1. from "believing this additional promise given in order to the increase of his "spiritual seed, which he proves from Rom. 4. 18. Gen. 15. 5. 2. From his "receiving the seal of that promise, Rom. 4. 11. From which place we "may observe, 1. That Circumcision was a seal of the righteousness of "faith. 2. That because it was a seal of that righteousness, which he had "before he was circumcised, he therefore became the Father of all that "believe, whether circumcised or not. Now had not this seal been given "him that he might be the Father of believers, his receiving it at this "or that time, whether before, or after his believing to righteousness, "had made nothing for the universality of his relation as a Father of "all believers.

Answ. I grant that Abrahams believing the promise, Gen. 15. 5. and his receiving Circumcision a seal of that righteousness of faith he had in uncircumcision, was the reason of his title of Father of believers. And I grant that Abrahams personal Circumcision was a seal of the righteousness of faith to all believers circumcised or uncircumcised, and therefore he had it afore his Circumcision, that it might not be judged as proper to the circumcised. But 1. I deny, That the promise was Gen. 15. 5. as Mr. Cs. additional promise is, that Every believer should be a blessing to his family and posterity, so as that God should ordinarily cast elect children on elect parents; but that Abraham, though then childless, should have innumerable children by natural generation, though he were and his wife aged, and more by believing as he did. 2. The Scripture doth not say, that Abrahams Circumcision was a seal of the promise Gen. 15. 5. but a seal of the righteousness of faith he had, Gen. 15. 6. it was not a seal of a promise of a thing future, but of a benefit obtained many years before. 3. I find not any ones Circumcision, but the Circumcision which Abraham had in his own person, stiled the seal of the righteousness of faith, nor to any but him that believes as he did. 4. That his receiving the seal is not made the reason of Abrahams relation of Father of all believers, but justification by faith afore he received Circumcision. Nor do I find that any of Mr. Cs. assertions is proved from Rom. 4. 11, 18. that Circumcision was a seal of the Covenant, Gen. 17. or of Mr. Cs. additional promise, or that the application to infants was part of the seal, or that by it Mr. Cs. imagined promise was confirmed, and therefore this Text is impertinently alledged also.

Mr. C. adds. "That it was not Abrahams faith onely, nor his degree "of faith above others which gave him that title, appeareth 1. because "others were as eminent believers as he before him. 2. There was "something given which believers had not, at least in such a way had "not before, in reference to which he was so called, therefore it was not "for his faith onely, nor the eminency thereof. 3. There is nothing "in faith or the eminency thereof, that could occasion that his name is "be given to him; but it was in reference to something which he was "to have as a Father this additional promise and the seal thereof, he was "the first Father that received this blessing which was a blessing upon "parents and their children; and because at least in a great part by

"vertue thereof the holy seed was to be propagated and encreased. And "believers are said to be his seed, because that promise and Covenant "made to Abraham concerning the Lords blessing and multiplying his "seed, is so much a cause of their being brought forth unto Christ; his or-"dering his election so as to bestow his blessing thus by families and "nations, being that which makes the Kingdome of Heaven like lea-"ven, one believer ordinarily being the means of the conversion of "another.

Answ. The title [Father of believers] is a relative, with which Abraham was denominated from his Fatherhood as the form denominating, and this form denominating was from his begetting justified believers as the foundation, this begetting justified believers I know not how otherwise it should be then by his exemplary faith, and Gods declaration of his justification by it; which the Apostle doth plainly intimate, Rom. 4. 11. by expressing Abrahams children in this phrase, walking in the steps of his faith. The object indeed of this faith was the promise Gen. 15. 5. not Mr. Cs. imagined promise to other believers, and so the promise was the occasion, and in some sort the cause of the title, as the object may be said to be the cause of the act in somewhat an abusive expression. His personal Circumcision was a sign or seal of that whence the title came, the righteousnes of faith; and a token of that Covenant wherein God declared it, Gen. 17. 4, 5. But Circumcision did not make him such, he was such afore Circumcision was instituted, Gen. 17. 4, 5. Nor is it said Rom. 4. 11. that his receiving Circumcision was that he might be the Father of the faithfull, but his having righteousnes by faith before Circumcision made him the Father of justified believers of all nations. Nor do Mr. Cs. reasons prove the contrary. For 1. though others faith might be as strong, yet no ones faith was so eminently exemplary, the time and other circumstances considered; and this is apparent from Rom. 4. 18, 19, 20, 21. 2. Abraham had that exemplary faith, and promise and declaration of God, which no Saint had before in the manner I have explained it. 3. This was fit to denominate him Father of believers, as Sara the Mother of obedient and well doing wives, 1 Pet. 3. 6. by her exemplary obedience to her husband, and we are termed children of God by following him, Ephes. 5. 1. wicked men children of the Devil by doing his lusts, Joh. 8. 44. It is true, we are to look to other examples, chiefly Christs, Heb. 12. 1, 2. yet none of meer men so eminently believed as Abraham, and therefore no meer sinfull man is propounded as a Copy or pattern equal to him. As for Mr. Cs. reason, it is not right. For 1. Mr. Cs. additional promise in his sense is but a figment. 2. There is not the least hint in Scripture of that as the reason of the title. 3. If he were the first Father that received this blessing, then it was two thousand years and more afore God ordered his election as Mr. C. imagines, then believing parents had not this blessing before, whereas if there were such a blessing, it was rather before then after Abrahams time; for we find not any setled Ministery by which the spiritual seed was multiplied afore Abrahams time, therefore it is more likely to have been by believing parents;

but after Abrahams time we read of Prophets and Apostles, Priests and Teachers appointed to that end. And if Abraham were the first who received this blessing, then this was not perpetual, and so the application of the seal to infants not moral, sith the foundation of it began but in Abraham. Sure I am, this directly crosseth Mr. Richard Baxters conceit of infants visible Churchmembership by promise *Gen.*17.15. which I leave to them to contend about. What Mr. C. saith of the reason of the title of Abrahams seed given to believers, is quite besides the Scripture, *Rom.*4.11,16. *Gal.*3.7 *Joh.*8.39. And what he saith of one believers being ordinarily the means of conversion of another, is true rather of others, specially preachers of the Gospel, then parents, housholders, Princes: and I wish it were better considered by him, whether by his dictates all along in making the multiplying of the spiritual seed to be by every believers being a blessing to families and nations, by ascribing ordinarily conversion hereunto; and that p. 38. not onely by common providence, or so much by good education and example, but by vertue of a special word of blessing, a creating word of promise to all believers, without which other means of conversion had not had such efficacy and power in turning sinners to God, do not cross the Apostles speech, *Ephes.*2.20. be not contrary to the experience both of the first and continued gathering of the Churches of Christ, and do not indeed undermine and blow up a select Ministery for conversion, as being useless, without assurance of Gods blessing, God having provided another way, and ordinarily working by it according to a special promise. And how much this tends to justifie that disorder of every gifted brothers pretended prophesying and teaching in the Churches, which is the occasion of the jangling and schisms by which Churches are torn asunder and perverted, is easily discernable. But of this onely by the way. What Mr. C. hath summed up, p. 70. hath been examined, and found to be a fardel of mistakes: Let us view the rest.

Those insinuations which are p. 71. as if Antipædobaptists did easily part with ancient entailed priviledges, wherein the Saints have rejoyced for so many ages; wanted so much compassion on their children, as not to blot their names out of Heaven, or thrust them out of the Kingdome of Christ into the Kingdome of Satan; have been so often discovered to be false and grosse abuses, as that were not men resolved to use any artifices to uphold an ill cause by creating prejudices against their adversaries, they would leave them. But Mr. C. thinks to prove infant Baptism from hence, and thus he argues.

SECT. LXXX.

Mr. Cs. conceit, as if Gen. 17. 9. were a command in force to Abrahams spiritual seed in the N. T. is shewed to be vain.

" IF this be granted, that the promise made to Abraham Gen. 17. espe" cially that part of it v. 8. concerning Canaan to bee an everlasting " possession to his seed bee of such extent, and made also to his spiritual
" seed of the New Testament, it will follow that that command of God " in those words next following v. 9. is to bee meant also of his spi" ritual seed even in our dayes, and as a command that now lieth up" on the same spiritual seed in all generations, in as much as that com" mand is brought in with a therefore, upon the promise made to the " same seed in the words v. 8.

Answ. Hitherto Pædobaptists have been wont to deduce infant Baptism, from the connexion between the promise Gen. 17. 7. to be a God to Abraham and his seed, and the command v. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. which it seems Mr. C. dares not rest on, but takes another way, and yet seems not very certain what to pitch upon. For whereas p. 70. to clear the duty of infant Baptism, he sums up his suppositions; That God made to Abraham Gen. 22. 17, 18. & 12. 2, 3. an additional promise of believers being a blessing to families and nations, that for confirmation of this hee added a seal, to wit Circumcision, that the application of it to infants was part of the token of the Covenant, thereby that additional promise was sealed, in reference to them Abraham was called the Father of all them that believe; who would not think that he would have inferred infant Baptism from these suppositions, and the connexion between his additional promise and seal? But in stead thereof, as if all hee had before discoursed had been out of the way hee meant to take, whether because there is a great distance between the command Gen. 17. 9. and the promise Gen. 22. 17, 18. or whether he saw his exposition would not stand good, he now goes another way to work, and thinks to deduce infant Baptism from the connexion between the promise Gen. 17. 8. and the precept v. 9. and his inference is thus made; The promise is concerning Canaan to be an everlasting possession to Abrahams seed, ergo to his spiritual seed in the N. T if so, then the command lieth upon the spiritual seed still v. 9. and this the word [therefore] v. 9. implies. That precept ties onely to keep the Covenant by sealing with the seal of it, their children, v. 10. explains what seal should be for that time now another is come in the room of it, which is for substance the same, and equivalent to it, parents are bound by the precept Gen. 17. 9. the former seal ceasing and another substituted to baptise their children. This is as near as I well can gather it, the force of Mr. Cs. discourse. Against which I except, 1. That the term [everlasting possession, Gen. 17. 8.] doth not prove it to bee meant of another Canaan then that part of the earth which the Israelites possessed.

For besides places before alledged, wherein the terms everlasting and for ever are vsed for a time of some few ages, and shorter, Numb. 25.13. God promiseth a Covenant of an everlasting Priesthood to Phinehas and his seed after him; and yet we know that Priesthood was to cease Heb. 7.11. It is promised Ier. 35.19. that Ionadab the son of Rechab should not want a man to stand before God for ever, and yet this could be true onely of some ages: Therefore Mr. Cs. reason is of no force from the term [everlasting] to infer the extent of that promise to the N. T. Nor indeed can the reason be good. For if it were, then God should not promise at all the possession of the earthly Canaan in that place: But that is manifestly false; for the Text saith, Gen. 17.8. that God would give to Abraham and his seed, the land of Canaan, wherein Abraham was then a stranger: which can be understood of no other then that part of earth which is elsewhere called the land of the Canaanites, Perizites, Jebusites, &c.

I deny not that in the latent sense there may be a promise of eternal life to Abrahams spiritual seed, though I find no passage in the N. T. so expounding the promise Gen. 17.8. yet sure it is but bold presumption to build any doctrine on an allegory not expounded so by the Holy Ghost; and it is in mine apprehension, a great usurpation of the Divine prerogative, to impose duties on men consciences by arguments drawn from such devised senses. 2. That Mr. C. builds his inference upon the conjunction [therefore, Gen. 17.9.] which though it be so in the English translation, yet is it in Hebr. וְאַתָּה rendred by the Tigur. And thou; by Paren. But thou; by Piscator, Thou verily; which is enough to shew there is no strength in Mr. Cs. inference, sith there is no firm ground on which it rests. 3. But were it granted that [therefore, Gen. 17.9.] were the onely reading, and that the command is to be meant also of Abrahams spiritual seed even in our days, yet that the inference of the command, v. 9. should be onely from the promise v. 8. or v. 7. and not also from the promises v. 4, 5, 6. I know no good reason is or can be given. 4. Were it that there could be good reason given thereof, yet sith the promise v. 8. is mixt, containing both spiritual promise (if Mr. C. be in the right) and promise peculiar to the natural seed of Abraham, me thinks the precept should be onely to that spiritual seed which is also natural, and not bind the Gentile believers, sith they have no part of the promise as it concerns the possession of the earthly Canaan, from which the duty is inferred as well, if not onely, as from the promise of the heavenly Canaan. 5. But were all that Mr. C. would have here granted, that the term [everlasting possession, v. 8.] proves it meant of the times of the N. T. that [therefore] v. 9. proves the command extends to the spiritual seed now, that it is from the promise, v. 7. or 8. not from the rest v. 4, 5, 6. that it is to Gentile believers now, and not peculiar to Israel after the flesh; yet sure if the promise be the reason of the command, and the command belongs to them to whom the promise belongs, it belongs to no other, and therefore to none but elect persons to whom that promise is made; no meere professours of faith are bound to keep Gods Covenant by vertue of the promise, sith no promise is made to them. 6. Were this also granted, that the command is to every professour of faith to keep the Covenant as is enjoyned v. 9. then it remains still as a duty for every professour of Christian faith to circumcise his males of eight days old (which is contrary to Christianity;) For there is no other thing commanded there then Circumcision. But to prevent this, Mr. C. saith.

It is to be observed, that this command of God is primarily fixed upon the general duty, namely, the Covenant to be kept, and not upon this or that way of keeping, either by circumcising or baptizing: so as the circumcising of the child came under the command onely upon this, because it was declared then to be the token of the Covenant; and by the words it is supposed, that when it should cease to be the token of the Covenant, it should no longer be a duty; and what else, by the same authority, should be made the token of the same Covenant, would be the duty instead thereof. Mark the words, he doth not say, Thou shalt therefore circumcise every man-child among you as a token of the Covenant between me and you; for so had that been made the token for perpetuity, to have continued so long as the Covenant it self. But 1. in general he saith, v. 9. that is, they should observe and perform the token of the Covenant whatever that prove to be; and he addeth in the 2d. place, v. 10, 14. therefore, as I said, as for Circumcision, that was a duty onely upon those words, declaring that to be then the token. Circumcision is now abolished, yet the command of keeping the token of Abrahams Covenant is still in force, and binding to Abrahams spiritual seed in their Generations; therefore what is now the token of that Covenant must be observed instead thereof.

Answ. No wise and just Law-giver would ever make such a command of a general duty concerning ceremonies or rites then undetermined, but to be determined two thousand years after, Thou shalt keep my Covenant, that is, what ceremony I shall now appoint thee, or what I shall hereafter appoint when I take that away: such indefinite disjunctive commands so ambiguous, unintelligible, to be understood at one time one way, at another time another way, are so like Delphick jugling answers, as that I dare not ascribe them to the Almighty. Many absurdities follow on this conceit of Mr. C. which I have before set down. For present these arguments from the Text are against it. 1. There is nothing enjoyned Gen. 17. 9. but what Abraham was enjoyned in his own person to do as well as his seed after him in their generations; this is proved from the express words, And God said unto Abraham, thou shalt keep my covenant therefore, and again, thou and thy seed after thee in their generations, twice is this imposed on Abraham distinctly named, and the term [therefore] specially applied to him, and after with difference, from yet with his seed, so that to deny this, is to deny it's light when the Sun shines at noon day. But to Abrahams person was not enjoyned to observe and perform the token of the Covenant whatever that prove to be, for then he had been bound to baptise, which is absurd, Ergo. 2. This precept is as well to Abrahams natural seed in their generations, as to his spiritual seed, for the precept belonging to those, to whom the promise belongs, and it cannot be denied the promise v. 8. to belong to Abrahams natural ſeed, at leaſt ſuch as Moſes, David, afore Chriſt, it follows they were bound to obſerve and perform the token of the Covenant what ever that prove to be, and conſequently to baptiſe, which is abſurd. 3. If this precept be to the ſpiritual ſeed of the Gentiles, then Gentile believers are bound to obſerve and perform the token of the Covenant whatever that prove to be: But Circumciſion the text it ſelf makes the token of the Covenant, Ergo, Gentile believers by this expoſition are bound to circumciſe. 4. From v. 10. That Covenant was enjoyned v. 9. and no other, which is expreſſed v. 10. This is proved from the form of words which do plainly ſhew Gods meaning, this is the covenant which yee ſhall keep, which are as expreſs as words can bee that hee meant no other Covenant to bee kept then what is ſet down v. 9, &c. But that is onely Circumciſion, therefore no other is there enjoyned v. 9. But what need I ſo fully refute that which hath no proof at all brought for it, but Mr. Cs. word! It's enough to tell him that it is his dream, and to let the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London know that they have been enamoured on a vain phantaſme. And yet were it granted him and them, it will never ſerve their turn to prove infant Baptiſm by.

For 1. The command Gen. 17. 9. is not in theſe words [thou ſhalt keep the token of my Covenant therefore] but [thou ſhalt keep my Covenant therefore] and therefore if according to Mr. Cs. expoſition it be a general duty not fixed upon this or that way of keeping, and there are other wayes of keeping the Covenant then by keeping the token of the Covenant, the words may be meant of other duties then ſeals, as he cals them of the Covenant, as particularly what is required Gen. 17. 1. to walk before God and be perfect, upon which God promiſeth to make his Covenant v. 2. and ſo the precept Gen. 17. 9. may be obſerved without any ſeal at all. 2. But if it be limited to the keeping of the token of the Covenant, yet it follows not it muſt be either baptiſing or circumciſing, there being other tokens of the Covenant beſides theſe, as the Paſſeover, the Lords Supper, and therefore if it command them to obſerve the token of the Covenant what ever it prove to be, it ties them to obſerve the Lords Supper, and if it muſt bee obſerved by this rule here, then it muſt be given to infants as well as Baptiſm. 3. Hence ariſeth a further exception, that if it were yeelded, that a token of the Covenant indefinite is commanded, and Baptiſm meant after Circumciſion, yet ſure the command ties not to obſerve Baptiſm after the rule of Circumciſion, but after the inſtitution of Baptiſm in the new Teſtament. And the reaſon is plain, the command v. 9. being onely of a general duty, commands not the particular rite, neither Circumciſion nor Baptiſm, therefore there is no rule how to obſerve Baptiſm Gen. 17. 9. Then v. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. is by Mr. Cs. own expoſition a rule onely about Circumciſion, who, and whom, and when to circumciſe, nor do I think Mr. C. dares ſay, that the rule about the manner of circumſtances of circumciſing, is a rule about the manner of circumſtances of baptiſing, for then the houſholder ſhould bee bound to baptiſe all his males of eight dayes old, ſervants, and children, and and among them himself if unbaptized, none afore eight days old, no female, none but his own house, he should wash not the face, but the privy member. If Mr. C. to serve his turn yet devise another general law about the manner of observing the rites of the New Testament, besides the particular institutions and examples of Christ and his Apostles in the New Testament —— erit mihi magnus Apollo, and if Mr. C. or any other, find any institution or example of infant Baptism in the New Testament, I shall believe they can cut a whetstone with a rasour.

4. Saith Mr. C It is supposed by the words, that when circumcision should cease to be the token of the covenant, it should no longer be a duty, and that circumcision is now abolished. But 1, if v. 9. be a command still in force, and bind to observe still the token of the covenant what ever it proved to be, and that was Circumcision, then it binds still to observe Circumcision. 2. It is said, v. 13. He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money must needs be circumcised, and my covenant shall be in your flesh for an everlasting covenant. Now if Mr. C's reasoning be good, the promise is v. 8. of an everlasting possession, therefore it extends to the spiritual seed even in the New Testament; by the same reason, sith v. 14. it is said Gods covenant shall be in their flesh (which is by carnal Circumcision) for an everlasting covenant, Gods command is in the New Testament to Abrahams spiritual seed, true believers of the Gentiles, that they be circumcised in their flesh, contrary to Gal. 5. 2. Act. 15 24. 5. It is supposed that Baptism in the New Testament is the token of Abrahams covenant, which is not proved, but is manifestly false: For then by it every believer should be assured of the land of Canaan, that Kings shall come of him, &c. as is promised, Gen. 17. v. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. but that is false, and a meer Jewish conceit. 6. It is said without any shew of proof, that by the words it is supposed, that what else besides circumcision by the same authority should be made the token of the same covenant, would be the duty in stead thereof: But neither do the words say, or suppose, that when circumcision should cease to be a token of the covenant, it should no longer be a duty; nor that what else by the same authority, should be made the token of the same covenant, would bee the duty in stead thereof; there's not a word that tends to either supposal, nor can be either true. For the Jews Circumcision was not abolished by any words Gen. 17. but by the Apostles declaration, Act. 15. which doth not in the least hint any colection of its ceasing from Gen. 17. but from the calling of the Gentiles: Nor is the reason there or any where else of its ceasing, taken from its ceasing to be the token of Abrahams Covenant, but from the calling the Gentiles, the comming of faith, &c. Yea, the Jewish Circumcision still used ceaseth not to be the token of Abrahams Covenant, and yet the command Gen. 17 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. bindeth not. Nor is the other speech true. For by the same authority, according to Mr. C. the Passeover, the Lords Supper, were made tokens of the same Covenant, and yet not duties instead of Circumcision. 7. If when circumcision ceased, there was to be a duty in stead thereof by vertue of the command, Gen. 17. 9. and because of the promise of an everlasting possession, v. 8. it must extend to the New Testament to the spiritual

spiritual seed, and be of a spiritual blessing; by the same reason, Circumcision being made an everlasting covenant, v. 14. the command Gen. 17. 9. should be of a spiritual keeping of Gods Covenant, and the Circumcision that comes in the stead of Circumcision in the flesh should be Circumcision of the heart and obedience, which the New Testament seems to intimate, Rom. 2. 26, 28, 29. 1 Cor. 7. 19. Phil. 3. 3. Col. 2. 11, 12. It is supposed, but not proved, that Baptism is in stead of Circumcision. But Mr. C. thinks to prove it, onely by the way he takes in to illustrate his conceit about Gen. 17. 9. something about the Sabbath, Exod. 20. 8, 11. of which he saith thus.

"The like manner of institution we have concerning the Sabbath, "therefore those who deny infant Baptism, oftentimes deny the Sabbath; "and not without cause, for there is the same reason of both, and we "may illustrate the one by the other. The Lord intended in time to "change the day from the 7th. day to the first of the week, as he intended in time to change the token of Abrahams Covenant: Therefore in "the 4th. Commandment also, the command is not primarily fixed upon the 7th. or any day to be remembred and kept holy, but upon the "general duty, that the rest day of the Lord be remembred and kept "holy, what ever that day fall to be. Remember the Sabbath day, that "is the rest day, to keep it holy; and the Lord blessed the rest day, and "sanctified it. And the remembrance and keeping of the 7th. day is in "the Commandment made a duty for this reason, because that was declared to be then the day wherein God had entred into his rest after "his making of the world. And upon the same account, when after the "travel of his soul, in the new creation, he entred the second time into "his rest, as is declared that he did, Heb. 4. 9, 10. because that was upon "the first day of the week, when he rose from the dead; therefore by "vertue of that command, Remember the rest day to keep it holy, the "first day of the week is now to be remembred and kept holy, in as "much as that is now the rest day of the Lord our God, as formerly "the 7th. day.

Answ. That those who deny infant Baptism do not, or need not deny the Sabbath, is shewed in my Examen, part 2. sect. 8. in my Practicer, sect. 15. in the second part of my Review, sect. 3. and what Mr. C. hath said for his opinion of inferring the Lords day Sabbath from Heb. 3. & 4. hath been examined before, and shewed insufficient for his purpose. That which now he brings from his conceit of the command, Exod. 20. 8, 11. is to me very doubtfull, and yet were it certain, would not answer Mr. C. expectation. His conceit is doubtfull to me for these reasons, 1. because if his conceit were right, when it is said Remember the Sabbath day, and the Lord blessed the Sabath day, the term [Sabbath day] should be conceived as a genus or species comprehending under it the rest day of the Jews and the Christians, and such other rest days as God should appoint to be observed. But 2. if this are there imply'd. 1. That I find not where the term [Sabbath day] is meant or applied to any other then the 7th. day of the week. I grant that other days are termed [Sabbaths, Sabbaths of rest,] Levit. 23, 24, 32, 39. but no where that I yet find, is any day besides the last of the week termed the Sabbath day. 2. The blessing of the Sabbath day, Exod. 20.11. was the same with the blessing, Gen. 2.3. For it is a narration of what God did in the beginning, and that day was the seventh in order after the six days in which he created his work. 3. Me thinks the Evangelist Luke 23.56. when he saith, they rested on the Sabbath day according to the commandment (which commandment is that Exod. 20.8,10.) and that Sabbath being by the confession of all the last day of the week, doth plainly expound the fourth Commandment of that particular Sabbath which was the seventh day in order from the creation, and the last day of the week. I confess there are difficulties from this exposition, concerning the evacuating of the fourth Commandment, which being besides my present business, I shall not now insist on, it being sufficient for my present purpose to shew why I conceive Mr. Cs. exposition doubtfull.

2. Yet were his interpretation granted, it would not serve his turn here. For 1. keeping Gods Covenant, Gen. 17.9. is without any example or colour of reason restrained to seals (as they are termed) of the Covenant, and made the genus to Circumcision and Baptism; as the term [Sabbath] may be to all Festivals. 2. If it were, yet there is not the same reason of Circumcision and Baptism as of the Sabbath and the Lords day, the one being a moral command, and the other meerly ceremonial. 3. If the meaning were Gen. 17.9. that a duty were commanded in general to keep the token, sign, or seal of the Covenant, then it is a command concerning any token of the Covenant, the Passeover and Lords Supper, as well as Circumcision and Baptism; and if so, then they are to be observed according to the rule there, v. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. and if so, they are to be applied to male infants of eight days old as well as Baptism, or according to the rules delivered in the institution of each rite; and if so, the command Gen. 17.9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14. will make nothing for infant Baptism, unless it can be proved out of the institution and practise in the N. T. But to prevent this, Mr. C. saith,

SECT. LXXXI.

The succession of Baptism to Circumcision, and their identity for substance to us as shewed to be unproved by Mr. Carter, Mr. Marshal, Mr. Church, Dr. Homes, Mr. Cotton, Mr. Fuller, Mr. Cobbet, from Col. 2.11,12. or elsewhere.

"ably. [Or answer further, it is to be considered, that Baptism is now in "the room of Circumcision, and is the very same for substance to "us, as Circumcision was to them before Christ, namely, the token and "seal of that Covenant made with Abraham and his seed, as appeareth "Gal. 3.27,29. As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have "put on Christ. And if ye be Christs, then are ye Abrahams seed, and "heirs according to the promise. By which we see, that whatever we

"have as Abrahams seed, we have it all in Christ; and what we have in "Christ, we have it all as Abrahams seed; and that we are baptized in-"to Christ, that is our initiation into Christ; and what ever we have as "Abrahams seed, is sealed unto us in Baptism. By which it is evident, "that as Circumcision was to them, so Baptism now to us is the token "and seal of that Covenant made with Abraham and his seed.

Answ. If this were granted, yet Mr. Cs. purpose were not obtained, that the application of the seal to infants were justified by the command *Gen.*17,9,10,11,12,13,14. for the reason before given. But because I conceive these assertions contain errours, such as do mislead Pædobaptists, I shall examine Mr. Cs. allegations, and together with them Mr. Marshals reply to my Examen about his third Conclusion, and what I find material in other of my Antagonists about the point of Baptisms succeeding Circumcision.

Two assertions are laid down here by Mr. C. 1. That Baptism is now in the room of Circumcision. 2. That it is the very same for substance to us as circumcision was to Jews before Christ. Neither of which are true, or proved by any thing brought by Mr. C. or any other, though this be the chief thing they alledge for infant Baptism; and Mr. Church, p. 50. out of Dr. whitaker, tels us, all the Anabaptists will not be able to resist this argument from circumcision. Let's try the strength of it. The latter position seems to be this, That as circumcision was to the Jews, so Baptism now to us is the token and seal of the covenant made with Abraham and his seed. But this is not all one as to be the very same for substance. To be the very same for substance, is an expression that is scarce capable of good sense; neither Baptism nor Circumcision in proper acception being substances, or having substance, except as the subject of them, as all accidents have. As substance is put for essence, so it cannot be said they are the same for substance, sith cutting is one thing, washing another; and other Pædobaptists usually term them different administrations, Circumcision the old, Baptism the new. I grant Circumcision was the token of the Covenant made with Abraham and his seed, Gen. 17. but that it was a seal of that Covenant in the sense usually meant by Pædobaptists, or that any ones Circumcision was a seal but Abrahams, much less that every ones Circumcision was a seal of the Covenant of grace to him and his seed is more then I find in Scripture, and how often I have proved it false, may be seen in many of my writings, specially the 3d. part of this Review. But that Baptism is the seal of that Covenant made with Abraham and his seed, is not true. For 1. Baptism seals not at all the promise of the land of Canaan, *Gen.*17.8. nor any other of the promises made to the natural seed of Abraham. 2. Nor doth it seal the spiritual promises of the comming of Christ the calling of the Gentiles, as they were made to Abraham, and by Circumcision assured to be accomplished. For then Baptism, as Circumcision was, should be a shadow and type of Christ to come, and should cease as it did. 3. The Evangelical Covenant, or the promise of righteousness or eternal life by faith, granted to be in the latent sense comprized in that Covenant, I find no where in Scripture said to be sealed by Circumcision.

cumcision, but rather that circumcision did bind persons to the keeping of the Law for righteousnes, Gal. 5. 2, 3. nor by baptism but by consequent. The Scripture rather makes it a seal (if it must be so called) of our promise to God, then of Gods promise to us. Nor is there any thing Gal. 3. 27. 29. to prove either of Mr. Cs. conclusions, that Baptism now is the seal of the Covenant made to Abraham and his seed; or that it is now in the room of Circumcision. For neither is it said that what wee have as Abrahams seed, is sealed to us in Baptism; wee are said indeed to put on Christ by Baptism, but that, whether the putting on be meant of spiritual union, or outward profession it is ascribed to faith, v. 26. and our Baptism rather is made our seal to Christ, then Gods to us: nor is there any thing spoken v. 29. of any seed of Abraham but by faith, & so our Baptism cannot seal that Covenant which was made to Abrahams natural seed, which was the use of Circumcision, and therefore that Baptism is the seal of that Covenant, or in the room of Circumcision, is not proved thence. But let's view what is further said for them or either of them.

That our Baptism succeeds in the room, place, and use of Circumcision, is the common speech of Pædobaptists; against it, 1. I argued in my Examen, that Baptism was a concomitant to circumcision, it was among the Jew long afore Christ came, and it was by Divine appointment, from the Baptism of John till Christs death, now that which succeeds comes after, is not concurrent. To this Mr. M. replied, 1. by concession, and thence would gather an argument for infant Baptism, which is enervated in the 2d. part of this Review, sect. 24. 2. Saith he, A Lord Major elect succeeds the old, though the old continue after his election for a time, Defence p. 171.

But this is not true, a Lord Major elect doth not succed till hee bee sworn, in the interim he is no Lord Major in being, but onely in possibility and probability which may never bee. A successour hath no place while the predecessour is present, Jewel. Defence of the Apol. part. 2. c. 3. div. 5.

2. I argued that in no good sense can Baptism be said to bee in the room and place of circumcision; For neither in proper acception have either room or place, nor taking room and place for the subjects circumcising and circumcised, baptizing and baptized, is it true; parents though private persons might circumcise, not so in baptism, women were to be baptized, not so in circumcision. These things are answered by Mr. M. either with censures of me, which are but vain, this arguing being necessary to clear truth, or by reference to what he had said before, which is also fully refuted in the third part of this Review, sect. 18. I further said, If by room and place be meant the society into which the circumcised and baptised were to be initiated, it is not true. For Baptism initiated into the Christian, circumcision into the Jewish church.

To this Mr. M. If you mean onely the several administrations, the Church of the Jewes being Christs Church under one administration, the Christian Church the same Church of Christ under another administration; you speak truth, but not to the purpose; my conclusion never said Circumcision and Baptism do initiate into the same administration of the Covenant: but if you mean, that the Church of the Jews and ours are not one and the same Church, you speak pure Anabaptism indeed, and contradict the Scripture expressly, which every where makes the Church of the Jewes and the Gentiles one and the same Church, though under divers administrations. I count it needless to annex any proofs, because I think you dare not deny it.

Answ. I do not mean onely the several administrations, if I had so spoken I might have perhaps been judged to speak non-sence, from which I can hardly acquit Mr. Ms. speeches, that Circumcision and Baptism do initiate into different administrations of the Covenant, and yet they are termed the divers administrations, and the Church of Jews and Gentils by reason of them under divers administrations, which kind of expressions, though frequently used by Pædobaptists, yet I can discern little in them but non-sence, or tautologies, or self-contradictings. My meaning was very obvious, That the Christian Church, properly so called, contradistinct from the Jewish visible Church is one society, and that Baptism enters into the visible Church Christian, that the visible Church Jewish contradistinct to the Christian is another society, and Circumcision entred into it, not into the Christian. And these things are so manifest that I thought it needless to bring proofs. Who knowes not that circumcised Proselytes were in the Jewish Church visible, and not in the Christian, and baptised disciples of Christ cast out of the Jewish church, who remained among the disciples of Christ & in his Church; that the Jewish Church visible persecuted the Christian Church visible? Yet this is so apparent that Mr. M. both in his Sermon p. 27. speaks to the same purpose; None might be received into the Communion of the Church of the Jews until they were circumcised, nor in the communion of the Church of the Christians until they be baptised, our Lord himself was circumcised as a professed member of the Church of the Jews, and when he set up the new Christian Church, hee would be initiated into it by the Sacrament of Baptism; And in his Def. p. 169. I reply that the Christian Church was not fully set up and compleated with all ordinances of worship, government, officers, till afterwards, is readily granted, but that it was not in fieri in erecting and framing, and that Baptism was administred in reference to the Christian Church, and that by Baptism men were initiated into this new administration or best edition of the Church, I think no sound Divine did ever question. p. 172. I answer John's Baptism and Ministry was a præludium to Christ, and was wholly in reference to the Christian church, which then began to be moulded and though there was not a new distinct Church of Christianity set up, yet all this was preparing the materials of it, and John did not admit them by Baptism as members to the Jewish Pædagogy, which was then ready to be taken away, but into that new administration which was then in preparing. So that what Mr. M. terms in me the speaking of pure Anabaptism indeed, is no other than his own, and is so manifest as cannot be denied to be true, nor is at all contradicted by the Scripture, which never makes the Church christian visible and the Jewish to be one and the same, but the Church invisible by election and believing of Jews and Gentiles to be one

one and the same mystical body of Christ, Ephes. 3. 6. Now this one thing demonstrates that Baptism succeeds not into the place or office of Circumcision, sith they had different institutions, were for Churches, as Mr. M. speaks, under divers administrations, whereof the one was national gathered by natural descent, or Proselytism, the other onely by the preaching of the Gospel and faith. As S. Ignatius in his apparatus to his book Of the primacy of the Pope p. 20, 21. proves the modern Bishops neither to succeed into the place of the Apostles, nor the first Bishops because of their different institution, name, function and ordination, so in like manner I prove that Baptism succeeds not in the place of Circumcision, because of its different institution, name, office, and state it hath from it. Which is further proved thus. The command of Circumcision was different from the command of Baptism, the command of Circumcision not inferring Baptism; to which Mr. M. replies, How this follows that therefore Baptism doth not succeed in the room of Circumcision I cannot guess; the Lords day succeeds the 7th day in being Gods Sabbath, but certainly the institution of it was long after the other.

Answ. This proves that the one is not seated on the command of the other, Baptism on the command of Circumcision, they having different commands Gen. 17. 10, &c. Matth. 28. 19. and consequently no rule for baptizing in the command of Circumcision, nor the command of circumcising infants a virtual command for baptising, the rules of administring each of these being to be taken from their several commands and approved examples of practise, and no other.

Lastly, that Baptism succeeds Circumcision in the same use and end, is more untrue. For the uses of Circumcision were so far from being the same with the use of Baptism, that they are rather contrary. For the uses of Circumcision were to engage men to the use of the rest of the Jewish ceremonies, to signifie Christ to come out of Abrahams family, to be a partition-wall between Jew and Gentile.

To this Mr. M. answers. "These all refer to the manner of administration peculiar to the Jews; I have often granted there were some "legal uses of Circumcision, it obliging to that manner of administration; and so they were part of the Jewish Pædagogy, which is wholly "vanished, and therein Circumcision hath no succession; but Baptism "succeeds it as a seal of the same Covenant under a better administration, as a set and constant initiating Ordinance: onely I wonder that "you say Circumcision did initiate into the Church of the Jews, or rather the family of Abraham.

Answ. Mr. M. grant, that the uses were part of the Jewish Pædagogy, and that it is wholly vanished, and therein circumcision hath no succession, doth infer that Circumcision and all its uses are vanished, and have no succession: For it had no uses but what did belong to the Jewish Pædagogy, the initiating was into the Jewish Church, or rather the family of Abraham, which speech I used as conceiving that term more comprehensive and more proper, in as much as the family of Abraham was it into which Circumcision did initiate first afore the people of Abrahams house were termed the Church of the Jews, and that covenant which circumcision did signifie and confirm, was peculiar to the Jews, although Christ were typified by circumcision and righteousnes by faith in the latent sense, promised in the Covenant, Gen. 17. which yet no more proves Baptism to succeed circumcision then to the cloud, sea, Manna, water out of the Rock, the Ark of Noah, the Passeover, the sacrifices of the Law, high Priest, washings, &c. And if then this be all the use that Baptism succeeds circumcision in, to confirm the Covenant so far as it was spiritual, it succeeds as well to all these, and so doth the Lords Supper to circumcision, & from the comands of those rites, a rule might be drawn to administer Baptism by, as well as from circumcision. Piscator in his observat. on Numb. 28, 29. makes Baptism to succeed circision and the purifyings to be often iterated, but the truth is it succeeds to neither. Christ is instead of all these Col. 2. 17. and succeeds to them, and to say that Baptism succeeds to the use of circumcision, as it signified the Gospel promise to Abraham, must make it to signifie Christ yet to come in the flesh; For which reason I say still boldly, though it were (as I think it is not) against all Divines and Churches since the Apostles time, that to say Baptism succeeds in the room and place of circision, is a proposition erroneous and very dangerous.

Mr. M. saith to this p. 174. 1. That hee had confuted before what I say, that the covenant with Abraham is not the same with the New covenant but in part, to which there is a full reply before, in all the sections of the third part of this Review, wherein the Covenant with Abraham is defended to be mixt, to wit, the 4th, 25th, 26th, 27th. 2. That the Cloud, Sea, Manna, water of the Rock &c. were extraordinary signes, not standing Sacraments to bee used in all generations, and yet so far as God hath made them parallel, what hurt is there in saying Baptism succeeds them? To which I answer, 1. The sacrifices and purifyings were as much standing Sacraments, and that in more generations then circumcision and the Passeover. 2. That there is this hurt to Mr. M. cause, that if he grant that Baptism succeeds to them as well as circumcision, then a rule may be taken from the use of those in the administration of Baptism as well as from circumcision, which is onely proved from the succession of the one to the other, nor is it wildly said by mee, if the confirming or signifying the same covenant, prove Baptism to succeed circumcision, it proves the Lords Supper to succeed it, which according to Mr. M. hath the same general Rate, signification and use, from which alone Mr. M. and other Pædobaptists gather the succession of Baptism to circumcision, from Col. 2. 11, 12. & not from the particular use of initiating, and if so a rule from circumcision to give the Lords Supper as succeeding it to infants, as well as Baptism may be drawn, which were absurd in Mr. Mr. conceit. I have hitherto shewed the falshood of Pædobaptists assertion about Baptisms succession to circumcision; Let's review their proofs of it.

Mr. M. in his defence, 124. saith, "From that clear place Col. 2. "to 13. I made it evident, not only that we have the same thing signified "by circumcision, while we are buried with Christ in Baptism, but also "that the Apostle plainly sets Baptism in the same Rate and makes it of " the ſame uſe to us as Circumciſion was to the Jews; Chriſt onely to " them and us alſo is the author of ſpiritual Circumciſion. The Cir- " cumciſion of the fleſh was the Sacrament of it to them; and now that " is aboliſhed, we have Baptiſm to ſeal the ſame thing.

Anſw. Though I deny not that we have the ſame thing which was ſignified by Circumciſion, while we are buried with Chriſt by Baptiſm; yet I deny that the Apoſtle plainly or obſcurely ſets Baptiſm in the ſame ſtate, or makes it of the ſame uſe to us as Circumciſion was to the Jews: Nor do I find any thing in the Apoſtles words from whence it may be gathered, that the Circumciſion of the fleſh was the Sacrament of it to them, except it be meant onely of Chriſts perſonal Circumciſion. For it is plain, that what is ſaid v. 11. that they were circumciſed with the circumciſion not made with hands, in the putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh, in or through the circumciſion of Chriſt, is expreſly applied to Chriſts Circumciſion, and not to the Circumciſion of any other perſon but Chriſt: nor can be, ſuch of no mans Circumciſion beſides Chriſts is it true, that we are in or by it circumciſed with the circumciſion made without hands, in putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh: Nor are we thus circumciſed by Chriſts Circumciſion as the ſacrament, token, or ſeal of ſpiritual Circumciſion, as that onely which ſacramentally repreſented it, or as a ſeal of the Covenant in which it was promiſed; but as the effectual pattern, according to which by Divine predeſtination we are to be conformed, Rom. 8. 29. in whom we are ſaid to be buried, raiſed, v. 12. quickned, ſet in heavenly places, Epheſ. 2. 5. crucified, Gal. 2. 20. fellow ſufferers, Rom. 8. 17. Phil. 3. 10. Whence I argue, If our Baptiſm be hence gathered to ſucceed in the ſame ſtate and uſe with Circumciſion, then it ſucceeds to Chriſts Circumciſion, for none other is here meant; and if ſo, then each believers Baptiſm is the effectual pattern by vertue of which we have ſpiritual Circumciſion. But this is ſo abſurd, that it is not much ſhort of blaſphemy, therefore the inference of Baptiſms ſucceſſion to Circumciſion from hence is without any ground, and I did truly ſay in my Examen, that it was an ignis fatuus that hath miſ-led men in gathering it hence. Nor is it true, that there is a word in the Text that intimates, that either our Baptiſm ſeals any thing to us, except our union and conformity to Chriſt, to which though Circumciſion of the heart be antecedent, concomitant, or conſequent, yet it is not the ſame; and therefore the ſealing of the ſame thing by Baptiſm as by Circumciſion, is not rightly hence inferred.

As for what Mr. C. ſaith, p. 79, 80. that there is the ſame ſpiritual fruit of Circumciſion and Baptiſm, thoſe onely who are in Chriſt have it, becauſe they have it by the circumciſion of Chriſt, and the like of Baptiſm; that the benefit and fruit of circumciſion, which is the circumciſion made without hands, they had by being buried and riſen with Chriſt in Baptiſm and therefore that they were compleat in Chriſt, is all granted, and confirms my argument againſt the imagined ſucceſſion of ordinary Circumciſion to ordinary Baptiſm, and of their being the ſame in ſubſtance and uſe. For hereby it is plain, that what ſpiritual fruit is aſcribed to Circumciſion.

sion, it is not ascribed to ordinary Circumcision, no nor to Abrahams, (notwithstanding what Mr. C. would deduce from Rom. 4. 11, 12.) but to Christs: Nor is the spiritual fruit, Col. 2. 11, 12. ascribed to Baptism, but to the burial and resurrection of Christ represented in Baptism. As for what Mr. C. adds as the Apostles meaning, that they were compleat in Christ in the Ordinances of the Gospel, is his own fiction; for the Apostle is so far from saying we are compleat in Christ in the Ordinances of the Gospel, that as I prove, Exam. p. 91, 92. out of the Text, the words of Beza, Aretius, (whose sayings are by Mr. M. in his Defence, p. 175. owned as true,) and Mr. Ms. own words, that the Apostle asserts our compleatness in Christ without any outward Ordinance either of Law or Gospel. And this I think Mr. C. himself dare not deny. For such the compleatness is in spiritual benefits, mortification, renovation, remission of sins, as Mr. C. acknowledgeth, if we have our compleatness in Christ by Baptism, we have these spiritual benefits by it, and we have them not without it. What Mr. M. saith, p. 175. of my abuse of Aretius, is answered in my Apology, sect. 12. p. 60. Aretius his testimonies out of the Fathers cited p. 176 prove nothing concerning the meaning of Col. 2. 11, 12. though they shew that some of the Ancients conceived of Baptisms succession to Circumcision as he did. To what I argued in my Examen, p. 92. that by this doctrine, that Baptism is in stead of Circumcision, the Apostles argument for the disanulling the Jewish ceremonies, both here and Heb. 9. & 10. 1. & 13. in the Epistle to the Galatians, ch. 3. & 4. and Ephes. 2. is quite evacuated, who still useth this argument to prove the abolition of the ceremonies of the law, because they have their complement in Christ, not in some new Ordinance added in stead of them; for if there be need of other Ordinances (besides Christ) in stead of the old, then Christ hath not in himself fulness enough to supply the want of them, and this abolition is not because of Christs fulness, but other Ordinances that come in stead of the abolished; and though our Ordinances may be said to imitate theirs, yet Christs onely succeeds them.

Mr. M. thus saith. I answer, it is very true, that whoever should plead (as Mr. C. doth) that we have any of our compleatness in any outward Ordinance would evacuate the Apostles argument, but yet they by his own appointment help us to apply this compleatness, they argue not that all our compleatness is not in Christ, Christ onely succeeds all the Jewish Ordinances as the body doth the shadow: we plead not, as the Papists do, that the Jewish sacraments were types of ours, they were types onely of Christ; but yet ours succeed them to be like signs of the covenant of grace, and so the Apostle doth in this place.

To which I reply. 1. If it be contrary to the Apostle to plead that we have any of our compleatness in any outward Ordinance, then it is contrary to the Apostle to make Baptism and the Lords Supper to succeed Circumcision and the Passeover, sith that onely Col. 2. 10, &c. is made to succeed them wherein we are compleat without them. 2. What Mr. M. means by applying the compleatness of Christ, and how Baptism and the Lords Supper help us to apply this compleatness, I do not readily understand.

understand. I conceive it applied no otherwise then by faith, nor they to help any otherwise then by exciting it, which I am sure they do not to infants, and so Baptism of infants is no help to them to apply the compleatness of Christ. 3. Though Baptism and the Lords Supper argue not that all our compleatness is not in Christ, yet the doctrine of Mr. M. that Baptism is in the same state, and of the same use to us as circumcision was to the Jews, that it succeeds into its place, doth so argue as I have shewed. 4. If Christ onely succeeds all the Jewish Ordinances, as the body succeeds the shadow, then Christ onely is made Col. 2. 11, 12. the successour to Circumcision: for there is no other succession there spoken of, as appears by the phrases of compleatness in him as the head, v. 10. circumcised by the circumcision of Christ, v. 11. buried with him, risen with him, v. 12. quickned together with him, v. 13. dead with him from the rudiments of the world, v. 10. so as that by holding him as the head being knit together the whole body increaseth with the increase of God, v. 19. and chiefly that which is said v. 17. which are a shadow of things to come, but the body is of Christ. 5. If the Jewish Sacraments were not types of ours, then the reason of their ceasing from the succession of ours is taken away, for that rests onely on this, that they were types, and ours the truth. 6. If ours succeed onely in that they are like signs of the Covenant of grace, then they succeed all the sacrifices, washings, annointings of the law as well as these: we may conclude succession of Baptism to Noahs Ark, &c. But in the administration of an Ordinance we are not to be ruled by bare analogy framed by our selves or delivered by the spirit of God, but by the institution of God.

To this Mr. M. saith, Defence, p. 177. "I answer, but when those "analogies framed by the spirit of God, are agreeable to the use and "end of Gods institution, we are to be ruled by them; and the Apostle "shews that's our case here.

Answ. 1. If this were true, then to tie Baptism to the eighth day, to be of all in the family, &c. should according to Mr. Ms. supposition be right. 2. There's not a word in the Apostle Col. 2. to shew that ours succeed the Jewish Sacraments to be like signs of the covenant of grace. Yea, I urged that the Apostle rather resembles burial to Circumcision then Baptism, and makes the analogy between Circumcision and Christs burial, and cited the words of Chrysostome and Theophilact on the place to that purpose, Exam p. 93.

To this Mr. M. "Where is Circumcision compared to burial, and "wherein I pray you lies the analogy between them?

I reply, 1. I said not Circumcision is compared to burial, but that Col. 2. 11, 12. burial rather resembles Circumcision then Baptism, and the analogy is between them. Which is true, sith buried with him, v. 12. answers to circumcised by his circumcision, v. 11. and the analogy is, that as the one so the other is the effectual pattern of our mortification; and not between our burial and baptism, as Mr. M. And to this are the words cited by me apposite. Nor are the words of Chrysostome, that we put off sins in Baptism, for Mr. Ms. purpose, to prove analogy conceived by the Apostle between the Jewish common Circumcision, or our burial and our baptiſm. 2. I ſaid Baptiſm is named with faith, Col. 2.12. as the 2 means whereby we have communion with Chriſt, and are compleat in him. Exam. p. 94.

To this Mr. M. "But is not this the ſame ſenſe with mine? But your "ſyllogiſm or mighty conſequence I deny, Baptiſm is named becauſe "it is one of the means of Chriſtians being exempted from the School-"maſter, and come to be ingrafted into Chriſt, and to be compleat in "him, therefore it doth not ſucceed in the room and place of Circumciſ-"on, nay rather therefore it doth.

To this is replied in my Apology, ſect. 5. p. 28. that Mr. M. perverts my words, my arguing being no other then this, Baptiſm is alledged as one of the means whereby we come to be compleat in Chriſt, (which Mr. M. denies not, but avows as his ſenſe,) therefore there was another reaſon beſides the ſucceſſion of it into the place of circumciſion, why the Apoſtle there mentions it, which Mr. M. denied. And this conſequence (however Mr. M. in his flout term it) is good, except it were true, that every means whereby we are compleat in Chriſt ſucceeds circumciſion, the contrary whereof is confeſſed by Mr. M. in acknowledging faith to be one of the means whereby we are compleat in Chriſt, Col. 2.12. which yet ſucceeds not circumciſion, according to him. Mr. M. cenſure of my ſpeech, that the miſunderſtanding Col. 2.11,12. was an ignis fatuus, as arrogant, is ſhewed in my Apology, ſect. 5. p. 29. to be injurious: And what he ſaith in his Defence, p. 179. of my poſition, that circumciſion was not a token of the Covenant to the Jews children, is another injury, in that he leaves out the words [in ſome ſenſe] which was ſet down a little before in my Appendix, p. 174. which being added, there is nothing in them contrary to the Text, Gen. 17. but enough thence to prove my ſpeech true.

What Mr. C. urgeth p. 81. from 1 Cor. 5.7,8. of the Lords Supper ſucceeding the Paſſeover, That the Apoſtle could not have expreſſed by ſuch phraſes taken from the Paſſeover the celebrating the Lords Supper, had not the Paſſeover and the Supper been the ſame for ſubſtance, is not right. For 1. that by keeping the feaſt is meant eating the Lords Supper, is not proved; and Beza, Diodati, the new Annot. with others, paraphraſe the words thus, Let us lead our life. 2. Our obedience, gifts, doing good, are termed ſacrifices, yet theſe phraſes prove not them to be the ſame in ſubſtance in Mr. Cs. ſenſe. 3. Chriſt is expreſly in the Text 1 Cor. 5.7. termed our Paſſeover, therefore the Text makes the ſacrifice of Chriſt to ſucceed the Paſſeover, not the Lords Supper.

But Mr. Drew, p. 31. thinks to prove the ſucceſſion of Baptiſm to Circumciſion, becauſe as he ſaith in my Exercit. p. 3. &c. I readily grant that Baptiſm is an Ordinance ſet up by the appointment of Chriſt to ſerve for the ſame ſpiritual ends that circumciſion did. To which I ſay, that all I grant there, is, that Circumciſion and Baptiſm ſignified and confirmed the promiſe of the Goſpel, but I added, according to different forms and function, and I aſcribed no more to Circumciſion then to the Paſchal lamb, the rain of Mannah, &c. But this is not the ſame with that which Mr. Drew injuriouſly impoſeth on me. Yet if it were, it would not prove Baptiſms ſucceſſion to Circumciſion, as is before ſhewed, and if it did it would as well prove its ſucceſſion to the Paſſeover, Manna, the water out of the Rock, &c. which hee will not affert I think. The reſt which hee ſaith, about Col. 2. 11, 12. is the ſame with what others ſay, and hath been anſwered in my Examen part. 3. ſect. 9. in my Appendix, and in this ſection and in other parts of this Review.

As for Mr. Cotton, who is one of thoſe to whoſe writing Mr. Drew refers us for proof of Baptiſms ſucceſſion to Circumciſion, from Col. 2. 10, 11, 12. his conceit is grounded upon this miſtake in his book of Baptiſm p. 128. That the Apoſtle pleadeth our compleatneſs in Chriſt, notwithſtanding our want of circumciſion, in that wee enjoy the like fulneſs of benefit in our Baptiſm as the Jews did in their circumciſion, which hath been often ſhewed to bee falſe. For there is no mention of a benefit to the Jews, but to the Coloſſians, and this benefit was not bare outward Circumciſion, or any outward Church priviledge, but the inward Circumciſion in putting off the body of the ſins of the fleſh, and this not by the Jews Circumciſion, but Chriſts circumciſion in his own perſon, nor is it true that the fulneſs of benefit there is aſcribed to ordinary Baptiſm, nor can bee rightly ſo conceived. And what Mr. Cotton ſaith in the ſame place againſt thoſe who ſay that Baptiſm being granted to ſucceed Circumciſion, yet it follows not infants muſt bee baptized, That ſucceſſion is the ſubſtitution of later things for former things in the ſame ſubject, if the ſubject be changed, ſo far as there is a change of the ſubject there is no ſucceſſion, and therefore if infants be not baptized as they were circumciſed, Baptiſm ſucceeds not circumciſion, is falſe and againſt himſelf. 1. Falſe, for we know though there were a law made that after infant Kings all ſhould be adult, and after women Queens, all ſhould be male Kings, yet they ſhould be true ſucceſſors, as King James to Queen Elizabeth, Henry the 7th to Edward the 5th or Henry the 6th. 2. Againſt himſelf, For thereby is proved Baptiſm doth not ſucceed circumciſion, ſith there is a change in the ſubject, women being baptized, who were not circumciſed, and parents or maſters of families being to circumciſe, but preachers of the Goſpel onely to baptize.

As for what Dr. Homes (to whom Mr. Drew alſo refers) in his Animadverſ. on my Exercit. p. 28, 29. brings to prove Baptiſms ſucceſſion to Circumciſion, it's upon alike miſtakes. For 1. it is not true that the Apoſtles ſcope Col. 2. 12 in mentioning Baptiſm, is to anſwer the objection Dr. Homes imagins, and to ſhew that we are as compleat as the Jews, becauſe Chriſt hath appointed another ſign, to wit Baptiſm, in ſtead of the Jews Circumciſion. 2. Nor doth the Apoſtle affirm or intimate, that if we have not Baptiſm in the room of Circumciſion to us Believers and our infants, we are not ſo compleat as the Jews, by Chriſt. 3. Nor is it true that the Apoſtle doth call off the Coloſſians from circumciſion by the conſideration of their Baptiſm as in the room of circumciſion. 4. Nor doth the Apoſtle make ſuch analogy beween Baptiſm and Circumciſion as Dr. Homes ſaith he doth. 5. Nor if hee did, would this prove ſuch a ſucceſſion of Baptiſm to Circumciſion as Pædobaptiſts would have, that the command of infant Circumciſion muſt be a command for infant Baptiſm.

Mr. Thomas Fullers argumentation for the succession of Baptism to Circumcision in all the essentials of it, as he speaks in his Infants advocate ch. 7. is alike vain. For there is no inconvenience that I know, to say no ordinance doth succeed Circumcision; his talk of Sacraments being pillars of the Church, is but phrasifying instead of disputing, nor do I know how it can bee true. Nor do I know, that all or any graces Evangelical are conferred in baptism or were in Circumcision of the Jewes, much less that the conferring of such graces is essential to either of them; nor is it true, that Col. 2. 11, 12. Christians are said by Baptism to bee spiritually circumcised; and by the same proportion the believing Jews may bee said by Circumcision to bee spiritually baptized: For it is not by Baptism but before it, that regularly persons are spiritually circumcised, nor were the believing Jewes by Circumcision to be spiritually baptized but before it; Nor is there any such affinity, much less essential sameneß between them, as that a command about the one should bee a command to us about the other. Nor do I finde any thing in that Author which needs further answer, hee having added nothing to the cause, but some peculiar words and expressions without any strength.

What Mr. Cobbet hath about this point Just. vindic part. 2. c. 2. sect. 9, 10, 11. I shall further examine. Sect. 9. he sets down eight propositions, which if they were all granted, yet they do not prove that point, which is in question, that an argument from analogy between meer positive ceremonies, rites or Sacraments is of validity, so as that it may be concluded thus; So it was in a ceremony of the Old Testament, therefore it must be so in the New, without any other precept or example therein: Concerning the insufficiency thereof, I have disputed so largely in the 2d. part of this Review sect. 2, 3. as that I need to say no more here. Nor doth any thing Mr. C. brings concerning the fulneß of the Scripture, Christ or the Apostles arguing, prove such kind of arguing good in meer positive rites, however matters of faith and manners are determined and proved by them from the Old Testament. Nor should it bee granted (as it is not) that there is the same main ground of Circumcision and Baptism, yet would it follow the rule of the one is a rule about the other, without the like institution. Yet what Mr. C. hath set down as the main ground that God would once have but Covenant of grace (which he means p 201. of the very Covenant of saving grace, not of any meer outward Covenant) to be to the whole Church and Church seed; and the rest of his hypotheses, pag. 195. are so fully shewed to bee mistakes in this Review, that I think it needless actum agere. And for the tenth section in which he makes a tedious paraphrase, and dictates many things without proof, concerning Col. 2. 10, 11, 12, they proceed upon the mistakes above shewed, as if the Apostle answered this objection, If Gentile believers have not an initiatory seal for them and their children they should not bee so compleat as the Jews in outward Ordinances, and that the Apostle answers that they have Baptism in stead of Circumcision. Hee himself more truly saith, pag. 199. That Baptism is named Col. 2, 12. as an outward mean whereby bee in churched Gentiles especially, come ordinarily to have communion with Christ, and to be compleat in him, and therefore not in outward Ordinances; nor by Baptism can it bee said wee are compleat in outward ordinances, sith himself makes it onely the initiatory seal, but compleatness is not in the enjoyment of the initiatory onely, but of all ordinances.

As for what hee saith Section eleven, for the succession of Baptism to Circumcision, that it is sufficient to prove it that they agree in their common Author Sacramental nature, and end (which yet is false) the answer is good that these things prove it not, sith there are the same or more parities of Baptism and the Passeover, and more disparities between Baptism and Circumcision, which are sufficient to shew that the command concerning the one is not a command concerning the other. For 1 the command bind to baptize infants, it binds onely to baptize males at eight dayes old, and not afore; nor is it any answer to say, The command of Circumcision binds in the substantials of it though not in the circumstantials; For first, if the command bind it binds in every point as well as in one. 2. The state of infancy is as much a circumstance as the eighth day. 3. In the command of Circumcision, I know not any thing which may bee termed substantial, unless hee mean the act of cutting off the fore-skin of the flesh, which hee will not have us tied to, for then wee must not baptize our infants but circumcise them. As for what hee speaks of the command to seal with an initiatory seal of the Covenant indefinite believers and their children, it is a meer figment, as hath been before shewed. There is nothing else that I conceive needfull to be added in this place, I go on to finish the rest.

SECT. LXXXII.

Notwithstanding Mr. Cs. allegations of Acts 2.38,39. 1 Cor.7.14. Rom. 11.16,24. Mark.10.14. Acts 15.10. Matth. 8.19. the N. T. appears to be silent about Mr. Cs. additional promise, and infants Baptism.

HAving more largely noted the unproved dictates and mistakes of Mr. Carter hitherto, I shall be briefer in the rest To what he saith pag. 81, 82, 83, 84. there needs no more to bee said but this, that the blessing upon posterity which Mr. C. imagines, might have been signified, though adult persons onely had been circumcised, we have plain Scriptures which warrant us to alter circumcision wholly and abolish it, besides which we know no other command *Gen.*17.9. the texts Acts 8. 12. Gal 3.27 28. do as plainly shew that Baptism is to be of none but believers and that but adult persons are to be baptized, as that women are to be baptized, if Circumcision were a priviledge *Acts.*7.8. we have abundant warrant to take it away; nor doth the text Rom. 11.29. hinder it, which is not meant of outward priviledges, which are common to elect and reprobate (as the priviledge of Circumcision was) but of saving grace, to wit election and effectual calling, and therefore is palpably abused by Mr. C. to prove that God takes not away the outward priviledge from his people now, which was by circumcision, we justly require a precept or example in the N. T to warrant infant Baptism, no command of a meer positive right of the Old Testament, being a rule to us about a meer positive right of the new, as is fully proved by me in the 2d. part of this Review, Sect. 2, 3.

What Mr. C. saith pag. 85, 86, 87, 88, 89. That the N. T. is not altogether silent in this matter, because of Peters words, Acts 2. 38, 39. is false. For neither is there a word Acts 2. 38, 39. of Mr. Cs. imagined additional promise of making every believer a blessing, so as to cast ordinarily elect children on elect parents, nor that the application of the initial seal is to signifie this promise, nor that the application of it to infants is of the substance of this Covenant nor that the command Gen. 17. 9. is yet a command that lieth upon Abrahams spiritual seed now in the New Testament, nor that Baptism is now in the room of Circumcision, and is the very same in substance for us, nor if Mr. Cs. exposition were granted, would any of these follow, but the contrary. For first, if the promise bee the same with that vers. 17. out of Joel, yet sure it is not the same with Mr. Cs. additional promise, the promise of receiving the holy Ghost being not all one with this, that the parent believing shall bee a blessing to his posterity as Mr. C. fancies, the promise of receiving the Holy Ghost being of a thing terminated on the receiver, but Mr. Cs. additional promise of a thing convayed to posterity, the promise of receiving the Holy Ghost beeing as well, if not chiefly to the children, Acts. 2. 17, 18. but the additional promise of Mr. C. is onely to the parent. 2. Were the promises the same, yet this would not serve Mr. Cs. turn, but bee against him. For if the promise Acts 2. 39. be the same with that vers. 17, 18. then it is a promise to children of dreaming dreames, seeing visions, and prophesying, but this cannot be meant of infant children, it neither was so fulfilled in the Apostles days, nor in any after time, it would be a prodigy to hear an infant prophesie, much less is it true of the ordinary gifts of the spirit, v. 18. 3 The limitation also is against him, For if it be true which he saith p. 88. That Peter maketh the Gentiles case parallel with the Jews, and saith that the same promise did also belong to them yet with the same limitation, namely, to so many of them onely as the Lord our God shall call, implying that it is an effectual call to faith and repentance, that gave to any such a priviledge, either Jew or Gentile, and p. 87. the words of the Apostle cannot be meant, that the promise did belong to them and their children onely as Jews, Abrahams natural seed, but as believers, and upon their conversion (which I conceive true) then it is false that it belongs to infants as the natural seed of their parents, though believers, and therefore the promise Act. 2. 39. is not Mr. Cs. additional promise, which is of believing parents being a blessing to posterity, nor is the promise or imagined priviledge consequent thereupon, belonging to infants until they repent and believe. 4. That which hee saith p. 87. that Act. 2. 38. is an invitation to repenting and believing Jews to be baptized they and their children, is so far from being for his purpose, that it is manifestly against it. For if the invitation be of every one to repent first, and then every of them so repenting to be baptized, then it is not an invitation to infants to be baptized, nor of parents to baptize them. Yea, this is so apparent in the Text that the very words are directed expressly to those persons who were pricked in their hearts, and said Men and brethren what shall we do, that they should be every of them baptized, v.38. without so much as mentioning their children in the invitation. Nor doth any thing after done by them, v.41. &c. shew that they understood that they were directed by Peter to cause their children, whether infant or adult, to be baptized upon their repentance and believing onely. Yea, if as Mr. C. saith, John Baptist had cleared that point, *Matth.*3.8,9. that to the Jews as Abrahams seed natural Baptism did not belong, it belongs not now to a believers seed. But the truth is, Mr. Cs. exposition is in many things false or uncertain. It is uncertain whether the promise Acts 2.39. be the same with that which is mentioned v.17,18. or that v.30. of which I have spoken enough before. It is false that the promise Acts 2.17,18. can be meant of ordinary gifts. For the Apostle saith v.16. that what was spoken by the Prophet was the thing they then saw performed, which was speaking with tongues v.4,11. the great things of God, which was extraordinary; and if the promise v.17,18. had included ordinary gifts, it had been impertinently alledged to shew the fulfilling of it then in those miraculous gifts. Nor doth Mr. C. prove it to be so meant. For 1. though the last days in Scripture signifie all that space of time from the comming of Christ in the flesh to the end of the world, 1 *Tim.*4.1. 2 Tim. 3.1. *Heb.*1.2. & 9.26. yet it follows not the promise is yet in fulfilling, it is sufficient to verifie the prophecy that it hath been fulfilled in any part of the last days. 2. Nor is there any thing v.18. to prove the prophesying there to be a distinct thing from the prophesying, v.17. or prophesying in either to be an ordinary gift, or common to all Gods servants. Nor do *Rev.*19.10. compared *Rev.*12.17. or *Rev.*1.9. prove that every believer hath the spirit of prophecy. For Johns suffering for the testimony of Jesus may be understood, yea being distinct from the word of God *Rev.*1.9. seems to be meant of his giving testimony of Jesus as an Apostle or Propher extraordinary; and the having the testimony of Jesus, *Rev.*12.17. being distinct from keeping the commandments of God, imports the testimony there meant to be of that which was testified by extraordinary revelation, against which the Dragon warred, and a blessing is to the observers, *Rev.*1.3 And that *Rev.*19.10. is meant of those who had extraordinary revelation, is manifest, in that *Rev.*22.9. where the same thing is expressed, and there what is *Rev.*19.10. thy brethren which have the testimony of Jesus, is, thy brethren the prophets, and the prophets are distinct from them that keep the words of that book. Besides, if every believer had the spirit of prophecy, then every believer should be a prophet, and should be set by God in the Church next after Apostles, afore Teachers; which doth expressly gainsay the Apostle, 1 *Cor.*12.28,29. and fully proves the prophesying mentioned 1 *Cor.*14.

to be no ordinary gift, which every believer hath. Nor doth it follow, the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophesie, therefore every testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophesying the speech being indefinite, not universal; and the words being the speech of the Angel, shewing wherein he was fellow-servant to John, plainly intimate he meant it of the special testimony of Jesus which he was fellow servant to John in, as the Title of the Book shews, Rev. 1. 1. The Revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave to him to shew to his servants what things must shortly be, and sending signified them by his Angel to his servant John. I omit what Piscator conceives in his scholie on the place, that the words are to be read in an inverted order thus, the spirit of prophesie is the testimony of Jesus, that is, which is received from him. Nor is it true, that the promise Ioh. 16. 13. is to all believers, however Preachers do so often misapply it, but to the Apostles. And it may be doubted, whether the words 1 Ioh 2. 20, 27. be meant of all believers, or of those that were strong or well instructed by John as his little children, v. 14. and if it be meant of all believers, yet it must be understood with limitation of all things necessary to salvation, or of all things needfull to withstand the seducers he mentions, not a word that mentions their prophesying. Nor doth Joh. 7. 39. prove every believer a prophet; nor may it be gathered from 1 Thes. 5. 19, 20. that such preaching, which we must suppose may bring us something that is not good, is called prophesying, but that something may be termed prophesying which is not, and therefore the spirits are to be tried whether they be of God, for many false prophets are gone out into the world, as John speaks, 1 Epist. 4. 1.

Nor is it true, that Peter exhorts the Jews, Act. 2. 38. to repent, that is to go on as they had begun. For though they had some horrour of conscience, v. 37. yet not repentance, unto which Peter exhorts, v. 38. nor doth any word used by Peter intimate that they had begun to repent. And what Mr. C. adds to the clause to as many as the Lord our God shall call, not onely to them, but also to their children, is too bold dealing with the Scripture, there being not a word in the Text which implieth that addition, and therefore is not justified by his allegations of Psal. 1. 6. Prov. 10. 24. What other arguments for Mr. Cs. purpose have been urged from Act. 2. 38, 39. have been largely answered already. I go on.

Mr. C. adds, p. 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99. a large discourse, in which 1. there is p. 97. a confession which doth invincibly prove infant Baptism to be will worship, and his speech false which he used p. 84. that the New Testament is not altogether silent in this matter; and it is this. Whoever shall confine himself onely to the N. T. to find out the law of Gods worship and service, he shall never find it, not onely as to infant Baptism but also to all other Ordinances whatsoever For if infant Baptism be not to be found in the N. T. then the N. T. is altogether silent about that matter; and if it be not there, then it is will worship, there being no law about a meer positive rite or ceremony in force to us Christian Gentiles now, which was given to the Jews in the Old Testament, as I have proved, Exam. par. 3. sect. 12. pag. 116, 117. Review, par. 2. sect. 2, 3. 2. There is in the same p. 97. a false and dangerous speech, that Christ spake so little in his N. T. concerning the law which is the rule which he hath set for his service of his house; namely, because he could look upon that, for the greatest part, to be done already, to wit, in the Old Testament. Which if true, then the laws about the ceremonies of the Jews are our rule, we are still under the yoke of bondage, popish, prelatical ceremonies are still justifiable, a Bishop or Archbishop above Presbyters and Bishops, appeal to Synods, their power to decide controversies, to excommunicate, a national Church constitution, are still to be retained, for these, or that which was proportionable to these, was according to the Rule of Gods house then. Nor is there a word in any of the Scriptures which Mr. C. alledgeth, for this his purpose.

Not Luke 16. 16. the meaning whereof is not, as Mr. C. fancies, That in the times before John was the season to instruct men in the law, since in the Gospel; but as it is Mat. 11. 13. All the prophets and the law until John prophesied, that is, foretold of Christs comming as future; but the Kingdome of God, εὐαγγελίζεται ἀπ' ἐκεῖνου, Luke 16. 16. from then is Evangelized, or told as good tidings already begun to be, as Diodati annot. on Mat. 11. 13. Johns prerogative above the precedent prophets is, that they have only foretold and described things to come, but he hath delivered the present salvation, and in him is begun the Evangelical Ministery, and the legal and figurative Ministery is ceased. Yet if Mr. Cs. exposition were allowed, it proves not that in the Law or Old Testament the rule about the service or meer positive worship of God in the N. T. is set, but rather the contrary; for if that were the season then for it, and now is the season for another thing, it follows, that it is unseasonable to take a rule for Gods house in meer positive worship from the Old Testament.

The alledging Psal. 78. 1. by Mat. 13. 3, 9, 25. proves not that a rule for rituals is to be fetcht from the Old Testament, although it may be usefull for to prove doctrines about the Gospel, Gods providence, moral duties, &c.

Though it be granted which Mr. C. concludes pag. 96. the general nature of the Law to be one and the same to the people of God under both Testaments, (which is easily yeilded sith the general nature is invariable, and the same to all for ever) yet it followes not that the Laws about ceremonies are the same to the people of God under both Testaments, if so, we are still under the yoke of Circumcision and the Legal rites, and under the Law. And indeed Mr. C. hath in this thing vented many false and dangerous speeches, that to us in Christ the Law hath been as it were incorporated with the Gospel, as thereby become part of the covenat of grace the Law given by Moses is called the Testament of Christ, as well as the Law given to us by Christ himself; that the Old Testament, this the New, and both confirmed by his blood; that in the type by the blood of Bulls and Goats, this in the answer-type by his own blood. And yet he saith, the Apostle Rom. 10. 6 applieth Deut. 30. 12, 14. to the Gospel in opposition to the Law, as in it self considered without the Gospel, or as a covenant of works; which words are contrary to his former. For if the Gospel be opposed to the Law by the Apostle, as it is in it self considered without the Gospel, is a covenant of works; then the Law is not incorporated with the Gospel, or thereby become part of the covenant of grace, nor is the Law given by Moses called the Testament of Christ, nor confirmed by his blood, but the blond of Bulls and Goats, ill termed Christs bloud, being opposed Heb. 9. 12. In like manner it is a dangerous assertion which he hath pag. 95. In the covenant of workes the Law was, Do this and live; but in the covenant of grace it is, Do this in the strength of Christ and live: which if right, we live, that is, are justified (for so his words following explain it) by the doing the works of the law in the strength of Christ; which (if I do understand it) is the very doctrine of Bellarmine, Tom. 4 de justific. l. 1. c. 19. and other Papists, saying the Apostle excludes not works done after grace by faith from justification, but afore faith: Which Protestant Divines commonly refute, as Pareus in his Castigations, Ames in his Bellarm. enerv. Chamier, Tom. 3. paustr. lib. 22. c. 2. Abbots defence of Perkins, p. 502. Rivet, sum contr. tract. 4. qu. 10. Pemble vind. Fidei, sect. 2. c. 3. sect. 4. c. 1, 2. alledging the Apostles words concerning Abraham, who had not to glory before God, nor was justified by works, Rom. 4. 1, 2, &c. And me thinks Mr. Carters next words contradict his former, when he saith, Our state and condition as subjects of his Kingdome, dependeth not upon our keeping the Law but upon free grace in Christ by faith. But of this by the way. That which he alledgeth about the term Gods house, 1 Tim. 3 15. 1 Cor. 6. 16. and separate, Act. 13. 2. 2 Cor. 6. 17. that we cannot understand them without the Old Testament, though it were true, yet proves no more but this, that in explaining the meaning of words allusive to things there described, the Old Testament is necessary; but not that which is to be proved, that in observing the rites of the N. T. we are to fetch rules and commands by way of Analogy from the ritual commands of the old.

Mr. C. adds, p 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112. something more about the Texts 1 Cor. 7. 14. Rom. 11. 24. Mar. 10. 14. Acts 15. 10. Mat. 28. 19. which having been so largely handled in the former parts of this Review, I need onely to refer the Reader thither. Yet I add, it is but said without any proof, that 1 Cor. 7. 14. that children are termed holy, because they come under the word of blessing from God, in as much as that word was confirmed not onely unto Abraham, but also to all believers, Gen. 22. 17. 18. That which God blesseth he sanctifieth, and separateth from that which is common or unclean. For 1. there's not a word brought to shew that ever any child is in Scripture termed holy by reason of such an indefinite promise to believing parents. 2. Nor that the scope, analysis, allusion in the Text leads to such an exposition. 3. Nor doth it follow, that because God blessed and sanctified the Sabbath day therefore what God blesseth he sanctifieth: God blessed Noah and his sons, Gen. 9. 1. yet all of them were not sanctified; yea, many Texts of Scripture apply blessings to unsanctified persons, Psal. 107. 38. Ierem. 12. 1. much less is it true, that that who is termed holy or sanctified is blessed, the unbeliever is in the text sanctified as the children holy, yet not blessed. 4. That this exposition is farre from the Apostles scope and arguing, is so largely demonstrated in the first part of this Review and elsewhere, that I judge it superfluous to refute further these unprooved dictates heere.

I deny not that the Jews Rom. 11. 24. are termed natural branches by birth according to the Covenant of God with Abraham, the Gentiles the wild Olive by nature as neglected by God, yet it is not true that ever the Gentiles ingrafted are made natural branches, sith they never descend from Abraham the root by natural generation, and though it bee true they enjoy saving graces which the believing Jews had, called v. 17. the fatnesse of the Olive tree, yet it is not true that the Gentile believers children enjoy the outward priviledges the Jews had by birth, or are any of them ingraffed and partakers of the Olive tree but the elect and believers, or that they are to be accounted holy by us, till God hath purified their hearts by faith, Acts. 15. 9. And as we cannot say certainly any infant of a believer is inherently holy, so neither can we say they are any of them holy as separated to God and to bee received into Church relation, till they profess the faith, such promise and purpose of election as Mr. C. imagins being no where to be found, and if it were it is not sufficient to make them relatively holy in Church relation, without profession of faith by each person so accounted, there being no rule whereby we are to baptize any but disciples, upon their own profession so judged, no not though God had made such a covenant to each believer as Mr. C. imagins: But we are to baptize persons who profess the faith, though wee know not them to be inherently holy, or in the Covenant of grace.

Mr. Cs. other reason pag. 103. why such children are by the Apostle called holy, because they are not onely within the Covenant of Abraham, but also are appointed of God to be a subject recipient of the seal of that Covenant is another unproved dictate and refuted by the same reasons by which the former is refelled.

What Mr. C. urgeth against my sense of holy that is legitimate, 1 Cor. 7. 14. that it had been but affirming the thing, is shewed to be false in the first part of this Review sect. 16. And it is false which he imagins that the Apostle thus reasoned, that after my exposition except one of the married couple be believer their children are bastards, or that he ascribed the sanctification to the faith of the believer, which and what else hee saith about the scruple from Ezra 10. 11. and 9. 12. is so fully answered in the first part of this Review sect. 11, &c. to the end of the Book, that mee thinks Mr. C. should afore hee had printed his Sermons have viewed them, and not thus have printed these stale objections often answered, without shewing the insufficiency of the answers, if hee meant candidly, as one that endeavoured to cleer the truth.

But Mr. C. takes notice of this objection against the basis of his building, that upon this account not onely children of believers, but also nations must be reputed holy, because the promise is that believers shall bee blessings also unto nations; To this he answers, The case is not the same, for children are immediately under this word of blessing in the family relation, as the people of God in the Church are immediately under that blessing, which the Lord commandeth out of Sion. But as for nations, they are under it in a remote capacity by means of what the Saints are in their families and in the Church. Therefore although such as are of the Church, and the children also of such families are holy, yet it followeth not that therefore the nation should be holy.

Ref. I reply, the objection in form stands thus; They which come under the word of blessing from God, in as much as that word was confirmed not onely unto Abraham, but also to all believers, Gen. 22. 17, 18. & 12. 2, 3. must be reputed holy. This is the effect of Mr. Cs words p. 104. and the main ground of all his discourse for infant Baptism, I subsume. But nations, yea all nations come under the word of blessing from God, in as much as that word was not onely confirmed unto Abraham, but also to all believers, Gen. 22. 17, 18. & 12. 2, 3. and if the word families bee taken (as Mr. C. seems to take it) for households, and all households, then the same objection is concerning, all in households, servants, wives as well as children, they come under the blessing according to Mr. Cs. exposition; Ergo, according to Mr. Cs. arguing and exposition, nations, yea all nations, families, households, all in them are holy and to be baptized, which being absurd his opinion is also absurd. The minor is in the texts, and Gal 3. 8. as Mr. C. expounds them, Ergo, the conclusion followes from his own principles. His answer is neither true nor pertinent. Not true, for children are not immediately under this word of blessing in the family relation, nor the people of God in the Church (meaning the visible) are immediately under that blessing, but onely believers in the families or Church, as the Apostle determines, Gal. 3. 8, 9. Nor according to Mr Cs. exposition are the children more immediately under the word of blessing as confirmed to Abraham, then the wife, servants, sojourners, neighbours. For the children are not under the blessing but as the children of believers, and so according to his own exposition pag. 37. Gods choise shall be by Families and Nations, so that he will ordinarily cast the lot of the Saints in Neighbourhoods and places together, and if so the blessing or choise is as immediately promised to Nations, neighbourhoods, others in the same house as to children, nor are the nations in a more remote capacitie then the Saints in the families and in the Church. Nor is the answer pertinent if it were true: For the major proposition, which is his own, is not limited to them that come under the word of blessing immediately in his sense, for then hee should exclude nations, neighbourhoods, families, contrary to the text, which mentions the blessing of all kindreds and nations, and not onely the children, and to his own exposition which extends it to neighbourhoods and places together.

Mr. C. not trusting to this, saith; To this I add, that children are in the power of parents and at their disposing; and so as when they, by their sanctification, or being made holy, give up themselves to God by faith, faith, and obedience to his Ordinances, their children are therein vertually given up also, in as much as a believer in some respect giveth up to God together with himself all in his power. Now this cannot be said of any nation whatsoever.

Answ. But 1. The parents giving up all to God is not that which makes Children to be holy neither according to truth, for they are made holy by Gods act whither of Covenant or other act of consecration or separation to himself, not by mans act of giving up by vow or otherwise to God, yea if the act of mans giving up all in his power to God, makes children holy, it makes servants, cattle holy to God, nor according to Mr. C. himself, who ascribes it to Gods election, and word of blessing 2. If this be the way of making holy, by giving up all at his disposing to God, then a believer at his first conversion makes holy to God himself, for he giveth himself to God, makes holy to God persons not yet begotten, and so visible Churchmembers according to Mr. B. subjects recipient of the seal of the Covenant, according to Mr. C. pag. 103. yea by this reason a believers horse may bee said to bee holy to to God, and baptizable. 3. This addition takes away his former answer. For if the giving up all to God in his power at his disposing by the believer make them holy, children are no more immediately holy then servants, wife, &c. all being together given up to God in one act whether vertually or formally. 4. If a believers giving up to God together with himself all in his power, and at his disposing make them holy, then a believing King and State do make the whole nation holy who are their subjects and so the objection stands good, that the whole nation is according to Mr. Cs. conceit to be reputed holy

But Mr. C. saith, "It will be objected yet further, that the Jews are "said to be holy, even the whole people of the Jews, who now are unbe- "lievers, Rom 11. 16. yet have they no right to baptism; and therefore "that this holiness of the children, 1 Cor. 7. 14. be it from their interest "in the covenant of God with Abraham is no argument for infant bap- "tism, because the unbelieving Jews also are supposed by us to be holy "upon the same account, and holiness to be taken in the same sence in "both places.

Answ. This objection is mine in my Exercit. sect. 5. but otherwise then Mr. C. here sets it down. For 1 it is not there brought as an objection by it self, but as a reason of my denial of this proposition universally understood, They who are holy with Covenant holiness may be baptized. 2. I did not say the whole people of the Jews, who now are unbelievers, but the elect of the Israelites not yet called are holy in respect of the Covenant, and are not yet therefore to be baptised. Yet neither to the objection as mine, nor as framed by himself, doth Mr. C. give a sufficient answer. For he grants the two places 1 Cor. 7. 14. Rom. 11. 16. are parallel, and in that sense they have been both above alledged to prove that branch of Gods covenant with Abraham concerning a blessing upon posterity, in order to the multiplying of believers. And yet it is as true, that there is a great difference between them. Now this grant is enough to prove that persons or people may be federally holy, and yet not baptizable, which is the objection. Nor doth the difference which he imagines (if there be such a difference) in the two places, any thing at all infringe it. For whether federal holiness in one place bee ascribed to a whole people in respect of a part or to particular persons, the connexion between federal holiness and baptizability, is shewed to be null; and the major denied not true universally understood, and so the objection is confirmed by this grant, not infringed.

Yea whereas Mr. C. pretends the difference to bee great between the places, the very thing hee assignes makes no difference. He saith, The Apostle saith expresly 1 Cor. 7. 14. of such particular persons that they are holy, but of Rom. 11. 16. the scope of the Apostle is to set forth the kind or sort of people, namely Jewes, not the particular persons that should bee called. But herein hee opposeth himself in the words next before, where hee thus makes the Apostle to intend both; Thus wee are to understand that of the Apostle Rom. 11. when hee saith, of the people of the Jewes that they are holy, namely, what properly and peculiarly belongeth to a part, even to those of them who either then were, or afterwards should bee converted, hee ascribeth to the whole, and in respect of that part hee calleth the whole body of that people holy. Now if hee call a part holy which should bee called, he sets forth the particular persons. And 1 Cor. 7. 14. sets out the kinde or sort of children as well as the particular persons, whether after Mr. Cs. opinion, the children of believers, or after mine, the children of married persons. And that which he argues makes against him for me. For if that which is ascribed to the whole people belongeth by a synecdoche to a part, even those who are or shall be converted, then what is said either Gen 12. 2,3. or 22. 17,18. or Rom. 11. 16,17, 24. of families, nations, branches, lump, may be understood synecdochically of a part of families, nations or people, and those believers as Paul Gal. 3. 8, 9. determines as converts as Mr. C. and so not children of believers, much less infants necessarily included in the families, nations, branches ingrafted, lump that is holy, and consequently all Mr. Cs. arguing, made void by his own concession, which hitherto he hath framed from Abrahams Covenant to prove infant Baptism. And what he argues, That the lump which is termed holy Rom. 11. 16. and the whole people termed beloved v. 28. is to bee understood of the better part, and of those that were then unborn, and of such a lump as should have a being successively, and part after part, and so cannot bee actually holy then when the Apostle spake, it doth all exactly agree with my explication of the ingrafting of the branches in my Apol. sect. 14. in the first part of this Review sect. 1, 2, &c. And doth well serve to answer the arguments for the ingrafting parent and child into the visible Church christian against the sense I give for the ingrafting into the invisible Church, by giving of faith according to election. Nor did I ever say, the Apostles meaning Rom. 11. 16. was that those particular persons of the Jews who persist in unbelief, or that the whole people of the Jews are now in the times of the New Testament holy in any sense whatever, but grant they are broken off from the holy root, vers. 20. are cast away, vers. 15. are enemies, and so unclean and prophane, and therefore not holy, v. 28. yet this meant, but of some, v. 17. a part, v. 25. and all these things do well accord together, and with the perseverance of Saints asserted against Arminians, sith the people of the Jews are not by me asserted to be broken off from the invisible Church of elect and true believers in respect of what particular persons broken off were in their own persons, but in respect of what the particular persons were in a former age of the same nation or people.

Mr. C. p 109. imagines that Christ saith, of little children is the Kingdome of God, because of his fained additional promise: but he brings not a word to prove it, nor doth the Text yeeld any proof that they were believers children; and I have proved the Kingdome of God is meant of that of glory. Review, par. 2. sect. 18.

And for his conceit, that Christ bid suffer them to come to him because of the additional promise of Mr. C. it is without proof, and not agreeable to Mr. Cs. own conceit. For if Christ would intimate, that this is part of the Gospel of the Kingdome, that believers should be blessings to their children, namely, so as they should be means of their conversion, he should rather have directed the Apostles to suffer them to be brought to their parents to be educated, then to himself to lay hands on them. And Christs anger against his Disciples argues no such intimation, nor his saying that of them is the Kingdome of God, proves their right to Baptism as doth the receiving the Holy Ghost, Act. 10. 47. For that shewed Cornelius actually a believer, so did not Christs speech of the little children, which expressed not their present but future estate, as is proved, Review, par. 2. sect. 19. Nor is there a word brought by Mr. C. to prove that Christs command was given to his Disciples for a perpetual obligation to the Disciples of Christ, in all ages then to come, to bring infants to Christ in an external way, and therefore by Baptism. For though it were recorded after his ascension, yet it follows not it was recorded to learn this, to have a way of bringing infants to Christ by Baptism, there being something else to be learned by it, and it is rather a sure proof that Christ did not teach that by his command, sith neither then nor after do we find the Apostles did baptize an infant; and the phrase of comming to him cannot import Baptism, sith he did not baptize, Joh. 4. 1, 2. and if any standing rule were intended by Christs command, it should be rather laying on hands and praying for infants, then baptizing them.

Though it be granted, that to whom Christ is a King he is also a Prophet, yet it follows not, that infants being such as of whom is Christs Kingdome, they are his Disciples as meant Mat. 28. 19. much less that they are made Disciples, when their parents are converted, because they are then in the way of the Spirits teaching, Christ being a Prophet to other then Disciples meant Mat. 28. 19. Nor is there the least hint Act. 15. 10. of infants being Disciples, and the notion of Disciples by the parents conversion, or by being in the way of the spirits teaching (which yet is not shewed, but fancied by Mr. C.) are meer devised whimzies refuted by me, Review, par. 2. sect. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. Nor is any sufficient answer given hereby, or by Mr. C. elsewhere, or any other, or ever will be to the argument as brought by me against infant baptism, Review par. 2 sect. 5. and elsewhere.

What

What Mr. C. saith, "That more might be said about those words "in answer to it, namely, that in the words Baptizing them, Mat. 28. "19. we have by a synecdoche, a part for the whole (an usual form of "speech in the Scripture) for we know the Apostles commission did "extend as well to a setting up of other Ordinances as of Baptism. "Therefore when he saith, Go teach all nations baptizing them, it is as "if he had said, Go teach them, and enter them into the practise of the "worship of the Gospel; of which among other things the application "of the token of Abrahams Covenant to infants may be a part, any thing "in that place contained notwithstanding.

Answ. 1. Such a synecdoche in any institution of a rite is nowhere to be found as this which Mr. C. dreams of, baptizing them into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, that is, enter them into the practise of the worship of the Gospel, not only Baptism, but also breaking of bread, &c. 2. We know the Apostles commission did extend as well to the setting up of other Ordinances, viz. breaking of Bread, 1 Cor. 11.23. as of Baptism, but not in the word baptizing, Mat. 28.19. but in the word teaching them to observe all that I have commanded you, v. 20. 3. There is this very thing which Mr. C. himself saith against baptizing infants, it is as if he had said, Go teach them, and enter them into the practise of the worship of the Gospel: For sure Christ did not bid them teach infants, nor do I think Mr. C. would have them entred into the practise of the Gospel worship, but onely baptized. And so Mr. C. answer is a strengthening of the argument. Enough in answer to Mr. C. being unwilling to make more exceptions on passages which need correction; why I have said so much, the reason is given, sect. 77.

SECT. LXXXIII.

Interest in the Covenant gave not title to Circumcision, as Mr. M. in his 4th. conclusion would have it.

IN the Defence of his 4th. and 5th. concl. against my Examen Mr. M. saith, he will contract; and accordingly I shall be brief in my reply. He grants the order of circumcising infants is repealed, as I answered in examining his 4th. concl. but would have it added, that by Gods order Baptism succeeds in the room of it, which I have refuted. Then upon my saying that Circumcision was not a seal of the spiritual part of the Covenant, he censures this as pure Anabaptism, leaving out injuriously my limitation, to all that were circumcised, which if fairly added had cleared me; and perhaps if the so called Anabaptists had been rightly understood, they had been found as innocent as my self in this thing: I see enough in Pædobaptists dealing with me, to shew how great likelihood there is that the words of the Anabaptists in Germany were perverted.

Mr. M. p. 180, 181. excepts against me for saying that Abram and

Esau had no part in the Covenant, denies that Ishmael had no part in it, when he himself grants that they did never partake of the spiritual graces of the Covenant, which is all one with that which I say, that the Covenant of grace was not made to them, they had no part in it; For sure they to whom the Covenant of grace is made, and have part in it, are all partakers of the spiritual graces of the Covenant, or else God keeps not his promise; and for this I bring Gen. 17.19,20,21. Rom. 9.6,7,8. Gal 4.28,29. (though I needed not, having Mr. *M*s own confession) and therefore it is most false he saith, I bring not one shadow of a proof for what I say.

But Mr. M. thinks to maintain his speech, that Ishmael had part in the Covenant, in that he was reckoned by circumcision to belong to the Covenant, and obliged to see after the spiritual part of it, to have his heart circumcised, and to believe in the Messiah that was to come of Abrahams seed.

Answ. 1. It is contrary to Gen. 17.19,20,21. to say that Ishmael by Circumcision did belong to the Covenant, it runs upon this palpable mistake, that every one that was circumcised had thereby the Covenant sealed to him. 2. Those that were uncircumcised, all the people of the world were obliged to seek after the spiritual graces of the Covenant, to be holy, to believe, yet this doth not prove they had a part in the Covenant, and therefore this answer of Mr. M. is frivolous. And so likewise is that which he saith in answer to my words (not rightly set down, my words were not, right to Evangelical promises or any other benefit) that no benefit of the Covenant was the proper reason (I added, and adequate) why these or those were circumcised, but only Gods precept; though Gods command was the cause of the existence of the duty of Circumcision, yet the Covenant of grace was the motive to it, and these two are well consistent together. In which 1. he shews not whose motive it was, Gods or mans. If he mean it was Gods to command it, it is nothing to the purpose to shew right to the Covenant of grace to have been the proper adequate reason of the person to be circumcised: if mans motive, it is false, whether we understand it of the circumcised, who were infants, and therefore had no motive to it, but were passive onely, or the circumciser; for in Abrahams circumcising Ishmael Mr. M. saith I have given a very good instance to prove, that some may receive the outward sign of the Covenant, and a visible standing in the Church, though he who administers the seal might by revelation know the inward grace is wanting. 2. Were his answer granted, yet it proves not the contrary to my speech, but confirms it, though this point be one of the hinges on which his first & main argument turns: For if it be true that the adequate reason of persons circumcising was not right to the Evangelical promises or other benefit in the Covenant, but Gods precept onely, then the pillar of Mr. *M*s argument falls to the ground, All that are in the covenant are to be sealed, it being onely true thus, All in the Covenant, whom God hath commanded to be sealed are to be sealed.

What he saith after, that I grant what is in controversie, because I grant men may have a visible membership in the Church, though they be not elect or sanctified, it is alike frivolous, it being never in controversie; But whether whether any may be said to be in or under the Covenant of grace, or to have the Covenant of grace made to them who are non elect, and never sanctified.

That which Mr. M. p.182. calls a piece of odd Divinity, that Circumcision should seal righteousnes to them who never are circumcised, not reputed so, nor capable of being circumcised, nor might lawfully be circumcised, being understood as I express it of Abrahams personal Circumcision is the Apostles express Divinity, Rom. 4.11,12. whose steps, say New England Elders in answer to the 3d. and 4th. position, p.65. rightly, in that place is not to define a Sacrament, nor to shew what is the proper adequate subject of the Sacrament; but to prove by the example of Abraham, that a sinner is justified before God not by works, but by faith, &c. Nor is this any more odd Divinity then Mr. Ms. who asserts women virtually circumcised in the males.

That which he saith, that visible professours have a visible right to the spiritual part of Circumcision, I conceive false: For though they had a right to Circumcision or Baptism, which they might receive of men, yet they had no right at all to forgiveness of sins, justification, adoption, salvation, which are onely from God, and onely true believers had right to.

That which he saith, p.182. that Circumcision was given the Jews in reference to their Church state, not in reference to their civil state, is not true, but said upon a mistake, as if the Church state and Civil were different in the Jewish Commonwealth.

That which he confesseth, that the formal reason of their being circumcised was the command of God, is enough to shew that interest in the Covenant did not give right to Circumcision, but the command of God; and therefore without shewing a command for infant Baptism, this is no good argument, they are in the Covenant therefore to be baptized, which enervates all Mr. Ms. dispute.

But he adds. "The Covenant of grace, or their Church state was the "motive to it, and the thing it related to; and this fully answers the "objection; for it was commanded and observed as that which was a "priviledge and duty belonging to the Covenant, and they used it as "being in Covenant, the objection is wholly taken off.

To which I reply, 1. The Covenant of grace might be in some sense, and the Church state of Abrahams house in some respect, that is, to bee a sign of it, might be the end why God appointed Circumcision to Abrahams house; but motive, that is, impulsive cause, I see not how the Covenant of grace and the Church state can be termed, there being nothing but his own will, according to the counsel of which he worketh all things, Ephes. 1.11. that can be rightly termed a motive to him to command it. 2. But be it in the sense I allow it termed motive, or end, and a duty belonging to the Covenant as a sign of it, and the persons who used it, as Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob used it as being in Covenant; yet neither is it true that all that used it were in the Covenant of grace, nor was it appointed as a duty to be used by them to all and they onely that were in the Covenant of grace, nor did God by the use uſe of it, ſeal, ſignifie, aſſure or conſer an eſtate in the Covenant of grace to every perſon whom hee appointed to bee circumciſed, and therefore no part of the objection is taken off, that Circumciſion was not the ſeal of the Covenant of grace to all circumciſed perſons, but was appointed to perſons not under the Covenant of grace, and denied to perſons that were, and conſequently Mr. Ms. propoſition not true; All that were in the Covenant were to bee ſealed.

When Mr. M. ſaid, perſons were bound to conform to the manner of adminiſtration, and this manner of adminiſtration he made to bee temporal bleſſings and puniſhmenst. I took it he meant they ſhould conform to them.

He tels me p. 183. That though I confidently aſſerted heretofore, that Iſhmael, and Eſau and others, were circumciſed for ſome temporal reſpects, that Circumciſion ſealed the temporal or political promiſes, but yet in ſaying they received Circumciſion neither in relation to outward things onely, nor at all either as temporal bleſſings or types, but becauſe God commanded, I do as good as deny it; ſith if they were circumciſed with reſpect to no hing but the command, it ſealed nothing, it was no ſeal at all. To which I reply, I find not that I aſſerted any where that Iſhmael and Eſau were circumciſed for ſome temporal reſpects, and though I alledged Cameron, ſaying, that it ſealed earthly promiſes, yet I never ſaid it ſealed them to Iſhmael and Eſau: Nor do I count it any abſurdity, to ſay it ſealed nothing to them, or it was no ſeal at all to them. And I conceive that Baptiſm which is no ſeal of ſuch earthly promiſes, nor can be a ſeal of ſpiritual and ſaving grace to every natural child of a believer (of which he will not aſſert p. 116. of his Defence there is a promiſe made to them) when it is adminiſtred to reprobates is no ſeal of the Covenant of grace to them, nor any ſeal at all, and that he muſt as well as I do (if he will ſpeak congruouſly to his own doctrine) ſay that ſuch perſons are to bee baptized by reaſon of Gods command and no other. Yet I do not ſay the command of Circumciſion was not in reference to the Covenant of grace, as Mr. M. intimates: but this I ſay, though God commanded Circumciſion, that he might ſignifie Chriſt to come, and Evangelical grace by him, yet neither the circumciſer nor the circumciſed did circumciſe, or were to be circumciſed becauſe of the perſons intereſt in the Covenant of grace, as the proper and adequate reaſon of the duty of Circumciſion, but becauſe of Gods command, and yet I nothing doubt but that in the uſe of it, they and others that were neither circumciſers nor circumciſed, as e gr. women were by faith to look on the Covenant of grace through theſe adminiſtrations, that is to expect Chriſt to come and bleſſing by him, which ſpeeches are very eaſily conſiſtent with my own words and Scripture doctrine, though Mr. M. did not underſtand it.

When Mr. M. alledged that Circumciſion could be no ſeal of Canaan to Proſelites, and I anſwered that yet the Covenant to Abraham had promiſes of temporal bleſſings, and that ſome were to be circumciſed who had no part in the Covenant of grace, he tels me, 1. That he was proving that Circumciſion was no ſeal of the land of Canaan, which I grant, if he mean it to ſome that were circumciſed, yet if he mean it, to none, it is falſe.

2. He grants temporal blessings belong to the Covenant of grace, accord-ing to that 1 Tim. 4. 8. But neither this nor any other Text proves, that the promises of a setled abode in a fruitful land with peace, prosperity, and outward greatness, and dominion therein, is promised to a Christian believer now, as it was to Abraham and Israel after the flesh, Gen. 17. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. but the promise of this life is upon the loss of outward things of a recompense in this life by receiving more, yet with persecution, Mark. 10. 30. which can bee understood of no other then spiritual comforts, which may bee termed temporal blessings distinct from the everlasting life which in the world to come they shall have. 3. It was not his drift to prove that all that were circumcised had part in the spiritual graces of the Covenant, but that they had a visible membership and right to bee reputed as belonging to the Church. But this is not that which hee was to prove that they were in the Covenant of grace.

Lastly, when I excepted against his speech [that Ishmael was really taken into the Covenant of grace, and Esau, till by their Apostasie they discovenanted themselves.] 1. That hee opposed the Apostle Rom. 9. 7, 8. Gal 4. 28, 29. Gen. 17. 19, 20. Heb. 11. 9. To this he replies not. 2. That by this speech he asserts falling from grace, this he denies because but meant by their taking into the Covenant of grace not being under the spiritual grace of the Covenant, but the outward administration.

But 1. this is but non-sense and delusory. For the outward administration is not the Covenant of grace, Circumcision is not the Covenant of grace, nor visible profession, nor indeed could he mean it without trifling and mocking his reader when he argued, Infants of Believers are in the Covenant of grace, therefore are to bee sealed with Baptism or Circumcision. For infants of believers make no visible profession and if his argument were, they were under the outward administration, that is, to be Circumcised or Baptized; and therefore they were to be sealed, that is to be Circumcised or Baptized, is mere trifling, and delusory of the reader, who expects from his words, a proof that Gods promise of righteousness and eternal life by Christ (which is and nothing else the Covenant of grace) is made to every infant child of a believer. 2. If this were Mr. Ms. meaning, Ishmael and Esau did not discovenant themselves, for they did uncircumcise themselves, but shewed that they regarded not the blessing of Isaac.

But saith Mr. M. "I have no doubt but that all indifferent Rea-"ders well enough understand what I meant, by being taken into the "Covenant of grace, even such a taking in as when the Gentiles were "taken in, instead of the Jews who were broken off, they were under the "outward administration, visible professours, had an external calling, "which is Gods act though a common one.

To which I reply, 1. If they were taken into the Covenant of grace as the ingraffed Gentiles, they were elect and true believers, if Esau and Ishmael fell from that state of the Covenant of grace Arminian Apostasie is asserted. 2. Neither the outward administration of Circumcision to Ishmael and Esau, nor their visible profession (whatever it were) was

Gods

Gods act (which Mr. M. denies not taking into the Covenant of grace to be) therefore by neither of these can they with good sense be said to be taken really into the Covenant of grace. 3. What external call which should be Gods act distinct from the outward administration and visible profession mentioned, from which Ishmael and Esau fell, I understand not. 4. What ever external calling it be which he means and terms Gods act, though a common one, sure I am Mr. M. hath not shewed nor can shew that it is a real taking into the Covenant of grace, which I said truly, nor hath Mr. M. disproved or gain-said it, is Gods act, either of election or promise, or some act executing either of these, and the objection still stands good, persons were to bee circumcised who were in the Covenant of grace, Ishmael was appointed to be circumcised, though it were declared Gods Covenant did not belong to him, and therefore the reason of Circumcising persons was not the Covenant of grace, but onely the will and command of God to have it so.

SECT. LXXXIV.

The enlargement of our priviledges, proves not Infant Baptism as Mr. M. in his 5th. conclusion, would have it.

MR. Ms. 5th. Conclusion was, "The priviledges of Believers under "this last and best administration of the Covenant of grace are "many wayes inlarged, made more honourable and comfortable then "ever they were in the time of the Jews administration. For examining of which I set down something about priviledges, which Mr. M. grants, and saith, what's all this to the purpose? I reply, I told him it was to uncover the ambiguity of his speeches, in which all the strength of his conclusion lay.

To what I said, that if he meant his conclusion of priviledges of the substance of the Covenant of grace, it is to be denied: Mr. M. confessed they were the same both to Jews and Gentiles; but in respect of the administration I granted it, hee answers, 1. if this were granted it hurts not him, it's sufficient if the administration be now more comfortable to Believers and their children. To which I reply, that this grant enervates the argument to which this conclusion tends. For if the priviledges of the Covenant of grace belonging to the substance of it be not enlarged, but the same in substance to Jews and Gentiles, then no priviledges of the Covenant of grace are enlarged; for all the priviledges of the Covenant of grace belong to the substance of it, and to true believers or elect onely, the visible membership, and initial seal contended for, were no priviledges of the Covenant of grace, nor such as all believers could claim for their children, they were personal priviledges to the Church of the Jews, and belonging to that administration (as Mr. Ms phrase is) or as I would speak to that peculiar national Church state which God vouchsafed that people, out of special ends and respect to that people, of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came, and consequently by denying those priviledges we deny no priviledges of the Covenant of grace to believers for their children, nor ascribe less grace to them then the Jew had. And if the administration be now more comfortable to believers and their children, it being in that Circumcision and the yoke of the Law are taken away, it follows, it is more comfortable to us, that no such thing as Circumcision was is put on our children. Mr. M. and Pædo. baptists do grosly mistake, as if Circumcision did belong to Jewes and their Children because of their interest in the Covenant of grace, which neither is nor ever will be proved.

2ly. Saith Mr. M. If there be no more honourableness in those priviledges, which belong to the substance of the Covenant, how comes it to pass, that in your answers to those several texts which I and others bring to prove the enlargement of priviledges under this last administration, you interpret them of those priviledges which belong to the substance of the Covenant, or the spiritual part of it?

Answ. In those answers I do not so interpret those texts of those priviledges which belong to the substance of the Covenant, or the spiritual part of it as more honourable then the priviledges belonging to the substance of the Covenant of grace, or spiritual part of it now then to believers afore Christ, but say that the promises of the new Covenant, which is the Covenant of grace, are better then the promises of the Covenant at Mount Sinai, which was the Covenant of works.

Thirdly, saith Mr. M. Seeing that under this last administration these priviledges are communicated not onely with more clearness, but in greater abundance, I wonder you should say they are no more honourable and comfortable now then they were then, is not abundance of grace more honourable and comfortable then a little grace?

Answ. It is, but yet not priviledges belonging to the substance of the Covenant of grace. For this clearness and abundance comes not from the substance of the Covenant of grace, but to use his phrase, from the administration, in respect of which I granted they are many wayes enlarged and made more honourable.

But then saith Mr. M. This will serve our turn well enough; for this was a priviledge belonging to their administration, that their infants were under it as well as themselves; yeild that for ours and the controversie is ended.

Answ. The yeilding that the priviledges of believers under the N. T. are enlarged, more honourable, and more comfortable, in respect of the administration, will not serve Mr. Ms. turn, except it be yeilded of this particular, that the infants of Christian believers are visible Christian Churchmembers, and to be entred by Baptism, as well as the Hebrew infants of and into the Church of Israel by Circumcision, which would indeed end the controversie if yeilded, but was not so by me, who granted priviledges of believers now more enlarged in respect of the administration, because the preaching of the Gospel, which is that whereby the Covenant of grace is administred, is enlarged to Gentiles as well as Jewes, and more honourable, because preached by

Christ

Christ himself, and more comfortable because in plain words without shadows.

Mr. M. adds. "To have nothing in lieu of the administrations "then as they were shadowes of the substance, which is Christ, is "very right: But to say, it is our priviledge to have nothing in lieu "of them as they were external Ordinances to apply Christ, is to say, "it is our priviledge to have no Ordinances to apply Christ to us, and "thereby to make us compleat in him, which were a most absurd thing "to affirm.

Answ. Those external Ordinances applied Christ to them no otherwise then as shadows of the substance, which is Christ; nor doth Mr. M. in his sermon, p. 10, 11. express their administrations of the Covenant of grace otherwise then as figures, signs, types, and sacraments of spiritual things: so that if we have nothing in lieu of them as they were shadows, but Christ, we have nothing in lieu of them as external Ordinances to apply Christ to us; nor did they make us compleat in Christ, nor is it absurd to affirm that no external Ordinances now do.

But saith Mr. M. Circumcision was indeed a part of that administration, and obliged them to the rest of that manner of administration, as Baptism doth now to ours; but did it not also belong to the substance? Answ. No. was it not a seal of the righteousness of faith, of Circumcision of heart, &c. Answ. Abrahams was, not every ones Circumcision. Doth not the seal belong to the thing sealed? the conveyance and seal annexed to it are no part of the purchased inheritance, but do they not belong to it? Answ. They do, but not as of the substance of the thing sealed, or the inheritance purchased, or the Covenant whereby it is promised: but as the sign whereby the futurity of it is confirmed. Now surely he should use non-sense, who should term the sign or seal the substance of the Covenant or thing promised, being neither essential nor integral parts of them, but onely adjuncts, without which they may be or not be entirely.

To my saying, That 'tis so far from being a priviledge to our children to have them baptized, to have Baptism succeed in the stead of Circumcision, that it is a benefit to want it, God not appointing it; "I answer (saith Mr. M.) then belike our priviledges of the Covenant "of grace are so far from being enlarged by enjoying the Sacrament of "Baptism, that it had been a priviledge to have wanted Baptism if God "had not appointed it; and by as good a reason at least you might "have said, that Circumcision was so far from being a privilegde to the "Jews and their children, that it had been a benefit for them to have "wanted it, if God had not commanded it: Sure that is a strange kind "of priviledge, of which I may truly say, that it had been a greater be- "to them who have it, to have wanted it, if the Donor had not com- "manded it.

Answ. Mr. M. by clipping my words hath misrepresented my speech; he hath left out, that Circumcision was a priviledge belonging not to the substance of the Covenant, but to the administration which then was; a priviledge to the Jews in comparison of the heathens, but a burthen in comparison of us, which was in that it signified Christ to come, the obligation of the law; for which reasons I judged it a great priviledge to us and our children, that they have neither it, nor any other thing in the place and use of it, but Christ manifested in the flesh, because if we had any thing in the use of it, Christ must be expected to come in the flesh, and Jesus denied to be the Christ, and we debtors to keep the whole law. And then I determined absolutely, that the want of infant Baptism is no loss to us and our children; not a loss in respect of duty, God having not appointed it; nor of priviledge, God making no promise of grace to be confirmed by it to the infants of believers; which last words being left out by Mr. M. the reason of my words is omitted, and my speech misrepresented; but thus set down Mr. Ms. exceptions appear but cavils. For he supposeth our priviledges of the Covenant of grace are enlarged by enjoying the Sacrament of Baptism; but I know not any priviledges of the Covenant of grace, but effectual calling, justification, adoption, sanctification, glorification; and if there be any other termed saving graces, or which accompany salvation, and to say these are enlarged by enjoying the Sacrament of Baptism, especially when administred to infants, is as much as to say it confers grace ex opere operato. And I grant for us to have wanted Baptism had been a priviledge, God not appointing it, nor promising any thing upon the use of it, nor declaring his acceptance of it, which is the case of infant Baptism. Sure I know none but would think it a burthen to be baptized, or be covered with water, though but for a moment, were it not God commanded it, and accepted of it as a service to him. And the like is true of Circumcision, the want of which, being so painfull, was a benefit, but for the command and promise of God signified by it. Such actions as are no way priviledges, but sins, without Gods precept and promise, it is better to want them then have them, or act them; such is infant Baptism; and if it be in the place and use of Circumcision, it is a heavy burthen, no benefit now, but a yoke of bondage.

I said Mr. M. was to prove either that Circumcision did belong to the substance of the Covenant of grace, and he answers, That Circumcision, though a part of their administration, did yet belong to the substance; not as a part of it, but as a means of applying it: Which speech how frivolous it is, is shewed before, sect. 25. p. 165, 166. and in this section. Or that the want of Circumcision, or some Ordinance in the place and use of it, is a loss of priviledge of the Covenant of grace to us and our children.

To this he saith, "And I have also proved, that though it be a priviledge to have nothing succeed Circumcision, as it bound to that "manner of administration, yet it is a priviledge to have somewhat "succeed it as a seal of the Covenant, in as much as a Covenant with "a seal is a greater benefit then a Covenant without a seal.

Answ. 1. If it be a priviledge to have nothing succeed Circumcision as it bound to that manner of administration, then it is a priviledge to have nothing succeed it in its use, which confirms my before speech carped at by M. M. 2. How vain the talk of Pædobaptists is about Sacraments being being ſeals of the Covenant of grace, is ſhewed before ſect. 31. 3. A Covenant with a ſeal is a greater benefit then a Covenant without a ſeal when there is more aſſurance and better eſtate thereby procured, but if as good aſſurance and eſtate be by a Covenant without a ſeal, it is no greater benefit to have a ſeal, then to have a Covenant without it. 4. There is a ſeal of the Covenant of grace, which ſucceeds Circumciſion as the ſubſtance the ſhadow, and that is Chriſts Cirumciſion, Col. 2. 11. and his bloudſhedding, Mat. 26. 28. Heb. 9. 15. &c. beſides the ſeal of Gods ſpirit.

But ſaith Mr. M. the thing I was to prove was that our priviledges are enlarged, not extenuated; which appears, partly, in that we have freedome in what was burdenſome to them in their manner of adminiſtration: which he meant of Circumciſion by his alledging Act. 15. 10. and thereby it is manifeſt that it is falſe which he ſaid before, that Circumciſion did belong to the ſubſtance of the Covenant as a means of applying it. For that ſpeech doth imply, that the Covenant of grace could not be applied without Circumciſion, for that which is of the ſubſtance of a thing, what way it is of the ſubſtance of it, is neceſſary to the being of that of which it is of the ſubſtance, otherwiſe it were a common accident, not of the ſubſtance of it: But without Circumciſion the Covenant of grace might be applied, yea, according to Mr. M. it is and may be better applied, for otherwiſe our priviledges were not enlarged in being freed from it.

Partly, ſaith Mr. M. becauſe our Covenant is eſtabliſhed upon better promiſes, Heb. 8. 6. To this I anſwered, the Covenant which had not ſo good promiſes was the Covenant at Mount Sinai, v. 9. which was not the Covenant of grace (for then it ſhould have the beſt promiſes, there being no better promiſes then are in the Covenant of grace, nor could it be broken as that was, nor occaſion finding fault as that did;) but it muſt needs be the Covenant of works as the Scripture doth plainly deliver, Rom. 10. 5. Gal. 3. 10, 12, & 4. 24. Heb. 12. 18. &c. and for this I alledged ſome of Mr. Ms. own words in his Sermon, p. 10. That the Law was added not as a part of Abrahams Covenant, that in that giving the Law there was ſomething of the Covenant of works made with Adam in Paradiſe.

To this Mr. M. returns an anſwer, bemoaning me as running into a needleſs and erroneous digreſſion; that he ſaid indeed in his ſermon, that the moral Law was added 430 years after the Covenant was made with Abraham, not as a part of that Covenant, but as a Schoolmaſter to whip them to Chriſt that they finding the impoſſibility of keeping the Law, might more earneſtly long after Chriſt, exhibited in thoſe ſhadows of rites and ſacrifices, &c. But to ſay that this Covenant mentioned Heb. 8. was the Covenant of works, is a moſt erroneous doctrine; look into the Text, and you ſhall find that the Covenant which is there mentioned (which God finds fault with, and calls the firſt Covenant, in oppoſition to this better Covenant) had Ordinances of Divine worſhip, had a Sanctuary a Tabernacle, Prieſts and High Prieſts, Sacrifices, and other rites belonging to the adminiſtration of it. Sir, was this the Covenant of works? I hope you will not own it in your next.

Anſw.

Answ. It is, and I do still own it in the 43d. section of this part of my Review, and do requite Mr. Ms. pitty of me with the like bemoaning his ignorance, and, if I mistake not, the Assemblies errour about this in their Confession of faith, *ch.*7. *art.*5. I have looked into the Texts, and I find Mr. M. mistaken in the meaning of *Gal.*3.24. perhaps following the unnecessary supplement in our last English translation, where is added [to bring us] which the Text hath not, but onely the law was our boy-leader unto Christ, that is until Christ, as *v.*23,25. shew, and the meaning is plain, that the Apostle compares the Law to a teacher, or guide, or overseeer of a child in his minority to which the Israelites were confined, not in respect of its severity as Mr. M. makes it, to whip them to Christ, but as a teacher directing them though imperfectly by figures and types untill Christ, and faith in him were revealed. In like manner he mistakes when he saith, God finds fault with the first Covenant, the words being For complaining of them, *Heb.*8 8. not complaining or finding fault with it: and when it is translated *v.*7. if the first Covenant had been faultless, it is not intimated as if it were faulty, but they were faulty, as vers. 8. shews, and the Covenant is termed non αμεμπτος not from the fault of it, but of them, which occasioned complaints of them, and therefore it were better translated without complaint or plaintless, then faultless. As for what Mr. M. alledgeth from Heb. 9.1. it no more proves that the Covenant at Mount Sinai was the Covenant of Gospel grace, and not of works, then because the tree of life was a symbole, type, or shadow of Christ, or our blessed estate in him, therefore the Covenant made with Adam in Paradise before his fall, was not a Covenant of works, but of Gospel grace; or Noahs Ark typified Baptism, therefore the Covenant with Noah, *Gen.*9. was a Covenant of Evangelical grace. The Covenant of grace and of works are denominated from the promise and condition, not from Gods intent in some things commanded. When our Lord Christ, *Mat.*10.19. told the young man of entring into life, he propounded the Covenant of works, yet he had another end therein, to wit, to try and discover him. Though the commands about the Sacrifices, High Priest, &c. were to typyfie Christ, yet the Law as it was propounded Covenant wise is manifestly declared to be the Covenant of works, *Rom.*10.5. *Gal.*3.10,12. yea, Mr. Ms. own words prove it. For 1. where he cites the addition of the Law, *Gal.*3.17. the Law is not restrained to the moral Law, but contains all the commands of the Sacrifices, &c. as well as the moral Law, which were added because of transgressions, not onely to restrain them, but also for the expiating of some offences against the Law, so as to obtain a partial temporary forgiveness by them, as is manifest from *Levit.*4. &c. Now the whole Law as delivered 430 years after the Covenant with Abraham, is contradistinct to the Covenant confirmed before in Christ, or the promises; therefore as it was a Covenant, Exod. 19.5,8. it was a Covenant of works. 2. If it were not a part of the Covenant with Abraham, it was not the Covenant of grace, for such was Abrahams Covenant; but according to Mr. M. the Law was a part of that Covenant, Ergo. 3. That which was a Schoolmaster to whip, whip, was not the Covenant of grace, for the Covenant of grace doth not terrifie or whip, but such is the Law according to Mr. M. Ergo. 4. That which was impossible to bee kept, was not the Covenant of grace, for that is never broken, but such was the Law or Covenant at Mount Sinai according to Mr. M. Ergo. 5. If in the giving the Law there was something of the Covenant of works made with Adam in paradise, then it was a Covenant of works, this he must grant, unless he will have a mixt Covenant, partly of grace and partly of works, which he opposeth in his answer to me about Abrahams Covenant; But in the giving that Law according to Mr. M. there was something of the Covenant of workes made with Adam in Paradise, Ergo. 6. That which God finds fault with is not the Covenant of grace, but according to Mr. M. God finds fault with it, Ergo. 7. That which is termed the first Covenant in opposition to this Covenant is not the Covenant of grace; But such according to Mr. M. is that at Mount Sinai, Ergo. 8. The Covenant of grace is the better Covenant, But such was not that at Mount Sinai, according to Mr. M. Ergo. And truely I finde so many Protestant Divines terming the Covenant at Mount Sinai the Covenant of works, Perkins on Gal. 4. 24. Pemble of Justification sect. 4. c. 1. Cotton in his way of Congregational Churches cleered p. 46, 47. however in some respect hee will have it to have been a Covenant of grace, yet to the carnal seed saith, it was a Covenant of workes, and proves it out of Paul; And adds, And so have the chiefest German Divines as well as Piscator and Polanus, taken the Covenant on mount Sinai to bee a Covenant of works. See Piscator Ezek. 16. observat. ult. in v. 60. and 62. and Polanus ibidem. and Synt. To. l. 6. c. 33. Pisc. observ. e v. 6. Heb. 8. Dicson paraph. Gal. 4. 21, 22, 23, 24. Hebr. 8. 6, 9. Beeman. Th Exercit. 5. p. 67. De fœdere operum aut legis legimus, Exod 19. 5. Deut. 5. 2. 1 Reg. 8. 21. Jer. 31. 32. Heb. 8. 8, 9, 10. To whom I add my Antagonists Mr. Geree vindic. vindic. p. 9. Mr. Baillee in his Anabaptism, pag. 141. and might do many more if it were necessary. This is enough to shew my doctrine to have been unjustly termed most erroneous by Mr. M. beeing Pauls, Mr. Ms. and others named, and therefore rightly owned by me.

To my words Exam. p. 103. The next Scripture you thus express, The glory of theirs had no glory in respect of ours, 2 Cor. 3. 10. But this passage is plainly meant of the Covenant at Mount Sinai, which is called the letter, v. 6 The ministration of death written and ingraven in stones so glorious, that the children of Israel could not stedfastly behold the face of Moses for the glory of his countenance, which glory was to be done away, v. 7. The ministration of condemnation, v. 9. which I suppose you do not understand of the Covenant of grace, and therefore it is impertinently alledged, Mr. M. answers thus. "Sir, I wonder at your confidence "in it: the Reader will easily discern that the whole scope of that "Chapter clearly holds forth the preheminence of the Ministery "of the Gospel above the Ministery of Moses his vailed Ceremo-"nies: belike then with you, Moses Ceremonies were the Covenant "of works.

Answ. I wonder that a man of such note should wonder at that of which the reason is given, and should take upon him to defend his own Sermon, and yet pass by my reason against his allegation without rehearsal or answer to it. In form it stands thus. That which was the letter which killeth, written in Tables of stone opposite to the New Testament, and the spirit which giveth life, the ministration of death, of condemnation by Moses, was the Law or Covenant of works, for it is onely the Covenant of works, not that of grace how darkly soever delivered, of which these things can be said. But such was the Law or Covenant at Mount Sinai, Ergo. 'Tis true, it was the Apostles scope to hold forth the preheminence of the Ministry of the Gospel, but not barely above the Ministry of Moses vailed Ceremonies, for the Apostle prefers it before the Ministry of the Letter written and ingraven in stone, v. 3, 7. which was the moral Law, but above the Ministry of the whole Law, which comprehending all the commands Mosaical promulged Covenant-wise, and not singly Moses ceremonies, are by me termed the Covenant of works, and of this I am still confident.

Mr. M. skips over his impertinent allegation of Gal. 4. 1, &c. and grants 1 Pet. 2. 9. the spiritual part to belong onely to the invisible Church, of which he denies not the whole v. to be meant, but onely tels me, the whole nation of the Jews who had the honour to be termed holy, the children of God, Deut. 14. 1. to have the adoption, Rom. 9. 4. were not inwardly holy, or effectually called; which I readily grant, nor need I prove that Rom. 9. 4. Deut. 14. 1. were not priviledges which the visible Church of the Jewes enjoyed, having not denied it, but do expressly grant of Rom. 9. 4. that it speaks of peculiar priviledges of the Jews, and prove thence the Jewes had some priviledges above us, and that the want of some priviledges they had may bee recompensed by some priviledges wee have, and thence gathered that is a feeble reason, from the Jewish priviledge of infant Circumcision, to prove infant Baptism; yet nothing that Mr. M. brings, shews 1 Pet. 2. 9. to bee meant of any other then the elect, nor that believers priviledges of the Covenant of grace are enlarged.

What he saith, that the comfortable manner of administration, and baptism are enlarged beyond circumcision, to females, and all nations, is granted; but this groves not priviledges of the Covenant of grace to be enlarged to each believer now, although there are more believers now. And for Gal 3. 28. the words [there is neither male nor female] are not added to shew Baptism to be administred to whom Circumcision was not, for then [neither bond nor free] should be added for the same reason, which had not been right, for bondmen were circumcised formerly, as well as then baptized; But to shew a general equality of all believers in Christ, and therefore that passage is meant onely of true believers.

Having shewed the impertinency of Mr. Ms. allegations for his 5th. conclusion, I answered the argument drawn thence for infant Baptism thus. 1. It is no good argument, God gave such a priviledge to the Jewes, Jewes, Ergo we must have such a priviledge too, without Gods institution, but arrogant presumption to claim it. 2. That God gave many peculiar priviledges to the Jewes which we have not, as that Abraham was the father of the Faithfull, Mary the Mother of CHRIST; no family out of which CHRIST came but Abrahams, no nation that God hath promised after many hundred years rejection to re-ingraff besides the Jewes.

This Mr. M. endeavoured to prevent in his Sermon, by saying, These were personal priviledges belonging to some particular persons, not the whole Church of the Jewes, nor from the Covenant, but that to have infants belong to his Church, and to have the initial seal are, and if that we have it not for ours, the grace of God is straitned as to our posterity, which he counts absurd,

Hereto many things are replied by me. 1. That this was never a priviledge to believers, that their children should be in the Covenant of grace, God never made such a promise to every true believer, that he would be God to every believer and his natural seed, nor commanded that wee should repute the infants of believers to bee in the Covenant of grace. This hath been largely handled in my review of Mr. Ms. second conclusion. 2. That the pretended priviledge of a Believers infant childrens visible Churchmembership and title to the initial seal was not from the Covenant of Gospel grace, but from the peculiar dealing of God towards the nation of the Hebrews, out of peculiar reasons concerning that Churchstate which that people were to have until Christ came, which is largely discussed in answer to Mr. Baxters second main argument Section 50, &c. of this part of the Review. 3. That even then when it was a priviledge to the Hebrew people, yet title to the initial seal was not common to all Believers children, not to those under eight dayes old, nor to females, nor to Proselites of the gate, as v.g. to Cornelius and his children. 4. That a priviledge there is to the Jewes, even to the Nation, and that arising from Gods Covenant of Gospel grace, that their posterity shall after some hundred years rejection bee re-ingraffed, and yet this not to any Gentile Believer, Prince, Preacher, or Martyr concerning their posterity, and therefore it is no absurdity to say, that in some respect the priviledges of the Covenant of grace, even of the substance of it, were more large to some of the Hebrew Believers, then to the Gentiles in respect of posterity. 5. That the personal priviledges of Abraham, Mary, &c. were more truely pertinent to the Covenant of grace, though not common to all Jews, then infants visible Chvrchmembership and title to the initial seal. 6. That priviledges are meer arbitrary things, and that no reason why they are given to some and not to others, is needfull to be assigned besides the donors will. 7. That there is no more reason to say Gods grace is less now, because infants are not visible Churchmembers and baptized, then it is to say it is less because Christ is not descended from them, they are not Fathers of the faithfull. 8. That there were many priviledges which the Jews had which we have not, as those Rom. 3.1. & 9.4. to have a Temple, High-Priest on earth, &c. 9. That the want of these is abundantly recompensed by Christs comming without any particular thing of the same kinde in the stead of them, and therefore the want of Churchmembership and initial seal, may in like manner bee said to bee recompensed by his comming. 10. That the priviledge the children of Levi had, that their posterity should inherit the Priesthood, be maintained by the offerings of the people, be exempt from many burthens, is not now to Ministers children, nor any thing instead of it, and yet there is as much reason from the Covenant of Levi why Ministers children should have this priviledge, or somewhat instead of it as from the Covenant of Abraham, that our children should have Baptism in stead of Circumcision. 11. That young children were to eat the Passeover, and yet children of three or four years old are not admitted to the Lords Supper; and consequently after the rate of Mr. Ms. reasoning, the grace of God is straitned to us in respect of our posterity. 12. That the grace of God is not denied by not baptizing infants, for that would infer that it did give grace. 13. That by denying infants visible Churchmembership and Baptism, wee do not put them out of the Covenant of grace, or Church of God. 14. That Baptism is a duty rather then a priviviledge. 15. That the use of it is rather for us to seal to God by it, that is, to testifie the repentance and faith of the baptized, then for God to us, as assuring by it the promise of Gospel grace. 16. That by baptizing an infant the parent is not assured that the child is in the Covonant of grace. 17. That through the want of infants visible Churchmembership, such as the Jews children had, wee have no loss of priviledge, but rather benefit, it being a state of imperfection. 18. That the want of the initial seal which the Jewes had is a benefit it having a burthen annexed to it. 19. That children have no less of the grace of God by their want of Christian visible Churmembership and Baptism then the Jewes infants had. 20. That parents have as much cause of comfort concerning their children without these as they have by them.

Mr. M. p. 191. speaks thus; I think indeed it would take with no sober Christian thus to argue: The Jewes had it, therefore we must have it. But Sir to argue thus, God gave such a priviledge to the whole Church of the Jewes, that their infants should be reputed to belong to his Church, and have the initial seal. Therefore if hee have not granted to Christians that their infants shall also bee reputed to belong to his Church, and partake of the initial seal; then his grace to Believers under the N. T. is straitned as to their posterity. This argument appears so clear to me, that I must confess my self one of those dull ones, who know not how to deny the consequence.

Answ. Mr. M. hath ill recited my frame of the argument, which he rejects, by leaving out the chief words [without an institution]. Yet his new frame mends not the matter, but indeed is in effect all one with that which he saith would take with no sober Christian. For [the Jewes] and [the whole Church of the Jewes] are the same, and [had it] and [must have it] expressed but the same which Mr. M. saith in more more words: Nor doth he put in any thing of Gods will or inſtitution to have it ſo, and therefore there is no more reaſon why his new frame ſhould take with any ſober Chriſtian, then the former. Yet I ſhall view it as it is. And 1. I deny the antecedent, God did not give the priviledge to the whole Church of the Jews, that their infants ſhould have the initial ſeal, meaning it of all. 2. I deny the conſequence, if by [grace] he mean Goſpel grace; though infants of Chriſtians be not reputed to belong to the viſible Church, nor are baptized, yet the grace of the Goſpel, that is, remiſſion of ſin, ſanctification, adoption, glorification (which is that the Scripture makes Goſpel grace) is not ſtraitned to Chriſtians as to their poſterity. And the reaſons of this denial are ſo plain to me, that I ſee no clearneſs in it, but ſhould take my ſelf dull if I ſhould not diſcern its weakneſs. For the infant viſible churchmemberſhip being by reaſon of the peculiar national churchſtate of the Jews, and circumciſion of infants by reaſon of that which was proper to the Hebrew people, or policy, into which proſelytes were admitted, not from the Covenant of grace common to all believers in all ages, it is eaſie to perceive that notwithſtanding the altering of theſe (which God hath done,) the grace of God is as much now to our children as to theirs.

And here I think meet to anſwer Mr. Geree's argument as he frames it, vindic. Pædobapt. pag. 38. I do grant the ſequel of the major, If children of Chriſtian parents be excluded the Covenant, then are the priviledges of the N. T. more reſtrained: But that we exclude them from the Covenant of grace is falſe, we onely deny the fictitious Covenant of Pædobaptiſts, that God hath promiſed to be the God of believers and their ſeed: nor is it any harſh divinity, or derogatory from the incarnation of Chriſt, to ſay, the Jews converted, whoſe infants had the birth priviledge of memberſhip in the Jewiſh Church by natural generation, have not the priviledge of memberſhip in the Chriſtian, which is by ſpiritual regeneration. Nor doth the term [natural branches, Rom. 11. 21, 24.] ever agree to Gentiles ingrafted, but that they are ſtill branches of the wild Olive by nature, nor any of them in the true Olive without faith or election.

Nor doth Mr. Geree ſhew how he that denies baptiſm to infants denies the grace and mercy of God to us, if the grace of God be not tied to the Sacraments. Nor doth he ſhew that the priviledges of believers young children of 4, 5, or 6 years old are not as much ſtraitned if they who were admitted to the Paſſeover are not admitted to the Lords Supper. For though the reception into the Covenant and Church were ſufficiently done in Baptiſm; yet they ſhould not have the priviledge of growth and nutrition, which the Jews young children had by the Paſſeover, if Pædobaptiſts doctrine of the Paſſeover, and Lords Supper be right. But I return to Mr. M.

Mr. M. tels me, That though I ſay my inſtances of Abrahams, the Virgin Mary's and Jews priviledges not being now to us, do preſs his concluſion; yet that I ſpeak no word to vindicate them from his anſwer, and therefore he gathers that by this time I ſee that now ſome perſonal priviledges which a few of the Jews had, may be denied us; yet it makes nothing againſt his argument, argument; but if the common priviledges which every one of them had were denied us, our priviledges were straitned.

Answ. Mr. M. doth not rightly say I spake not a word to vindicate my instances from his answer. For besides all or most of those twenty things either in my Exercit. sect. 3. or in my Examen, par. 3. sect. 3, 4, 10, 11, 12. and elsewhere, which do enervate his answer, I did directly reply, that neither was his priviledge of the initial seal to infants any other then personal, not a branch of the Covenant of grace common to all in Covenant, for which by vertue of the Covenant they might rely upon God, and for this I alledged the faithfull before Abraham, Melchizedek and Lot in his time, Job and Cornelius after his time; and therefore if the want of priviledges personal, as he terms them, doth not shew a straitning of Gods grace to us now, neither doth the want of infant visible Churchmembership and Baptism now shew it.

That of Melchizedek, Lot, and Job, Mr. M. saith, hath been often answered; but he hath no where shewed, that they were not in the Covenant of grace, or that by vertue of the Covenant they and their infants had right to the initial seal. And as for Cornelius, I never intended to prove, that he was a member of the Church of the Jews, nor that the priviledges and churchmembership of these proselytes of the gate were as honourable as those of the proselytes of the covenant, but that though he were in the Covenant of grace, yet he had not the priviledge of churchmembership in the Church of the Jews, nor circumcision; and therefore these priviledges, whatever they were, were not branches of the Covenant of grace common to all in Covenant for which by vertue of the Covenant they might rely on God, as Mr. M. asserted.

To what I said, to be Father of the faithfull, Mother of Christ, the priviledges Rom. 9. 4. & 3. 2. do as much belong to the Covenant of grace as Circumcision, Mr. M. answers nothing. Upon the words by me used, that the phrases Rom. 11. 21, 24. do seem to me to import, that the Jews had this priviledge to have their children reckoned in the outward administration, as branches of the Olive by their birth, which the Gentiles have not, (which speech I have altered in the first part of this Review, p. 64, 93.) Mr. M. asks, But if we Gentiles have it not, then are not we, I pray you, straightned in that particular? Answ. Yea. And I demand further, when we are graffed in and so naturalized with them, do we not partake of all the fatness or priviledges of the Olive with them? what Scripture ever denied it? Answ. That we by ingraffing are made natural branches, is denied. it is granted, we are partakers of all the fatness and priviledges of the Olive, to wit, spiritual graces, but not of the priviledges which the natural branches had by birth.

Mr. M. adds. "I demand yet further, did the many ten thousands of "Jews who were baptized in the Apostles days, by their comming un-"der this best administration of the Covenant, and thereby kept their "former growing in the Olive with advantage; did they thereby de-"prive their children of that which you say was their natural privi-"ledge? if you think so, produce your evidence to prove it; if they were "not, then it seems the Jews who believed in Christ, and kept their sta-

" tion, had a greater priviledge for their children then the Gentiles, who " grow to togethe with them, have for their children.

Answ. The natural priviledge which I say the Jews had, was, that their children were in the visible Church Jewish, and their males to be circumcised; this by their Baptism they were deprived of, it being then no priviledge, after Christ exhibited in the flesh and preached, to be in the visible Church Jewish opposite to the Christian, and to be circumcised. Nor is it true, that the converted baptized Jews were in the Olive afore they believed in Christ, or kept their station in the visible Church Jewish, but were cast out, or that they should have had greater priviledges of the Covenant for their children, if they had continued in the visible Church Jewish, and been to be circumcised, then the Gentiles, whose children were not visible Christian visible churchmembers, nor to be baptized, as is abundantly proved by me from Scripture and otherwise in the foreparts of this Review.

To Mr. Ms. speech, as if we expunged infants out of the Covenant, it was answered, that it was a calumny, whereto he replies, But do not you avouch, that the infants of the Jews had this peculiar priviledge and birthright to be under the administration of the Covenant, which ours have not? Answ. I still avouch it in the sense the phrase seems to be taken for being Jewish visible churchmembers, and to be circumcised; but what he adds, which you know is the onely thing controverted betwixt us, is manifestly false, it being never so much as questioned by me. He adds, May not I boldly say, that once the infants of all covenanters had this priviledge? Answ. No. May I not also exact of you to shew when and where this was taken away? Answ. It hath been often shewed, infant-male circumcision in the Synod, Act. 15. 24, 28. infants churchmembership Matth. 28 19. were taken away, of which there is enough said before, sect. 50, &c. where infant visible churchmembership is proved to be altered, and yet infants not expunged out of the Covenant of the Gospel, as Mr. M. suggests. On the contrary, Mr. Ms. conceit as if the denying them visible churchmembership and baptism were putting them out of the Covenant of grace, I intimated to come too near the Popish opinion, of the necessity of infants baptism to their salvation, which I thought worth answering, sith it is all one in my conceit to say, that by denying baptism to them we put them out of the Covenant, and to say we damn them, it being certain none are saved but those who are in the Covenant of grace.

To that which he saith of our doctrine bringing discomfort to parents, in that we leave their infants in the state of infidels, account them actually to belong to the visible Kingdome of the Devil, deny them the benefit of the promise I will be the God of thee and thy seed, acknowledge no more promise for them, then for the children of Turks. I answer, these are meer calumnies sufficiently discovered to be so, Exam. par. 2. sect. 10. Apolog. sect. 14.

SECT. LXXXV.

MR. Cobbet, Juſt. vindic. par. 2. ſect. 1. ſets down this as his poſition, That the initiatory ſeal follows the covenant; but he proves it not: And whereas to the objection againſt it, that from Adams time to Abrahams, there was no initiatory ſeal to thoſe who were in Covenant; nor in Abrahams time to Melchizedek, Lot, Job; he anſwers, That ſuch extraordinary caſes and times are very impertinently urged by ſome to infringe the force of ordinary rules and principles: I ſay, his anſwer is inſufficient. For 1. this onely is an anſwer where it is proved that there is ſuch an ordinary rule and principle from which theſe caſes ſwerve: But no ſuch rule or principle can be ſhewed of an initiatory ſeal belonging to perſons in Covenant, from which this ſhould be counted an exception; therfore this is not an extraordinary caſe. 2. Beſides, extraordinary caſes make a juſt exception from an ordinary rule for ſome, by reaſon of ſome peculiar accident not happening to others: But to all in Covenant from Adam to Abraham, there is not, nor can be ſhewed any ſuch peculiar accident which happened not to others, which was the reaſon of omitting an initiatory ſeal by thoſe in Covenant: Ergo, it was not becauſe of extraordinary caſes that it was omitted, but becauſe there was no ſuch rule. 3. Extraordinary caſes are few and rare, but the omiſſion of an initiatory ſeal was conſtant, and univerſal by thoſe in Covenant until Abrahams time, therefore it was not an extraordinary caſe. 4. Extraordinary caſes and times are but for a little while: But this omiſſion was for above 2000. years, which one thinks Mr. C. ſhould not ſo dote as to count an extraordinary time; ſure the time wherein Circumciſion was in force was ſhorter, and it was in that time often omitted, and therefore we may by Mr. Cs. dictates as well ſay, the initiatory ſeal was extraordinary, and the ordinary rule was, that thoſe in Covenant were not to have an initiatory ſeal, ſpecially conſidering that even in Abrahams time, and after, it was omitted by Melchizedek, Lot, Job. Nor is it of any weight to ſay that there was not a viſible political Church then; For 1. no doubt in their families were viſible political Churches as well as in Abrahams. 2. The initiatory ſeale, as they call it, might and was to be to perſons without a viſible political Church as to the Eunuch Acts. 8. to Moſes children in Midian &c. Nor is it of any weight to ſay theſe Churches were not to continue: For 1. that is not ſo certain as to be taken for granted. 2. Abrahams poſterity were not to continue ſtill the Church of God, though they were to continue longer then the poſterity of Job and Lot. 3. But if this were a ſufficient reaſon, why they ſhould not have an initiatory ſeal ſolemnly inſtituted for them, becauſe they were not ſucceſſively to continue, then ſhould not not the Churches which were not successively to continue (of which doubtless there were many from whom the Candlestick was quickly removed) have had baptism instituted for them. 4. By Mr. Cs. reasoning, his rule the initiatory seal followes the covenant must bee thus limited, in ordinary times and cases when and where there is a visible political Church which is successively to continue. Which if it were granted him, yet it will never serve his turn to prove this universal proposition, from which Pædobaptists infer infant Baptism, All that are in the covenant are to have the initiatory seal or to be baptized. But neither is it true in ordinary times, where there is a visible political Church successively to continue. For it is not true of those in Covenant in Abrahams house, neither the females, nor males of seven dayes old onely were to have the initiatory seal, though in Covenant. To that which is said, that the females had not a superfluous fore-skin, besides what hath been said before to the contrary; I say 1. this however infringeth Mr. Cs. rule, that in ordinary times in visible political Churches successively to continue, the seal initiatory follows the covenant, for it doth not so in the female Hebrews. 2. If Gods will had been as Mr. C. would have it, he could have appointed an initiatory seal common to females with males. But what saith M. C. to the instance of the males of 7. days only to infringe his rule? I find nothing except this be an answer, in that case of the females as in some other, that law of circumcision had something peculiar in it, albeit it had other things in common with that of Baptism, which I take to be a sufficient proof against him, that the rule of Circumcision is not a rule to us about Baptism; and that his proposition is not true, that in ordinary times and cases, respecting the political visible Church and its administrations, such little ones as are of parents in such visible church-state, they have external right unto the injoyned initiatory visible seal, of which they are outwardly capable, and ought not to be denied the use and benefit of it.

There is also an objection against the principle fore-mentioned, All that are in covenant are to have the initial seal, or as Mr. C. speaks, the initiatory seal followes the Covenant, that if the connexion bee between seal and Covenant, it is as well beſween the after seal as the initial, and so they may as well plead for infants comming to the Lords Supper, as in Cyprians time, and as the young ones of the Jews did partake of the Passeover. To this Mr. C. saith, Male infants were not to appear at the Passeover, if so, then they must appear at the Feast of Tabernacles & must carry boughes, from Deut. 16. 16, 17. compared with Levit. 23. 34, 35, 38, 39, 40. that though persons have a covenant right in general, yet their jus in re is to be suspended and not elicited in case of incapacity, or of extream coldneß of the countrey, or sickneß. &c.

Answ. 1. If infants were not to appear at the Passeover, yet young children not to be admitted to the Lords Supper were, nor doth the text tie them all to carry boughs who were to appear. 2. The objection holds as much concerning the yong ones at Jerusalem, who were to eat the Passeover, and by Mr. Cs. reasons such yong ones should be at the Lords Supper, as having Covenant interest and therefore jus ad rem, nor is there any such incapacity or danger to them in eating the Lords

Supper to ſuſpend their jus in re, as is to be baptized in Greenland, or in extreme weakneſs and ſickneſs; and therefore by Mr. Cs, reaſons they ought not to be denied the Lords Supper. 3. If infants Covenant-right to the Lords Supper be ſuſpended becauſe of their defect of underſtanding to examine themſelves, their Covenant-right to Baptiſm is as juſtly ſuſpended til they repent and believe, which are as much and more required to Baptiſm as ſelf examination to the Lords Supper. And if it be true then Mr. Cs. poſition is not right, that infants ought not to be denied the uſe and beneſit of Baptiſm. 4. If it were in Cyprians time a corruption to give infents the Lords ſupper, ſo it was to baptize them, being on the ſame reaſon of no greater antiquity. But let's view what hee ſaith for the clearer handling of his Theſis.

Sect. 2. He ſaith, that mixt commands of God having ſome part circumſtantial and vaniſhing, ſome part ſubſtantial and abiding, the later is binding to us ſince Chriſts time, albeit the former be not; and he inſtanceth in a 7th. day Sabbath: But neither he nor any other have yet proved any ſuch ſubſtantial part abiding in the command of Circumciſion, and how little the inſtance given is to his purpoſe, is ſhewed before, §. 77, 80, 81.

That which Mr. C. ſaith ſect. 3. is granted, that conſequential commandements grounded on Scripture are Scripture commandements, but that any command of a poſitive rite in the old Teſtament is a command to us about a poſitive right of the new, or that in mere poſitive worſhip that ſhould not be excluded which is not expreſſed, is not granted; to the contrary ſomewhat is ſaid in the 2d part of this Review, §. 2, 3, 5. and elſewhere. I have often ſaid prove infant Baptiſm by good conſequence, and I ſhall yeild.

That federal ordinances, ſuch as are the ſeals, are as well priviledges as precepts, which Mr. C. ſect. 4. aſſerts, when they are rightly adminiſtred, is granted; but it is denied that the Paſſeover, Baptiſm, the Lords Supper, are federal ordinances or ſeals of the Covenant of grace in Mr. Cs. ſenſe, who p. 131. makes Circumciſion in the nature of it to bee a ſeal of the righteouſneß of faith; and in like manner thoſe other, which he cals federal ordinances, ſeals of the promiſe of the Covenant of grace, of the righteouſneſs of faith in their nature. There's not a word Acts 7. 2, 8. by which it may appear that circumciſion of the child was reckoned as the Fathers priviledge, nor their own circumciſion as their priviledge, but only of Abraham that God gave him the Covenant of Circumciſion, whereby he was aſſured of a ſon by Sarah, & ſo he begate Iſaac and circumciſed him the 8th. day, which priviledg was peculiar to Abraham, and to none other I know, except Zachary John Baptiſts father be ſaid to have the ſame priviledge. nor is Rom 3. 1, 2, 3, 4. any whit to M. Cs. purpoſe, to prove that circumciſion is reckoned as the Fathers priviledge. For 1. it is manifeſt that Rom. 3. 1. Circumciſion is to be underſtood metonymically, as v. 30. for the circumciſed, ſuch it is not ſaid there was much profit by Circumciſion, but of Circumciſion, as before, what advantage of the Jew? nor was the priviledge v. 2. the committing the oracles of God to them, the priviledge of Circumciſion in the abſtract, or by circumciſion as the means by which it was, but the priviledge of that people who were circumciſed. 2. If it were granted that the priviledge were by Circumcision, yet that it was the Fathers priviledge by reason of the childs Circumcision rather then his own, is a vain fancy. Nor doth Acts 2. 38, 39. yeild any more to his purpose, but is most grosly abused by Mr. C. as is shewed before §. 22, 23. Nor are the passages which he alledgeth p. 132. out of my Examen, dissonant to any passages before or any after, except those words of my Examen p. 108. which I alter in the first part of this Review, p. 94, 95. And to his many questions from my words. I answer, that he hath not proved the Covenant of grace, wherein God promiseth to be a God to them and theirs, to belong to every Jew but onely to Abraham and his seed, that is, so far as it is Evangeliacl onely to his spiritual seed whether of Jewes or Gentiles, and therefore I deny it was a priviledge which every Jew had, to be a God to them and theirs; and yet grant that Deut. 29. 14. with 6. was a priviledge, and so I yeeld to have been what God promised Ezek. 36. from the 17. to the end, and Deut. 14. 2. and that sundry infants of the Jews base born were in the Covenant of saving grace and Church-priviledges, and that it was a priviledge to them, and that the promises of the Covenant of grace are priviledges, and the same now to believers and as large and honourable as then, and that the promises to their children mentioned Deut. 30. 6. were of the substance of the Covenant of grace, in respect of the thing promised, but not in respect of the persons to whom, for God doth not promise to all his elect or true believers, that which he promised then in that case to the Israelites for their seed, and I yeild that even base-born children may bee in the Covenant of saving grace, and yet these promises are not made to Church children, (as Mr. C. speaks) as such, but onely to the elect. Nevertheless I grant the same promises now to bee made to believers, which were then, to wit, righteousness and life eternal by faith, yea that they are larger now, not intensively in respect of the thing promised, as if a greater degree of righteousness and eternal life, were promised now then was then, but extensively in respect of the people to whom the Gentiles now being called, and that more amply then the Jews, nor do I or any thing I say, exclude believers children out of the Covenant. But I still say, the Covenant of grace was not made then universally to a Believer and his natural seed, nor now, but onely to the elect of them. Yet this is not an exclusion of any in particular from the Covenant of grace, nor an inclusion, but onely a suspension of any determination of either, who are elect, and who not, being onely known to God. And therefore to Mr. *C.*s question why are belie ers children then excluded the Covenant? which injuriously insinuates as if I did exclude them, I say, let him answer it that doth so. And though I grant that our priviledges now are inlarged, in respect of the administration of the Covenant, in that the Gospel is preached to more nations and more clearly, and confirmed by the blood of Christ &c. then before Christs coming (which is my meaning in that speech) yet it neither follows that I count that administration of the Covenant initiatory seal (which is Mr. *C.*s terms not mine) as such, to their children was no priviledge: or there must be such a like priviledge and not straitned, at least not wholly excluded, as that of a like, though Mr. C. so) not the

the same, but a like administration of the initiatory Covenant-seal, to in-churched believers children now, as Mr. C. in his gibberish speaks. And though I say we have nothing in lieu of Circumcision, but Christ come in the flesh; yet I do not say, nor need I, that Baptism is no priviledge to believers now: but I deny it to be a priviledge in lieu of Circumcision, and say that as Mr. C. grants it a priviledge to believers, that now they have not that manner of initiation by circumcision, so it is a priviledge to them that they have no manner of initiation in lieu of it. What he saith he hath shew'd before from Ez. 37.25,26,27. is examin'd before.

Sect. 5. Mr. C. saith, Baptism is a seal of the Covenant, no bare badge of Christianity as some have said, albeit the more judicious of our opposites yeild this, that the Covenant of grace is said properly to be sealed in Baptism, and that Baptism since Christs incarnation is the appointed seal of God to such as enter into covenant with him.

Answ. It is true that I said Exam p. 149. the Covenant of grace is sealed properly in Baptism, but Mr. C. might have taken notice, that 1. I used not this phrase as mine, but as Mr. Ms. 2. That I did yeild this but three lines before with this caution, Baptism seals the love of God in some sense properly. 3. That not long after I say, that in exactness of speech it seals no grace properly, taking it for propriety of speech, but improperly, because metaphorically, as sealing is taken for assuring. 4. I say as properly, notes propriety of right, or title, or possession, in opposition to anothers, or that which is alien, it seals as much the second as the first grace. And indeed this is my meaning, that though in propriety of speech Baptism may not be said to be the seal of the Covenant of grace properly, sith it is but a metaphor or term translated from another thing, and so shews not what the thing is, but what in some respect it is like to: yet it may bee thus termed the seal of the Covenant of grace properly, that is, as the seal of a deed assures the thing conveyed in it to him that hath propriety in it, so Baptism in that thereby we put on Christ, doth signifie to the true Believer that he hath union and communion with him, and that he hath thereby a propriety of right to righteousness and life by Christ, according to the Covenant of grace. But this doth no whit contradict what I have disputed before sect. 31. against Mr Ms. and others doctrine, about Sacraments being seals of the Covenant of grace. Nor did I use the words, that Baptism since Christs incarnation is the appointed seal of God to such as enter into Covenant with him, Exam. p. 83. as mine own expression, but as Mr. Ms. though I granted the thing meant by it. Yet had I so said of my self, it had not been for Mr. Cs. turn, who will have it a seal of Gods Covenant to us, whereas those words as I yeild them, rather import it to be our seal whereby we enter into Covenant with God, and engage to him, which is the most genuine use of Baptism, and in that respect rightly termed a badge of Christianity. But Mr. C. would prove it a seal of the Covenant in another sense, thus.

And it appears so, saith he, 1. in that it agrees in the essentials with circumcision as an initiatory seal, Col. 2.11,12. which speech is ambiguous, and yet in no sense, I conceive, true. It is doubtfull whether he mean that to

to be the initiatory seal is the essentials of Circumcision, and of Baptism, but this sense is false: For to be a seal is not essential either to the one or the other, the circumcision of the Sichemites was circumcision, though it were no seal to them of the Covenant of Abraham; and Simon Magus his baptism was baptism, though it were no seal to him of the Covenant of grace, much less is it of the essence of either to bee initiatory, for if there were or might be another initiatory seal (as doubtless there might be if God had so appointed it) yet circumcision and baptism had not been circumcision and baptism, now what may be or not be without the ceasing of the thing to be is but an accident to it, not of the essence of it. Besides, to be the initiatory seal of the Covenant of grace, doth more truly agree to the spirit of God, then to either of them. Or whether he mean, that they agree in those things which are the essentials of each, but that is more palpably false, for it is essential to Circumcision that the fore-skin be cut off, but that is not essential to Baptism, there may bee Baptism without it. Nor is there a word Col. 2. 12. that either expresseth this thing or yeilds any ground for proof of it, as is shewed before by me here §. 81.

As vain is that which follows, whence baptized Gentiles are said to be of the circumcision, Phil. 3. and Jews said to be baptized, 1 Cor. 12. For neither are Gentiles, Philip. 3. 3. termed the circumcision, because they were baptized, nor the Jews said to be baptized, 1 Cor. 12. 13. because they were circumcised, or because of the agreement of these in the essentials. But the converted Gentiles, not all that were baptized; but onely those, who were true believers are termed the Circumcision in opposition to the Judaizing Teachers termed befor v. 2. the concision by a figure of speech, termed Euteliſm, or slighting them in that in which they gloried; and they are termed the Circumcision, because they were truly circumcised before God in heart, and were his people. And the Jews 1 Cor. 12. 13. are said to be baptized no otherwise then the Gentiles who believed, who were not circumcised in the flesh, and therefore could not be termed baptized because circumcised; but Christian believers, whether Jews or Greeks, bond or free, are all said to be baptized, and to be made to drink, because they were baptized with water, and did partake of the Lords Supper, as 1 Cor. 10 17.

Mr. C. adds more of these toys. Hence first instituted for a seal to the circumcised Jews; to shew it was in the essentials of sealing Abrahams covenant to them but the same with circumcision in a manner; onely as that sealed it to them visibly in Christ, as to come, this did it in like sort in reference to Christ as come; that was the seal of the righteousness of Abrahams faith, or that whereon his faith acted to righteousness of justification, Rom. 4. 11. even the promise of grace in Christ, Rom. 10. 6, 7. with Deut. 30. 14. Wherein 1. he dictates, without any pretence of proof, that Baptism was first instituted to the Jews to shew that which he says; nor is there the least intimation thereof in Scripture. 2. He seems to me to unsay by his limitation [in a manner] what he said before, it was the same in the essentials. For that which is the same in the essentials is altogether the same, and not in a manner. 3. It is false that baptism was the same in the essentials of sealing Abrahams covenant to the Jews with circumcision circumcision: For it was as much in the essentials of sealing Abrahams Covenant to the Jews (if I may use Mr. C's. gibberish) that Circumcision sealed the promise of the land of Canaan, *Gen.*17.8,9,10, &c. as that it sealed Christ to come; but surely Baptism never sealed the promise of the land of Canaan. 4. That which I find of the seal of the righteousnesse of faith, *Rom.*4.11. is meant of Abrahams personal Circumcision, and of no other, and therefore is ineptly applied to prove sameness of sealing of others Circumcision and Baptism. 5. I conceive it somewhat inconsiderately said, that Circumcision was the seal of the righteousnesse of Abrahams faith, which would imply, that it assured that Abraham faith was righteous, whereas the meaning is, that it assured that Abraham had righteousness by faith before he was circumcised, as v 10. he had asserted. 6. The other explication is worse, for it insinuates as if the Apostle meant that the righteousness of faith ascribed to Abraham is so termed, as that whereon his faith acted to righteousnesse of justification, even the promise of grace in Christ; whereas the meaning is not that it sealed the righteousness he was to obtain by acting faith in a promise, but that it was a seal of the righteousness of faith which he had many years before he was circumcised.

Mr. C. goes on in the same vein of dictating thus. Hence when Christ is called the minister of circumcision, it is thus explained by the end of the sign administred, (viz. to confirm the promises made unto the Fathers, Rom. 15.8. *Act.*7.8. *Gen.*17.11. Which speech seems to insinuate, as if Christ were termed the minister of circumcision, as if he did minister Circumcision to that end, to confirm the promises: But that is too absurd for such a man to vent, sith he ministred Circumcision to none; and the meaning is plain, that he was the minister of circumcision, that is of the circumcised Jews among whom he preached and lived, as Peter is said Gal 2.8. to have had the Apostleship of the circumcision, that is, of the circumcised Jews: And in this sense Beza, Willet, Diodati the new Annot., Dicson, Piscator, &c. expound it. Now this being premised, it is easie to perceive how impertinently this Text, which mentions not at all Baptism, nor any use of Circumcision at all, but onely the end of Christs ministry among the circumcised is alledged, to prove that Baptism agrees in the essentials with Circumcision as an initiatory seal. The Texts, Act. 7.8. *Gen.*17.11. are as little to the purpose, there being no mention of Baptism, and they onely proving what is not denied, that Circumcision was the token of Abrahams Covenant. As little is that which follows, Hence the promise premised and then Baptism annexed as the seal, *Act.*2.38. For neither is it proved, that the promise there is the same with Abrahams Covenant, and how impertinently Mr. C. mistakes the meaning of it is shewed before, *sect.*12,13. nor a word about Baptism as a seal annexed to the promise, but an exhortation to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for remission of sins and assurance of the gift of the Holy Ghost, which are annexed to repentance as much as to baptism.

What he adds, Hence that washing annexed to the word, *Ephes.*5.25, 26. But that the word there is the word of promise, much less of Abrahams hams Covenant *Gen.*17, or that it is mentioned as ſealed by Baptiſm, or that therein it agrees with Circumciſion, is not proved. The word is the Goſpel preached by which men are made believers, and then baptized, and ſo purified, as *Act.*15.9. *Tit.*3.5. *Act.*10.32. & 26.18. Joh. 3.15. & 17.17. &c. Nor is it any more pertinent which follows.

2. Saith he, *It's a baptizing in the name or covenant-fellowſhip of God the Father, Son, and Spirit: he having exalted his word above all his name, Pſal.*138.2 Wherein 1. he ſeems to expound baptizing, Matth. 28.19. into the name of the Father, Son, and Spirit, thus, into the Covenant-fellowſhip; which is ſomewhat ſtrange, there being neither there, nor elſewhere (where the like phraſe is uſed) any mention of Covenant, or Covenant-fellowſhip; and his arguing, *God hath exalted his word above all his name, Pſal.*138.2. Ergo, baptizing is in the name and Covenant-fellowſhip of God the Father, Son, and Spirit, is a baculo ad angulum. 2. But were his expoſition allowed, yet what this is to prove that Baptiſm is a ſeal of the Covenant, *Gen.*17. or any other Covenant, I am yet to divine. Is baptizing all one with ſealing? is Covenant-fellowſhip all one with the Covenant?

3. Saith he, *It's a ſeal of the remiſſion of ſins, and therefore of the promiſe tendering the ſame, hence joyned, Act.*2.38,39. *Act.*22. But neither is the promiſe there joyned as a thing ſealed by Baptiſm, but as a motive to the duties of Repentance and Baptiſm; nor is the remiſſion of ſins mentioned as ſealed by Baptiſm, but as a conſequent obtained by Repentance and Baptiſm as conditions pre-required thereto; nor is a ſeal of remiſſion of ſins all one with a ſeal of the Covenant.

4. Saith he, *The nature of it ſheweth the ſame, it being a Goſpel Sacrament, and that is a viſible ſeal, and the ſeal is to the Covenant; hence called by the name, Act.*7.8. 1 *Cor.*11.25.

Anſw. 1. The term Sacrament, as it is applied to the rites of Baptiſm and the Lords Supper, is no Scripture term, nor any other anſwerable to it in that uſe; it's a term, as I ſaid rightly in my *Plea for Antipædobaptiſts, ſect.*1. invented by the Latine Fathers meaning for that uſe. Mr Craggs reply in his pamphlet, termed The arraignment and conviction of Anabaptiſm, that it is uſed in the twelve tables, in Tully pro Milone, ſhews he had a mind to cavil rather then to anſwer fairly; nor is the book throughout any other then a fardle of miſtakings in Logick, and meaning of Scripture, and of cavils againſt my words, mixt with much Poetical lightneſs, and ſcoffing, to which there's no need I ſhould return any more then the Archangels words, The Lord rebuke thee. 2. Nor is there any common nature of Sacraments that I know of delivered or intimated in Scripture, either that of the Schoolmen out of Auſtin, that they are viſible ſigns of inviſible grace: or of the Proteſtants who are termed Calviniſts, that they are ſeals of the Covenant of grace: And therefore Mr. C. ſhould firſt prove that to be of the nature of a Goſpel Sacrament, as the term is uſed, afore he inferred ſo much as he doth from it. 3. A ſeal, it is true, is to a Covenant ſometimes, and ſometimes it is to a decree, writ, letter, record of a thing done, and ſo it is taken Rom. 4.11. where Abrahams Circumciſion is not ſaid to be a ſeal of the Covenant wherein ſomething further was promiſed, but of the righteouſneſs of faith which he had before attained. 4. Act. 7. 8. the Covenant of grace is not called by the name of a Goſpel Sacrament, but the Covenant made with Abraham, Gen. 17. is onely termed the covenant of circumciſion, becauſe it was ſignified by it, which was no Goſpel, but a Law rite. The Cup in the Lords Supper, 1 Cor. 11. 25. is termed the New Teſtament in Chriſts bloud, wherein there ſeems to be an hypallage and inverſion by the words as they are in Matth. ch. 26. 28. Mar. 14 24. and by conſidering that of the bread he ſpake thus, this is my body, and therefore the words of the cup ſeem to be moſt fitly thus placed and expounded, this cup, that is the wine in it, is my bloud, that is ſignifies my bloud, which is the bloud of the New Teſtament, that is by which the New Teſtament is dedicated as the old was by the bloud of calves and goats, Heb. 9. 18, 19, 20. Now herein is the notion rather of a Teſtament then of a Covenant, and what is ſaid is ſaid of the cup onely in the Lords Supper, not of Baptiſm: Nor is it named the Covenant, but the bloud of the New Teſtament, or the New Teſtament in Chriſts bloud; nor is the term ſeal there uſed, and therefore there is not a word to prove Baptiſm to be in its nature a ſeal of the Covenant of grace, in this or any other of the Texts Mr. C. alledgeth.

I paſs over that which he ſaith, ſecondly Baptiſm is an initiatory ſeal, as agreeing with him in the poſition, that Baptiſm is that which is to be firſt afore the Lords Supper, though his phraſes be miſliked. I agree with him alſo, that Baptiſm being once adminiſtred, needs never be renewed, if done according to Chriſts inſtitution. Yet what I ſaid, Exam. par. 2. ſect. 4. ſeems to me to ſtand good, notwithſtanding any thing here ſaid by Mr. C. nor do I think it fit to queſtion whether it be the onely initiatory ſeal.

The 6th. Section contains nothing but dictates without proof, and what is ſaid by way of proof is anſwered either ſect. 38, &c. in the animadverſions on the 3d. ch. of the firſt part of Mr. C's. book, or in anſwer to Mr. Carter, ſect. 80. In which it is ſhewed, that there is no reference made Gen. 17. to a Church Covenant diſtinct from the Covenant of grace, nor any command given Gen. 17. 9, 10. to a Gentile believer and his ſeed, nor any general law about an initiatory ſeal never repealed, as Mr. C. and others faſn. And for his ſpeech he uſeth, that the Hebrew Church albeit quà ſuch a political Church and national, &c. differ from congregational Churches; yet qua viſibilis Eccleſia politica & ordinaria ſo it was eſſentially the ſame with ours; it ſeems to intimate, that the Church of the Hebrews, though as ſuch a political Church it was national, yet not as a viſible Church political and ordinary, as if it were any otherwiſe a viſible political ordinary Church then as ſuch a Church: And when he ſaith, as a Church viſible political ordinary it was eſſentially the ſame with ours, he can mean it no otherwiſe then of the ſame numerical eſſence; for as viſible and political the eſſence is determined to hic & nunc, an univerſal generical or ſpecifical Church is not viſible and poliſical. But that is falſe, ſith if the perſons be not the ſame, they cannot have the ſame numerical eſſence: Nor can he mean it, that it is eſſenti-

ally the same with ours as visible in the same form of government, for then he must make ours Pontificial; nor in the same title to Church-membership, for then he must make ours national: nor can he avoid it if he will maintain this plea, that the Jewish Church was essentially the same with ours, and as their infants were circumcised as children of Churchmembers, in a Church visible, political, ordinary, which was national, so ours upon the same reason are to bee baptized, but that hee must set up a national Church by natural generation, nor can they of N. E. justifie their way of excluding such children from the Lords Supper for ignorance, if they may for scandal. The old objection, which Mr. C. falsly terms cavil touching covenant females, is not yet answered, nor ever will be, it will still infringe this universal proposition, All that are in Covenant with reference to Church-covenant are to have the iniriatory seal for a time, and so will also that of Jobs family, which why it should not be counted a visible political ordinary Church, as well as Abrahams house in his time I see not, and if none are to be baptized but such as are in an ordinary visible political Church to abide, how can they of N. E. baptize the infants of such Churchmembers, as whether in N. E. or old do not abide, but are quickly dissolved as we see by experience? And if None but those who are in the covenant of grace in reference to Church covenant are to be baptized, but though believers because in Rome or India they are not a formed matter of a political visible Church, but they are as materia informis, they are quoad homines actually without, and not within any political visible Church, how was the Eunuch baptized Acts 8? And if the covenant of grace nakedly considered giveth a person which is actually in it, a remote right to the initiatory seal, but it doth not give an immediate right thereto, for so the covenant of grace as invested with Church covenant onely giveth this proximate right to that seal. God being the God of order, will have that his Church seal to be attained in a way of order; as of old strangers might not be circumcised, but with some submission to that Church order explicitely or implicitely, and so now, and the order be as Mr. C. in the 5th. section determines, to be observed of communion in breaking bread after they were baptized, how do those of N. E. admit to breaking of bread, those who who onely as born in a Parish were baptized in infancy, without another baptism? That either Matth. 28. 19, 20. or any where else the orderly and ordinary dispensation of the seal is committed to the visible Church, is more then I finde; nor do I know it necessary to right order that believers must be of a particular visible Church afore they be baptized. If Catechumini in covenant and visible Church estate might bee hindered from Baptism for trial for a time, much more should infants of whom we have no knowledge concerning their future or present estate, be in prudence put off from Baptism till there be some trial of them, if their right were, as Mr. C. doth, though falsly, imagine.

Sect. 7. Mr. C. speaks thus, And because in this particular some stress of the main case is put, 1. I shall endeavour yet further to confirm it, that covenant interest carrieth a main stroak in point of application of that seal, to persons interested therein, and not uncapable thereof in any bodily respect.

Answ. This proposition being that in which some stress, or as I conceive, the whole stress of the main case is put, should have been delivered more clearly, and confirmed more fully, but as now it is, it is delivered ambiguously, and so is fitter to delude a Reader then to instruct him. That seal which was last mentioned was Baptism, but the proofs following shew that he meant it of Circumcision, and as if there were the same reason of Circumcision and of Baptism (which neither he nor any Pædobaptist ever proved) what is said of Circumcision is by him meant of Baptism, and so the Reader merely mocked. The application of Baptism or Circumcision may either refer to Gods appl ing it by way of command, or mans by way of administration, and in this I think Mr. Cs. speeches are delusory, sometimes meant of Gods application by way of command, and sometimes of the administrators act in circumcising or baptizing. The phrase of carrying the main stroak is likewise ambiguous, and so delusory, it being uncertain whether it carry the main stroke with God as his motive to appoint it, or with the administratour as his rule and warrant to do it. And when he terms it the main stroak, it had been requisite hee should tell whether there be not some other thing which carries a stroak if not the main, yet so great, as that without it the application of the seal is not warrantable, as profession of faith by the person to whom it is to bee applied. Hee might have understood by my Examen, which he had to answer, that I took it a great fault in Mr. M. that hee did not more distinctly tell what hee meant by the Covenant, being in covenant, which hee speaks of infants of believers. And sure if Mr. C. had meant to deal rightly, as one that sought truth, and to shew my errour, he should have cleared what Covenant hee meant inward or outward, the Covenant of Gospel grace purely delivered, or the mixt Covenant made with Abraham Gen. 17. what the Church covenant is, how the Covenant of grace is invested with it, when a Church is a political visible body, how a Church covenant is the form of it, who and what persons and how they are interested in it, whether by Gods promise, their own faith or profession or anothers, or by the Churches admission. All which, or at least many of them, are requisite to bee distinctly declared, that a reader may clearly understand his meaning, and so examine his proof. And whether the exception of incapacity in any bodily respect, be meant onely because of the females circumcision, or thereby infants are excepted from Baptism, who have not the use of their tongues to profess the faith of Christ, and are not well able to brook that dipping or plunging (which for all Mr. Cs. scriblings, is and will be found the onely way of baptizing appointed by Christ) is uncertain. This were a sufficient reason for me to answer no further to this proposition, but to wait till his Bill be mended. Yet I shall examine his proofs of this, which should be his meaning, if he spake to his purpose; That the interest which a person though an infant hath to the Covenant of grace, in that he is a believers child by vertue of the promise of God to a believer and his seed, when that believer is a member of a visible political Church by Church covenant explicit or implicit, is a sufficient warrant to that visible political

Church to admit, and to the Elder to baptize that infant without any other revelation of God, or profession of the infant. Let's now see what Mr. C. brings for proof of this.

First, saith he, then it is the ground-work given to the general Law about an initiatory Covenant duty, scil. application of some injoyned initiatory seal, and therefore must be of like force in the particular branches and ways of such initiatory sealing, as circumcision and baptizing.

Answ. Such a general Law is a mere fiction, and what is meant by the ground-work of it is uncertain. Gen. 17.9,10. is no other Law but about circumcision, the word rendred [therefore] may bee otherwise translated, if it were the onely reading yet the sense might be this, because I make this Covenant thou shalt therefore circumcise thy males to keep it in remembrance, or to assure thee and thy posterity that I will perform it. But that there is any such intimation as if the persons circumcised were circumcised as and for their interest in that Covenant is a mere dream often refuted by mee, much more is it a dotage to assert, that according to a persons interest in that Covenant or a part of it, as Mr. C. conceives, so they have right to Baptism in the Christian church.

Secondly, saith Mr. C. the Covenant in such sort invested with Church covenant, now it is the form of a political visible Church body; giving therefore, both a Church-being as I may say, as natural forms do a natural being, and withall the priviledge of a member of such a church-body, suitable to its memberly estate, as if this of the Church initiatory seal, even to the least member thereof, although they are not yet so perfect in all actual energy of compleat members, and so neither in all actual priviledges of such compleat members. I suppose what ever others deny this way, yet our opposites do not deny, that Church-covenant explicit or implicit is the form of a visible political Church as such; so that till that bee, they are not so incorporated as to bee fit for Church dispensations, or acts of peculiar Church power over each other, more then over others, over whom they can have no power, unless they had given explicit or implicit consent thereto: as reason will evince.

Answ. This reason as I conceive goes upon these suppositions, which Mr. C. conceives will not be denied. 1. That there is a Church-covenant over and besides Gods covenant of Gospel grace, and mans believing and professing of faith in him through Jesus Christ, whereby the members of a visible political Church do engage themselves to walk together in Christian communion, and to submit to their rulers, and to each other in the Lord. Now such a Church covenant, though I confess it may be according to prudence at some times and in some cases usefull to keep persons, who otherwise would bee unsetled, in a fixed estate of communion, yet I find not any example of such a Church covenant in the old or new Testament, and in some cases it may insnare mens consciences more then should be. 2. That the Covenant of grace, whether Gods promise to us or ours to God invested with Church covenant, that is, as I conceive Mr. C. meaning to be, together with it, is the form of a visible political Church, which gives it the being of such a Church, as such, so that till that be they are not so incorporated as to be fit for Church dispensations, or Church power. In which I conceive are many mistakes. 1. That the Sacraments are seals, or church dispensations are committed to the Church, which are not committed to the Church, which consists of men and women, but to the guides and over-seers of it. 2. That Church power, or as Mr. Cotton in his treatise of the keyes of the Church, the power of the keyes is committed or given to the Church; in which are mistakes that either censures Ecclesiastical, or as the Schoolmen and Canonists term it, the power of ordination and jurisdiction Ecclesiastical are meant by the keyes, Matth. 16. 19. or that they were given to Peter as representing the Church: the Scripture doth no where commit Church dispensations or power to the Church, but to the guides, and overseers and rulers of the Church for the Church. 3. That till a company of believers be a visible political Church, they are not fit for church dispensations or censures: which I conceive not true, there being examples in Scripture of their breaking bread together, Acts 2. who were not such a political visible Church of fixed members under fixed officers united by Church covenant, as Mr. C. describes. Nor were Christ and his Apostles such a Church when first they did break bread. Nor did Christ appoint Baptism Matth. 28. 19. to be onely in and with such a Church; nor do the exampls Acts 2. or 8. or 10 or 16. or 18. intimate any such condition, but rather the contrary. 4. That the covenant of grace with a church covenant fore-mentioned, give the being of such a visible Church political. But the Covenant of grace of it self doth not give any actual being, it is a promise of something future, and therefore puts nothing in actual being extra causas, but assures it shall bee by some cause in act, which in this thing is the calling of God, from which the Church and each member have their being as from the efficient, from faith in the heart as the form of the invisible Church and each member, from profession of faith as the form of the visible Church and each member, as Ames. Med. Th. lib. 1. cap. 32. Sect. 7. that which makes it political is the union under officers and lawes, without a Church covenant it is a political visible Church, if there bee but at present an union or conjunction in the same profession of Christian faith under officers and lawes of a number of Christians they are a Church visible political, though they should be dissolved the next hour, and though they enter into no covenant of Church-fellowship or subjection for the future, and therefore church covenant is neither of the form of such a true Church, nor (as Mr. Weld in answer to Mr. Rathbard) of a pure Church, but it is a good means in prudence to conserve a Church so constituted, that they may not divide and scatter from each other, but may continue in communion. 5. That by this incorporating they have peculiar Church power over each other, and without the Church covenant they can have no power. But neither do I conceive this true. For the power which Christians have is to reprove, admonish, censure, shun society, chuse officers, reject false teachers, &c. this power they have by the laws of Christ, without a church covenant. 6. That Church dispensations and acts of peculiar Church power are limited to those particular persons who joyn with us by Church covenant. But this I conceive not right nor agreeable to such Scriptures as these, 1 Cor. 3. 22. & 10. 17. & 12. 13.

3. It is supposed by Mr. C. that the Covenant with Church covenant gives the priviledge of a member of such a church body suitable to its memberly estate, as is this of the Church initiatory seal. But in this sure Mr. C. is quite out and besides their own practise, who do not give the initiatory seal after they are members by church covenant, but baptize them or suppose them baptized in infancy, and then joyn them as members by church covenant; now if church covenant did give the priviledge of the initiatory seal, then they should first enter into church covenant, and then have the initiatory seal or be baptized.

4. It is supposed by Mr. C. that there are such little churchmembers by such a covenant as are to have the priviledge of the initiatory seal though they be not compleat members, so as to have the actual priviledge of the after seal, and other church power. But sure the Scripture acknowledgeth in the Christian church no members, but what partake of the Lords Supper as well as baptism (as is manifest from 1 Cor. 10. 17. 1 Cor. 12. 13.) and have church power as others of their sex and rank.

Now all these suppositions though they were granted (except the last) would not prove the thing Mr. C. aims at, and that which he makes the main reason from whence he would infer the conclusion, namely, the Covenant with Church covenant gives being and priviledge of the initiatory seal, makes against him, infants making no such Church covenant, nor according to their own discipline doth their parents Church covenant serve instead of the childs; sith afore the child can bee admitted to communion of breaking of bread, and other power of a member, and bee taken for a member, hee must himself enter into church covenant.

"Thirdly, saith Mr. C. even in doubtfull cases, where the extent of "the command is questionable, yet interest in the Covenant casts the "scoals. As for instance, in strangers which proved religious, albeit "not of their family servants, and so under the Law, Gen. 17. 12, 13. "they might be circumcised if they desired other Church ordinances, "&c. yet were they else free, unless in such a case of their own de- "sire that way, Exod. 12. end. Hence Cornelius a godly Gentile, li- "ving near the Jews yet not circumcised, Acts. 10. 1, 2, 3, 4. com- "pared with chap. 11 3, 14, 15, 18. yea but if the command bound "them why were they circumcised? suppose Exod. 12. gave some li- "berty to the Church guides that way, for such strangers as more usu- "ally dwelt amongst them; yet such as 1 Kings 8. 41, 42, 43. which came "from far, in a mere transient way, for some temporary religious wor- "ship at the Temple, as that prosely ted Eunuch Acts 8. 27. those "were surely circumcised, else how admitted to Temple worship? "Since that was counted an abomination, for any other so much as "to come there, Acts 21. 28. and if circumcised at any time by any "of the godly Church guides consent, what gave them right to it?

" not the commandment, *Gen.*17.12,13,14. no nor that Exod. 12.
" What was that to an Eunuchs case and others which never sojourned " with them for any space? were they then unlawfully circumcised?
" No verily, no whisper of that in Scripture; God allowed of that " passage in Solomons prayer, touching the strangers Temple service,
" 1 *Kin.*8. & 9. explained. It was then their external interest in Gods
" Covenant, which gave rise to that application of the seal, and not " the commandment; contrary to what some say, that not the Co" venant, but the commandment of God onely, was the ground of Cir" cumcision.

Answ. That which I said in my Exercit. p.4. Hence I gather, first, that the right to Evangelical promises, was not the adequate reason of circumcising these or those, but Gods precept as is expressed *Gen.*17.23. *Gen.*21.4. Secondly, that those terms are not convertible [federate and to be signed] and in my Examen, p.38. that nothing but Gods will manifest in his institution can be a warrant about Circumcision, p.97. that the Jews received Circumcision as appointed them from God, under this formal reason, and no other, I have shewed before to have been acknowledged by Mr. M. in his Defence; p.92. when he said, The command is the cause of the existence of the duty: and p.182. The formal reason of their being circumcised was the command of God. Nor is it at all infringed by this reasoning of Mr. C. Those that were not bound without their desire to eat the Passeover, and so not to be circumcised, yet if they would eat the Passeover they were bound by an express command to be circumcised, *Exod.*12.48,49. whether their sojourning was constant, or for a time onely, which likely was the case of the Eunuch, Act. 8.27. who it's probable was circumcised, because there is no mention of the baptizing any uncircumcised till Cornelius, though there be no certainty whether the Eunuch were a Jew by birth, or a proselyte of the Gentiles, or whether he formerly had his constant abode among the Jews, either in Palæstina, or elsewhere, or whether then he did sojourn among the Jews then in Æthiopia. But if he were a meer proselyte of the gate, yet he might come to the Temple into the Court of the Gentiles to worship, as all acknowledge. Dr. Lightfoot of the Temple service, *ch.*1. Mr. Mede Diatr. on *Act.*17.4. &c. And therefore there is no proof from hence, that a person was circumcised by reason of the Covenant, and not of the command: Yea, though Cornelius were in the Covenant of grace, and had external Covenant interest, in that he was known to worship the true God, yet was he not by reason thereof bound by God, or taken by the Jews as one that was bound to be circumcised, or ever blamed for want of it; which shews that neither was the Covenant interest indeed, nor taken by the Jews for the warrant or rule, or reason of circumcising, but the command of God.

" Fourthly (saith Mr. C.) it appears from the nature of an initiato-
" ry seal of the Covenant, which must be as large as the Covenant, and
" so reach all the parties comprehended actually by vertue of Cove" nant, according as such children are, as before declared: especially,
" since it is the seal of Gods people and visible Church as before shew-
" ed

"ed, given first for the Church, in giving of Pastours and Teachers "onely to the Church, which alone can administer the seals in ordi- "nary dispensations, Matth. 28. end, and giving them withall to the "Church, as from her to be dispensed by her Officers, to such as desire "the same.

Answ. In stead of proofs here is a heap of dictates, 1. That Baptism is the initiatory seal of the Covenant in its nature. 2. That it must be as large as the Covenant. 3. That Pastours and Teachers given onely to the Church can alone administer the seals in ordinary dispensations, Matth. 28.19,20. 4. That the seals are given to the Church, as from her to be dispensed by her Officers, to such as desire the same. None of which will be yeelded by me, without better proof then I yet meet with. Sure Matth. 28.19,20. yeelds no proof for any of them. It proves Baptism was to be administred by the Apostles, not every seal by Church Officers.

He goes on, "Now Gods people are known, either by actual pro- "fession and confession of their own, as adults are; or by Gods promise "and by parents avouching God as theirs in Covenant and their chil- "drens, Gen. 17.9,10. thou shalt do thus, and thus, and thy seed also; "to which he submitteth afterwards, and so his also with him and af- "ter him.

Answ. That Gods people are known by Gods promise, and by parents avouching God as theirs in Covenant, and their childrens, is another dictate, which Mr. C. brings not a shew of proof for out of the New Testament; nor doth that which he brings from Gen. 17.9,10. prove it concerning the infants of the Jewish Church. For though there be a command to Abraham and his posterity to circumcise, and this is termed keeping Gods Covenant, yet there is not a word of parents profession, or Gods promise as making known who are Gods people, no not in the Jewish Church, in which there were many to whom God made no promise, nor parents avouched for them, who were known as Gods people by vertue of Gods taking the whole nation for his Church, even when the Kings and people were Idolaters. But if it were true that it were as Mr. C. would, this proves nothing concerning the people of God in the Christian Church, in which none are known to be Gods people, but by their own confession of faith.

But Mr. C. adds, Besides the main in the initiatory seal to be firstly and properly attended, as it is a covenant and Church seal is covenant and Church interest. Hence called by the name of covenant, when yet it is but a sacramental sign and seal of it, Gen. 17.13. Act. 7.8. that is first held out and sealed, as the convoy of all other desired good, 2 Pet. 1.4. But especially in that initiatory seal the signation of the covenant, is of more considerable weight, then the external symbole, ceremony and circumstance: either of cutting or washing absolutely or relatively considered. If washing of a person in the name of the Trinity, be a clearer and easier symbole then that of cutting the flesh, yet not of such weight as is the covenant sealed both by the one and the other. And to shew that the covenant is the main thing considerable therein; hence it is that the covenant is first propounded as the ground- work of the commandment it self, as of Circumcision, so of Baptism, and much more of the application of either, to any in covenant, Gen. 17.9,10,11. Therefore, scil. because I have said I will be your God, I command you to do thus and thus; not because I have commanded you, that I therefore promise to do this for you; or do you thus and thus at my command, and then on, therefore I will do so and so for you.

Answ, After the rest of his dictates, he here tels us, the main in the initiatory seal to be attended is the covenant, which I grant; but deny that it follows therefore, that the rule which the administrator is to observe, according to which he is to administer it, is the persons interest in the Covenant, so as that he must administer it to all and onely those who are in Covenant, or to whom the promise is made by God. For, besides the many reasons to the contrary, even concerning Circumcision before given, Mr. Cs. own reason is against him. For it the main in the initiatory seal to be firstly and properly attended as it is a Covenant and Church seal, is Covenant and Church interest, and therefore infants in Covenant to be circumcised and baptized; by the same reason infants in Covenant are to be admitted to the Passeover, and to have the Lords Supper, sith they are seals, they are Covenant and Church seals, infants have Covenant and Church interest, in the initiatory seal these things are to be attended as it is a Covenant and Church seal, and therefore in every Covenant and Church seal as well as the initiatory. As for what he saith about Gen. 17.9,10,11. though I have sundry times observed that the reading [v.9. therefore] is not necessary; yet omitting that exception, I grant what he saith of that Text, but withal note, 1. that the command is inferred not onely from the promise to be their God, but also from the promise of the land of Canaan, v.8. and therefore it might as well follow, They to whom God will give the land of Canaan are to have the initiatory seal, as that they to whom he promiseth to be God. 2. That which is said Gen. 17.9,10,11. is onely of circumcision. 3. If it were granted that the covenant is the groundwork of the command it self, as of circumcision so of baptism, yet it follows not, much more of the application of either to any in covenant. For though the covenant were Gods reason, why he would appoint circumcision, yet that's no rule to us, but his command onely; a reason of the will of the commander is not always a direction about the command, certainly not about each point in the command, as Mat. 28.18. it follows not, All power is given to me, therefore preach and baptize all over whom power is given to me. Besides, in this very thing the covenant could be no direction whom to circumcise, ordinarily, sith ordinarily the circumciser could not know to whom in particular the promises, whether Evangelical, or domestical, did belong, when they were to circumcise them. Yea, though Abraham knew Ishmael had no covenant interest, there being no promise made to him in it, but the contrary declared, Gen 17.19,20,21. yet he was to circumcise him, and did so. The like may be said of Esau and others.

Mr. C. adds, "So the Gospel prophesie and promise is prefaced and "put in the preamble to that injunction of their baptism, by John, Luk. "3.3,4,5,6, &c.

Answ.

Answ. It is true that the propheſie of John Baptiſts comming and work, and of Chriſts comming, *Iſa.*40.3,4,5. (which I acknowledge to be a Goſpel promiſe) are ſet down as the warrant of Johns preaching the Baptiſm of repentance unto remiſſion of ſins; but this doth not prove that this was his rule in baptizing, to baptize every one, even infants, and thoſe onely who had this intereſt in the Covenant of grace, that to them and each of them God promiſed remiſſion of ſins. Yea, ſith Johns Baptiſm is termed the Baptiſm of repentance, it is clear he required repentance of the baptized as the antecedent to his Baptiſm, and therefore not barely ſuch Covenant intereſt as Mr. C. aſcribes to all infants of believers onely in profeſſion.

He goes on thus. *Hence the Goſpel, and ſo the Covenant of grace, held out as grounding Baptiſm, Act.*2.38,39. And childrens Covenant right, was held out as one branch of that Goſpel, as we proved; and from the ſame principle, that they were alſo to be ſealed by Baptiſm; yea, albeit the Apoſtles urged repentance, yet the ſeal is propounded as to the promiſe; Peter ſaid, be baptized, for the promiſe is to you: And this was no meer moral motive, but a Scriptural groundword inforcing it, as it was a Scriptural groundwork virtually injoyning and requiring them to repent, for the promiſe is to you.

Answ. [Hence] ſhould, if there were any good ſence in Mr. Cs. ſpeech, refer to ſomething precedent, from whence that which he ſpeaks is derived, which I diſcern not, but a dark way of dictating, fitting ſuch as love to puzzle, not to inform a reader. It is before largely ſhewed, that neither childrens Covenant right external from parents faith hath been held out by Mr. C. as one branch of the Goſpel, *ſect.*44. of this part of my Review, nor that barely from this principle they were to be baptized; but that repentance in each perſon to be baptized is made the antecedent to Baptiſm, *ſect.*22,23, and elſewhere. That Peter ſaid not as Mr. C. ſets down his words, is apparent from the Text *Act.*2.38,39. that the promiſe is urged as a motive to thoſe to whom Peter ſpake to do their duty of repenting, and being baptized, is ſo plain, as that Dr. Thomas Goodwin upon the reading the firſt part of my Review, *ſect.*5. did acknowledge it, and it is proved ſo *ſect.*21. here and elſewhere: Nor doth Mr. C. here or elſewhere ſhew it to be any other Scripture groundwork then as a motive to the baptized each of them firſt to repent, and then to be baptized, no rule by which the baptizer is to adminiſter it, or the baptized to claim it as his right without his perſonal repentance, and declaration of his faith in Chriſt into whoſe name he is to be baptized.

He adds. "So *Act.*10. Peter ſaith, there is no let to their Baptiſm; "and thereof he maketh the viſibility of that Covenant grace, although "common to reprobates alſo in thoſe firſt times, his groundwork ſ ga-"thering thereby, that they were not as formerly prophane, unclean, "and outlaries from the Covenant, as *Epheſ.*2.11,12. but clean and nigh "as they themſelves were.

Anſ. It is true there was no let to Cornelius his Baptiſm, and thoſe other who were with him, yet not meerly becauſe of their extraordinary gifts, but because those gifts were manifested by their glorifying God, and as may be gathered from Act. 11.17,18. their glorifying God contained expressions of faith in Christ and repentance, which whosoever should do as they did, it is without doubt they should be baptized. But Mr. Cs. Covenant interest of infants, who make no shews of faith and repentance as they did Act. 10.46. yeelds no warrant for their Baptism.

He goes on, "Washing of regeneration is not grounded on any "thing in us or without us, so much as on Gods grace, and so Covenant "favour, Tit. 3.5.

Answ. It is true, this is the inward impulsive cause why God regenerates; but Gods grace, and Covenant favour is no rule to a Minister to baptize by, sith it is an unknown thing, which agrees not with the property of a rule.

"Hence also (saith Mr. C.) by Baptism persons are not sealed into "any thing in them so much as into the name of the Father, Son, and "Spirit, even into the Covenant name of grace, whereby he is known, "and into Covenant fellowship with the blessed Trinity, to which every "baptized person, prove he elect or reprobate, yet is thus externally "sealed.

Answ. The terming of baptizing sealing, and the name of the Father, Son, and Spirit, the Covenant name of grace, are Mr. Cs. new-minted phrases; if this be his meaning, that every person rightly baptized, whether he be elect or reprobate, is sealed by God, that is in Baptism assured of fellowship with the Trinity according to the new Covenant of Gospel grace, I deny it; if onely that he professeth his communion to be with them, I grant it; but this proves not that Covenant interest of infants, who make no such profession, intitles them to Baptism.

Again, saith he, "That fellowship with Christ, as head of the visible "Church by the Spirit in the judgement of verity or charity such; it is "all but Covenant grace and blessing.

Answ. Be it so: yet what this is to prove such fellowship to be a rule to baptize infants, I see not.

"Of old (saith Mr. C.) the consequent cause of the seal was grace "in them and theirs; but the antecedent cause was Gods Covenant "grace to them and on them, Gen. 17.7,8,9. & Deut. 30.6. and so "now, that part of Abrahams Covenant was not then appliable to in-"fants, scil. walk before me, &c. but yet that was then appliable; I "will be their God, I will circumcise their hearts, and that sufficed them, "as Deut. 30. the Analogy holds now.

Answ. What may be said to be a consequent cause, I do not yet conceive, the rule of Logick I have learned is, that the cause is before the effect: Yet what ever it be Mr. C. means, though it might suffice for Circumcision, it doth not for Baptism; nor is that to be regulated by Analogy of Circumcision, as is shewed in the second part of this Review, sect. 2, 3.

Yet again, "In a word, the seal is a seal not of nor to the command-"ment, but covenant; this therefore is the main and principal in the "application of it.

Answ.

Answ. If Baptism be a seal, it seems to me not a seal of or to the commandment or covenant, but the profession of the baptized; and therefore this is the main and principal in the application of it.

Yet more, It is the covenant which hath the main instrumental force, in the fruit of the initiatory seal and the application of it, Ephes. 5. 25, 26. and why shall not the external interest in the covenant, have chief influence into the external interest, as well of the application of the initiatory seal?

Answ. I understand not what fruit of the initiatory seal he means, nor what is the external interest in the Covenant; the word, Ephes. 5. 25. 26. Is meant of the word preached, which is not instrumental to infants for any sanctification or cleansing their meant. The want of Gods appointment is the reason of not applying Baptism to infants.

Once more, By external interest in the Covenant, persons so interested come to have external interest, at least to the final causes of Baptism, as Covenant mercy and blessing, the Spirit, Christ resurrection, &c. Tit. 3. 8. and 1 Cor. 12. 12, 13. 1. Pet. 3. 21. And therefore as well so farre inrighted in the initiatory seal of it, whether they are adult or infants.

Answ. 1. External interest in the covenant, external interest in the final causes of Baptism, are notions I understand not. 2. Covenant mercy and blessing, the spirit, Christs resurrection, are not final cause of Baptism, for then when the end of Baptism is attained, they should be effects of Baptism, for the end in intention, is the effect in execution; But this is too absurd. 3. An inrighting so far in the initiatory seal, which intimates a man may have an inrighting so far to such a measure and no further, is another new notion I understand not. 4. If Mr. Cs. antecedent had sense or truth, yet the consequence is to be denied, no other interest external is inrighting to Baptism, but that which is according to the institution, Matth. 28. 19. discipleship, or profession of faith.

To the 8th. Sect. I answer by denying that the Covenant priviledge of grace Evangelical, hath such distinction of principal and less principal counterparties, as Mr. means C. (unless he understand by Christ the principal, and the elect and true believers the less principal, as Gal. 3. 16.) and that the Covenant priviledges of grace Evangelical belong to any other then the elect: yet I grant the Covenant Gen. 17. and many priviledges of Divine grace which were not Evangelical, did belong to many of the Israelites, who made no good use thereof. The Covenant Evangelical was never sealed personally to Ishmael. That which Mr. C. dictates without proof about the everlasting covenant, and the initial seal in its generical nature, is answered here sect. 80. and the point about the ordinance of infants visible Churchmembership unrepealed sect. 50, &c. and the non-inclusion of infants Matth. 28. 19. under the term nation is shewed there, and in the second part of this Review sect. 9. The position of Mr. Cs. sect. 9. may be granted, though Acts 2. 38, 39. make nothing for it. Sect. 10. Mr. C. proves nothing but that parents were to take care that their children were circumcised; that which he saith of the children begotten on prohibited women, Ezra. 9. and Timothy begotten on a Jewish woman by a Grecian husband, that they were circumcised, Act. 16. 1, 2, 3. proves this, that the children, who were not of the Congregation of Israel, and so no visible Churchmembers were to be circumcised, nor had Covenant interest. The case controverted 1 Cor. 7. 14. was onely concerning the persons unequally yoked, not concerning their children. Acts 2. 38, 39. Is not a word to prove parents are to take care of the infants baptism, nor Gen. 7. 1. with 1 Pet. 3. 21. there being not an infant in the Ark, nor typical Baptism being a rule concerning formal Baptism of Christians; if it were, Masters must take care to baptize their house, yea their married children though as prophane as Cham, and their wives with them. How impertinently 1 Cor. 10. 2. is alledged, is shewed in the second part of this Review sect. 21. What Mr. C. observes out of Exod. 12. 44, 48, 49. that a stranger was not to eate the Passeover, except all his males were circumcised, if it be right, yet it makes nothing for proof of parents duty to see their infants baptized, there being no such institution about Baptism and the Lords Supper, as was about Circumcision and the Passeover. It is granted that the words [Exod. 12. 40.] will keep the Passeover to the Lord] are meant onely of an adult person, yet it is true also, which I say in my Examen part. 4. sect. 6. That males not come to years of discretion fit to receive the Lords Supper were to eat the Passeover, and consequently (if Mr. Cs. dictates were of any of any validity) parents should see they eate Lords Supper. I grant, That God made Abraham Gen. 17. 7. a common person as well in reference to us inchurched Gentiles, as to the inchurched Jewes and Proselytes in point of Evangelical covenant interest, but that hee should be so made in point of ingagement from covenant interest, unto the receiving of the initiatory seal by parents and children, Gen. 17. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. is but Mr. Cs. fancy sufficiently refuted by this, that if it were true, then we Gentiles are bound to circumcise our infants, (which is the onely initiatory seal there meant) contrary to Acts 15. 24. Gal. 5. 1, 2. That which is true of Abraham and his natural seed, must be applied to Abrahams spiritual seed, true Believers of the Gentiles and their natural seed; is but Mr. Cs. vain dream dictated without proof. My grant in my Examen part. 3. sect. 1. pag. 37. (as the words shew) was not that children might be baptized vertually in their parents in exact speech, so as to receive it in their own persons, but onely in that sense in which Mr. M. said women were circumcised vertually in the males, yet so as they might not be circumcised in their own persons: which being considered, my words yeild Mr. C. no advantage.

To the 11th. section I grant, that Matth. 28. 19. ties not the Baptizer to know the baptized to be internally and savingly interested in the covenant: But that it sufficeth, that that sort or species of infants, scil. such like infants are in deed and truth of Christs Kingdome, I utterly deny. For then any infant in the world might be baptized, because he is of that sort or species of infants, scil. such like infants are in deed and truth of christs Kingdome. Dare any say of no unbelievers infants is Christs Kingdome? However it is true of Belivers though not inchurched, and yet Mr. C. denies the right of the child, if the parent be not inchurched. Mr. Cs. reason are vain, neither is our Lord Christs saying, Luk. 18. 16.

any rule to us about baptizing; nor was the rule of circumcising infants that some of that sort had the internal saving interest and efficacy of this promise, I will be the God of thy seed, but the command of God, without which it is better to exclude all infants, then upon our own heads to bring on our selves the guilt of will-worship by taking them in. Which must of necessity fall on infant Baptizers after Mr. Cs. rule. For Christs appointment was to baptize infants no otherwise then persons of years. There is no difference in the words Matth. 28. 19. between the reason of baptizing one and the other. But persons of years were not to be baptized by Mr. Cs. rule, in that they are of that sort or species of persons, scil. such like persons are in deed and in truth of Christs Kingdome, but onely upon their own discipleship or profession of faith, as the practise thoroughout the Acts of the Apostles shews: Therefore neither are Believers children to bee baptized after any other rule. And yet infants are no more left in the wide wilderneß, or any whit less folded up in the Church by their non-baptizing, then they are by their baptism. If they of N. E. do fold them up in the Church, why do they keep them from Church-communion till they bee made members by Church-covenant? If it be better 99 who happily have not so peculiar a title thereto, be folded up in the Church, then that one of such lambs be left out in the wide wilderneß, are not they guilty of too much strictness in leaving out of the Church in the wide wilderness, many weak lambs who are weak in faith, because they do not satisfie the Church in the declaration of their experiences? But this is the guise of men who are strict in their own inventions, as in Church-covenant, declaration of experiences for admission to Church-communion, &c. to bee loose about Gods commands, as this of baptizing disciples of Christ is. Enough in answer to these cloudy dictates of Mr. C.

SECT. LXXXVI.

The 13th. and 14th. Chapters of Mr. Rutherfords first part of the Covenant, are examined; and found to make nothing for Infant Baptism.

AFter the finishing the most of this part of the Review, my learned and godly brother Mr. John Skynner of weston in Herefordshire (who hath written a solid Treatise against Infant Baptism, entituled, Corruption corrected, in answer to one Mr. woodward) acquainted me that Mr. Rutherford had written for infant Baptism in a Book of his of the Covenant of grace part. 1. chap. 13, 14. which having read, I found (as he foretold me) no more strength then others had brought for it, and it is written rather like a Sermon then a Scholastique Dispute, and with so many unproved dictates, such a number of obscure expressions, (many of which I cannot discern good sense in, so that they have need rather of construction then refutation) so many incoherencies and inconsequences, as that I do not jhdge it worth while to answer him. Yet because of the name of the man, and my words sect. 1. of the 2d. part of this Review, I shall add some animadversions on those two chapters.

Ch. 13. he tels us, that persons are in Covenant with God externally by visible profession, which I grant, if meant of their own personal profession; but deny, 1. That this promise Gen. 17. 7. I will bee thy God and the God of thy seed, is a tacit and implicit profession, or makes (of it self) parties in Covenant externally. 2. That infants born of covenanted parents are in covenant with God, because they are born of such parents as are in covenant with God, Gen. 17. 7. What is said Deut. 4. 37. Deut. 10. 15. is meant onely of the people of Israel, as the very words [brought out of Egypt as it is this day] shew; nor is there a word in those verses, of their being in covenant with God because born of such parents, but of Gods special choise of that people. It is false which he saith that the Apostle Acts 2. 39. speaks in the very terms and words of the Covenant, Gen. 17. 7. It is true rather, that hee speaks in never a term or word there used. It is as false that the Apostle commanded any other to be baptized Acts 2. 38. then whom he commanded to repent. Did he not presume that Anabaptists, as hee terms us, were very Blockheads, hee would not not presume, that wee should believe his vain dictates, when the very copulative term shews the same are spoken to in one and the other command, and the words being an answer to the question v. 37. shew they are directed to those who spake v. 37. And the word [you] used in the precept of Baptizing contains the same with those who were to receive remission of sins, and the gift of the holy Ghost, and are distinct from their children, v. 39. and therefore cannot be meant of their children, much less of their infant children, whom it had been ridiculous for Peter to have commanded to be baptized. How pertinent the answer had been as I expounded it, is often shewed before; though their children crucified not the Lord Jesus, nor were concerned either in the evil of their parents, who crucified the Lord of glory, nor in the good of their repentance more then stones; yet I know no Anabaptists whose grounds infer, that the Jews children who crucified Christ were not visibly in Covenant with their parents, not capable of actual hearing the word, mourning for and repenting of their sins, as Zach. 12. 10. Matth. 3. 8, 9, 10. nor concerned either in the evil of their parents, nor in the good of their repentance more then stones; nor do I conceive it true that the opposites of infant Baptism say, that Covenant promises are no more made to children, then to stones; but that these are vile calumnies of Mr. Rutherford, unfit for such a man as he is taken to be.

How Isa. 2. 2, 3. & 19. 24, 25. Psal. 22. 27. Revel. 11. 15. Isa. 60. 1, 2, 3, 4. Mal. 1. 11. Psal. 2. 8, 9. & 72. 7, 8, 9, 10. are to be understood of persons adult onely, and yet infants not cut off from the Covenant, is shewed Review part. 2. sect. 9. and elsewhere. It is not contrary to Acts 2. 39. to say, that Covenant promises are not to the children of Believers, and yet it hath been fulfilled, that the Gentiles and Heathen are become the Lords people.

What

What he ſaith out of Exod. 20. 6. Pſal. 37, 26. & 112. 2. Deut. 28. is anſwered here ſect. 64. 70, 71. It is not true that Paul, Rom. 11. 16. ſaith the ſame of the Jews root and branches, Fathers and children, which he ſaith 1 Cor. 7. 14. of the unbelieving yoke fellowes ſanctification in the yoke fellow, and their childrens holineſs. Nor is it true, that the ſame Covenant which was made with Abraham, Gen. 17. 7. was made with the Corinthians, 2 Cor. 6. 16. or any of the texts he cites, there being none of them that promiſe, that God would bee a God to them and their ſeed.

His allegations from Heb. 7. 22. Heb. 8. 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. are ſhewed to bee frivolous here, ſect. 66. and elſewhere. What he talks of a Father having no warrant to offer the Covenant of grace to one Pagan more then another, if children be not in covenant, is vain, the offer of the Covenant of grace being nothing elſe but the preaching of the Goſpel, which is to be to all, Mark 16. 15. whether in Covenant or no. The allegation that the promiſe Gen. 17. 7. is made onely to the elect, Rom. 9. 8. is a plain proof of this poſition, that the natural children of Abraham, and conſequently Believers children now, except elected, have not that promiſe made to them, and therefore are not in covenant by Gods act of promiſe to them, which doctrine Mr. Rutherford himſelf taught in his Apologetical. exercit. 2. c. 2. p. 306. when he ſaid; The elect alone are ſaid in Scriptures federate, ſons and heirs of promiſe, Rom. 9. 8. And to Chriſt alone the Prince, and leading heir, are the promiſes made, Gal. 3. 16. Pſal. 89. 26, 27. in him, to his ſeed and children given to him of the Father, Heb. 2. 13. Nor can he here deny, that the ſons of the promiſe are the choſen of God, in whom the word takes effect. Which if true, then it is moſt falſe, that a Believers ſeed not choſen is in covenant with God, by vertue of that promiſe Gen. 17. 7. and his allegation of it, and Acts 2. 39. and other places for baptiſm of believers infants, whether elect or not, as having that promiſe made by God to them, is manifeſtly impertinent. Nevertheleſs we need not ſay, that there are none covenanted with God but the choſen under the New Teſtament, or that there is no ſuch thing as an external viſible covenanting with God under the New Teſtament: but ſay, that no infant doth viſibly externally covenant with God, ſo as thereby to be entitled to Baptiſm, ſith no perſons are to bee baptized by Chriſts appointment, but ſuch as in their own perſons do profeſs the faith.

The priviledges mentioned Rom. 3. 1, 2. & 9. 4. Mr. Rutherford himſelf appropriates to the Jews, Due right of Presbyteries ch. 4. ſect. 5. pag. 192. What he ſaith pag. 77, 78, 79, 80. is all anſwered before, chiefly in anſwer to Mr. Blake, Review par. 2. ſect. 9. or here, ſect. 46, 47, 48. or in anſwer to Mr. Baxter and Mr. Marſhal. And if it were not, yet the Reader may diſcern its impertinency, ſith the thing hee endeavours to prove, is an external viſible covenanting in the New Teſtament (which can be onely on mans part) and being in covenant thereupon, and right to Baptiſm, and is not denied, whereas his poſition he ſhould prove is, that the Covenant choiſe on Gods part is extended to the ſeed of Believers as ſuch in the New Teſtament, p. 73. His words pag. 80. They cannot be baptized but as in covenant with God, are true, if meant of being in covenant by their profession externally: but so infants are excluded; if of Gods covenanting or promise, are false, and so are those other words, we are the same way in covenant as the Jews were, and our visible Church now, and the visible Church then are of the same constitution.

I call not the Covenant Gen. 17. civil, but mixt, containing some promises civil, some spiritual or rather the same promises, in one sense spiritual, in another civil. I doubt not to say the Covenant to Adam and the Jews at Mount Sinai were two Covenants of works, a third in the Gospel I know not. The Covenant with David, Psal. 89. 2 Sam. 7. so far as it was Evangelical, was the same with that to Abraham, Gen. 17. and Adam Gen. 3. 15. as they were Evangelical, but so far as it was Oeconomical, it was different from both, and another Covenant then those to Adam, Abraham, or the Jews at Mount Sinai: The promise of working miracles, was not the Evangelical Covenant of grace, but that of remission of sins and eternal life to the repenting believers, under which was John Baptist as well as the Apostles, was it: yet I know no absurdity to say, the Apostles were both under the Covenant of grace with John Baptist, and another Covenant Mark 16. 17, 18. different from that John Baptist and many Believers were under. I find no promise of the blessings of their land, as Gen. 17. is to Abrahams seed of Canaan, to all believers in any of those texts, Ezek. 36. 25, 26, 30, 31. Jer. 31. 31. compared with 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43. Matth. 6. 31. Luke 12. 31. 1 Tim. 4. 8. Heb. 13. 5. 6. Infants elect are in the same Covenant Evangelical with Abraham, shall have a Covenant Resurrection and Salvation, by Christ, yet not in the visible Church, but are saved without it. It is no New Testament ordinance that Ministers preach the Gospel to every creature, without limitation, or explication restrictive to the intelligent of them, or baptize all nations simply, whether disciples, or believers, or not, but the disciples or believers in Christ of all nations. That faith doth not sanctifie in every subject, but in subjecto capaci, and so not an unbelieving whore, 1 Cor. 7. 14. proves, that the sanctifying or holiness there, is not ascribed to the faith of the one parent, as to the formal reason, but to the conjugal relation, contrary to Pædobaptists exposition of federal holiness, 1 Cor. 7. 14. which Mr. Baxter hath neither solidly nor learnedly vindicated, as might have been discerned by reading the first part of this Review sect. 22, &c. which if Mr. Rutherford read with the rest, it's likely he would not say so unadvisedly as he doth, that the dispute is at an end now. If God made the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. to Abraham not as a Father onely, but as head of a family, and covenant holiness is of societies and houses under the New Testament as in Abrahams house, then should infidels infants, yea infidels in a believers house be baptized by Pædobaptists rules; then is it no priviledge to believers and their seed, then doth the Apostle after Pædobaptists exposition of 1 Cor. 7. 14. say false, that the children were unclean, that is, without federal holiness, if neither parent were a believer. Most false is that which he saith without colour of proof pag. 83. Not any are baptized in the New Testament (except the Eunuch and Saul Acts 8. 39.) who were baptized firstly, but they were baptized as publike men representing a seed; The contrary appears from Luk. 7. 29. Joh. 4. 1. Nor is it true, that societies as such, were baptized, nor any such thing intimated in the words, Matth. 3. 3. Mar. 1. 5. Lu. 3. 21. but onely that a great number of people came to him and were baptized. Yea in those places, as also Joh. 3. 22, 23, 26. it is plain none were baptized, but such as came to hear John, and by confessing their sins shewed their repentance. No more needs be said to the stale frivolous allegations of baptizing households, then is said Examen part. 3. sect. 14. Review part. 2. sect. 20. nor to Rom. 11. 16, 17. then in the first part of the Review sect. 1, &c. The Lord sends the Gospel arbitrarily to a City, household, or single person, as to the Eunuch, Paul, Sergius Paulus, as he pleaseth, and wee are to enquire whether the faith of the person be real, afore he is to be baptized, though the Gospel be come to the nation, house, or society. Nor is there any truth in it, no not according to the Apostles doctrine, as 1 Cor. 7. 14. is expounded by Pædobaptists, and they dispute from Gen. 17. 7. if the friend, not a father, be in the house or society and profess the Gospel, hee and his servants and friends obtain right to Baptism.

Mr. Rutherford pag. 85. enquires, what is the formal reason and ground that any hath right to Baptism? The terme of the question seem to me to intimate, as if he with other Pædobaptists, took Baptism onely for a priviledge derived from a grant or Covenant of God, which I take to be onely a duty both in the baptized and baptizer, by reason of a command of Christ (though there be also a priviledge consequent upon it) and so the formal reason of it is the command, and the qualification which the baptized is to have, when hee is baptized, is believing with all his heart; which if he wants he sins, yet not so as that the person, if after a dogmatical faith he become a sincere believer, is to be baptized again, but to repent of his former sin, as Peter advised Simon Magus. The qualification, which the baptizer is to baptize upon, is a sober, intelligent, serious and free profession of faith in Christ, upon which persons are termed disciples of Christ and believers, and is the rule to the baptizer, Matth. 28. 19. compared with Mar. 16. 15, 16. which warrants his action, he being not able to look into the heart. Mr. Rutherfords objection from Mar. 16. 16. is answered Review part. 2 sect. 7. p. 115. It is false, that none are to be baptized, but covenanted ones; as Acts 2. 39. meaning by Gods promise, his promise of remission of sins and salvation to them by Christ, nor doth Acts 2. 39. prove it. If all infants, even of Pagans, and all aged are not to be baptized, how is it true, that all nations are to be baptized without any other circumscription, as Mr. Rutherford cites the command Matth. 28. 19. here pag. 84? I like his words. All in Covenant are not to be baptized. For such as are onely really and invisibly in Covenant, and do make no profession of Christ at all, are not warrantably by the Church to be baptized. Onely these whether old or young that are tali modo visibili federati, such as professedly and visibly in Covenant and called, Acts 2. 39. are warrantably baptized. Hence they must be so in covenant, as they be called by the word of the Covenant; for they cannot be baptized against their will, Luk. 7. 29, 30. Which if Mr.

Rutherford will ſtand to, the controverſie may be ended; and I promiſe him, that if he can prove, or ſhew that infants make any profeſſion of Chriſt, are profeſſedly and viſibly in covenant, are ſo in covenant, as that they be called by the word of the Covenant, and that they are willing to be baptized, I ſhall yeild to baptize them. But this is frequent with Pædobaptiſts (as I have oft ſhewed in Mr. M. Mr. B. and Mr. Bl.) to let fall ſuch paſſages, eſpecially in opening the inſtitution, Matth. 28. 19. in oppoſing Papiſts, Prelatiſts, Antibaptiſts, as overthrow their diſputes for infant baptiſm, and therefore they will not ſtand to them, when they are urged againſt them, but by ſome ſhift elude them.

It is falſe which Mr. Rutherford ſaith, that this propoſition, Thoſe to whom the promiſe of the Covenant does belong, theſe ſhould be baptized (if univerſally underſtood) is Peters Acts 2. 38, 39. or that this aſſumption, The promiſe of the Covenant is to you and your children, is the expreſs words of Peter. The offer of Chriſt in the preached Goſpel, is not the call, meant Acts 2. 39. nor are all ſuch as to whom the offer is made externally in covenant, and ſuch to whom the Covenant is made and ſhould be baptized; though I grant, if they give a profeſſed conſent to the call of the Goſpel, they are baptizable. Calvins words are no proof, againſt thoſe who yeild not what he ſaith of the Anabaptiſts of his time. Mr Rutherfords words are too vain for a man of his name, which ſay, that believing children are not children, but men of age. My expoſition of Acts 2. 39. neither excludes ſucking children, nor is the incluſion proved by him from Matth. 2. 18. 1 Cor. 7. 14. the ſenſe Mr. Rutherford makes the onely ſenſe of Acts 2. 39. the promiſe and word of the Covenant is preached to you and your children in you, is falſe, for then it had been true, that it was preached then to all afar off, which is manifeſtly falſe, and vain; for it had been no comfort to them, ſith it might bee preached without their benefit, nor is this to be externally in covenant (except in Mr. Rutherfords gibberiſh) both under the Old and New Teſtament. In the Old perſons were ſo by birth, without preaching; in the New, they onely who profeſs faith.

The other ſenſe Mr. Rutherford ſets down is none of mine, nor is it needful I ſhould anſwer the objections againſt it and the terms, the Lord hath internally covenanted with you; I take to be non-ſenſe, no covenanting with us being an immanent, but a tranſeunt act. My ſenſe is fully ſet down here Sect. 13, &c. and proved. I grant no more Covenant favour holden forth to their children, Acts 2. 39. then to the Pagans children, except in priority of tender. I make not external covenant holineſs, ceremonial holineſs out of date, nor can he cleer it, or that by any thing I ſay, the words Acts 2. 39. muſt be in a contradictory way expounded, to wit, the promiſe is no more made to your children ſo long as they are infants, then to Devils; which ſeeing hee mentions Mr. Ms. words but a little before, I have reaſon to conceive reflect on my ſelf; and if ſo, they have too great a ſhew of Diaboliſm. Right to hear the preached Goſpel, and a Covenant or Goſpel warrant peculiar to believers children, is ſuch talk as I underſtand not. I think hearing is a Duty obliging all,

Pagans

Pagans have not onely warrant, but alſo command to hear it, it is not onely lawfull but neceſſary. The children of the moſt holy Chriſtian Gentile believers, are not Chriſtians till they believe, and both they and their parents when they believe are ſtill Heathens; the term Heathens, being all one with Gentiles contradiſtinct to Jews, and ſo uſed here by Mr. Rutherford himſelf pag. 74. in words before cited, and I ſometimes admire that ſome learned men ſhould ſuggeſt this to Readers and hearers as a hainous thing to term them Heathens, when they muſt be ſo, if they be not Jews, though moſt holy Chriſtians. The term Pagans, if it bee all one with profeſſed infidels poſitively, I grant it belongs not to our children; yet they are infidels negatively, till they believe, and are ſo accounted of them that admit them not to the Lords Supper, as well as of thoſe that admit them not to Baptiſm, unto which actual profeſſion of faith is as well required as to the Lords Supper. To neither hath a man any right by Covenant, although by the Covenant he hath right to the benefits of the Goſpel. Baptiſm and the Lords Supper are neither of them formally benefits, or ſeals of the Covenant of grace; though by conſequent, in the right uſe of them, ſuch benefits accrue to men by them. They are both rites appointed by Chriſt, the one to be the baptized his ſigne, whereby he profeſſeth repentance and faith in Chriſt, and engageth himſelf ſolemnly to adhere to Chriſt as his diſciple, the other whereby hee ſignifies his remembrance of Chriſts death, both our duties, and a right to duty, ſounds to mee like nonſenſe.

I know no Anabaptiſt that ignorantly confounds the promiſe and the thing promiſed, the Covenant and benefits covenanted; But this I aver, that when God promiſeth and covenanteth they are connex, there is no man to whom Cod promiſeth or covenanteth, but he hath or ſhall have the thing promiſed or covenanted. And this I learn from the Apoſtle Rom. 9. 8. who makes onely the choſen ſons of promiſe, as Mr. Rutherford here pag. 77. expounds him; and that is, as Gal. 3. 16. he expreſſeth himſelf, to Abraham and his ſeed were the promiſes made or ſaid, that is Chriſt perſonal or myſtical, or both, and to no other. And ſure the Apoſtle Rom. 9. 6. did think it blaſphemy to ſay, that God had promiſed, and thoſe he promiſed to ſhould not have the thing promiſed; for then Gods word ſhould fall, and he be a liar. If Gods conditional promiſe be a Covenant, yet it is made onely to them that perform the condition. He that believeth and is baptized ſhall bee ſaved, is not an univerſal promiſe to all men, whether believers or not; but onely to ſo many as ſhall believe. 'Tis true we can exclude none, becauſe we cannot exempt any from believing, and therefore we are to make an indifferent offer to any, but God in his intention excludes many, and his promiſe is not made to them whom he excludes, nor are they under his Covenant, or in covenant with him, in reſpect of his act of promiſing; though they may be ſaid to bee in Covenant, or under the Covenant in reſpect of their own act of promiſing; I grant the command is to perſons whether they believe or not, obey or not, for that is not an enunciative ſpeech, that ſignifies any thing true or falſe, but is in the imperative mood, and extendeth to all men whatsoever, so as whosoever doth not as the command bids, sins: But when Mr. Rutherford saith, the promise is to you, and so are the commands and threatnings, whether ye believe or not; whether ye transgress or transgress not: (if an Anabaptist falsly so called may have the boldness to tell a Professour in Divinity in an University in Scotland of ignorance) I should tell him, he is mistaken, in saying, the promise is to you whether you believe or no, the threatning is to you whether you transgress or no. For they being enunciations in the indicative mood, if meant so, should bee false; which to impute to God, would asperse him with falshood and injustice, which is horrendum dictu. And in my apprehension it savours of ignorance which Mr. Rutherford saith pag. 91. Nor is it true, that the promise is made to the aged upon condition of believing. The promise is made to them absolutely, whether they believe or not. But the blessing of the promise and Covenant of grace is given and bestowed onely conditionally if they believe. The promise is absolutely made, it's called conditional from the thing conditionally given. For either I have lost my wits, or else a conditional promise is a conditional proposition, expressing something that shall be, if some other thing bee put; and sure a conditional proposition is so termed from the words, not from the event. A promise is a promise absolute or conditional, as soon as the words are spoken, long before the thing promised is given, yea though it be never given. The giving or not giving upon performing or not performing the condition, may make the promise true or false determinately, but not conditional or absolute. I forbear to uncover any further Mr. Rutherfurds nakedness in this speech, and refer him to Mr. Baxter to correct him for that speech; nor is it true, that the promise is not made to the aged upon condition of believing. And as for his speeches, of the saving of infants of believing parents dying in infancy, and our giving evidence thereof, there is so much said before of it, especially against Mr. Baxter Sect. 73, 74. and elsewhere, that I need say no more here. As for what he saith, of our want of warrant to pray for them without their being in Covenant; though it hurt not me, who grant of so many as are elect that they are in Covenant; yet I think I have a warrant to pray by a general command, 1 Tim. 2. 1, 2, 3. and in faith by a general promise, Matth. 7. 7, 8. the knowledge of Gods goodness, and the goodness of the thing asked.

In the rest of the Chapter, Mr. Rutherfurd endeavours to find a way, according to which infants of believers may be said to bee within Covenant, and the words Acts 2. 39. meant of them, and their title to Baptism thence inferred: for which end hee useth many words with distinctions, which are vain, without good sense, or good consistency, or any thing to his purpose.

Four ways he conceives infants of believers may be said to be in Covenant. 1. In that God maketh the promise of a new heart to them; but this he grants is true onely of the elect; and not of all commanded to be baptized, Acts 2. 38, 39. And pag. 86. he granted persons invisibly in Covenant without profession, are not warrantably to be baptized. 2. In that God promiseth forgiveness of sins, and eternal life upon condition of repentance and faith. Thus infants may be in the Covenant of grace, but no otherwise then or rather not so much as professed unbelievers, to whom it is tendred, who yet are not to be baptized, and if the promise be meant so Acts 2. 39. it proves not a right to Baptism thence till the condition be performed, which when infants declare they do, I shall baptize them. 3. That they are in Covenant because they are under the command, for thus he speaks pag. 94. The Covenant must be considered in abstracto, and formally in the letter as a simple way of saving sinners, so they believe, so all within the visible Church are in the Covenant of grace, and so it contains onely the will of precept. In which he is mistaken, 1. in that he saith, the Covenant formerly in the letter is a simple way of saving sinners, so they believe; for such a speech is not the Covenant in any sense, much less formally in the letter in abstracto; such a speech as this, men are saved if they believe, or the way of saving men is upon condition of believing, is not the Covenant sith it is not a promise, but a Covenant is formally a promise, or an aggregate of promises. 2. In that he saith, the Covenant formally contains only the will of precept; whereas the Covenant formally contains not at all the will of precept, the will of precept containing onely the command of what should be done by another, but the Covenant is a promise of what the Covenanter will do; the one is expresst in the imperative mood, the other in the indicative; nor is the will of precept in the letter as a simple way of saving sinners, so they believe; for such an expression is no command at all, but a declaration of event. 3. In that he saith, so all within the visible Church are in the Covenant of grace, which he seems to mean thus, they all and they onely. But sure either infants are not at all this way in the Covenant of grace, who never hear the command propounded to them, or if they be, they are no more in it then the Americans out of the visible Church, who never heard of Christ, nor so much as professed unbelievers to whom the Gospel hath been preached; and therfore this way infants have not right to baptism. So that this speech of Mr. Rutherfurd hath, as many of his expressions, nothing but ignorance and impertinency. 4. A person may be said to be in Covenant, in that he is really covenanted and engaged by his consented profession, to fulfil the Covenant; as Mr. Rutherfurd speaks pag. 92. This way I grant intitles to Baptism; but sure infants are not so in Covenant, nor is the meaning so Acts 2. 39. where the promise is Gods promise to us, not our promise to God; nor is this the Pædobaptists plea, when they argue infants are in Covenant, therefore to be baptized; for they mean by being in Covenant, that God hath promised to be a God to them as the seed of believers, Gen. 17. 7. And therefore Mr. Rutherfurd hath not yet shewed any way, according to which infants of believers are intitled to Baptism, by vertue of the Covenant of grace; or from Acts 2. 38, 39. notwithstanding all his blooding of it, to use his own term. Let's view what is in Ch. 14.

Neither is it true, that God saith persons should be circumcised because of Gods promise, Gen. 17. 7. Nor, that women were circumcised in the males; nor was Peter sent to baptize all the circumcised; nor are infants to bee Baptized by the ground of Circumcision; nor is there any thing

Acts

Acts 2. 38, 39. that faith, because the same promise is made to fathers and to children must infants bee baptised. Neither do I know what Mr. Rutherfurd understands by Theological essence, or formal effects; nor do I conceive any truth or sense in Mr. Rutherfurds talk of Circumcision and Baptism being the same in the substance, nature, and Theological essence, and in the formal effects; much less that the Lord hath any such argument, Gen. 17. 7. And though I should grant all are to bee exhorted to be baptised, who are under the same Covenant; yet not without repentance and faith foregoing their Baptism, without which the promise warrants not Baptism. There is no such command Gen. 17. 7, 8. that all these in Covenant should be marked with the initiatory seal; nor is Baptism instituted in place of Circumcision; and if it were, yet more is needful to warrant infant baptism.

There is as plain precept Acts 2.38. & 8.36, 37. *Mark.*16.16. Matth. 28. 19. against infant Baptism, as is against infant Communion 1 Cor. 11. 28. Wee have good consequences out of the word against infant Baptism, without arguing from the Covenant of grace; which Mr Rutherfurd may see in the 2d. part of this Review sect. 5 and none against the Holy Ghost, but from him. That the promises of the Covenant of grace are expresly to infants of the New Testament, is more then I find Acts 2. 39. or elsewhere. Dipping in rivers need not be onerous, and may be without danger, to women with child, Virgins, some sorts of diseased persons in winter, in cold countries, and it will require more strength in dispute, then either Mr. Baillee, or Mr. Baxter, have shewed, or I finde yet in Mr. Rutherfurd; to prove dipping in rivers (though Baptism be not necessary to be done in rivers) to be against the word, the second, third, and fourth Commandements. And against sprinkling, or perfusion instead of Baptism, there is so much said in my Addition to the Apology against Mr. Baillee, Mr. Rutherfurds Colleague, and delivered to Mr. Rutherfurd himself, and since printed with a Letter to him, as is for ought I know, yet unanswered. All Mr. Rutherfurds talk pag. 98, 99. that now infants of believers are casten out, for no fault, of the Covenant of grace, and his aggravations thereof, are to be taken for meer calumnies, and since the printing of my Examen, there is reason to judge them to be thus wilfully vented by Mr. Rutherfurd, and till he name the Anabaptists, and cite the place, I can take it for no other then a false accusation, which he saith of the Anabaptists that they teach infants to be born without sin.

Mr. Rutherfurd dictates without proof pag. 100. that they were covenanting parents and believers, that brought the little children Mark 10. 13, 14. that they were not diseased or possessed, that he would have the whole spece of infants at all time to come to him, and those infants might bee blessed as elect ones, though no marks were given to parents or others, whereby to discern elect children; there being no direction for them to bring children to Christ under that notion. It is false that Anabaptists rebuke persons that bring children to Christ as the disciples did, Mar. 10. 13. Or that Christ instates infants of believing parents as members of the visible Church. What Mr. Cobbet hath said of that act of Christ is refelled Review view part. 2. sect. 19. and that the Kingdome of God is that of glory, is made good against Mr. Blake there, sect. 18. and not refuted by me: I know no absurdity in it, to say, Christ might bless infants of Pagans. What designe Christ might have, or had, besides Mr. Rutherfurds conceived purpose to hold forth the common interest of the whole spece of infants within the visible Church, is shewed there sect. 17. against Mr. Baxter. I do grant the blessing, Mark 10. 16. to be personal, and the chiefest blessing beyond visible Churchmembership; and though we finde not proof that Christ blessed the whole race of infants of covenanting parents, yet it is false that we make them blessed onely as symboles of humility; or that the blessing was some complemental salutation; or that (as Mr R. saith of Anabaptists after his calumniating manner) wee will have them without Christ and the Covenant, and under the curse of God; but grant that they were blessed with the blessing of the Covenant of grace, and that many other infants are so. Whether they were parents, or believers in Christ as the Messiah, who brought the children, Matth. 19. 13. is uncertain; nor do I say, or need I, they had a faith grounded upon a possibility of election separated from the Covenant; nor do I deny, that infants have their share of salvation by the Covenant; or that a covenanted seed is prophesied to be added to the Jews, under the New Testament; nor doth any thing I say infer, that the children of believers under the New Testament must be a cursed seed; yet there is none of the Texts Mr. Rutherfurd brings, which proves a prediction, that the natural seed of believers as such, shall be blessed and in the Covenant of grace, nor that their infant seed shall be visible Churchmembers in the Christian Church: But they are all impertinently alledged, some being meant of the Jews increase in Judea after their return from Babylon, some of the effectual calling of the Gentiles; and most of them so far cleared before, that I count it needless to make answer to each of the Texts by themselves. And Mr. Rutherfurds discourse is so loose and full of impertinencies, and incoherencies, that I shall onely animadvert on some passages, till the whole bee brought to some distinct Scholastique form.

He tels us pag, 168. "That external covenanting goes before internal covenanting, as the means before the end, and the cause before "the effect: for faith comes by hearing of a sent preacher, Rom. 10. 14. "and the preaching of the Gospel is a saving means of begetting a new "heart, and of a new spirit. Hence 1. All must be first externally in "covenant, before they can be internally and really in covenant. In which speech he seems to conceive external covenanting, to bee either preaching or hearing a preacher, else his reason had been vain. But what non-sense scribling is this, to term preaching or hearing covenanting? A person may, and we may conceive some do, preach and hear, who never externally covenant. Sure covenanting is promising, but so is not either preaching or hearing. And if Mr. Rutherfurds words be true, no infant can be internally and really in Covenant, who doth not preach or hear.

His talk is as vain, Of the Lord being a God simply to some, and no more but a God to them in regard of outward Church-priviledges, but to others were then a God in truth and righteousneſs; not to all, as if God might be a God to ſome not in truth and righteouſneſs, or the being a God to his people, contained not the greateſt bleſſings, contrary to Lu. 20. 37, 38. Heb. 11. 16.

His further talk pag. 109. from Matth. 19. 14. is without proof, and all ſhewed to be vain, in the places before cited. Though the houſhold ſometimes comprehend infants, yet not ſo ſtill, nor Acts 16. as is ſhewed Review part. 2. ſect. 20. Anabaptiſts neither do nor muſt grant, if infants be in Covenant, they ought to receive the ſeal of the Covenant.

If Rom. 11. 16. be meant of holineſs onely intentionally, and not giving actual right to Baptiſm, then the holineſs there proves not infants to be baptizable. That the Covenant Deut. 29. 14, 15. ſhould be made virtually radically with us Gentiles, is a dotage with a witneſs: nor onely the expreſs words v. 1. but alſo the paſſages all along Ch. 29, 30. ſhew it was the legal Covenant renewed with the people of Iſrael and their poſterity, to engage them to obſerve all the Law of God given by Moſes: not the Covenant made to Adam, Abraham, David, the New, or better Covenant. If the Covenant may ſtand in one, then it is not neceſſary that a people, nation, ſeed, body, ſhould be in covenant, and conſequently it may ſtand without infants. The Apoſtle ſaith not Rom. 11. 16. the Fathers were the root. But Mr. Rutherfurd adds.

"Hence Anabaptiſts, without all reaſon, ſay that hee ſpeaks not of "federal and external holineſs, but of real, internal, and true holineſs, "onely of the inviſible body predeſtinated to life: for though inviſible "holineſs cannot be excluded, except we exclude the holineſs of Abra- "ham, Iſaac, and Jacob, who were without doubt a part of the "root.

Anſw. Anabaptiſts, if we muſt be ſo named, do ſay that the holineſs Rom. 11. 16. is meant of real, internal and true holineſs; and conſequently the perſons there ſaid to be holy, are all of the inviſible body predeſtinated to life, and no other but ſuch there meant: yet they deny not, that the holineſs of the Covenant and Church there meant were made viſible by its working, the collective body of the Jewes predeſtinate to life; and that it is not ſaid without all reaſon, might have appeared to Mr. Rutherfurd, if he had read my Examen part. 3 ſect. 7. my Apol. ſect. 14. pag. 67. Review part. 1. ſect. 1, &c. part. 3. ſect. 75. yea if there were nothing elſe ſaid but what Mr. Rutherfurd here yeilds, that inviſible holineſs cannot be excluded, except we exclude the holineſs of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, who were without doubt part of the root, that which Anabaptiſts ſay, is not ſaid without reaſon, and that demonſtrative. For if inviſible holineſs cannot be excluded, then it is included, and if included together with external viſible holineſs, then the holineſs there meant is not external holineſs alone; nor they who have meerly external federal holineſs, are there ſaid to be holy, and conſequently no reprobate, but onely the predeſtinate to life. And if Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, be part of the root, and therefore inviſible holineſs cannot but excluded, then the reſt of the root and the branches which are made in the text alike holy, muſt have inviſible holineſs alſo. But Mr. Rutherfurd adds.

" Yet he muſt be taken to ſpeak of that holineſs of the Covenant and " Church, as made viſible, and of the viſible collective body of the " Jews, not of onely real and inviſible holineſs. 1. Becauſe this was " true in the days of Elias, If the root be holy the branches are holy; " And it is a New Teſtament-truth of perpetual verity, If the Fathers " be holy ſo muſt the ſons. The Fathers have Church-right to Circum- " ciſion, to Baptiſm, to the Paſſeover, and the Lords Supper, ſo have " the children: but it is moſt falſe of the inviſible myſtical body and " root onely, and of real and internal holineſs; For neither in Old or " New Teſtament is it true, if the Fathers be predeſtinated to life, ju- " ſtified, and ſanctified, and ſaved, ſo muſt the children be.

Anſw. The term [holy, Rom. 11. 16.] notes onely real and inviſible holineſs in that place, though the perſons ſaid to bee holy have it made viſible, and it agree to the viſible collective body of the Jewes. And the propoſition of Mr. Rutherfurd to the contrary, If the Fathers be holy ſo muſt the ſons, is moſt falſe, not onely being underſtood of inviſible, but alſo of viſible holineſs, of Churchright to Circumciſion, to Baptiſm, to the Paſſeover, and the Lords Supper. Though the father were holy viſibly, by profeſſion of the God of Iſrael, yet had not hee nor his child right thereby to Circumciſion, and the Paſſeover, without being a Proſelyte of righteouſneſs, taking on him the precepts of Moſes to obſerve, and joyning to the policy of Iſrael, and yet even then the child of age, who did not avouch the God of Iſrael, had no right thereto. Nor by Pædobaptiſts own principles hath the child of age right to Baptiſm, or the Lords Supper, without his own profeſſion, though the parents be Chriſtians; nor the infant of a believer baptized (as they conceive) right to the Lords Supper.

Mr. Rutherfurd is groſly miſtaken in making every believing parent the root meant Rom. 11. 16. and every natural child a branch; For then every believing parent ſhould beare his child: v. 18. and every natural child ſhould derive holineſs from his believing parent; Abrahams natural children at this day are not in the Olive, nor ſhall be till re-ingraffed. Abraham is the root, not as a natural father, but as Father of believers, and none are branches or holy as the Apoſtle there means, but through faith according to election. Nor are hereby the diſtinctions of Jew inward and outward, child of the fleſh and promiſe taken away; nor whole Iſrael certainly ſaved. Nor by the branches be meant all the viſible body of the Jews old and yong, which he might have imagined would be replied to his argument pag. 114. Nor is it new Divinity, but old, That none are to be baptized but ſuch as are under actual exerciſe of their faith, which may be diſcerned, by their profeſſion, in thoſe that are come to age. It is neither my Divinity, nor follows (though Mr. Rutherfurd conceives it doth) on it, that predeſtination to life and glory, muſt bee propogated and derived from the lump to the firſt fruits (he meant from the firſt fruits to the lump) from the root and parents to the branches and children; But this I ſay, that faith, and righteouſneſs are propagated and derived from Abraham as an exemplary root to all his ſpiritual branches or ſeed by conformation to him.

I do not say, that the Apostle Rom. 11. speaks of an invisible body, but this I say, the Apostle by branches means two sorts of people, the one Jews, who were then broken off from the Olive tree, which is the invisible Church of the elect; the other Gentiles, then grafted in, yet not all the Gentiles, nor one nation wholly and entirely, but a great part of them in comparison of what were formerly in the Olive very numerous.

How these branches were an elect seed and yet fell away, were preached to, had a national election and external calling, were in the room of the Jewes, and partake of the fatness of the Olive, is so fully opened in the places before cited, that I think it unnecessary to add here any more. Onely whereas he makes it an absurdity, that the infants of baptized actual believers should be all heathen as well as the casten off the Jewes; it is to me and absurdity unfit for any learned man to vent, that knows that Heathen in English is all one with Gentiles and ἔθνη, to conceive otherwise, as if a Jew because cast off were become a Heathen, or any Gentile believer or his infant, were or could bee by believing and baptism any other then an heathen, or a Christian of the Gentiles did not still continue a heathen notwithstanding his Christianity. I do account Mr. Rutherfurd and my self Christians, and yet Heathens. There's not a word in the Text, that warrants us to say of the children of the ingrafted and called Gentiles that they have right to baptism; but what if the words be expounded as Mr. Rutherfurd does, of the whole visible body of the nations will allow the baptizing of infidels. Abrahams children were never taken into covenant-fellowship universally. Abraham was indeed a moral not a physical root, yet not as a believing Father, nor as a believing head of children, of servants and strangers under him, but as Father of believers after him. And in this respect, neither Adam, nor any other then Abraham is the root, and none of Abrahams natural seed are branches or holy intentionally, but such as are elect, and shall be conformed to him in believing and justification. Nor doth the Apostle when he saith, the Jews are beloved by reason of the Fathers, make Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob the root; but intimate that God remembers them, because of his Covenant made to them, his taking the title of their God, their obedience to him, their prayers, and his constancy to them as his ancient friends, when all the world were revolted.

The conceit of Mr. Rutherfurd concerning holiness external federal, as if it were any cause or reason of re-ingrafting them or their infants, is so frivolous, that I wonder any sober man should once fancy it. For what is it but a state of outward churchpriviledges, right to the seals, &c But to imagine so great a work as the re-ingrafting, which infers salvation, should come from Abrahams, Isaac, and Jacobs, or any other natural believing Fathers visible Churchmembership, Circumcision, Baptism, &c. is to derive title to heaven, from at best, an amissible priviledge, which may be interrupted by men. What more is to be seen in Mr. Cotton, Blake, Cobbet, Baxter, Mr. Rutherfurd may see examined in this Review; by reading of which hee may discern, that they have neither neither closed the dispute; nor managed it so, as that their learning is to be rested on.

SECT. LXXXVII.

The distractions in Germany and our present distractions, sprung not from Anabaptism as Mr. Cragge saith.

THere having been a dispute at Abergavenny between me and Mr. John Cragge, Sept. 5th. 1653. and a Sermon preached there (when I was gone thence) the next Lords day, in opposition to what I taught, instead of letting mee have a copy manuscript, they were printed with much injury to the truth and my person. Wherefore having had experience in Mr. Bs. dealing, what advantage the errour of infant Baptism got by such writings, I being then in London and meeting with the Book, made a reply intituled, A Plea for Antipadobaptists; to which Mr. John Cragge hath returned an answer, and intituled it, The Arraignment and Conviction of Anabaptism. He hath prefixed an Epistle to eight eminent Members of the Parliament which sate anno 1654. He tels them that the Cause he defends is and ought to be dearer to them, then any private interests, as whereupon infallibly depends the peace of Church and State. He might more truly have said, that infallibly the peace of Church and State depends on the reforming of infant Baptism, which hath corrupted the Church and State by bringing into the Christian societies a world of ignorant, loose and prophane persons, who being the major part in all Churches, and Commonwealths, where Christianity hath been received, have persecuted the godly, domineered over the consciences and liberties of the Saints, and upheld a proud and sensual Clergy, to the infinite disturbance of the Eastern and Western Churches for many ages. And though I hope better of the men to whom Mr. Cr. ascribes such heroick excellencies, that they have or will have more wit or more grace, then to account Mr. Crs. cause of infant Baptism dearer to them then any private interests. Yet I must confess I cannot but mourn, that not onely Parliament men, but also Ministers should be so ignorant, as to be taken with such silly insipid clamours (I may truly say) rather then arguings, as Mr. Cr. Mr. B. and others, have mislead them by.

That which he saith, the former sad disasters of Germany and our present distractions, both took their spring and growth, in a great measure, from Anabaptism, is most false.

The disasters in Germany which were in the years 1524, 1525. did spring from the great burthens and oppressions which were put on the Rusticks by their Princes, Bishops, Abbots. Spondanus expressly in his Auct. of his Epit. of Baron. Annals ad annum 1524. saith, That they began in Suevia, by rising of the Boors against their Lord Count Lupius, and that the beginning thence being risen, after an infinite number of Rusticks being stirred up to seditions upon pretext of Gospel liberty (which Spanheimius him-himself in his Diatribe Historica §. 4. refers to Luthers Book of Christian Liberty as the occasion taken by them) committed great outrages. And ad annum 1502. tels us, That in the Diocess of Spire, a conspiracy of Husbandmen against the Bishops and Canons, which was called the Rustick League, began from two Rusticks: of which conspiracy the chief article was that they should shake off every yoke, and in imitation of the Helvetians should recover their liberty. And Lucas Osiander Epit. hist. Eccles. cent. 16. l. 1. c. 16. p. 34. saith, These particular seditions in Germany, were the præludia or sore playes of that great sedition of Rusticks, which was in its vigour in the year 1525. And Gnodalius in his history of the rustick tumults in Germany in the year 1525. lib. 1. saith, That in Suevia, where they first began, they did openly signifie that they were not Gospellers, nor did flow together for the Gospel sake, but because of exactions. Bp. Jewel. Def. of the Apology of the Church of England part. 4. chap. 4. Divis. 1. to Harding, saying, were the hundred thousand Bores of Germany consumed by the sword of the Nobility there for their obedience? answers thus, "The Bores of Germany, of whom ye speak, for the greatest "part, were adversaries unto Doctour Luther, and understood no part "of the Gospel: but conspired together, as they said, onely against "the cruelty and tyranny of their Lords: as they had done two and "twenty years before in the same Country, in the Conspiracy called "Liga sotularia, fifteen years before Doctour Luther began to preach: "the partners of which conspiracy had for their watchword the name "of our Lady, and in the honour of her, were bound to say five Ave "maries every day. Certainly touching those later Rebels, it is known "that Luther sharply and vehemently wrote against them. And they "themselves being demanded thereof, utterly denied both the partaking, and also the knowledge of the Gospel. It is true Muncer was a busie man in Thuringia, and stirred up the people disposed to tumults by reason of oppressions, and at Munster in Westphalia in the years 1532, 1533. were stirs and out-rages; but even Spanheimius himself sets down the beginning of them to have been upon the Protestant reformation, by the preaching of Rotmannus and others, afore the comming of John Matthias, and John Becold of Leyden, the Bishop and Canons of Munster being Papists opposing it. How in like manner the Bishop of Geneva was expelled when the Protestants grew potent there, and the like was done in other places, is manifest by records extant, which acts have been represented as alike odious with those of Muncer, and at Munster, and would have been so reputed if there had been the like success, I mean the adverse party had prevailed as they did in these.

Our present distractions cannot with any shew of truth be said to take their spring from Anabaptism, by any that know things from the relation of men imployed in publike negotiations, their being neither in the beginning nor now, either in the Councel of State, or Parliaments, or Armies, or City of London, or Universities, or Countries, any such persons or parties, as could sway things any further then to put some stop to the violence of the Clergy against them, to which as the cause of them, though not the onely, the present distractions are to be referred:

to whom how much in former ages, and at this present, the great troubles of the Churches of God are to be ascribed, may be seen in part, in Mr. Baxters Book intituled, The Reformed Pastour, ch. 4. sect. 1, 2. and in many histories.

Mr. Cr. adds; which reason with experience dictates; for by their principles whole nations are unchurched and none received into communion, but by re-baptizing, all former members esteemed as Publicans and Heathens; hence Magistracy and Ministry that dissents, are by them wholly disgusted, if not discarded.

Answ. 1. Experience hath not proved either the disasters in Germany or our present distractions, to have sprung from Anabaptism, but from other causes; chiefly, the oppression of Princes and Prelates. 2. Nor are Mr. Crs. reasons sufficient to evince Anabaptism a cause of such troubles. For the first principle, that whole nations are unchurched, is as well the Independent as Pædobaptists principle (among whom is Mr. Cradock counted a light in their Goshen of Monmouthshire, by the relatour of the dispute in the Epistle dedicatory) and if so, the present distractions are to be ascribed with as good reason to Indepency, as to Anabaptism, and perhaps with greater; it being considered that they have been and are the more potent party. As the Papists imputed all the troubles to Protestant principles of Christian liberty, the Prelates to non conformists, whom Whitgift long since compared with Anabaptists, because they alledged against Prelacy Matth. 20 25, 26. so the Presbyterians charge the like on Independency, and perhaps Independents on Anabaptism; yet none of their principles are indeed the spring of the troubles, but the violence of the leading men of each party, who by their mis-reports and clamors, stir up Magistrates and people against their opposites, and will by no means allow liberty to them, nor willingly live: of which spirit Mr. Cr. seems by his writing to bee, and I suppose the State will discern all such as will not tolerate others, who dissent in religion, intolerable. 2. It is false that Magistracy and Ministry that dissents, is by Anabaptists wholly disgusted, if not discarded. For though I cannot justifie all so called, there being violent spirits among them (who are intolerable) as well as others: yet neither do all nor any great part that I know of, appear to be such. But if they did, yet sure it comes not from those principles fore-named by Mr. Cr. there being no such consequence included in those tenents, that they who are not Churchmembers are not to be accounted Magistrates. As Bp. Andrews answered, resp. ad Bellarm. Apol. c. 1 p. 30. Bellarmine alledging the Puritans did not admit the Kings Supremacy, because they brought a parity into the Church, To the King's Supremacy what is parity among Elders in the Church? Videt ergo lector ludere hic par, impar, Cardinalem; so may I say to Mr. Cr. The Baptists do not count whole nations to be Churches of Christ, and with them agree Independents, as Dr. Owen of Schism, ch. 7, &c The Baptists receive none into communion but the baptized, esteemed all other as not in the Church visible (though these two last are denied by many of them) what is the non-admission into the Church, to the disgusting or discarding of Magistracy in the Common-wealth? The Reader therefore sees Mr. Cr. to play here par impar, even and odd.

What Mr. Cr. hath suffered for patronage of respect to tender Consciences, I know not; nor who are for promiscuous toleration without distinction. What he adds out of the old Testament of Princes punishing idolatry and blasphemy, was done by special judicial laws of Moses, which do not binde Christian Magistrates; if they did, it makes nothing for the punishing of errours of Christians about the Christian doctrine, by civil punishment. It is granted that Ministers are bound to oppose errours by preaching, and Ecclesiastical censures, both singly and in Councils; yet neither have Councils, nor the learnedst Doctours been very happy in determining of errours, and heresies. That which was heresie in one Council was Orthodox in another; under one Emperor that was adjudged truth, which was blasphemy under another. What strange kinds of Heretiques were the Quartodecimani, Aerians, Helvidians, and many more? Had Vigilantius or Jovinian (saith Mr. Baxter in his Reformed Pastour p. 147.) had Hieromes name, some of their Heresies might possibly have been articles of faith. Nor was it well done (however Mr. Cr. conceives) that well-minded Emperours did rely so much on the advise of Synods and Bishops, as to banish and destroy at the instance of them, such as they judged heretiques and schismatiques. The sad tragedies about the doctrines of the Trinity, Images, Easter, &c. are a sufficient document to all wise rulers to bee cautelous how they use their power for suppressing persons deemed erroneous in point of doctrine. There may bee toleration of different opinions in a Commonwealth without mixture of religion, and that such toleration doth not dissolve the bond of obedience, or breed any of those evils Mr. Cr. reckons up (except by accident) the peaceable rule of the united Provinces of Belgia and elsewhere shews. It is the intemperate zeal of Preachers and others against dissenters, which is the chief cause of such evils as Mr. Cr. reckons up. I remember that I have read, that the Bores of Germany were not subdued till 100000. of them were slain, but Sleidan reports not in his Com. l. 7. or any other, that in Germany the Anabaptist grew so populous, that they could not be vanquished, till almost a hundred thousand of them were slain by the united forces of the Empire. But the Emperour objected to the Protestants that their Preachers were a great occasion of the Rustical war, wherein an hundred thousand were slain. But whether it were so or not so (what ever Mr. Crs. protestations be) the writing this Epistle, with some other passages at the time and to the persons to whom it was directed, shew what we are to expect from him and such as he is, if ever they have power over us. But of these things onely by the way.

SECT. LXXXVIII.

Austins saying about Apostolical traditions is not to be rested upon, nor his testimony about the antiquity of Infant Baptism.

AFter his own Epistle, and the Epistle of I. T. P. and the reprinting of the conference between me and Mr. Vaughan, and the dispute between me and himself, Mr. Cr. leaving out the former Epistle of I. T. P. begins with a descant on the title of my reply, which he vainly makes to imply a suit against the universal Church, though it be onely an action against innovators, who have left the plain way of Christ and his Apostles, and (as they have done in many other things) brought in infant Baptism, to the great corruption of the Church of God: And for Mr. Halls inditement, it is such as is fit for boys onely to make sport with; and were Mr. Hall or Mr. Cr. of such serious and grave spirits as they should be, they would have buried it in silence, or been humbled for handling things of God so lightly, such writings being fitter for light wits in the University, then for Preachers and Pastors over Churches of Christ. My calling Mr. Baxters book a cheat and mock titled book, is proved here to be right; and that Mr. Ms. is no impregnable Defence, is here shewed. The rest of Mr. Cr. light Poetry in sect. 1. &c. par. 1. I let pass as the scum of his wit, and onely take notice, that he terms from Stow Sir John Oldcastle a traitor, who was hanged on a gibbet and burned in St. Gyles field, whom Mr. Fox in his book of Martyrs in the time of Henry the 5th. hath against Alan Cope vindicated, and by sundry arguments particularly by the manner of his death mentioned by Mr. Cr. made it probable, that he died a Martyr oppressed by popish Prelates. Whose case is a good document how little credence is to be given to the censures of men, when the relations of them are made by their prevailing adversaries. What I think of laying on hands, may be seen part 2. of this Review, sect. 23. Dr. Featly was a man with whom I had sundry times conference when he was in his greatest esteem, but never found him such as I durst not look in the face when living, and sure his book of Baptism is (besides what Denn hath done) shewed here and elsewhere not to be unanswerable. With what spirit Mr. Cr. and other Pædobaptists, and my self, have written on this subject, must be left to the cognizance of our Judge.

If Austins saying, l. 4. de Bapt. contra Donat. c. 23. That what the universal Church holds, nor was instituted in Councels, but always retained, is most rightly believed to have been delivered by no other then Apostolical authority, were meant as Mr. Cr. sect. 5. p. 67. expounds it, including the Apostles, I should yeeld it. But 1. I do not conceive that to be Austins meaning; for 1. then the speech would be an inept tautology to say, that what the whole Church including the Apostles holds, is most rightly believed to have been delivered by no other then Apostolical authority;

rity; it were as if he had ſaid, what the Apoſtles held the Apoſtles held: 2. The very ſpeech ſhews that Auſtin meant it of the univerſal Church of his time, the word [tenet] being in the preſent tenſe, and the Councels meant being ſuch as were ſince the Apoſtles, and that he counted that to be inſtituted in no Councels, but to have been always held, of which he could not ſhew any beginning or any interruption: 3. Elſewhere his ſpeeches ſhew this was his mind, as Epiſt. 118. ad Joann. Illa quæ non ſcripta ſed tradita cuſtodimus, quæ quidem toto terrarum orbe obſervantur dantur intelligi vel ab ipſis Apoſtolis vel plenariis Conciliis quorum eſt in Eccleſia ſaluberrima autoritas commendata atque ſtatuta retineri, and he inſtanceth in the anniverſary ſolemnities of Good Friday, Eaſter day, Holy Thurſday, and Whitſunday, and adds; and if any other thing hath occurred which is kept by the whole Church where ever it ſpreads it ſelf. And accordingly he makes the neceſſity of the Communion to eternal life as of Baptiſm to the Kingdome to be from Apoſtolical tradition, tom. 7. de pecc. mer. & remiſ. l. 1. c. 24. Mr. Crs. conceit is not right, as if the words, And if any man ſeek for Divine authority in this thing, did intimate that his following rule was meant of what was held in the Apoſtles time: for in them he means that which he after fetcheth from Circumciſion out of Scripture, beſides that which the whole Church holds, not inſtituted in Councels, yet ſtill held. In this ſenſe it is urged by Canus, l. 3. loc. Theol. c. 4. as a rule to know genuine unwritten traditions Apoſtolical from ſpurious, and rejected by Chamier, pauſtr. cath. tom. 1. l. 8. c. 14. §. 13. as impoſſible, ſith what hath been in all ages and Churches from the Apoſtles cannot be known; and it is urged by Bellarm. de bonis oper. in part. l. 2. c. 14 for Lent faſt, and refuted by Chamier, pauſtr. cath. tom. 2. l. 19. c. 7. §. 36.

2. This rule cannot ſtand the Epiſtler in any ſtead for proving infant Baptiſm without the Apoſtles writings, 1. becauſe there is no way without them to know what was univerſally held, there being no man able to know what the Church holds in all places in his own time, much leſs what in former ages was held; and many things have been taken even by Auſtin as univerſally obſerved which were not, and many Councels held which are unknown, and many corruptions crept very early into the Church whoſe original cannot be ſet down determinately, of which uſhers general anſwer to the Jeſuites challenge, gives reaſons. 2. Infant Baptiſm cannot bee proved to have been univerſally obſerved, but as now it is taught and uſed hath been oppoſed by ſome of the Ancients, and is now rejected by Proteſtant Divines, as it was by the Ancients taught and uſed. Nor is Auſtins teſtimony Serm 10. de verb. Apoſtoli (not Serm. 15.) that the Church always had and held Infant Baptiſm, valid for Mr. Crs. purpoſe; 1. becauſe the term [hoc, this] may bee rather referred to the doctrine of infants being born with original ſin, rather then the practiſe of their baptiſm, and to this ſenſe both the ſcope, words precedent, conſequent, and the terms, had, held, perceives from the faith of Elders, keep to the end (which are moſt fitly applied to doctrine) make more probable, as I noted in my Apology §. 16. pag. 83. 2. Were the meaning of Auſtin about infant baptiſm, yet there were no cause to rest on this testimony as credible, 1. because it is but a speech in a popular Sermon, in which men speak not exactly as in other writings. 2. The words [hoc Ecclesia usque in finem perseveranter custodit] could be known onely by guess and conjectural presage, it being of a contingent matter not by Divine revelation fore-told, and therefore the other speeches (as likewise other speeches, as that tom. 7. de pecc. mer. & remiss. l. 1. c. 24. shew was his wont) are to bee conceived as spoken not out of any good records, but from that which he found observed in his time, where he had been. 3. Because serm. 14. de verbis Apost. he saith, that Cyprian Epist. 59. ad Fidum quid semper Ecclesia sensit monstraverit; though he onely set down what was determined in that Council of Carthage, which was in the third Century. 4. There are so many speeches of the ancients false, uncertain, contradicting each other concerning Apostolical traditions, universal observations, that many Protestants have discredited them, of which some testimonies are set down by me in my Præcursor sect. 3. Salmasius appar. ad libr. de primatu papæ, mentions some other, as pag. 134. All the Fathers with one accord make Paul and Peter founders of the Roman Church, and yet were deceived; Hierome saith, it was in all the world decreed, that one should be a Bishop over others: and yet the Preface of Selden before Twisdens Collection of ancient British Histories, shews it was otherwise in Scotland of old. And for Austin Epist. 118. ad Janu. c. 1, 6. hee makes the anniversary solemnities of Easter, &c. of eating the Lords Supper fasting, as always universally observed, in which he was mistaken. Mr. Cr. doth abuse me in making my argument, as if I had said Easter was always held, my words were; If Austins rule were true, then Easter should be from the Apostles; not because I thought it true, but because Austin thought so, and so by his rule Easter must bee counted to come from the Apostles, and his testimony is as good for it, as for the universal observation of infant Baptism. 5. Not onely Protestants but Papists also do now reject things observed by the Ancients, as amply as infant Baptism. Jewel Sermon at Pauls Cross, p. 48. Usher answer to the Jesuits challenge, p. 23. It was the use of the ancient Church to minister the Communion to infants: which is yet also practised by the Christians in Egypt and Ethiopia. The Church of Rome, upon better consideration hath thought fit to do otherwise. The putting milk and honey into the mouth of the Baptized, the standing at prayer on Lords days between Easter and Whitsontide, the baptizing at Easter persons catechised in Lent, with many more are now left; though Bellarmin. l. 2. de bonis operibus in particulari c. 17. tels us, Abolitam esse consuetudinem baptizandi catechumenos & absolvendi pœnitentes in paschate verum est apud Lutheranos: caterum apud Catholicos, ac præsertim in urbe Romana nullus est annus, quo non multi Catichumeni in paschate baptizentur; which I mention to shew, that there are some foot-steps yet remaining of the old baptizing. Ep. Jewel Defense of the Apology of the Church of England, part. 2 ch. 16. div. 1. saith, there have been errours and great errours from the beginning: hee mentions there and in the Sermon at Pauls cross, baptizing for and of the dead, giving the Communion to the dead body, and therefore there and in his reply to Dr. Cole, he rejects customs of the ancient Church, and condemnes carrying home to the absent the Communion; mixing water with the wine, and many more things; and still requires the Lords Supper and Baptism to bee administred according to the institution of Christ; which if Mr. Cr. or any other can ever shew to have been of infant Baptism, I will say as Bp. Jewel did concerning the 27. Articles propounded at Pauls Cross, I am content to yeild and to subscribe: otherwise Mr. Cr. and other Pædobaptists by accusing mee as opposing the universal Church in Austins sense (though I deny it to be true) do but condemn themselves, who with Papists do reject things counted by the writers of the first ages Apostolical, and of universal observation near the Apostles times.

Nor is the fifth proposition of Mr. Cr. p. 67. true, That the whole Church since the Apostles in all ages, collectively considered, cannot err either in doctrine or discipline. For if the whole Church might err so in one age, it may also in all ages collectively considered, the promises being no more to the Church in all ages collectively considered, then in each age distributively considered, nor any means given to them after the Apostles collectively considered, to keep from errour, then to each, distributively; yea the Churches nearer the Apostles, had more meanes to keep them from errour then other ages, yet they erred in doctrine and discipline, as many writers shew, about Easter, the Millenary opinion, and many other. As for the promise Matth. 16. 18. it is not true of the whole Church visible, the gates of hell have and do prevail against them, but of the invisible, and yet the promise is not to the invisible that they shall not err, but that they shall not erre finally to damnation, which if they did, then indeed the gates of hell or of death should prevail against them, that is (as Cameron rightly in his praelection) they should not rise to life eternal. Nor is there a promise Joh. 16. 13. to the whole Church, but to the Apostles, the promise being as well to shew them things to come, as to lead them into all truth: And yet the promise is not so made to the Apostles, but that they might err as Peter did Gal. 2. though when they taught the Church by writing or preaching, they were so guided as that they should not err. But of this point of the militant Churches erring, I need say no more, but refer Mr. Cr. to his own Author Dr. Rainold thes. 3.

6. Were it granted that antiquity did universally practise infant Baptism, yet neither were the present doctrine or practise justified by it, but condemned; and Mr. Cr. as truly may be said to plead against the universal Church as my self. For it is manifest from the places where there is mention of it in the Ancients, that they taught it and practised it, onely upon the opinion of the necessity of it to save an infant from perishing, and because the very baptism did give grace, remission of original sin, made believers, heirs of the Kingdome of heaven, and accordingly they practised it, onely in case of danger of death, very seldome, and this they did to unbelievers children, as well as believers, as a work of charity, not of institution or right by their birth to either. But these things Mr. Cr. pleads against them in, as well as my self, and both the doctrine doctrine and practise of Pædobaptists now is against the Ancients as well as mine: Yea more, in that they had a constant course of baptizing the catechized persons upon a solemn profession of faith, and did in all baptisms, except that of the Clinici, that is sick persons baptized in their beds, plunge the whole body, or dip it so as to be under water: which are now clean otherwise and things unknown among Pædobaptists. So that as Bp. Usher in his answer to the Jesuites challenge, in the article about praying for the dead, p. 245. proves the Romanists to have rejected the ancient prayer for the dead, because they pray not for Martyrs and others in bliss for their resurrection, but for persons in Purgatory to be delivered thence; so I may truly say, the Pædobaptists now have rejected the ancient infant Baptism, sith they deny Baptism necessary to salvation, or that it gives grace, and they do it onely to believers infants, by sprinkling or perfusion, without mersion, scarce to any but infants, without any solemn course of catechising ordinarily in order to future Baptism, and to infants ordinarily out of the case of danger of death, upon pretence of a federal holiness by birth, and ordinance of visible Churchmembership unrepealed, unknown to the Ancients, and therefore their doctrine and practise hath no patronage from them.

Mr. Cr. p. 98. saith, that I cunningly alter the subject of the question, when I say infant-sprinkling was not held of the whole Church; and tels me, that he and others do not say so. Which intimates that hee and others desert the maintainance of sprinkling infants as ancient; which diffidence is some argument that the late Assembly have forsaken the ancient way of Baptism by dipping, having in the Directory determined sprinkling as sufficient, and in the practise of many of them taken away the old Fonts, more agreeble to antiquity, and brought in little stone Basons near the Pulpit or Readers Pew, like Popish holy-water pots, fit onely for the novelty of sprinkling after the Scottish mode. Nor is Mr. Crs. way of powring water on the face, or dipping in part of the head, any more the baptizing Christ appointed, or antiquity used, except in the case of the Clinici. 'Tis true Gods ordinances are not destructive to nature, who requires mercy and not sacrifice; But this proves rather that Baptism should be omitted altogether, and not the ordinance altered, and people mocked as they are by the preacher, that saith falsly, he baptizeth the person, when he doth onely sprinkle or powr water on the face, or dip in part of the head.

SECT. LXXXIX.

The teſtimonies of the ancient writers of the Greek Church concerning Infant Baptiſm are examined, and my exceptions made good againſt Mr. Cragge, Dr. Hammond, Dr. Homes, Mr. Marſhal.

THe alledging of pſeudo-Dioniſius the Areopagite, and Clements Apoſtolical Conſtitutions, is but to abuſe the world with counterfeit names, diſcovered by many learned Papiſts and Proteſtants to be ſuch, and the like is to be ſaid of Juſtin Martyrs forged teſtimony qu. 36. ad orthodoxos: which are not rejected becauſe queſtioned, as Mr. Cr. ſeems to intimate, but becauſe they are by many ſtrong evidences proved not to have been the Authors, whoſe names they bear. As for the evidence to matter of fact they give, that infants were baptized in that age in which they were written, I do readily grant it, and before too; yet think it no advantage for the preſent pretended infant Baptiſm, which is e'ean otherwiſe, and upon other reaſons; as particularly, that the baptized infants obtained good things at the reſurrection by Baptiſm, but the unbaptized obtain not good things. Nor is there a word in that to confirm the novel doctrine of the childrens right to Baptiſm, as being in Covenant with the parents. For neither are the parents there ſaid to be believers, but the bringers; nor by the parents faith are they ſaid to have right to Baptiſm, but by the faith of the bringers to obtain good things at the reſurrection: and therefore in vain doth Mr. Cr. thus endeavour to hide the deformity of that Authors doctrine, which is no better then that which commonly Proteſtant Divines condem as Popiſh. More honeſtly in this then Mr. Cr. doth Bellarmin tom. 3. l. 2. de effectu Sacram. c. 6. ſay, Juſtin. in his Apology to Antoninus, ſaith, we obtain remiſſion of afore committed ſins in water, &c. And before he had ſaid, that no man was brought to Baptiſm, unleſs he before believed. Like things hee hath in his dialogue with Triphon. And ch. 8. alwayes in the Church the cuſtome was, that thoſe who would be Chriſtians ſhould firſt be made catechized perſons, and long enough inſtructed, and not baptized unleſt inſtructed, and firm, and ſtable in faith, citing to this end Juſtin in his Apologye to Antoninus, as ſhewing the manners of the Church.

As for Irenæus his teſtimony, lib. 2. adv. har. c. 39. it proves not infant Bapsiſm. For though it be true that Mr. Mede in his Diatribe on Tit. 3. 5. ſay, None, I trow, will deny that when the Apoſtle ſpeaks of saving us by waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the holy Ghoſt, hee ſpeaks of Baptiſm; yet it follows not that that the Apoſtle meant by regeneration, Baptiſm; nor is it likely, ſith the word [regeneration] is not to be read [by the waſhing which is regeneration] as if it were by apoſition, but [of regeneration] as the Genitive poſſeſſive, and the meaning

ning is by the washing which signifies regeneration, which is before the washing; yet if it were so, it proves not Irenæus meant by [renascuntur are born again] are baptized, sith he saith not are by washing born again, as the Apostles phrase is. Nor though it be granted that in Justin Martyr and others of the ancients [to be regenerated] is [to bee baptized] doth it appear that Irenæus meant it so in that place, unless it were proved it is so onely meant by him and the ancients. Nor doth Irenaus l. 1. c. 18. term Baptism regeneration as Dr. Homes p. 118. suggests, but saith thus to the denying of Baptism of that generation which is into God. But that indeed the word [renascuntur are born again] is not meant of Baptism, is proved from the words and the scope of them. For 1. the words are [per eum renascuntur, by him, that is Christ, are born again] and it is clear from the scope of the speech about the fulness of his age as a perfect master, that [by him] notes his person according to his humane nature. Now if then [by him are born again] be as much as [by him are baptized] this should bee Irenæus his assertion, that by Christ himself in his humane body infants and little ones, and boyes and young men, and elder men, are baptized unto God. But this speech is most manifestly false, for neither did Christ baptize any at all in his own person, the Evangelist John 4. 1, 2. expressly affirming, that though the Pharisees heard that Jesus made and baptized more disciples then John, yet Jesus himself did not baptize, but his Disciples did baptize, nor did the Disciples baptize any infant at all, as may bee gathered from the whole N. T. 2. The word which Irenæus expresseth, whereby persons were born again to God by Christ, is applied to the example of his age, as the words and scope shew. Omnem ætatem sanctificans per illam quæ ad ipsum erat similitudinem. Ideo per omnem venit ætatem & infantibus infans factus, sanctificans infantes, in parvulis parvulus sanctificans hanc ipsam habentes ætatem, simul & exemplum illis pietatis effectus & justitiæ & subjectionis. Juvenibus juvenis exemplum juvenibus fiens & sanctificans domino. Sic & senior in senioribus, ut sit perfectus Magister in omnibus non solum secundum expositionem veritatis, sed secundum ætatem sanctificans simul & seniores, exemplum ipsis quoque fiens. But hee was not in his age an example of every age by his Baptism, as if hee did by it sanctifie every age, for then he should have been baptized in every age, but in respect of the holiness of his humane nature which did remain in each age, and so exemplarily sanctifie each age to God, so as that no age but was capable of holiness by conformity to his example. 3. Irenæus his words are omnes enim venit per semetipsum salvare, omnes inquam qui per eum renascuntur in Deum, infantes & parvulos, & pueros & juvenes & seniores, now if the meaning were that Christ came to save all that were baptized by him, or by his appointment, then he came to save Simon Magus, and whoever are or have been baptized rightly, even Judas Iscariot, if he were baptized. But in that sense the proposition of Irenæus were most palpably false, and therefore that sense is not to be attributed to his words. 4. Christ is by Irenæus said to sanctifie as a perfect Master, not onely according to the exposition of truth, but also as an example to them of piety, justice, and subjection; but this is to bee

understood not in respect of his Baptism onely, but his whole life, in which he was an example even an infant, for then he did willingly empty himself, took upon him the form of a servant, was made in the likeness of men, and being in fashion a man humbled himself to death, Phillip. 2. 7, 8. By all which reasons I presume the Readers, who is willing to see truth, will perceive this passage of Irenæus to be wrested by Pædobaptists against its meaning, to prove an use of Pædobaptism in his time. Which I have the more largely insisted on, because indeed it is the onely testimony of credit which Pædobaptists have any colour from for infant baptism in the 2d century: In the 3d. century it is not denied, but that infant baptism and many more corruptions were; yet even then it was very rare, in case onely of danger of death, out of that case disswaded, in that case allowed upon the conceit of giving grace by it, and saving the infant from perishing. But I shall allow Mr. Cr. and other Pædobaptists, to say the most they can for this corruption.

Origen is alledged next by Mr. Cr. in Rom. 6. l. 5. homil. 8th. on Levitic. and 18th. on Luke. "The Exceptions against these are 3. 1. "they are translations, Origens Greek in the Original is lost. The same "may be said of St. Matthews Gospel, which he writ in the Hebrew or "Syriack now lost, the Greek copy onely extant. And of the LXXs. "translations of the Old T. which our Saviour followed more exactly "then the Hebrew Original, translations agreeing with the Original "copy being equally authentick.

Answ. 1. There is no certainty, nor probability that Matthew did write in Hebrew, saith the Annotator on Matth. in his argument of that Gospel the new Annotations called by some the Assemblies at westminster. Pareus in his Proeme to his Commentary on Matthew, with the leave of antiquity, Erasmus and other learned interpreters doubt not a little of that opinion that he wrote in Hebrew, and the reasons of doubting seem not to be light, which may be seen there, with answer to the objections produced out of antiquity. 2. Whether there were such a translation by LXX. Jews, as Josephus relates of Aristeas, l. 12. antiq. Judaic. c. 2. I do not so much question, as the particularities of the relation, but the authority of it is much questioned, of which much may be seen in Chamier. paustr. cath. tom. 1. l. 13. and it is much doubted whether that we have be it, of which I am told learned usher hath written, which I have not seen. But sure our Saviour who spake in Hebrew or Syriack followed it not, nor do I think it safe or right to say that the Evangelists or other holy writers followed it more exactly then the Hebrew Original. But sure the translation of Ruffinus of Origens Homiles is nothing like to either of these, in which he confesseth he did not exactly follow the Original, and it is likely for this reason Voss. thes. Theol. de Pædobap. part 2. thes. 8. said, But we shall the less care for Origen, because the things we cited are not extant in Greek. But Mr. Cr. adds.

"But 2*ly.* it is said that the translation is censured by Erasmus, and "Perkins, as in something contracting, adding, or altering. What is "added is ingeniously confessed by Ruffinus the translator himself; nei"ther does acute Erasmus, nor judicious Perkins, nor any of the Anci"ents most critical, impeach him in the forequoted testimonies; there"fore this exception is blank.

"ther

Answ. This exception is good notwithstanding this answer. For 1. Perkins doth not onely censure Ruffinus his translation, as in something contracting, adding, or altering; but also puts Origens commentaries on the Epistle to the Romanes, not faithfully translated by Ruffinus, among his counterfeit works. And Erasmus in his censure of the Homilies on Leviticus, saith, That a man cannot be certain whether he reads Ruffinus, or Origen. And because Dr. Homes saith I make no exception against the translation of the Homilies on Luke, he may take notice that Erasmus in his Annotations on Luke 1.1. speaks much against the Paraphrase of Origen on Luke, and in his Annot. on Luke 1.3. Sic enim visus est sentire quisquis is fuit cujus extant in Lucam commentarii Adamantii titulo, which shews that Erasmus took not those Commentaries for Origens, or at least doubted thereof. And I shall add the words of Scultetus, in his medulla Patrum, l.6. c.2. Jam Ruffinus plurium librorum Origenis interpres tantam usurpavit licentiam: ut ademerit, adjecerit, mutarit, quæ sibi viderentur adimenda, adjicienda, mutanda: ut sæpe incertus sit lector, utrum Origenem legat an Ruffinum: cum Græca Origenis opera non extent hodie, e quibus Latina versio corrigi possit & emendari. And I find cited Erasmus his preface on Hillary, as charging Ruffinus with this practise of adding and changing beyond an interpreter in all his translations, as of Eusebius his History, but chiefly of Origens writings. Grot. annot. in Matth.25.46. Quid Origenes senserit ex ipsius scriptis difficile est dictu, adeo omnia a Ruffino sunt interpolata. Hieronymus Apol. adv. Ruff. l.2. speaks thus to Ruffinus concerning some of his translations of Origen, Novit conscientia tua quæ addideris, quæ subtraxeris, quæ in utranque partem, ut tibi visum fuerit, immutaris. Whereas therefore Mr. Ms. friend, Defence part 1. p.15. tels me, You call the Author of them supposed Origen: It had been your part before you had so branded them, first to have made it manifest by some undeniable evidence or other that they were not Origens: I tell him, that being but a respondent, it was enough that I shewed such evidences as I did to prove the passages doubtfull, an uncertain witness being no good proof. And to Dr. Homes his saying in his Animadv. on my Exercit. p 129. Truly a man can hardly with patience enough look upon Mr. T. his dealing in this: when we urge Origen, he is not Origen with him; but if he do it, then Origen must be received. I answer, if the Dr. had had patience enough to have considered my words, he might have observed, that I onely named Origen Hom. on Rom.6. but did neither assign the 3d. century for the time in which those words were written, nor did intimate that they were to be received as his, but added two reasons to prevent this imagination, as if by alledging those words under the title of Origen homil. on Rom.6. (by which onely it is known) I did judge they were his, whereof the one was the censure of Erasmus, the other, that neither Austin, nor Hierom mention Origen as avouching infant Baptism: which is enough to shew it to be likely, that the passages cited were added by Ruffinus, though Hierom

and others mention not these in particular, sith neither doth he mention all the particulars of his dealings in this kind, but chargeth them upon his conscience. Nor is it true, that what is added is ingeniously confessed by Ruffinus the translator himself: For though the words cited by Mr. Ms. friend, Defence, p.16. shew that Ruffinus acknowledged of what sort his additions were to his translation of his Homilies on Leviticus, yet they shew not what in particular they were; nor is any thing produced to shew the words cited for infant Baptism were not one. Nor is there any good answer made to my allegation to prove that passage likely to be one, 1. from the bringing of them in (as it seemed to me when I read them) in a patcht manner, not as if they were woven at first with the whole cloth, that is the rest of the writing before and after, but as sewed to it by a botcher, without any handsome coherence; which neither Mr. Ms. friend, p.16. nor Dr. Homes p.130. deny, and therefore I count worth the observing by the judicious Reader, when he shall examine the places, as being of some moment to discern whether they were Origens words at first, or Ruffinus his assument. 2. Because they are the very words which are frequently used by the refuters of Pelagians in the 5th. century, who denied Original sin, whereas Origen is taxed as the very Father of Pelagianism, by Hieron. præfat. ad lib. 4. in Hierem. and elsewhere, as teaching ἀναμαρτησίαν perfection or freedome from sin, contrary to the express words of those cited passages; and when August. tom.7. l 1. adv. Julian. c.1,2. alledgeth ancients avouching Original sin, he never mentions Origen; and therefore these passages, being so express against Pelagians, and in the very words used by the refuters of them in Augustines time, are to be judged to be added either by Ruffinus, whose words to the same purpose on the 50th. Psalm are cited by Chamier, paustr. cath. tom.3. l.1. c.6. §.9. and of whom the same Author, tom.4. l.7. c.9. §.30. saith, Sciunt omnes docti exiguam fuisse Ruffini in vertendis authoribus religionem, or by some other. Nor are these passages in Origen onely hints against some piece of Pelagianism, which might be conceived by some few in his time, as Dr. Homes minceth the matter, p.130. but express arguing against the main point of Pelagianism, denying original corruption, and that in the chief arguments used by Augustine and others. Nor did Origen Pelagianize a little onely, but is supposed to have first brought in Pelagianism into the Church, Hieron. adv. Ruffin. saith Dr. Owen, display of Arminianism, ch.12. And though it's not denied that Origen did deliver contraries, yet I think it's hard to find him so often, and so directly arguing against his own tenet. Nor do I conceive, however Dr. Homes, Mr. Blake, Mr. M. and others imagine contradictions in my words which are not so, that ever Dr. Homes hath found in my writings such clashings against my self. Nor do I make such an argument as M. Ms friend Defence, p.17. answers, that the passages make against the Pelagians, and therefore necessarily they were written after the Pelagian heresie was broached (which is a meer shifting fashion in that Author who ever he were, used before in answering my argument from Irenæus words and scope, which he answers as if I made it from the scope and not the words) but thus, these passages are plainly and directly against the Pelagians legians chief point of impeccability, which Origen is charged to bee the Author of; therefore according to Rivets rule tractat. de patrum autoritate c. 14. it's not likely they were Origens, to which he answers not. I will add only the words of Voſſius Hiſt. Pelag. l. 2. part 1. th. 6. p. 153. Idem Origines T. 2. p. 471. niſi is potius Rufinus interpres (quis enim, quæ vel Origenis, vel paraphraſtæ adeò liberi fuerint, hodie diſcernit) in cap. IX. (rectiùs VI.) ad Rom. ubi ait, ab ſorde peccati mundus non eſt quiſquam, etiamſi unius diei fuerit vita ejus ſuper terram. Sed fuſe clareque imprimis hoc de peccato ſcribit lib. VIII. & XII. in Levit. niſi iſti in Leviticum commentarii Cyrilli potiùs ſint, quando etiam in hujus operibus inveniuntur, ac, ut in Origenianis libri ſexdecim, ita inter Cyrilliana ſexdecim homiliæ appellantur; which ſhews, that that learned writer for Pædobaptiſm, did diſtruſt thoſe very paſſages cited for infant Baptiſm to have been none of Origens.

Mr. C. adds. "The third thing objected is, that he calls it a tra"dition; ſo does the Apoſtle things contained in Scripture, 2 Theſ. 2.
"15. Epiphanius calls Baptiſm and other divine truths παράδοσις tra"ditions, and yet quotes Scripture for them. Bellarmin calls infant
"Baptiſm a tradition, and yet brings ten places of Scripture to prove
"it. Auſtin affirms lib. 10. c. 23. de Geneſ. that the cuſtome of our mo"ther the Church in baptiſing of little ones is in no wiſe to be deſpiſed,
"nor to be thought ſuperfluous, nor at all to be believed, unleſs it were "an Apoſtolick tradition, and yet proves the neceſſity of it from Joh. 3. 5.
"unleſs one be born again of water and the ſpirit, &c.

Anſw. It was granted in my Examen that the greateſt points of faith though written, were by the Ancients called Apoſtolical traditions, but in this point that the words aſcribed to Origen meant an unwritten tradition, I alledged 1. that the phraſes pro hoc & eccleſia ab Apoſtolis traditionem ſuſcepit, and ſecundum Eccleſiæ obſervantiam, are ſufficient proof to them who are acquainted with the Ancients writings of thoſe times. To this is nothing replied by Mr. Ms. friend. Dr. Homes, or M. Cr. to ſhew that theſe phraſes are applied to any other then unwritten traditions, when they are uſed of rites, for the uſe or inſtitution of which they alledge no text of Scripture. 2. That there is no text of Scripture cited for the uſe or inſtitution of infant Baptiſm. To this it is replied, that Origen layes the ground on the Scriptures, But thoſe Scriptures are brought for the proof of original ſin, and the neceſſity of infant Baptiſm, which were reaſons of the Churches obſervance, not proofs of the uſe and inſtitution of it. And that the Scriptures do not give any proof of the uſe or inſtitution of infant Baptiſm, but onely grounds of the reaſonableneſs, and why the Church took it up, is ſhewed to have been the judgement of many learned Papiſt and Proteſtants of later and elder time, in my Præcurſor ſect. 20. which may bee eaſily obſerved, becauſe they alledge nothing out of Scripture about inſtitution or practiſe of it, but of neceſſity to ſave the infant; which being a miſtake, it appears the tradition was not from the Apoſtles. Beſides, as Auguſtin alledged Joh. 3. 5. for infant Baptiſm, ſo he alſo alledged Joh. 6. 53. for infant Communion, which hee and the Ancients obſerved as an Apoſtolick tradition, and many Churches observe even to this day; yet we conclude it is but an unwritten tradition, and so judged by the Ancients: All the places of the Fathers which cite Scripture for infant Baptism, infant Communion, Easter, Lent-fast, and many other things which the Ancients observed, shewing rather the reason of their observation, then the institution, as Mr. Cawdrey speaks in another case, Sabb. rediv. part. 4. chap. 1. §. 24.

To the 20th. section of my Præcursor, Mr. Baxter in his Præfestinantis moratur saith, The Ancients took infant Baptism, as you say, for an Apostolical tradition, but not unwritten. The warrant they supposed written, but not the history de facto.

Answ. The ancients must needs take infant Baptism for an unwritten tradition when they supposed the History neither de facto nor of the institution to be written, though they took the custome of the Church (as Austin tom. 3. l. 10. de Genes. ad litteram c 23. terms it, having such reason from the necessity of it to save them perishing upon the mistake of Joh. 3. 5. for their warrant. But how poor a matter was taken by the Church for a reason to continue a custome, may appear even by those words of Austin in that place, which shew also it was taken onely for a custome of the Church taken up by them, and not appointed by the Apostles. For having spoken as doubtfull and uncertain what to say about the question before agitated by him, concerning the creation of the souls of the children from the parents, because of the objection from the Baptism of little ones, he then adds; Yet the custome of our mother the Church in Baptising little ones, is not to be despised, nor by any means to be accounted superfluous, nor at all to be believed unless it were an Apostolical tradition. For that little age hath great weight of testimony, which first merited to shed blood for Christ. Whereby it may appear, 1. That Austin took it for a custome of the Church, without example or institution written. 2. That he took such a frivolous pretence as the death of the children of Bethlehem slain by Herod, Matth. 2. to have great weight of testimony for the believing of infant Baptism to have been an Apostolical tradition. It would be counted arrogance in me to censure the Fathers, yet when I find such silly reasons as Austin here and elsewhere, and Cyprian Epist. 59. ad Fidum, give as warrant for infant Baptism, so slightly passed over by Mr. B. and others, and their testimonies still urged for the credit of infant Baptism, which do with any that is willing to see the weakness of them discredit it, I cannot but for the truths sake say, that as in many other things so in this of infant Baptism the Fathers speeches are so vain, as that there is more need to bewail the errour they have led people into, then to the continuance of the deceiving of people by them, to alledge them for proofs, or to magnifie, justifie or excuse them.

Mr. B. adds, "You might have spared all the 86 page where you "prove that Papists take it for an unwritten tradition. We know they "are desirous of any pretence to set tradition above Scripture. Yet you "know Bellarmin and others commonly prove it by Scripture. The "words of Becanus (not §. 24. as you say, but §. 12.) yeeld, the text "rightly

"rightly interpreted to prove infant Baptiſm, and that's all that I de-"ſire. I had thought that Chamiers anſwer to this might have ſatisfied
"you. If you have forgot it, peruſe it again tom. 7. lib. 9. c. 10. §. 40,
"&c. and tom. 4. l. 5. c. 9. §. 32.

Anſw. I could not well have ſpared any part of that page. Not onely later Papiſts engaged in the modern controverſies, but alſo elder and diſingaged Papiſts and others, were alledged by me, of whom it is not meet to ſuſpect that they did acknowledge that infant Baptiſm is an unwritten tradition, out of a deſire to ſet tradition above Scripture, but out of cleer evidence of the truth of what they ſay. Nor do I think Mr. B. can ſhew one Author until Luthers day, who made infant Baptiſm any other then an unwritten tradition, although they produce many of them Scriptures for the neceſſity, reaſonableneſs, and lawfulneſs of the Church to uſe it, to whoſe authority they aſcribed too much in the appointing ſuch rites, and interpreting Scriptures to that end. I do not finde that the engaged Papiſts cited by me, did ſet tradition above Scripture, but that they make it equall I grant. I know Bellarmin tom. 3. l. 1. de ſacram. bapt. c. 8. brings three arguments from Scripture for infant Baptiſm, and c. 9. ſaith, deducitur evidenter ex Scripturis, ut diximus, but how he means it hee tels us thus in the ſame chapter; that though the argument of the Anabaptiſts from defect of Command or example have great force againſt Lutherans, for as much as they uſe that principle every where, that the rite which is not in Scripture, having no command nor example there, is to be rejected, yet it is of no force againſt Catholicks. For although we find no command expreſly, that we ſhould baptize infants, yet that alſo is openly enough gathered out of Scriptures, as we have ſhewed above: and beſides the tradition of the Apoſtles is of no leſs authority with us, then Scripture, for the Apoſtles ſpake with the ſame ſpirit with which they did write. But that this is an Apoſtolick tradition, wee thence know whence we know the Apoſtolick Scripture to be the Apoſtolick Scripture, to wit, from the teſtimonies of the ancient Church. The words of Becanus were cited rightly by me out of his manual of Controverſies l. 1. c. 2. §. 24. (not §. 12. as Mr. B. corrects me without cauſe) and they plainly ſhew the meaning of thoſe men to be, that the Scripture onely proves infant Baptiſm by that ſenſe of it, which is not manifeſt but by the tradition, and practiſe of the Church I have peruſed Chamier pauſtr. Cath. (not tom. 7. as Mr. B. directs, I know none ſuch) but tom 1. l. 9. c. 10. §. 40, &c. and tom. 4. l. 5. c. 9. §. 32. But I am not thereby ſatisfied, that either the Ancients took infant Baptiſm for any other then an unwritten tradition or that it ought to be taken.

Mr. B. proceeds. "Mr. Rogers hath made you know he is of another "judgement. Mr Bedford tels me he hath corrected his word in a la"ter edition. How could you allege Dr. Field without conſidering how "you wrong'd your ſelf? Is nothing written in Scripture but expreſly?
"yea is not that Scripture proof, and plain proof, which ſhews plainly
"from Scripture the grounds reaſons and cauſes of the neceſſity of the "practiſe? Dr Prideaux thought Epiſcopacy provable from Scripture:
"and therefore if hee thought that infant Baptiſm muſt bee proved the " same way, he is sure against you. For Dr. Taylour, if you have read " all his books, I hope you will no more reckon him amongst Prote- " stants, having so much of the body of Popery in them. Mr. Youngs " words (if they be his) are against you in the thing you cite them for. " There are testimonia minùs aperta: and there are testimonia aperta pro " fundamto & præmissis, quæ sunt minùs aperta directè pro conclusione. " My audaciousness in asserting plain Scripture proof must bee better " repressed then thus, if you will satisfie men of reason and con- " science.

Answ. I have made known in my Apology sect. 13. how Mr. Rogers shifts but answers not the allegation I made of his words. And if M. Bedford have corrected his words, I wish it have not been for the cause sake, against his conscience. If he and Mr. Rogers can so easily say and unsay, who can give credit to men that can thus blow hot and cold with the same breath? I know no wrong to my self done, by alleging Dr. Field. Though things be written in Scripture which are not so expressly, yet is not that Scripture proof, nor plain proof for infant Baptism, any more then infant Communion, which shews plainly from Scripture, Pauls conclusion of original sin, Rom 5.12. and Christs Joh. 3.5. which Ancients took falsly for grounds, reasons and causes of the necessity of infant Baptism, as they did Joh. 6. 53. of infant Communion, yet took the use to bee a custome of the Church, countenanced from Scripture without institution of Christ, or practise of the Apostles And that this was Dr Fields meaning, is plain from his words; and this seems to have been the common opinion of the Prelates of the Church of England, by the words by way of Preface used at the solemnity of Baptism, and in sundry places of the Common Prayer-book, Catechism, art. 27. of the Church of England. And after this manner thought Dr. Prideaux infant Baptism and Episcopacy proveable by Scripture. I have not read all Dr. Taylors works, nor do I know but that hee is to bee reckoned among Protestants. Dr. Youngs words are much for me, 1. In that he produceth no precept but that of Circumcision for infant Baptism. 2. That hee confesseth the practise Apostolical to be somewhat obscurer, and therefore addes the custome of the Church from the times of the first ages, which is in effect all one as to resolve the proof of infant Baptism finally into the custome of the whole Church, especially when he saith; we cannot smite the Anabaptists with plain testimonies. Nor can Mr. Bs. distinction of more or less open testimonies help him, sith Dr. Young denies, that Pædobaptists can smite with open or plain testimonies, the Anabaptists barking against infant Baptism. If Mr. Bs audaciousness in asserting plain Scripture proof for infant Baptism be not yet repressed, nor men of reason and conscience satisfied, I must leave them to the Lord. Enough I think is said about Origens words. I go on.

Dr. Hammond in his Defence of infants Baptism, pag. 98. saith thus; " About the same time (the 3d. Century) or without question soon af- " ter wrote the Author (under the name of Dionysius Areopagita) de " Eccl. Hierarch. For as by Photius it appears, Theodorus Presbyter about " the year 420. debated the question, whether that writer were Dionysius " mentioned

" mentioned in the acts or no. And of this no doubt hath been made,
" but that he was a very ancient and learned Authour. He therefore in " his 7th. ch. of Eccles. Hierarch. Edit. Morel. p. 233. proposeth the " question, as that which may seem to prophane persons (i.e. heathens)
" ridiculous, why children which cannot yet understand divine things, " are made partakers of the sacred birth from God, i. e. evidently of " Baptism (concerning the baptizing of infants saith Maximus his scho-
" liast) adding to the same head also, that others in their stead pronounce " the abrenunciations and divine confessions. And his answer is, 1. That " many things which are unknown by us why they are done, have yet " causes worthy of God. 2. That we affirm of this the same things which " our divine Officers of the Church being instructed by divine tradition " have brought down unto us, and again, our Divine guides (i. e. the " Apostles saith Maximus) considering this, appointed that infants
" should thus be admitted according to the sacred manner, nothing can " bee more clear then that the Apostolical tradition is by this ancient " and elegant writer avouched for the baptizing of infants, as a suffici" ent account of that matter, against the reproaches and scoffs of pro-
" phane or heathen men, who deemed it unreasonable. And so there " is a most convincing testimony for that time, wherein that Author " wrote, which must needs be in the 4th. Century, before Theodorus
" Presbyters debating the question concerning him, but most probably " more ancient, and so to be placed in this 3d. age.

Answ. 1. It is to be noted by the Reader, that Dr. Hammond doth not so much as pretend the antiquity of that Author to be afore the 3d. century, and consequently not that Dionysius the Areopagite mentioned Act 17 34. as some Papists would have it, but are by learned men both Papists and Protestants refuted, whereof may be seen Magdeb. centur. 1. l. 2. c. 10. Scultet. med. Patrum, l. 11. c. 9. Perkins prepar. to the demonstr of the probleme. 2. Though Dr. Hammond conceive, that that Author is to be placed in the 3*d. age* by reason of some words of Photius, (which for want of books I cannot examine) yet Salmasius ad Colvium saith p. 179. quamvis subditittius ille (Dionysius Areopagita) sit auctor nec antiquior quinto seculo. p. 441. quem certa fides est scripsisse circa finem quinti seculi. And that which Scultetus ubi supra observes, that in his book of Ecclesiastical Hierarchy he writes many things of Temples, of Altars, of Holy places, of a Quire, of consecration of Monks, of the tonsure and shaving of heads, is me thinks a good argument, that the Author was som idle dreaming Monk no elder then the 5th. century, and is so far from being accounted a Writer of esteem among Divines, that he is rather censured as one who by his curiosities hath corrupted Divinity. 3. Whether those who deemed infant baptism unreasonable were infidels who derided it, or Christians who scrupled it, is not cleared by the Dr. Nor is it apparent that by Divine guides are meant the Apostles. 4. But if it were, that Author makes it no other then an unwritten tradition, if he did he would have alledged some Scripture for it; and the words [our Divine Officers being instructed, not as Dr. Hammond translates it by Divine tradition, but unto or of the old tradition have brought down auto us] do shew, that he counted it a tradition unwritten and delivered from one Officer to another until that time. Now it is granted that in the end of the 3d. and following ages, infant baptism, and in like manner infant communion were counted traditions Apostolical to save infants from perishing, and such seems to have been the opinion of that Author. Pamelius annot. 89. on Cyprian de lapsis. Tractat hunc locum D. Augustinus Ep. 23. ad Bonifac. Haud obscure autem hic quomodo & suprà indicatur vetus Ecclesiæ consuetudo communionis parvulorum, qualem etiam indicare videtur Dionysius Areopagita sub finem Eccles. Hierarch. & sua adhuc ætate D. Aug. Epist. 107. ad vitalem. All which being considered, this testimony is so far from being a most convincing testimony of the derivation of infant baptism from the Apostles, that considering upon what ground they observed it, and how much vanity was in the Ancients in their retaining many fond customes, and fathering them on the Apostles, and when common defending them by Scriptures perverted, it is a convincing testimony that infant baptism was no more from the Apostles then infant communion, both meer corruptions taken up on mistakes and defended by abuse of Scripture.

Mr. M. Mr. Cr. Dr. Homes, Dr. Hammond alledge Gregory Nazianzen his 40th. Oration about baptism, in which he adviseth the baptizing of infants, which saith Dr. Hammond, is a plain testimony of the Churches doctrine at that time, the 4th. century, about the year of Christ 370. he flourished, and died in the year 389.

Against this sundry things are objected, 1. that the same Author saith (as I find his words in Chamier. paustr. cath. tom. 4 l. 5. c. 9. §. 66.) where he gives instance in his 40th. Oration of baptism, of those who decease without baptism, Neither can they receive it, either perhaps by reason of infancy, or some altogether involuntary chance, by which it is that even they, who would, obtain not that gift. From whence it is manifest, that in Gregory Nazianzens time infants did decease without baptism, and that they could not receive it by reason of infancy. Nor is this objection salved by making the reason of these childrens not receiving baptism, because that sometimes it might fall out that Christians might not have the opportunity of bringing their children to baptism, because they dwelt among infidels or Paynims, where they could not enjoy the benefit of the word and sacraments for themselves or their children; therefore they were necessitated to put off the baptising of their children, which seems to be Mr. Ms. friends evasion in his Defence, p. 14. in that he applies this passage in Nazianzen as well to the hinderance of the baptism of children as of elder persons. For the words of Nazianzen shew, that as some deceased without baptism by reason of some ἀκούσιον περιστασιν, unvoluntary accident, whether by the hand of God or men; so others he saith deceased ἀπ' ἀπορίαν barely by reason of infancy, and that by reason of it οὐκ ἐν ἐξουσίᾳ τε δέξασθαι they were not in power or capacity to receive it. Which is a plain testimony, that however in case of apparent danger of death then infants might receive baptism according to his opinion, yet ordinarily they were not in the power or capacity to receive it, and so did sometimes die without it.

2. It is objected, and thereby this observation is confirmed, that when he comes in the same Oration to set down what he would have done about infants baptism, he resolves 1. that they should be baptized if danger did urge it, that they might not miss of the common grace, intimating that otherwise they should. 2. He gives his judgement for others that they should wait longer. 3. The reason he giveth of this longer waiting is, that they may hear some mystical or spiritual thing, may be taught to answer somewhat, and if they understand not fully, perfectly, and exactly, yet they are instructed and informed. 4. That (not as Dr. Hammond to give colour to his conceit of sanctifying to be the same with baptizing, 1 *Cor.*7.14. by this means they may be baptised souls and bodies; for if this were good reading, 1. they should baptize themselves, 2. they should baptize their souls which were ridiculous;) but, so as that they sanctifie both souls and bodies by or with the great mystery of initiation. Which shews he conceived 1. that by baptism benefit did come to infants though they perceived it not; 2. that it sanctifies their bodies; 3. that it is better done, when children are taught to answer; 4. then they sanctifie souls and bodies, 5. that danger of death was a forcible impulsive to move to the baptism of infants, 6. that without baptism infants should miss of the common grace.

To this saith Dr. Hammond thus, "1. It is clear that it no way pre-"judges the doctrine and practise of the Church formerly set down, "and approved by him, that infant children, indefinitely considered "might be baptized, and if danger approached, must, how young soever "they were; which is as contrary to the Antipædobaptist, and so to Mr. "T. as any thing.

Answ. 1. The phrase [the doctrine and practise of the Church] is according to the Prelatical language, I think as much as the doctrine and practise of the Prelates, but according to the Scripture language it non-sense, the Church being the number of persons taught, and on whom baptizing is practised, not the persons teaching or practising, who are stiled the Elders of the Church in Scripture. 2. That the Elders of any Church afore Nazianzen taught that infant children, indefinitely considered, might be baptised, and if danger approached, must, how young soever they were, I find not pretended of any besides the Council mentioned in Cyprian, Epist. 59. ad Fidum, which it is true determined, in opposition to Fidus his scruple, the lawfulness of baptizing any day, but not of any infants who were likely to live without apparent shew of danger of death, but rather the contrary is manifest from their reason, why they would have them baptized any day afore the 8th. because the son of man came to save mens souls, as much as in us lies, if it may be, no soul is to be lost, and therefore to be baptized any day afore the 8th. Now this implies, that they meant this onely of those infants who being in apparent danger of death would be lost, if not baptized. Now it is true this is contray to my doctrine, and it is as contrary to the doctrine of Pædobaptists, who deny the position of the Papists, that baptism confers grace by the work done, that infants dying unbaptised perish, and if Nazianzens opinion do not prejudice this doctrine and practise of the Church, yet it it doth prejudice the doctrine and practise of Protestant Pædobaptists, who, contrary to Nazianzens mind, would not have infants baptized in that case onely, or for his reason, but would have infants baptized out of the case of imminent and apparent danger of death, and not deferred, upon a pretence of a Covenant right and visible Churchmembership as their priviledge, not as necessary to avoid the danger of perishing.

"2dly. (saith Dr. Hammond) that it is but his private opinion pre-"tending not so much as to any part of the Church of that, or former "ages to authorize it.

Answ. 1. That Tertullian did in like manner determine as Nazianzen did, that infants were not to be baptized but in case of imminent and apparent danger of death, will appear in the examining of his testimony among the Latine Doctors. 2. I know no reason why the counsel and opinion of these two should not as well be counted the doctrine and practise of the Church, and to be of equal authority as Cyprians, and his Councels, Augustines, and Hieroms.

"3dly. (Saith Dr. Hammond) that the state of children being so "weak and uncertain, that 'tis hard to affirm of any that they are not (for "the first three years) in any danger, his councel for deferring will "hardly be ever practical to any.

Answ. The counsel of Nazianzen to baptize in case of danger was not of infants that are in any danger, but of urgent or pressing danger, as the word ἐπείγον, press, urge, or impel, shews. And thus it is practical, as the use of private baptism in those places where it is used doth sufficiently shew.

Fourthly, saith he, that the deferring of which Nazianzen speaks is most probably to bee understood of those whose parents are newly converted, and themselves doubt whether they shall be yet baptised or no, for to such he speaks in that place from p. 654. A.

Answ. The reasons being general, this restriction appears groundless, nor is the Drs. conceit of any validity, that because four pages before he speaks to them, therefore that counsel of his concerns their children onely.

Lastly, saith he, that the deferring till three years old, if it were allowed, would no way satisfie the Antipædobaptists pretensions, and so still the former passages ought be of force with all, and no heed given to the whispers of Mr. I. and others, as if that holy Father disswaded Baptism in any age unless in case of danger, when he clearly saith, ἐν ὁσίοις καὶ ἁγνοῖς σώμασι, Let him in the tendereſt age be Baptised and consecrated to the spirit.

Answ 1. Why hee should call my words or writings whispers any more then his own, sith they are audible enough were it not that I speak to deaf men who will not hear, I do not deprehend, I imagine they are louder then the Doctour would have them. 2. That men should not give heed to my words as well as the Doctours, if they seek the truth impartially, I know not, sith where truth is sought both sides are to bee heard. 3. It is true the deferring Baptism till three years old, will not satisfie ſatisfie us as ſufficient to rectifie the abuſe of infant baptiſm is granted, no nor till thirty, except the perſon become a diſciple and believer in Chriſt: But it ſatisfies us in this, that Nazianzens judgement was, that little ones ſhould not be baptized till they come to ſome underſtanding of the thing ſignified by baptiſm, unleſs in caſe of imminent and apparent danger of death, though we conceive he allowed too ſhort a time to inſtruct them. 4. If the word conſecrated be meant of baptiſm, and from the nayles ſignifie tender age, yet it is not likely he meant this tender age of infancy, ſith hee made perſons uncapable of baptiſme by reaſon of infancy, judged it better to have them firſt inſtructed; If he did, he would have it to onely in caſe of danger of death imminent.

But ſaith Dr. Homes, p. 142. 1. If Greg. Nazianzen doth give reaſon why infants ſhould bee baptiſed, in caſe they are not likely to live to be of riper years, it is ſo much the better for us.

Anſw. I ſuppoſe the Doctour doth not think with Nazianzen, that the danger of death is a ſufficient reaſon for the baptinzing an infant, for that ariſeth from the Popiſh conceits of regeneration by Baptiſm, ex opere operato, and the neceſſity of it to ſave a infant from periſhing. And therefore Nazianzens reaſon muſt bee the worſe for him, ſith it thwarteth his opinion of baptizing upon an imagined priviledge of Covenant holineſs, and his practiſe of doing it ordinarily to infants of Churchmembers out of that caſe. And it would bee conſidered, that where the ground of a practiſe is diſclaimed the alleging of the practiſe correſpondent to that ground and no further, is impertinent for confirmation of the practiſe of the ſame thing, in a different manner, and upon a different ground; as the Proteſtant Divines tell the Papiſts, that their alleging the ancients commemoration of the dead, proves not the Popiſh praying for the dead to be ancient, as Dr. Uſher at large in his anſwer to the Jeſuits challenge, ſith the Popiſh praying is upon the opinion of Purgatory, and for them that are there, the Ancients for the Apoſtles, Martyrs, &c. who are paſt Purgatory, and for their reſurrection; in like manner concerning the allegations of the Ancients Monkery, which either was neceſſary onely by reaſon of the inceſſant perſecutions of thoſe times, or if voluntary, yet with labour of their hands, and ſo different from the Popiſh Monkery which is idle, beſides Gods appointment, voluntary, ſuperſtitious, upon an imagined perfection in that which is indeed ſinful. And ſo for confirmation by laying on of hands, anointing with oyl, uſe of the ſigne of the croſs, ſetting up lights and many more, it is frequently ſhewed that they countenance not the Popiſh confirmation, extream unction, uſe of the ſigne of the croſs, lighting candles at noon day in their Temples, &c. becauſe they were in different manner, and for different reaſons and purpoſes then they are now uſed by them. And indeed the diſcovery of the different reaſons, manner, and end of rites uſed by the Ancients, from that they are now uſed, is of greateſt moment to ſhew the novelty of the Popiſh, Prelatical Pædobaptiſts uſages, who have not onely quite departed from the Scripture but alſo from antiquity, even in thoſe things which the Ancients practiſed indeed, but not as they do.

Secondly, saith Dr. Homes, he doth give another reason, beside that of partaking of common grace, namely, 1. Κρεῖσσον γὰρ, For it is better that they should be sanctified without a feeling of it, then to depart without the seal. So he thinks they are sanctified too in infancy as well as at riper years. 2. Ἡ τέτε λόγ& ἡμῖν, A reason also of this to us is Circumcision, that was wont to be done on the 8th. day, &c.

Answ. 1 The first of these is no other then the partaking of common grace (for to partake of the common grace is all one as to be sanctified) onely with a little enlargement. 2. The 2d. is indeed rather a preventing of an objection [that they could not be partakers of the common grace without perceiving it] rather then a further reason of baptizing them. And the answer is from two examples, one of circumcision which was given to infants without the use of reason, the other of the anoining or sprinkling the door posts, which were things insensitive, bringing salvation to the first born, which is such a woodden reason as Dr. Homes thought fit to let pass in this place.

Thirdly, saith Dr. Homes, wee answer that all three reasons stand in force, as well for all believers infants (God putting them under the promise, Gen. 17.) as for the infants that are in danger of death.

Answ. Whatever force there is in the reasons (which in my apprehension are frivolous) to prove Dr Homes his opinion or practise, yet sure in Nazianzens intent they are onely for the colouring over of the practise of infant baptism, of any whether believers or unbelievers children; onely in case of apparent danger of imminent death, and not at all for countenancing baptizing of believers infants onely at all times as federally holy.

Fourthly, saith Dr. Homes, that Nazianzen urgeth divers divine reasons (to him evincing) for the baptism of infants in danger of death: but for the delaying of others not in danger of death, he saith, Διὸ μὴ γνώμην, I give my opinion; he calls it his opinion. And what is it? That τετραετίαν, such children should stay till three or four years old more, or less? And what is to be expected from children of that age? more then from infants toward baptism? For Nazianzen himself confesseth, that though they may hear and answer some spiritual things, yet they understand imperfectly. But doth Nazianzen give us there any Scripture for this differing? None. Doth he give any reason? Even in effect the same as for baptizing of infants in danger of death, to wit, that they may be sanctified in mind and body.

Answ. 1. Tis true Nazianzen gives one reason for baptizing infants in case of danger of death, which is the sanctifying them by it, not divers reasons. the examples of Circumcision and anointing the door posts, being answers to an objection, as I said before. Now that reason is so far from being Divine, that it is from a meer superstitious conceit, as if the meer outward Baptism did sanctifie: Nor is it the same reason in effect for differing baptism three or four years with that which hee gives for infant baptism in case of danger of death. For though he supposeth in both Baptism sanctifies, yet he takes infant Baptism to sanctifie onely the body, the other to sanctifie body and mind. He supposeth they may learn some spiritual thing, though imperfectly, and so the baptiſm may be a ſign to them though obſcure, and there may be ſome memory of what is done, though confuſed, which though it be not as it ſhould be, yet it is better and more agreeable to Scripture then the infant Baptiſm, where there is no ſignification to the baptized, nor remembrance of it. 2. Be it granted that Nazianzen expreſſeth but his opinion, and that it betters not the thing much, and his reaſons not ſo right as they ſhould have been, there is in this paſſage this evident, that infant Baptiſm was no tthen common as now, nor upon ſuch reaſons as now, nor approved of as now it is, but out of the caſe of danger of death imminent, apparently diſſwaded, and conſequently the preſent common infant baptiſm an innovation from what was in that age.

Dr. Hammond adds, That Chryſoſtome in his Homily to the Neophyti, hath theſe words, For this cauſe (i. e. becauſe there be ſo many benefits of baptiſm here recited, ten in number) we baptiſe children though they have not ſins, and that he flouriſhed in the beginning of the firſt Age.

Anſw. Though I finde in two Homilies, one in the fifth, the other in the ſixth tome of Chryſoſtomes works of Eton print, ſome ſpeeches unto the newly inlightned or planted, yet I finde not theſe words there, nor any where elſe in any of his homilies. Yet I deny not them to bee Chryſoſtomes finding them in Auguſtin tom. 7. l. 1. againſt Julian the Pelagian, ch. 2. But perhaps if the words before were viewed, it might be diſcerned whether the Baptiſm of little ones then uſed, were onely in caſe of danger of death apparently imminent, or without that caſe. It is likely hee meant that infants or little children were baptized onely in caſe of danger of death imminent, ſith many of his Homilies expreſs, even that where theſe words cited were, exhortations to the newly baptized, and the relation of his life teſtifies, that when hee was perſecuted by the Empreſs, and was about to baptize on the ſolemn feſtival in which Baptiſm was uſed, the perſons men and women that were to be baptized by him fled away naked, being ready to be baptized upon his apprehenſion, which ſhews they then baptized perſons naked. And the occaſion of the ſpeech, as ſet down by Auſtin, ſhews it was done upon the conceit of giving them grace, which is manifeſt by the words διὰ τοῦτο for this cauſe. And the particle καὶ, alſo, in the Greek, ſhews there was mention of baptizing others then little children. And in the ſame place Auſtin ſaith, John Chryſoſtome held, believed, and taught this, not onely that little children were not onely to be baptized, but alſo to have the Euchariſt or Lords Supper, for without his fleſh and bloud they could not have life. As for the other place Dr. Hammond cites in Chryſoſtoms 40th. Homily on Geneſis, that Baptiſm is lawfull in the firſt age, I yeeld that Chryſoſtome did in that age allow infant Baptiſm, but I think the Dr. cannot ſhew that he held it was to bee done out of the caſe of apparent danger of imminent death, or that the practiſe of baptizing them out of that caſe was ordinary. It is moſt evident by many proofs, that both then and ſome ages after, the ordinary uſual baptizing was of chatechized perſons at the ſolemn feaſts, when moſt in the Empire were by profeſſion Chriſtians.

SECT. LXXXX.

The arguments to prove Infant Baptiſm an innovation Exam. pag. 9. are made good againſt Mr. Marſhal, and Dr. Homes.

WHereas Mr. M. had ſaid in his Sermon pag. 3. that it is manifeſt out of moſt of the Records that wee have of antiquity, both in the Greek and Latin Church, that the Chriſtian Church hath been in poſſeſſion of the priviledge of baptiſing the infants of believers for the ſpace of 1500. years and upwards; I ſaid in my Examen p. 9. But it is wonder to mee that if it were ſo manifeſt as you ſpeak, you ſhould finde nothing in Euſebius for it, nor in Ignatius nor in Clemens Alexandrinus, nor in Athanaſius, nor in Epiphanius, that I mention not others.

To this Mr. M. or his friend replies, that I add three arguments to ſhew that Infant Baptiſm was not known in the Greek Church, But therein he abuſeth me, for I added them not to that end, but to ſhew that it was not ſo manifeſt as Mr. M. ſaid, that it was not univerſally known.

To my mention of the ſilence of Euſebius, &c. he ſaith. 1. The queſtion was not ſtarted then, as the Fathers ſpake not clearly of the traduction of original ſin, before it was denied by the Pelagians. 2. That it is enough to him that none of the Authors named by me ſpake againſt it.

Anſw. 1. The queſtion of the Hieracites was raiſed in Epiphanius his time, which did lead to ſpeak of infants Baptiſm, and yet Epiphanius allegeth not infants Baptiſm againſt them, though it had been for his purpoſe. 2. Sure Euſebius that writes the Eccleſiaſtical ſtory, and ſuch as wrote the hiſtory of the Church, had occaſion to mention it as they do the Baptiſm of perſons of age, the uſe of the Lords Supper, the meetings of Chriſtians, the orders of the Church, the ordinations of Biſhops and other things, and would if it were ſo manifeſt as Mr. M. ſaid it was. 3. It may be they ſpake not againſt it, becauſe there was no queſtion about it. But it is likely there was no queſtion about it, becauſe there was in the firſt ages no practiſe of it, or very obſcure. For as ſoon as it began, Tertullian put in ſome exceptions againſt it and after him Nazianzen. 4. If the Fathers afore Pelagius aroſe, did not ſpeak clearly of original ſin, then it is likely the paſſages in Origen on Levit. Rom. Luk were not his, ſith they ſpeak clearly of the traduction of original ſin and that ſpeech of Voſſius Hiſt. Pel. l. 2. part. 1. th 6. p. 153. is right; For who can at this day diſcern what paſſages were the brats of Origen or his paraphraſts?

Hee adds. 1. If any thing were brought out of Ignatius, you would tell mee, that you did not know Ignatius when you ſee him.

Anſw. 1. Though Ignatius Epiſtles be very doubtfull, yet I incline to think ſome of them to be his which we have, and that genuine paſſages may be diſcerned from ſpurious. 2. If any paſſage, though ſpurious, were to be found in him for infant Baptiſm, Paedobaptiſts would not ſtick to produce it, who make no conſcience to allege the words falſly aſcribed to Juſtin Martyr in the book of queſtions and anſwers to the Orthodox, and ſtick not to maintain the allegation of it, as his, though it mention Origen, whom Dr. Homes imagins Juſtin Martyr might hear of, though he died by his confeſſion anno 169. and Origen was not born till about 186. as the paſſages in his Animadv. on my Exercit. p 111, 112, 127 compared do ſhew. Beſides the allegation of the Book of Eccleſiaſtical Hierarchy, as Dionyſius the Areopagites, the queſtions ad Antiochum, as Athanaſius his ſhew, that neither this Authour nor other Pædobaptiſts are aſhamed to allege baſtard writings, which ſay any thing for infant Baptiſm.

Concerning Clemens Alexandrinus he tels me Defence p. 19. You deſire to know what Clemens Alexandrinus ſaith (which is not true) why ſure he had none but great infants to be his Schollers (I conceive he means profeſſed Pagan infidels, But I think this not true, ſith in his writings he directs Chriſtians, and oppoſeth heretiques) if you (who pretend to bee acquainted familiarly (which is very falſe) with the ſecrets of antiquity) be acquainted with him, you'l know what I mean: He deſired (as it is likely more Greek Fathers who were converted from Paganiſm did) to ſet forth religion in ſuch a way, as might move other Pagans to come and confeſs the Chriſtian faith, that ſo they might bee added to the Church by Baptiſm, in ſuch a way as was proper to the baptiſing of grown men. Which is true, and confirms my preſumption that when he ſpeaks of Baptiſm, as he doth lib. 1. pædag. c. 6. and elſewhere, he would have mentioned infant Baptiſm and its benefit to the ſame end, if it had been in his time in uſe, as Mr. M. in his ſermon ſaid.

Concerning Athanaſius he ſpeaks thus, "What ſay you to that paſ"ſage in Athanaſius? Where he is ſhewing how wee are buried with "Chriſt in baptiſm, and riſe again; he ſayes the dipping of the infant "quite under water thrice, and raiſing of it up again, doth ſignifie the "death of Chriſt and his reſurrection upon the third day, Athan. dicta
"& interpretatio ſcript. q. 94. is not that teſtimony plain?

Anſw. It is? But who ſe is it? Is not that Book one of theſe ſuppoſititious writings in the 2d. tome of Athanaſius works, of which Scultetus Medul. patrum part. 2. l. 1. c. 42. ſaith, quædam nullo judicio videntur conſcripta, quæ ſe ſatis produnt? Among which alſo are the quæſtions to Antiochus, out of which Mr. M. or his friend pag. 20, 21. cite two teſtimonies, one out of quæſt. 2. and another quæſt. 114. and ſaith, the words are ſafe and ſound built on a Goſpel ground, owned by all the reformed Churches, which make infants of believers baptiſed to enter into the Kingdome of heaven, excluding the unbaptized, which hitherto hath been termed Popery. Nor is hee excuſed from abuſing Readers with theſe baſtard writings, by ſaying, the words following may be erroneous, and yet written by Athanaſius, when the words following are part of the anſwer, which is erroneous, and they are ſo connex that they muſt bee the ſame Authors. As for the words, How do you prove what you allege out of Tertullian and Gregory Nazianzen, and that I make this a plea for my ſelf, that my allegations may gain a favourable conſtruction, that my proofs taken out of antiquity do as ſtrongly prove the point in hand, as proofs are usually taken in such matters, no whit excuseth him, sith my proofs are from writings not suspected, his are from treatises judged by many of each side to be supposititious, mine from passages not excepted against, as his are, and therefore my wondering ceaseth not: and the silence of these, together with Epiphanius his not urging infant Baptism against Hieracites, yeeld a strong presumption of the rarity of infant Baptism then, though from thence the non-usage bee not syllogistically concluded. And for the words hee brings out of Epiphanius, hee might call Baptism the great Circumcision, yet reject infant Baptism (though I said not he did, but that it's likely it was not so manifest as Mr. M. said) as he might call Presbyters Priests, and Deacons Levites, and yet not tye Presbytery or Deaconship to a tribe, and the age in which each sort ministred in the Temple of the Jews. I add, that the words cited out of the supposed Athanasius prove dipping under water then the usual way of Baptism.

What Dr. Homes brings Animadv. on my Exercit. pag. 143. out of Clemens Alexandrinus Strom. l. 3. pag. 461. serves not his turn, but is rather against him, for it mentions onely one Baptism of Believers. And the same may be said of what he brings out of Epiphanius his 2d. Book tom. 2. contra hæres. 30. pag. 52. In which hee makes the perfect Circumcision, not to be onely of men in the time of their imbecility, but of men and women, all the people of Christians indeed, which omits if not excludes infants.

"2ly. saith Mr. M. or his friend, def. pag 21. you reason from the continuance of the questions put to persons when they were to be baptized, "and answered by them: which I think because we must conceive children were not able to return an answer to them, thereby you would "infer they were not baptized: But I answer, when the Gospel was "first declared into the world, such as being of age were first taught "were then baptized, Acts 2. 41. & Acts 8. 13,37. After that time such "as were taught are said to be catechized: for κατηχησις εις πιστιν "ἀγει. the Catechism leads men to faith, saith Clemens Alexandrinus "Pædag. When such were prepared and made fit to bee baptized, certain questions were propounded to them concerning their faith in "Christ, their resolution to forsake the Devil, &c. which are related "by many of the Ancients: when those of age afterwards brought their "children to baptism, these questions were likewise put to them (though "of themselves they were not able to make answer to them) but how "warrantably, I will not go about to prove; yet that they were used at "infants Baptism, as well as at the Baptism of such as were at age, it appears by Balsamon in Can. 6. Conc. Neocæsar. Aug. Ep. ad Januarium, "&c. To all which questions at childrens baptism, such as undertook "their education made answer on their behalf. Therefore you cannot "by these questions infer that children were not baptized, seeing these "Authors certifie that questions were put to them, and also tell us who "answered for them.

Answ. 'Tis true I cannot, nor did I ever intend to prove that children were not baptized in the third age, but the putting the questions to infants to answer, shews that at first none were baptized but such as could answer to them: and sith this was but a ridiculous thing, which this Author will not go about to prove to have been done warrantably, to put questions to infants to answer, doubtless it came not from the Apostles or Apostolical men, who would never have appointed so frivolous a thing but as this Author doth very honestly confess, they baptized such as were taught and catechized, and as he well notes out of Clemens Alexandrinus, Catechism leads men to faith, and that to Baptism. And this undeniably proves, as Ludovicus Vives truly gathered, tom. in August de civit. Dei c. 27. l. 1. tom. 5. that at first none was baptized till he could ask for it and answer to the questions, which custome he saith he hath heard continued in some Cities of Italy. It is likely those of the Greeks about Calabria, and so far as I can yet by search discern, this continued the first and second Age, to baptize onely persons of age. In the third Age, infant Baptism with many other corruptions began, and then to keep a mimical shew of the old manner of answering the questions, some made answer in the infants name; which being after objected to Augustin, he answers Epist. 23. that the answerer did not speak falsly, when he said the infant did believe, because he had the Sacrament of faith: which was indeed no answer, sith the answer was made afore the Sacrament, and the Sacrament could not make him a believer who was not. Now this answer was not to engage them to undertake their education, as this Author seems to imply, but to assert they did believe afore they were baptized, it being originally the right use of that rite, to baptize none but those who were first believers, till the superstitious conceit of an infants perishing without Baptism first brought it in, as necessary in case of apparent danger of imminent death, and no otherwise; as those many reliques of Antiquity in the speeches of Tertullian, Nazianzen, and others shew; besides the narrations of baptizing the catechized at solemn times, and the not baptizing of children of believers till they came to age, the intent of baptizing Austin when in youth he was sick, but putting it off when recovered. But after his time, the necessity of it being so vehemently pressed by him, and urged against Pelagians, infant Baptism in process of time quite swallowed up true baptism; and that which this Author here ingenuously confesseth was the primitive use, is now cried down as if it were an innovation and an heresie. So monstrously hath the ignorance and intemperate speeches of Fathers, School men and others, and the violence and mistakes of Luther, Calvin, and others, perverted the doctrine of Baptism, and oppressed those that have sought to reform it, though if there were no more to be said for them then what here this Author, whether Mr. Marshal or Dr. Young confesseth, it were enough to satisfie men that were willing to be satisfied, that infant Baptism was not at first when the Gospel went first abroad into the world, and yet then doubtless Believers had infants; but that afterwards men brought their children to Baptism, when corrupt opinions of its necessity and the giving grace by it were received, and to allay the extream bitter and unreasonable heat of spirit, which is in the clamarous Pædobaptists of our days. But I go on.

Mr.

Mr. M. or his friend tels mee, Thirdly, you conceive because many children born of Christian Parents were not baptised when they were young, therefore it was not their custome to Baptise infants. For the making good hereof, you bring forth instances of Constantine the Great, Greg. Nazianzen, and Chrysostom. Afore he speaks of these instances, hee sets down some known reasons, some imagined, why some deferred among the Ancients their own Baptism; and he thinks they might upon the like reasons defer their childrens.

Answ. 1. That they did defer their children Baptism confirms my opinion, that it was not ordinary in the Greek Church to baptize infants. 2. That if they did defer it upon the reasons imagined by him, then they thought it not necessary to be done in infancy, as Pædobaptists do now, chiefly Mr. Baxter, plain Script. proof part. 2. ch 8. who will have infants baptised immediately, as soon as ever they are disciples; which by his grounds is at the first instant of their birth, or afore. 3. That very reason why some deferred Baptism to old age, to wit the doing away sin, was indeed the very reason of their baptizing infants. And Nazianzens confutation, telling some that all times were fit for Baptism, seeing no time was free from death, shews how ill Mr. M. chose that passage to put in the Title page of his Book, unless he would have Readers to baptize upon that opinion, as if thereby they could work out their salvation. 4. All this discourse about the various reasons of mens deferring their own Baptism, is quite besides the point about parents deferring their infants Baptism, which not to have been upon any of those imagined reasons, but because they thought it not necessary, nor did practise it but in case of apparent danger of imminent death to the infant, will appear by weighing his answer to my instances. To that of Constantines being not baptized in infancy, though Helena his mother were a Christian, it is said; 1. That it appears not that Constantines parents were in his infancy become Christians. 2. Himself was also an unbeliever many years. To which I reply; though it be not apparent that Constantius or Helena were Christians in the infancy of Christians, yet those Historians that do conceive they were, and yet it being agreed he was not then baptized, do tacitely yeeld, that it was not unusual for the children of Believers to be unbaptized till they came to age.

Dr. Homes tels me, That I have ill urged Constantin a Latin, for an instance that Baptism of infants was not ordinary in the Greek Church. But I think otherwise since Constantin lived and died in the Greek Church, and therefore fitly mentioned among them.

The next mentioned by me is Gregory Nazianzen, the son of a Christian Bishop, and brought up long by him, was not baptized till hee came to be a youth. To this saith Mr. M or his friend How do you prove he was the son of a Christian Bishop? His father was once in the Hypsistarian error, whether he were converted before Gregory was born it is not exprest. when hee was young he was bred at Athens under heathens, to which it is not likely his father would send him if a Christian, and why he was no baptised as soon as he was converted to Christianity I conjecture the reason was that he might the better prepare himself to receive baptism.

Answ.

Answ. I did little imagin that this Author would have so far gratified the Papists, as to joyn with Baronius and other Romanists, by shifts to avoid the evidence of this instance, which Protestants urge to prove Bishops to have then married and begot children after marriage. To his question, I prove him to have been a Bishop, by the same words of Gregory Nazianzen himself in the verse of his life; by which Chamier paustrat. Cath. tom. 3. l. 16. c. 13. §. 41. Dr. Hall honour of the married Clergy 2d. Book Sect. 8. and others, prove Gregory Nazianzen to have been begotten of his Father being a Bishop, where he brings in his Father speaking to perswade him to help him in his charge, in these words, as Dr. Hall turns them into English out of Greek, The years of thy age are not so many as of my Priesthood. Which how to free from Baronius his devices of an hyperbole, and the inconsistency with the other passages of his fathers Baptism, and his study at Athens, and seeing Julian there, the Reader may see in Chamier ubi suprà at large. Where and in Dr. Hall he may find, that his mother was also a pious Christian when hee was born, and that she begged him of God. And the Century Writers of Magd. say cent. 4 c. 10. She was born of pious and holy progenitours. And though he travailed abroad, suppose at 12. years of age, yet was he long brought up by his parents, especially in that time in which he was to have been baptized, if the Baptism of infants had been then ordinary: yet was hee not baptized (as this Author confesseth) till he was of age, after he returned to his Father, who it is not likely did send him to be trained up under infidels, however hee might light on their acquaintance and hear them. As for the reason of deferring his baptism, it is in vain to enquire into another cause, then that which Gregory Nazianzen himself in his 40th. Oration of holy Baptism gives, when hee adviseth to baptize infants in case of apparent danger of imminent death, but out of that case to defer it. And this appears to have been the genuine reason, and the practise accordingly in that (as Gregorius Presbyter relates in his life) when sailing to Athens a storm arose, so that his life was in apparent danger, he was afraid of dying unbaptised, and resolved to be baptised. The other reason assigned by Mr. M or his friend, is frivolous; for though the better to prepare himself to receive baptism, might be the reason of his deferring it so long as he did when he came to age, yet it could not be a reason of his parents deferring it, or of his in infancy. So that notwithstanding these vain shifts of this Author, wherein he joyns with the Papists, who use the like devices to avoin this testimony urged by Protestants to prove the marriage of Bishops then, and is refuted by them; yet this one instance is an evident proof, that in the Greek Church baptism of infants was not ordinary in the fourth Century, but used perhaps extraordinarily in case of apparent danger of imminent death.

There is the less need of insisting on the instance of Chrysostome his birth of Christian parents, and educated and baptised at age by Miletius, with that of Nazianzen is so pregnant. 'Tis true I did allege it as Grotius his saying, whom I found counted for a learned man by Spanheimius and many others, and I might well make use of him, as Protestants sometimes do of Papists that are corrupt in point of antiquity.

If Dr. Young were the Author of the first part of Mr. Ms. Defence, and of the Latin Book of the Lords day, published in the year 1639. under the name of Theophilus Philokyriaces Loncardiensis, hee himself cites Baronius for the Lords day in the very title page of his Book. What Grotius was in his life and studies, I leave for those who knew him to judge; his books though in many things corrupt, I might be allowed to make use of, as of other learned men with judgement. In this thing I did think I might the more securely take his word, because in the same place Annot. in Matth. c. 19. 14. hee declared hee was for infant Baptism; nor do I think it was without some reason which he affirmed, though my time and Library yeeld mee not the advantage of making search into this thing. It is enough that it is supposed by learned men probable, which would not bee if it were not then ordinary, that the children of Christian parents were baptized after they had themselves been believers. Which is plain by the resolution of the Synod of Neocæsarea, elder then the first Nicene, which determined; That a woman with child might be baptized, because the Baptism reached not to the fruit of her womb, because in the confession made in Baptism, each ones free choise is shewed. For if in the confession in Baptism each ones free choise is shewed, then infants were not ordinarily baptized, who could shew no free choise in confession.

How this is vindicated from the shifts of Mr. M or his friend, may be seen in my Apology sect. 16. p. 87, 88. which I think needless to repeat. And for Grotius his saying, that in every age many of the Greeks unto this day, keep the custome of deferring the Baptism of little ones, till they could themselves make a confession of their faith, may be true, if either those in Italy mentioned by Ludov. Vives Comment. in Aug. l. 1. de civit. Dei, c. 27. were Greeks, as it is likely in Calabria, where are Greek Churches as I remember Brerewood shews in his Enquiries of Religion, or the Georgians children, or the Christians children of Cholcos were Greeks; of whom Heylin in his Geography in the description of Armenia, out of Brerewood, Alexand. Rosse in his Censure of Religio Medici, &c. say, they are not baptized till they be 8. years old. Nor need the Anabaptists yet to blush, for all Mr. Ms. or his friends, or Dr. Homes, or Dr. Hammonds, or Mr. Craggs allegations, in saying that the Ancients, especially the Greek Church, rejected the baptism of infants for many hundred years. For there is no evidence produced for infant Baptism in the Greek Church till Nazianzens time, who flourished saith Dr. Hammond about the year of Christ 370. and died in the year 389. which is above 300. years, and hee dissuades it except in case of apparent danger of imminent death, and saith some are kept from Baptism by reason of infancy, and as Mr. M. p. 24. of his Defence saith, all times were fit for Baptism, seeing no time was free from death, intimates Baptism not fit for some time, except in that case, which may be gathered to have been the onely reason of infant Baptism, from what is said before of the story of his own baptism; and therefore I doubt not to conclude, that infant Baptism was not so ancient in the Greek Church as is by Mr. M. and others pretended, and as now it is taught by him and others, is a late innovation.

SECT. LXXXXI.

The teſtimonies of Tertullian for Infant Baptiſm, and Dr. Hammonds interpretation of chap. 39. de Anima, are examined with 1 Cor. 7. 14.

I Proceed to review the proofs from the Latin Fathers for infant Baptiſm. "Mr. Cr. brings up Tertullian in the front, whom he reckons at "the end of the ſecond Century, others at the beginning of the third, a- "bout 70. or leſs years after John the Apoſtle, in which ſhort tract of "time, the Apoſtolical practiſe of infant Baptiſm could neither bee "clouded, nor forgotten. Neither would he have commended his pri- "vate opinion as more profitable, that the Baptiſm of ſome infants for "ſome reſpects ſhould be deferred, but have called it down, as an in- "novation, if the practiſe of it had not been as tranſparent to every "mans apprehenſion as if it had been writ with the Sun beams. That "infant Baptiſm was in practiſe in Tertullians days, it appears by this "queſtion lib. de bapt. c. 18. Quid feſtinat innocens ætas ad remiſſionem "peccatorum? Why does innocent age (meaning children in their in- "fancy) make haſt for remiſſion of ſins? meaning Baptiſm; which is "a clear caſe, whatſoever Semi-Socinian Grotius ſay to the contrary. "That Tertullian was for infant Baptiſm himſelf appears, that in his "Book de Animâ cap. 39. he preſſes it, when the child is in danger of "death, and gives his reaſon lib. de bapt. cap. 12. Præſcribitur nemini "ſine Baptiſmo competere ſalutem, it is preſcribed that ſalvation is to "none without Baptiſm.

Anſw. 1. That Tertullian might not be miſtaken, or that the practiſe of infant Baptiſm could not be clouded or forgotten, is ſaid by Mr. Cragge inconſiderately; ſith afore Tertullians time the great differences about keeping Eaſter between Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus, where it's ſaid, John lived much and died; and Victor of Rome, who pretended tradition from Peter, the miſtake of Irenæus about Chriſts age, with ſundry others. 2. That Tertullian would have called it down as an innovation, if the practiſe of it had not been as tranſparent to every mans apprehenſion as if it had been writ with the Sun beams, is a confident ſpeech, but of no credit with thoſe who know Tertullian hath not called down, the anointing the baptized, giving milk and honey, uſing the ſign of the croſs, &c. which yet are undoubted innovations. 3. It is granted that infant Baptiſm was uſed in his time, but it is withal true, that hee diſſwaded it or did call it down as an innovation, except in caſe of danger of death, and that by ſundry reaſons; which if hee had taken ken infant Baptiſm to bee from the Apoſtles, hee would not have done. 4. The allowing of it in that caſe aroſe (as Mr. Craggs quotations ſhew) from the errour of the neceſſity of it to ſalvation. But Dr. Hammond ſaith further.

" Tertullian a man of great learning, and a diligent obſerver and re" corder of the cuſtoms and practiſes of the moſt ancient Church, lib de
" animâ c. 39. affirms it from the Apoſtle, ex ſanctificato alterutro ſexu
" ſanctos procreari; that when either parent is ſanctified or believer,
" i. e. baptized, the children that are born from them are holy, and
" this, tam ex ſeminis prærogativâ, quàm ex inſtitutionis diſciplinâ, both
" by prærogative of their ſeed, and by the diſcipline of the inſtitution,
" i. e. (as hath been ſhewed) by Baptiſm; adding from the ſame Apo-
" ſtle that delivered thoſe words 1 Cor. 7. 14. that his meaning was that " the children of Believers ſhould be underſtood to be deſignati ſanctita-
" tis ac per hoc ſalutis, and evidencing what he means thereby, by the " following words, of Chriſts definition Joh 3. unleſs a man be born
" of water and of the ſpirit, he ſhall not enter into the Kingdom of God,
" i. e. non erit ſanctus, ſhall not be holy; where Baptiſm is manifeſtly
" the thing by which theſe children are ſaid to attain that ſanctity. And more hee adds in the beginning of the next Chapter to the ſame purpoſe.
" And ſo he is a competent witneſs for the beginning of that third age.
And a little before, " In the middle of the firſt Century St. Paul deliver-
" red theſe words; Now are your children holy, i. e. your children
" new born (as appears by the context and Tertullian) are ſanctified as " that ſignifies baptized, in the ſtile of the New Teſtament and the An" cient Church.

" And ch. 3. ſect. 1. St. Paul 1 Cor. 7. 14. ſpeaking of the Believers " children, he ſaith, νῦν γὲ ἁγία ἐστι, but now are they holy, i. e. it is " the preſent practiſe of the Church (that Apoſtolical Church in St.
" Pauls time) to admit to Baptiſm the infant children of parents, of " whom one is Chriſtian, though not of others. That this is the mean" ing of [holy] is there made evident, as by other arguments, ſo by
" this, that the ancient Fathers who knew the ſacred Dialect call Bap-
" tiſm ſanctification, Eum qui natus eſt baptizandum & ſanctificandum, " in Cyprian, and ἀναισθήτως ἁγιασθῆναι, to bee ſanctified when they " have no feeling of it, and ἐν βρέφει ἁγιασθήτω, let him be ſanctifi-
" ed from the infancy, i. e. baptized then in Gregory Nazianzen. To " which teſtimonies, and the reſt which is there produced of the agree" ment of the Jewiſh ſtile (קדושין ſanctifications for baptiſms, to which " agrees Macarius ſaying of the Jewiſh Baptiſm, σάρκα ἁγίαν (ὅτι it ſan-" ctifies the fleſh, hom. 47. p. 509.) becauſe the main difficulty of the " interpretation conſiſts herein, I ſhall now add more, one very ancient " before any of theſe (within leſs then an 100. years after the death of " St. John) Tertullian de animâ c. 39. where ſpeaking of infants and
" ſaying, ex ſanctificato alterutro ſexu ſanctos procreari; that when ei" ther the father or mother is ſanctified (i. e. received as a believer by " Baptiſm in the Church, the children are holy; &c (clear evidences " of the notion of the word) this he there proves by theſe very words of " this Apoſtle, cæterum, inquit, immundi naſcuntur, elſe (ſo cæterum
" in Tertullians ſtile is known to be put for alioqui, or the Greek ἐπεὶ
" ἄρα) were your children unclean; adding inſtead of theſe other words
" [but now are they holy] quaſi deſignatos tamen ſanctitatis & per hoc

"etiam salutis, intelligi volens fidelium filios, hereby willing that wee "should understand that the children of Believers are the designed or "the sealed of holiness (in the sense, I conceive wherein they that are "baptized, are by the ancients frequently said σφραγίζεσθαι, to be sea-"led) and thereby of salvation also: And all this, saith he, thus urged "by the Apostle, ut hujus spei pignora matrimoniis quæ retinenda censue-"rat, patrocinaretentur, that this hope might be a pledge to engage the "believing wife or husband not to part from the unbeliever. And hee "yet further adds (still to the confirming of this interpretation) Alio-"qui meminerat Dominicæ definitionis, nisi qui nascatur ex aqua & spi-"ritu, non introibit in regnum Dei, i. e. non erit sanctus. Otherwise (or "if this argument of the Apostle had not been sufficient) he would have "mentioned the definition of Christ, that unless one be born of water "and the spirit (i. e. baptized) he shall not enter into the Kingdome of "God, i. e. shall not be holy; shewing still of what holiness he under-"stands the Apostles speech, that which the child of the believer is made "partaker of by Baptism; concluding, Ita omnis anima usque eo in A-"dam censetur donec in Christo recensetur, tamdiu immunda, quamdiu "recensetur. Every soul is so long inrolled in Adam, till it bee anew "in Christ, and is so long unclean till it be thus anew inrolled; which "as it supposeth every child of Adam to bee impure, till it bee thus by "Baptism made a child of Gods, a member of Christ, so it gives a full "account of that uncleanness, and that holiness of which the Apostle "speaks; the former the state of a child of Adam unbaptized, the later "of him that by Baptism is initiated into Christ. And p. 81. bee saith, "he found this passage of Tertullian ch. 39. de animâ perfectly to accord "to his interpretation of 1 Cor. 7. 14. For which reason (though I at first intended onely here to examine the passage of Tertullian c. 39. de animâ) I conceive needfull to examine what Dr. Hammond hath said in his Defence against me, ch. 3, 4. about both places, and I doubt not but that it will be made appear by me, that he hath not avoided by his Defence the exceptions I brought against his interpretation of 1 Cor. 7. 14. nor interpreted the Apostle right, nor Tertullian, nor that they do, as he speaks, perfectly accord, to which I now addresse my self.

1. He omits the making good of his paraphrase of the Apostles words 1 Cor. 7. 12, 13, 14. except onely those words [else were your children unclean, but now they are holy] supposing it unnecessary if the interpretation of the last words appear to be this [but now are infant children partakers of the priviledge of Baptism] which I acknowledge were true, if he could make good this interpretation without making good the paraphrase of the rest. But there being a manifest coherence of all together, and a plain argumentative consequence implied v. 14. of the later part from the former, if the interpretation of the later part will not consist with the words going before, nor a good coherence and consequence in his sense making good the rest of his paraphrase, it is necessary he should make good, at least that which if it be not made good against my exceptions, the interpretation of the last clause will not stand. Now I conceive there are in my exceptions, most if not all those things, which

I urged againſt his paraphraſe and interpreration, which do overthrow it, ſith there would be either want of ſenſe, coherence, or conſequence in the Apoſtles ſpeech, if Dr. Hammonds expoſition were received, which Dr. Hammond hath not acquitted it from in his Defence.

One main thing on which the hinge of his paraphraſe and interpretation turnes, is, that the ſanctification and holineſs there is derived from the faith of the one party, and not on the conjugal relation; and therefore the term [believer] which is not in the text) is put by him in his paraphraſe, and the terms [husband and wife] omitted, which the Apoſtle puts down with emphaſis. I preſume the Reader that reads my exceptions from p. 316. to 325. will judge the Doctors excuſe not ſufficient, he gives for not anſwering them more fully, when he aſſures me it were eaſie fully to anſwer them p. 65. but does not, eſpecially in this point on which the controverſie between us depends, and therefore not ἀπάρεγον as the Dr. terms it. I think the Dr. hath made a more immoderate excurſion in his heaping up teſtimonies out of the Fathers, in his ſtanding ſo much on the denial of an enallage, and the force of the preposition ἐν. But I reſolve to follow him, and hope to overtake him in long running, though his Pen and Preſs be quicker in diſpatch then mine.

The firſt thing the Dr. attempts is, to prove out of the Fathers, that the term [holy 1 Cor. 7. 14.] is as much as [partakers of Baptiſm.] Firſt ſaith he, the ancient Fathers who knew the ſacred Dialect, call Baptiſm ſanctification, and Cyprian and Nazianzen are cited.

To which I anſwer, 1. The word of the Apoſtle is [ἅγια] the adjective [holy] which notes a ſtate of diſcrimination from the unclean, not [ἡγιασμένα ſanctified] a participle connoting the action of the ſanctifier, as well as the ſtate of the ſanctified, and therefore may import Baptiſm, and not the other; now the two Fathers the Dr. cites with Gregory Nyſſen after, uſe not the term [holy] but ſanctified, and therefore were it granted that they uſed [ſanctified] for baptized, yet this proves not they or the Apoſtle to have uſed [holy] for baptized.

2. I think the Fathers he cites, did not in thoſe paſſages he cites call Baptiſme ſanctification, though they took the perſon baptized to be ſanctified by it. My reaſons are from their words. For when Cyprian ſaith [him who is born to be baptized and ſanctified] he ſeems to mee to diſtinguiſh, not to confound baptiſm and ſanctification; and when Nazianzen in the place quoted uſeth this phraſe, ἁγιάσῃ καὶ ψυχὴ καὶ σῶμα, I think it is ineptly rendered by the Dr. p. 102. by this means they may be baptized ſouls and bodies: ſure the Baptiſm of water doth not touch the ſoul: and therefore Nazianzen is to be ſo interpreted as though he included baptizing in the phraſe of ſanctifying as the means of it, yet he doth not confound them, or call Baptiſm ſanctification. The like I imagin might be ſaid of Gregory Nyſſen, if I had his book, whoſe words it's likely if the Dr. had ſet down more fully, as hee doth in others, the impertinency of his allegation would have appeared. As for the Jewiſh ſtile of ſanctifications for Baptiſms, it will be to be conſidered after. Macarius his ſaying, that the Jewiſh Baptiſm ſanctifies the fleſh, is not a calling calling Baptiſm ſanctification. But the Dr. ſtands moſt on Tertullian, in which he takes 1. that [holy] is uſed as he conceives Paul to uſe it 1 Cor. 7. 14. for [partakers of Baptiſm] ſo he expounds, deſignatos ſanctitatis, the deſigned or ſealed of holineſs, in the ſenſe he conceives, wherein they that are baptiſed are by the ancients frequently ſaid to be ſealed, and p. 92. deſignati ſanctitatis, ſure muſt ſignifie that they are initiated into Chriſt by the Chriſtian right, or ſign, or ceremony of Baptiſm, as thoſe which had the Heatheniſh ceremonies uſed upon them, were candidati dæmoniorum, candidates of the Devil in the former, thus early admitted and initiated into their ſacra. But neither do I conceive the Apoſtle to have uſed [holy] for holineſs by baptiſm, nor that Tertullian doth mean that which the Dr. would have him, nor do the Apoſtle and Tertullian perfectly accord. Twice in that Chapter doth Tertullian uſe the term [holy] once [holineſs] once [ſanctified.] The firſt paſſage is thus. Hinc enim & Apoſtolus ex ſanctificato alterutro ſexu ſanctos procreari ait, tàm ex ſeminis prærogativa, quàm ex inſtitutionis diſciplina. From hence the Apoſtle alſo ſaith, holy ones to be procreated from either ſex, ſanctified as well by prerogative of ſeed, as by diſcipline of inſtitution. By either father or mother ſanctified the Dr. conceives meant, when either the father or mother is received as a believer by baptiſm into the Church, by [holy] baptized, for he makes the notion of [holy] in thoſe words of Tertullian to be the ſame with deſignatos ſanctitatis, which he interprets by ſealed, that is baptiſed in the ancients language. Pag. 61. [holy] appears to bee this [but now are your infant children partakers of the priviledge of Baptiſm.] But that Tertullian mean by [ſanctified, baptiſed] is not proved by the Dr. and his paraphraſe makes it in 1 Cor. 7. 14. to import being converted to the faith; and ſo Tertullian ad uxorem l. 2. explains what he means by [ſanctified] gained by the wife to the faith. I deny not that hee made Baptiſm a means of that ſanctification, but he doth not call (as the Dr. ſaith) baptiſm ſanctification, but the whole fact of Gods grace, as hee ſaith, Dei gratia illud ſanctificat quod invenit, by teaching and inlightning the perſon ſanctified. Yet herein Tertullian and the Dr. accord not with the Apoſtle, for the Apoſtle ſuppoſeth 1 Cor. 7. 14. the perſon ſaid to be ſanctified ſtill an unbeliever, otherwiſe his reaſon had been nothing to confirm the reſolution v. 12, 13. which was the believing yoke fellow might live ſtill with the unbeliever, for the unbelieving husband, that is the husband continuing an unbeliever is ſanctified; but this cannot bee meant either of converſion to the faith or baptiſm, for then he ſhould be a believer when hee is ſaid to bee ſanctified, ſo that it is plain neither Tertullians expreſſion concurs with the Doctors notion, nor do the Dr. and Tertullian agree with Paul. The other words ſanctos procreari, ſith he reſtrains to infants, the ſanctity pag. 72. hath this ſenſe; the infants are procreated holy, that is baptized, for thus he ſpeaks; the Apoſtle in that place makes the ſanctification or baptiſm of the children a benefit of the believing parents cohabiting with the unbeliever. But herein neither doth Tertullian or the Dr. accord with Paul, for hee makes not the holineſs of the children to be the benefit of the parents faith, but of their conjugal relation, nor doth the Dr. accord with Tertullian. For the

holineſs there meant by Tertullian, is not meant onely of the time of infancy. 1. Becauſe he ſaith it to be as well, ex inſtitutionis diſciplinâ, as ex ſeminis prærogativâ. Where ex ſeminis prerogativa the Dr. agrees p. 92. to be in that he is not ſo polluted by their idolatrous ceremonies, and ſo is in ſome degree holy, not federal holineſs, as Mr. M. pag 35. would, the whole ſcope ſhewing that to be the meaning, that they are not ſo polluted as heathens children. Now ex inſtitutionis diſciplina, the Dr. would have have p. 91. meant the doctrine of Baptiſm inſtituted by Chriſt in his Church; for by this it is that baptiſm was allowed to thoſe that were ex alterutro ſexu ſanctificato procreati, born of parents of which either of them was Chriſtian. Thus in his book de bapt. c. 12. he uſes a like phraſe, tingi diſciplina religionis, to be ſprinkled with the diſcipline of religion, meaning evidently being baptiſed. Where the Dr. by the way doth ill render tingi by ſprinkled, no Grammarian doth ſo render it, nor doth Tertullian to mean it, as in the place may be obſerved. But to the thing. This cannot be the meaning of Tertullian in that place. 1. The words are theſe, ut opinor autem aliud eſt aſpergi vel intercipi violentiâ maris aliud tingi diſciplinâ religionis. As I think it is one thing to be ſprinkled or intercepted with the violence of the ſea, as Peter was when againſt his will he was in the ſea, another thing to be baptiſed with the diſcipline of religion, that is, out of a willing yeilding to baptiſm by the learning of religion, that is, knowledge and profeſſion of faith which religion prompts to, meaning plainly not the doctrine or command of Chriſt, but the learning or diſcipline of his own heart, in the ſenſe that Tertullian uſeth after, diſciplina verecundiæ & modeſtiæ. And that ſenſe which I give the Scope leads to, which is to ſhew neither the Apoſtles being daſhed with the waves when the ſhip was almoſt covered, nor Peters being almoſt drowned, was Chriſtian baptiſm, becauſe it was not out of a voluntary diſpoſition from that diſcipline of religion which doth diſpoſe to it, but the violence of the ſea. 2. Tertullian could not mean as the Dr. would, ſith there is no ſuch inſtitution of Chriſt either expreſſed by the Evangeliſts, or by Tertullian. The Evangeliſts expreſs no title to baptiſm, but by the perſons own faith or diſcipleſhip who is to be baptiſed, as is proved Review part. 2 ſect. 5.

And Tertullian in his Book of Baptiſm a little after the words cited by the Dr. c. 12. expreſſeth the inſtitution of Baptiſm thus; Lex enim tingendi impoſita eſt & forma præſcripta, ite (inquit) docete nationes, tingentes eas in nomen patris & filii & ſpiritus ſancti. Huic legi collata definitio illa: niſi quis renatus fuerit ex aquâ & ſpiritu non intrabit in regnum cœlorum: obſtrinxit fidem ad baptiſmi neceſſitatem. Itaque omnes exinde credentes tingebantur. And after, Nam & prius eſt prædicare, poſterius tingere, and in the 18th. chapter gives his reaſons againſt the haſtening the baptiſm of infants, as being not neceſſary, which if he had acknowledged ſuch an inſtitution, as the Dr. imagins, he could not have ſaid, and directs according to the inſtitution, Let them come when they grow up, when they learn, when they are taught whereſoever they come, let them be made Chriſtians when they can know Chriſt; and after preſcribes, How they ſhould go to baptiſm, with prayer, faſting, kneeling, confeſſing of ſins;

and in his Book of Repentance, cals Baptiſm the ſealing of repentance, no where is any ſuch inſtitution of infants Baptiſm from the faith of one parent; and therefore I conclude, ex inſtitutionis diſciplina, is not meant as Dr. Hammond conceives.

On the other ſide I conceive that he means by [ſanctos procreari] real holineſs future, and by ex inſtitutionis diſciplina, learning of the doctrine or inſtitution of Chriſt. That the holineſs is real ſaving holineſs, is gathered firſt from the joyning together, deſignati ſanctitatis ac per hoc etiam ſalutis, which plainly ſhews, that the holineſs meant is that by which is ſalvation. 2. This is confirmed, in that it is made the effect of being born by water and the ſpirit. 3. Shall enter into the Kingdome of heaven, is expounded by ſanctus, holy. 4. It is oppoſed to that uncleanneſs which they had in Adam, and it is expreſſed to bee in Chriſt, which muſt needs bee a real ſaving holineſs. 5. If it bee that which is by baptiſm, then it is not baptiſm it ſelf, as the Dr. expounds it, but a conſequent on it, which is no other then ſaving holineſs. 6. This is proved from the expreſſion of deſignatos ſanctitatis ac per hoc ſalutis; this is confeſſed by the Dr. to expreſs the ſame with procreari ſanctos ex inſtitutionis diſciplina, but deſignatos ſanctitatis hath the ſenſe of deſigned to be holy, that is, a believer by education, and ſo ſaved. I will ſet down the words of a Letter of my learned and much honoured friend and quondam ſcholler Dr. Wilkins, Warden of Wadham Colledge in Oxford, who at my requeſt imployed a friend to enquire into the ſenſe of this paſſage of Tertullian, and thus wrote to me: As for that phraſe, Deſignatos ſanctitatis & ſalutis, though this reading be approved by Pamelius, and de la Cerda in their editions, yet 'tis corrected by Johannes a Wouwer, by that famous Manuſcript Copy of Fulvius Urſinus, now in the Vatican, which hath it Deſignatos ſanctitati. which reading is now generally received as the moſt genuine, as may appear by Rigaltius and Georgius Ambianus in his laſt and beſt edition of Tertullian at Paris 1648. And the moſt proper ſenſe of this phraſe muſt be ſuch as are deſigned by their parents to a religious education, which is likewiſe ſignified by that other expreſſion ex inſtitutionis diſciplina. So that deſignatos ſanctitati ac per hoc etiam ſaluti, plainly expreſſeth, that whereas the Pagan idolaters did dedicate and conſecrate their children to Devils, and thereby made them unclean, the children of the believer were brought into the world holy, both in that they were free from ſuch pollution, and alſo by prayer, vow, or reſolution deſigned or intended to be made holy by the diſciplin of Chriſtian inſtitution, and ſo to be ſaved, or to enter into the Kingdome of heaven, by faith in Chriſt. 7. This ſenſe is confirmed by the words [hujus ſpei pignora, the pledges of this hope] which ſhew that the holineſs and ſalvation meant in the words before, was a thing not then exiſtent at the childrens birth, but intended and hoped for at age, upon endeavours uſed by the believing parent. 8. This interpretation of deſignatos ſanctitatis, or ſanctitati, is confirmed by the expreſſions of Hierome, Epiſt. 153. to Paulinus, where he ſaith, Of thy ſecond Problem Tertullian hath diſcourſed in his books of Monogamy, affirming the children of believers to be called holy, becauſe they were as it were candidati fidei, candidates of faith, and not polluted with any of the filth of Idolatry. Which phrase expresseth the same with designatos sanctitati, and alludes to those who in Rome stood for Offices in white, and notes that the infants were as it were in expectation of being believers, and baptized, quod veluti ambiunt & expectant baptismum, as Erasmus in his note on Hierom, Epist. 153. to Paulinus, or designed, that is intended to be holy by the parents, that is to be bred up to profess the faith, and so to be baptized.

To this saith Dr. Hammond. "1. This of Tertullian is not the place "that S. Hierom refers to, but some other in his Books de Monogamia, "that one book which we now have under that title affording us no such "discourse on that subject as S. Hierom mentions.

Answ. 1. It is more probable that this is the place Hierom meant, the expressions so agreeing and the matter, and that Hierom writing in hast mistook the the Title of the Book, and the term candidatos used in the Chapter before for designatos. 2. However, whether it were so or otherwise, the words cited by Hierom being to the same purpose will fitly explain the other.

"2dly. (saith Dr. Hammond) All that S. Hierom cites out of that "(not this) place of Tertullian is very reconcilable with what Tertullian "saith in this place, and with his opinion that the infants of Christians "were baptized; for, saith he, they were quasi candidati fidei, as it were "candidates of faith. Candidates were they that stood for any Office, "qui candidâ sumpti veste consulatum, praturam, &c. postulabant, who "putting on white garments sued for any Office; and so candidates of "faith, they that sue for this condition in the Church of God, that of "πιστοὶ believers, to which by baptism they are assumed, and accordingly were to be brought to the font, like such candidates, in white "garments as they that were to be sanctified; i. e. baptized, among "the Jews Exod. 16. 10. were also to wash their cloathes or put on clean "garments.

Answ. 'Tis true both places of Tertullian are very reconcilable, but not Dr. Hammonds interpretation of designatos sanctitatis or sanctitati with candidatos fidei. For Dr. Hammonds designatos is as much baptized, but candidatos notes onely a future thing in expectation, and candidatos fidei answering to designatos sanctitatis or sanctitati shews the holiness to be faith, and that tending to salvation, not the bare title of a believer by baptism, but such a faith as saves effectually ac per hoc etiam salutis, which puts it out of doubt, that a real holiness though in intention and expectation onely, and a real saving faith though future, is meant by Tertullian in both expressions, which is not avoided by the Doctors answer.

"Again (saith the Dr.) when he saith of them that they were holy "as the vessels of the Temple were holy, though they had no sense, this is "a clear laying of a ground, whereby children may be deemed capable "of this relative holiness, which is to be had by baptism, though as yet "they are not capable (for want of understanding) of inherent holi-"ness.

Answ.

Answ. 'Tis true Hierom expresseth another way of holiness which infants might have without understanding, but that this should be by baptism he doth not intimate. But if he did, yet he doth not make it the meaning of Tertullians candidatos fidei, and therefore serves not his turn to prove that by holiness Tertullian meant baptism. Yea, this very thing is against it, sith it is added as another way of sanctity then that he first mentioned, as the words simulq; considera do seem to me to intimate; and therefore candidatos fidei and designatos sanctitatis or sanctitati is not partakers of Baptism in Tertullian, as the Dr. would have it.

"Lastly (saith the Dr.) when he mentions it as an idiom of Scrip-"ture to call them holy, who are clensed, purified, expiated, speaking "of those legal lustrations or purifications, this gives an account of St. "Pauls using the word in the Christian Church for the Christian lustra-"tion, purification, expiation, i. e. for baptism.

Answ. 1. It gives but a lame account till it be proved St. Paul useth holy for baptized. 2. Though Hierom do say the Scripture names holy for clean, purified, and expiated; yet this doth not prove he conceived the Scripture puts holy for Christian baptism.

Yet again saith the Dr. "And by the way it appears by St. Hierom, "that he useth promiscuously sancti and sanctificati, and so that gives us "authority to interpret [ἁγιάζεται] in the end of the verse, in the same "sense in which [ἡγίασται] is used in the beginning for those that are "brought and received to Baptism. All which are far enough from "serving any of Mr. T. his interests, and might have inclined him to "have omitted that testimony of St. Hieroms, if he had more maturely "considered of it.

Answ. How this testimony serves my turn upon more mature consideration of it, is shewed. It is true sancti and sanctificati are used of the same persons, yet they are not the same; as calidum and calefactum may be said of the same wood, yet are not the same, sith fire may be said to be hot, but not heated; and God may be said to be holy, but not sanctified. But the Dr. forgets himself when he would have sanctified and holy, 1 Cor. 7. 14. to be interpreted in the same sense. For then when it is said the unbeliever hath been sanctified, that is, brought to the faith by the wives counsel and example, it should be said of the infant children that they are in the same sense holy, that is, converted to the faith.

Yet further saith the Dr. "Nay 3. I must add, that Mr. T. his ren-"dring of candidati and designati sanctitatis and candidati fidei by being "in designation of being believers and baptized, intended to be holy "by the parents, to be bred up to the faith and so baptized, is a most "groundless inconvenient interpretation. For if by holiness and faith "be meant inherent holiness and faith, then Baptism it self is the cere-"mony of consecrating and designing them to this, and so precedent to "that holiness (nor subsequent to it as Mr. T. sets it) and accordingly "in the Church writings the word [fideles] believers, is never bestowed "on any, though of mature age and knowledge, till after they be bapti-"zed, [competentes] and [illuminati] illuminate and believers being all one, "promiscuously used for those that have received baptism, in opposition "to catechumeni those that have not yet attained it: But if holiness and "faith be the relative holiness then infants being as capable of that as "vessels in the Temple, they might be presently designed and conse-"crated to that, and not first bred up in the faith, before they were par-"takers of it.

Answ. That the interpretation I give is neither groundless nor inconvenient, is manifest by the phrase it self, designatos sanctitatis or sanctitati; the Doctors interpretation is altogether groundless and inconvenient; For he renders p. 59. designed by sealed, but he shews not that ever [designatos] signifies [sealed,] the term for that is obsignatos, Tertullian in his Book of Repentance saith, Lavacrum illud (meaning baptism) est obsignatio fidei, quæ fides a pœnitentiæ fide incipitur & commenditur: The term [designed] notes plainly the intention of the parent, and this is also plain from the next words [of this hope] which shews it is not baptism in infancy they were designed to, for that they need not hope for, they might presently have; but real holiness of saving faith, and therefore expressed by candidatos fidei, and that this holiness was such a real holiness, appears by the addition ac per hoc etiam salutis, there being no other holiness that could bring salvation, and the term candidatos imports a suing or seeking for it, as Erasmus expresseth it veluti ambiunt & expectant; and Dr. Hammond p. 92. himself expresseth candidatos dæmoniorum, candidates of the Devils, ambitious to be admitted thus early into his service. So that all these reasons shew, that designatos sanctitatis notes the intention of the parents with endeavours to produce faith, and so to bring them to Baptism. Which is the more evident if it be read [designatos sanctitati] for that case plainly intimates a tendency to it. As for designatos sanctitatis, which the Dr. that he may σκλεύειν ἑαυτῷ serve his own purpose (which he elsewhere causlesly imputes to me) turns [sealed of holiness] I crave leave to tell the Dr. that in my apprehension it makes Tertullian speak non-sense; and that it cannot be the meaning that it should note the consecrating by baptism, it appears in that it should have been then sanctitate, or per sanctitatem. Besides, they are said to be designatos salutis as well as sanctitatis and I hope the Dr. will not render it sealed of salvation as if it noted the ceremony of consecrating. Salvation in no Writer being put for for Baptism: And however, here it's a distinct thing from sanctity, which the Dr. makes Baptism. So that I think I may safely infer, that Tertullian means by [designatos sanctitatis or sanctitati rather] not Baptism, but the intention of the parents (for of their act he speaks in opposition to the Gentile parents designing their children to Devils; or as the terms are vowing, deputing to them, making them candidatos) to breed them up in the faith, and so to bring them to Baptism and Salvation, which his words in his Book de Baptismo, c. 18. shew he approved as best, except necessity through danger of death imminent and apparent urged the hastening of it in little ones; regularly he would have faith first, and baptism after, as the words in his Book of Baptism, and Repentance forecited shew. And whereas the Dr. saith, in the Church writings the word believers is never bestowed on any though of mature age and knowledge till after they be baptized;

tized, and so faith must be subsequent not antecedent to baptism as I set it, the Dr. may perceive his mistake by the words of Tertullian before quoted, Itaq; omnes credentes tingibantur, Lavatrum illud est obsignatio fidei; and this is agreeable to Christs speech, Mar.16.16. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, to which perhaps Tertullian alluded when he said designatos sanctitati which Grotius follows, Annot. ad 1 Cor.7.14. or condidatos fidei ac per hoc etiam saluti, or salutis. The relative holiness which vessels in the Temple were capable of, is far from Tertullians meaning: Certainly Tertullians phrase of designed to holiness is so far from proving infant baptism, that it proves the contrary, sith he is not said to be designatus or candidatus who hath an Office or thing in possession, but he who is chosen to it or seeks for it, and so hath it onely in intention or expectation. As designatus saluti is not actually saved, so neither designatus sanctitati actually baptized.

He adds. The children of believers, I willingly grant, are presumed to be by them intended to be bred up to the faith; but if that intention of theirs bring forth no present effect, if they do not bring them thus early and enter them into the Church by Baptism, why should that bare intention of the parents give them the stile of holy or sanctified, or how should these infant children, which may die before they come to those years, receive any present priviledge or benefit by that which is thus far removed from them?

Answ. The Drs. words answer this, p.92. when he saith, whosoever is born from either parent Christian, hath one priviledge by nature, by his very seed, that he is not so polluted as the Idolatrous heathens children by their Idolatrous ceremonies, and so is in some degree holy in that respect, which is a present effect, opposite to the present evil effect which the heathen Idolatrous devotions brought on their children.

He goes on. Now for the 2d. part of this suggestion, that what I say from Tertullian, that they were holy, i. e. baptized in seminis prærogativâ is a mistake, I must answer by viewing of the proofs of his assertion: First, saith he, the holiness was not onely by prerogative of birth, but ex institutionis disciplinâ. This is sure a strange proof, It is not so, because it is not onely so. 'Tis certain that Tertullian saith they are holy ex institutionis disciplinâ, and as certain that they are as much so by prerogative of their birth; the words are most clear, tam ex seminis prærogativâ quam ex institutionis disciplinâ, and that I never denied the second could not be mistaken in affirming the first.

Answ. The words of the Dr. in his 4th. quære gave occasion to think he conceived the children of believers to be termed holy by Tertullian, that is baptized either onely or chiefly by prerogative of birth as that which gave them title to baptism. But it seems he means that they had title to it, also by the discipline of institution. But p.92. he expounds the prerogative of birth onely by their freedome from Idolatrous pollution; Now sure that gave not title to baptism: An Idolaters child if born without those pollutions had not title to baptism, he must be born according to his own exposition of the Apostles and Tertullians words of one believer, & therfore he must needs be mistaken in affirming the first, and he must needs miss Tertullians meaning if by holy be meant baptized, and ſays they are baptized tàm ex ſeminis prærogativâ if that give no title to it. The Dr. expounds ex inſtitutionis diſciplinâ thus, by the Doctrine of Baptiſm inſtituted by Chriſt, by which Baptiſm is allowed to children born of either parent Chriſtian. I have ſhewed before how ſhort his proof is of this ſenſe. For preſent, Tertullians words, according to this expoſition have an inept tautology; For it is all one as to ſay, they are baptized as well by prerogative of birth as by prerogative of birth, the prerogative of birth by which they are baptized being all one with their priviledge of being born of a believer, which is according to the Dr. the diſcipline of inſtitution. If Tertullian had meant as the Dr. would have it, he had not uſed tàm and quàm, but ſaid, holy by prerogative of birth according to the diſcipline of inſtitution; whence it may appear, that the diſcipline of inſtitution and holineſs is another thing then the Dr. interprets it, nor by his interpretation of the place will the place be clear. For not two priviledges (as he Dr. makes it) but one priviledge, to wit, holineſs, which the Dr. makes to be baptiſm, is aſcribed to them by a double means, freedome from heatheniſh pollutions, and the doctrine of Chriſt about infants Baptiſm: Whereas freedome from ſuch pollutions gives no title to Baptiſm; and if prerogative of birth be meant of federal holineſs (of which is not a word there) and the diſcipline of inſtitution be the doctrine allowing baptiſm to the child born of a believer, it is either an inept tautology, both being the ſame, or incongruous ſpeech, which ſhould be thus mended, by prerogative of birth according to the doctrine of baptiſm by Chriſt in his Church, imagined by the Dr. but not extant in Scripture, nor Tertullian.

Nor do Tertullians words following, de Anima, c. 40. Every ſoul is ſo long enrolled in Adam till it be inrolled in Chriſt, and is ſo long unclean till it be thus anew enrolled, prove that by [holy] Tertullian meant baptized. For in the words before (to which [ita ſo] refer) he makes holy to be the ſame with entring into the Kingdome of Heaven, and the enrolling in Chriſt he makes the ſame with being born of water and the ſpirit.

Of the words aſcribed to Origen and Athanaſius, enough hath been ſaid already. Neither Cyprians nor Chryſoſtomes words prove, that [holy] is as much as [partaker of baptiſm] in the Ancients language, much leſs in the Apoſtles 1 Cor. 7. 14. to the further conſideration of which I proceed after Dr. Hammond.

I excepted againſt Dr. Hammonds paraphraſe of 1 Cor. 7. 14. that the term [young children of Chriſtians] is more then is in the text, which hath onely [your children] which is not reſtrained to infancy. But the Dr. proves it is, 1. By the authority of Tertullian, who ſaith of infant children, that they are procreated holy; and Nazianzen, who uſing this phraſe ἁγιασθῆναι ἐκ βρέφους, in all probability refers to this place of the Apoſtle, and ſo renders τέκνα by βρέφη, their children, by their infant children.

Anſw. 1. Tertullian doth not ſay that the infant children are holy in infancy onely. 2. Nor is there any thing ſaid to make it in any ſort probable, that Nazianzen referred to that place of the Apoſtle, in which is neither neither ἁγιασθῆναι nor βρέφος, nor that hee ſhould render τέκνον by βρέφος, when he uſeth not the ſame caſe nor number the Apoſtle doth, but onely uſeth a deſcription of young age, which is not to my remembrance expreſſed by the other word τέκνον any where.

2. The other reaſons are farther from the thing. For neither doth it appear to be the general doctrine of the Fathers, that the parents faith profits onely their infant children, ſome of them do reaſon from the faith of the woman of Canaan, the faith of the ruler of the Synagogue, that faith of parents profits children who were not infants. The other reaſon runs upon this miſtake, which ſhould be proved to be the Apoſtles meaning (but is denied by me) that he makes 1 Cor. 7. 14. ſanctification or baptiſm of the children, a benefit of the believing parents cohabiting with the unbeliever.

I ſaid [holy] for [admitted to baptiſm] is a ſenſe of the word no where elſe found. But this the Dr. hopes he hath cleared, both from the uſage of the word among the firſt Chriſtian writers, which is anſwered, and the Jewiſh, of which in that which follows, and ſaith.

"I might further do it even by this Apoſtles dialect, who in his in"ſcriptions of moſt of his Epiſtles to the Churches, calls all thoſe to "whom he writes, i. e. the baptized Chriſtians of thoſe Churches holy,
"Rom. 1. 7. and ſanctified and holy, 1 Cor. 1. 2. 2 Cor. 1. 1. Eph. 1. 1.
"Phil. 1. 1. Col. 1. 1. among whom no doubt there were many, who "were no otherwiſe holy or ſanctified, then as all baptized Chriſtians
"are capable of that ſtile.

Anſw. True: But doth hee term any infant ſo in thoſe places? or give them thoſe titles barely from Baptiſm? doth he not expreſly term them Saints by their calling not by their Baptiſm? The Drs. allegations have not yet altered my minde, but I think as I did his interpretation new, ſtrange, and abſurd.

I alleged Aug. l. 2. de pecc. mer. & remiſſ. c. 26. (and the like is ſaid l. 3. c. 12.) "Saying the ſanctification of what ſort ſoever it be, which "the Apoſtle ſaid to be in the children of believers, yet it belongs not "to that queſtion of Baptiſm, and the beginning or remiſſion of ſins.

To this the Dr. anſwers, "Tis true he ſaith it belongs not to that "queſtion, whether the ſanctifying of the catechumeni after a ſort by the "ſign of Chriſt, and prayer of impoſition of hands without Baptiſm, pro"fits him not to the entring the Kingdome of Heaven. And the mean"ing is ſuch ſanctification, except it be that of baptiſm, cannot avail to
"remiſſion of ſins.

Anſw. The Dr. miſtakes in making the queſtion to be of the Catechumeni, mentioned c. 26. it is of the children of believers, who being termed holy, 1 Cor. 7. 14. ſhould ſeem not to need Baptiſm, which Auguſtin anſwers, 1. By mentioning divers ſorts of ſanctification, but not determining which is there meant. 2. By reſolving that what ever the ſanctification be which the Apoſtle ſaid to be in the children of believers (not as the Dr. makes it of the Catechumeni) it belongs not to that queſtion of Baptiſm (not as the Dr. doth palpably pervert the words p. 64. whatſoever ſanctification it can be imagined to be that the Apoſtle ſpeaks of, except it be that of Baptiſm, it cannot avail to the remiſſion of ſins, &c.) to wit mentioned ch. 25. whether it exclude neceſſity of Baptiſm, original ſin and the remiſſion of it in the children of believers termed holy. Which is plainly againſt the Dr. who will have it meant onely of baptiſm of infants of believers, by vertue of the believing parents faith. As for my other objections againſt his paraphraſe not anſwered, I am ſo far from aſſurance that the Dr. can eaſily anſwer them, that by this anſwer I judge he can anſwer none of them.

that

SECT. LXXXXII.

Dr. Hammond's imagined evidence from [hath been ſanctified] for his ſenſe of the fore part of 1 Cor. 7. 14. is nullified, and my opinion of enallage of tenſe vindicated.

CH. 3. Sect. 2 the Dr. ſaith thus. Firſt then to my firſt evidence taken from the word [ἡγίασται hath been ſanctified] referring to ſome paſt known examples and experiences, of this kinde (of a wives converting the husband, &c.) he hath a double anſwer. 1. That as my paraphraſe expreſſeth it, it ſhould ſignifie not onely that an unbelieving husband hath been ſanctified, but alſo that there is hope they will, and ſo it ſhould note not onely ſome example paſt, but alſo ſome to come, of which there can be a leſs reaſonable account given, then of putting it in the preſent tenſe in Engliſh. 2. That the enallage or change of tenſe is frequent ch. 11. 24. κλώμενον in the preſent tenſe for the future, and here ἀκάθαρτά ἐστι for ἦν or ἦν, and in the next v. δεδέλωται in the preter for the preſent, and ſo ἡγίασται here, not, hath been, but is ſanctified, or if in the preter tenſe, yet that to be underſtood of a paſt thing, yet continued, as κέκριται John 3. 18. notes an act ſtill continued in force. To theſe two I reply briefly, and firſt to the former (the ſame which hee had mentioned before, and excepted againſt as an exceſt in my paraphraſe, but both there and here without the leaſt cauſe;) For in my paraphraſe I look upon ἡγίασται as a verb of the preter tenſe, and as ſuch onely adapt the ſenſe to it, referring it not to future hopes, but to paſt experiments or examples; onely becauſe examples are rhetorical ſyllogiſmes, and what hath been frequently experimented may alſo reaſonably be hoped, I ſuppoſe that the Apoſtle ſo meant theſe examples, as grounds of hoping the like for the future, not making this of the future any part of the ſenſe of ἡγίασται in the preter, but explicating the τὸ λογικὸν, or rational importance (which is ſomewhat more then the τὸ ῥητὸν of the Apoſtles ſpeech) and ſuppoſing this concluſion to lye hid under this premiſe, as it is ordinary in all diſcourſe to ſet down the premiſes, diſtinctly leaving the concluſion by every ones reaſon to be drawn from thence, without ſetting it down explicitly.

Anſw. That the Dr. in his paraphraſe qu. 4. §. 31. of his letter, put ſo much as I have noted Review part. 2. ſect. 26. of which there is nothing in the text expreſſed, is not juſtified by this plea. For what ever addition a paraphraſt be allowed, yet ſure no paraphraſt is allowed to expreſs that which he conceives is deducible from the ſenſe of the words in thirteen lines, and the ſenſe it ſelf onely in three, and eſpecially when he layes that in his paraphraſe as the ground of his argument for his poſition, which hath not a word in the text to leade to that inference. Sure I had great cauſe to except againſt his paraphraſe, which was ſo monſtrous as to be defective in ſetting down what was the chief thing to be heeded in the Apoſtles ſpeech, to wit, the relation of husband and wife, and ſo extremely exuberant, as to expreſs that as done often, which is mentioned in the ſingular number onely, and aſcribe the ſanctifying to the converſation not at all expreſſed, and put in a long inference that hath no intimation in the text, and mention an act of the Church, of which there is no inkling there or near it, or any where elſe in Scripture, and ſo many wayes corrupting the ſenſe, as I ſhew ubi ſuprà, eſpecially in the main ſuppoſing a mention made of a husband converted by the wife, and yet the husband expreſſed by the Apoſtle as continuing an unbeliever, and a husbands being ſanctified by the wife which is ever aſcribed to Gods ſpirit, never to any Apoſtle, to make that which is uſed as a reaſon of lawfulneſs, as if it were a motive from an advantage, to make that as a Rhetorical motive, which is a Logical proof, to make that which was a rare contingent event, which might and it's likely did as often fail as a convincing argument to ſettle the conſcience in the lawfulneſs of cohabitation, with other faults, as being ſo audacious an attempt, as I think no approved writer can bee ſhewed to have made, nor any conſiderate Reader will allow of. Nor would it ever have come into my thoughts, that ſo learned a man as Dr Hammond is, ſhould have vented ſuch a conceit as this is in his Letter and Annotations, did I not finde him ſet to maintain what the Church of England, that is the Prelates, held or appointed, as others what the Scotiſh or New-Engliſh Churches approve of.

As for his excuſe of his dealing in his paraphraſe, it is too narrow a plaiſter for ſuch a ſore. For neither is any thing 1 Cor. 7. 14. ſet down as an example to move the will the judgement being before ſetled, nor any Rhetorical ſyllogiſm, uſed, but a Logical; as the termes γὰρ ἐπεὶ ἄρα, uſed Rom. 11. 6. 1 Cor. 15. 14, 18, 29, &c. ſhew, nor doth the Dr. prove, but ſuppoſe the Apoſtle ſo meant; nor doth he anſwer the allegations I bring to the contrary, Review par. 2. §. 26. And his words here do imply as if this were the concluſion, that it is probable and a ground of hope, that the unbelieving yoke fellow will be converted by the believer cohabiting, and this the premiſe, for it hath often ſo come to paſs, whereas there is not the leaſt intimation of that concluſion in the text, and it is manifeſt by the term [γὰρ for] that v. 14. is a proof of the determination or concluſion v. 12, 13 concerning the lawfulneſs of married perſons living together in diſparity of religion, not of Dr. Hammonds imagined as tacitely implied concluſion.

But hee ſaith. "Wherein that I was not miſtaken, I had all aſſu-
"rance from v. 16. where the argument is preſt, and the concluſion "inferred more explicitely. For what knoweſt thou O wife, whether

"thou ſhalt ſave thy husband" and the like mentioned in the para-
"phraſe from 1 Pet. 3. 1.

Anſw. Dr. Hammond had no aſſurance from v. 16. that the unbeliev-ing husband is oft converted by the wife; the thing being expreſſed ſo doubtfully as an uncertain contingent though poſſible, and ſo with ſome hope ſperable, [Hierom. com. in 1 Cor. 7. 14. In dubium quidem poſuit ſed ſemper ambiguam melius evenire credenda ſunt.] much leſs that there is a concluſion of the probability of the converting of the infidel yoke-fellow, v. 14. deducible from the example and experiment of what was done in time paſt, v. 16. being neither explication nor proof of what is ſaid v. 14. but a motive to make the thing determined as lawfull, v. 12, 13. more ſwaſible, or a motive to what is ſaid v. 15. that God hath called us in peace. In my apprehenſion if v. 14. were as the Dr. meanes, the unbelieving husband hath been ſanctified, that is converted by the wife often, and therefore it is probable, or there is a ground of hope, or it is to be preſumed, it will be ſo for the future, the Apoſtle had ſaid the ſame v. 14. which is ſaid v. 16. and ſo there would have been a meer tautology in the Apoſtles ſpeeches, which is not to bee conceived. As for 1 Pet. 3 1. though it ſhew ſuch an event poſſible, yet not frequent, nor is there in Peters words the leaſt hint that Pauls words 1 Cor. 7. 14. are to be underſtood as the Dr. would have them. But the Dr. hath another ſtring to his bow, which he thus urgeth.

"And herein I have the authority of St. Hierom; as for my ren"dring ἐν γυναικὶ by the woman (ſo I find it per mulierem in his 7. Epiſt.
"ad Lætam, and ſo Marianus Victorius in his ſcholia aſſures us, all the "copies ancient and printed read it) ſo alſo for this part of my para-
"phraſe. He produceth an example, becauſe (ſaith he on the place) it "hath often happened that the husband hath been gained by the wife,
"according to that of St. Peter, that if any man believe not the word,
"he ſhould without the word be gained by the converſation of the wife,
"that is, that when they ſhall ſee them changed to the better, all may "know that the law of God might have been taken in exchange for ſo
"inveterate a cuſtome. And ſo again Ep. 7. ad Lætam, ſpeaking of the "like example, we have well (ſaith he) and happily expected (i. e. not "miſt of our expectation) an holy and faithfull houſe ſanctifies an un-
"believer, adding his conceipt, that Jupiter himſelf if he had had ſuch a "kinred, might have been brought to the faith of Chriſt.

Anſw. 'Tis true that Hierom comment. in 1 Cor. 7. 14. reads per mu-lierem, but in Ep. 7. ad Lætam he reads in uxore, and Auguſt. tom 7. l. 2. de peccat. merit. & remiſ. c. 26. and that in Hierom in both places the terms fidelem and fideli are, but not in Auguſt. though he render the la-ter part thus, & ſanctificatur mulier infidelis in fratre. And I find in the ſcholies of Eraſmus of Roterdam, on Hieroms Epiſtle to Læta this the firſt note. For he is ſanctified] The place is with S. Paul in the former Epiſtle to the Corinthians cap. 7. In the antient copies we find written in the husband, not by the husband, and in the wife, not by the woman. For the Greek hath it, For the unbelieving husband is ſanctified in the wife, and the unbelieving wife in the husband. Moreover what the interpreter adds

[believer

[believer and believer] he hath done for explication. By which it may appear, that Erasmus saith otherwise then the Dr. saith Marianus Victorius doth, and for my part I imagine Erasmus is the more credible scholiast of the two. 'Tis true that Hierom com. in 1 Cor. 7. 14. hath the words the Dr. allegeth, but then he addeth, which the Dr. leaves out. Item ideo vir & uxor invicem sanctificantur: quia ex traditione Dei sanctæ sunt nuptiæ. That is, Likewise therefore the husband and wife are to each other or for each other, or in course sanctified, because by the tradition of God mariages are holy, which expresseth Hieromes second and better thoughts. By which it may appear that Hierom took of ἁγιάζεται as if it were in the present tense. And for the other place of Hierom it is true, Hierom hath the words the Dr. cites, if the word [Jovem] be not put for [proavum] or some such word as Erasmus thinks. But then it is plain from the words left out by the Dr. Jam candidatus est fidei quem filiorum & nepotum credens turba circumdat. That is, He is as one that would be baptized, who hath a company of believing children & grandchildren about him. That the sanctifying is not made the priviledge of the husband in respect of his wife, or of the children by the parent, but also the grandfather is conceived likely to be sanctified by the children and grandchildren, and all is ascribed to example and instruction, with this express speech, Fiunt non nascuntur Christiani; Christians are made, not born such. And though Hierome saith of Læta's daughter Paula, that she was prius Christo consecrata quàm genita, and she had conceived her, antè votis quam utero, yet the words cui imperatori, cui exercitui nutriatur, cui promissa sit, regis amplexibus parat, de spiritualibus nuptiis sciscitantem, do seem to me to imitate that young Paula was not then baptized, which if right it is manifest, that children of believers were not baptized ordinarily then in infancy. And me thinks the words of Hierom in his commentary on 1 Cor. 7.14. on the words, Else should your children be unclean, but now are they holy; If it were not so as I say your children would yet remain infidels: for it would often happen that the children would follow those parents, who had believed. upon which hope he would have it believed, that the other might bee saved as well by the example of the children as by the marriage; shew that Hierom understood not the holiness of the children, of their baptism in infancy, but of their embracing the faith, by following the example of the believing parent, and in like manner the unbelieving parent was sanctified according to him, as well by the example of the children as the marriage. So that however Dr. Hammonds paraphrase in the forepart seems to have some countenance from these passages of Hierome, yet the latter part is expounded clean besides the Drs. minde, and the passages yeeld us such hints of the not baptizing of infants of believers, as do overthrow his conceit; as if the infants of believers were then ordinarily baptized.

Dr. Hammond adds. As for his 2d. answer, I acknowledge such Enallages to be ordinary in the Hebrew, and sometimes, but more rarely, found in the Hebraizing Greeks or Hellenists, and consequently, that where the context will not bear the sense of the tense which is used, there may be place for this Grammatical figure, which yet is not to be made use of unnecessarily.

Accordingly if there were any convincing reason offered, that [ἡγίασται in the preter tense] could not be born, I should not then doubt to interpret it by this figure, either in the present or some other tense: But when (as here it is evident) there is no such necessity, then 1. I cannot think fit to do so, ('tis dangerous to forsake the literal sense, when it may be commodiously retained, and fly to either a Rhetorical or Grammatical figure;) and having no motive to do so, I am next to consider, what is the propereſt importance of that phraſe in that tenſe wherein it is uſed, and then I could not (I believe) have fallen upon any thing more natural, then that the preter form of ſpeech referred to the paſt experiences, &c. This is a full ſatisfaction to his anſwer.

Anſw. 1. The Drs. acknowledging that ſuch Enallages may be, and ſometimes are, ſhews that his interpretation is not neceſſary, and therefore his inference thereupon not certain, which is enough to make good my anſwer. 2. It is to me a convincing reaſon, that there is an Enallage of the preter tenſe for the preſent, not onely becauſe Camerarius and other learned men conceive ſo, and our Tranſlators ſo render it; but alſo becauſe by the making it to import an experience paſt onely, a ſenſe is brought in (as I have ſhewed in my Examen, par. 3. ſect. 8. in the firſt part of the Review, ſect. 19, &c. in the ſecond part of the Review, ſect. 26.) which is neither agreeing with the words, nor pertinent or accommodate to the matter of the Apoſtles ſpeech. 3. However the Dr. believe, yet it is ſhewed here, and Review par. 2. ſect. 26. that to refer the ſanctifying 1 Cor. 7. 14 to paſt experiences, is not natural. For the Apoſtles ſpeech being a reaſon, not of the commodiouſneſs of living together in diſparity of Religion, (for if it had been of it, they could have better reſolved themſelves then the Apoſtle, yea, they could have refuted the Apoſtle, and retorted his reaſon againſt him, we find it not ſo by experience,) but of the lawfulneſs, the reaſon muſt be conceived to import right, not event; and ſo the ſpeech is not of what hath been, which onely mentions experience, but of what is de jure, or is lawfull; and as Piſcator rightly Schol. in 1 Cor. 7. 14. Sanctificatus eſt] id eſt, uſus illius ut ſanctus, & conſcientiam uxoris non lædens conceſſus eſt. And in this manner it is uſual to expreſs ſuch ſentences in the preter tenſe, yet to be expounded by an Enallage, as in the ſame Chapter the next v. δεδούλωται is in the preter tenſe, yet rightly rendred [is not under bondage,] v. 34. μεμέρισται there is difference, v. 29. συνεσταλμένος is ſhort, 1 Cor. 8. 3. ἔγνωσται is known, 1 Cor. 4. 4. δεδικαίωμαι am juſtified, 1 Cor. 15. 1. ἑστήκατε ye do ſtand, v. 18. ἀπώλοντο are periſhed, 1 Cor. 16. 9. ἀνέωγε is opened, Tit. 1. 15 μεμίανται are defiled, γέγραπται uſually is written, Matth 13. 11. δέδοται is given.

Yet (ſaith the Dr.) I may in the 2*d. place* ex abundanti add that much more, that the utmoſt he can pretend to by the enallage (whether of the preter for the preſent, or of the preter underſtood of a paſt thing yet continued) is as commodious for my interpretation as the preter is: For if it be in the preſent, then the importance will be, that it is a matter of preſent daily experience; if in the paſt continued, then that it is matter both of paſt and preſent experience, that the unbeliever is thus wrought upon by the be- liever, and brought into the Church by Baptiſm, and this a juſt ground of hope, that ſo it may be again in any particular inſtance, and ſo a competent motive that the believing wife ſhould abide with the infidel husband, and not depart as long as he will live peaceably with her: And this ſure was S. Hieroms underſtanding in the words newly cited, the Apoſtle makes inſtance, produceth example that this hath (and doth) ordinarily come to paſs; And to that alſo agrees the 16th. verſe, For how knoweſt thou, &c.

Anſw. 1. If it be in the preſent tenſe, the importance will not be, that it is a matter of preſent daily experience, unleſs it be proved the term [ſanctified] notes an iterated event, which I conceive and think I have proved to import right or lawfulneſs, ſo as that the ſenſe is, the unbelieving husband is ſanctified to or in reſpect of his wife (as Beza, Piſcator, Grotius, &c. do conceive) that is, lawfully uſed, which is the onely ſenſe that fits the determination of the Apoſtle, which is not of the conveniency or commodiouſneſs or advantage in living together, but of the lawfulneſs, *v.*12,13. Nor if it be in the paſt continued, will it fit the Drs. ſenſe. For the Drs. ſenſe is as if ſanctification were the ſame with converſion, but that is an act tranſeunt, paſt, and not continued; and if it include baptiſm, as the Dr. would have it, the ſenſe ſhould be, The unbelieving husband hath been converted, and brought to baptiſm, and continues to be converted and brought to baptiſm by the converſation of the wife; which cannot be ſaid of the perſon ſaid to be ſanctified: Yea, there is no leſs then an implicite contradiction in the words ſo expounded; for then it ſhould be thus meant, The unbelieving husband (remaining an unbeliever, as the Apoſtles ſpeech ſuppoſeth, elſe it were not appoſite to the caſe *v.*12,13.) is and continues to be wrought upon by the believer, and brought into the Church by baptiſm. Yet were this expoſition allowed, it would no whit avail to the Drs. purpoſe, unleſs the futurity of the ſame act were implied in that imagined ſenſe of the Dr. For it is not the event paſt that is the motive of cohabitation, but the hope of that which may be: And yet the Dr. tels us in his paraphraſe, he looks upon ἡγίασται as a verb of the preter tenſe, and as ſuch onely adapts the ſenſe to it, referring it not to future hopes but to paſt experiences or examples. Yet he ſaith, the Apoſtle produceth example, and to that alſo exactly agrees the 16th. v. For how knoweſt thou, &c. which doth not at all mention an example or paſt experience, which could not be not done being once done, but onely an uncertain and doubtfull futurity. So that in this again the Drs. ſpeeches do enterfere, and his ſpeech is moſt falſe, that the words v.16. do exactly agree with the meaning of the forepart of the 14th. v. as the Dr. expounds it. I omit that there is not a word that intimates the bringing into the Church by baptiſm; and if there were, it would import a ſtrange experience of a wives bringing her husband into the Church by baptiſm, which cannot be avoided by ſaying through her perſwaſion it is done by another; For the Text expreſly aſſigns the ſanctification, what or however it be, to the wives individual perſon, if then, to her as an agent it is done by her. But I have ſaid ſo much here, and Review 2d. par. ſect. 26. of this expoſition, ſition, as me thinks ſhould make this expoſition of the Dr. to be exploded by the learned.

Yet he writes further thus. "As for Mr. T. his inſtances of Enallage, "though now I may ſafely yeeld them all, and rather gain then loſe by "them, I ſhall yet in the laſt place add my ſenſe, that no one of them is "any way convincing; that of κλαύμενον is not, *c.*11.24. for his paſſi- "on was now ſo near approaching, that it might very fitly be repreſen- "ted as preſent, and ſo that be the force of the preſent tenſe.

Anſw. This inſtance is convincing, that enallage of tenſe is ſometimes uſed, it being uſed in this place, as Piſcat. ſcholie in locum, Enallage temporis & metaphora. And the Drs. reaſon doth no whit weaken the allegation of it; for that which notes Paulo poſt futurum, a future near approaching, is not without an enallage expreſſed by the preſent tenſe. And for the enallage in ἀκάθαρτά ἐστιν, I conceive with the Drs. good leave, that uſually the Greeks expreſs by ἦν or ἔσῃ what the Apoſtle doth by ἐστί, and ſo there is an enallage of tenſe or mood; and for ἀπόλωλα, *v.*15. if an enallage be not conceived, then it muſt not import the preſent tenſe at all, whereas the Dr. grants it notes the preter tenſe yet continued, which is all one as to ſay it notes the preſent tenſe, which without an enallage it could not do. As for κέκτησαι, *Job.*3.18. I wonder the Dr. would intimate as if it were produced by me to the prejudice of the preter tenſe, when my very words ſay expreſly it notes a paſt thing yet continued, and bring it to that purpoſe: But how this is far from being ſtill perfectly agreeable to his notion of ἁγιάσαι, the unbeliever oft hath been, and daily is converted, and brought to baptiſm by the believer, is apparent, in that the continuation of the condemnation, *Job.*3.18. is onely in reſpect of legal force and vertue; but the ſanctification 1 *Cor.*7.14. is as he expounds it, a meer tranſeunt act that imports no legal right, force, and vertue, and therefore cannot be ſaid to be continued as the other can. And how vain the Drs. ſenſe is, and how juſtifiable my interpretation is by an enallage, is ſhewed before.

SECT. XCIII.

Dr. Hammonds rendring [by] 1 Cor.7.14. is reſelled, and my rendring ἐν [to] juſtified.

*Sect.*3. The Dr. omitting what I ſaid, that if ἐν be rendred [in] it ſerves my turn, not his unleſs it be proved it muſt be rendred [by,] and his ſupplement [by the company and converſation of the believer] proved, ſaith ſomewhat to my reaſon of adhering to the reading of ἐν 1 *Cor.*7,14. by [to] 1. becauſe this ſeems to me the faireſt, eaſieſt, and moſt congruous ſenſe. But 1. he tels me this is the begging of the queſtion, that it is ſuch muſt not be here ſuppoſed when it ſhould be proved. To which I reply, 1. if it be the faireſt, eaſieſt, and moſt congruous ſenſe, it is ſome proof. 2. That it is the onely ſenſe which can ſtand with the words words and scope of the Apostle, and is avouched so by learned men, ancient and later Protestants and Papists, is shewed at large in my Exercit. sect. 5. Examen, par. 3. sect. 8 Review, par. 1. sect. 11, &c. here sect. 76, &c. Refutat. of Dr. Savage his position in Latine, sect. 9. Antidote, sect. 7. besides what occurs in my Apology, Postscript, Plea, which is abundantly sufficient for acquitting me from begging the question, which he doth so importunely urge. 3. That the Dr. rather begs the question then proves his interpretation, hath and will appear in this and the former view taken of it.

But the Dr. sullies the beauty of my sense of the Apostles words thus. "The fairness of the sense (simply taken) is not attempted to bee proved, which yet doth stand in great need of it; For beside the redundance, or unusual sense of ἐὰν, some other parts of the rendering are none of the fairest. As 1. the believer may abide] as if it were simply free to abide or not abide, whereas in the present case (when the unbeliever is willing to abide with the believer) the believer is by the Apostle counselled at least, if not commanded (and that is more then a liberty that he may.) To him the Apostle saith (and his sayings have sure authority with them) μὴ ἀφιέτω let him not put away. Nay the interdict of Christ belonging to all but that one case of fornication, Mat. 5. and Mat. 19. it is evident that by force thereof the believing man must not put away the unbeliever, that is, guilty of no more but unbelief. And accordingly the preface τοῖς δὲ λοιποῖς — But for the rest (or for the other questions v. 1, 6, 8, 10. say I, not the Lord) must be applied not to the immediate consequents of the believers not putting away the unbeliever, that will stay with him (for that had been determined by Christ in the negative) but to v. 15. If the unbelieving depart, i. e. if the unbeliever will not dwell with the believer, except the believer forsake his or her religion, what shall be done then? And to that the Apostles counsel is, that marriage inslaves not the believer so far. All which is a competent prejudice to that part or Mr. T. his sense, The believer may abide; For if that bee it even when the unbeliever is willing to abide, then she may also depart, if shee rather chuse, which will be found contrary to Christs precept.

Answ. Nil tam rectè dictum quod non possit malè interpretando depravarier, as the Dr. doth here. 'Tis true I did in the second part of this Review Sect. 26. p. 319, 320. say (and gave reasons of it) that the Apostle 1 Cor. 7. 12, 13. did not forbid leaving each other, but resolve onely the lawfulness of living together, but this did not intimate as if the believer were simply free to abide or not abide with the unbelieving yokefellow willing to live with her, that when the unbeliever is willing to abide the believing wife may also depart if she rather chuse, but this, that notwithstanding the continuance of the unbelief of the husband, the wife might live with him, it was not unlawfull. So that I asserted not a liberty of leaving him upon any cause, but a liberty of continuing with him, notwithstanding that reason; and therefore the Dr. did ill to paraphrase v. 12. he ought not to put her away, v. 13. let her by no meanes separate from him. And I gave some reason from v. 15. where the permitting to depart is a matter of liberty, as the word [is not in bondage) ſhews, and yet the word is as much imperative as v. 1 , 13. And I might have added, that v. 18. let him not be uncircumciſed, let him not be circumciſed, are there expreſſions of liberty, not of duty (as the reaſon v. 19. ſhews) and yet are as imperative as the forms uſed v. 12, 13. [See before of this, p. 624, 625, 626.] 'Tis true, to be circumciſed might be forbidden elſewhere, as Gal. 5. 2, 3. and might be then unlawfull, and ſo it might be forbidden in other texts for the beliver to leave husband except in caſe of fornication, but in theſe texts liberty onely is expreſſed, in the one of living together notwithſtanding the unbelief of the one party, in the other continuing in that ſtate of circumciſion or uncircumciſion, as they were in when they were firſt called to the faith of Chriſt. And this I think the Dr. ſhould prefer as the moſt ſuitable to his own expoſition, ſith the frequent converſion of the infidel by the believer, v. 14. is no ſit reaſon to make it an unlawfull thing for her to depart, but onely it may be ſome motive of her will to continue, as the Dr. makes it. And I conceive v. 17, 20, 24. are to be ſo expounded, ſith it is clear that to be a ſervant, or unmarried are ſome of the callings there mentioned, as v. 21, 27, 28. ſhew, but if it were a command of duty meant, v. 17, 20, 24. the ſervant muſt remain a ſervant contrary to v. 21. and the unmarried not marry, contrary to v. 28. And v. 27. μὴ ζήτει γυναῖκα ſeek not a wife, being as prohibitive a form as μὴ ἀφιέτω v. 12, 13. an unmarried man ſhould be forbidden to woe a woman, contrary to v. 28. which exempts marriage from ſin. So that indeed all theſe imperative ſpeeches v. 12, 13, 15, 17, 18, 20, 21, 24, 27. are to be expounded as reſolutions of liberty, and ſo precepts of indulgence, not abſolute prohibitions or injunctions of what may in no caſe be done, or muſt be done as precepts of empire. And it is as when a perſon ſcrupling whether ſhee may be married to a Prieſt woing her is reſolved thus, let her not forſake him, ſhe is not commanded to marry him, but reſolved ſhe may; ſo it is in this caſe. Which being rightly underſtood, there is nothing oppoſite in my ſpeech to Chriſts ſpeeches Matth 5. or 19. about not putting away except in caſe of fornication, nor the Apoſtles 1 Cor. 7. 10. Nor need I trouble my ſelf whether τοῖς λοιποῖς be the other queſtions, v. 1, 6, 8, 10. though I think it ſhould have been then περὶ λοιπῶν, nor whether it be to be applied to v. 15. as the Dr. would, though it bee in my apprehenſion very unlikely.

Secondly, ſaith the Dr. In this rendring, ἡγίασται is engliſhed (not by is or hath been ſanctified, but) by [is as if he were ſanctified] which indeed acknowledgeth that he is not, truely (in any reſpect) ſanctified, and then ſure this will be a ſtrange conſtruction, ὁ ἄπιστος ἡγίασται the unbeliever (is not ſanctified but) is as if he were ſanctified, when yet litterally it muſt be rendered the unbeliever hath been, or (to gratifie Mr. T.) is or continues to be ſanctified: For what is this but to interpret an affirmative by interpoſing a negation, he is ſanctified, by he is not? For ſo aſſuredly he is not, if he onely be as if he were.

Anſw. According to me, ἡγίασται is rendered or engliſhed [is or hath been ſanctified], but is expounded [is as if hee were ſanctified]

as 1 Cor. 10. ἐβαπτίσαντο is rendered or englished [were baptized] yet by Grotius expounded annot. 1 Cor. 10. 2. baptizati sunt, id est, quasi baptizati sunt. Which me thinks should be no strange construction to Dr. Hammond, who by his answer to Dr. Owen ch. 5. §. 1, 2. seems to be acquainted with Grotius his annotations and other writings, and to account of him as a very pious, learned judicious man. In this exposition of Grotius there is as much an interpretation of an affirmative by interpreting a negation as in mine; the like I may say of other passages in the New Testament, as when it is said Heb. 11. 12. were dead or killed of Abraham then alive, Matth. 12. 49. he that doth the will of his father in heaven is Christs mother, who never bare him in the womb, Matth. 12. 5. they prophane, who did holy service, Matth. 19. 12. they made themselves Eunuchs, who were not gelded.

The Dr. adds. with this let any man compare the interpretation I have given, the unbeliever hath been sanctified by the believer, i. e. examples there are of such as have been thus converted from their unbelief, and this sense inforced by the interrogation, v. 16. For what knowest thou, O woman, whether thou shalt save the man, &c. And by S. Peters aphorism of daily observation 1 Pet. 3. 1. the husband that obeyes not the word, i. e. the unbeliever, may probably bee gained by the conversation of the wife, and then let him impartially pass judgement, which is the faireſt and easiest rendering.

Answ. Content: If he will but take notice of this one thing (besides many more) that the unbelieving husband, mentioned 1 Cor. 7. 14. is said to be sanctified even then when he was an unbeliever. Which is proved from the text. 1. The unbelieving husband, and wife, v. 14. are the same with the unbelieving husband and wife mentioned v. 12, 13. for the expression v. 14. is relative to v. 12, 13. otherwise it were impertinent to resolve the question, and the particle [for v. 14.] shewing it to be a reason of the determination v. 12, 13. plainly proves it to bee meant of the same persons who continued unbelievers. 2. From v. 15. where the resolution of the doubt is continued, But if the unbeliever depart, let him depart; which is not to bee expounded of him that was an unbeliever but is not, but of him who is when he departs, which is confirmed in that he is opposed to a brother or sister, who if he were converted should be a brother. 3. From v. 16. where still the unbeliever mentioned v. 12, 13, 14, 15. is supposed to remain an unbeliever, else why should his saving be made doubtfull and contingent? And if the Dr. stand to his own conceit, as if v. 16. exactly agreed with v. 14. it must be so construed by himself. 4. His own Tertullian who saith ex sanctificato alterutro sexu, not utraque, and Hierome, and all other that add fidelem, v. 14. and all the interpreters I know, that do make the sanctifying to be v. 14. in disparity of religion, do agree in this, that the unbeliever v. 14. is meant of one that continues an unbeliever, otherwise he should not be distinguished from the believer, who was also an unbeliever formerly. Which if but observed, I dare put it to any Reader of ordinary capacity to judge between us, whether the Doctors sense be not so far from being the faireſt and easiest, that it is indeed a foul one, ſuch as doth imply a contradiction to the Apoſtles words, the [Dr. ſuppoſing the unbeliever v. 14, once ſuch but not ſo then, the Apoſtle ſuppoſing him to continue ſo, the Dr. expounding it thus; He that was once an unbeliever, another then the unbeliever meant v. 12, 13. hath been ſanctified by the believing wife, that is converted; and the Apoſtle, He that is ſtill an unbeliever, the ſame mentioned v. 12, 13. is ſanctified; and whether mine [The believer may abide with the unbelieving yoke-fellow: For though he be an unbeliever, yet in or to his wife, he is as if he were ſanctified; it's all one in reſpect of lawfull [omitted by the Dr.) conjugal uſe as if he were ſanctified] be not the faireſt, eaſieſt, and moſt congruous ſenſe, that is to be given of thoſe words 1 Cor. 7. 14.

The Dr. goes on thus; "His 2d. reaſon is, becauſe, though the Dr. "deny it, yet I aver that the notion of ἐν for to as a ſign of the Dative "caſe, is found more then once in the N. T. The truth of this I muſt "now examine, by the proofs offered for the affirmation. And his firſt "proof is, from Matth. 17. 12. ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ, This, ſaith he, can. "not be eluded, becauſe the ſame ſpeech is Mark. 9. 13. ἐποίησαν αὐτῷ "and rendred by Beza in the former place fecerunt ei, they did to him. "2. Whereas the Dr. ſaith, ἐν is uſed for εἰς, upon him or againſt "him, it had been meet the Dr. ſhould have given one inſtance at leaſt, "of ſuch conſtruction, which, ſaith he, I do not believe he can do. To "this I anſwer, 1. By two ready inſtances in one verſe, Luk. 23. 31; εἰ "ἐν τῷ ὑγρῷ ξύλῳ ταῦτα ποιοῦσιν, ἐν τῷ ξηρῷ τί γένηται; if they do theſe "things (our ordinary Engliſh reads, in a green tree, but the ſenſe and "propriety directs us to) on the green tree, what ſhall be done on the "dry? here is the very phraſe that is uſed in that place of Matthew, "ποιοῦσιν ἐν ὑγρῷ, as ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ.

Anſw. I did aver more then the Dr. ſets down, that the notion of ἐν for [to] may with good congruity and Grammatical analogy be affixt to it, 1 Cor. 7. 14. and I uſed theſe words left out by the Dr. whereas he ſaith (meaning the Dr.) ἐν is uſed for εἰς on him or againſt him, and that this is an ordinary acceptation, of ἐν for εἰς; I grant that it is an ordinary acception to uſe ἐν for εἰς, but not in the ſenſe hee here conceives, to wit, as εἰς notes on or againſt a perſon. Now the Doctors inſtance is but in one verſe, and therefore ſhewes not the ordinary acception, and then whereas I expected an inſtance of ἐν for εἰς, as it notes on or againſt a perſon, hee brings an inſtance of ἐν ξύλῳ on a tree, and this is not of ἐν for εἰς againſt, which had been more for his purpoſe, but for εἰς on, though in the ſenſe of [on him] ἐν rather anſwers to ἐπ' αὐτῷ, then εἰς αὐτὸν. Yet the Dr. brings no authority but his own for this his conceit of ἐν for on Luk. 23. 31. I add, that though the Latin and Engliſh tranſlators I have yet looked into, do render ἐν Luk. 23. 31. by in not on, ſuper or contrà (which are the Drs. notions) yet I find Diodati in his Italian tranſlation reading, al legno verde al legno ſecco, which I take to be as much [to] as if it were expreſſed by ligno viridi, and ligno ſicco or arido, without a prepoſition, and if ſo, the Dr. hath brought a text which further confirms my conceit against himself. In which I am the more confident, because when an object patient, or a subject suffering is expressed with the verb ποιῆσαι or γένηται, it is either never or very rarely said, ποιεῖν εἰς αὐτὸν, or γίνεται εἰς αὐτὸν, but ποιῆσαι αὐτῷ or γένεταί μοι, as in Luk. 1. 25, 49, 68. & 2. 48. & 6. 11, 23, 26, 27, 31. & 8. 39. & 18. 41. & 20. 15. Acts 4. 16. & 9. 13. Luk. 1. 38. & 14. 12. & 19. 9. Acts 2. 43. & 7. 40. & 20. 3. & 22. 6, 17. omitting other writers. Which is an argument to me, that Luk. 23. 31. ἐν is redundant, and that it is best translated, to the dry, to the green, and so the Dr. hath given an instance for my notion, not for his own.

He saith further. And then for S. Marks using (in the parallel place) αὐτῷ for ἐν αὐτῷ] that proves not that ἐν was redundant in S. Matthew, or that it was a bare signe of the Dative case, it being free to S. Mark to use any other expression, different from S. Matthew so he retained the sense, as it is clear in this place he doth, doing injuries to him, being all one in effect with upon or against him, though the phrases are not the same, which no way inferrs that when the change of the phrase changes the sense, it were lawfull so to vary it, as in the place we have in hand (ἐν γυναικὶ) 'tis on both sides supposed to do.

Answ. The Dr. omits these words of mine [However if he could, yet me thinks it should satisfie, that ἐν αὐτῷ notes no more than αὐτῷ, and is a sign of the Dative case, because Mark who seems to have abbreviated Matthew, so expresseth it, and the common use of ποιεῖν when it notes dealings of man to man whether good or bad, is usually expressed by the Dative case, as Matth. 7. 12. & 18. 12. & 20. 32. & 21. 36, 40. & 25. 40, 45.] to which the Dr. makes no answer, and that which he saith here, doth confirm my notion. For if it were free to Mark to use any other expression different from Matthew, so he retained the sense, and yet he doth not use εἰς but put onely the Dative case to express the same; that Matthew did it appears that ἐποίησαν ἐν αὐτῷ and ἐποίησαν αὐτῷ are to the same sense and phrase, to express injuries done to John Baptist, and that ἐν in Matthew is redundant, and nothing expressed by it but what is expressed in Mark in the Dative case without it. What the Dr. means when he saith ['tis on both sides supposed (ἐν γυναικὶ) changes the sense, and so it is unlawful to vary it] I do not understand, our present question is not whether it bee lawfull to change a phrase when the sense is not changed, and unlawful when it is; but whether ἐν Matth. 17. 12. bee redundant and a signe of the Dative case: this is yet unanswerably proved to bee by this, that Mark. 9. 13. the same phrase and matter is expressed without it, and there it notes onely the Dative case, and that is the usual manner of expression without ἐν, and therefore ἐν must be taken as redundant, and a sign of the Dative case onely, Matth. 17. 12.

The Dr. goes on, A second instance which he conceivs cannot bee eluded, is Col. 1. 23. τὸ κηρυχθὲν ἐν πάσῃ κτίσει, which was preached to every creature, and this he proves to be the onely rendering; 1. Because κηρύσσω to preach, is commonly with a Dative case of the object, and though 1 Tim. 3. 16. it is ἐκηρύχθη ἐν ἔθνεσιν, yet our translators and the Vulgar, and Beza read it, unto the Gentiles, as if there it noted onely a dative case; and if it were among the Gentiles there, yet here Col. 1. 23. it cannot be so, because the object is in the singular number, but ἐν when it is for among, is joyned still with a noun of the plural. And 2. that which, saith he, puts this out of all doubt, is, that the phrase Col. 1. answers Mark 16. 15. κηρύξατε τὸ εὐαγγέλιον πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει. But to all this the answer is ready, by observing the exact notation of πᾶσα κτίσις the whole creation. (as we render it Rom. 8. 22.) as that signifies the whole, but especially the Gentile world, and accordingly is exprest by πάντα τὰ ἔθνη, Matth. 28. and farther explained by ὅλῳ κόσμῳ the whole world, to which in S. Mark they are appointed to go, when they were thus to preach the Gospel πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει to this whole creation. Now of κτίσις in this notion it is clear, that though it be in the singular number, yet that hath the power of the plural, as the word [world] and the like, which every body knowes is a noun of multitude, and so is creation, when it is thus taken for the whole created world, meaning the world of men, the nations or people of the world. And then there can be no doubt but κηρυχθὲν ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει] is most exactly thus to be rendred, preached in, or among the whole creation, as Gal. 1. 16. κηρύσσω ἐν τοῖς ἔθνεσιν preach in the nations, or among the Gentiles, and so 1 Tim. 3. 16. also, though the sense being no way altered by rendering it unto the whole creation, or every creature, and the Gentiles, it matters little though it be promiscuously thus rendred, which yet must not prescribe for other places where the sense is so much changed by the divers rendring as in this case, ὤφθη ἐν σαρκὶ] is observable, wherefore the litteral rendering being retained, we are not reasonably to conclude any more from it, then that litteral reading will afford us. As for the parallel phrase Mark. 16. that doutless can prove nothing; 1. Because the places are not nor can be thought parallel. 2. Because if they were (as of Matth. 28. and Mark 16. hath been granted.) yet the parallel lying onely in the sense, and that being all one whether they preacht to or among the Gentiles, this no way concludes that the phrases are the same, or the ἐν in one redundant, which is the onely thing, for the proving of which this parallel is produced, but of that I have formerly spoken.

Answ. Had the Dr. shewed any one interpreter that ever rendred ἐν πάσῃ κτίσει Col. 1. 23. by in ... omnem creaturam, among every creature, or that ἐν as it signifies inter or among or either of these prepositions, is put in Latin or English before a noun of multitude in the singular number, he had said more then I yet deem hee can, or I think any other Grammarian, nor do I take the word κτίσις to be a noun of multitude, there may bee κτίσις though there were but one individual, though I grant πάσῃ κτίσει notes many creatures, nor do I conceive it good sense to render it in every creature, sith the term [creature] doth note persons not place, and to be preached in every creature, would imply such a sense as will not suit with the matter, which is conceived by many interpreters, to note the accomplishment of what Christ appointed Mark 16. 15. which leaving out the preposition ἐν, and the common use of κηρύσσω to preach predeh being with a Dative case of the object, I did infer that ἐν is redundant and a note of the Dative case, as Pasor before me in his Lexicon of the word ἐν of which he saith, Sæpe ex Hebraismo redundat Col. 1.23. τῷ κηρυχθέντι ἐν πάσῃ τῇ κτίσει pro τῇ πάσῃ κτίσει, prædicati omni creaturæ. Sure if it were most exactly rendered, as the Dr. saith, preached in or among the whole creation, it is marvail none hit on this afore the Dr. as they have done Gal. 3. 16. 1 Tim. 3. 16. Whether Col. 1. 23. and Mar. 16. 15. be parallel in the manner I make them, is to be referred to the Readers judgement, when he shall compare them together. Sure I finde all these, Beza, Camerarius, Piscator, Zanchius, Grotius, Davenant, Trapp, the new Annotations, Elton, referring to and explaining one by the other, and the Dr. confessing the sense the same, every Grammarian that understands Greek may plainly see the phrase to be the same save that ἐν is added Col. 1. 23. and therefore from all these I infer as most probable, and to me certain, that ἐν is redundant, that it's onely the sign of the dative case of the object, that it is most truely rendered as our Translators and many more rendered, to every creature, that is, as Gerram expounds it, universis hominibus, to all, or all sorts of men. As for the Drs. cautions about prescribing and concluding, they are impertinent to the present thing concerning Col. 1. 23. whether ἐν be redundant the sign of the Dative case there. Whether ἐν γυναικὶ 1 Cor. 7. 14. be to be rendered [to] whether the sense will bear it, whether it make any other change in the sense then is fit, or any more be concluded, then is deducible is before and after to be discussed. Hitherto it appears not but that I said right, Matth. 17. 12. Col. 1. 23. cannot be eluded.

The Dr. goes on, "His third instance is δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις "Acts 4. 12. which he cannot yet conceive, but that it is better rendred, to men, then among men. And his reasons are; First, because "δίδωμι hath most regularly and consequently (it should be constantly) "a dative case of the person after it. Secondly, because if it had been a-"mong men, it had been to be placed after ἕτερον other, there is no o-"ther name among men, given, but being placed after given, it is to "be expounded as referred to given not to other, and so must bee read, "to men, not among men. Thirdly, It seems no good sense, nor true, "that Christ was a name given among men, for though he were among "men, yet he was given from above, To all which, he adds the judge-"ment of Irenæus l. 3. c. 12. cited by Beza, and a parallel phrase "ἐν παρθένοις for παρθένων Acts 7. 44. To this I answer. First, That "'tis true when δίδωμι hath any case of the person following and go-"verned by it, that is constantly the dative, but that is no way applica-"ble to this phrase, δεδομένον ἐν ἀνθρώποις, for there the persons ἀν-"θρώποις are governed by the preposition ἐν not by δεδομένον. To the "second, that the construction by among, is very good, placing it af-"ter given, there is no other name given among men, i. e. no means "of salvation afforded by God, and continued among men. To the "third, That Christs being given from above, no way prejudges his "being given among men, both because the benefit of this gift is a com" mon donative, distributed among men, and also because this gift is " dispene'd in form of humane flesh, Christ is become man, and to be " found and seen among men.

Answ. 1. That the persons ἀνθρώπους men, are governed by the preposition ἐν, and not by δεδομένον, is not rightly said by the Dr. First, Because the placing of it next after δεδομένον shews it is governed of δεδομένον given. Secondly, Because if [men] were not governed of [given] the participle [given] were superfluous. For the sense would be the same, and the speech were as good language if it were left out, and the reading onely thus; neither is there another name under heaven among men, whereby we must be saved. 2. That name whereby we must be saved] should be put for [meanes of salvation] and not a person distinctly is both besides the usual acception of the term [name] and the drift of the words, which shew that by [name] is meant [person] and makes the speech false; For the preaching of the Gospel by Prophets, and Apostles, were means of salvation afforded by God, and continued among men, besides Christ and his preaching. 3. That this gift was dispenc'd in form of humane flesh, that Christ was become man, and to bee found and seen among men, shews not that he was given among men, but to be among men, his giving was from above, as he often saith, that he came down from heaven, Joh. 6. 38, 41, 50, 51, 58. 33. given from heaven, v. 32. Joh. 8. 23. ye are from beneath, I am from above. Joh. 3. 31. He that cometh from above is above all, he that cometh from heaven is above all; which is contrary to what Peter (as the Dr. expounds him) speaks here, that he was a name under heaven given among men. And the other reason, because the benefit of this gift is a common donative, and distributed among men, though it perverts the sense, putting for [the name] which signifies the person [the benefit] and confounding the person whereby we must be saved with the benefit, which is no other then salvation, yet it makes for my sense. For what is it to be a common donative, distributed among men, but to be given to men. So that in the issue, the Dr. notwithstanding his strugling is not able to avoid it, but that it serves my purpose of proving ἐν redundant, and a signe of the Dative case. What the Dr. saith to what I add out of Beza annot. on Acts 4. 12. the Dr. might have remembred (if he ever read it) that in my Examen, part. 1. §. 4. I did take notice that Irenæus was a Greek and wrote in Greek, but now onely we have his works in Latin except some few fragments, and Beza so great a learned man, as had few equals, especially in the Greek language, it is likely knew so too; and therefore the Dr, might have omitted that intimation, as if wee were forgetfull thereof. And it had been fair if the Dr. had taken notice, that Beza alledged first the old interpreter, as reading [datum hominibus, given to men] and Irenæus (meaning his translator, who is commonly cited as Irenæus] after him, and that I added Camerarius, which the Dr. saith nothing to, but hath a snatch at Beza's alleging Acts 7. 44. which I rest not on, sith it may be read [with or among] as well as [to] which is agreeable with our last translation, Our Fathers had the Tabernacle of witness. But I follow the Dr. in his debates, which it is indeed pitty the Reader or the Dr. should be exercised with, being fit for better undertakings then these, which he is detained with upon his own motion, as one that is cedere nescius to a plain truth, not in obedience to me who never injoyned him this exercise.

He saith, "For a 4th. instance, he again resumes that of Gal. 1. 16. "2 Pet. 1. 5. That Gal. 1. where of God the Apostle saith, that he was "pleased to reveall his own son ἐν ἐμοὶ, and when I had rendred that "by or through me to others, This exposition, saith he, makes the A- "postle tautologize ineptly. This strange undecent expression, I wish "had been spared, for certainly there was little temptation for it: why, "I pray, might not the Apostle without incurring either part of that cen- "sure, say, God was pleased through me to reveal his son, and by way "of explication (and withall to denote the designation of that Apostle "to his peculiar province, as the Apostle of the uncircumcision) add, "that I might preach the Gospel to the Gentiles. Certainly every ex- "plication of an obscurer or narrower, by a clearer or larger phrase, is "not inept tautology, but that which all writers which have desired to "speak intelligibly, have always been full of. And yet 2dly, the la- "ter part here, of his preaching the Gospel to the Gentiles (he being "peculiarly the Apostle of the Gentiles, as Peter and John were of the "Jews whersoever dispersed) is more then was pretended to be said by "my rendring and paraphrasing the former part of it; for in that those "others had not been defined, who they were, or limited to the Gen- "tiles. This Mr. T. adverted not in his objection, I desire he will now "take notice of it.

Answ. I could not well have spared the expression, having tempta- tion for it from Dr. Hammonds mis-interpreting the Apostles speech, so as to make it according to the Drs. sense, though not according to the Apostles, an inept tautology; which however strange, yet was no unde- cent expression, there being nothing that reflects on the Apostle but on the Dr. tending to shew the absurdity of his interpretation, not of the Apostles words. From which the Dr. doth not relieve himself by his answer here. For the later phrase doth not express the same more clearly, there is neither a copulative conjunction nor dis-junctive, ex- pressed or implied, nor any other particle which may shew the later phrase to be exegitical of the former, but the particle ἵνα doth plainly shew that, σὺν δεσμὸς τελικὸς, the Evangelizing or preaching the Go- spel, to be mentioned as the end or consequent of the revelation, and therefore not the same act. Besides the preaching the Gospel by a man is no where termed the revealing of Christ by him to others, being known to him before, but the making known to the person, and revelation is still made Gods, Christs, or his spirits act, and hath a Dative case of the person who is the object to whom the thing is revealed added to it, as Matth. 11. 25, 27. & 16. 17. Luk. 10. 21, 22. John 12. 38. 1 Cor. 2. 10. & 14. 30. Eph. 3. 5. Phil. 3. 15. 1 Pet. 1. 12. and this must needs be the meaning, the words before being, whereas before he was zealous

of the Law against the Christian profession, when it pleased God who separated me from my mothers womb, and called me by his grace to reveal his son in him; or as Beza annot. in locum ἐν ἐμοὶ id est mihi, to me, which plainly shews that this revelation was to him when he was called, which is called the revelation of Jesus Christ to him, v. 12. and made the proof of his calling to bee an Apostle, not of men, neither by man, but by Jesus Christ, v. 1. and the reason why he preached without conferring with the Apostles And thus doth Perkins com. on Gal. 1. 16. rightly explain it, to reveal his son in me or to me, and to expresse the manner or form of his calling or conversion, and expounds it thus, to teach me the doctrine of the redemption of mankinde by Jesus Christ, and the words to preach Christ among the Gentiles the end of his vocation. As for that which the Dr. desires me now to take notice of, I do, though I think it needless, sith the tautology I conceived to follow on the Drs. exposition, is not in the object but in the act, revealing his son by the Apostle, being no other then his preaching, which makes the speech nugatory, it pleased God to preach his son by me, that I might preach. As for the place of 2 Pet. 1. 5. sith the Dr. makes no more answer I need make no more reply, and I still aver that all the places which I brought out of the N. T. have the notion of ἐν for to, as a signe of the Da ive case.

To the places out of the Greek of the old Testament, he tels me, that three onely places in the whole Old T. would never infer that so it must bee in the New (which I grant) and there being no pretense of necessity that thus it must be here (which is also granted, except a necessity of a more fair, easie, and congruous sense then any other rendering) these three will be of no avail to me. But this is not yeelded. For the two first, Deut. 28. 60. & 2 Kings 5. 25. κολληθήσεται σοὶ ἐν ᾗ ἐν τῷ σπέρματι, vulg. adhærebit tibi & semini tuo, being used constantly in the N. T. with a Dative Luk. 10. 11. and 15. 15. Acts 5. 13. & 8. 29. & 9. 26. & 10. 28. & 17. 34. Rom. 12. 9. 1 Cor. 6. 16, 17, &c. it is a strong presumption that ἐν is redundant, and onely the signe of the Dative case. And the other place Psal. 68. 18. compared with Eph. 4. 8. hath some force, it being probable that the Apostle expressed what the LXX meant by ἔλαβες. But it was not of this last onely, but of all together, I said I took them to be more then enough to refute the Drs. speech, that the notion, wherein ἐν signifies to, which is a signe of the Dative case, is never found once to belong to it in the N. T. nor can with any tollerable congruity or Grammatical analogy be affixt to it.

SECT. XCIV.

It is shewed that Dr. Hammond hath no proof from 1 Cor. 7. 16. for his sense of the fore-part of v. 14. Nor with his sense of Holy for Baptized, agree with the Apostles argument, though his sense of the fore-part of the v. were granted.

THe Dr. adds, "My third proof produced for my interpretation of "the first part of *v.*14. which to me put it out of all doubt, by com- "paring it with the reason subjoyned; For what knowest thou O wife, "whether thou shalt save thy husband; or how knowest thou, O man, "whether thou shalt thy wife?] He comes next to examine, and hath "many exceptions against it, all which (without losing time in repea- "ting and viewing them severally) will be soon dispelled by a right "understanding of the force of the Apostles argument, as there I con- "ceive it to lie, Thus v. 14. It is matter of ordinary observation, that "unbelieving husbands have been brought to the faith and Baptism by "the believing wife, therefore I now exhort and counsel the believer "not to depart from the unbeliever, in case the unbeliever be willing "to stay, v. 13. for this reason, v. 16. Because what hath been so oft, "may very probably be hoped again, and consequently upon the premi- "mises the believer hath ground to hope, that she may in time gain "the husband to the faith, and that being so fair a reward in her view, "(the saving or rescuing him from infidelity to Christ) may well in- "force the counsel of the Apostle, not to depart from him, as long as, "without sin, she is permitted to stay. By which it appears that this v. "16. is not a bare evplanation of ἡγίασται v. 14. (on which Mr. T. his "exceptions principally depend) but an application of the argument "formerly proposed, but now more signally brought home to them, "under the form of [τί γὰρ for what] by this meanes to re-inforce his "conclusion of their not departing for the cause of infidelity: If the "Reader will but observe what is thus visible, he will want no more help, "to get out of the intricacies and toils, which Mr. T. hath here spread "for him in this matter, which is in it self so manifest, as nothing can "be added to it, if either the text or my paraphrase may be permitted to "speak for it self.

Ans. The Dr. seems to be much crest-faln, who having said his exposition appeared most irrefragably by *v.*16. wherin he said the fore-part of v.14. was further explained. When four plain reasons were urged against this, he replies to none, but onely calls them intricacies, and toils, and saith, my exceptions depend on this, that v. 16. is not a bare explanation of ἡγιάσται v. 14. whereas my reasons prove it to be neither an explanation nor an application of the argument formerly proposed *v.*14. but another argument, not to prove the lawfulness of the believers continuance with the believer, as v. 14. but either as a motive to bring them to what he had concluded lawfull, or to inforce what he had said v. 15. And for what the Dr. saith, that v. 16. the argument formerly proposed, v. 14. is more signally brought home to them, it is not true even according to the Drs. own paraphrase. For the Drs. paraphrase of v. 14. as if therein a frequency of the conversion of unbelievers yoke-fellows by the believer, were well known as matter of ordinary observation, and so hopefull in the case of the present doubters, brings home the argument more signally then a mention of it as possible, doubtfully expressed as a contingent that might be or not be. But I am willing the Reader should hear us both and then judge. I for my part do still conceive the Drs paraphrase of the fore-part of 1 Cor. 7. 14. to be far from the meaning of the text, the reason of the Apostle being by it made a Rhetorical argument to inforce the cohabitation as an advantage, which is used to make it lawfull, and urged from a contingent thing which no whit cleered the doubt, but the reason might be retorted against him, and all ascribed to the yoke-fellow as a believer, when the term believer is quite omitted, and that ascribed to the believer which is stil elswhere ascribed to the spirit of God, and that expressed as done often and as of ordinary observation, which is expressed in the singular number, and made by the Apostle as doubtfull and uncertain. And if these be intricacies and toils the Dr. hath had little compassion on me and his reader, who when he might so easily, would not spend a little more time to help me out of them, though spread by himself.

The Dr. proceeds Sect. 4. "His exceptions to the former part of "my paraphrase being now ended, I must attend what hee hath to say "against the latter part of it, that which concernes our matter in hand "more neerly; The words ἐπεὶ ἄρα, for else were your children un- "clean, but now are they holy, i. e. upon that score it is that Christians "children are admitted to Baptism, viz. because by their living in the "family with the Christian parent, they probably will (and ought to) "be brought up in the faith — and the Church (requiring and receiving "promise from the parents) reasonably presumes they will, and so ad- "mits them to Baptism. The argument of the Apostle thus explained "in my paraphrase (or if he yet will have it more plainly thus, The "Church upon confidence that the believers children will be brought "up in the faith, receives them to Baptism when they are infants; And "upon the same grounds of hope, that your abiding with the unbelie- "ving husband may in time convert him (as by experience it hath oft "been found) I advise you not to depart from him, if he will live with "you, For what knowest thou whether thou shalt save thy husband? "&c.) M. T. hath made a shift not to understand, and substituted another "way of arguing in my name, in stead of it, p. 331. And having done "so I must leave him to combate with the shadow of his own creating, "no part of his impression lighting upon that which alone I pro- "fess to bee my meaning in it, which I leave him or the Rea- "der to see, in the particulars proposed by him, but must not "now bee so impertinent, as to lose time in the persuit of them,

Answ.

Answ. Sith the Dr. hath disclaimed my good words, and approbation of his ingenuity, *ch.*1. *sect.*1. of this his defence, I shall forbear to commend his ingenuity, but cannot choose but take notice of his shift he makes to avoid the force of my reasons, by bearing the Reader in hand that I made a shift not to understand him, that I substitute another way of arguing in his name in stead of it, that I combate with a shadow of my own creating, no part of my impression lighting upon that which alone he professeth to be his meaning in it, and therefore must not now be so impertinent as to lose time in the pursuit of the particulars proposed by me. This is a pretty art to pretend a reason why he need not answer what he cannot; like his, who when he could not make a good account, devised how he might make none at all. The Dr. saith I have substituted another way of arguing in his name in stead of that he hath set down. Now sure this intimates that this he sets down was a way of arguing, and calls his explications he sets down the argument of the Apostle thus explained in his paraphrase in the later way more plainly. But in neither do I find any arguing ascribed to the Apostle in the later part of his words 1 *Cor.*7.14. but in the former a meer declaration upon what reason Christians children are (as the Dr. conceives the Apostle means) admitted to baptism; in the later, an addition of a paraphrase on the first part of 1 *Cor.*7.14. with his advise according to *v.*12,13. and his paraphrase confirmed by *v.*16. Nor doth the Dr. at all explain those words, Else were your children unclean, though those were the words I chiefly insisted on to shew the absurdity his framing the Apostles reasoning brought his words to, as the Reader may plainly perceive by my words in the 2d part of my Review, *sect.*26. *p.*330,331. But to shew the Drs. collusion in this thing, the Reader may observe 1. that neither in his paraphrase in his 4th. qu. §.31. (though he make it §.32. the importance of the Apostles words, and force of his arguing) nor here doth the Dr. set down the true force of the particle ἐπεὶ ἄρα else, which in his Letter, *qu.*4. §.33. (to which my answer was made, *p.*330,331,332. with which the Dr. here cavils) he terms an argumentative stile. For the expressions [upon this score, on this one consideration, upon this ground] are not exclusive terms, as ἐπεὶ ἄρα else is, which implies not onely that the thing is so upon that one consideration, but also that without it it should be otherwise; nor doth the Dr. seem to put them as answering to ἐπεὶ ἄρα else were, but to νῦν δὲ but now. 2. That (as I said before) the Dr. doth in neither of these paraphrases set down any thing as answering to [else were your children unclean] nor in his Letter, *qu.*4 §.31. except these words are put to answer them [yet the children of heathens are not admitted to baptism,] which me thinks hee should not do, sith [your children] is in all his paraphrases [Christians children, believers children] and therefore I am loth to think him so much overseen, as that he should put [the children of heathens are not admitted to baptism] for [your children were unclean,] 3. If he should, he should in that paraphrase much pervert the Apostles meaning, by putting that which answers to [else were your children unclean] contrary to the Apostles order, after that which answers to [but now are they holy;] holy;] of which diſorder, tending to pervert the Apoſtles meaning, his plainer later paraphraſe here is guilty, putting firſt that which hee conceives anſwerable to [but now are they holy,] and then that which anſwers to [the unbelieving husband is ſanctified by the wife,] and then that which anſwers to [v. 13. let her not leave him,] and then the 16th v. which ſure is ſuch a diſorder as is very faulty, ſo deforming the Apoſtles argument, as that its like the leaving out of an arm or eye, the placing of the hand where the eye ſhonld be in the painting of a man, whereby he is made a monſter. 4. Whereas the Dr. Defence of Baptiſm, p. 66. denies that he made the future hopes any part of the ſenſe of [hath been ſanctified,] in all theſe paraphraſes he ſets down nothing but the future hopes, which are no part of the ſenſe by his own confeſſion, but as he imagines, the rational importance, the ſcope, ground, or conſideration of admitting children to Baptiſm. And not onely ſo, but adds more then he makes the rational importance of the term [hath been ſanctified] in his paraphraſe, as that by their living in the family with Chriſtian parents, they probably will (and ought) to be brought up in the faith, and the Church requiring and receiving promiſe from the parents, reaſonably preſumes they will. None of which he doth ſo much as pretend to be the rational importance of [hath been ſanctified,] but adds them of his own; and with like fancying might have added, the Church doth reaſonably preſume they will be Teachers, Officers in the Church, Martyrs, and what elſe they could wiſh them to be. I refer it to any ſober ingenious Scholler to judge, whether ſuch kind of paraphraſing, eſpecially when an argument is drawn from it, as the chief, if not onely pillar of the cauſe, be tollerable.

On the other ſide, that the Dr. did make the Apoſtles arguing otherwiſe, when he refuted the anſwer to his argument hence, in his Letter, qu. 4. §. 82. appears by his words there, p. 257. (which I cited Review par. 2. pag. 322. and were thoſe whence I gathered the Drs. framing the Apoſtles argument) when he ſaid, The invalidity of this anſwer will be diſcerned First by the method of the Apoſtles arguing in that place, for the co habiting of the believing wife with the unbelieving husband, &c. becauſe the unbelieving husband hath been ſanctified by the believing wife, or elſe were your children unclean, but now are they holy: that muſt needs be this, unleſs there were ſome hope that the co-habiting of a believer, ſhould be a means to bring an unbeliever to the faith, 'twould certainly follow, that their children were unclean; now putting to it that which he in his paraphraſes § 31. of his 4*th qu.* in his Letter, where he expreſſeth [hath been ſanctified] thus, The unbelieving party hath been brought to the faith by the company and converſation of the believer, and [unclean] by [not admitted to Baptiſm,] and [holy] by [admitted to Baptiſm,] and [your children by [the young children of Chriſtians whereof was an unbeliever;] and I appeale to any that ſhall compare my words in the 2d. part of this Review, ſect. 26. p. 331. where I make this the Apoſtles arguing as the Dr. expounds it, [If ſome other unbelieving yoke fellow had not been converted by the faith, diligence, and converſation of the believing party that then was, then the children

dren of you who are believers, but begotten or brought forth by one that yet is an unbeliever, had not been admitted to Christian Baptism in infancy: but now, that is, upon this score, that some former unbelieving yoke-fellows have been brought to the faith of Christ by the faith, conversation, and diligence of the believer, they have been admitted to Baptism,] with the Drs. premised arguings and paraphrase in his Letter, qu. 4. §. 31, 82. and here, whether I have not rightly set down the Apostles argument as the Dr. expounds him, and the Dr. hath not changed here his frame of the Apostles argument to hide the deformity of it, and whether there be any truth in it that I have not understood his paraphrase, that I have substituted another way of arguing in his name in stead of it, or have combated with the shadow of my own creating; and whether these propositions [the children of a believing yoke fellow who is joyned to an unbeliever had not been admitted to Christian Baptism, if some other unbelieving yoke-fellow had not been brought to the faith. The children of a believer by an unbelieving yoke fellow have been admitted to Christian Baptism, by reason that it hath been usual that other believers have brought the unbeliever to the faith] are not included in the Apostles argument according to the tenour of his reasoning conceived by the Dr. and whether there be any shew of connexion in the consequence of the Apostle as the Dr. expounds it, and whether he hath not shifted in stead of answering, and imputed fiction to me that he might hide his own collusion.

SECT. XCV.

Dr. Hammonds reasons from the terms holy and unclean for his sense of baptized or not baptized are refelled.

THe Dr. next pretends to vindicate his reasons for his interpretation from my exceptions.

" My first reason (saith he) is, Because ἁγιος, holy, noting a rela" tive holiness, a setting apart to God, and the lowest degree of that ima" ginable, being the initiating into the Church by Baptism, this must in " reason be here noted by ἁγια holy, as all visible professors, Exr. 9. 2.
" are the holy seed, and in the Epistles of the Apostles, ἁγιοι holy.
" To this he answers, that it being all granted, confirms not the Drs.
" exposition, because 'tis no good argument a genere ad speciem affirma- " tivè, and because infants are not visible professors. But sure when " the species is such, that he that hath not that, hath not any part of the " genus, the argument will thus hold very irrefragably: Suppose that " of the Deacon to be the lowest order of Officers in the Church, and " that without which there is no ascending to any higher degree in the " Ministery, will not then the argument hold, He hath some degree Ec" clesiastical upon him, therefore sure he is a Deacon? Thus sure it is " in this matter, the relative holiness belongs to no person, that is not " baptized, Baptism is the lowest degree of it, and all superiour degrees

" of

" of Apoſtle, Prophet, &c. in the Chriſtian Church are founded in " that, therefore if the infant children be holy, the infant children are " baptized. So again, Baptiſm is the loweſt degree of viſible Profeſſi- " on, therefore if theſe that are ſaid to be holy are viſible Profeſſors, " then ſure they are baptized; And ſo there is no force in that whether " anſwer or exception to my firſt reaſon.

Anſw. That there is no force to avoid my exception in this reply, may appear. 1. That he ſaith nothing to what I ſaid *p.*333. of the 2d. part of the Review, that the term [holy ſeed] *Ezr.*9.2. hath a far dif. ferent notion, as I ſhew in this Review Antipæd. par. 1. ſect. 13, 25. from what the Dr. imagines. 2. Nor doth he here, or any where elſe prove infants to be viſible profeſſors. 3. Nor doth he prove Baptiſm to be the loweſt degree of viſible profeſſion. 4. Nor doth the Dr. prove or can prove, that the holineſs 1 *Cor.*7.14. muſt be meant of a relative holineſs, of ſetting apart to God in the Chriſtian viſible Church, ſhort of real ſaving holineſs. The opinion of matrimonial holineſs I aſſert, with many more, is not yet refuted. They who after Tertullian interpret it of real ſaving holineſs intentional, as *Rom.*11.26. the Jews uncalled are holy, deſignati ſanctitati ac per hoc etiam ſaluti, conceive they have as good proof for it as the Dr. for his. 5. Baptiſm is not proved to be the loweſt degree imaginable of relative holineſs in the Chriſtian Church, nor the loweſt degree of viſible profeſſion. For 1. there is a lower degree by freedome from Idol pollutions, ſuch as Tertullian mentions c. 39. de anima. 2. There is a degree of holineſs by vow or prayer, ſuch as Hannah devoted Samuel by, 1 *Sam.*1.11. which *Joſephus Antiq. l.*5. *c.*11. terms conſecrating or ſanctifying to God, as the Greek verſion terms *Numb.*6.2,3. the ſeparating of the Nazarite by vow a ſanctifying, and the Apoſtle prayer in the uſe of food a ſanctifying it, 1 *Tim.*4.5. 3. There is a lower degree of viſible profeſſion in the catechumeni not yet baptized then Baptiſm is. 4. There is a lower degree of ſanctification of them, according to Auguſtine, *l.*2. *de pecc. mer. & remiſ. c.*26. cited before by the Dr. here, *p.*63,64. when he ſaid, Catechumenos ſecundum quendam modum ſuum per ſignum Chriſti & orationem impoſitionis manuum puto ſanctificari, whence the Dr. himſelf ſaith there, that ſome kind of ſanctification which the unbaptized might have by prayer and impoſition of hands, of which we ſometimes read in the Ancients, as hath elſewhere been ſhewed. 6. Nor is it proved that a perſon may not have the higher degree of holineſs in the Church without Baptiſm. Sure a perſon may be converted, regenerated afore Baptiſm, and ſo holy. And it is yet a queſtion, whether all the Apoſtles and Prophets in the Church were baptized, though I doubt not they were, and that regularly they ſhould be; yet the very queſtioning it ſhews the argument not to hold irrefragably, that he that is not baptized hath no part of relative holineſs in the Church of God, or that all ſuperiour degrees of Apoſtle, Propher, &c. in the Chriſtian Church are founded in that. Laſtly, it is apparent that the holineſs 1 *Cor.*7.14. is not Baptiſm, in that it is from the birth, and ſo afore Baptiſm, and from the parent not from the Miniſter, may be though the child be never baptized, is derived from the lawfulneſs of marriage ſociety, not from the belief of one or both parents, and therefore not Baptiſm, as the Dr. (ſo far as I know) without any example ancient or modern makes it.

He adds, My ſecond followes from the notation of ἀκάθαρτα Acts 10. 14. for thoſe that muſt not be received into the Church, as on the other ſide Gods cleanſing is Gods reputing him fit to bee partaker of this priviledge, whereby it appears now fitly receiving and not receiving to baptiſm] are expreſt by [holy and unclean] To this he anſwers by acknowledging the concluſion, viz. the fitneſs of the expreſſion, All his exception is againſt my premiſe, the notion of unclean, Act. 10 which, ſaith hee, ſignifies there not onely one out of the Church, but alſo one that a Jew might not go into or eat with. To this I reply that my concluſion being granted, I may ſafely part with that, which inferred it, as when I am arrived at my journeys end I have no further need or uſe of my horſe or guide that brought me thither: Let it be remembred, that [holy and unclean] fitly expreſs thoſe that are received or not received to baptiſm, and then I am ſure I have not offended againſt the propriety of the words, by concluding from this text, that in the Apoſtles time the believers children were received to Baptiſm; And if I have as little offended againſt the rational importance of the words in that place (as I hope hath formerly appeared that I have) then I hope I am perfectly innocent in inducing my concluſion. As for the uſe of the phraſe Act. 10. though now I need not contend, yet I may add that the notion of not entring to and eating with containing under it this other of not baptizing (for ſure he might not baptize thoſe to whom he might not enter) and the baptizing Cornelius (and not onely the entring to him) being the end for which Peter received that viſion) I ſtill adhere that ἀκάθαρτα in that place, ſignifies one peculiarly that muſt not be received into the Church by Baptiſm, and the holineſs on the contrary reception to that priviledge.

Anſw. 1. I granted the fitneſs of the expreſſion onely conditionally, if the holy Ghoſt had ſo thought good, but denied the holy Ghoſt did ſo, and therefore he may offend againſt the propriety of the words, notwithſtanding my conceſſion, and hath as much need of his horſe to get to his journeys end, as if I had not yeelded ſo much. 2. How much he hath offended againſt the rational importance of the Apoſtles words 1 Cor. 7. 14. is ſhewed before. 3. Were the fitneſs of the expreſſion abſolutely granted, yet with the Drs. leave, I conceive he needs to contend about the uſe of the phraſe in his ſenſe, or elſe he will not be able to infer any thing for his purpoſe, ſith it is not the fitneſs of an expreſſion, but the uſe of words which muſt direct us in our expoſitions, as being vis & norma loquendi. 4. That the uſe of it Acts 10. 14. is not for the Drs. purpoſe is manifeſt. For 1. the Dr. thus expounds common or unclean by not received to Baptiſm, now if this were the notion of unclean Acts 10. 14. then when Peter ſaith [I have never eaten any thing common or unclean] hee meanes hee never eat any thing not received into the Church by Baptiſm; and when v. 15. it is ſaid [what God hath cleanſed that call thou not common] the meaning is, what God hath baptized reject thou not from Baptiſm, which is too ridiculous an expoſition to be urged. 2. If it be ſaid that the ὑπόνοια, or covered ſenſe doth import it, neither is that true. For 1. it is certain that in the latent meaning, the Apoſtle diſcerned by the viſion that which is common or unclean to be meant v. 28. of one of another nation, and the eating, keeping company, or going to, which is alſo gathered from Acts 11. 3. where the thing objected was, that he went in to the uncircumciſed, and did eat with them. So that from hence it is manifeſt, that the proper notion of unclean is (in that place according to the ſubſenſe which the viſion aimed at) one that being uncircumciſed might not be gone into to talk with familiarly, and and eat with, though he were one that feared God. Which cannot bee meant of want of baptiſm, for ſo the clean, to wit, the unbelieving Jews were unclean, they were not baptized with Chriſtian baptiſm, but of excluſion from familiar ſociety and converſe. 2. On the other ſide, by Acts 10. 15. what God hath cleanſed that call thou not common, Peter v. 28. ſhews he underſtood allowance to go to him, preach to him, eat with him, as one accepted of God, v. 35. So that the cleanſing is the taking away of that reſtraint which was upon the Jewes, of converſe with the Gentiles. Which being conſidered, if unclean Acts 10. 14. were to be expounded in the ſame notion which the Dr. imagines to be 1 Cor. 7. 14. not admitted to the Church by Baptiſm, then when God bid Peter count nothing common or unclean, he bid him count no Gentile unbaptized, and when he ſaid what God hath cleanſed, it ſhould be whom God hath baptized, or admitted by Baptiſm into the Church. And when the Apoſtle according to the Dr. uſeth unclean 1 Cor. 7. 14. in the notion in which it is uſed Acts 10. 14. he ſhould mean, your young children were ſuch as a man might not go into, converſe with, talke with familiarly, eat with, which certainly being meant of infants as the Dr. conceives, is ſo ridiculus an expoſition, as a ſober man would not put upon any profane Author, much leſs on the ſacred writers.

As for that which the Dr. ſaith, that the notion of not entring to, and eating with, contained under it this other of not baptizing, for ſure hee might not baptize thoſe to whom he might not enter; it is ſo frivolous, as that it is unfit for a man that takes on him to make Annotations on the New Teſtament. For if this were good reaſoning, it would follow on the contrary, every ones going in to, and eating with one, were baptizing; and ſith others then Apoſtles or preachers were to go into or not, they were to baptize or not to baptize, and all that men might not go into or eat with, as excommunicate perſons they muſt bee unbaptized, and by the ſame reaſon, ſith ſure a Miniſter may not admit to the Lords Supper, nor a Biſhop ordain him for a Prieſt, to whom he might not enter; the notion of not entring to and eating with, contained under it this other of not communicating and not ordaining, and conſequently holy contains under it communicating, and ordaining, and ſo your young children are not unclean but holy, ſhould bee by this very reaſoning expounded, they are admitted to the Lords Supper, and ordained Prieſts.

And what he adds; And the baptizing Cornelius (and not onely entring to him) being the end for which Peter received that viſion, I ſtill adhere that ἀκάθαρτα in that place, ſignifies one peculiarly that muſt not be received into the Church by Baptiſm, and the holineſs on the contrary reception to that priviledge, may as well ſerve to prove unclean hath the notion of one excluded from the Lords Supper, or heaven, and holy on the contrary the reception to theſe, ſith theſe were the ends of Peters going in, as well as baptizing, and ſo to ſay your young children are holy, ſhall be as much as your young children are admitted to the Lords Supper and to Heaven. Theſe conceits of the Dr. go upon two groſs miſtakes. 1. As if unclean were uſed in a ſenſe ſuitable to the Eccleſiaſtical practiſe in the Chriſtian Church, whereas it is uſed according to the uſe and conceipt of the Jews peculiarly. 2. As if the notion of a word did extend to the Concomitants and ends of the act expreſſed by it; which if true, then election, regeneration, ſhould have the notion of juſtifying and glorifying, preaching the notion of adoption and ſanctification. But enough of this raw conceit of the Doctor, he goes on thus.

be

"My third reaſon, ſaith hee, being taken from the uſe of the He"brew קדש to ſanctifie, for waſhing any part of the body, and on oc-
"caſion of that, mentioning a conjecture that the uſe of holineſs for "baptiſm, might perhaps intimate that the primitive baptiſms were not "always immerſions, but that ſprinkling of ſome part might be ſuffici-
"cient; he hath a reply to each of theſe: To the former, that if this
"reaſon were good, then the husbands being ſanctified by the wife, muſt
"ſignifie his being baptized or waſhed by her; to the latter, that I have
"in my writings ſo oft acknowledged the Baptiſm of the Jews and Chri-
"ſtians to be immerſion of the whole body, that I ought to be aſhamed "to ſay the contrary, and that I can hardly believe my ſelf in it. To "theſe I anſwer, firſt to the former. 1. That I that affirm ſanctifi-
"cations among the Jews to ſignifie waſhings, do alſo know that it hath
"other ſignifications, and that that ſignification is in each text to bee
"choſen, which ſeems moſt agreeable in all thoſe reſpects which are "to be conſiderable in the pitching on any interpretation; conſequent-
"ly that the wives baptizing the husband being a thing abſurd and ut"terly unheard of in the Church of God, whether in the Apoſtles or "ſucceeding ages, this ſenſe may not reaſonably be affixt to it; where"as the baptizing of infants being by the ancients affirmed to be recei"ved from the Apoſtles, it is moſt reaſonable to underſtand the words "of this, though not of the other (and ſo to apply the obſervation
"(as it is viſible I did) to the latter, not former part of the "verſe.

Anſw. This is no anſwer, but a grant that the ſanctifying 1 Cor. 7. 14. cannot be meant of Baptizing, ſith it is abſurd ſo to expound it; and conſequently, a yeelding the argument from the calling the Jewes waſhings ſanctifications, to have no force. Nor doth he at all help himſelf by ſaying, it is moſt reaſonable to apply it to the latter part of the v. For there is no reaſon in it, that becauſe the Jewes uſe the word ſanctification for Baptiſm, therefore holy (which is another word, and in another predicament then ſanctified, which is in Paſſion, and the other in quality or relation) and not ſanctified 1 Cor. 7. 14. is as much as Bap-

tiſm, and becauſe the word ſanctifications hath other ſignifications then waſhings, and may not be underſtood of Baptiſm in the fore-part of 1 Cor. 7. 14. therefore holy, no where proved to be as much as baptized, it is as much as admitted to the Church by Baptiſm, and becauſe the Ancients mention infant Baptiſm to be received from the Apoſtles, as they do other unwritten traditions of obſerving Eaſter, Lent, giving infants the Communion, &c. therefore holy 1 Cor. 7. 14. muſt be without any example in Scripture or Father of that uſe of the word, bee expounded thus [admitted in the Church by Baptiſm.]

But yet the Dr. is loth to confeſs his errour, but adds. And yet 2. if we ſhall diſtinguiſh of the notion of [by] and expound [ὑπὸ γυναικὸς, by the woman] of the perſwaſion, that the woman hath uſed to bring her husband to baptiſm, and not of her miniſtry in baptizing wee may very conveniently ſo interpret the former part of the verſe alſo that by the woman, ὁ ἀνὴρ ἁγιάζεται, the unbelieving husband hath been brought to baptiſm, viz. by being brought to faith, to which this priviledge belongs.

Anſw. 1. The Dr. brings no example of ſuch a notion of [by] or of ſuch a uſe of the term [ſanctified] any where elſe, and how ill it ſuits with the Apoſtles argument, is ſhewed fully before. 2. But were it yeelded him, 1. it would ſhew that the alledging of the Jews calling their waſhings ſanctifications, to expound 1 Cor. 7. 14. by was impertinent, the Jews ſanctifications being not by perſwaſion of another, but of themſelves according to Gods appointment, nor do they note firſt bringing to the faith, and then admiſſion by another to baptiſm, but waſhing themſelves; and that is one reaſon why neither the uſe of ſanctified nor holy, 1 Cor. 7. 14. can be conceived to be alluſive to the Jewiſh ſanctifications mentioned by the Dr. ſith in them the high Priest waſhed himſelf, and but his hands and his feet ten times, but Chriſtian baptiſm was by the miniſtry of another, by immerſion of the whole body, and therefore this third reaſon of the Dr. is altogether improbable. 2. If [ſanctified 1 Cor. 7. 14.] be to be expunded [brought to the faith and ſo to Baptiſm] [holy is in like ſort ſo be expounded, and then we might allow the Drs. expoſition of [holy 1 Cor. 7. 14.] without any detriment to our cauſe, it being granted the children of believers were brought to the faith, and ſo to baptiſm.

Again ſaith the Dr. As for his ſecond exceptions to my conjecture, founded in the uſe of טָהֵר ſanctifications for partial, not total waſhings. 1. I anſwer, that I mention it onely as a conjecture, with a perhaps and lay no more weight upon it. 2. That for Chriſtian baptiſm I no where affirm that it was onely by immerſion, nor on the other ſide that it was always by ſprinkling, but diſjunctively, either by one or the other (as by the words cited by him from pract. cat. l. 6. c. 2. is clear) ſuppoſing indeed that Chriſts appointment was not terminated to either, and ſo ſatisfied by either.

Anſw. 1. The Dr. by putting in his conjecture, ſhewed his willingneſs to have maintained by ſome colour, the abuſe of ſprinkling in ſtead of baptiſm, which his own words cited by me, made me fear hee did againſt his own light, and the contrary is not cleered by this ſlight excuſe. 2. The Drs. own words alledged by me, plainly ſhewed that he knew knew the primitive baptisms were alwayes immersions of the whole body, nor was any other use of water for baptism, till the corrupt use of the circumfusion of the Clinici in the third Century began. Nor do his words practic cat. l. 6. sect. 2. cleer the contrary to be conceived by him; For when he saith, By Christ appointment whosoever should bee thus received into his family, should be received with this ceremony of water, therein to be dipt, i. e. according to the primitive ancient custome, to be put under water three times; and then adds, or instead of that to bee sprinkled with it; though he make Christs appointment disjunctively the one or the other, yet he makes the primitive ancient custome, onely to bee by putting under water; as in like manner p. 35. and this was indeed the ancient primitive custome, Rom. 6. 3, 4. Col. 2. 12. shew, and the known saying of Tertullian ter mergitamur. And of any one, Dr. Hammond should acknowledge it, who distinguisheth the sanctifications of a part from טְבִילָה, that is Baptism, and saith, the Jewish solemnity of Baptism, which he would have the original and pattern of our Baptism, to be the washing of the whole body. As for his propounding Christs appointmen disjunctively, it discovers more of his audacious and corrupt dealing by making that appointment, which is but one way disjunctive, either that way which is acknowledged to be Christs, or another way instead of it, which cannot b shewn to have been practised by the Apostles, or any Apostolical men in the primitive times. And in this thing it is necessary that the evil dealing of Dr. Hammond, Mr. Baxter, and others, be shewed, who do most presumptuously add to the ordinance of Baptism; when Christ hath appointed one dipping, they add sprinkling; when Christ appoints onely Disciples made by preaching the Gospel to be baptized, they add infants who are not such, and by a fictitious title make them Disciples by their parents faith, who learn and profess nothing themselves; (which he that read considerately Mr. Baxters arguments in his 2. disputation of the right to Sacraments, may see sufficiently refuted, and may think he could not write that Book without regret of conscience for what hee had written in his Book of Baptism) and when the New Testament makes none members of the visible Church Christian, but professors of faith, they add infants of their own head; and when the Scripture and Fathers in setting down the institution and practise of Baptism, plainly expres both so, as that they confess them to bee onely meant of the aged, yet would have them to include also infants, contrary to the plain words and their own confessions, and in their expositions so expound the texts, as expressing onely what agrees to the aged, and yet in their arguments urge the same for baptizing of infants, which they could not do if they did not plead for infant Baptism against their own light, or were not extremely heedless at one time of what they say at another: How ever it be with them, sure I am, no conscientious Christian hath reason to be satisfied by sprinkling, when Christ hath appointed no other then dipping, nor with infant Baptism when, as Mr. Baxter hath fully proved in his 2d. disput. that there is a necessity of profession of repentance and faith before, and none are to bee baptized but those that are first professed Disciples of Christ, and though he ſuppoſeth believers children Diſciples, and the parents profeſſion to be inſtead of their own, yet no where proves it, nor offers any proof, but what is meerly conjectural, nor can any Paſtours or teachers of Churches, without moſt arrogant preſumption baptize or take for viſible Churchmembers infants, whom neither Chriſt, nor his Apoſtles did baptize or take for ſuch. But I return to the Dr.

" My laſt reaſon, ſaith he, is taken from the effect of the legal un-
" cleanneſs contrary to thoſe their ſanctifications, viz. removing men " from the congregation; agreeable to which it is that thoſe ſhould bee " called holy, who in the account of God ſtood ſo, that they might be " received into the Church. To this he anſwers, that it is ſaid without " proof that the uncleanneſs excluding from, and ſanctification reſtoring
" to the tabernacle, are proportionable to the notion here given, of the " childrens being excluded or included in the Church, asking why Cor- " nelius ſhould be counted out of the Church being a devout man? But " to this I reply, that that which is ſo manifeſt needed no further proof,
" for what two things can be more proportionable, or anſwerable the " one to the other, then the Jews calling thoſe unclean and holy, who " were excluded from and reſtored to the tabernacle, and the Chriſti-
" ans calling them unclean, and holy that were excluded from and re" ceived into the Church, the excluſion and reception being the ſame
" on both ſides, as alſo the uncleanneſs and holineſs, and the propor" tion lying onely betwixt the Jewiſh tabernacle, and the Chriſtian
" Church, which ſurely are very fit parallels as could have been " thought on.

Anſw. Were it ſo, yet it had been neceſſary to have proved the holy Ghoſt made them parallels, that from the anſwerableneſs a reaſon might be taken to prove thence the ſenſe of holy and unclean 1 Cor. 7.14. after the Drs. minde: For it is not the fitneſs of an expreſſion, that muſt prove the ſenſe we would, but the uſe and the matter of the ſpeech, in which the Drs. expoſitions are defective. But the holy Ghoſt no where that I know reſembles the meer viſible Church by the tabernacle, but the inviſible, in which the ſpirit of God dwels, or rather every believing Saint, 1 Cor. 3. 16, 17. & 6. 19. Heb. 3. 6. 1 Tim. 3. 15. or the body of Chriſt, Joh. 2. 19. Heb. 8. 2 or heaven, Heb. 9. 24. and the uncleanneſs reſembled by the legal uncleanneſs, is ſuch as excludes, and the holineſs ſuch as admits into communion with God, union with Chriſt, entrance into heaven, 2 Cor. 6. 16, 17. Revel. 21. 27. and the ſanctification reſembled by the Jewiſh waſhings, is that which is inviſible by the ſpirit, 1 Cor. 6. 11. not meer outward baptiſm, and therefore if proportion or agreeableneſs could prove a ſenſe of thoſe terms the ſenſe would be fairer for the expounding of holineſs rather of real then relative holineſs.

The Dr. adds, As for his queſtion of Cornelius, it is moſt vain, the whole diſcourſe being not of real but relative ſanctification, and the difference moſt viſible betwixt that ſanctity which was truly in him in reſpect of his devotion, fearing, praying, &c. and that outward privilege of admiſſion into the congregation of the Jews, which alone was the thing which in the account of God or ſober men was denied Cornelius. Theſe be pitifull ſophiſms, and in no reaſon farther to be inſiſted on.

Anſw. All the diſcourſe is not about meere relative ſanctification, ſure Dr. Hammond when he expounds ſanctified 1 Cor. 7. 14. by being converted to the faith, and the ſame with ſaved v 16. means it of real ſanctification. But were all the diſcourſe about relative ſanctification, yet the queſtion was not vain, but attains the end for which propounded, ſith Cornelius accounted unclean by Peter, Acts 10. 14. was not out of the Church of God, no nor out of the Church viſible, being of good report among all the nation of the Jews, Acts 10. 22. though he were not in the policy of Iſrael, and therefore uncleanneſs hath another notion then the non-admiſſion into the viſible Church Chriſtian by Baptiſm, of which is enough ſaid before. Nor are any of theſe things I alledge ſophiſms, but plain anſwers, nor any otherwiſe pitifull, then that they meet with ſuch a ſuch a ſuperficial and ſlight reply from the Dr. Of the different interpretations from the Drs. of 1 Cor. 7. 14. in Tertullian c. 39. de anima, and Auguſtin l. 2. de pecc. mer. & remiſ. c. 26. and l. 3. c. 12. enough before. And Hieromes different interpretation, is that which is in the comment. on 1 Cor. 7. 14. in theſe words left out by the Dr. Item ideò vir & uxor invicem ſanctificantur; quia ex traditione Dei ſanctæ ſunt nuptiæ, mentioned here before ſect. 92. And Ambroſe or who ever was the Author of that Commentary under his name in locum operum tom. 4. ſancti ſunt] quia de conjugiis legitimis natis, both which agree with my expoſition. The two teſtimonies the Dr. brings out of Cyprian and Nazianzen are impertinent, the former makes a diſtinction between baptizandum and ſanctificandum, the latter if it call Baptiſm ſanctification, yet it doth not call Baptiſm ſanctity, the word aſcribed to children 1 Cor. 7. 14. and therefore rather the firſt part of the v. is to be expounded if any thus, ſanctified id eſt Baptized, which yeelds ſuch a ſenſe as the Dr. will not own, and is ſhewed before not at all to be ſatisfied by him. Neither the antiquity of Cyprian, nor Gregory Nazianzen's skill in Greek aſſures us they underſtood the ſacred Dialect. How much Tertullian, whom Cyprian counted his maſter, and how much Origen of whom Gregory Nazianzen learned, miſtook the meaning of Scripture, and generally the Fathers, may be diſcerned by their writings remaining, or if any liſt to take a ſhort cut to ſatisfie himſelf, he may ſee much in Sixt. ſenenſ. Biblioth. l. 5. and 6.

In the 4th. ch. ſect. 1. of Dr. Hammonds Defence there is little or nothing which at preſent I need reply to much of it being ſpoken to before. Onely I have thought it neceſſary to go back beſides my firſt purpoſe to Review the two firſt Chapters of his Defence, becauſe he doth ſo often tell me, that I do inartificially deny his concluſion without anſwering to his premiſes.

SECT. XCVI.

The Jewish custome of Baptism for initiation, was not the pattern of Christian Baptism; as Dr. Hammond would have it.

CH. 1. Sect. 1. of his Defence Dr. Hammond having excepted against my words about waving (though it were his own term qu. 4. §. 21.) the more imperfect ways of probation tels us; though infant Circumcision prove not infant Baptism a duty, Yet it evidences the lawfulneſs and fitneſs of it among Chriſtians by analogy with Gods inſtitution of circumciſion among the Jews, and ſo certainly invalidates all the arguments of the Antipædobaptiſt (i.e. of Mr. T.) drawn from the incapacity of infants, from the pretended neceſſity that preaching ſhould go before baptizing from the qualifications required of thoſe that are baptized, &c. For all theſe objections lying and being equally in force againſt circumciſing of infants, &c. And this the rather, becauſe the Apoſtle compares Baptiſm of Chriſtians with Circumciſion, Col. 2. 11, 12. and then adds ſome ſayings of Fathers, which are of no validity for his purpoſe, of the other there is nothing true. For the arguments drawn from incapacity, fore going neceſſity of preaching, qualifications, have their force from the inſtitution of Baptiſm by Chriſt, which lye not at all againſt the circumciſing infants, which hath another inſtitution, and hath no analogy with Baptiſm to acquit infant Baptiſm for unlawfulneſs or unfitneſs, except the Dr. can prove (which I am ſure he can never do) that the Church (as in the prelatical language he uſeth to ſpeak) hath power to make that lawfull and fit to be done in the Sacraments of Chriſt, which is otherwiſe than Chriſt hath appointed. The Apoſtle doth not at all compare baptiſm of Chriſtians with Circumciſion, Col. 2. 11, 12. But theſe things are ſo fully argued Review part. 2 ſect. 5, &c. here ſect. 8. that till theſe ſections are better anſwered then Dr. Hammond doth here, the arguments will be valid againſt infant Baptiſm.

The force of the Drs. urging Chriſts actions to little ones, Mark 10. 16. Matth. 19. 14. is ſo little as that in his Letter qu. 4. §. 12. he confeſſeth they come not home diſtinctly to the baptizing of infants, nor do they prove any unreaſonableneſs or uncharitableneſs in our objections againſt their baptizing of them, whom the Dr. affirms not either Chriſt or his Apoſtles to have baptized, who had reaſon and charity enough to have done it, if they had judged it fit to have been done.

That Matth. 18. 6. is ridiculouſly applied to little children in age, is demonſtrated Review part. 2. ſect. 17. Auguſtins saying credit in altero qui peccavit in altero, and his reckoning infants baptized among believers, is beſides the Book, I mean the Scripture, and to be judged as no better then a fond conceit. The lawfull baptizing of ſome profeſſors of faith who prove hypocrites, is no colour to baptize non profeſſors of faith. 'Tis rightly done, that that which contains no relation of

Christs or his Apostles baptising infants, is put by him among the more imperfect probations, and such his alleging 1 Cor. 7. 14. is already shewed to be.

That which the Dr. saith Sect. 2. that the Fathers with one consent testifie the receiving our infants to Baptism, to bee received from the Apostles as the will of Christ himself, is so manifestly false, that, the very first of the Fathers who makes mention of it Tertullian in his book of Baptism ch. 18. diswades it and useth arguments against it, and those arguments as well are against the believers infants Baptism as the unbelievers, whereby it is evident he opposed the Baptism of any infants; whereto might be added the case of Nazianzen, together with his judgement forementioned, as evidences that infant Baptism was not the judgement and practice of the universal Church for 1600. years. The Dr. himself confesseth that Peter de Bruis and Henry his Schoster, and the Petrobuciani and Henriciani that sprung from them were opposers of it: and therefore the Dr. doth very much exceed truth in making it the judgment and practice of the universal Church for 1600 years. The term [son of the Church] used by the Dr. is indeed used by Canonists, and others, and it is usual to term the Church a Christians mother, and by the Church the prelates are usually meant, and much advantage made of it to keep Christians under the yoke of Bishops canons. But it is no Scripture term: in it the Elders, Apostles, are termed Fathers, 1 Cor. 4 15. all Christians Brethren and Sisters 1 Cor 7. 15. and the Church being no other then a company of Brethren and Sisters, it is very unfit to call the Church a Christians Mother, and therefore I am willing not to be accounted a son of the Church, nor do I acknowledge that the judgement and practise (if there were any such) of the universal Church for 1600 years (setting aside the Apostles of Christ) hath any force or authority over me, nor do I fear the incurring of Gods displeasure by oppugning or contemning it, but rather considering how the Apostle 2 Thes. 2. 7. tels me, that in his time the mystery of iniquity did begin to work, and the vain altercations about Easter in the 2d. Century, and many other mistakes and blemishes even in the Apostles times and much more after, together with the prediction of the falling away 1 Tim 4. 1. the exceptions against the seven Churches of Asia by our Lord Christ himself, the imperfections that are in the writings of the first Fathers after the Apostles, the exceptions against the histories of the Church, the imposing on the Church supposititious Treatises, the corrupting of authors, I think it the safest way to avoid Gods displeasure, not to rest on the practise or judgement of the universal Church (if there were any such) after the Apostles, but onely on the writings of the New Testament, it being highly unreasonable, as the Dr. saith, that an institution of Christs, such as each Sacrament is, should bee judged of by any other rule (whether the phancies or reasons of men) but either the word wherein the institution is set down, or the records of the practise of Christ or his Apostles in Scripture, which comes nome to the deciding all controversie of faith and manners, and rites necessary to be observed, and needs no other records besides scripture, however conserved or made known to us, whether by unwritten tradition, or in the writings-writings of Fathers, in which there is very much uncertainty, but do deter men from adhering to this way as the inlet to many Popish, and Prelatical abuses and errours; yet deny not good use may be made of the ancient writers for clearing of many truths, if they be read with judgement, and do resolve to review what hath been brought for infant baptism by the Dr. out of other writers besides holy Scripture.

Sect. 3. the Dr. complains of mee, "as doing some injury to his "Book in leaving out one considerable, if not principal part, viz. that "which concerned the native Jewish children, who were baptized as so- "lemnly, as the Proselytes and their children.

Anſ. But by the Drs. leave, in this no injury is done him: For however he mentioned Letter of Resol. qu. 4. sect. 5, 6. Baptism as a known rite solemnly used among the Jews in the initiating of Jews and Proselytes into the Covenant, yet both the words I allege Review part. 2. sect. 24. Out of his Letter q. 4. §. 24. and all other passages I yet finde in his writings, make the Christian baptism of believers and their infants, to bee from the Jewish custome of Baptising Proselytes, and children as the pattern, basis or foundation of it, no where the Baptism of native Jewes, is made the pattern of Christian baptism, though he say §. 24. the baptism of the native Jews was the pattern by which the baptism of the Proselytes was regulated, and wherein it was founded. Yea the Dr. in his practical Catechism l. 6. sect. 2. saith, that as among the Jews when any Proselyte was received in among them and entred, or initiated into their Church, they were wont to use washings to denote their forsaking or washing off from them all their former prophane heathen practises (which did not agree to the native Jews) so by Christs appointment, whosoever should be thus received into his family, should bee received with this ceremony of water, therein to be dipt, i. e. according to the primitive ancient custome, to be put under water threetimes: And in his Letter qu. 4. §. 37. so it is directly the thing that the Jewish practise, in which Christ founded his institution, hath laid the foundation of in baptising Proselytes and their children, and to which the primitive Church conformed. To which I may add, that the proof which the Dr. brings for baptising of infants from Christs appointment, is thus expressed qu. 4. §. 22. receiving of Disciples was the receiving of Proselytes to the Covenant and faith of Christ, a Disciple and a Proselyte being perfectly all one, save onely that the latter denotes a coming from other nation, &c. which shews, that he made the baptising of Proselytes and their children onely, the pattern of Christian baptism.

Next the Dr. sets down his proofs out of the Talmud, Gemara, and Maimonides, and then concludes; "And now I may, I hope assume, "that not onely there is perfect truth in what I now affirm, that Bap- "tism among the Jews belonged to their natives as well as to Proselytes "(even to all that entred into Covenant, and those evidently were the "Jewish children as well as men) but also that this had before been evi- "denced in that resolution of the fourth Quære, which here Mr. T. hath "been pleased to examine, and consequently that it was no small injus- "stice, and unkindness in him both to the Reader and to me, that hee "would omit to take notice of it, but assume and build on it as a thing

"yeilded and granted him by mydiſcourſe, that the Proſelytes only and "not the native Jews were partakers of that Jewiſh baptiſm. This ſure "was a ſtrange infirmity in an anſwer.

Anſw. It is a ſtranger infirmity in a Reply, that whereas I had expreſly in the 2d. Part of my Review ſect. 24. p. 307. ſaid, after the baptiſm Exod. 19. 10. the Jews did not baptize Jews but onely Proſelytes, the Dr. ſhould not take notice, that I limited my denial of the baptizing the native Jews, to the time after the baptiſm Exod. 19. 10. Now I think there is not one of his allegations prove, that the Jews baptized native Jews after the giving of the Law. I confeſs I was unwilling to relye on mine own judgement in this, or Mr. Seldens, becauſe the Dr. excepts againſt it (though I thought and think ſtill Mr. Selden was in the right in this, and of any man living I imagined his knowledge in things of this kind, to be moſt accurate and ample) and therefore did write a Letter to my ancient acquaintance Mr. Edward Pocock Profeſſor of the Oriental Languages in Oxford, to inform mee if I were miſtaken: But whether by reaſon of his bodily infirmity, or miſcariage of Letters, or other cauſe, I have received as yet no anſwer. At preſent having not the Books cited by Dr. Hammond, I return this anſwer, that none of the words as he cites them, ſhew that Baptiſm was to the poſteri y of native Jewes, after the giving of the Law for entring the Covenant, not the words Talmud. tr. de repud. Iſrael do not enter into Covenant but by theſe three things, by Circumciſion, by baptizing, and by Peace offering. Nor thoſe in Gemara ad tit. Cheritboth. c. 2. Your fathers did not enter into the Covenant but by circumciſion and Baptiſm, and in Jabimoth c. 4. Rabbi Joſhua ſaid, we find of our mothers that they were baptized and not circumciſed. Nor thoſe of Maimonides tit. Iſurei bia. c. 13. By three things the Iſraelites entred into the Covenant, by Circumciſion, Baptiſm and Sacrifice, and ſoon after, what was done to you, yee were initiated into the Covenant by Circumciſion, and Baptiſm, and Sacrifice. For that out of Gemara, the very words (as the Doctor himſelf obſerves) ſpeak of what the Jews did of old time, not what was a cuſtome continued among the Jews in after times, and ſo I make no queſtion but the words of the Talmud are to be underſtood, ſpecially when the words of Maimonides counted the exacteſt of the Rabbins in the Jewiſh cuſtomes, ſet down thus out of Maimon. in miſ. tom. 2. in Iſſurei biah ch. 13. §. 1, — 6, 11, 14, 15. do plainly ſhew this to have been the meaning of the Hebrew Drs. as I find them in Ainſworth Annot. on Gen. 17. 12. By three things (ſay the Hebrew Drs.) did Iſrael enter into the Covenant, by Circumciſion, and Baptiſm, and Sacrifice. Circumciſion was in Ægypt, as it is written, no uncircumciſed perſon ſhall eat thereof, [Exod. 12. 48.] Baptiſm was in the wilderneſs before the giving of the Law: as it is written, ſanctifie them to day and to morrow, and let them waſh their clothes [Exod. 19. 10.] And Sacrifice, as it is ſaid, And hee ſent young men of the ſons of Iſrael, which offered burnt offerings, &c. [Exod. 24. 5.] And ſo in all ages when an Ethnick is willing to enter into the Covenant, and gather himſelf under the wings of the Majeſty of God, and take upon him the yoke of the Law, he muſt be Circumciſed, and Baptized, and bring a Sacrifice. And if it bee a woman, she must be baptized and bring a sacrifice; as it is written [Numb. 15. 15.] as ye are, so shall the stranger be. How are ye? By Circumcision, and Baptism, and bringing of a Sacrifice: So likewise the stranger throughout all generations, by Circumcision, and Baptism, and bringing a Sacrifice. Out of which words this may bee collected. 1. That the baptizing of Israel whereby they entred into Covenant, was that Exod. 19. 10. 2. That there is not in these passages any thing that shews, that the Jewish Baptism for entring into Covenant, was of native Jews after that time. 3. That the Baptism throughout all generations, according to the Jews, was of strangers. 4. That the Jewish baptism, which was the pattern of Proselytes baptism, according to Numb. 15. 15. was the baptism Exod. 19. 10. and not any baptism of native Jews after that time. Which if true, Dr. Hammonds reasons and allegations are plainly answered, that they prove not a custome of baptizing native Jews in successive generations, to the time of giving the Law at Mount Sinai. In which I am the more confirmed, because so learned a man as Mr. Selden l. 2. de Jure nat. c. 2. de Syn. ed. Ebr. l. c. 3. doth so expresly say it, but also, 1. Because of the speech of the Rabbin mentioned here by the Dr. and in his Letter q. 4. §. 11 who said, That they found that their fathers were circumcised, but not baptized, that is ordinarily, which the Drs. parenthesis seems to limit to Abraham, Isaac, &c. but is to be understood of the Patriarchs generally, and other Jewish ancestors, who were circumcised and not baptized. 2. Because there is no other baptism in all the Old Testament, for entring into the Covenant of the Law, of originary or native Jews mentioned. 'Tis true there is mention of Ezek. 16. 4. of washing an infant in the day of its nativity to supple it, and in the Law many baptisms were Heb. 9. 10. for purifications, none for entring into Covenant, that I find but that. 3. In the relation of the Sichemites being admitted to be one people with the Jews, Gen. 34. 24. circumcision onely was then required without baptism. 4. Where in the N. T. the Apostle ascribes to the Fathers baptism, he doth not mention baptism of water, but their passing through the Sea, and being under the cloud, 1 Cor. 10. 1, 2. for which baptism of water had been apter to shew correspondence to our Baptism, if such a custome of baptizing for entring into the Covenant native Jews had been then in use. 5. Dr. Hammond himself, pract. Cateeh. l. 6 sect. 2. saith, that among the Jews when any Proselyte was received in among them and entred, or initiated into their Church, they were wont to use washings, to denote their forsaking or washing off from them all their former prophane Heathen practises, but this could not be an end in the baptizing of native Jews ordinarily, for they were not born in uncleanness, but sanctity, according to the Hebrew Doctors, having not been polluted with idols, and therefore the end or reason of baptizing Proselytes not agreeing to the native Jews that baptism was not requisite to them, and therfore used not ordinarily of them. It is true when they had gotten strange Gods among them, which defiled them, they were required to be clean and change their Garments, Gen. 35. 2. and perhaps some defilement of the Israelites by idols in Egypt, might occasion that command, Exo. 19. 10. But there was no reason of this in the ordinary entring of the infants of Israel into the Covenant, who were not thus defiled. 6. The baptism of John Baptist for remission of sins was distastful to the Pharisees and Lawyers who thought themselves pure, Luk. 7. 29, 30. therefore it is likely they used not such a baptism of native Jews, as imported an acknowledgement of such defilement as they took themselves and infants to be free from. 7. The Dr. saith Letter of Resol. qu. 4th. §. 18. They that were thus baptized were said to be born again, and that, as if born of a new mother, as it is oft said in the Talmud, to which our Saviour refers, when he talks of regeneration (of which saith S. Paul, baptism is the laver) of being born again from above of water, &c. Joh. 3. 3, 5. And this was so vulgar a notion among the Jews that v. 10. Christ wonders at Nicodemus, that he understood it not: Art thou a ruler in Israel and knowest not these things? But if there were such a regeneration by water of native Israelites, which had been the pattern of the baptism of Proselytes, Nicodemus doubtless had known it and answered otherwise, therefore his wonderment was that Christ should require regeneration of him by water, who was a Jew by nature (who need no such regeneration) and not a sinner of the Gentiles, and consequently no such known custome ordinary of baptizing native Jews. 8. The Dr. ibid. §. 17. saith, They that were thus received as Proselytes by Baptism, put off their former relations of kinred, &c. To which surely our Saviour refers, when he talks of leaving father and mother Mark 10. 29. And Tacitus the Historian, nec quicquam prius imbuuntur quàm exuere patriam, parentes, liberos, fratres vilia habere; their Proselytes are first taught after renouncing the gods, to put off their countrey, parents, children, brethren, to despise them. And the later Jews have a saying, that he that hath maried his own sister, or entred any the most incestuous bands, by becoming a Proselyte ceaseth to have that near relation of blood to her, and may now live with her as with a wife: which false superstructure in them is yet a testimony of the truth, wherein it is falsly founded by them And this is a testimony also of this, that the Jews did not thus baptize native Jews, because they never allowed such incest, as they would have done, if they had by baptism regenerated thus native Jews, and conceived of the effect of it, as they did of Proselytes baptism. 9. We read of the circumcision of Christ, John Baptist, Timothy, Paul, but wee read not of their baptism by water as the custome of the Jewes was to enter into the Covenant Proselytes; therefore there was not a custome of baptizing native Jewes infants. 10. There is no way mentioned of initiating Jewish females by any ceremony into Judaism, no description in the Talmud, Gemara, Maimonides, of observing any such thing as the Dr. sets down Letter of resol. q. 4. sect. 9. concerning Proselytes to have been used towards the Jews, sundry of the things done to the Proselytes at their baptism, were such as were proper to strangers; as namely, the baptizing into the name of a freed man or a servant, the limitation of the priviledges of the baptized, which are evidences that this baptism was not used to native Jews, but onely to Gentile Proselytes. All which being considered, there was neither unkindness, nor injustice to Dr. Hammond or his Reader in my discourse, and it is necessary for him to consider better the considerations which I have offered in this matter (unleſs hee will become non ſuit) which have certainly force in them, though this thing were omitted by me, which yet was not perfectly omitted (as his language is) by me, nor the contrary ſuppoſed without proof.

But the Dr. however refuſeth not to attend me in all my motions, and I hope I ſhall at long running overtake him. To what I ſaid, Baptiſm, it ſeems was a cuſtome of all nations as well as the Jews, citing Grotius for it on Matth. 3. 6. and Matth. 28. 19. the Dr. anſwers, Of the truth of this Obſervation I ſhall raiſe no queſtion, onely I wonder what he could fancy from thence to conclude for his advantage, and then he tals to conjecturing. But by my words he might have eaſily reſolved himſelf what I aimed at in this, to wit, to ſhew the Jews baptiſm of parents and children is not undeniably proved to be the pattern of Chriſtian baptiſm, and Chriſts inſtitution of baptiſm but a copy according to that pattern, if it bee true that it were derived from the ſame common fountain, the ſons of Noah in remembrance of the deluge, according to that famous verſe among the Greeks, the Sea ſweeps away all the evils of men, to which S. Peter alludes in making Baptiſm the antitype to Noahs floud, which the Dr. yeilds.

To this I added, that I knew not that Dr. H. or any other hath alleged one paſſage in Scripture or any of the Fathers, that might evince that the cuſtome of baptizing, or baptizing infants, was derived from the Jews initiating Proſelytes by baptiſm. To this, ſaith Dr. H. I anſwer, 1. By asking Mr. T. whether he be ready to pay that reverence to the authority of the Fathers, as to bee concluded by their affirmations? To which I ſay, I am ready to pay that reverence to the Fathers which is meet, but to be concluded by their affirmations is more then is fit, the ſame liberty is to be allowed mee, which learned men take uſually to diſſent from them, when Scripture or reaſon lead another way. He ſaith, If he be, I wonder why the uniform conſent of them that infants are to be baptized ſhould not prevail with him? Anſw. And I wonder 1. that the Dr. ſhould pretend an uniform conſent of the Fathers, that infants are to be baptized, when for the two firſt ages, there's not any juſt evidence of the conſent of one Father for it; in the third there is a diſſent of Tertullian, and in the 4th. of Nazianzen, and the rarity of its uſe; and that upon ſuch erroneous grounds, as it was practiſed with infant communion, which had alike conſent, and in ſo ridiculous a manner, as to propound queſtions of its faith and devotion to an infant, who could not underſtand or ſpeak, and put in others to undertake and anſwer for an infant, who could neither promiſe for them without arrogant preſumption what was not in their power, nor profeſs their faith without apparent untruth argue it to have been a corruption. 2. That the uniform conſent of the Apoſtles and Apoſtolical men, with Chriſt and John Baptiſt in Scripture, ſhould not more prevail with a man who makes the Scripture his Canon, then Fathers of thoſe ages, wherein many errours and corruptions were received, and either hatched or foſtered by them, but that hee ſhould not onely dare to practiſe the corrupt innovation of infant Baptiſm, of which there is no inſtance in Scripture, but alſo omit the baptiſm of beleivers, and oppoſe it, and harden men in their conceits, as if they were were baptized in infancy sufficiently, and for that reason to bee reckoned among Christians, though meer strangers from the knowledge or practise of Christianity.

He adds, If bt be not, why doth he mention this as usefull in this matter?

Answ. To shew how little credit is to be given to the Drs. dictates without proof.

The Dr. adds. " But then 2dly, it must be adverted that this one con" taining two questions in it, 1. Whether this of initiating into the Co" venant by baptism were a Jewish custome? 2. Whether from thence " Christ derived this right of baptizing Christians? The former of these " was that which alone required proving, the latter being of it self evi" dent, without farther probation; supposing onely that the Fathers " testified that to be Christs institution of Baptism, which we find to have " been thus agreeable to the practise customary among the Jewes. And " this he illustrates by the like examples of excommunication, and the " post-c nium, from whence he conc.vs Christ derived the Lords Supper
" and excommunication by the Apostles.

Answ. For present, omitting the instances of the Lords Supper, as derive from the Jewish post c nium, and excommunication Apostolical from Jewish, it hath been yeeld d by me, that Christian baptism was in respect of the rite like Jewish baptism of Proselytes, acknowledged to have been a custome among them for initiating them (not of native Jews after the giving of the Law) into the Covenant, and it is probable that John Baptist followed in the external act that rite, though to another end, he baptizing with the baptism of repentance for remission of sins, they into the observance of the Law for righteousness, and other subjects; John Baptist Jews by nature, not so Pharises. And as John Baptist practised, so Christ appointed, and his Apostles practised Baptism with expres mention of the Trinity or the name of Christ somewhat differently from John: and if the one be said to be derived from the other by way of accommodation, I shall not contend about it, nor do I deny that Christ alluded to this baptism of Proselytes, Joh. 3. 3, 5. in the manner I have expressed before, and the 2d. part of this Review sect. 16. Nor do I deny that the Jewish, Christian, and Gentile baptisms may have their first rise from Noahs deluge, but that which I insist on is, that the Jewish use was was not so conformable to the Christian, as that it can be true that the Jewish was the pattern of the Christian. As for the Fathers, Nazianzen, Macarius, Athanasius, their words seem not to me to make a comparison between the Baptism Jewish and Christian for initiation, but the Christian and Jewish which was occasionally renewed upon any legal defilement, or often iterated by the Priests for purification or sanctifying and so the words of Athanasius cited by the Dr. Intimate, which say, the 3d. is the Legal baptism which the Hebrews had, whereby every unclean person (not every one who was so by nature, as the Dr. adds, but by accident) was baptised in water (as oft as he was defiled) had his garments washed, and so entred into the Camp; which was another baptism then that the Dr. makes the pattern of Christian baptism, to wit, that which was once onely used for initiation, and of this

I think the Dr. findes no mention in the Fathers, nor of the derivation of Christian baptisme from it.

That which the Dr. saith sect. 4. p. 18. from the Talmud, That when a Proselyte is received he must be circumcised, and then when hee is cured, they shall baptise him in the presence of two wise men, saying, Behold he is as an Israelite in all things; adding, A plain testimony (to the sense of those which we formerly produced) of baptising both Jews and Proselyte. (for else how could the Proselyte, upon receiving this, be said to be a Israelite in all things?)

Answ. Two wayes; 1. In respect of the rite, he was circumcised and baptised, as the Israelites at the giving of the Law Exod. 19. 10. (not after that time) were baptised; and the Proselytes posterity were then not after this time of the first initiation into the Jewish people. 2. In respect of priviledges and profession, as it is said Ester 8. 17. Many of the people of the Land became Jews. Neither this then nor the other, are plain or obscure testimonies of baptising native Jews, for initiating into the Covenant after the giving of the Law.

That which I said that I alleged, that Mr. Selden de Syned. Ebræ. l. 1. cap. 3. p. 40, 41. mentions some, who have conceived that the Jewish baptism in initiating Proselytes, was in imitation of Christs example, though he do not believe it; and that Schickardus conceives, they added a certain Baptism to Circumcision, to difference them from Samaritans, to shew that notwithstanding Dr. Hs. supposition, that the whole fabrick he frames of Baptism, is discernable to be built on that basis the customary baptism among the Jews, yet many will conceive it needs more proof then the bare recital of passages out of Jewish writers, is a conclusion drawn out of the premises in the first figure, thus; That is not so discernable but that many will conceive it needs more proof then the bare recital of passages out of Jewish writers, which was not so conceived by Schickard, and some others mentioned by Mr. Selden. But the Drs. supposition was not so conceived by those, Ergo. The major rests on two things; 1. That experience shews, what some others who had understanding to conceive did not conceive to be so, many its likely will not discern. 2. That the later Jewish writers are not such certain proof of the ancient Jews customes, but that more proof may bee justly required then the bare recital of passages in them. It is nor unknown that some have excepted against Ainsworths allegation of Rabbins, and that in his apology for it he himself saith, Some things I note from them, not as approving them my self absolutely, but leaving them to the further consideration of the prudent. Preface to his annot. on Gen. Nor is it unusual for Rabbins to dissent one from another, and Christian writers from Jewish about their customs. Though I have no engine to draw many out of two, nor were two onely mentioned by me (for though Mr. Selden cite onely Petrus Alfunsus for the first, yet he cites him as ascribing the thing to more then one, nec defuere ex Judæis Christiani aliquot, &c.) yet from the instance of two such which have so conceived, I might rationally infer the likelihood, that many would not be satisfied with the passages of the writers cited by him, much less with the inference of the Dr. makes from thence.

But hee tels me, so evidente to how little purpose I said thus much, I confeſs my conceit of ſuch a cuſtome of baptiſing Proſelytes afore Chriſts incarnation among the latter Jewes. Yet I thinke it was to much purpoſe notwithſtanding this my conceit, ſith thereby the foundation of the Drs. fabrick is intimated to be ſuch, as though I pull it not down others may.

I ſaid, that either that cuſtome ſhould begin from Jacobs injunction to his houſhold Gen. 35. 2. or from Gods command Exod. 19. 10. for the Iſraelites to waſh their clothes afore the giving of the Law (though the Jewiſh Doctors allege theſe for it) I do not conceive (not as the Dr. miſrecites me becannot) thoſe places ſpeaking of waſhing Jews by nature, not Proſelytes, whereas the Jews baptized not Jews by nature, as Selden de jure nat. &c. l. 2. c. 4. ſaith, but by profeſſion.

Here, ſaith the Dr. are many weak parts in theſe few words. For 1. the original of the cuſtome among the Jews is but an acceſſary wholly extrinſecal to the matter in hand, and in no reſpect neceſſary to be defined by us. If the cuſtome be acknowledged we need ask no more, for on that and not on that particular original of it, it is that we ſuperſtruct our whole fabrick as far as belongs to infant baptiſm.

Anſw. Be it ſo, yet it was no weak part to examine the original of that cuſtome; nor impertinent, ſith if the original come from unwritten tradition of Elders, it is ſomewhat the leſs likely Chriſt would make it the pattern of his baptiſm, who neglected the traditions of the Elders, and excepted againſt them. Mark 7. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

But then ſecondly, ſaith he, for the two originals here ſet down and both rejected by him, it is a little ſtrange that he ſhould think fit to do ſo, and not to ſubſtitute any third in the place of them.

Anſw. Neither was this any weak part, ſith the originals of ſuch cuſtomes are ſo obſcure, that there are few of them, whoſe head is known. The Dr. I ſuppoſe cannot ſhew the original of the poſt-cœnium among the Jews, of giving milk and honey to the newly baptiſed among Chriſtians, and yet I ſuppoſe the Dr. counts not this a weak part. Yet Mr. Joſeph Mede in his diatr. on Tit. 3. 5. finds another original, to wit, That cuſtome of waſhing infants from the pollutions of the womb, when they are firſt born, mentioned Ezek. 16. 4, 5. and gathered from the anſwer of an Oracle in a ſtory related by Plutarch in his quæſtiones Romanæ, not farre from the beginning.

Hence (ſaith he p. 272.) the Jews before Iohn the Baptiſt came amongſt them, were wont by this rite to initiate ſuch, as they made Proſelytes, (to wit) as becomming infants again, and entring into a new life, and being, which before they had not. Which derivation of its original ſuits better with the opinion of regeneration by it, in alluſion to which as a vulgar notion among the Jews, the Dr. conceivs Chriſt ſpake Iob 3. 5. and the Jews imagined old kindred to be loſt, and this is a good evidence, that they baptized not native Jews, who were not by them conceived to be born again, nor to have any need as being born in ſanctity, not in uncleaneſs Matth. 3. 9. Iob. 8. 33.

" 3dly, saith he, For Iacobs injunction to his houshold, Gen. 35.2. it " is no where vouched by me as the original of this custome among the " Jews, but onely an intimation given, that that other, the command " of God before the giving the Law, was agreeable to what we read of " Iacob to his houshold, and so certainly it is.

Answ. Be it so, yet Jewish Writers and others derive it from Gen. 35.2. and therefore there was no weak part shewed in my intimation of my dissent.

" 4thly, saith he, the command of God, Exod. 19.10. in which Bap- " tism is said to be founded by the Jews, is not (as Mr. T. suggests) " the command to the Israelites to wash their clothes (nothing but the " custome of changing their garments can be founded in that) but the " command to Moses to sanctifie them (Go unto the people and sanctifie " them to day and to morrow) in the Hebrew notion of the word קדושין " sanctifications, for washing, either the whole or some parts of the " body, as is shewed at large §.35. If Mr. T. did this unwittingly, he " may now reform his mistake; if wittingly, &c. I shall not then hope " even this length of words will be sufficient for his conviction.

Answ. Neither in this do I think I shewed weakness or deceit, though I did it wittingly, following herein Mr. Selden, l. 1. de Syned. Eb. c. 3. p. 25, &c. where I think he hath proved by the washing of the cloathes is meant the washing of the whole body, and that thereby is expressed the Baptism whence the later Jews say they took the use of baptzing Proselytes, and not by the term [sanctifie them:] which was to be done by Moses not onely once, but two days together, and seems to be from v. 15. by his keeping them from their wives, and perhaps some other ways whether offering sacrifice, or anointing (by which way also sometimes persons are said to be sanctified as Exod. 40.13. and here the Priests are bid sanctifie themselves, Exod. 19.22.) or some other way. To me it is improbable that by sanctifying, Exod. 19.10. is meant baptising, though I think it a general term comprehending that and some other acts. And thus I hope the Reader will perceive I neither intended to disguise any thing, nor misguide any man.

" Lastly, the Dr. conceives my reason very vain, for the Jews bapti- " zed Jews by nature, and it is evidenced from it they took the baptized " Proselytes, according to Numb. 15.15. And so it is evident, that of " Exod. 19.10. being the original of baptizing native Jews, may, and " must be the original of baptizing the Proselytes.

Answ. But neither doth it yet appear to me there is any weak part or vanity in this reason, nor hath the Dr. proved the custome of baptising Iews by nature, nor do I find the evidences the Dr. brings to oppose Mr. Selden, or that I made any misadventure in my few words, sect. 5. Dr. H. thinks reason not to be tied to Mr. Seldens authority, which I reject when 'tis not for my turn; which I grant when the Dr. gives such reason of dissent as I did in my rejection of Mr. Selden's interpretation of 1 Cor. 10.1. And for the Drs. interpretation, neither hath he cleared it by his shewing my mistake of his meaning. For neither were the native Iews wont to be initiated by Baptism, nor is my reason avoided against his his interpretation. For if the ſenſe of the Dr. bee, our Fathers were baptized into Moſes as native Jews are wont to be initiated by baptiſm, yet the Dr. errs from the Apoſtles meaning, which is, that our Fathers the Iſraelites were baptized into Moſes, as well (not as the Jews in after time by their Baptiſm, but) as wee Chriſtians by Chriſtian Baptiſm into Chriſt. Whether the Jews cuſtome was to baptize native Jews after the giving the Law, hath been argued before; I proceed to my main poſition, and the Drs. anſwer to it.

I ſet down my poſition thus; Nor do I think it true that the cuſtomary uſe of the Jews in baptizing Proſelytes and their children, was the pattern of Chriſts inſtitution of Baptiſm, and the Apoſtles and firſt Churches practiſe. For according to the cuſtome of the Jews, John Baptiſt, and Chriſts Apoſtles ſhould have baptized no native Jews, which was not ſo, but of all nations as Chriſt appointed, Matth. 28. 19. To this the Dr. anſwers 1. by aſſerting they did baptize native Jews. To this the Reply is by denial of this, and referring to the proof before.

2. Saith the Dr. Nay ſo they might, though the Iews had baptized none but Proſelytes, for to that it would bear juſt proportion, that they ſhould baptize both Iews and Gentiles, in caſe both of them came in as Proſelytes.

Anſw. But this anſwer is a fallacy a little too groſs to deceive any man of common underſtanding. For if the Jews baptized no native Jews, but Proſelytes (not to Chriſt) but to the Jewiſh people, and their baptiſm was the pattern (which was the Drs. word) of Chriſtian baptiſm, then Chriſt ſhould have appointed, and Iohn Baptiſt and the Apoſtles practiſed baptiſm to no Jew, though a Proſelyte to Chriſt; For each thing ought to be appointed and done according to the pattern, and no otherwiſe, that which is otherwiſe is not according to the pattern, though it bear a proportion with it. My argument was not as the Dr. makes it, The cuſtome was to baptize Proſelytes and not natives; therefore Chriſt if he obſerved that cuſtome was not to baptize native Iews, but thus; therefore if Chriſt had made their cuſtome his pattern, he would not have appointed them to be baptized. If Moſes had varied from the pattern ſhewed him in the Mount, he had not made it his pattern, ſo it had been in this, if the Jewiſh baptiſm had been Chriſt and his Apoſtles pattern.

2. I ſaid, Chriſt would not have avouched the baptiſm of Iohn to be from heaven and not from men, if it had been in imitation of, and conformity to the Jewiſh cuſtome. To this the Dr. ſaith, "But I wonder what appearance of concludency there is in that reaſon? May not any thing be from heaven or by Gods appointment which is derived from a Jewiſh cuſtome? God may appoint a ceremony known among men to be uſed in his ſervice.

Anſw. I grant it, but then the appointment of God is the pattern by which it is to be regulated, not mens cuſtome; I do not conceive that can be ſaid to be from heaven or God but from men, which is derived from, founded in and regulated by as its pattern, a cuſtome of men; as the Dr. ſaith of the Chriſtian baptiſm, that it is derived from, founded in and regulated by the Jewiſh baptiſm (not pretended to bee an inſtitution of God but an humane invention) as the pattern whence it is copied out even by Christ, according to the Dr. Letter of resol. qu. 4. §. 24.

3. If it had been the pattern I said, it is likely some where or other some intimation would have been given, as the Directory for Christians in the use of Baptism. This, saith the Dr. is too frivolous to require reply; for besides that, the negative argument were of no force, if it were as is pretended; It already appears that there are in the Jewish writers more then intimations of this custome, and some indications of it even in the Scripture it self; as Joh. 3. 5, 10. And for any plainer affirmations, what need could there be of them, when both the matter it self speaketh plainly, that there was no need of words to those that knew the Jewish customes, as the first writers and readers of the New Testament did, and when Christs sole authority and practise of his Apostles were sufficient Directory for the Christians in the use of baptism?

Answ. The Dr. might more truly have said, this reason is too weighty to be removed by his reply. For 1. the thing it self is of very great moment to tender consciences, who know of what moment it is that the great solemn ordinance of Baptism should not be prophaned, but rightly used. 2. Without a certain Directory, no person can with peace seek Baptism, nor Minister give it. 3. The Apostle saith for want of right observing the Lords Supper (and there is the like reason of Baptism) Gods judgement overtook the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 11. 30. 4. That an abuse is to be rectified by Christs appointment, 1 Cor. 11. 23. Though the Dr. say, the Lords Supper was derived and lightly changed from the Jewish observance of the post-canium, yet did the Apostle not make their custome the Directory to regulate it by, but Christs appointment and example; and therefore such a negative argument is of invincible force in this case, if it be as I pretend; there is no intimation given in Scripture of that custome as the Directory for Christians in the use of Baptism, therefore that custome is not the pattern by which it is to be regulated, For otherwise it were very tyrannous, for Christ to impose a Law on mens consciences, to practise a rite after a pattern altogether unknown, and not so much as directed to. To say the first writers and readers of the New Testament knew the Jewish customes, is nothing to us, unless they had told us what they were, and that wee are to follow them. And if they did not tell us, they dealt unfaithfully in not doing that which was necessary to bee done for our information. 5. The declarations in the Jewish writers cannot be our Directory unless we were directed to them as our rule, or they were as the Canonical Scriptures to us. 6. The Jewish writers which mention this custome are later writers then the Apostles time, and therefore they could not bee the Directory, except we were referred to them by prognostication. 7. The Jewish writers could not be a Directory, except they could be had and read by those that need information from them. But how few of those millions of Christians and Preachers, who have need of direction in this thing, have heard much less have read, the Jewish writers, the Talmud, Gemara, Maimonides? 8. How uncertain are their determinations, even to those that read them, how cross one to another, appears somewhat by what is said before. 9. Their intimations of this cuſtome are but obſcure, and their declarations in ſundry of the points in difference with ſo little evidence, that ſuch as Dr. H. and Mr. Selden differ about them. 10. The indications in Scripture Job. 3. 5, 10. are not ſuch but that (as hath been ſhewed) it may well be doubted, whether they point at the cuſtome of baptizing for initiating into Covenant, or another uſage at the birth of infants. 11. The matter it ſelf ſpeaketh not at all to us who know not the uſage. 12. The Dr. himſel ſaith p. 8. here, It is highly unreaſonable that an inſtitution of Chriſts, ſuch as each Sacrament is, ſhould be judged of by any other rule, but either the words wherein the inſtitution is ſet down, or by the records of the practiſe, whether of Chriſt or the Apoſtles, therefore it is highly unreaſonable that the controverſie of infant Baptiſm ſhould be judged by Jewiſh writers. 13. If Chriſts ſole authority, and practiſe of his Apoſtles, be ſufficient Directory for Chriſtians in the uſe of Batiſm, as the Dr. ſaith here, he doth very ill to make the Jewiſh cuſtome not known but by Jewiſh writers of dubious credit the pattern of it, and to expound Chriſts inſtitution by it, as if the Dial were to be ſet by the clock, and not the clock by the Dial; and all the Drs. pains about the Jewiſh cuſtome of baptiſing is ſuperfluous, and ſo onerous to the reader; and his way of probation of infant Baptiſm, which he counts more perfect then other ways, is found to be moſt imperfect and of no validity, but meerly deluſory.

I added 4. The inſtitution and practiſe would have been conformable to it. The Dr. tels me, And ſo I ſay and have made it cleur that it was, as far as to the controverſie in hand we are or can bee concerned in it. To which I return 1. That if the Jewiſh cuſtome were the pattern whence Chriſt copied out Baptiſm, it was ſo in all things, or elſe it was not the pattern; no man calls that the pattern, which having many particulars in it, is followed but in one. 2. The Dr. hath not made it appear by any teſtimony of Scripture or Father, but onely by his own confident ſpeeches, that ever Chriſt copied out his inſtitution of Baptiſm from the Jewiſh cuſtome, or if he did, it is moſt evident both from the Commiſſion Matth 28. 19. and from all the practiſe in the New Teſtament, if he altered it in any thing he altered it in this thing; though the Dr. would face us down, He hath made clear (by nothing but his own ſayings) that the inſtitution and practiſe of Chriſt and his Apoſtles have been conformable to it, as far as to the controverſie in hand he is or can bee concerned in it. Yet he hath ſo much ingenuity as to add, But ſaith Mr. T. the contrary appears, adding one main inſtance of the inconformity, and 14. leſſer diſparities; The main diſparity, ſaith he, is in their baptizing no infants of the Gentile at their firſt converſions, whereas the Jews baptized onely the Gentiles infants at their firſt proſelyting, not the infants of thoſe who were baptized in infancy. For the former of theſe he offers no manner of proof beyond his own affirmation, and therefore it is ſufficient to deny it as he knowes we do, and evidently begs the queſtion in aſſuming and not offering any proof to the contrary.

Anſw. This is refuted ſo fully by all the fore going Sections of that Book of mine to which he anſwers, and the confeſſions of my Antago-nists, and the story of the New Testament all along, besides what is said in this part of the Review, sect. 52. 94. that I think the Dr. hardly could say this without reluctancy of conscience. That he denied, that at their first conversions no infants of the Gentiles were baptized by the Apostles I did not know, yea I had reason from his own words Letter of resolut. qu. 4. §. 21. to conceive he did not deny it, forasmuch as if any place did evince the baptizing of infants of Gentiles at their first conversion, they must be those places Acts 16. 33. 1 Cor. 1. 16. Yet the Dr. saith, the mention in Scripture of the Apostles baptizing a whole household at once, Acts 16. 33. is not of it self demonstrative or convincing: because that wider phrase may possibly be restrained to those that heard and believed in that family, and it is not certain of either of these, the Goalers or Stephanus household, that they had any so young as infants in their family; therefore it is confessed, that no concluding argument can be deduced thence. If he deny it now he affirms the contrary, and so is to prove it, which that he either hath done or ever will, I do not imagine. A negative argument from Divine testimony in this case is demonstrative, till the contrary be made good.

The Dr. adds, For the second, that of the Jewish practise he pretends no more then what hee had before cited by reference (but now sets down in words) viz. the affirmation of Mr. Selden. But I have already shewed how groundless that affirmation of Mr. S. was, as to the native Jews children, who were still baptized after the giving of the Law. And the same I now add for the children of those Proselytes who had been baptized in infancy, there appears not the least proof of this from the Jewish writers, who are the onely competent witnesses in it.

Answ. If there were no more proof brought then what hath been, that the Jews baptizing the infants at first Proselytism, and the Apostles no infants at first conversion, it were proved; that the Apostles practise of baptism was not conformable to the Jewish custome: And for the other point, Mr. Seldens affirmation is in the judgement of such as knew both, as good as Dr. Hammonds negation. I confess I have not those Jewish writers he refers to, nor some Books of Mr. Selden de successione in bona defuncti, c. 26. lib. 1. de successione in Pontificatu cap. 2. in which by his reference I guess he hath more fully handled this point, yet do I imagin, that knowing the accurateness of the writer, any Reader will conceive that he had clear evidence for what he wrote, or else he would not have so often and so plainly avouched it, that the children of Proselytes after the first baptizing were not baptized, but onely circumcised according to the Jewish custome.

But the Dr. saith, "But for the contrary, I propose these two testi-
"nies taken notice of by Mr. S. himself de Synedr. c. 3. out of Gemara
"Babylon. He wants the right of a Proselyte for ever, unless he be bap"tized and circumcised. Here Baptism and Circumcision are joyned to"gether, as equally necessary to a Proselyte and that for ever. And "Circumcision there is no doubt was to be received by every male,
"not onely at their first comming to the Church of the Jews, at their "first Proselytism, but through all posterities, every child of a Prose-
"lyte

" lyte that was not circumciſed, became ſtraightwayes no Proſelyte:
" And then ſure this conjunction of Baptiſm with Circumciſion on theſe
" terms of equality, both of perpetual neceſſity to all Proſelytes, muſt " needs extend the Baptiſm as well as the Circumciſion, beyond the " firſt Proſelytes and their immediate children, to all their poſterity that " ſhall come from them afterwards, for to all thoſe belonged Circumci-
" ſion. So again in the ſame place, And if he be not baptized, hee re" mains a Pagan or Gentile; Here I ſhall ask whether the childe of a " Proſelyte who had been baptized in his infancy, were to be a Pagan " for ever? I ſuppoſe it will be anſwered, no; And then by the force of " that teſtimony of Gemara I conclude, therefore it muſt bee ſuppoſed
" that he was baptized, for elſe he would be a Pagan for ever.

Anſw. It were very ſtrange that Mr. Selden ſhould in the ſame chapter in which he cites thoſe words, lib. 1. de Syned. c. 3. p. 35. aſſert p. 28. before, and p. 41. after, that neither Jews children after the giving the Law, nor Proſelytes children after their firſt Baptiſm, ſhould be baptized, if the words there did import the contrary. And therefore though I want the book to conſider it, yet I doubt not the ſenſe of the words is plain thus, that the Gentile who is not baptized at firſt as well as circumciſed, wants for ever, not onely a little while, the right of a Proſelyte, and is the very ſame which both Selden there p. 39. cites out of Maimonides Iſſuri bia. c. 13 and Ainſw. annot. on Gen. 17. 12. A ſtranger that is circumciſed and not baptized, or baptized and not circumciſed, he is not a Proſelyte till he be both circumciſed and baptiſed. So that the ſenſe is not as the Dr. would, that no Proſelytes child ſhall have the right of a Proſelyte, unleſs that child be as well baptiſed as circumciſed, but this, that he that at his firſt Proſelytiſm is onely circumciſed and not baptiſed, ſhall ſtill want the right of a Proſelyte as if he were not circumciſed at all, till he be baptiſed as well as circumciſed. And that to be the meaning, is plain out of the words that Selden cites from the ſame Book p. 35. a little after, where R. Eliezers opinion being that a perſon may be a Proſelyte if circumciſed though not baptiſed, becauſe ſo were their Fathers; and Rabbi Joſhuah's that he was a Proſelyte who was baptiſed and not circumciſed, becauſe ſo were their mothers; it is ſaid, that the wiſe men nevertheleſs have pronounced, that if any have been baptiſed and not circumciſed, or circumciſed and not baptiſed, he is not a Proſelyte till he is as well baptiſed as circumciſed; and the ſame is the ſenſe of the other ſpeech. So that thoſe words do not ſpeak of any other then the firſt Proſelytes Baptiſm of that race, not of the poſterity, nor of the conjunction of Baptiſm and Circumciſion but at the firſt entrance into the Covenant; and therefore to the Drs. queſtion I ſay, the poſterity of a Proſelyte were Iſraelites not Pagans, though they were not baptiſed in their own perſons by vertue of the parents baptiſm, if they were not born before it.

The Dr. proceeds thus; " Beſides this two things I farther add, to " remove all poſſible force of this ſuggeſtion; 1. that if it were granted
" in the full latitude wherein it is propoſed, that the Jews baptized no
" other infants of Proſelytes, but thoſe whom they had at their firſt con-
" verſion; yet this would nothing profit Mr. T. For it were then obvi" ous

"ous to affirm, that Christ who imitated the Jews in that, and so baptised the children of Christian Proselytes, did make some light change in "this, and farther then the pattern before him afforded, baptized all "the posterity that should succeed them, and were born in the Church "in their infancy also, the reason though not the pattern belonging equally to them as to the children of the first Proselytes, and the Jewish custome of baptizing their natives infants beeing fully home "to it.

Answ. The Dr. having tried to prove the posterity of the Proselytes born after their proselytism, to have been wont to bee baptized by the Jews, but distrusting it's likely it would not hold, yet thinks to use another engine, though it be as weak as the rest. For 1. he supposeth, the Jews baptised native Jews infants after the giving the Law, which is not true. 2. That Christ imitated the Jews in baptising Proselytes children at first proselytism, and so baptised the children of Christian Proselytes at their first conversion, which is manifestly false. 3. That the Iews baptism was the pattern before Christ, which is the thing in question. 4. That some children are born in the Church Christians, which is a mistake. 5. That he made some light change in that of not baptising Proselytes posterity, and farther then the pattern before him afforded, baptised all the posterity that should succeed them, and were born in the Church in their infancy also. Which is a palpable falshood, it being certain that Christ baptized none, nor appointed the baptizing of any Christians infants, and is against the Dr. For 1. if the custome were changed by Christ, then it was not the pattern. 2. The same proofs which shew a change in this, shew as much a change in the other. 3. This change is ill called a light change, which made so large a perpetual addition. 4. If the pattern did not belong equally to all the Christians posterity, as to the children of the first Proselytes, then the reason did not belong to them, sith the pattern according to the Dr. is all or the main reason, basis or foundation of infant Baptism with him. 6. It is also false, that the reason of baptising the after children of Proselytes, or the native Iews infants after the giving of the Law was as before, sith the reason of Baptism given by the Rabbins is the uncleanness of the baptized, which they deny of native Jews after the giving the Law, and of proselytes posterity born after their baptism. So that it may be easily perceived, that the Dr. hath not avoided the force of my objection against the Jews baptizing being Christs pattern, but heaped up many mistakes, and some against himself.

"2dly, saith he that it being by all granted, that the children which "the Proselytes had, at their first proselytism were baptized among the "Jews; this is as evident a confutation of the Antipædobaptist, and so "of Mr. T. as it would if all their infants to all posterity were baptized; "For by that very baptising of the infants at their first Proselytism, it "appears that infants may be baptized, for I hope those Proselytes infants are infants; And if any infants may and ought to be baptized, "then are all their pretentions destroyed, whose onely intereſt it is to "evince, that no infants most or may be baptised. And I hope this will be "of some use to Mr. T. when he shall have considered it.

Answ.

Answ. It is so, for thereby I perceive the inconsiderateness and vanity of the Drs. writing. I grant the one confutes me as well as the other, that is not at all. For what consequence is in this, I grant the Jews baptized Proselytes children at first proselytism, and this they did according to their custome; therefore I must grant that some infants of Christians may and ought to be baptized by Christian baptism? Did I ever grant that the Jewish baptism of any infants is to be our pattern, or was Christs pattern? Yea, do I not dispute against it? What a frivolous reason is this of so famous a Dr. For by that very baptising of the infants at their first proselytism, it appears that infants may be baptized, for I hope those Proselytes infants are infants? Howdoth it appear that what the Jews did we may do? Were infants of Proselytes to be baptized because they were infants? or are our infants to be baptized because infants, as the Drs. reason intimates? To omit his non sense of hoping that infants are infants, I tell him that I have considered this, and that I finde it of no force to remove my suggestion, that my pretensions are not destroyed, but that he hath shewed more futility in this passage, so seriously presented to my consideration, then I should easily have imagined in such a man as he is.

But yet the Dr. adds, The onely way Mr. T. hath to confirm this of the Jews not baptising any infants of Proselytes born after their first conversion, and baptism is the resolution of the Jews, that if a woman great with child became a Proselyte and were baptized, her child needs not baptism when 'tis born. And this I had cited §. 109. out of the Rabbins, and so indeed I find it in Maimonides. tit. Isuri bia. c. 13. But I cannot think that (whether true or false) a sufficient proof to infer the conclusion; For the Jewish Drs. might probably thus resolve upon this other ground, because the mother and the child in her womb, being esteemed as one person, the woman great with child being baptized, they might deem the child baptized as well as the woman, and not account it needfull to repeat it after the birth, which yet (by the way) it seems they would have done, if they had not deemed the child all one with the mother, and consequenly they must bee supposed to baptise those children which were begotten to the Proselyte after the time of his or her first conversion and baptism. And accordingly the Christian Doctors in the Council of Neocæsarea can. 6. having resolved the contrary to that Jewish hypothesis, viz. That ὅτι ἕτερον κοινωνεῖ ἡ τίκτουσα τῷ τικτομένῳ, that the mother that bears the child differs from the child, or is not at all one with it; and her confession in baptism is, ἰδία proper or particular to her self, and belongs not to the childe in her womb, give the (κυοφορᾶσα) the woman that is with child, and is then converted to the Faith, leave to be baptised when she pleases, supposing that the child which then she carries, shall, notwithstanding her baptism, then be its self baptised after its birth. which as it is a clear answer to the argument deduced from the resolution of the Jews in that point, so 'tis moreover an evidence how little of proof Mr. T. had either from his own observation, or Mr. Seldens Testimonies, from all which he can produce no other but this, which in the sound is so far from affirming what he would have, and upon examination is found to conclude the contrary.

Answ.

Answ. The Dr. hath a strange fancy, to think he can conclude the contrary to what I infer from those words of the Jewish Drs. that when they resolve the child needs not be baptized, therefore they were wont to baptize the children of Proselytes born after their proselytism, As if the Jewish custome were contrary to their Drs. resolution, when they say it needs not, yet they should do it; if so, how vainly doth the Dr. talk but a little before, that "The Jewish writers are the onely competent witnesses in this thing] and proves all along this Chapter their custome by these very writers?

But let's heed his reason; "the Jewish Drs. might resolve it upon "another ground, the childs being one with the mother, and so the "baptism needless to that child, which yet by the way (or rather out of "the way) it seems they would have done, if they had not deemed the "childe all one with the mother, and consequently other children must "be supposed to be baptized.] So the Dr. upon an imaginary ground, of which he brings no proof or shew of proof, and a conjecture of his own, that seems to him but to none else, infers downright they must be supposed to baptise other children. It must be so, because αὐτὸς ἔφα he is a Rabbin, Dr. chair, of the irrefragabilis Magister noster; if he say the right hand is the left we must say so too. But yet I am Joannes ad appositum, and think I have better cards to shew for my inference then Dr. H. for his. Mr. Selden who is also Joannes ad oppositum l. 2. de jure nat. &c. c 4. p. 170. speaks not doubtfully like Dr. H. when he puts in his parenthesis (whether true or false) but cites Gemar. Babylon. ad Tit. Jabim. cap. 8. fol. 78. a and Maimonides halach Isuri bia. c. 13. Shulcan Aruch lib. Jore Dea cap. 268. b and having set down the Jewish Doctors resolution, that "if a woman great with childe be made a Proselyte, and so received by "baptism, her child needs not baptism;] he adds, nimirum ex eo quod nata est בקושה seu in sanctitate matris aut ביהדות in ejus Judaismo (nam hisce sic utuntur vocibus) Proselyti seu matris conditionem induebat, that is, "to wit because in as much as it was born in the holiness of the "mother, or in her Judaism (for so they use these words) it put on the "condition of the mother,] that is, was holy, or a Jew as the mother, and so needed not baptism, which plainly shews they counted not their children who were holy, or Jews born after the parents baptism to need baptism, and consequently did not baptize them. Nor doth the resolution of the Council of Neocæsarea any whit help the Doctour. For what consequence is in this, there were some Christians in the 4th. Century since Christ, who did imagine the mothers baptism might serve for the child, perhaps (for that's the Drs. conjecture onely) because they thought the child and mother one, therefore the Jewish Drs. resolution is upon that ground, and to be limited to those onely? And for the Drs. mention of the words of the Council, it is against himself, though imperfectly done; For 1. it supposeth, "the mother that bears the child differs "from the child, and her confession in Baptism is, ἰδίᾳ, proper or par-"ticular to her self, and belongs not to the childe in her womb;] Therefore according to the resolution of that Council in Baptism, the parent and childe are not one, nor the parents confession of faith stands for the child. 2. It expresly affirmeth two things which quite destroy Pædobaptists principles. 1. That in baptism she that bringeth forth communicates nothing to the child brought forth, therefore the parents faith or baptism communicates no priviledge, or right of baptism to the child. 2. That every ones free choise in confession is shewn or to be shewn in baptism; therefore no child is to be baptized according to that Councils determination, but upon its own confession out of free choise shewed or signified by it self. But of this Canon I have said something before. By this which is said it appears how far the Dr. hath bin from giving a clear answer to the argument, or examining any thing (as it was fit he should and that rather he hath so handled this point, as if his study were like Protagoras in Gellius, to make a bad cause to seem good, or Anaxagoras to prove snow black.

Sect. 6. The Dr. writes thus; "This grand disparity then being cleared to be Mr. T. his mistake, I shall not need to attend his other instances of disparity, this accord which hath been already mentioned and vindicated, being sufficient to my pretensions, and no concernment of mine obliging me to believe or affirm, that the parallel holds any farther then Christ was pleased it should, and of that we are to judge by what the Scriptures or ancient Church tels us was the practice of him or his Apostles; For 1. the Jews I doubt not brought in many things of their own devising into this, as into other institutions of Gods, and the later Jews more, as of the Proselytes being so born again in baptism, that lying with his natural sister was no incest, and the like: And 2. Christ, I doubt not, changed the Jewish Oeconomy in many things, as in laying aside Circumcision, in commissionating his Disciples to baptize (and they leaving it in the hands of the Bishop, and those to whom he should commit it. It is not lawful to baptize without the Bishop, saith Ignatius, Ep ad Smyrn edit. Voss. p. 6.) whereas it was not among the Jews any part of the Priests office, any more then circumcision was; And so in many other particulars. But what is that to my pretensions, who affirm no more of the accordance betwixt the Jewish and Christian practice, then either by some indications in the Scripture it self, or by the Christian Fathers deductions from the Apostles times, appears to be meant by Christ, and practised by the Apostles; and then by the Jewish writers is as evident to have to have been in use among them. And this is all the return I need make to his fourteen lesser disparities, and all that he hath at large endeavoured to infer from them, supposing and granting them all to be such.

Answ. Dr. H. had expresly asserted the Jewish custome of Baptising Proselytes, to be the pattern, whence Christian Baptism was copied out, and what is set down in the N. T. i. e. in the words of Christs institution, or in his or the Apostles practise, he calls a copy of their custome as the pattern, Letter of resol. qu. 4. S. 24. And what was the Jewish custome, he proves onely from the Talmud, Gemara, Maimonides, or other Jewish writers; and says p. 27. they are the onely competent witnesses in it, which if so, his pretensions are made void if there be one, much more if there be one main one, and 14. lesser disparities. For sure what is a pattern must be followed, and is in all, or else it ceaseth to be a pattern. Had Moses made that which was shewed him in the Mount his pattern, if he had onely done according to it in two, or three, or one thing and not in the rest? Besides, how doth or can the Dr. prove the one to have been the pattern to the other, but by the universal conformity? To say, it is a pattern when they agree in one or two things and differ in 14. is all one as to say, a womans coat is the pattern of a mans doublet, because they agree in having sleeves, or a Temple is the pattern of a dwelling house, because they have both doors and windows. The Dr. therefore doth in my apprehension pull down what he hath all this while been erecting, by his acknowledging both the Jews bringing in many things of their own devising otherwise then Christ appointed, and Christs changing their Oeconomy in many things, and making the accordance no further then Christ was pleased it should hold, and of that we are to judge by what the Scriptures or ancient Church tels us, was the practise of him or his Apostles. For 1. then it will follow, that infant Baptism can never be proved to be from Christ or the Apostles, sith it can never be proved that they practised it or appointed it to be practised according to the Jewish custome. 2. The Dr. hath meerly abused his Reader, endeavouring to possess him as if infant Baptism might be better proved from the Jewish custome in their writers, then from the Scripture; and yet in the conclusion, the Jewish custome is disclaimed as a pattern, any farther then the Scriptures or ancient Church tell us was the practise of him or his Apostles, and by pretending that to be pattern, which is not to be followed any farther then we may judge by another Directory Christ was pleased it should hold. I let pass what the Dr. saith, of Christs commissionating his Distiples to baptize, and they leaving it in the hands of the Bishop, and those to whom he should commit it, as not pertinent to the present business, though otherwise many things might thence be gathered, to shew that Bishops were not such in late dayes as they were anciently, or they were very negligent in committing this great business of Baptism to so many ignorant drunken Priests (who often did it in their drink) which should have been done by themselves, and consider what followes.

But yet, saith the Dr. it is evident that some of them are not such; As when he saith, the Baptism of males must be with Circumcision and an offering, 'tis clear that, though 1. Circumcision be laid aside by Christ, and 2. when it was used it had nothing to do with Baptism, yet as to the adjoyning of offering or sacrifice, the parallel still holds, the prayers of the Church being the Christian sacrifice, and those in the Christian Church solemnly attendant on the administration of Baptism.

Answ. 1. If Circumcision when it was used had nothing to do with Baptism, how could the Dr. (as he doth here ch. 1. sect. 1.) take on him from Circumcision to prove (not the duety, yet) the lawfulness of infant Baptism. 2. The sacrifice which was required at the initiating a Proselyte, was a burnt offering of a beast, or two Turtle Doves, or two young Pigeons, both of them for a burnt offering; so Maimonides tit. Issurbia. c. 13. as Ainsworth annot. on Gen. 17. 12. Selden de syned. l. 1. c. 3. cite him, but that is not prayer, nor is it any more agreeable to the Jewish custome to use prayer without it, then to use circumcision of the heart, Col. 2. 11. without the outward, or the answer of a good conscience towards God without baptism with water; and yet the rubrick of the Common Prayer Book in private Baptism allowed (if time did not suffer) it to be done without so much as saying the Lords Prayer.

Jewish

The Dr. adds. "So parallel to the Court of three Israelites, by the "confession or profession of whom (saith Maimonides) the infant was "baptized, we have now not onely the whole Church, in the presence "of whom 'tis publikely administred, and when more privately, yet in "the presence of some Christians, who are afterwards, if there be any "doubt, to testifie their knowledge to the Church; but more particu- "larly the Godfathers and Godmothers, being themselaes formerly "baptized, do represent the Church, and the Minister commissionated "thereto by the Bishop, represents the Church also, meaning the Go- "vernors thereof.

Answ. Though Baptism by women and others not commissionated by a Bishop have heretofore been tollerated, and been taken for currant Baptism, and the terming the Governours of the Church the Church, be language not like the Scripture, but the Canon law, and the use of Gossips be a vain device, and the Minister commissionated by the Bishop, with the Gossips sometimes so ignorant of the knowledge of Christ, that they are not fit to bee among Christians, nor to be taken to represent a Church of Christ, nor do they stand under that notion at the usual baby sprinkling, but as sureties or proxies to the child; and in private Baptism there's none of these sometimes, yet were all the Dr. saith yeilded, this is not according to the Jewish custome, which required a kinde of court of three Israelites skilfull in Law to approve it, or else it is void, and so as Judges of the Baptism, of which sort the other are not.

The Dr. adds; But I shall not proceed to such superfluous considera- "tions, and so I have no need of adding one word more of reply to his "24. Chapter (as far as I am concerned in it) unless it bee to tell him "that the Bishops Canons are not the rule by which I undertake to de- "fine, wherein the Jewish custome must be the pattern, wherein not; "(but as he cannot but know, if he had read the resolution of the 4th. "Quære) the practise of the Apostles of Christ, by the testifications of "the Fathers of the Church made known unto us, to which as I have "reason to yeild all authority, so I finde the Canons and rituals as of "this, so of all other Churches in the world (no one excepted) to bear "perfect accordance therewith, in this particular of infant Baptism "(though in other lesser particulars they differ, many among themselvs, "and all from the Jewish pattern.) And this I hope is a competent "ground of my action, and such as may justifie it to any Christian Ar- "tist to bee according to rules of right reason, of meekness, and sound "doctrine, and no work of passion, or prejudice, or singularity, or "(as Mr. T. suggests) of the Drs. own pleasure, as if that were the "mutable principle of all these variations from the Jewish pattern.

Answ. 1. To call Cyprian, Augustine, &c. Fathers of the Church, which is elsewhere stiled their mother, is scarce consistent. 2. To yeeld all authority to the practise of the Apostles of Christ, by the testifications of the Fathers of the Church made known to us there is no reason; this is due onely to the holy Scripture: they testifie sundry things as the Apostles practise, which was not so, they speak sometimes in these things confidently upon false reports, this would be an inlet to many superstitions, the Canons of Councils, and Rituals of Churches are so full of weaknes and blemishes, as that they would be counted most useless writings to direct in faith or worship, did not their age make some men dote on them. That all Churches accord in infant Baptism cannot be true. The Common Prayer book is not justifiable in the allowing that which is termed privat baptism, in the use of sureties their mimical or false answers, saying they desire to be baptized, when it is not so. The Drs. exposition Letter of resol. q. 4 §. 116. I believe, i. e. this child stands bound by by these presents to believe, &c. is so ridiculous (and Augustines tom. 2. Ep. 28. ad Bonifacium is like it) as that did not prejudice, or preingagement, or some other like reason prevail with Dr. H. he would never defend it. That which the Dr. makes a competent ground of his action, doth not justifie his tenet of infant Baptism to be according to rules of reason and sound doctrine, whether he vary or not in his determinations from that which hee makes the pattern as hee pleaseth, or the Bishops Canons order, let the Reader judge by what is said, and that which followes.

"Of this score, saith he, 'tis somewhat strange, which he thinks fit "to add concerning the form of Baptism, in the name of the Father, and "the Son, and the Holy Ghost; In this one thing, saith he, which Christ "did not prescribe, nor did the Apostles, that we finde so conceive it, "yet saith the Dr. Christs prescription must be indispensably used. In "reply to this I shall not spend much time to evidence this form to bee "Christs prescription, if the expres words at his parting from the "world, Matth. 28. Go ye therefore, and teach or receive to discipleship, all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and the "Son, and the Holy Ghost, be not a prescription of Christs, and if "the universal doctrine and continual practise of the whole Church "through all times, be not testimony sufficient of the Apostles conceiving it thus, and a competent ground of the indispensable continuing "the use of it; I shall not hope to perswade with him, onely I shall "minde him of the words of S. Athanasius in his Epistle to Serapion tom. "p 204. He that is not baptized into the name of all three, receives no"thing, remains empty and imperfect. For perfection is in the Trinity, "no Baptism perfect it seems but that. And if this will not yet suffice, "I shall then onely demand, whether he can produce so expres grounds "from Christ or the Apostles, or the universal Church of God through "all ages, or from any one ancient Father, for his denying Baptism to "infants."

Answ What grounds we can produce from Christ, and Apostles for denying infant Baptism, may be seen in the 2d. Part of this Review sect. 5, &c. what from Fathers in this, and some other of my writings; that which Christ prescribed is indispensably to be used, to baptize into the Name

Name of the Father, Son and Holy, but all the queſtion is about theſe words [I baptize thee in the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt] whether Chriſt have preſcribed them to be indiſpenſably uſed; ſo as that if any ſay, I baptize thee in the name of Chriſt, or the Lord Jeſus, or be thou baptized, or as the Greeks uſe it [Let this ſervant of Chriſt bee baptized] into the Name of Father, Son and Spirit, or, This perſon is baptized by me into the profeſſion and owning of the Father of Chriſt the onely true God, and Jeſus Chriſt whom he hath ſent, and the Comforter whom he ſent as his Lord and Maſter, this be not agreeable to Chriſts preſcription. I conceive it is, and that neither did Chriſt preſcribe thoſe very words the Dr. ſets down, but the thing (of which Grotius Annot. in Matth. 28. 19. may be ſeen, where the Dr. may ſee, that to be baptized into the Name, is not all one with baptizing with the expreſs naming of each of theſe, but another thing, and how the ancients varied in their expreſſions; and how Irenæus lib. 3 c. 20. ſaith, In nomine Chriſti ſubauditur qui unxit, & ipſe qui unctus eſt, & ipſa unctio in qua unctus eſt.) Nor the Apoſtles when they preſcribed Baptiſm into the name of Chriſt, without mentioning the other perſons, Acts 2. 38. & 10. 48. & 8. 16. Lumbard l. 4. ſent. diſt 3. Qui baptizat in nomine Chriſti, baptizat in nomine Trinitatis, quæ ibi intelligitur; and this Ambroſe before ſpake, in lib. 1. de ſpir. ſanct. c. 3. piſcat. ſchol. in Matth. 28. 19. But it is not to be thought that in theſe words, Chriſt commands Miſters or Paſtors of the Church, that in baptizing they ſhould pronounce theſe words, I baptize thee into the Name of the Father, &c. For neither do the words of Chriſt ſo ſound? nor may this be concluded from them by neceſſary conſequence. But he onely commands, that they baptize in the Name of the Father, &c. which may be done, although theſe words be not pronounced in baptizing. And therefore that which I ſaid, needed not bee ſomewhat ſtrange to the Dr. And for the words of the Drs. Practical catech. l. 6. §. 2. the words do ſhew what I ſaid the Dr. confeſſed, to have been no miſ-reporting of his words; who did not ſay, he affirmed the putting under water (uſed by the primitive Church to be appointed by Chriſt, excluſively to ſprinkling, but that by Chriſts appointment the baptized was to be dipt in water, i. e. according to the primitive ancient cuſtome to bee put under water, and ſaid expreſly he allowed of ſprinkling, and yet varied from the Jewiſh pattern which required immerſion; and from Chriſts appointment (which though he propounded diſjunctively, yet I knew it could not be ſo underſtood) and from the primitive cuſtome, and yet in another thing not ſo preſcribed, will have it to be indiſpenſably uſed, which ſhews his variableneſs.

SECT. XCVII.

TO what Dr. H. Defence of infants Baptiſm ch. 2 ſect. 1. ſaith, I reply. 1. That his writing for the Common Prayer Book, is evidence of aſcribing more then was meet to the Canons of Prelates, ſith the Common Prayer Book ſtood as well by the Prelates Canons, as the Act of Parliament, and thoſe that are for the one are for the moſt part for the other. 2. It appears to me that he hath offended much againſt the Sacrament of Baptiſm, in his Defence of infant Baptiſm, the uſe of ſureties, ſprinkling in ſtead of Baptiſm according to the Common Prayer Book, all which are mentioned before. 3. This to me is a ſigne that the Dr. aſcribes too much to the Canon which enjoyned ſubſcription and conformity to the Common Prayer Book, in that he hath oppoſed, as much I think as any man of his rank, the reformation of theſe and ſuch other faults as were in it. 4. If there were a Catechesis in the term allegation, then my uſe of it proves not my ſignification that the Dr. did produce Matth. 28. 19. as a proof of his poſition: yet when I conſider how the Dr. Letter of reſol. q. 4. ſect. 24, 25. doth make the Jewiſh baptiſm the pattern whence the Chriſtian is copied out, and ſaith; Chriſtian baptiſm hath nothing in the Copy to exclude Chriſtians children, which copy is ſet down in the N. T. i e. in the words of inſtitution, and theſe words §. 25. are no other then thoſe Matth. 28. 19. which he endeavours to prove not onely not to exclude, but alſo to include Chriſtians children, as he ſpeaks §. 121. Chriſts baptiſm being founded in the Jews cuſtome of baptizing of Proſelytes, and the cuſtome among them being known to be this, to baptize the Proſelytes and their children, the indefinite command of baptizing all nations, was all that was needfull to comprehend the children alſo of thoſe that received the faith of Chriſt. I do ſtill conceive he did allege Matth. 28. 19. as a proof of his poſition, though not by it ſelf, yet with his imagined pattern of the Jewiſh cuſtome, and that though he would not openly, yet by his contending ſo much for the equivalency of Diſciple and Proſelyte, and the extent of the term Proſelyte, and his acknowledgement of theſe words to be the copy in the N. T. he did tacitely yeeld, that if thoſe words Matth. 28. 19. include not infants under the diſcipled, then there is ſomething in the N. T. which excludes infants from Baptiſm. Nor is he at all relieved by what he ſaith, that whatever were the notion of Diſcipling there, yet hee could not deem infants thereby excluded from Baptiſm, whom by another medium, viz. the Apoſtolical practice hee ſuppoſed to be admitted to it by Chriſts inſtitution; for that very medium is to prove it to have been Chriſts inſtitution, and Matth. 28. 19. comprehends the words of inſtitution, and is the copy of the original, and therefore it's tacitely implied, that if infants be not proved to bee included

ded Matth. 28. 19. there is ſomething againſt infant Baptiſm in the N. T. nor is it true that in that which is not included, is not preſently excluded, for in all ſuch inſtitutions or appointments, what is not included is preſently excluded. Our Lord argues Matth. 19. 5, 6. two ſhall bee one fleſh, therefore more then two are excluded; the Apoſtle 1 Cor. 11. 23. thus Chriſt appointed the Lords Supper, therefore no otherwiſe, wine is appointed therefore water is excluded, eating is preſcribed therefore reſervation is excluded, let the ſelf-examiner eat, therefore infants excluded; the Dr. himſelf, baptizing in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghoſt, preſcribed Mat. 28. 19. therefore that from indiſpenſably to be uſed If the Dr. would look on ſuch a deſpicable piece, he might ſee this further proved in that Book a part whereof hee anſwers, Review part. 2. ſect. 5. if not he may finde enough in Jewels Sermon at Pauls Croſs 1560. and in all ſorts of Proteſtant writers, which by reducing things to the primitive inſtitution, exclude other things added by men as abuſes. But the Dr. tels me, he that ſaith man is a living creature, doth not thereby deny an Angel to be ſo alſo; True, but this is impertinent, ſith this is a propoſition not a command; and as impertinent is the other, when Chriſt gives his Diſciples power to heal diſeaſes, Matth. 10. 1. he cannot be deemed to with hold from them power of raiſing the dead, for that we ſee comprehended in their Commiſſion v. 8. for this is not an inſtance of an inſtitution of what they ſhould do, but a relation of what CHRIST gave them.

To my arguing from paſſages of the Doctors Letter of reſol. q. 4. §. 55, 92, 94. pract. cat l. 6. §. 2. that infants are not baptized according to Chriſts inſtitution, and Baptiſm no Sacrament to them, he tels me; 1. That Chriſts inſtitution of Baptiſm was not (nor is ever affirmed by him to be) ſet down in thoſe words of Matth. 28. that having been long before inſtituted and practiſed, as appears by plain words, Joh. 4. 1, 2. Whereto I anſwer; 1. The firſt is not true, for in his Letter of reſol. q. 4. § 24. he mensions, the copy of Baptiſm ſet down in the N. T. i. e. in the words of inſtitution, which §. 25. ſhews are thoſe Matth. 28. 19. and §. 29 having as he thinks avoided the excluſion of infants, from the command Matth. 28. 19. he ſaith, Nothing is diſcernable in Chriſts inſtitution of Baptiſm, which can exclude infant children of Chriſtians from it, and again he terms them, that inſtitution of Baptiſm for all nations. 2. His reaſon is as frivolous. For though it were inſtituted before, yet it was ſet down Matth. 28. 19. as the inſtitution of the Lords Supper was before the Epiſtle to the Corinthians, yet is ſet down 1 Cor. 11. 23.

"Secondly, ſaith hee, that though Chriſts will and inſtitution for "baptizing infants be not ſo manifeſtly expreſt in thoſe words, Matth. "28. 19. as ſhall be able by the bare force of the words to convince any "gain-ſayer, without any other way of evidence or proof added to it, "yet by the Apoſtles practiſe of baptizing infants (appearing to us by "other means) it is moſt evident that they who certainly did not mi"ſtake Chriſts meaning, did thus underſtand and extend his inſtitution "and commiſſion. The truth of this is there made more evident §. 30, "&c. I ſhall not here repeat it.

Anſw.

Answ. 1. It is to be observed, that here the Dr. makes Christs will, institution, and commission, to be expreſt in thoſe words Matth. 28. 19. and yet in the next words before he ſaid, Christs inſtitution of Baptiſm was not (nor is ever affirmed by him to be) ſet down in thoſe words Matth. 28. 19. Quo teneam nodo? 2. That he acknowledgeth Christs will and inſtitution for baptizing infants, is not ſo manifeſtly expreſt in thoſe words Matth. 28. 19. as ſhall be able by the bare force of the words to convince any gain-ſayer. Now ſure if not there, nowhere. As for his other proof from other places, it is ſo fully proved here to be vain, that if the Dr. do not, others will ſee it to be ſo.

Yet he adds, Secondly that the infant when he is to bee baptized, doth though not by his own voice perſonally, yet by his lawfull proxies, which the Church accepteth in his ſtead, profeſt the believing in three, the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, deliver himſelf up to three, &c.

Answ. How comes any man to bee a childs proxy, who doth not make him ſo? By what law becomes he a lawful proxy? Where did God allow him to become a proxy or ſurety for an infant? How dares any take upon him to be a ſurety of the Covenant, which is Chriſts office Heb. 7. 22? With what face can any Chriſtian ſay the child believs, or deſires to be baptized, when the child at that very inſtant, by its crying ſhews its unwillingneſs thereto? How dares any undertake it ſhall believe, when it is not in his power to give faith, and ſo many do not believe, but oppoſe the faith, who are thus baptized? What warrant hath any parent, or (as Mr. Baxter terms the Goſſips) proparent, to profeſs the faith of Chriſt in behalf of an infant, and to deſire Chriſtian baptiſm for it? What is the Church the Doctour means, that accepts a proxies profeſſion in ſtead of the childe? Who gave them or that perſon the name of the Church? What Commiſſion, whence have the Church power to exchange and commute ones profeſſion for anothers? Who gave the Miniſter authority to alter Chriſts inſtitution, and to accept of that which Chriſt never appointed in ſtead of that which Chriſt appointed? It is undoubtedly a moſt high preſumption, derogatory to Chriſts peculiar office, forbidden Matth. 23. 8. for any Miniſter, or Biſhop, or Council, or Congregation, who are all to be ſubject to Chriſt, and to follow his preſcriptions, to take on them in ſtead of the perſons own profeſſion before Baptiſm to accept of anothers, as a proxy, parent, or proparent his confeſſion, inſtead of the baptized perſons profeſſion? Though I marvail not that Dr. Hammond a man Prelatical, who too much favours corruptions in Fathers, Councils, and Prelates, diſguiſing them under the name of the Church, which is a pretence for many ſuperſtitions, ſhould thus determine: yet I wonder how Mr. Baxter and thoſe who have oppoſed the uſe of the Croſs in Baptiſm, and other abuſes of Papiſts and Prelates, ſhould having proved in his ad. Diſputation of right to Sacraments, that none but Profeſſors of ſaving faith and repentance are to be baptized, yet without the leaſt proof or ſhadow of proof, but a parents or proparents profeſſion inſtead of an infants, and without any inſtitution or practiſe in the New Teſtament, dare to teach and accordingly to practiſe infant Baptiſm, and to require parents or others to profeſs the faith to that end, and in their ſtead. Juſt zeal to the glory of God and honour of Chriſt, and his truth, makes me thus earneſt; no man can juſtly blame me in inveighing againſt, if not the hypocriſie of ſuch men, yet certainly the iniquity of them who oppoſe humane inventions in one thing and not in another, and the wickedneſs of them who either by Conſiſtorial ſentences excommunicate as Heretiques, or by exciting Magiſtrates againſt them perſecute, or in preaching exclaim, or otherwiſe oppoſe thoſe that will not yeeld to ſuch corruptions, though obtruded under the name of the Church.

I had ſaid, yea if the poſitive will of Chriſt be the reaſon of Baptiſm, they uſurp upon Chriſts prerogative, who baptize otherwiſe then Chriſt hath appointed, and then if the precept of Chriſt doth not neceſſarily infer infant Baptiſm (which the Dr. ingenuouſly acknowledgeth) it doth by manifeſt conſequence deny it, ſith hee forbids that to be done otherwiſe then he hath appointed when he hath determined how it ſhould be done. The Dr. when hee ſaith above, the words [I baptize into the Name of the Father, Son, and Ghoſt] muſt be indiſpenſably uſed; me think by the ſame reaſon ſhould conceive Chriſts inſtitution ſhould bee unalterably uſed in baptizing thoſe onely whom he hath appointed to be baptized; Hereupon the Dr. ſaith thus.

" To this the grounds of anſwer have been already laid alſo, viz. that " they that baptize infants, baptize no otherwiſe then Chriſt appointed, and the Apoſtles appear to have underſtood his appointment. " By Chriſts appointment not meaning particularly his words Matth. 28. " but his will, otherwiſe made known to his Diſciples, when and in what " words ſoever it was that he inſtituted baptiſm, which muſt be long before this, even before his Apoſtles took on them to baptize any, which " yet they did in great abundance, Joh. 4. 1. And of this appointment " or inſtitution of Baptiſm by Chriſt it is moſt true, that if that precept of Chriſt, whereby hee firſt inſtituted Baptiſm, did not indeed " comprenend, and ſo neceſſarily infer infant Baptiſm, and was ſo underſtood to do by the Apoſtles, it ſhal conſequently be deemed to deny " it. But then herein lies a great fallacy, when from another appointment of Chriſt, viz. that Matth. 28. which I acknowledge not to infer infant Baptiſm neceſſarily, he aſſumes in univerſum, and reports " it as my confeſſion, that Chriſts Precept (indefinitely taken, " and ſo extending to all Chriſts Precepts at any time) doth not neceſſarily infer infant Baptiſm. Which is that grand illogical fault in diſcourſe of inferring an indefinite or univerſal concluſion from particular premiſes. As for the compariſon which he makes betwixt the indiſpenſable uſe of the words of Baptiſm Matth. 28. and the as unalterable obſervation of Chriſts inſtitution in reſpect of the Perſons to be " baptized, I willingly grant it, on the condition premiſed, that he miſtake not the text Matth 28. to be the words of that inſtitution, wherein Chriſt defined who are to be baptized. Thoſe words are a Commiſſion to the Apoſtles to go Preach to or Diſciple all Nations, and thus " far extends to point out the perſons, viz. that they ſhould (as Diſciple " ſo) baptize Gentiles as well as Jews; and again, they are expreſs for

"the form of Baptiſm, that it ſhould be in the name of the Father, the "Son, and the Holy Ghoſt, but they are not any kinde of direction to "that other matter of receiving and admitting infants or not infants. "That I ſuppoſe ſufficiently notified to them before, both by the com-"mon practiſe of their anceſtors in the Jewiſh Religion by the vulgar "notion of Baptiſm, whileſt it was familiarly uſed among the Jewes, "both to their own and their Proſelytes children, and alſo by Chriſts "ſpecial direction (though the Goſpels, which expreſs not at all the "words of the firſt inſtitution of Baptiſm do not ſet that down) in the "time of his Preaching among them, ſome while before that paſſage of "ſtory related, Joh. 4. 1, &c. From both of theſe, I ſuppoſe the Apo-"ſtles learnt it (and not from Matth. 28.) and we learn it onely from "the Apoſtles, as ſhall hereafter appear.

Anſw. That the Apoſtles learnt infant Baptiſm from Chriſt, or Dr. Hammond from the Apoſtles, hath not been made appear as yet. What he hath produced from Tertullian and the Greek Fathers, from 1 Cor. 7. 14. and from the Jewiſh cuſtome, hath been already examined and ſhewed to be inſufficient to that end. His grants are, that if Chriſt did not inſtitute at firſt infants Baptiſm, nor the Apoſtles ſo underſtood it, it ſhould conſequently be deemed to deny it; and if he did otherwiſe appoint it, then infants are excluded; and what is Matth. 28. 19. preſcribed, is indiſpenſably to be uſed; but he ſuppoſeth a fore-going inſtitution comprehending infant Baptiſm, notified otherwiſe then by Mat. 28. 19. that Matth. 28. 19. determines neither pro nor con: for nor againſt infants Baptiſm, that I infer illogically, becauſe not in Matth. 28. 19. inſtituted, therefore no where elſe. And I do acknowledge I do ſo conceive, that the Dr. having made that the copy, and confeſſing infant Baptiſm not to be neceſſarily inferred thence, and that wee muſt do no otherwiſe then Chriſt appoints he muſt tacitely deny infant Baptiſm; and this inference of mine is logical. What the Dr. ſaith to the contrary doth not avoid it. For 1. it is not true that Matth. 28. 19. the words are not any kinde of direction to this matter of receiving and admitting infants or not infants. For 1. it expreſſeth who are to bee baptized, when it ſaith, baptiſing them, now [them] muſt refer either to [all nations] without any other circumſcription, and then he muſt appoint them to baptize every man in the world, believer or not. But that is abſurd, Ergo. Or [them] muſt refer to [Diſciples] included in the Verb [Diſciple or make Diſciples] but if ſo, not onely the Gentiles as well as Jewes are pointed out, but alſo the qualification of them, whom they ſhould baptize, they are to be Diſciples, now infants are diſciples and not diſciples, there's no middle term between contradictory terms, therefore there muſt be ſome direction to baptize infants or not infants. 2. Theſe words are the copy of the pattern as the Dr ſaith ubi ſupra, therefore if theſe words have no direction for infant Baptiſm, the pattern had not; For the Copy and Pattern do agree with each other, as the Decree and the Copy of it out of the Court.

2. It is not true that this is not the firſt inſtitution wee are to have directions from in our practiſe, who baptize Gentiles. For there is is no institution concerning baptizing the Gentiles before that Matth. 28. 19. and therefore hence must be direction for baptizing or not our infants, there being no institution preceedent as concerning them. Nor did the Apostles follow any other, as is proved in the 2d. part of this Review sect. 5.

3. It is false, that the former institution did comprehend infant Baptism. The contrary is proved, 1. From the place which sets down their practise, Joh. 4. 1. it is there said, they made Disciples and baptised. Whence I argue. 1. Those onely whom the Apostles baptized, Christ appointed to be baptized; But they baptized not infants, ergo Christ did not then appoint them to baptize them. The major is out of doubt their practise onely shewing Christs institution. The minor is proved, 1. They baptized none but whom they made Disciples, but they made no infants Disciples, as will be proved in that which follows, and may bee further thus proved. Such persons were made disciples by Christ and his Disciples, as were made disciples by John, But he made no infants disciples as might be proved by the descriptions and acts of Johns disciples in the Gospels, Matth. 9. 14. & 11. 2. & 14. 12. Luk. 7. 18. Joh. 1. 35, 37. &c. 2. The Disciples baptized in the same manner and sort as John did his disciples, but John baptized penitent persons, who were not infants, Matth. 3. 6. all the people who were baptised by him, are said to bear him and to justifie God, Luk. 7. 29. but these were not infants, Ergo. 3. Dr. Hammond saith Letter of resol. q. 4. §. 25. To make disciples, Joh. 4. 1. and baptise, is all one with disciple baptising, Matth. 28. 19. But in this according to the Dr. there is not any kinde of direction to that matter of receiving and admitting infants or not infants, therefore Joh. 4. 1, is no mention of their baptizing infants, and so no infants baptized by them. 2. If Christ had instituted infant Baptism, doubtless hee would have appointed it, and the Disciples practised it on those mentioned Matth. 19. 13, 14, 15. Mark 10. 13, 14, 15, 16. Luk. 18. 15, 16, 17. But he did not appoint nor they practise baptism on them, for it is said Matth. 19. 15. that when he had put his hands on them he departed thence, which shews no more was done to them then was before set down, whereof none was their baptizing, Ergo

4. It is false, that direction to baptise infants was sufficiently notified to the Apostles by Christ. For 1. the common practise of the Jews could not notifie it to them, Christ no where appointing them to baptize according to the Jewish manner, nor did they, For they baptized rather after Johns manner, Joh. 4. 1. but that was not as the Jews, as appeares by their excepting against and rejecting his Baptism Luk. 7. 30. 2. The vulgar notion of Baptism did not notifie it. For 1. the notion of baptism did not express one sort or other, yea they used to baptize other things Mark 7. 3, 4. besides persons. 2. If the vulgar notion of Baptism did notifie infant Baptism, then it did notifie it Matth. 28. 19. where it is expressed. But the Dr. saith, those words are not any kinde of direction to that matter of receiving and admitting, infants or not infants, Ergo. 3. The special direction of Christ did not notifie it, if it did, let it be shewed. To say, the Gospels expres not at all the words of the first institution of Bap-

Anſw. never do ſet that down, is againſt the Dr. For it is an high preſumption in any man to aſſert ſuch a ſpecial direction of Chriſt, as neither the Goſpels nor other ſacred writings ſet down, and if this may bee done, Apocriphal traditions may bee vented, as Papiſts and others have done, telling us all that CHRIST did and ſaid is not written, John 20. 30. Beſides, Chriſt gave no other ſpecial direction to the Apoſtles towards the Jewes about Baptiſm, afore that was done which wee read John 4. 1. then hee did to them towards the Gentiles, Matth. 28. 19. For that was a copy of the Pattern. But he did not there appoint infant Baptiſm as the Dr. acknowledgeth, Ergo. From all which I infer, that Chriſt gave no other direction about Baptiſm, then what is expreſſed Matth. 28. 19. and that there hee gave directions about infants baptizing or not baptizing, and that the preſcription there is to bee indiſpenſably uſed, not onely about the form of words in baptiſm, but alſo about the perſons whom we may baptize; and that infants are excluded ſhall bee proved in that which followes. Nor is this a praluſory ὀκτομαχία, as the Dr. termes it, but ſuch a juſt diſſertation as toucheth the main of the cauſe, and ſhewes the Doctors uſurpation on Chriſts prerogative, in defending ſuch Baptiſm as is otherwiſe then Chriſt appointed, nor hath he brought one proof for what he ſaith, hee hath made evident that Matth. 28. 19. was not the inſtitution of Baptiſm, nor any intimation on either ſide whether infants ſhould be baptized or not, but contradicted himſelf, and manifeſtly perverted the Scripture.

Sect. 2. The Dr. ſaith to my exception [that though μαθητεύσατε is well rendred make Diſciples, yet μαθητεύσατε βαπτίζοντες is not well paraphraſed by receive into Diſcipleſhip all Nations baptizing them, For by this the making Diſciples is made the ſame with receiving into Diſcipleſhip or receiving Diſciples, and Baptiſm the ceremony of receiving into Diſcipleſhip, which is as truly the act of the baptized, thereby profeſſing or avouching his Diſcipleſhip] thus. "Here is another ſubtilty of a refined nature, making a difference betwixt making Diſciples, and receiving into Diſcipleſhip or receiving Diſciples: As if "theſe two were not perfectly ſynonymous, and by me evidently uſed, as ſuch. I ſhall not diſpute of words, when the matter is clear, and "when it is equally to my purpoſe which phraſe is uſed, whether making or receiving Diſciples.

Anſw. Either phraſe would not have been equally to the Doctors purpoſe, making Diſciples not being applicable to infants, as perhaps it may be thought receiving Diſciples may, but whether either ſerve the Doctors turn or no, and however the Dr. uſe them, or cenſure my diſtinction of them, yet I take his confounding them to bee a groſs miſtake, and ſuch as perverts the text, and ſhould have been proved by him, afore he thus uſed it. And againſt it I thus argue. 1. Thoſe termes are not perfectly ſynonymous, whereof the one imports that which may bee without the other, this I think none will deny. But making Diſciples may bee without receiving them. This is manifeſt. For a perſon is not a Diſciple afore he is made, but he is made a Diſci-

a Diſciple before he is received, therefore the one may bee without the other. 2. The agents may be divers in making and receiving Diſciples, a woman may make a Diſciple, but not receive him. 3. The meanes is different, the making Diſciples is by teaching, as ſhall bee ſhewed in that which followes, and is an act of diligence; the receiving is admiſſion by authority. 4. Making imports an action, receiving rather a paſſion. 5. Making Diſciples doth preſuppoſe a privation of it, yea perhaps averſeneſs from it; receiving preſuppoſeth a habit attained, and a willing offer. 6. The making Diſciples may be to another, but receiving Diſciples is to bee aſcribed to the maſter to whom they are Diſciples, as to himſelf receiving them. 7. Dr. Hammond acknowledgeth μαθητευσαι to import the ſame with ποιειν μαθητας John 4. 1. Letter of reſol. q. 4. §. 25. but John 4. 1. it cannot bee rendered receive Diſciples, therefore neither Matth 28 19. 8. Neither Matth. 28. 19 nor any where elſe hath any tranſlator I knew, rendered [receive Diſciples] but many, make Diſciples, and make it as the Dr. the phraſe parallel to John 4. 1. and therefore it is ſingular and abſurd to render it here receive Diſciples.

Secondly, ſaith he, "When hee affirms of Baptiſm which I make "the ceremony of the Apoſtles receiving them, that 'tis as truely the act "of the baptized, this is no ſubtilty, but groſs and viſible enough. For "certainly Baptiſm in the active ſenſe (as it is plain I underſtand it "in that place where I paraphraſe, Go and make Diſciples and Bap-"tize) is not the act of the baptized but of the Baptiſt, The comming to "Baptiſm indeed and the undertaking the vow, and making the pro-"feſſion, is the act of the baptized, either perſonally or by his pro-"xy, which in reputation of Law and in acceptation of the Church, "is his alſo, but ſtill baptiſm, or (to remove all poſſible miſtake) "baptizing βαπτιζειν Matth. 28. 19. is an act of the Baptizer onely, "and ſo the Ceremony of receiving into Diſcipleſhip, whomſoever they "thus duely baptize. I hope I need ſay no more of this.

Anſw. I ſaid not baptizing, but Baptiſm the Ceremony (not as the Dr. miſ recites my words, of receivers into Diſcipleſhip, but) of receiving into diſcipleſhip is as truely the act of the baptized, thereby profeſſing or avouching his diſcipleſhip as of the Baptizer, and therefore the baptized is not meerly paſſive in it, nor an infant doth undergo it. And I prove it thus. 1. Baptiſm is a duty of the baptized as well as of the baptizer, as may bee proved from Acts 2. 38. where the Apoſtle exhorts them to repent and bee baptized every one of them, in the Name of Chriſt Jeſus for the remiſſion of ſins; Now that which a man is exhorted to as his duty, is his own act. Ergo. If any ſay it is βαπτιζω in the paſſive voice, hee may underſtand that Luk. 11. 38. εβαπτισθη though it bee the ſame ſenſe and voice, yet notes the action of the baptized. 2. It is manifeſt alſo from the command to Paul, Acts. 22. 16. that baptiſm is the act of the baptized. For firſt, it is a thing commanded to bee done by him. 2. It is in the middle voice, βαπτισαι, which though I deny not to have a paſſive ſignification, yet here, απολουσαι τας αμαρτιας cannot have any other then active signification because of the accusative cause following, so neither can the other, both being injoyned as duties, and the washing away sins being not meant of forgiveness of them but turning from them; baptism being the signe of his repentance, and both being to be joyned together, Acts 2. 38. and therefore Baptism being called, the baptism of repentance, Mark 1. 4. Acts 19. 4. 3. Baptising into the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, notes the act of the baptized as well as the baptizer, and this is fully taught by Dr. Hammond himself practic. cat. lib. 6. sect. 2. where he saith [I baptize thee into the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost] being prescribed by Christ to his Disciples must indispensably be used, and the meaning of them is double. 1. On the Ministers part, that what he doth hee doth not of himself, but in the Name or power of, or by Commission from the blessed Trinity (which by the way, I am sure none can say without apparent falshood when they baptize infants, much less when they onely sprinkle them.) 2. And more especially in respect of the person baptised. 1. That he acknowledges these three, and by desiring baptism makes profession of that acknowledgment, which is in effect the sum of the whole Creed. 2. That as he acknowledges these three, so he delivers himself to them, as to the three principles or authors of faith or Christian religion, and acknowledges no other as such (as to be baptised in the name of Paul, signifies to say, I am of Paul, i. e. to pin my faith on him in opposition to Cephas and all other) to receive for infallible truth whatsoever is taught by any of these and nothing else. 3. That he delivers himself up to be ruled as an obedient servant by the directions of this great master, a willing Disciple of this blessed Trinity, and so the Greek phrase [into the name] doth import; and these three acts of the baptised together, make up his part by way of condition required of him to make him capable of that grace, which the Minister from God thus conveys upon and ensures unto him. Besides which it notes the calling on the Name of the Father by the Son, through the holy Spirit, as Acts 22. 16. shews, where Paul is bid to be baptized or baptize himself, calling on the name of the Lord, when baptized; and this I have proved to be meant from Luk. 3. 21. and other wayes Review part. 2. sect. 5. p. 89, 90, 91. So that baptism is as well (or rather more) the ceremony of the baptized, as of the baptizer. Which might be proved from those texts which speak of the use of it, as Rom. 6. 3, 4. Col. 2. 12. Gal. 3. 26, 27. 1 Cor. 12. 13. in all which and sundry more the act of the baptized is noted, who doth thereby signifie his baptism into Christs death, being buried by baptism into death, and his rising to newness of life, putting on Christ, joyning into one body, &c. which I have cleered more fully in the same place pag. 96, 97 98, 99. And this, the Dr saith rightly, is more especially meant by baptising into the Name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Therefore it notes their act as well as the administrators. 4. If baptism were not as truely the act of the baptized as the baptizer, then it should be true baptism, if the baptizer did dip without any concurrent act of the baptized, yea though he were forced to it, and against his will put under water, and this were warrantably done by the baptizer, For he should do what is prescribed, But this is absurd, neither School men nor any other allow low such baptism, vide Th. Aquin. sum. part. 3. qu. 68. art. 7, 10. The Spaniards driving the Indians into the water forcibly for baptism, and their going in thus under water is excepted against as neither rightly done, nor true baptism. Therefore certainly baptizing prescribed Mat. 28. 19. doth comprehend not onely the act of the administratour, but also the act of the baptized, in yeilding to it and concurring with it. When Peter Acts 10. 48. commanded Cornelius and those with him to be baptised in the name of the Lord, there were three acts concurrent. 1. The Apostles command, by way of authority appointing it to be done. 2. Of the administratour by way of Ministry. 3. Of the baptized by way of submission and putting himself under water. Yet hee is not thereby a meer Sebaptist, as it is reported some heretofore have been, but is partly passive in consent, and submission to what the baptizer doth, and partly active in concurring with him. So that my speech is cleered from being gross, as th Dr. would.

Dr. H. adds. His second branch of exception is to those words of mine, wherein I say that the making or receiving Disciples, supposeth not any precedent instruction, but looks wholly on it as subsequent. Against this I gave reasons of dissent thus. 1. That which is expresst in Matthew by, Go ye therefore and make Disciples all Nations, is in Mark, Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every living creature; which shews, how they should disciple all nations; now they who are made Disciples by preaching the Gospel, are made disciples by precedent instruction, Ergo, the making or receiving disciples Matth. 28. 19. supposeth precedent instruction.

"But to this (saith the Dr.) I answer; 1. That the words in Mark "are no otherwise parallel to those in Matthew, then as an Epitome is "parallel to a larger discourse, such we know S. Marks for the most part "is, an abbreviation of S. Matthews Gospel, as in many others, so in "this particular; some passages indeed there are in S. Mark in this "place, which are not in S. Matthew, as shall anon be shewed, but in "the particular now before us, S. Mark is according to wont more con-"cise: there is no mention in him of baptizing in the Name of the Fa-"ther, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, nor consequently of "discipling, of which that was the ceremony, as in S. Matthew "there is.

Answ. This doth rather confirm my major then oppose it. For if Mark expresse the same more briefly and Matthew more largely in this particular, and there is no other expression in Mark besides, Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, which answers to Matthews words, Go make Disciples all nations; then what is expresst in Matthew is the same with that which is expresst in Mark. And indeed the time, occasion, and expressions do so plainly evince this, that almost all editions and translations (which use marginal references) and commentators I have seen, expound the one by the other.

Secondly, saith he Dr. "That Christs appointment κηρύξαι εὐ-"αγγέλιον, to preach the Gospel, in S. Mark, doth no way infer the "precedent instruction of every single person that was received to bap-"tism

" tism: the phrase signifies to proclaim or promulgate the happy ty" dings brought into the world by Christ, grace, and mercy, and eter" nal felicity to all that should come into him, and take his yoke upon " them, and learn of him. And upon the publishing of this to all the " world to every creature, i e. to the Gentiles universally, as well as the " Jews, I suppose 'tis very possible, that many of them should make all " speed to come unto Christ, and come out at the Apostles preaching,
" they and their whole households together (παντοσὶν, as the Oracle " commanded in Homer) and to bring their infant children, as they " used to do, that became Proselytes to the Jews, and then the Apostles
" knowing their Masters minde for receiving of infants, and that (as from " the institution I suppose them fore-instructed) to baptism, receive " them all, and (as many as interposed no voluntary hinderance) bap" tize them; and having taken them into the School of Christ, make " good provision for the future instruction of them, as soon as ever they " should be capable of it. That thus it was, I pretend not (still) to de" duce from these words Matth. 28. but to infer from another medium,
" the practise of the Apostles otherwise notified to us: All that I am " now to manifest is, that this passage hath nothing contrary to our hy" pothesis, but is perfectly reconcileable with it, and this is done by " the scheme thus laid: And so 'tis most visible how no force there is " in this first reason of exception.

Answ. It is most visible that the Dr. was in a dream when he wrote this; 1. Because he talks of an institution (which is onely imagined by him) of receiving infants, and as many as interposed no voluntary hinderance to baptize them (not excepting infidels children, contrary to his own interpretation of 1 Cor. 7. 14. which declares them unclean, that is, not to be baptiz-d in the Drs. sense) and to take infants into the School of Christ, as if the School of Christ were to nurse up infants, for that was all could be done to them, and to make good provision for the future instruction of them, as soon as ever they should be capable of it. Which is so ridiculous a conceit, as no waking man me thinks should fancy it. For what provision could the Apostles, who were to go and preach the Gospel to every creature, make for the future instruction of them, as soon as ever they should be capable of it, who were not to stay till they were able to speak, or receive any commands from them? 2. The Dr. as if he forgot his matter in hand, saith; All that he was then to manifest, was that this passage Matth. 28. 19. hath nothing contrary to his hypothesis, but is perfectly reconcileable to it; whereas his business was to answer my argument against his position, that the making or receiving Disciples Matth. 28 19. supposeth not any precedent instruction, but looks wholly on it as subsequent, 3. The Drs. answer, that Christs appointment to preach the Gospel in S. Mark, doth no way infer the precedent instruction of every single person that was received to Baptism, might be true, yet his position false, that the making Disciples Matth. 28. 19. supposeth not any precedent instruction, but looks wholly on it as subsequent. 4. His reason why to preach the Gospel in S. Mark, doth no way infer the precedent instruction of every single person that was received to baptism, shews his talk to have been incoherent, like the talk of a man in a dream; For what consequence is in this, The phrase signifies, &c. Ergo, To preach the Gospel in S. Mark, doth no way infer the precedent instruction of every single person that was received to Baptism? Might not all this be true, that the phrase so signifies, they so publish, the thing set down be possible, the Apostles know Christs minde, as the Dr. imagines, and yet to preach the Gospel in S. Mark, infer the precedent instruction of every single person that was received to Baptism? So that in all this which the Dr. saith, there is no answer to my argument. But the truth is, by the Drs. own grants my argument is made good. For if preaching the Gospel be instruction, and this be the way of making Disciples, which are not denied; then it must needs go before making or receiving Disciples, sith the meanes in order of actual being, must be before the effect, and so the Drs. position false; That the making or receiving Disciples supposeth not any precedent instruction, Matth. 28. 19. but looks wholly on it as subsequent. Again, if afore baptizing they were to publish the Gospel to all the world, to every creature, i. e. to the Gentiles universally as well the Jews, then afore any single person was received to Baptism, instruction was to be precedent, unless there were any single person which was not comprised under all the world, every creature, Gentiles universally as well as Jews: Yea the terms [every creature and all nations] comprehend every person that was to be baptized, and more; but they were every one to be made Disciples, and that by preaching the Gospel to them, afore they were to be baptized; Matth. 28. 19. Mark 16. 15. therefore instruction of every single person was to be precedent to his reception to baptism. Hereto agree the words of Athanasius, Hierom and others, cited by me, Review part. 2. sect. 5. p. 86, 87.

The 2d. saith the Dr. followes, that such as the making Disciples was, Joh. 4. 1. such is the making Disciples Matth. 28. 19. For by the Drs. confession they are all one. But that was by preaching, as is plain concerning John, Matth. 3. 1, 2, 5, 6. and concerning the Apostles, Mat. 10. 5, 6, 7. Ergo. Whence 3. I further argued, that way the Apostles were to Disciple all nations, by which they were to disciple the lost sheep of the house of Israel, but that was by preaching, Ergo, discipling supposeth precedent instruction.

"To this, saith the Dr. I answer, that the account last given is fully satisfactory to this exception also; For supposing the Apostles to "publish whersoever they came the εὐαγγέλια, the good news that "was come into the world by Christ, and the hearers not onely to "come in themselves, but to bring their whole families, and so their "infant children with them, there is no difficulty to imagine, that they "had thus made proclamation, received all, and made all disciples, "young and old, that either came or were brought, and so it being the "instrument to draw the parents themselves, and to move them to "bring their children to discipleship, it is still very visible how chil-"dren should be discipled, and consequently baptized by them, Bap-"tism being the constant ceremony of discipling. And though I am not "able to affirm how it was actually in Johns Baptism, yet this I may say, " that as far as can be discerned or inferred from the phrase in either " place (μαθητεύειν and μαθητὰς ποιεῖν) thus it very possibly might be " both in Johns and the Apostles baptizing.

Answ. It is so far from being satisfactory, that there is neither pertinency nor truth in this answer. For the Dr. answers, as if the thing I proved were not, that making disciples presupposeth instruction, because it is by preaching, but that infants might be made disciples, though making disciples be by preaching; which is indeed not to answer to the argument, but to a consectary deducible from the conclusion of it, which though it were not inferred nor consequent, yet the conclusion might be true that discipling presupposeth some precedent instruction, and is not wholly subsequent to it. Nor is it true. For 1. supposing the Apostles should do as he speaks, and the hearers come in as hee imagines, yet there is difficulty to imagine, that they that had thus made proclamation received all, and made all disciples, young and old, that either came or were brought unto them; specially considering how John received none wee read of but such as confessed their sins, and the whole people that were baptized of him justified God, Luk. 7. 29. believed him, Matth. 21. 32. others nor, and the Apostles are said to make disciples afore they baptized, Joh. 4. 1. and afore they baptized required repentance, Act. 2. 38. those who were baptized gladly received the word, v. 41. 2. It beeing granted that they made disciples by preaching, preaching being the instrument to draw the parents themselves, and to move them to bring their children to discipleship, yet it is not very visible how children should bee discipled; For fond affection or conceit, might move them to do that upon preaching, which yet might not take effect, nor be received by the Apostles. 4. Nor is Baptism consequent on such a discipleship, by offer or vow of parents, without profession of the party to be baptized, there being no institution for it, which is the onely rule about baptizing. 5. Neither is it true, that Baptism is the constant ceremony of discipling, though it be granted to be the ceremony of disciples, a person is first a disciple afore baptized, Joh. 4. 1. they first made disciples then baptized them. 6. It is not true, that as far as can be discerned or inferred from the phrase in either place (μαθητεύειν and μαθητὰς ποιεῖν) it might not very possibly be both in Johns and in the Apostles baptizing as the Dr. imagines, sith (if there be degrees of possibility) it is not very possible they should make any other disciples and baptize them, then such as the Evangelists story relates they did.

But the Dr. tels us. 1. For John, 'tis true indeed that his Baptism attended his preaching, yet doth it not thence necessarily follow that none were baptised by him, but those who particularly heard and obeyed his preaching; For 1. why might not those that heard it, divulge it to others, and bring them before they heard him to desire to bee baptised, and upon their confessing their sins, and professing amendment, bee baptise them?

Answ. Not likely before he had preached somewhat to them, however if his preaching were brought to them by others, they were not baptized afore instruction.

" 2. Why

" 2. Why might not thoſe that heard it, or heard of it, give that " heed to it, as to bring all that were dear to them of what age ſoever, " by that means to ſecure them from the wrath to come; when Noah " preacht repentance to the old world, and upon the decree of ſending " the flood upon the world of the ungodly, called all to come into the " Ark to him to eſcape the deluge, ſuppoſe others beſides Noahs fami- " ly had hearkened to his preaching, or ſuppoſe hee and his ſons had " had infant children, can we imagine they would have left their in- " fants to that certain ruine, and not have taken them into the Ark " with them? And Johns baptiſm was anſwerable to that Ark, in re- " ſpect of that approaching ruine on the Jews, ſtiled the kingdome of " heaven v. 1. and that evidenced to be a bloudy kingdome, explicated " by caſting into the fire v. 10. And can we imagine the Jews that be- " lieved John, and came to his Baptiſm, did not bring theſe children " with them to ſave them from the predicted evils, and then I profeſs " not to ſee any reaſon to render it incredible that John Baptiſt ſhould " thus receive and baptize thoſe infants (though the Scripture affirm- " ing nothing of it, and tradition, as far as I know, as little, I ſhall " neither affirm nor beleive any thing.) This only is certain, that a- " mong the Jews of that time, infant children were known to be capa- " ble of entring into covenant with God after this manner, and of being " partakers of the benefit of the Covenant by that means. And one " thing more I may add, that Chriſt himſelf, who was by his ſinleſneſs, " as unqualified for the repentance which John preacht, as the infants " were by their incapacities, did yet come and was received to Johns Bap- " tiſm, v. 13. and then in caſe infants were brought, why might not " they be received alſo?

Anſw. Becauſe it was not appointed to them. And this is a reaſon (which the Dr. may ſee if he will) to render it incredible that John ſhould receive and baptize infants, though infants of Proſelytes born a- fore their Proſelytiſm were by Jews baptized, who baptized upon a far different reaſon, to wit, the pollution through idols, which did adhere to the Gentiles nativity, to waſh away that, and to engage them to the obſervance of Moſes Law for righteouſneis: whereas John Baptiſt baptized with the baptiſm of repentance for remiſſion of ſins, even native Jews, directing them to the Lamb of God who was to take away the ſin of the world, and that he might be known was to be baptized of him. We can therefore eaſily imagine, that the Jews that believed John and came to his Baptiſm, did not bring infant children with them to ſave them from predicted evils becauſe wee reade that they that were baptized of him confeſſed their ſins, Matth. 3. 5. 6. juſtified God, Luk 7. 29. Nor was Baptiſm appointed to them as to Proſelytes infants, nor do wee reade that John Baptiſt gave any inkling of his minde to have infants brought. And it is ſigne to me that the Dr. is confident that hee can leade men in a ſtring, who adventures to ſuggeſt ſuch things as he confeſſeth the Scripture affirms nothing of it, and tradition as little, as far as he knows, and neither affirms nor beleives any thing in it, and onely upon a ſuppoſition that infant children would have been brought into Noahs Ark if men had beleived Noah, and Johns Baptiſm was as Noahs Ark ſtiled the Kingdome of heaven, whereas Johns and Chriſts Baptiſm are not made anſwerable to Noahs Ark in reſpect of the bare outward baptiſm, nor is it ſtiled the Kingdome of heaven, but the anſwer or interrogation of a good conſcience towards God by the reſurrection of Jeſus Chriſt, 1 Pet. 3. 21. and the preaching, beleiving of the Goſpel throughout the world, Mar. 1. 14, 15. which they who were baptized were to entertain, and not infants, and therefore not to be baptized till they did. And wee may with better reaſon, then the Dr. gives of his fancy, conceive Gods providence rather ordered there ſhould be no infants in Noahs Ark, that we might not fancy infants baptiſm thence, then that we ſhould as this Dr. or doatard ſuppoſeth.

Yet again, ſaith he, Then 2. for as much as concerned the Apoſtles, Mat. 10. Firſt 'tis there evident that they were ſent to the loſt ſheep indefinitely, and ſure that phraſe comprehends the lambs alſo, the infant children being loſt in Adam as well as the grown men, by the addition of their actual to original ſin? And then why ſhould we doubt but the Apoſtles miſſion extended to them alſo?

Anſw. Becauſe we reade of no ſuch thing done or appointed to be done, nor do we know that baptiſm was appointed to bee a remedy of original ſin, though ſome of the Ancients talk ſo beſides the Scripture.

The Dr. adds. "And 2. for their preaching, it is juſt as as Johns "was, to warn them to beware of the imminent deſtruction, that vindi- "cative act of Gods kingdome, v. 7. that all that ſhould give ear and "heed them, might haſten to get out of that danger by reformation and "new life; and the ruine being impendent to the young as well as old, "even the whole nation, why ſhould not the infant children be reſcued "from that by their Parents care in bringing them to baptiſm, and time- "ly ingaging them to flye from the wrath to come, as ſoon as they "ſhould come to underſtanding, injoying in the mean time the benefit "of others charity?

Anſw. It was fit they ſhould enjoy the benefit of others charity in their Prayers, and ſupply of ſuch things as were meet for them, of which ſort the Apoſtles Baptiſm was not, nor did they underſtand it was Chriſts minde that they were ſent to baptize them, for then they had baptized them, and not rebuked thoſe that brought them to Chriſt, Matth. 19. 13. Nor by bringing them to Baptiſm were children reſcued from the wrath to come, but by reformation and new life.

Thirdly, ſaith he, after their preaching though there be no mention of baptizing (and ſo it was not fit to be produced to our preſent buſineſs) yet other things are appointed to be done, wherein infants were concerned as well as others, as healing of diſeaſes, &c. and if being incapable of receiving benefit from preaching ſhould be deemed an obſtacle to their being baptized, why ſhould it not to their receiving cures?

Anſw. Becauſe that they might be baptized, it was neceſſary they ſhould be made diſciples by preaching, not ſo that they might be cured of diſeaſes. Nay I may add, ſaith the Dr. How ſhould the dead in that place (who sure were as uncapable of understanding as the tenderest infants) be capable of being raised by those Apostles, which yet is there affirmed of them, v. 8.

Answ. And I may add, that after this rate of reason, if mere capacity of outward Baptism, and the charge of Christ to the Apostles to do acts of power on any thing, without making it a disciple by preaching to it (as the Dr. here fancieth of infants) fit it for Baptism, then the dead are to be baptized, which was practised of old, and the giving them the Eucharist, as appears by the prohibition of it in the third Synod of Carthage Canon 6. and Balsamous note thereon. But the Dr. it seems thought it fit in this reply to me, to write what came next to hand, whether it were fit to be produced to the present business or not, of which sort also is that which he talks in answer to my third reason, of preaching to the nations, and receiving all that came in to the discipleship, whether on their own legs, or in others arms, whole families at once, the parents, and upon their undertaking their infant children also, which perhaps the Dr. might write early in the morning or late at night, between sleeping and waking, it is so like a dream.

The Dr. goes on thus, "His fourth proof is taken from the use and "notation of the word, which is so to teach as that they learn, and so, "saith he, is used Matth 13. 52. μαθητευθεὶς is rendred [instructed] "by our last translators, and can no otherwise be rendred then [made a "disciple by teaching] so Acts 14. 21. it is said, Having preached the "Gospel to that City, καὶ μαθητεύσαντες, having taught or made many "disciples. For the notation of the word we have formerly said sufficient, that it signifies to receive ad discipulatum, as into a School of "spiritual instruction, μαθητὴν ποιεῖν, to make a disciple, and such he "is made, who by any motive or means either comes or is brought into "the school, this indeed in order to teaching in the Master, and to learning in the Scholler, and the one so to teach, as that the other learn, "but this subsequent to his being made a disciple, the youth wee know "enters into the School, is admitted into the Colledge and University, "before he learns a word there, the instruction or learning is still lookt "upon as future, at his entring into discipleship.

Answ. How vainly doth the Dr. talk of his former sufficient saying, when he neither formerly nor now, gives one instance in the New Testament or any other Author, wherein μαθητεύειν is as much to receive ad discipulatum, nor any Translator or Lexicographer that so renders it Matth, 28. 19. or elsewhere! μαθητεύειν to disciple, Matth. 28. 19. is confest by the Dr. to bee all one with μαθητὰς ποιεῖν to make disciples, Joh. 4. 1. Now sure the Dr. might well take his Readers for dunses, if they could not distinguish between making disciples and receiving ad discipulatum, to be made disciples, entring into a school that they might learn, and being made a disciple, which alwayes notes learning of something antecedent. Nor is any termed a disciple, at least not in the New Testament, till he hath learned some of his Teachers doctrine; None were the disciples of the Pharisees, John Baptist, the Seducers, Acts 20. 30. till they learned some of their teachers lessons, nor do I think in the Jewish writers are any termed the disciples of their Rabbins, or said to be discipled till they learned. The terming youths schollers at their first entring is nothing to the purpose, sith neither is a disciple and a scholler all one, the one being from learning, the other from vacation from other imployment that he may learn. Nor is the use of words in our Universities and Schools, any rule whereby to expound the use of words in the N.T. but Scripture is to be expounded by the use in Scripture, which the Dr. in vain attempts to evade thus.

"And this is all the importance of the word μαθητευειν Matth. 13. "52. onely some accidental differences may bee observed, 'tis in the "passive and in the Aorist in the preter tense, πᾶς γραμματεὺς μαθη-"τευθεὶς εἰς τὴν βασιλείαν τῶν οὐρανῶν, every Scribe which is or hath "been entred as a disciple unto the kingdome of heaven, who since his "entrance hath been instructed, and (as real passives import) received "influence, been really affected and changed by discipleship, still no "way supposing that he was instructed in the learning or mysteries "of the kingdome of heaven, before he was thus admitted a disciple to "it; After his admission, there is no doubt but he doth (or ought to) "learn, nay being here γραμματεὺς μαθητευθεὶς, a Scribe discipled, a "grown man and learned among the Jews, before he came to Christ, I "doubt not but some knowledge he had of it before he entred himself a "disciple (see baptizing of infants p. 199.) but this not by force of the "word μαθητευειν, for still a disciple he may be before he learns, and "is therefore obliged to learn, because he hath assumed and undertaken "to do so, either personally, or by others susception, by his comming, "or being brought to be a disciple.

Answ. Were not the Dr. a very bold paraphrast, he would never have dared to say, that this is all the importance of the word μαθητευειν Matth. 13. 52. to be entred into a school for a subsequent instruction without any precedent, which is or hath been entred as a disciple into the kingdome of heaven, who since his entrance hath been instructed, but this not by force of the word μαθητευειν for still a disciple he may be before he learns. Hath the Dr. the face to say that the words might be so understood Every Scribe that is or hath been entred as a disciple unto the kingdome of heaven is like unto a man that is an housholder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old? Doth not our Lord Christ infer this as a consequent of their hearing, and understanding of the parables wherein he had instructed them in the foregoing part of the Chapter? Is there any Translator or Commentator afore him that hath thus expounded it? The vulgar Hieronie, Figurine, reade doctus learned. Beza, edoctus, well learned. Hieronie expounds it thus. Instructi erant Apostoli, scribæ & notarii salvatoris, qui verba illius & præcepta signabant in tabulis cordis carnalibus regnorum cœlestium sacramentis. Grotius annot. in locum, Doctor inquit, bene paratus atque eruditus ad tradenda præcepta regni cœlestis. Yea the Dr. himself here explains μαθητευθεὶς thus, a scribe discipled, a grown man and learned among the Jews, before he came to Christ; though he doth grossly abuse the text by making as if the scribe were taken for one so termed among the Jews afore he came to Christ, whereas whereas the term is used of Christian teachers, allusively to that order of men among the Jews termed Scribes, in which sense Christ saith, he would send them wise men and Scribes, Matth. 11. 34. which is Luke 11. 49. Apostles, and that text Chrysostome in his Homily on Matth. 13. 52. makes like to it, and Grotius annot. in locum, propriè autem τοις γραμματευσιν respondent ii qui in Ecclesia Christiana dicti sunt διδασκαλοι, quod nomen in Actis & Epistolis Pauli aliquoties legitur. μαθητευθεις מחכם Psal. 58. 6. and Prov. 30. 24. It is no better then a whimzy which the Dr. here vents, as if the force of the word μαθητευθεις noted not learning but admission to school, when the very use of the word notes in this place one well learned; and to affert a man may bee a disciple before he learns, being onely obliged to learn, by his own or other susception, by his comming or being brought to be a disciple, when the very derivation is from μεμαθηται hath learned.

The Dr. saith further. "So in the other place Acts 14. 21. μαθητευ-"σαντες ικανους] signifies no more then having received or initiated, i.e.
"(I suppose) by this right of baptism, made and baptized many disci"ples, which though it be there set down as a consequent of the Apo"stles preaching the Gospel in that City (for otherwise it were not ima"ginable that they should receive any disciples there, they must first "proclaim admission to all that come, before any can be expected ei"ther to come or to be brought to them) yet may it very reasonably be "extended to more persons then those that understood their preaching, "viz. to the infant children of their Proselytes brought to them by their "parents, and dedicated to Christ.

Answ. This text was produced to prove that the Drs. position was false when he said, That the making or receiving disciples supposeth not any precedent instruction, but looks wholly on it as subsequent, sith the word notes teaching as our Translators, the Vulgar, Erasmus, reade it, and the way of making disciples is expressly made in the text, the preaching of the Gospel. The Dr. saith, it signifies no more then having received or initiated i.e. (he supposeth) by Baptism, but this none else saith, and that it may be reasonably extended to infants, but he gives no reason, nor answers the objections to the contrary, but he keeps his wont of vain cracikng.

"Thus invailid (saith he of me) are his attempts from the notation "of the word, and by consequence his inference from thence (which is "set down as his fifth proof) that thereby it may appear how the Apo"stles understood the precept of Christ to preach the Gospel to persons "and thereby make them disciples. For although the practise of the A"postles be indeed the meanes by which we may discern how they un"derstood Christs precept (and those two places cited by Mr. T. from
"Matth. 13. and Acts 14. do no way belong to that, they tell us not "whether they received infants to Baptism or not) yet I may very "well ward my self from any inconvenience, which this use of the "word μαθητευειν in other places can threaten, it being alrsady vindi"cated from all necessity that it should be confirmed to grown men, and
"not communicated to infants also.

Answ.

Answ. How well the Dr. hath vindicated the use of the word μαθητεύειν from all necessity that it should be confined to grown men, may appear from that which goes before, in which it may be seen that he hath neither brought one place to shew that ever it was applied to an infant, nor answered one objection to the contrary. And me thinks he here overthrowes himself. He had said before, that Acts 14. 21. μαθητεύσαντες ἱκανοὺς] signifies no more then having received, or initiated, i. e. (I suppose) by the rite of Baptism made and baptized many disciples, yet he saith here, those two places cited by Mr. T. from Matth. 13. and Acts 14. do no way belong to that, they tell us not whether they received infants to Baptism or not, how then can they be reasonably extended to them? How is the word vindicated from all necessity that it should be confined to grown men? Are not these cross capers? Again, if these texts tel us not whether they received infants to Baptism, or not, it is because the word μαθητεύσαντες is not meant of infants, or because it imports precedent instruction, or Christs precept Matth. 28. 19. was not meant of infants, or the Apostles practise was not to baptize infants, or the word μαθητεύειν signifies more then receiving or initiating by baptism or some other reason, what ever it be it will overthrow the Drs. supposition, that the discipling Matth. 28. 19. did not exclude infants. I would further ask, whether the Dr. imagins that the verb μαθητεύειν to disciple, be as much as to baptize? If he say it is, then I would know how he can acquit the words Joh. 4. 1. where he confesseth, that making disciples is the same with discipling, Matth. 28. 19. and then the meaning must be, he baptized and baptized, and Matth. 28. 19. baptize baptizing, from inept tautology? If he say it is more, then it is false, that Acts 14. 21. it signifies no more, and if it signifie more, let him tell us what it is except teaching, that we may practise it according to the command Matth. 28. 19. If that be it, let him shew how that's extended to infants, if he cannot, then the Apostles practise expressed Acts 14. 21. is to be so understood; and the Apostles practise being indeed the meanes to discern how they understood Christs precept, by that we may discern that the Apostles understood the discipling Matth. 28. 19. of no other then making disciples by preaching the Gospel to each, and thereby teaching them, and consequently infants are excluded, which I was to demonstrate.

I added a sixth proof thus, A disciple and a believer appear to be the same, by comparing Matth. 28. 19. with Mark 16. 15, 16. For as the way of making disciples is more fully expressed by preaching the Gospel; so the Disciple to be baptized is expressed by [the believer] which is put before baptism.

"To this, saith the Dr. I answer, 1. That that passage in St. Mark, "He that beleiveth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that beleiveth "not shall be damned, and so on to the end of the Gospel is (as even "now I intimated) added by that Evangelist, to the words, as they "are set down in Matthew, and so being an addition, cannot bee "looked on as exactly parallel to the words in Matthew, Go and disci-

"ple

" ple all nations baptizing them — And this we also know is ordinary " for one Evangelist to set down more fully what is omitted or more " shortly set down in the other, and S. Mark that in other things was " willing to abbreviate St. Matthew, doth now visibly inlarge; And " so the comparison cannot regularly be made betwixt these two Evan- " gelists words, something being abbreviated in Mark, which was more " at large in Matthew, and something more concisely set down in Mat- " thew, and more largely in Mark. And then what necessity is there, " that Mark not mentioning discipling but believing, and Matthew " mentioning discipling but not believing, the discipled and believers " should be deemed the same.' It is true indeed of grown men, none can in " reason be admitted disciples, which are not also believers (the ground " of which I have set down in the vesol of the quaere. p. 199.) but of infant " children this is not true, for those, though they cannot come, may " yet be brought, and though not upon their own confession, yet by the " suscepion of others, made capable of the Churches charity, and so " may be disciples without actual or personal belief.

Answ. Though the words are not exactly parallel, yet they being of the same matter at the same time, the one interpret the other, and then any man may easily perceive, discipling all nations, to be the same with preaching the Gospel to every creature, and thereby making disciples, and baptizing them, that is disciples, to answer to he that believes and is baptized, and accordingly all along the Acts of the Apostles, disciples and believers are the same, and before Baptism believing is required, and they that were baptized were first said to believe, and so generally Commentatours expound the words as synonymous, nor doth the Scripture make one qualification to Baptism for infants, and another for grown men, nor any where term infants disciples; and if none of grown men can in reason be admitted disciples, which are not also believers, content to be disciples of Christ, then infants by their susception and bringing, are not made nor to be admitted disciples of Christ, without actual or personal belief, there being no such distinction of disciples in Christs words, nor any such appointment of baptizing disciples by such bringing or susception; but in such actions there is great sin of rashness in those that undertake, of prophaneness in those that bring and admit nor is there any true charity, but errour, arrogance, and folly in the Church, which shall thus presume to put one kinde of disciples fancied by themselves in stead of another appointed by Christ, who is the onely institutor of Baptism, and so the onely regulator of it, and the term [disciple] in grown men, being the same with [believer] nor any other termed a disciple but a believer, it is clear none are discipled, and consequently none are to be baptized according to Matth. 28, 19. but actual and personal believers.

But the Dr. hath not yet done, but adds. " Nay 2dly, if Mr. T. his " argument had power to infer it, 'twere that which I might safely a- " vouch, that infants may be comprehended under the stile πιστευοντες, " they that believe and are baptized; so even now we had it in the ex- " press words of Christ, the litle ones (and S. Luke specifies them to

" ὁ τὰ βρέφη little infants) that believe on him; i. e. juſt as they are ſaid " elſewhere to come unto him, when they are as uncapable for want of " bodily ſtrength of perſonal comming, as for want of ſtrength of mind " or judgement of perſonal believing, and yet in reſpect of others brin- " ging them to Chriſt (and ſo to the Church in baptiſm) they are by " Chriſt himſelf ſaid to do both of theſe, to come in one place, and to " believe in the other.

Anſw. Comming imports onely a local motion to a place or perſon, and may be by either a perſons or things motion from an inward or outward principle in elder or younger perſons, he that is carried in a coach, or on horſeback, or by barge, is ſaid to come to London or home, as well as he that goes on foot; but believing is an immanent act, which neither is, nor can be anothers act then the perſons, nor by any others motion then his own, nor from any other principle without his own underſtanding. No where are infants in age termed believers, one of theſe little ones, Matth. 18. 6. cannot be meant of little ones in age, for it ſuppoſeth then more little ones in age then preſent, whereas there was but one preſent v. 2. and then it would be a very great ſin to offend a little one in age; but the words following v. 10, 14. ſhew the term little ones to be meant of thoſe Chriſtians who were apt to be deſpiſed, and liable to going aſtray.

But if infants were meant Matth. 18. 6. yet it is falſe which the Dr. ſaith, " That he might ſafely avouch that infants may be comprehended " under the ſtile πιστεύοντες, they that believe and are baptized, for it followes in the Drs. own words; " But then 3dly, I willingly acknow- " ledge that the word [believe] in Mark, belongs peculiarly to the " grown men and women who are called by the preaching of the Goſpel, " of whom though it bee ſaid, that believing and being baptized they " ſhall be ſaved, and not believing they ſhall be damned, yet it no way " followes, that none but ſuch as thus perſonally believed, ſhould be " baptized, or that being baptized they ſhould not be ſaved; but loſe " all the benefit of their Baptiſm.] So that the Dr. yeilding that Mark 16. 16. is meant of grown perſons peculiarly, he could not ſafely avouch (unleſs an untruth might be ſafely avouched) that infants may be comprehended under the ſtile πιστεύοντες, they that believe and are baptized, which is onely Mark 16. 16. and then it follows hence that none are to be counted diſciples but believers, nor any to be baptized but ſuch. The benefit of Baptiſm to infants I think is none, ſure not ſalvation without faith in act or ſeed, or ſomething equivolent.

It followes in the Dr. " The latter part of the words is conſiderable, " He that believeth not ſhall be damned, infidelity is pitcht on as the " thing peculiarly that incurs the certain damnation, i. e. the voluntary " reſiſting the faith when it is preached convincingly to them, and of " that none are capable, but thoſe that are arrived to years of under- " ſtanding; which as it is an indication that that v. and thoſe that follow " in S. Mark of believers caſting out devils, &c. v. 17, 18. belong to " adulti peculiarly, ſo it no way hinders, but S. Matthews words being " different from them, and ſuppoſed to be preeedent to them in Chriſts

" delivery,

" delivery, may comprehend infants alſo, as ſuch who are capable of en-
" tring into diſcipleſhip, and of being brought and preſented to the A" poſtles by believing parents. This being the way whereby the faith of " the parents may be ſignally beneficial to the child, in bringing him
" thus early into the School, and ſo to the benediction of Chriſt, the " parents together with the infant children, as among the Jewes ſo a" mong Chriſtians, entring together into Covenant with God.

Anſw. I did ever conceive and ſo do others, and me thinks the Dr. ſhould conceive ſo too, that the commiſſion Mark 16. 15, 16. is the ſame, though with ſome variation of words, but not of matter, with that Matth. 28. 19. and if ſo, the Dr. hath granted and proved enough here to ſhew that believers Mark 16. 16. are onely adulti capable of underſtanding, and ſo none other diſciples to be baptized Matth. 28. 19. which is that I was to prove; and need therefore adde no more to refute his ſtale crambe of his Jewiſh pattern, but ſhall conſider what he ſaith for his poſition of making diſciples without precedent inſtruction.

Dr. Hammond Defence of infants baptiſm ch. 1. ſect. 2. p. 41. writes thus; " I ſay that the making or receiving diſciples, ſuppoſeth not any " precedent inſtruction, but looks wholly on it as ſubſequent. This I
" there concluded not from the bare negative, becauſe there was no pre" cedent mention of ſuch inſtruction, where diſcipling and baptizing
" were both mentioned, but becauſe in that place on which the Anti-pæ-
" dobaptiſt ſo much relies, Matth. 28. 19. the [διδάσκοντες teaching] " is expreſly mentioned after diſcipling and baptizing, and ſo is in rea-
" ſon to be deemed, and lookt on, as ſubſequent to both, and ſo the " receiving ad diſcipulatum, refer to that then future inſtruction, p. 49.
" In this matter Mr. T. is willing to finde a difference betwixt teaching " them to obſerve all things whatſoever Chriſt hath commanded them, " Matth. 28. 20. and the preaching of the Goſpel in S. Mark: think" ing by that means to avoid the importunity of that text in Matthew,
" which evidently ſets baptiſm before inſtructing. But this can avail him
" nothing. For if by the Goſpel in Mark we underſtand the whole Go-
" ſpel, as in reaſon we muſt, for that is it which muſt be preacht to e" very creature (the Gentile world) then is that directly all one with " teaching them to obſerve whatſoever he hath commanded; But if by " preaching the Goſpel we mean no more then, as Mr. T. here ſaith, that " Jeſus is the Chriſt, i. e. the propoſing him as a Maſter, and calling all
" to come to him as diſciples, then this being ſuppoſed precedent to " mens comming to diſcipleſhip, or bringing their infants to it (for with" out this they cannot be expected to come themſelves, or to bring their " infants) all the reſt is left to follow baptiſm, and ſo all particular
" Chriſtian inſtruction is ſubſequent, not precedent to baptiſm, an ef" fect of their diſcipleſhip, attending it no way neceſſary to prepare for " it, which is the utmoſt ὅπερ ἦν δεῖξαι, which from that circum-
" ſtance of that text I undertook to demonſtrate.

Anſw. That the Dr. ſaith not true in this, is manifeſt from his words, which were, not as here, that all particular Chriſtian inſtruction beſides the propoſing Chriſt as a maſter, and calling all to come to him as disciples is subsequent, but this letter of resol. q. 4. §. 25. having said that μαθητευσατε is not duly expresst by our English, teach, but make disciples, or receive into discipleship all nations, baptizing them in the name, &c. making this form of Baptism their ceremony of receiving them; He adds, where the baptizing being immediatly annexed to the making or receiving disciples, and the receiving disciples not supposing any precedent instruction, but looking wholly on it as subsequent, all that are thus brought and received ad discipulatum, to be for the future instructed and instituted in the Christian faith, may surely bee received by baptism, the ceremony which is there prescribed by Christ, with which to receive disciples. From which words it is evident he made μαθητευσατε, without teaching to import the receiving of disciples, even infants brought by others, and not onely all particular Christian instruction subsequent to baptism, but even instruction and institution in the Christian faith, and the receiving disciples supposing no any precedent instruction, but looking wholly on it as subsequent; which if he now retract and acknowledge that μαθητευσατε imports more then bare admission of disciples, and includes preaching of the Gospel that Jesus is the Christ, i. e. proposing him as a master, and calling all to come to him as disciples, and this precedent to baptism, then is some instruction in the faith necessarily precedent, and teaching by thus preaching the Gospel included in μαθητευσατε, make disciples, and none appointed to be baptized but they that are thus made disciples, and so no infants, and thus it will avail me something which I noted.

As for what he saith, that in reason we must understand Mark 16. 15. the whole Gospel, and that then is that directly all one with teaching them to observe whatsoever he hath commanded. Neither is it true, that in reason we must understand the whole Gospel, but so much at least as the Apostles were wont to preach to persons afore they baptized them (for they best understood Christs Commission Mark 16. 15.) which may be seen in these and such like places, Acts 2. 36, &c. & 8. 12, 35, 37. & 10. 36, &c. & 16. 31, 32. & 17. 18, &c & 18. 5. 1 Cor. 15. 3, 4, &c.

Nor if it were true doth it follow, that then that is directly all one with teaching them to observe whatsoever hee hath commanded. For 1. I no where finde agenda things to be observed by us, termed the Gospel, but credenda things to be believed Rom. 1. 16, 17. & 2. 16. 1 Cor. 15. 3, 4. Gal. 3. 8. 2 Tim. 2. 8 and accordingly no where is the Gospel propounded in the imperative, as a thing to be done by us, but in the indicative mood, as a thing to be believed; and accordingly wee are commanded Mark 1. 15. to believe the Gospel, and thus it is meant Mark 16. 15. For after it is appointed to the Apostles to preach the Gospel, it is presently added v. 16. Hee that believeth, to wit the Gospel preached, and is baptized, shall be saved. 2. If it were so that the Gospel did contain agenda, commands to be observed by us, yet to preach the Gospel could not be directly all one with teaching them to observe all things whatsoever Christ hath commanded, for Baptism is a command of Christ, yet is not any part of the subsequent instruction after baptism, which is meant by Christ in those words, and yet if any, is to be accounted part of the Gospel. So that it is evident, that the distinction I made between teaching the Gospel and other commands was right, and that the Dr. by making all the teaching Matth. 28, 19. subsequent to Baptism, hath perverted the order of Christ, and abused the text for the countenance of his errour of Infant Baptism's consistency with Christs appointment, Matth. 28. 19. Mark 16. 15, 16.

The Dr. adds, p. 41. And to this sense I there made it manifest, that the definition of Baptism, 1 Per. 3. 21. did refer that Baptism is ἐπερώτημα seeking to God, as to the Oracle to enquire for the whole future life, no way pre requiring actual instruction, but comming to Christ and the Church, to receive it and obey it for the future (and that done in some sort by those that are brought when they are not able to come, and by the charity of the Church received there.)

Answ. There is neither a definition of Baptism 1 Pet. 3. 21, nor any thing like it, nor doth the drift of the speech lead to such a conceit. That it is not a definition of Baptism may appear by the properties of a definition, for a definition sets down what a thing is, and is reciprocal with the thing defined, but the genus of Baptism cannot bee answer, or interrogation, or stipulation. Baptism actively taken being an act of hands, passively of the whole body, answer, interrogation or stipulation, if by words of the tongue, if of the conscience of the minde, nor any difference from prayer, or vow, or such like act. Nor is there any thing like it, there being no expression of the nature of baptism in the Church, but the use before God, nor is the intent to shew what Baptism is in it self, but when it saves, and the speech is a comparative expression, like that in the same Chapter v. 3, 4. Matth. 12. 7. and other the like; in which the meaning is, that baptism saves not when there is onely a putting away of the filthinesse of the flesh, but when there is with it also the answer, interrogation, or stipulation of a good conscience towards God, so that the predication is not formal but connexive, not shewing what it is, but what it is accompanied with when it saves. Nor is the Drs. sense true. For such seeking to God as he speaks of by baptism, when a child is brought by others to learn, and by the Churches charity received, doth not save as the answer of a good conscience towards God is said to do, nor is the answer, interrogation, or stipulation of a good conscience towards God without actual instruction, there is no man that makes an answer, or promises or makes an interrogation without some precedent instruction whose act soever it bee there must bee some knowledge of God and Christ, afore there is seeking or enquiry and address to him; nor is there any intimation of any ones bringing and the Church receiving, nor any propounding any question to learn, but if the allusion be to the use of the old questions and answers, abrenuncias? abrenuncio. Credis? credo. Spondes? spondeo: as Beza annot. in locum and others conceive: Or the term note an answer or stipulation as Beza, or interrogation as the Vulgar Latin, or confession as the Syriack, or examination and proving (which as Heinsius Exercit. in locum conceives, is intimated as pre-requisite to baptism as well as the Lords Supper) it is evidently dently another thing, then Dr. Hammonds tendring a child, or a mans own offer of himself to be entred into a school that he might learn. It is in my apprehension an act of plerophory of faith, through the resurrection of Christ from the dead, the same or near that demand of the Apostle, Rom. 8. 33, 34. Not such a low act which comes so many degrees short of saving faith, as the Drs. enquiry or address as to an Oracle for future instruction, by a mans own presenting himself or his child to the Church for Baptism is, which is so childish a conceit, as I should think should hardly have comen into the head of such a man, did it not happen to him, as to men that talk with children, to talk as a child. But he adds more of the same stuff when he saith.

And this farther illustrated as by the manner of children brought by parents to school, without either knowledge of letters, or choise, or so much as wish of instruction, so by the manner of Christs disciples being received of him, particularly of Philip Joh. 1. 44. who was called and received into discipleship as soon as ever Christ met with him, i. e. before he was at all instructed by him; and so also by the story of the Jews, Exod. 19. 8. who undertook to obey all the commandements of God, which hee should give, which yet were not then, but after given them, v. 20. which are clear evidences, that those may be received into discipleship, which have not yet had precedent instruction. Against this all that he hath to pretend is set down by him in these words. Let putting to school be as early as the Dr. will imagine, yet none is put to school till he doth know his teacher, and so none is Christs disciple in Scripture language till he know Jesus to bee Christ, and take him for his Lord, which infants being not capable of, they are not disciples, not to be baptized according to Christs appointment. To this I answer, 1. That the example which I had used of children being brought to school by the care of their parents, was designed to shew no more then this, that they may be delivered up to be schollers, who as yet know nothing of what they are to learn, nor have actual willingness to acquire knowledge, and consequently that entrance into discipleship refers onely to subsequent, supposes not any precedent instruction. And this is competently evidenced by that example, though it were supposed of the child that goes to school, that he knowes his teacher, this bare knowledge of the person of his teacher, being none of the documents which hee comes to learn, but the good letters that are profest and taught in the school, nor indeed is it imaginable why a blind child which is brought to school, or put to an instructer, and so cannot bee deemed to know the master before assuetude hath acquainted him with him, should not yet bee said, with as full propriety of speech, to come to school, as he that useth his own eyes as well as feet to direct him thither.

Answ. No child is ever entred a scholler without some such document as this, you must hearken to your master, which is some precedent instruction, and though he be a blind or a lame child, or both, he that puts him to school gives him some item who is his master, and to what end he is brought to him (whereof none is done to an infant) and though these be not the documents which he comes to school to learn, yet they are documents which he is taught afore he comes to school.

The

The Dr. adds. "2ly. It is as true, that children that are brought to "school do not alwayes know their masters before their entrance, no "not by the most superficial knowledge; many are brought to publike "schools, who never so much as saw their masters till they are by their "parents delivered up into their power and discipline; if this bee not "plain enough, then change the similitude from the Schoolmaster to "the parent or guardian, or the very nurse, every one of these are to "feed, and nourish, and as he shall be capable, to instruct the child, and "so doth Christ in a spiritual sense, whosoever is intrusted (by be-"ing brought) to him in baptism. And we know God and nature doth "thus bring a child to the parent, to the nurse or guardian, when the "child knowes none of these, nor understands any more of all these "transactions, then the infant doth at the font conceive what is done to "it there. And so still this evidenceth the vanity of this answer concer-"ning the childs knowing his teacher.

Answ. It doth indeed evidence the vanity of this Drs. answer, who being to shew how the words of Christ Matth. 28. 19. do not exclude infants from baptism, sith they are first to be made disciples, afore they are to be baptized whom he appoints to be baptized, having first turned the precept of making disciples, into receiving of persons to be discipled, and making them disciples by preaching the Gospel to them, into preaching it to others who may bring them to school, and being urged with this that none are brought to school till he know his teacher, hath no better shift then here he useth to avoid it. For bee it that some are brought to school that have not a superficial knowledge of their master, as having never seen him, yet they are not brought till they be told they are to go to a master, nor entred into the school (which was the Drs. notion of making Disciples, Matth. 28. 19.) till he have some knowledge who is to be his teacher. As for his other shift by changing the similitude, it is worse, for thereby he quits the cause, the precept being not Matth. 28. 19. set to nurse, but make disciples, and therefore though it be true, that a father, guardian or nurse, are to receive a child that knows none of them, and are to feed, nourish and instruct it as it is capable, and it is a good office to bring an infant to such persons to such ends, yet is it neither agreeable to use nor reason, but rather the part of a frantique man out of his wits, to bring an infant to be admitted into a school to be taught, or matriculated in the University, nor doth Christ appoint such to be admitted as disciples to him; nor is it true which this Dr. saith, that Christ doth in a spiritual sense feed, nourish and instruct whosoever is intrusted (by being brought) to him in baptism; nor do I think but that the infant knowes more the nurse, and the bringing of it to that end, then the infant doth at the font conceive what is done to it there. So that hitherto the Dr. hath not avoided this objection, that though it were granted him (which yet is not true) that making disciples, Matth. 28. 19. is no more then receive to discipleship or to school, yet infants are excluded, who are by none received to discipleship, or entred into schools. But the Dr. hath one more lift at this block which thus lies in his way.

" But then, saith he, 3dly. This so imperfect superficial knowledge " of the teacher, is in no wise worth considering in this matter; For I " shall demand, doth such very imperfect knowledge of Christ, as a " school-boy hath of his teacher, the first hour he comes into the school, " qualifie him for discipleship to Christ or no? if it do, then his Coun- " try men and Kinsmen, before he revealed himself to be the Messiah " and the Pharisees, which believed not his miracles were sufficiently " qualified, and then 'tis evident that those might be admitted to disci- " pleship, which were not believers, and so all Mr. T. his hypotheses " are destroyed, and then infants may be discipled and baptized though " they be not believers.

Answ. This is very Doctor-like arguing, to put a question and then make the answer absurd if it be affirmative, but shew no absurdity in it, if it be made negatively, as indeed it is. Which I should not have mentioned, but that he twits me (though unjustly) in the beginning of the next Section, with setting down a first reason without a second. I answer then to his question negatively, and yet such imperfect superficial knowledge of a teacher, is worth considering in this matter, to shew that no infant who hath not so much knowledge of Christ as such a school boy of his master, is to bee termed Christs disciple or admitted to discipleship. And yet if I had answered affirmatively, I think none of my hypotheses had been destroyed; For such imperfect knowledge of the master might be with faith in him, as able to teach him and willing to do him good, and so a Christian who hath but such imperfect knowledge of Christ as a school-boy of his master the first hour he comes to school, may be a believer, and know him to be the Messiah afore he bee baptized, and not, as his Kinsmen, Country men, or Pharisees, an unbeliever.

Yet the Dr. tels us, As for that which he here interposes [the knowing Jesus to be Christ, and taking him for his Lord] this bears no proportion with the childs bare knowing of his master, but is far above it, equal to his making it his own choise to have this master, rather then any other, and promising exact obedience to him, which is much more then is to bee found in most young schollers, or indeed in any that are brought by their parents or guardians, who alone are the persons who bear proportion with the infants brought by others to baptism.

Answ. This might have been omitted, but that the Dr. was willing to write something though it be impertinent, sith it opposeth not me; who said not that the knowing Jesus to be Christ and taking him for his Lord, bears any even proportion with the childs bare knowing his master, but onely said as none is put to school till he doth know his teacher, so none in Scripture language is Christs disciple till hee know Christ, not just so imperfectly as a school-boy. And yet I think there are some young schollers brought by parents or guardians, who make choise themselves of their master, and promise exact obedience to him.

The Dr. concludes this Section thus. " So that this reasoning of " his, is soon salved by distinguishing of disciples, that they are either " such

" such as come, or such as are brought to School, Proselytes of their " own choise, or children under the care of others; of the former sort " there are none but such as have some rude imperfect knowledge of " Christ, upon which they make this choise, and without it would not " probably be expected to make it; But for children which as minors " in their guardians hands, have no will of their own, there is no ne- " cessity they should have knowledge to move their will, they may ve- " ry reasonably bee acted by the will of others, and by their charity bee " made partakers of those priviledges which are communicated from " Christ in his Church to all true members thereof, and to that end be " discipled and baptized, entred by this ceremony into the Church of " God, where instruction is to be had as soon as they are capable of it, " and in the mean while partake of those other advantages, of which " their condition is capable.

Answ. When the Dr. hath proved out of Scripture, that there is any such sort of Disciples of Christ as he here describes, who come not but are brought to school by others, I shall acknowledge he hath sa'ved my reasonings till then I take this for vain babling, and conceive it little better then to speak of a disciple who hath no will of his own, nor knowledge to move it then to speak of a man that is irrational, and to say they may very reasonably be acted by the will of others, who are not so by their own, is in my apprehension all one as to say, they may very reasonably be acted, who are acted as bruits. The instance of Philip, Joh. 1. 44. servs not the Drs. turn, for though he were called and received into discipleship as soon as ever Christ met with him, yet not afore Christ spake to him, and bid him follow him, which implies some instruction by him, and therefore it is false that the Dr. saith, he was received into discipleship before he was at all instructed by Christ, nor doth that of the Jews Exod. 19. 8. who did then answer as disciples, but as servants, or persons that covenanted.

But the Dr. hath yet one more string to his bowe, though the rest be crackt. Lastly, saith he, I concluded that the making or receiving disciples, supposeth not any precedent instruction by the nature of Proselytism, which as it is all one with entring into Gods Covenant, and (in the Christian sense) with coming to Christ and being received into discipleship, so 'tis that which children are known to be capable of, not onely by that text Deut. 29. 0. but by the custome of baptizing infant Proselytes among the Jews, and by Christs command to suffer them to come unto him, whensoever they were thus brought.

Hereto I said, that it is not true, that a Disciple and a Proselyte are perfectly all one. For a Proselyte notes one that is by birth an alien from the Commonwealth of Israel, and comes to Israel to own their God, and bee part of their policy, not to bee taught, but to enjoy priviledges with other Jews, whether civil or ecclesiastical. But a disciple of Christ is one that owns Christ for his teacher and Lord, onely for spiritual benefits.

But certainly, saith the Dr. this is no reason of difference, for besides that I in that §. 27. acknowledged this accidental difference, that a Prose- lyte denotes a comming from some other nation (as a disciple doth not) adding, that this difference had no place in this matter, where the disciples are specified to be received from all nations; besides this, I say, it cannot be unknown to Mr. T. that I speak of Proselytes in such a notion as is equally competible to all of what nation soever they are, that enter into Covenant with God.

Answ. Who but he that writes at randome, would assert that a Disciple and Proselyte are perfectly all one, and yet acknowledge this accidental difference, that this is no reason of difference, and yet say, that a Proselyte denotes a comming from some other nation (as a disciple doth not) that this is but an accidental difference, and yet in his own description make this very difference, and when he expresseth the Hebrew word for Proselyte, still terms him גר a stranger, that this difference had no place in this matter, when his inference is from Proselytes who were strangers to the Jews, to prove Disciples and Proselytes the same, and to tell me I must know his use of a word, which hee neither shews that he or any else have so used. But the Dr. adds.

"Thus do we finde a Proselyte defined, Heb. 11. 6. by ὁ προσερχόμενος τῷ θεῷ he that commeth to God, thus doth a Jew when he "enters into Covenant of obedience to him, and thus did a Gentile "when he undertook the whole Law of the Jewes, and was therefore "גר עדקה and גר ברית a Proselyte of the Covenant, and a Proselyte of their righteousnes, and such is every one whether Jew or "Gentile that commeth to Christ, and as the two former of these were "made partakers of priviledges by this means, particularly allowed "freely to enter into the Congregation, and infants as well as grown "men were thus among them admitted into Covenant; so it is not imaginable why it should not hold of the Christian Proselytes also, nor "why the Christian infants thus received into Covenant by Christ, after "the same manner as Jewish and Gentile infants were among the ancient people of God. i. e. by Baptism, should not as properly bee called Proselytes of Christ, though they neither come from any other "nation, nor ever associate themselves with Israelites according to the "flesh.

Answ. If the notion of a Proselyte were according to Heb. 11. 6. I should agree that a disciple of Christ and a Proselyte were the same; For such a Proselyte is one that is a believer, as the words shew; But without faith it is impossible to please God; For he that commeth to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. All such Proselytes of Christ I doubt not are admitted into Covenant, to be baptized, to partake of priviledges in the Christian Church whether they be Jewes or Gentiles, according to that 1 Cor. 12. 13. and when infants are proved to be such, there will be no question about their Baptism, though not by reason of the Jewish custome, yet by vertue of Christs institution to baptize disciples and believers on him. But that infants of Christians are thus received into Covenant by Christ after the same manner as Jewish and Gentile infants were among the ancient people of God, i. e. by Baptism, or that afore they believe they should be called Proſelytes of Chriſt, or, that every one whether Jew or Gentile that commeth to Chriſt, is as a Gentile when hee undertook the whole Law of the Jewes, and was therefore a proſelyte of their Covenant and a proſelyte of their righteouſneſs, or that a Chriſtian believer is either termed in Scripture a Proſelyte, or any Jew is to be ſo termed properly is not to be imagined, all theſe things being the meer dreams of the Dr. ſuitable to his fancy of infant Baptiſm inſtituted among Chriſtians after the Jewiſh pattern.

The Dr. proceeds thus; "And whereas he ſaith of the Proſelytes "comming to the Iſraelites, that they came not to be taught but to en- "joy priviledges, I cannot divine what motive he had to affirm it, for "ſure the infant child that was baptized, and ſo received into the Con- "gregation of Iſrael did come to learn the Jewiſh religion, into which "he was thus early initiated, and that was one ſpecial priviledge (the "reſt of the Heathen having not knowledge of theſe Lawes) the imme- "diate end of his proſelytiſm, yet not excluding thoſe other ends "of injoying all other priviledges both Civil and Eccleſiaſtical "thereby.

Anſw. The infant had no end but ſuch as the parent, who was indeed the Proſelyte, had, and the parents end was not to be taught, for hee was taught the Jewiſh religion before, and at his Baptiſm, the precepts of Moſes being recited to him while he ſtood in the water, by the Elders at whoſe command he was baptized, and admitted into the Jewiſh policy, afore which admiſſion he was to undertake the obſervance of them, the proper and immediate end of his proſelytiſm, was his injoying thoſe priviledges which native Jewes had as one of that body, which ſhews that the admiſſion of a Proſelyte was not into a ſchool to learn, and therefore the notion of Proſelytiſm not like the notion of receiving to diſcipleſhip, which the Dr. fancies to be meant Matth. 28. 19. and to be the ſame with admiſſion to Proſelytiſm; to ſhew the miſtake of which was the motive why I ſet this difference between a Proſelyte and a Diſciple of Chriſt, as the Dr. might eaſily have divined, if hee had been minded to do ſo.

The Dr. ſaith of me, "And when he adds, but a Diſciple of Chriſt "is one that owns Chriſt for his teacher and Lord, onely for ſpiritual be- "nefits, I might as well acknowledge it, and ask why then an infant "who hath need of thoſe ſpiritual benefits, as ſoon as he is born ſhould "not be haſtened to a participation of them.

Anſw. I know no reaſon why hee ſhould not, nor do I know any reaſon why he ſhould be baptized, nor how by it an infant may be haſtened to the participation of ſpiritual or other benefits, but know reaſon why an infant ſhould not bee baptized, becauſe Baptiſm is thereby profaned, and the infant afterwards uſually hardened through pernicioue preſumption, as if he were thereby made a Chriſtian. The Dr. ſaith alſo.

"But it is farther evident, that ſpiritual benefits beeing firſt and "principally deſigned, other even ſecular advantages, may very law- "fully bee reſpected, and reaped by them that are thus early brought

"in, whether as Disciples or Proselytes to Christ.

Answ. That by Baptism infants are brought in as Disciples or Proselytes to Christ, or attain any advantages spiritual or secular I know not, sure I am none are lawfully respected in the use of infant Baptism, being wholly besides Christs minde, and if the end of Proselytism was (as manifestly it was) for far different purposes from that of a Disciple of Christ the Proselyte and Disciple of Christ are not perfectly one, which I was to demonstrate.

Yet again, saith the Dr. "Two sage observations he here addeth; "1 That there is no mention of the Disciples of the Priests, but of the "Pharisees and Sadduces, and I can verily well grant it, who speak "not of any lower kinde of Disciples, but either of God among the "Jewes, or of Christ, among us Christians, those being the onely "Discipleship, to which they were admitted by the Ceremony of Bap. "tism, the Disciples of the Pharisees and Sadduces being but a subdi. "vision and notification of several Sects among the Jewes, as there are "different denominations of Christians (the more the pity) which "divide unity, but use not new Baptism to discriminate them, I am sure "contradict the Apostle if they do.

Answ. How sage the Drs. observations of making Disciples as all one with receiving to discipleship, of baptizing after the Jewish pattern, &c. are is seen before. This observation is not denied by the Dr. nor any thing said by him to evacuate the use I intended to make of it, to shew that to be a disciple, doth not note the comming to God to enjoy benefits, as the Dr. made the notion of a Proselyte to import, for then persons should be termed disciples of the Priests, which is not so, but to learn, and so the disciples of Pharisees were those who learned their opinions. That which the Dr. saith is not true, that by Baptism persons were admitted to discipleship, nor that disciples of the Pharisees and Sadduces were but a subdivision under Disciples of God or Christ, for their disciples were no disciples of God or Christ, nor pertinent to the avoiding the use of my observation. 'Tis true there are different denominations of Christians (the more the pity) which divide unity, and of them I know none so great as that of the Prelatists, who will neither hear the Preacher who preacheth the faith of Christ, nor joyn in prayer unless the Common Prayer Book be used, nor own them as Presbyters who were not ordained by a Bishop distinct from a Presbyter, nor joyn with that society as a Church lawfully constituted where there is not Episcopal government, which I take to be a manifestly unjust schism and recusancy. I know none that use new Baptism, but Pædobaptists, who therein contradict Christs institution and the Apostles practise. Pistobaptists or baptizers of Believers of age, upon their profession of faith, use the old Baptism which Christ appointed and the Apostles practised, not to discriminate them from others, but to do their duty, and to supply a defect in infant sprinkling.

The Dr. saith, His second observation is, that the Holy Ghost doth not at any time call Christians Christs Proselytes, but his Disciples, that, saith he, we might not confound the notions of these termes. But I answer,

1. That

1. That those Texts that expres the Christians entring into discipleship, by comming unto him (of which there are good store) do in effect call them Proselytes, for a Proselyte is a Greek noun, derived immediately from the Verb προσέρχεσθαι, to come unto.

Answ. 1. I think this not true, sith the texts which expres the comming to Christ, do mean by it believing in him, as *Joh.*6.35. shews, but that is not in effect to call them Proselytes in the Drs. sense, nor is the notion of a commer unto and a disciple all one, sith a person may come to a person, yea to learn, and never yet be his disciple.

And secondly, saith the Dr. that if this word whether in it self, or in the Verb from whence it comes, had never been used in the N. T. yet would it not thence follow, that we might not confound the notions of Proselytes and Disciples.

Anſ. Nor do I make it any demonstrative argument but probable, as it is probable, that the Holy Ghost calls not the Christian society the Synagogue, nor the preachers of the Gospel its Priests, that we may not confound them. I have often given a firm reason, why infants capable of coming to Christ, blessed by him, and affirmed to be qualified for the Kingdom of heaven, should be denied water to be baptized, even this, that neither Christ appointed it, nor the Apostles baptized them, though he did the other to them. The Christian Church or Ministter might not deny baptism to infants, if they were qualified as Cornelius and the Gentiles that came with him were Acts 10. 46, 47. & 11. 18. What I said of infants being unqualified for Baptism, till by hearing they own Christ as their Master, is fully proved in the 2d. part of this Review, sect. 5, &c. and it is therefore too too boldly said by the Dr. that it is a begging of the question without the least tender of proof. Whether or in what manner the little ones mentioned Deut. 29. 10. did enter into Covenant, is so fully discussed before *Sect.*44,45,61,66,67. chiefly this last, that I need here add no more. Either in one of those Sections or some where before in this part of the Review, I have proved from the Text and Commentators, that those that were not with them that day, v. 15. were unborn, chiefly in that v. 2. Moses called unto all Israel, and they are said v. 10. all to stand there that day, and therefore I might more justly wonder (though it be no wonder that the Dr. thus abuseth me) that hee should have the face to say, I impose on the Reader.

He tels me, there is no mention of any act of the Fathers engaging them under a curse or oath, but onely of Gods oath which he maketh to them, v. 12. But he might have seen v. 14. these words, Neither do I make with you onely this Covenant and this Oath, but with him also that is not here with us this day, which I know not how it should be meant of any other then the unborn, for none but they of Israel were then absent, and entering into an oath and curse as they did Nehem. 10.29.

And for what hee adds, "If they had thus adjured or laid oath or "curse upon their children, yet would this make no difference betwixt "their and our entring into Covenant, we by the oath of Baptism which "is laid on the child (by him to be performed when he comes to ability, "unless he will forfeit all the benefits of his Baptism) do in like manner

" adjure our infants, though while they remain such, they hear it as " little as the Jewish infants did.

But sure there is a great difference between the solemn adjuration of Moses and all Israel binding their posterity and recorded in the book of the Law, and the obscure charge of an ignorant officiating Priest to three Gossips, whereof some are so ignorant, that they know not what the Christian faith is at a Font, which hee terms the oath of Baptism, which is seldome either heeded or remembred by any present.

And whereas he saith, my rejecting his inference, that by parity of reason infants may be entred into discipleship and baptized, to be a denying the conclusion when the premises cannot be denied; It is not true, for the consequence is plainly denied, and the reason is given of that denial, and each branch proved in the Book before sect. 5, &c. And therefore I shall say no more to this section, it being pity (to use the Drs. words) to lose time on such trifling conceits empty of all proof, as this Dr. hath dictated for infant Baptism. He said better Pract. cat. l. 5. §. 1. The Apostles powers were to preach and baptize those that received their doctrine.

SECT. XCVIII.

The testimonies of Cyprian, Augustin, and other Latin Fathers for Infant Baptism, are shewed to have come from their mistakes; and the evidences why the antiquity of Infant Baptism should not be deemed such as is pretended, are vindicated.

I Now return to the examination of the Testimonies brought out of the rest of the Latin Fathers besides Tertullian for infant Baptism, whereof Cyprian was the chief, and his testimony is thus urged by Dr. Hammond. Defence of infant Baptism, chap. 4. sect. 2. p. 99. " In the midst of this third Age, An. Chr. 248. was S. Cyprian made Bp. " of Carthage, and ten years after he suffered martyrdome, i. e. 158 " years after the Age of the Apostles. In the year 257 he sate in Coun- " cel with 66 Bishops (see Justellus in his preface to the African Ca- " nons p. 21.) and their Decrees by way of Synodical Epistle are to be " seen in his Ep. 58. ad Fidum fratrem, which is now among his works, " Pamel. edit. p. 80. The Councel was in answer to some questions about " Baptism, and accordingly he there sets down his own opinion, together " with the Decrees of that Councel of 66 Bishops which were assembled " with him; And so this, as it is an ancient, so it is more then a single " testimony, that of a whole Councel added to it; and yet farther to en- " crease the authority of it, S. Austin cites this Epistle more then once, " and sets it down almost entire, as a testimony of great weight against " hereticks; and so 'tis cited by S. Hierom also, l. 3. dial. cont. Pelag. " In this Epistle the question being proposed by Fidus, whether infants " might be baptized the second or third day, or whether as in Circum- " cision the eighth day were not to be expected, he answers in the name

" of the Councel, universi judicavimus, 'twas the resolution or sentence " of all, nulli hominum nato misericordiam Dei & gratiam denigandam, " that the mercy and grace of God was not to be denied to any human " birth, to any child, though never so young (by that phrase [mercy " and grace of God] evidently meaning Baptism, the right of convey- " ing them to the baptized) adding, that 'tis not to be thought that this " grace which is given to the baptized, is given to them in a greater or " less degree in respect of the age of the receivers; and that God as he " accepts not the person, so nor the age of any, confirming this by the " words of S. Peter Act. 10. that none was to be called common or un- " clean, and that if any were to be kept from Baptism, it should rather " be those of full age, who have committed the greater sins, and that " seeing men when they come to the faith are not prohibited bap- " tism, how much more ought not the infant to be forbidden, who be- " ing new born, hath no sin upon him, but that which by his birth " from Adam he hath contracted as soon as he was born, who therefore " should more easily be admitted to pardon, because they are not his " own but others sins which are then remitted to him, concluding that as " none were by the decree of that Councel to be refused baptism, so this " was the rather to be observed, and retained about infants and new-born " children. Thus much and more was the sentence of that ancient Fa- " ther, and that Councel, and as the occasion of that determination was " not any Antipædobaptist doctrine (there had no such then so much as " lookt into the Church, that we can hear of) but a conceit of one, that " it should be deferr'd to the eigth day, which was as much infancy as " the first (and so both parties were equally contrary to the Anti pædo- " baptists interests, the condemned, as well as the Judges) so that it " is no new doctrine that was then decreed, or peculiar to S. Cyprian " (who had one singular opinion in the matter of baptism) appears al- " so by the concurrence of the whole Councel that convened with him, " and by the expres words of St. August. Ep. 28. ad Hieronym. Blessed " Cyprian not making any new decree, but keeping the faith of the " Church most firm, decreed with a set number of his fellow Bishops, " that a child new born might fitly be baptized. Which shews it the re- " solution of that Father also, that baptizing of infants was the faith of " the Church before Cyprians time, not onely the opinion, but the faith, " which gives it the authority of Christ and his Apostles.

Answ. I have been willing to set down these words at large sith none urgeth this authority more fully, though Mr. M. Dr. H. Mr. B, &c. do all alledge it, and it is the chiefest of all the testimonies Augustin produced for infant Baptism, and therefore was translated by me into English, and printed at the end of my præcursor. Concerning which act, Mr. B. præfest. mor. p. 401. saith thus, It seems to me God ordered Mr. T. to translate Cyprians Epistle to the disgrace of his cause with the vulgar themselves. For none can be so blinde as not to see in it the antiquity of infant Baptism, which is all that we urge it for. But if the cause I maintain be disgraced by translating that Epistle, I shall take it as a sign that a spirit of dotage is faln on men, so as to be enamoured on the blemishes

of the ancient: Sure me thinks none of the vulgar, much leſs the learned, ſhould be ſo blinde as not to diſcern, that infant Baptiſm was an errour, which was maintained by the prime aſſertors, upon ſuch vain reaſons as are in that Epiſtle, which are not excuſed by what Mr. B. ſaith, That the arguments are onely for confutation of the objection concerning infants uncleanneß before the eighth day, and not to give the grounds that warranted infant Baptiſm; For the truth is, both are done together, and the beſt grounds they had for it are ſet down by them, which will appear to be ſo frivolous by examination of them, that notwithſtanding all the credit Dr. Hammond endeavours to gain to it, yet men of mean underſtandings, I doubt not, will by reading of it diſcern how ill that Councel did in that determination. Nor doth it any whit better the matter to ſay, that it was not Cyprian alone, but alſo a whole Councel of 66 Biſhops which did thus agree with him. For in like manner did the ſame Cyprian, with a more famous Councel [See Epiſt. to Jubaia. ponep. Quir. Janu. Steph.] at the ſame place, determine the rebaptizing of the baptized by Hereticks, with better ſhew of Scripture and reaſon then in his Epiſtle to Fidus, and alledged Apoſtolical authority as much as in this, and yet he is deſerted therein not onely by the Biſhops of Rome that were then, but alſo by Auguſtin, and the African, and other Churches. Beſides his maintaining the perfuſion of the Clinici, in his Epiſtle to Magnus l. 4. Epiſt. 7. his maintaining the neceſſity of water with the wine in the Lords Supper, as the Lords tradition, l. 2. Epiſt. 3. ad Cæcilium, with other things, do ſufficiently diſcover the weakneſs of Cyprian, and the Biſhops of thoſe times in their determinations, and the ſlightineſs of their reaſons, which no intelligent Divine ſhould now urge, and therefore me thinks ſhould not adhere to their practiſe or tenents, grounded on ſuch frivolous reaſons. Nor in this matter is Auguſtins or Hieroms authority ſuch, as that we ſhould relye upon their approbations and ſpeeches, their corruptions in this point, and in other points ſhewing their miſtakes both in matters of doctrine, and fact, ſome whereof are before noted ſection 88. and more will bee in that which followes.

As for what Mr. B. ſaith, That the antiquity of infant Baptiſme is all that he with others urge Cyprian for, I reply, he and others need not to have done that, ſith I acknowledge it to have been as ancient as Cyprian, not as it is now; but 1. in the practiſe, uſed onely in caſe of imagined neceſſity, to ſave an infant in apparent danger of imminent death from periſhing, as the words of Tertullian de bapt. c. 18. and Greg. Nazianz. orat. 40. de ſanct. bapt. and ſundry relations ſhew to have been the practiſe. Now in this if Proteſtant divines have rejected antiquity, and deny ſuch infant Baptiſm as they practiſed, determining that there is not ſuch a neceſſity of baptizing infants for that reaſon, nor that they are to be baptized with private Baptiſm upon ſuch a fear, and accordingly declining it as ſuperſtitious, they thereby juſtifie us from their crimination of innovation in deſerting the Fathers, when they themſelves do it in the ſame thing as well as we. And if Mr. Baxter (as hee doth plain Script. proof. l. 2. c. 15. p. 153.) except againſt Tertullians reaſons as poor, and therefore therefore reject his advice, why ſhould not we reject Cyprians and his Collegues determination, which was built on as poor, if not poorer reaſons then Tertullians.

2. In the Doctrines taught: For they taught, that by Baptiſm the grace and mercy of God was given, that without Baptiſm infants muſt periſh, that every one that is born of mankind is to be baptized, in which Mr. Baxter and other Proteſtants do diſſert them: Now if they diſclaim their Doctrine in that which led them to their infant Baptiſm, we have no reaſon to be bound to their authority. Nor is the Doctrine the leaſt matter to be conſidered, or the reaſons of their determination impertinent to a right judgement of their practiſe. For as in other controverſies between us and Papiſts, as about Monkiſh profeſſion, Lent faſt, Prayer for the dead, &c. the main thing conſidered, is, how far the Ancients practiſed theſe, and upon what grounds, as may be ſeen in Uſhers anſwer to the Jeſuites challenge, and other learned Proteſtants writings, ſo it is in this: By which we may diſcern, that the Fathers practiſe of infant Baptiſm was upon the ſame grounds with thoſe of the Papiſts, which we reject; and therefore the Fathers teſtimonies do indeed diſgrace the cauſe of infant Baptiſm, and plainly ſhew upon what erroneous opinions it came in; and if prejudice did not dazle their eys, learned and godly Proteſtants would rather ſuſpect and judge infant Baptiſm a corruption, then alledge their determination for their juſtification. And for what is alledged, that Auguſt. Ep. 28. ad Hieron. ſaid, that Cyprian did not make any new decree, but kept the faith of the Church moſt firm, it is manifeſt, that the faith Auguſtine means was that infants had original ſin, and without Baptiſm muſt periſh, which in like manner he taught about the Lords Supper (which was given to infants in Cyprians time, as his Sermon de lapſis ſhews) l. 1. de pecc. merit. & remiſ. c. 24. l. 1. adv. Julian. c. 2. contra 2 Epiſt. Pelag. l. 4. c 4. Now as we and the Romaniſts have rejected infant Communion, though as ancient as infant Baptiſm, or very near as ancient, ſo ſhould infant Baptiſm be rejected as upon the like miſtake brought into the Church. The like might be ſaid of the exorciſing, or exufflation, that is, blowing away or puſhing out the Devil, of which Auguſtine ſpeaks ſo much as uſed with Baptiſm to infants, the anointing with oyl, giving milk and honey, cloathing with white garments mentioned by Tertullian as common in his time before Cyprian, which yet are left by us notwithſtanding he make them in his l. 1. againſt Marcion, lib. de Corona militis, Apoſtolical traditions. Out of which and many more inſtances this may bee collected, that the Fathers teſtimony of the uſe of their time, or of Apoſtolical traditions, is not to be received without examining their reaſons, to which in this thing how little credit or heed is to be given, will appear by the exceptions I have made in my Examen, and ſhall now vindicate from what Mr. Ms. friend, and Dr. Homes ſay to them.

The firſt was, that in Tertullians time infant Baptiſm was not defined, ſith he diſſwades it, De Bapt. c. 18. Scult. med. patr. part 1. l. 7. c. 42. Tertullianus l. de Bapt. eos duntaxat baptizandos cenſet, qui Chriſtum noſſe potuerunt. The anſwers are, 1. that he was for infant Baptiſm, as appears pears by his book De anima, c.39. But this is refelled before. 2. That he mentions it as then in use. Ref. It is true, but not allowed. 3. That he allowed it in case of necessity. Ref. This is against those that deny the use of it for that reason in that case. 4. That he disswaded onely the Baptism of infants of infidels, sith they onely were in need of sureties, and likely to fail in answering the engagement for them. Ref. This is not likely. 1. It's not likely such were brought in the times of persecution, nor that there were any Christians who would become sureties for them. 2. It was usual then, as the custome hath been since, to have sureties at Baptism of infants of believers, and also at the Baptism of the aged, as is gathered out of Tertul. de corona militis, Inde suscepti, which is spoken of the aged. 3. The words of Tertullian shew he argued against the Baptism of any little ones in respect of their age. 4. His reasons (be they what they will) are against the Baptism of any little ones, with expres direction for them to come not till they were of age to understand. Veniant ergo dum adolescunt, veniant dum discunt, dum quo veniant docentur, fiant Christiani, cum Christum nosse potuerint. That is, Let them come therefore when they be grown up, let them come when they learn, when they are taught wherefore they come; let them be made Christians when they shall be able to know Christ. Which makes it certain he meant this even of believers infants, whom he presumed would be taught to know Christ, and that Antipadobaptist doctrine had then looke into the Church, though Dr. Hammond say otherwise.

The 2d. Exception was, Augustines and Hieroms relying on this Councel, shewed their darkness.

Answ. Mr. M. p.38. of his Defence. Though Augustine approved Cyprians judgement, yet he relied not upon his reasons to make good infant Baptism; this to him is no new doctrine; he had another eye upon the constant and sure faith of the Church, which in that point he followed faithfully.

Ref. It appears by the words of Augustine, ep.28. ad Hieronym. where he alledgeth this very thing for infant Baptism [that Cyprian said not that the flesh, but the soul unbaptized should be lost] that he relied on his reasons; and the like is apparent, where he and Hierome set down his words, and argue from them, tom.7. l.3. de pecc. mer. & remis. c 6 contra Julian l.1. c. where Augustine hath these words, Sed Cyprianus dicit perire parvulum nisi fuerit baptizatus, quamvis ei non propria demittantur, sed aliena peccata. But Cyprian saith, a little one perisheth unless he be baptized, although not his own but anothers sins are forgiven him.

My 3d. Exception was, That Fidus started the question out of a Judaizing conceit, that the law of Circumcision which was not to be till the 8th day, was to be considered, and that the footstep of an infant being in the first days of his birth is not clean; which shew a relique of Judaism in him.

To this it is said, 1. That Cyprian did not concur with him, nor the Councel.

Refut. 1. However it appears that the Baptism of infants was then practised upon the superstitious conceit as if we were to do in Baptism as the Jews did in Circumcision. 2. Nor doth Cyprian appear by his Ep.7. l.4. and elsewhere to be free from thinking the ceremonial Law to direct us about Baptism.

2. That other learned men, as Athanasius, Nazianz. August. Chrysostome, reasoned from Circumcision to Baptism.

Resut. No doubt of it, for as in the controversie about Easter, so in other things they appeared too much to imitate the Jewish ceremonies, by which the simplicity of the Christian service was altered.

My 4th. Exception was, That the resolution of this Council was the spring-head of infant Baptism.

Answ. Before that time Baptism of infants was in use.

Resut. Yet it was not determined before, but disswaded, nor was any authority of any Council which was as a spring head to it, whence it continued a stream afore that, nor doth Augustine in his allegations for it, find any higher spring of it then Cyprian and his Council.

My 5th. and chief Exception was, That the Council determined the baptizing of infants upon these errours, which are now rejected by Protestants as Popish; 1. That they thought baptizing giving Gods grace, and the denying it denying Gods grace; 2. They thought the souls to be lost, which were not baptized; 3. That therefore not onely infants of believers, but all infants were to be baptized.

Mr. M. acknowledgeth the two first to be rightly gathered from the words of the Epistle, but that he also urged that Baptism comes in stead of Circumcision, and if some arguments were used by the Ancients which were not good, the truth is not to be rejected, when some other are.

Ref. 1. The Council determined infant Baptism on no other argument. 2. If infant Baptism could be proved by other arguments, I should yeeld to it; however the credit and authority of this Council is taken away by reason of the falshood of the grounds of their determination.

2ly. For the 3d. inference, though he lays it down in general terms, that none are to be hindered from comming to Christ: Yet what he saith ought to be understood of the Church, because he speaks of such as God hath cleansed or purified who were common.

Ref. 1. The words are as expres as may be, we all judged that the mercy and grace of God is to be denied, (by not baptizing them) nulli hominum nato, to none born of men, as much as in us lies, if it may be, nulla anima perdenda est, no soul is to be lost for want of Baptism. 2. The very words Mr. M alledgeth for a restriction to the Church are against it, they are thus. Sed putamus omnem omnino hominem admittendum ad gratiam Christi, cum & Petrus in Actibus Apostolorum loquatur & dicat: Dominus mihi dixit neminem communem dicendum & immundum. But we think every man altogether should be admitted to the grace of Christ, when Peter also in the Acts of the Apostles speaks and saith, The Lord hath said to me that no man should be termed common and unclean: Which is meant of all men, nor onely of the Church. And this enough to answer Dr. Homes, who in his animadversions, p.138. finds not that passage in Cyprian, which I alledge, and p.139. saith, Cyprian doth not say, infants perish if they be not baptized, though Augustine expresly saith the contrary, and *p.*137. takes takes on him to defend the sayings of that Councel, as having no errour or hurt to say that Baptism gives grace instrumentally, and that without warrant wittingly to deny Baptism is to deny Gods grace. But Protestant writers generally (as Austin before) judge the words to have a further sense, and the words of the Epistle plainly shew that they held by the very Baptism infants had remission of sin and were saved, and without it were lost, and to deny them Baptism was to deny them Gods grace. That which he saith of me, p. 139. That I would not have it, that Cyprian doth at all put in original sin among his arguments for baptizing of infants, is not true; I onely denyed that he put it in, in the manner Mr. M. conceived.

What I said of the absurdity and nakedness of that Epistle, hath no more immodesty then is common to Writers Protestant and Papists, who charge Fathers and ancient Councils with errours, blemishes, and oft times with harder censures; if I had given that Epistle a tarter censure I had done right, that I spake was soft enough, considering the great hurt which hath come to the Church of God by that Epistle, which determined childrens baptism by childish reasons.

Next to Cyprian of the Latine Fathers, are recited Ambrose and Hierome, and Paulinus by Dr. Hammond, whose words with Augustines, and such Councels as were in their times in the 4 th. and 5th. Century, I shall forbear to recite, it being acknowledged that in those ages it was practised, and by reason of Augustines esteem Baptism of infants was practised in following Ages almost without controul; and in process of time, that which was before Augustines dayes a rarity, became so frequent, as that it almost swallowed up the right Baptism, which appears from the words of Walafridus Strabo, placed by Usher at the year 840. in his Book de rebus Ecclesiasticis, c. 26. who is termed by Mr. George Gillespie in his Aarons rod blossoming, p. 567. a diligent searcher of the antients which were before him, and of the old Ecclesiastical rites, which with other observations tending to reduce the testimony of Augustine to its just weight, are set down in my Examen, par. 1. sect. 8. and are now to be vindicated by me from what Mr. Marshal and others reply.

Dr. Homes, p. 158. excepts against what I said, that it was Augustines authority that carried infants Baptism in the following Ages almost without controul; and 1. he asks, "What carried it 300. or 400. years be-"fore? For all that time it was frequent.] But this is not true, nor ever proved by Dr. Homes. Chamier, paustr. cath. tom. 4. l. 5. c. 15. §. 19. saith truly, who seeth not that the custome of the scrutiny of the baptised was in that time, when scarce the thousandth person was baptised afore he came to age, and was diligently exercised in Catechism. Dr. Hammond in his pract. Catech. l. 1. §. 3. p. 23. All men were instructed in the fundamentals of faith anciently before they were permitted to be baptised.

"2. They that were carried by Augustine, were not carried by the "authority of the man, but by the Scriptures and reasons he urged. Which I grant; but those Scriptures and reasons had never carried infant Baptism, if the name of the man had not been more prevalent then his reasons.

"3. It

" 3. It cannot be ſaid that Auguſtines authority did in his time carry " infant Baptiſm in a manner without control, ſeeing he had ſo much " bickering with the Pelagians about it, who under ſome notion did con- " againſt it, as we ſhewed before.] But by his leave it might be ſo ſaid, and that truly, ſith in the bickerings againſt the Pelagians, Auguſtines authority grew; yea, Hierome in the end of his 3d. Dialogue againſt Pelagians, in the words cited by Dr. Homer. p. 149. doth himſelf refer the Reader to Auguſtines works about baptizing infants, as the chief prop of that cuſtome. However, that which I ſaid is manifeſtly true, that after his time, in the following Ages, Auguſtines authority carried the baptiſm of infants almoſt without control.

Dr. Homes further excepts againſt my alledging walafridus Strabo, and ſaith, 1. Strabo is againſt me, 2. in ſaying in the firſt times, Baptiſm was wont to be confirmed by impoſition of hands. But the Dr. wrongs me in ſaying I deny it Exercit. ſect. 14. who onely ſay it was a part or appendix of Baptiſm, as Chamier ſaid pauſtr. cath. tom. 4. l. 4. c. 11. ſect 11. &c. not as among the Papiſts or Prelatiſts uſed many years after baptiſm. But of this enough is ſaid Review part. 2. ſect. 23.

2. About Athanaſius, that in Athanaſius his time, to his knowledge there was baptiſm of little children. But how is this againſt mee, who doubted not concerning Athanaſius his fact of imitating baptizing when he was a Boy, and of Alexander his approbation of it, but ſaid I marvailed I found nothing produced out of Athanaſius works for infant Baptiſm, if it were ſo manifeſt as Mr. M. ſaid. Now this was not in Athanaſius his works, and the ſtory doth not at all prove infant Baptiſm either in uſe or approved then, but rather the contrary. For that fact was done by Athanaſius at play, among boyes at play, and it was approved as baptiſm, becauſe the baptizer and the baptized uſed the ordinary actions done at baptiſm of the aged: which ſhews that Baptiſm was then uſed to and by perſons of age, though imitated by boyes at play.

3. About infant Baptiſm, for which Strabo quotes many authorities and antiquities, as of the Concilium Gerundenſe; But this is not againſt me, who deny not, but acknowledge many Councils for it, after and in Auguſtins time, but know of none but that of Carthage in Cyprians Epiſtle to Fidus afore, and do judg thoſe Councils weigh no more then one Auguſtin, whoſe authority they relied on, and ſome of them uſed his very words in their Canons.

2. That " Strabo faulters, and is much faulty in the thing he is quo- " ted for. For firſt, he calls the times of Auguſtine, who is but of late " in compariſon of many ancients we have quoted prima tempora, that " is, the firſt times, for Walafridus quotes Auguſtines practiſe, that was " not baptized till of ripe years, to prove, that in the firſt times (as " Walafridus calls them) men were not baptized till able to know well, " and make profeſſion; when as Auguſtin himſelf, as we have ſhewed, " and Mr. T. hath confeſſed, did refer himſelf to ancienter times a great " deal, as to Cyprian that was almoſt 200 yeares afore him, for the pra- " ctiſe of baptizing infants. 2. Walafrid ſaith, illis ſolummodo, &c. " that is, to them onely the grace of Baptiſm was wont to bee given,

"who were of integrity or ripeneſs of body and minde, &c. but gives "not proofs or reaſons, but onely one ſingle inſtance of Auguſtine him- "ſelf for an univerſal propoſition.

Anſw. It appears not that Strabo faultered in either of theſe. He cals the times unto Auguſtine, not onely Auguſtines times, prima tempora, the firſt times; and though he knew that Cyprian was alledged by Auguſtine for proof of infant Baptiſm, yet Strabo might rightly ſay (not as Dr. Homes makes him, men were not baptized (but) the grace of Baptiſm was wont to be given to them onely who might know well and make profeſſion. And for this having ſet down the ancient cuſtome, he alledgeth the inſtance of Auguſtin, not becauſe there were no more, but at that time the thing being well known, and Auguſtines authority being the chief meanes of making infant Baptiſm ſo frequent as it was after his time, it was enough for his purpoſe to inſtance in Auguſtines own example, as ſufficient to ſhew how the ſtate of things was before. Nor is it likely that Walafridus Strabo faultered in the third thing the Dr. objects, but that (not he, but) ſome of the writers of his Book miſtook, and put XXV. for XXXV. And for the 4th. thing that hee confeſſeth, that religious wiſe men did baptize infants more frequently after Auguſtines time, upon the apprehenſion of danger if they neglected it, it confirms my obſervation, that infant Baptiſm grew to be ſo frequent as it was by Auguſtines authority, but doth not at all prejudice my allegation of Strabo; For though he being corrupted with the ſuperſtition of the age in which he lived, did judge well of the practiſe of infant Baptiſm, yet his relation of the ancient uſe is uſefull for me to ſhew, that it was but an innovation Nor did my mention of his relation of the uſe of Goſſips, and the imagined ſpiritual kinred contracted by it, either blemiſh Walafridus or break my ſhins, but ſerved my turn to ſhew what ſuperſtition crept in by infant Baptiſm, as ariſing from the want of the primitive uſe of the baptized perſons own engagement at Baptiſm, which being not done by infants, was ſupplied by this vain invention of men, and did (as generally ſuch inventions do) occaſion that evil opinion of the ſpiritual kinred contracted, which ſuperſtition turned to a conceit of inceſt between Goſſips. This opinion, though it did not neceſſarily follow on that uſe (For there might be Goſſips without ſuch opinion, as there might be tranſubſtantiation without adoration) yet as the nature of ſuperſtition is to adde one humane invention to another, and the latter worſe then the former, and the juſt judgement of God leaves men to err, when their fear of him is taught by the precepts of men, Iſa. 29. 13, 14. (as I have ſhewed in my Sermon intituled, The leven of Phariſaical will worſhip) ſo it happened both in Baptiſm and the Euchariſt, infant Baptiſm brought in Goſſips, they were taken for parents, thence conceived to be of ſuch affinity, that their copulation would be inceſtuous, and ſo in the Euchariſt the opinion of the Lords Supper, as if Chriſts body were in the bread, begat Tranſubſtantiation, that kneeling and adoration, which have more connexion then a rope of ſand or pebles in a Wyth, notwithſtanding Dr. Homes his conceit, and Strabo's words need better anſwer then he gives.

All

All that Dr. Homes p. 161, 162, 163, 164, 165. saith against my allegation of Cluniacensis, doth not either prove, that Peter de Bruis did not deny infant Baptism, or that Cluniacensis did not alledge Augustine for it, and de Bruis rejected it, and appealed to the Scriptures (though I have acknowledged in my Apology sect. 8. my mistake about the words of the ignorance of Greek, and the mention of the Greek Church and the Council of Arles.) For why should Cluniacensis say, Ecce non de Augustino sed de Evangelio protuli cui cum maxime vos credere dicatis, &c. but that Augustine was wont to be urged against them, but they rejected him and appealed to the Gospel. As for Peter de Bruis and Henricus, their opinions I set them down as I found them reckoned in the argument of Cluniacensis Epistle, not thinking fit to set down all that Cluniacensis chargeth them with, having by Mr. Gataker's Defence of Mr. Wotton against Mr. Walker concerning Abailardus, learnt how uncertain Bernards charge was against him; and the like perhaps against Peter de Bruis and Henricus by Cluniacensis in some things: yet I have given reasons concerning their denying infant Baptism, in my præcursor sect. 9. to which Mr. Baxter hath not made reply in his præsestin. mor. to avoid them, though he had most unchristianly accused me of impudence and unconscionableness, for alledging them as adversaries to infant Baptism.

What I said of the Councils that condemned Palagianism, and the Drs. who refuted it, that they followed Augustin, I did in some mistake, as in putting Arles for Orange a City near, and perhaps in something else, being at that time without all my printed books, which I had read before the year 1642. in which I was plundered of them, and wrote my Examen in London anno 1644. and my Exercitation anno 1647. But I had some remembrance of my reading to that purpose, which I imagin was by reading the words of Dr. Frideaux in his 3d. Lecture de Gratia universali, which are thus to the same effect. Augustinus (qui præcipuè sudabit in hoc argumento, quemque Prosper, Fulgentius, & Scholastici saniores sequuntur, imò ex ejus scriptis decreta Concilii Arausicani 2 contra Pelagianos & Semipelagianos (ut ipse agnoscit Binnius) contexuntur) sit vice omnium.

And for Augustins being counted one of the four Doctors of the Church, esteemed like the four Evangelists, the speech (as I remember of Gregory the Great) is so rife, that I presume it unknown to few Students in Divinity. Nevertheless I said, I for my part value Augustines judgement just at so much as his proofs and reasons weigh; of which Dr. Homes saith, that's well; but Mr. Marshal saith, I slight him, which is an unjust crimination of me, neither Augustin nor any other writer, being not imediately inspired, requiring or deserving any higher regard; and Protestant writers frequently in their determinations ascribe authentique authority onely to the holy Scripture, Ames Bellarm. enerv. tom. 2 l. 1. c. 3. asseritur à nobis Episcoporum in concilio sententiam tantùm inquisitionem quandam esse, & dictionem sententiæ ministratoriam & limitatam ita ut tantum valeat decretum concilii, quantùm valeat ejus ratio; which if right, my speech is unblameable. Nor am I to be blamed for not canvaſſing every particular teſtimony alledged out of Auguſtine, it being not denied he held infant Baptiſm at that time, and in ſuch a manner as Proteſtants reject, and how much credit is to bee given to his ſpeeches of Apoſtolical tradition, is conſidered before ſection 88. Proteſtant writers do often charge Auguſtin with doting, in this point of infant baptiſms neceſſity (whereof ſome ſpeeches may be ſeen in Mr. Gataker de bapt. infant. vi & effic. ſect. 6. num. 27. ſect. 8. num. 35.) and for my part I muſt ſay, that I judge his reaſons ſo light and his proofs ſo vain, that the teſtimonies out of Auguſtine do very much confirm me, that infant Baptiſm is an errour, and a very pernicious abuſe needfull to be taken away out of the Church of God, the reaſon of which may in ſome meaſure appear by my vindication of my exceptions againſt Auguſtines judgement.

1. If infant Baptiſm had been ſuch an univerſal and Apoſtolical tradition as Auguſtine would have it, then the Church would have thought it neceſſary, that all children of Chriſtians by profeſſion ſhould bee baptized in their infancy, and the cuſtome would have been ſo uſed; But that it was not ſo, appears firſt from the baptiſm of Auguſtine, Adeodatus, Alipius; ſecond, from other obſervations ſet down in my Examen. p. 14.

The teſtimonies Mr. M. brings for univerſal practiſe, have been conſidered before.

Hee adds p. 45. of his Defence, That "Epiphanius in the end of his "work, relating what was generally obſerved in the Church, tels us, "The baptiſm adminiſtred in the Church in his time, was performed "according to the tradition of the Goſpel, and the authority of the A-"poſtles, as well as other myſteries then in uſe, and we know, that in "his time Baptiſm was adminiſtred to infants; therefore in his judge-"ment, what the Church did therein, they had authority for it from the "Goſpel and the Apoſtles;] But there is more reaſon to conceive that either he knew no infant Baptiſm, or that he took it to be an aberration from the Goſpel tradition and authority of the Apoſtles, not onely in that he mentions not infant Baptiſm, but alſo in Ancorato where he ſets down the uſe of Baptiſm he ſaith, "Yee ought not onely to ſuffer "every one inſtructed in the faith, and willing to come to the holy la-"ver, that he ſhew himſelf to your ſons that he believes in the Lord, "but alſo, that with uttered words, as the ſame mother of all your and "our Church hath received, he teach and ſay, I believe in one God "the Father Almighty, &c.] Whence the Magdeburgenſes cent. 4. c. 6. de ritibus circa Baptiſmum, ſay; It is conjectured from theſe words, that in the Churches of Cyprus, the rite of Confeſſion was uſual afore Baptiſm; where he alſo ſaith, that Baſil. exhort. ad bapt. writes, that no other then catechized perſons were baptized, who were called together at Eaſter; Although I deny not that there was ſometimes infant Baptiſm, yet by all the inſtances of the rite of Baptiſm gathered by thoſe Hiſtorians in that place, it appears to have been very rare, and onely in the caſe of apparent peril of immanent death. And this is very probable to have been the reaſon why Socrates hiſt. l. 5. 22 relating diverſities of ſeve-

ral Churches about persons that had power to baptize, and the time in which Baptism was commonly administred, and Sozom. 7. 19. several customes of several Churches neither exclude nor mention infant baptism, because it was so rare a thing to baptize an infant, and done so obscurely that no instance is apparent of it in any history, in that or the fore going ages. And Dr. Homes p. 171. wrongs me in saying, Mr. T. himself chargeth Augustin and Cyprian, that they thought too many infants were to be baptized, namely all that had Christian parents or undertakers, for these latter words are not mine, though I yeeld the former to be true.

To my instance of Augustins late Baptism, it is said by Mr. M. defence p. 46. One swallow makes not a spring peradventure some (though born of Christian parents) were not in that age baptized in infancy; yet that is no way prejudicial to the universal practise of the Church in which Padobaptism was received. But by his leave it is a great evidence, and seemed so to Strabo nearer to those times then we are, that infant Baptism was not so universal as Mr. M. makes it, when so eminent a person of so eminently godly a mother, did not take care to have him baptized in infancy. But besides, wee have the words of Optatus Milevitanus about the same time, in his 4th. book against armenium the Donatist, thus; No man is ignorant that every man, who is born, though he be born of Christian parents, can be without the spirit of the world; which it is necessary should be excluded and separated from the man before the saving Baptism. This Exorsim does, by which the unclean spirit is driven out, and made to flye into desert places. The house is made empty in the breast of the believer; the house is made clean: God enters and dwels as the Apostle saith, ye are the Temple of God, and God dwels in you. Whence it is apparent, that even those who were born of Christian parents were believers afore they were baptized, though I deny not that it was not the common doctrine, that infants should be baptized; nor do I make that inference which Mr. M. intimates I do, from that example of Augustin, that children of Christians by profession in that age were not baptized in their infancy, but that they were seldome so, nor except in case of apparent danger of imminent death: Which is manifest by the instance of Augustin.

Mr. M. and Dr Homes impute the delay of Augustins Baptism, either to his Fathers hindering, who was not then a Christian, or to friends permission of him to have his own will, or to persecution. But all these are but mere shifts, his own words confes. l. 1. c. 11. declaring the true state of the thing, which are thus: "I had heard being a boy, of eternal life "promised us by the humility of our Lord God descending to our pride, "and I was already signed with the signe of his cross, and was seaso-"ned with his salt already, even from the womb of my mother, who "much hoped in thee. Whence it is apparent that she was then a "Christian when she bare him in her womb, and dedicated him to Chri-"stianity, but did not baptize him. After he goes on, and saith, Thou "savest Lord when I was yet a boy and on a certain day pressed with a "pain of the stomack, I was suddenly sick almost about to dye, thou "savest my God, because thou wast my keeper already, with what mo-"tion of minde, and with what faith I asked from the piety of my mo-"ther, "ther, and thy Church the mother of us all, the Baptism of thy Christ "my God and Lord. And the mother of my flesh was troubled, because "also she did bring forth my everlasting salvation with a chast heart in "thy faith, now being very hasty, did take care that I might be initiated "and washed with saving Sacraments, confessing thee O Lord Jesus, "unless I had been presently recreated. Therefore my cleansing was "delayed, as if it should bee necessary that I should be defiled if I did "live, because to wit, after that washing, greater and more dangerous "guilt of sins in filthiness would be. So I did already believe, and she, "and all the house except my Father alone, who yet did not overcome "in me the right of my mothers piety, that I should not believe in "Christ, as he had not yet believed.

Whence it may be easily perceived, 1. That the childe of a godly affectionate Christian, who devoted him to Christ, and educated him for Christ, yet was not baptized then in infancy, nor by the Church required to be baptized. 2. That when he was sick and like to die when hee was but a boy, he earnestly required from his mother and the Church baptism. 3. That it was not to have been done without his confession of Christ. 4. That his recovery afore it could be done put it off, and no other reason was thereof, but that living he was likely to be more guilty of sin if baptized so young. 5. That baptism was counted cleansing, and a greater and more dangerous guilt apprehended if he did sin after baptism. 6. That even then he did believe, and his mother and all the house except his Father, and yet it hindred not his Christianity, nor is it likely could or would hinder his baptism in infancy, if his mother and the Church had thought it meet, or it had been the use out of the case of apparent danger of imminent death. As for Adeodatus, it is apparent his Father believed before he begate him, and he was bred up by him in Gods discipline, as he saith, l. 9. confes. c. 6. and though the Father was not baptized, yet the Grandmother was, and yet Adeodatus was not baptized till 15 years old; and for Alipius it is somewhat probable hee was born of Christian parentage and bred up so, but not baptized till of age. However that were, the case of Augustin is full to prove what I conceived.

For a further declaration of the practise of infant Baptism, I alledged Grotius his words, who conceived the baptism of infants more frequent in Africa then in Asia or other parts of the world, and he gave his reason of it, because of the mention of it in the African Council at Carthage, not in like manner in other Councils, to which Mr. M. saith, the Councils might not mention it, because none did scruple it; But it is more likely none did scruple it, because there was no occasion to do so, there being little or no practise of it; which is made very probable from the 6th. Canon of the Council of Neocæsarea anno 315. and the words of Nazianzen before mentioned. As for the constitutions of Clement, in one whereof they are bid baptize their little ones, Mr. M. doth well to confess they are not Clements, and if the compiler of them did relate the ancient customes of the Greek Church, hee did relate later customes also, among which that of baptizing infants is to bee conceived one for the reasons given. Grotius annot. in Matth. 19. 14. saith, And many of the Greeks from every age unto this day, keep the use of deferring the baptism of little ones, till they could make confession of their own faith. But of this before, sect. 89. 90. I said that I did not find in Affrica infants baptized but in case of danger of death or for health of body. Dr. Homes saith he hath shewed the contrary out of several antiquities, and particularly out of Cyprian. But neither in Cyprian nor any where else do I find it, but the contrary in Tertullian. And as for Augustine it was not as he saith, that Augustines sickness whiles young was some occasion of deferring his baptism for that time, but his sickness occasioned the hastning and his recovery ere it was done put it off for that time. Nor doth my saying that they baptized infants for health of body (which is manifest from Augustines 23d. Epist. to Bonifacius) clash with that which I said of Augustines asserting the necessity of infant baptism to take away original sin, and ascribing salvation to it, for he both might and did conceive it to be done for both ends. My mention of the continued use of catechizing in Augustines time, and long after, and the mention of baptizing whole Countries upon the baptizing of their Kings was very pertinent, though not to shew no infants were baptized then, yet to shew how and by what means the ancient custome of baptizing ordinary believers upon profession of faith after catechizing was so strangely changed, that whereas the preface in the common prayer book before the administration of baptism saith, it appeareth by ancient writers that the sacrament of baptism in the old time was not commonly administered but at two times in the year, at Easter and whitsontide: At which times it was openly ministered in the presence of all the congregation, the persons to be baptized having been before catechized, now it is quite otherwise, so that in most Protestant and popish Countries baptism is ordinary even of infants, at all times in obscure manner, and except of late in these nations, in which God hath begun to restore the right use of baptism, and what Bellarmin in his 2d. book de bonis operibus in particulari. C. 17. saith, that in the City of Rome there is no year in which there are not many baptized at Easter, who were catechised, the baptizing of believers is almost unheard of and counted a hainous thing, and punished in some parts as a crime deserving death or banishment. So great is the enormity of Pædobaptism, and so great the wickedness of Pædobaptists.

The 2d. and main exception I took against Augustines judgement which might move us to examine his reasons, was the ground upon which Augustine, Ambrose, and generally the Popish pædobaptists held and urged infant baptism, to wit the damning of the infant if dying unbaptized, which made Augustine to be termed the hard Father of infants, and affrighted so people in after ages, and doth to this day, that they will have their children by all means, as they count it, baptized. it's no matter by whom it be done nor how, so somewhat be done; else they count them lost.

To this which is of so great moment to shew the abuse of Pædobaptism it is said, that Augustine pressed it upon other grounds, but that doth not appear, he urged it, it is true, from circumcision, but upon the same ground ground that the uncircumciſed male ſhould be cut off from Gods people; nor did he ſo retract his errour, but that he ſtill held infants ſhould be damned although with the mildeſt damnation of all. How the ſchoolmen and others do follow Auguſtine, Mr. Perkins ſhews in his probleme, and many elſewhere, and the Common Prayer, both in allowing at firſt Baptiſm by Midwives, and in their Preface in the adminiſtration of Publique Baptiſm do plainly ſhew it was the mind of the compoſers of that book at firſt; nor is there any thing therein, or any of the Ancients, of Baptiſm as belonging to infants of believers as federally holy. Which is a ſtrong evidence that Auguſtines judgement was very corrupt in this point, and that the Baptiſm of infants was introduced, and grew to ſuch an exceſs upon that errour, and for that reaſon both Auguſtines judgement and it are to be ſuſpected as evil, and to be rejected.

A 3d. Exception againſt Auguſtines judgement, to ſhew that he and Cyprian were in theſe points of Sacraments not to be reſted on, was That Auguſtine Epiſt. 23. relates the ſtory in Cyprian de lapſis about the giving the Wine to a girl with credit to it, and ſome uſe of it without diſlike of the cuſtome; yea, l. 1. de pecc. mer. & remiſ. c 20 he makes giving infants the Euchariſt neceſſary to ſalvation, alledging Joh. 6. 53. for it; and ch. 2. he makes it an ancient and Apoſtolick tradition to give the Communion to infants, beſides what he ſaith Epiſ. 106. 107. to the like purpoſe, and he aſcribes to John Chryſoſtome, l. 1. adv. Jul c. 2, the like; and Epiſ. 93. Innocentius Biſhop of Rome held the like; and this not onely Maldonat on Joh. 6. acknowledged to continue 600. years in the Church, from Cyprians time to Charls the Greats time (as I remember the account is) but alſo Eraſmus Reſp ad Archiep. Hiſp. Chamier, pauſ. cath. tom. 4. l. 1. c. 13. §. 5. Gataker de Bapt. infant. vi. p. 269. ſay the uſe of infant Communion was ancient; and to the objection, that this was not defined, Dr. John Rainold, Apolog. theſ. §. 10. anſwers; nor doth Mr. M. or Dr. Homes deny it, but Mr. M. asks what is your argument hence? I anſwer, There is no reaſon to rely on Auguſtines judgement concerning the antiquity and neceſſity of infant Baptiſm, or to preſs it on others, who did ſo fouly miſtake about the antiquity and neceſſity of giving the Communion to infants, nor to adhere to the Ancients determinations and uſe about infant Baptiſm, who did erre ſo much about infant Communion. For as Mr. Gataker de Bapt. inf. vi. p. 200. ſaith about Auguſtins authority concerning infant Baptiſm, it will not ſeem equal to preſs the adverſe party concerning the other authority of thoſe whoſe judgement in the other thy ſelf declineſt: But how Auguſtine doted about infant Communion is manifeſt, therefore it is not reaſon to urge his teſtimony about infant Baptiſm as to be reſted on, but we may ſay as Vorſtius adv. Bellarm. tom. 3. contr. 2. theſ. 2. rat 3. The doting of Auguſtine and ſome other is ill brought for the conſent of the whole Church; and we may make that uſe of this inſtance of Auguſtines, Innocentius, and others errour about infant Communion, which Cameron doth c. 17. of his Examin. of Rom. prejudices, to take away the unjuſt fore-judging of the refuſal of infant Baptiſm as unreaſonable, by ſhewing how little the Fathers, particularly Auguſtine, are to be truſted, and what juſt reaſon there is to forſake him in the one as they have done in the other.

My

My 4th. Exception was, That Auguſtine 1. aſcribes a certainty of regeneration to children baptized, though they were not brought for ſpiritual grace, but temporal health. 2. That he juſtifies this fact, Epiſt. 23. ad Bonif.

Mr. M confeſſeth "He aſcribed too much ſometimes to Baptiſm, yet "ſometimes he ſaith of ſome, that they have the thing of Baptiſm with- "out the ſacrament, and ſo Ambroſe of Valentinian, yet Ambroſe as well "as Auguſtine at other times attributed too much to outward Baptiſm. To which I reply. It is true, and ſo did generally the Fathers, as may be ſeen abundantly in Mr. Gatakers ſtrictures againſt Biſhop Davenants Epiſt p. 52, &c. And this cauſed great abuſes, 1. the allowing of infant Baptiſm, yea, and much advancing it; 2. the allowing of the Baptiſm of men that kept their beds by reaſon of ſickneſs on their beds; 3. the Baptiſm by women; 4. the Baptiſm by Athanaſius on his play-fellows, which he did in play with them, when but a boy, as ſufficicently done for Baptiſm; 5. the bringing of infants to be baptized for cure of their bodies. But ſaith Dr. Homes, "By all the words Epiſt. 23. ad Boniſac. "I ſhould think Auguſtine doth no way juſtifie or excuſe their bad in- "tention.] To which I reply, yet he juſtifies their bad action, ſaying, by them the neceſſary ſervice or miniſtery is celebrated.

My 5th. Exception was, That Auguſtin Ep. 23. ad Boniſ. was ſo tenacious of cuſtomes then in uſe, that he doth defend or excuſe from lying the anſwer of ſureties, as if the child to be baptized did believe. In this Mr. M. ſaith, I ſcorn Auguſtines judgement; And I reply, I do not ſo much as Chamier, pauſtr. cath. tom. 4. l. 5. c. 15. §. 22. where he terms it mimical, as if it were a play on a ſtage, rather then the celebrating a Sacrament in the Church, which Auguſtine defended. But ſaith Dr. Homes, This is impertinent to the queſtion. I reply, it is very pertinent, 1. to ſhew how vain Auguſtines judgement was in theſe things about Baptiſm and the Lords Supper: 2. To ſhew what was the primitive uſe of propounding the queſtion of his faith to every baptized perſon, which Vives, com. in Auguſt. de Civit. Dei, l. 1. c. 27. thought a good evidence that of old none were baptized but perſons grown up and able to anſwer the queſtions.

To this ſaith Dr. Homes, 1. "we wonder Mr. T. will aſſert confeſſion "of faith in all Ages before all Baptiſm from witneſſes or ſureties, when "as we know that the firſt intimation of touching them was not till a- "bout 195 years after Chriſt. And how novel the invention of their "confeſſions is who can juſtly tell.

I reply, 1. I wonder Dr. Homes will ſo untruly ſay I do ſo aſſert. 2. If ſureties were ſo late an invention, ſurely infant Baptiſm was as new, it being never without ſuch ſureties.

2. Saith he, "I propound it to grave conſideration, whether ſure- "ties did not conſeſs in relation to themſelves, that they might be repu- "ted fit to ſtand as a kind of parents to a child of an unbelieving pa- "rent to be baptized; even as Abrahams profeſſion of his belief in "God, Gen. 15. Gen. 17. made him ſtand as a parent to all his "houſhold.

I repiy. Upon my conſideration it was not ſo, becauſe Tertull. de Bapt. c. 18.

c. 18. mentions them as undertakers for the child, and Bonifacius and Auguſtine that they profeſſed in the childs ſtead.

My laſt Exception againſt Auguſtines judgement was, That they baptized any infants even of unbelievers, whoever brought them, and what ever were their intention, they counted it a work of charity, and the defect of the faith of the baptized they counted ſupplied by the faith of the whole Church.

To this ſaith Mr. M. " Neither I in that juſtifie him: You may take " notice that here again you confeſs the queſtion that infants were bap- " tized.] I reply, this was not the queſtion. But ſaith Dr. Homes, " 1. Too much doth not overthrow enough.] I reply, it overthrows the imitableneſs of their practiſe. " 2. This argues againſt me that in- " fant Baptiſm hath been anciently more univerſally practiſed then a- " dul Baptiſm.] I reply, if ſo, more infidels children ſhould be baptized then Chriſtian converts, which is a monſtrous fiction refuted by all the remaining monuments of antiquity.

Mr. M. " They baptized upon Covenant holineſs believers children, " infidels children upon the engagement of undertakers to train them up. I reply, the former appears not, the later was of others as well as believers children, as is ſhewed before. This is enough to ſhew the invalidity of Auguſtine and the Latine Fathers teſtimonies for infant Baptiſm as Proteſtants aſſert it.

To the recollection of the paſſages about the Ancients teſtimonies, Mr. M. anſwers. 1. To what I ſaid, that that they practiſed infant Baptiſm on erroneous grounds, the neceſſity of it to ſalvation, the certainty of the remiſſion of original ſin by it, denying Gods grace to none, and therefore more likely to be an errour; Mr. M. ſaith, p. 54. Do not Tertullian, Cyprian, &c. argue from Circumciſion unto Baptiſm as we now do, and others of them from Covenant holineſs? I anſwer, No not one that I know of.

2. To what I ſaid, that it is not proved to have been practiſed but in caſe of ſuppoſed neceſſity, he ſaith, It is otherwiſe, and an Arminian book termed Cenſura cenſuræ, of which I have made great uſe in this controverſy (which is not true) ſaith, Auguſtine firſt grounded infant Baptiſm upon neceſſity. But I anſwer, this is not true, that which is ſaid before out of Tertullian, Nazianzen, Cyprian, proves it otherwiſe; Yea, long after Auguſtine, Concilium Gerundenſe in the 6th. Century, appointed in the 4th. and 5th. Canon, That ordinarily perſons catechized not infirm ſhould be baptized at Eaſter and Whitſontide, the infirm at other times, and infants if infirm, and deſire not the mothers milk if they be offered, the day of their birth; which expreſſeth it to be a permiſſion in that caſe, and ſhews it to be an exception from the ordinary courſe: Yea, Magdeb. cent. 1^v. c. 6. of the rites of Baptiſm, ſhew infants then to have been baptiſed only out of fear of death.

3. To what I ſaid, that there was a conſtant courſe of baptizing believers children at age, he ſaith I have been been miſtaken, and this practiſe was diſavowed by their inveighing againſt deferring Baptiſm. I anſwer, 1. That I have not been miſtaken, appears by that which goes before.

before. 2. They ſpeak not againſt deferring infants Baptiſm, but for it, though they ſpeak againſt the deferring it by the aged.

4. To what I ſaid of their opinion of the neceſſity of, and practiſe of infant Communion, he ſaith, All did not ſo, though ſome of the Africans did. I anſwer, The chiefeſt of them, and ſome of them Europæens held it. Dr. Field, 3d. book of the Church, ch. 1. ſaith, According to the old cuſtome uſed in the primitive Church, the Greeks miniſter the Sacrament of the Euchariſt to children when they baptiſe them. And Ortelius in his Theat. where he deſcribes the Abiſſins in Affrica, ſaith, To all the baptiſed the ſame moment they miniſter the holy Euchariſt.

5. To what I ſaid of their baptizing infidels children, he ſaith, It was not their conſtant and general practiſe: But it appears not but that it was practiſed and allowed of as well as the other.

6. To my words, that the ancienteſt teſtimony for practiſe according to any rule determined is Cyprian, near 300 years after Chriſt, he ſaith, he muſt needs take notice of my overlaſhing; and I reply, I muſt needs take notice of his overlaſhing in again mentioning Juſtin Martyr as a witneſs, though the book be but ſuppoſitious; and Irenæus, when he ſaith nothing of it; and Origen, who is doubtfull; and Tertullian who is againſt it; and excepting againſt my words as overlaſhing, when the firſt determination of it in any Councel was that of Cyprian with hi 66. Biſhops, which, as Dr. Hammond ſaith, was anno 257. near 300. years after Chriſt.

7. To my words, that infant Baptiſm was not from the beginning, Auſtins ſemper habuit ſemper tenuit is oppoſed, to which how little credit is to be given, is ſhewed Apol. § 16. here, ſect. 88. and in this before.

8. To my alledging the propoſal of the queſtions of repentance and faith to infants as a ſign that none but thoſe who anſwered the queſtions were formerly baptized, it is ſaid, "This ſuppoſeth theſe queſtions to "be of as ancient uſe in the Church of God as Baptiſm it ſelf, which "certainly you can never prove from Scripture; I have produced teſti-"monies for infant Baptiſm, afore any you can bring to witneſs, that "thoſe forms of queſtions and anſwers had any being in the Church. But I think the queſtion of faith plainly proved Act. 8. 37. to be antecedent to Baptiſm; and the words of Beza, annot. on 1 Pet. 3 21. are thus. Yet to me more nearly now conſidering the word ἐπερώτημα, it doth ſeem better to agree that we interpret it ſtipulation, and that we ſay the Apoſtle had reſpect to the interrogations of Catechiſts, in which the catechiſed even then did teſtifie their more inward Baptiſm to be confirmed by the outward, as Act. 8. 37. to which the whole Apoſtolick Creed looks, and that from the Baptiſm of adult perſons by a great errour, if we look to infants themſelves, tranſlated to the Baptiſm of infants, Doeſt thou believe? I do believe. Doeſt thou renounce? I do renounce. Whence that of Tertullian, which is as if it were in ſtead of a Commentary on this place in his Book of the Reſurrection of the fleſh, the ſoul is not confirmed or ſanctified by waſhing, but by anſwering. Tertullian de corona militis, Aquam adituri ibidem, ſed & aliquanto prius in Eccleſia ſub antiſtitis manu conteſtamur nos renunciare Diabolo & pompæ & angelis ejus. Debinc ter inergitamur, amplius aliquid reſpondentes ſpondentes, quam Dominus in Evangelio determinavit. Grot. in Mat. 28. 19. proves the profeſſion of faith out of Juſtin Martyr, who ſaith expreſly, Apol. 2. That the baptiſed did promiſe to live according to the Chriſtian Doctrine; and out of Ignatius, Irenæus, Tertullian, &c. what they anſwered who were baptiſed. In the Councel of Baſil in the Oration of the Cardinal of Ragiſium it is ſaid, In principio hujus ſacramenti baptizabantur ſolum illi qui per ſe ſciebant fidem interroganti reſpondere The teſtimonies of this kind are ſo many that I think it ſuperfluous to alledge them. The very form of Common Prayer in propounding thoſe queſtions as they were in Auguſtines time to infants, is evidence enough of the antiquity of that cuſtome of propounding queſtions to the baptized.

9. To what I ſaid of the examples of Greg Nazian Chryſoſt. Auguſt. Conſt the Great, to whom I might have added Hierome, of whom Eraſmus in his life teſtifies of his birth of Chriſtian parents, yet not baptized till of age; Mr. M. anſwers by referring to what is ſaid before: And I intreat the Reader to look back to what I ſay before, ſect 89, 90. and this.

10. In like manner the evidences againſt infant Baptiſm from Tertullians and Gregory Nazianzens diſſwaſions, the teſtimony of the Councel of Neocæſaria, the ſilence of Euſebius, Epiphanius, Athanaſius, the conſtant terming it an Apoſtolical tradition, are referred to what is before ſaid by Mr. M. and by me to my anſwers to him and others, in thoſe Sections, and ſect. 88.

For Grotius, what reaſon I had to alledge him, may be eaſily diſcerned by thoſe that know his abilities. Cenſura cenſuræ was unknown to me as yeelding me any advantage, till Mr. M. here minded me of that book. What Vives ſpeaks he had good evidence for, as in part may be ſeen in what is ſaid before. Strabo's teſtimony is ſuch as Voſſius his exception doth not weaken, but is ſundry ways confirmed here. That I could have brought more teſtimonies, it hath appeared in part by this writing, and in part by my Præcurſor, ſect. 20. and my anſwer to Dr. Savage in Latine, ſect. 13.

The more I ſearch into the point of antiquity, the more I am confirmed in my poſition, that infant Baptiſm is not ſo ancient as is pretended, as now taught is a late innovation. Nor am I altered from the opinion I had, that none before Zuinglius taught infant Baptiſm as a priviledge of believers children from federal holineſs. Tertullians and Athanaſius his words ſerve not turn to prove it, nor Epiphanius, Cyprian, Nazianzen, Auguſtine, or Chryſoſtome ſo taught it from Circumciſion as due to them by vertue of the Covenant to a believer and his ſeed, but in other manner, as is before ſhewed. Nor doth the Pelagians acknowledgement ſerve Mr. Ms. turn therein. The more teſtimonies Mr. M. might have added, had added no more weight to the cauſe then thoſe he alledged have done. I did not charge the Ancients that they held that all who died unbaptiſed were damned; but that in the caſe of infants born they taught, that if they died unbaptized they ſhould not enter into the Kingdome of Heaven, but periſh, or be damned, though with the mildeſt damnation: And this is manifeſt enough from Cyprians Epiſtle to Fidus, and very very many places of Auguſtine, Tertullian l. de Bapt. c. 12. Cùm verò præſcribitur nemini ſine Baptiſmo competere ſalutem ex illa maximè pronuntiatione Domini qui ait: niſi natus ex aqua quis erit, non habet vitam, &c. However Ambroſe and Auguſtine determine of the ſalvation of grown perſons without Baptiſm, if they believe, deſire to be baptized, be Martyrs, yet both they and many more held both Baptiſm and the Lords Supper to be neceſſary for infants unto ſalvation by an Apoſtolick tradition, as M. Perkins Demonſt. of the probleme in the point of Baptiſm proves, though perhaps they could not reaſonably grant the one and deny the other. That Calvin was a man well verſed in Antiquity for his time it's not denied, nor that he was a man well acquainted in the Scriptures; yet that in neither he was in this point in the right, is ſo fully demonſtrated before, that I may ſafely ſay Calvin was not therein Calvin as he is in his oppoſition of the Papiſts. And if Mr. M. or his friend think it not meet to be tied to Calvins judgement in the point of the Sabbath and Lords day and Uſury notwithſtanding his skill in Antiquity and Scripture, the ſame in equity is to be allowed to us about the point of Baptiſm. I like Mr. Ms. acknowledgement with Rivet, that tradition is in moſt points uncertain, and therefore he that will build ſure muſt build on the Scripture, and therefore we muſt neceſſarily come to arguments from the Scriptures, which if they evince not the thing we ſhall in vain call to Tradition. If Mr. M. had not firſt in his Sermon foreſtalled his hearers and readers with the pretence o the Churches poſſeſſion for 1500 years and upwards, and Dr. Hammond reſolved all his proof of infant Bapriſm into his expoſition of 1 Cor. 7. 14. which he had no way to make good but by Tertullian and ſome of the Ancients, I had ſpared this labour of ſhewing their and and the Ancients miſtakes. Tha Doctrine and practiſe of Baptiſm of infants which Auſtin ſaith to be according to the ſentence of the Goſpel, is rejected by Proteſtants; who if they would in this, as in ether things they have done, reform, according to Scripture and all their own principles, muſt baptize no infants till they be made believers; till then they do but prevaricate, and profane the holy Ordinance of Baptiſm.

SECT. XCIX.

Mr. Crs. objections about my 9 untruths, his diſcourſe about re baptizing are refelled.

I Return now to Mr. Cragg. Part 1. ſect. 6. he chargeth me with 9 untruths, outvying the number of the lines; in which he is a falſe accuſer. In the firſt he miſ recites my words, which were not, that the Epiſtle affirms, that the baptiſing of believers had its ſpring and riſe from Nicholas Stork; but thus, As falſe it is that the baptizing of believers (called by theſe Anabaptiſm) had its ſpring and riſe from Nicholas Stork and others there named, which were true. For though it was not in thoſe words ſaid by me, that the Epiſtle did ſo affirm, yet it is true, 1. That Pædobaptists call the baptizing believers which Nicholas Stork and others practised Anabaptism; me thinks he should not be so impudent as to deny that those whom they baptized were believers, or that they baptized them, or that that Baptism is called Anabaptism by them. 2. The very words of the Epistle are, the spring and rise of Anabaptism had its beginning after truth, and saith the first Author thereof was Nicholas Stork, then Phipher, &c. there you have the spring and rise of it, and therefore in my words there is no untruth, but Mr. Cr. doth falsely insinuate as if there were folshood and inconsequence in my speech, and slanderously make me one of the great disturbers of the late reformation, and the first Author of the disturbance or Anabaptism and cunningly altering the subject of the Question from Anabaptists to baptizers of believers.

The 2d. thing he chargeth on me as untruth, was not expressed as Mr. Cr. insinuates, that Pædobaptists call the baptizers of belivers Anabaptists, but thus [the baptizing of believers called by these Anabaptism] which cannot be denied to be true, unless he deny that the baptizing used was not baptizing, or the baptized no believers, or that they call it not Anabaptism. It is also false that he saith of me, that my judgement and practise is, that all that will be saved must be baptized again, when they become actual believers, and this I put in execution by making as many Proselytes by rebaptising as I can.

The 3d. untruth (as he calls it) is, that baptising of believers without infants, or excluding infants, had not its spring and rise from Nicholas Stork; and he notes, that the Epistle affirmed Anabaptism (which is another thing) had its spring thence. But he neither shews what other thing Anabaptism is, nor doth he prove it to be an untruth, but by rendring my own instances against it invalid. But therein he doth but abuse me, who alledged not the instances he brings to prove that proposition he terms an untruth; nor is there any thing said by him, but what he hath from Mr. Ms. Defence, and is answered before here, sect 90 98.

The 4th. untruth he chargeth me with, is, that infants Baptism was not commanded by Christ, and he thinks to evince the contrary from Mat. 28. 19. But he saith nothing but what is so fully refuted before, Review, part 2. sect. 5, &c. part 3. sect. 97. and elsewhere, so that I need say no more here to it.

The 5th. untruth he imagines, is, that infant Baptism was not practised by the Apostles, which being denied by the Antipædobaptists, the proof lies upon them. But by his leave the proof lies upon the Pædobaptists, to prove they did baptize infants, sith they claim a right to it, which must be proved by precept or example of the doing it. A negative argument in matter of fact of this nature is of sufficient validity to shew infant Baptism not to be according to Gods will, sith in meer positive instituted worship, wherein God hath set down what he will have done, he will have it so done, and no otherwise. It is proved before, Review, part 2. sect. 5. &c part 3. sect. 52. that the Apostles baptized not infants. Mr. Crs. imagined reasons why they might baptize none but of ripe age, de facto, are vain, there being no intimation of any such reasons in the History of the Apostles Acts; Yea, the story is against his surmises, for the the converted and baptized did not travel far to hear the Apostles, but the Apostles travelled far to preach to them in their own Cities, and in them they went from house to house, Acts 16.15,34. & 20.20. Hierusalem and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan are said to go out to John Baptist to be baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins, which cannot be meant of infants. Though infants be a part of a Nation, yet *Mat.*28.19. Is. 2.2. by nations no infant is meant, nor *Luk.*19.19. is infant Baptism intimated. The Baptism of infants is not proved from *Act.*16.15. *v.*32,33. shew that by the house are meant persons of age: and by so expounding we diminish not Gods word, nor make exception that God hath not made, nor imply a contradiction, nor incur a curse, as Mr. Cr. after his vein of prating, writes.

All that Mr. Cr. saith in opposition to what I said of baptizing believers in the first ages continued without any infant Baptism, proves not my words an untruth, nor a frontless assertion, and is answered before, sect. 88,89,98. in which, and *sect.*90,91. all that he brings to evince my 7th. and 8th. untruth (as he terms my words) is examined.

I justly account infant Baptism a Popish abuse, it being derived from these principles, unwritten tradition, and necessity of it to save an infant dying, which are judged Popish errours. And for answer to what Mr. Cr. saith of my 9th. untruth, as he terms it, I refer the Reader to the 9th. Section of my Praecursor, not refelled by Mr. Baxter in his Praefestinanti is morator.

Sect. 7. Mr. Cr. excepts against me for saying, 1. That the Epistlers assignation of the causes of Anabaptism are vain. 2. That Anabaptism is true Baptism. 3. That the true cause is the light shining from Scriptures and other Authors. 4. That this light was not discovered formerly as now. What he saith against the first, is but a repeating of the reasons, without any confirmation, but some light Poetical pedantique expressions, which deserve onely neglect. Against the 2d. he gives his reasons against reiteration of Baptism, which are nothing to me, who asserted not that baptizing twice was true Baptism, but baptizing of persons of age professing faith though in infancy imagined to have been baptized is true Baptism. Yet do I see no force in the reasons he gives. For 1. in the institution of Baptism, *Mat.*28.19. the precept is to the baptizer, and I presume he doth not think the baptizer is not to reiterate his act of baptizing, yea doubtless he is to baptize as oft as there are Disciples made by him. And as for the act of the baptized, which is implied it is true, neither is it determined to be once or twice, and may therefore seem to be left to liberty. That he allegeth, whatsoever is not of faith is sin, is clean mistaken by him, the meaning being onely, what a man doth with a doubting conscience is sin to him, & so by this reason rebaptization is a sin only to him that doubts of it. And when he saith, whatsoever is not grounded on the Scripture is will worship, I presume he means it of that which is used as worship, and determined to be but once. But then the question is only begg'd, not proved, that Christ hath determined Baptism to be but once. In that which he saith of *Act.*19.3. (which is an instance of being twice baptized) I find nothing brought by Mr. Cr. to avoid the force of it. For to be baptized into Johns Baptism can be no other then to be baptized with water according to the profession of Johns Disciples, and this was true Baptism from Heaven, not differing in the nature of it from Christs, as say Protestant Divines; and it is certain, that to be baptised into the name of the Lord Jesus, is to be baptized with water into the profession of him, as Act 2. 38, 41. & 10. 48. the giving the Holy Ghost is distinctly expressed v. 6. to have been by laying on of hands, and this was on the same persons v. 6. who were said to hear and to be baptised v. 5. and these were not all the people mentioned v. 4. but twelve only v. 7. and therefore it is far more probable, and in mine apprehension certain, as the Ancients did conceive, that those twelve were baptized with water twice, once according to the profession Johns Disciples made at Baptism, and the other according to the Christian. Nor am I moved by the observation of Marnixius, approved by Beza in his annot. in locum, and followed by many others, That the particles μεν and δε must necessarily answer each other, and therefore the words v. 4, 5. be Pauls. For 1. the particle μὲ is put oft, and the matter requires it should be so conceived here, either as an expletive that is without force, to which in the vulgar translation nothing answers, as it is Act 3. 21, 22, &c. or an adverb of affirmation, or if it be a conjunction discretive, that which answers to it is not that v. 5. there being no good sense, to say, John verily baptised with the Baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him which should come after, that is, on Christ Jesus; but they hearing this, &c. there being no apt discretion made in such speech, if the particles be discretive, the other part is concealed, and should be to this purpose, But the Baptism we use is into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, or into the name of the Lord Jesus already come. And for this reason the particle δὲ must be expounded as our interpreters, when, or as a meer expletive as in the vulgar. 2. The words Act. 19. 5. do give an obvious plain sense on the other side as the words of Luke, thus, when the twelve, mentioned v. 7. heard this of Paul, that it was Christ Jesus to come after John, on whom John would have his Disciples to believe when he baptized them with the Baptism of repentance, then they were baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus with express profession of him. Nor is it true that there is express Scripture, Ephes. 4 5. One Lord, one Faith, one Baptism, against the iteration of the same Baptism. For as one Faith notes not one act of believing, but one kind of faith from the unity of the object believed, which may be and is one faith though an hundred times iterated; so one Baptism notes not one act of baptizing, but one kind of Baptism distinct from Pharisaical Baptism into the observance of the Law for righteousness, termed one by the profession of the same Doctrine or Lord, though it be an hundred times iterated. The same man baptized an hundred times, and an hundred men once onely baptized, each of them have one Baptism in the Apostles sense, if they be baptized with the same profession; and the same person though but once baptized, yet if with another profession, hath not that one Baptism there meant: One Baptism is not as much as once baptized and no more, but Baptism into one profession and no other.

The

The 2d. argument is of no force, "Baptiſm is the Sacrament of re "generation, or new birth; and as Auſtin hath it, we are carnally and "naturally born but once, ſo we are ſpiritually and ſupernaturally new "born but once; Faith though it admit of gradations begins but once, "Baptiſm that matriculates us into Chriſts School is to be performed "but once.

Anſw. The Scripture no where terms Baptiſm the Sacrament of regeneration; nor, if the expreſſion be allowed, will it follow Baptiſm is to be but once. For 1. it doth not follow, natural birth is but once, therefore ſupernatural new birth, which is onely ſo metaphorically, is but once; as it follows not, we die naturally but once, therefore we die to ſin, or through ſin but once. Natural birth hath not degrees, therefore neither regeneration. 2. Baptiſm is not regeneration though it were yeelded to be the ſacrament of regeneration, and therefore though regeneration could be but once, yet Baptiſm might be often. 3. Thoſe that hold intercision of regeneration and faith (which I do not) will ſay that regeneration may be often, and faith begin often. 4. Baptiſm may be termed the ſacrament of regeneration either as the cauſe or ſign of it. If as the cauſe of it ſo it ſhould rather follow it ſhould be often adminiſtred, as the word is often preached to beget us again. If as the ſign, ſo it may often be uſed to ſignifie it, though it be but once done; as the breaking of bread is oft uſed to ſignifie Chriſts death, though he died but once.

The 3d. argument, from once Circumciſion, is of leſs force. For neither is it true, that our Baptiſm ſucceeds Jewiſh Circumciſion, nor is it proved that in no caſe a perſon might be twice circumciſed, nor if both theſe were granted will it follow, that the rule of circumciſing but once muſt be a rule to us of baptizing but once, any more then the Jews Circumciſion was tied to the 8th. day, therefore ſo muſt our Baptiſm. Yet this reaſon of Mr. Cr. may be thus urged againſt infant Baptiſm: Circumciſion was tied to the 8th. day, therefore to circumciſe on another day were ſacriledge; Baptiſm is tied to Diſciples, or believers, Mat 28.19. *Mar.*16.15,16. therefore to baptize infants who are not Diſciples or believers, cannot be juſtified without ſacriledge, at the rate of Mr. Crs. reaſoning. The reſt of that Section and the next Section need no other anſwer then what is already made, there being no argument needfull to be anſwered, nor any thing almoſt but ſcoffing Rhetorick, cavils, miſ-repreſentations of my words and the paſſages at Diſputes, which were rightly repreſented in the 2d. Section of my Plea.

SECT. C.

MR. Cr. in the diſpute at Abergavenny began thus, Some infants may not be baptiſed, therefore ſome infants may be baptiſed; and this the Relator (who was likely to be himſelf, or one whoſe relation he viewed and approved) terms an Enthymema. To which in my Plea I anſwered, 1. the conſequence could not be made good according to Logick rules, but by adding this Propoſition, All that may not be baptized may be baptized. 2. That it is like theſe arguings, Some infants may not have the Lords Supper, therefore ſome may; ſome boys are not to be ordained Biſhops, therefore ſome are.

To this he replies, Part 2. ſect. 1. 1. That the Relator and I were both miſtaken: Which if true, it was ill done that he did not rectifie the thing ere it was printed. 2. "That my cenſure of this arguing as fri-"volous, aroſe from ignorance or inadvertency, that betrayed me to a "double miſtake, 1. That there was no way of arguing conſecutive, by "two Propoſitions, but Enthymematically, ſo that they were immediate-"ly reducible, to a ſyllogiſm compleat in mood and figure. 2. If an En-"thymema and reducible, that it muſt neceſſarily be reſolved into his "ſyllogiſm as he calls it, All that may not be baptized, may be bap-"tized; ſome infants may not be baptized, ergo, ſome infants may be "be baptized. Truly this is ſo frivolous, and deſerves ſo much con-"tempt, that a freſh man would laugh at it. And then he goes on, I "would gladly know to what mood of the firſt figure (for it hath ſub "præ) his monſtrous ſyllogiſm belongs, conſiſting in the premiſes of "two negatives, in the concluſion of an affirmative; whereby (as eve-"ry Puny knows) two Maximes are violated, 1. That of pure nega-"tives nothing is concluded. 2. That the concluſion ſhould follow the "unworthier part, whereas he extracts an affirmative concluſion from "negative premiſes.

Anſw. I am content that an ingenious freſh man judge whether there were any ignorance, inadvertency or miſtake in my anſwer to this argument, and whether there be not groſs ignorance and ſophiſtry, in his argument, and in the reply impudent boldneſs to avow ſuch a ſhameful act; and that any wiſe conſcientious Chriſtian judge, whether the argument at firſt, or this reply, could come out of any other then a wrangling ſpirit, bent to baffle a reſpondent, and make ſport for a company of vain auditors and readers, without any care befitting a Chriſtian teacher to clear truth. At firſt when I denied the conſequence he proved it not, but brought a ſyllogiſm concluding another thing then the conſequence; and whereas then his ſyllogiſm appeared to have four terms, he brings another ſyllogiſm, in which he would infer, that becauſe ſubcontraries may be both true, therefore that propoſition, Some infants may be baptized, must be true; as if because both may be true, it follows that proposition must be true: whereas every fresh man knows, that though both may be true, yet it is true also one may be false, and that may be the proposition he infers, notwithstanding the force of that rule. Now in the reply he discovers the same spirit. Though his relator (with whom he must concur, or else they juggle with Readers) term his dispute an Enthymema, yet he would not have it so conceived, but tels us there is a kind of argumentation in Keckerm. syst. Log. l. 3. tr. 1. c. 1. defined, one sentence or proposition following another without disposition of the medium as in conversions. But doth he shew there is any such conversion, or any other way of consecution of sentences allowed by Keckerman or any Logician in his argumentation? Then when I had reduced it to that syllogism to which the Enthymeme was to be reduced according to Logick rules, he hath the impudence o term this my syllogism, and so suggest as if I were not able to make a syllogism, or reduce that to a syllogism which was reducible, whereas the syllogism was his own virtually, as all Logicians know that understand the rule about Enthymemes, though it were formed by me rightly and the monstrosity of it must lie at his door, not mine, who value little his judgement of my abilities, better known to others of better esteem then to him. And for the way he new forms it, it is quite another argument then what he made at the dispute, and of which the minor is to be denied, which is thus, There are some infants besides them that are excluded Baptism; but this is contrary to the antecedent in the Enthymeme, Some infants may not be baptised, which should be the minor. He adds, that the force of the argument lies in the immediateness of the propositions, that what belongs not to one of them must needs belong to the other, and a topick rule out of Cracanthorp, and some other instances about divisions, in all which there is nothing but vanity. For let Propositions be immediate, yet when they are opposite as these are, some infants are to be baptised, some not, the one follows not from the other, but the contrary rather, except in those termed subaltern, which are rather subordinate then opposite. His instances of consequences upon a sufficient division, they are all impertinent here, where there is no division of terms, but the same terms are in both Propositions. In his answer to my instances he would make a difference between the Propositions about infant Baptism and the Lords Supper, and ordination to be Bishops, that the one is in a capable subject, not the other; but he shews not that an infant is capable of Baptism any more then of the Lords Supper, or a boy of ordination; nor if they were doth the force of the argument hold more in the one then in the other: and therefore it's his ignorance to say, the scruple here will be, whether infants are capable of Baptism or no: but it is whether this illation be good. Some are not, therefore some are to be baptised; which if right, it will follow in the other instances of Communion and ordination as well as in it. That which he saith of my grant of the capacity of Baptism, because I grant they may be elected and believe, and would if I knew it of infants baptize them, follows not; for though my ignorance hinders not their capacity in themselves, yet it hinders their capacity from mee, I being not warranted ranted to baptize any believer till his faith be manifested to me.

Sect. 2. Mr. Cr goes on to scribble after his usual manner. He had thus disputed, To whom belongs the essence of Baptism they may be baptised, But to some infant belongs the essence of Baptism, Ergo. To this I said, This Proposition, the essence of Baptism belongs to infants, may have two senses. He replies, as if I distinguished of a two fold essence of Baptism, which he terms a Chymæra, the essence of a thing being but one and indivisible; which shews hee hath some smattering in Metaphisicks, but is impertinent to the thing in hand. For be it all granted, yet a Proposition which speaks of the essence may have a two fold sense; and the senses I conceived of his words were rightly set down, and more favourably to Mr. Cr. then his words did deserve. For this Proposition, To some infants belongs the essence of Baptism, must have one of those senses, or a worse, to wit, either that infants are in the definition of Baptism, so as that there is no Baptism but of infants; or that Baptism is of the essence of infants, so as that they are no infants without Baptism, which are absurd. And to speak truly, the whole argument is ridiculous, take it what way he will, except he give the same sense which I did, and then the minor and the conclusion are all one, and the major meerly tautological, To whom the right administration of Baptism belongs they may be lawfully baptized, But to infants, &c. Ergo. In the other sense it is more vain. For if the essence numerical of Baptism belong to infants then not a moral right is asserted, but either a present or a future event, and so the minor Proposition should be, Some infants are baptized, which is a thing discerned by sense; or shall be baptized, which were a prediction, but nothing to the point about moral or legal right. To understand it of the specifical essence, makes no sense but what is worse. His proof from the definition is also as vain; For it is a proof of the same by the same: But he tels me, It is not all one as to argue, infant Baptism is Baptism, therefore it is right baptism, but it concludes infant Baptism is baptism, therefore infants may be baptized, which is the question by this inference put out of question. To which I reply, this talk seems to me like the words of a crazed man, there being no question between us about the baptism of infants, whether they may be baptized, that is whether this may be done to them so as that they be passive subjects of it, I never denied that infants may be thus baptized, but the question is whether it may be lawfully done by him that doth it, and then to say they may be baptized is all one as to say infant Baptism is right baptism, and so his argument from the definition is that which he denies not to be vain, infant Baptism is baptism, therefore it is right Baptism.

But he thinks to prove from the definition, that infant Baptism is right Baptism, and he sets down his conceits of Baptism, that it is a relation whose fundament is the Divine institution infolding infants in all nations in several families, which if he once prove, he needs prove no more, but here he doth not attempt it, but excepts against me for denying Baptism to be a relation, but an action or passion with a relation superadded, and he brings against me sayings of Divines who call it a signe, which I deny not in respect of the use, but that shews not the nature of it, no more then Circumcision is in its nature a relation, because it is a signe of the Covenant in its use, the carrying a scepter is in its nature a relation, because in its use it is a sign of royalty. What he saith, that I tell not whether it be action or passion, and not to be placed in one category is to be placed in none, is answered by his own confession, that in Baptism is included baptization which is both action and passion, which is enough to shew that Baptism is in its nature either an action or a passion, and may be put in either predicament, and that in different respects a word may be put in divers predicaments, and his talk false, that nothing formally can be placed in two categories, and the rest of his talk about the genus of Baptism being a signe, and other passages to be but mistakes.

But he attempts to gain his purpose by this argument, Every Sacrament is a relation, But Baptism is a Sacrament, Ergo. To which I answered, both premises might be denied, and as a reason of the denial alleged, 1. That the term [Sacrament] being but a term invented by Latin Fathers, may be laid aside. He replies, that the 12. Tables and Tully mention it, therefore it was long before the Latin Christian Fathers; True, but not in the sense in which Baptism is termed a Sacrament. But, if the word Sacrament be laid aside because a Heathen word, then should also the terms Bishop, Presbyter, Deacon, be laid aside also. Answ. No, for they are Scripture terms, not so the term Sacrament in the Ecclesiastical sense: Yet again, then Trinity, unity, Humanity, Antipædobaptist must be laid aside. Answ. It followes not, yet what I said of Sacrament I say of them, they may be laid aside, when an argument is drawn from them, as here from the word Sacrament. He adds, Besides is there not no mystery in the original? Answ. It is, but never in the use in which the term Sacrament is used as now it is defined.

2. I alleged that there is no common nature of Sacraments (not as Mr. Cr. of a Sacrament) express'd in Scripture, This he sayes is untrue in the sequel. For what consequence? There is no common nature of a Sacrament expressed in Scripture, therefore Baptism is not a Sacrament, more then in this? There is no common nature of infused grace expressed in Scripture, therefore faith is not an infused grace.

Answ. It was not my sequel; but this, therefore the term Sacrament may be laid aside, and no good argument is from the definition of a Sacrament to prove Baptism to be a relation.

The term grace or grace of God, I do much question whether any where in Scripture it be applied to inherent qualities in us, or good acts proceeding from us, and I conceive that the use of it in that manner hath occasioned or strengthened the errour of justification by inherent righteousness, because we are said to be justified by grace, and do wish that when approvers of Preachers are directed to examine persons of the grace of God in them, the thing had been otherwise expressed, and that such an expression as the gift by grace, or the like were used; yet I deny not there is in Scripture a common nature of those gifts by grace in us which accompany salvation, and that faith is a gift by grace infused, inspired, or wrought by the spirit of God.

Mr. Cr. saith further, untrue in it self, for though not in one place there may be in many places of Scripture compared together a common nature of Sacraments compared together. And is there not the common nature of a Sacrament expreſſed in one Scripture Rom. 4. 11. a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith? This is the judgement of the Ancients, and the moſt of the Divines of the reformed Churches.

Anſw. That neither the text Rom. 4. 11. nor the Ancients do ſo define a Sacrament, is ſhewed before; and however the Divines of the Reformed Churches do define thence a Sacrament as the ſeal of the Covenant, yet not (as there it is expreſſed) a ſeal of the righteouſneſs of faith; But of this I have ſaid enough before ſect. 31.

What I ſaid of Auſtins definition of a Sacrament, that it is a viſible ſigne of inviſible grace, as imperfect (which I proved by inſtances) was without a miſcellany of abſurdities; If the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt as a Dove were a ſigne or ſeal of Chriſts office of Mediatorſhip and not of his righteouſneſs of faith, yet it was a viſible ſigne of his hol qualifications, Luk. 4. 18. Joh. 3. 44. and ſo of inviſible grace, and conſequently a Sacrament by Auſtins definition; Chriſts waſhing his Diſciples feet, ſhewed his love and humility, ergo, by Auſtins definition muſt be alſo a Sacrament; and holding up the hands in prayer ſhews faith in God; kiſſing the Bible in ſwearing ſhews appealing to God as Judge or hope in his word, which are inviſible graces according to Auſtin, and according to his definition Sacraments. And though it be added in the Common Prayer book Catechiſm, ordained by Chriſt, yet it is not ſo in Auſtins definition uſed by Mr. Cr. in the diſpute, and if it had, holding up the hands in prayer had been a Sacrament, being appointed 1 Tim. 2. 8. And for the addition in the Catechiſm [as a means to receive the ſame, and a pledge to aſſure us thereof] I know no Scripture that ever made Circumciſion, the Paſſeover, the Lords Supper, or Baptiſm, meanes to receive inviſible grace, and how far and in what manner it aſſures I have before ſect. 31. and elſewhere ſhewed. Enough of Mr. Crs. vain prattle in this ſection.

Sect. 3. Mr. Cr. quarrels with my reconciliation of my own words, denying all inviſible Churchmembers were to be baptized, but affirming it of viſible. He tels me, 1. This diſtinction is not fitly applied, for the propoſition was meant of viſible Churchmembership. But 1. however it were meant the expreſſion was, God appointed infants Churchmembers under the Goſpel, and this might be underſtood of inviſible as well as viſible Churchmembership; and therefore it was fitly applied to take away the ambiguity of the expreſſion. 2. It was fitly applied alſo to cleer my meaning, and to free my words from contradiction. 2. He tels me my propoſition is not true, for all viſible Churchmembers are not to be baptized, then all baptized before (they being viſible members) were to be baptized again. But what is this but wrangling, ſith the propoſition was his own, and I granted it with that limitation in his own ſenſe, of them that were not yet baptized? He tels me of the ſtate of the queſtion between us, which is impertinent to the preſent buſineſs of cleering my words.

He adds, "Inviſible and viſible members differs as Genus and ſpecies, "all inviſible members are viſible, but not all viſible members inviſible,

"the invisible being extracted out of the visible; now if all invisible "members be also visible, it will inevitably follow they may be bapti- "zed, whether visible by profession, or by prerogative and promise of "parents or sureties of infants.

But what a dotage is this? Doth visible Churchmember prædicari de pluribus specie differentibus in quid? If it be asked what is an invisible Churchmember, will any that is in his wits say hee is a visible Churchmember? Is not this a contradiction, to say all invisible members are visible? How is it proved that any are visible members of the Christian Church, but by profession of faith? The like dotage is in what he saith after, that there is an intrinsecal connexion of these termes [actually to receive into Covenant under the Gospel, and to appoint Churchmembers under the Gospel] that they are as essentially coincident as to bee a man and a reasonable creature, which makes this proposition to be æternæ veritatis, those whom God did actually receive into Covenant under the Gospel, those God did appoint Churchmembers under the Gospel. For is the one to be defined by the other? Do not these terms express existences restrained to hic and nunc (for sure actual receiving and appointing are singular acts in time) not essences? If these speeches of Mr. Cr. be according to Metaphysical and Logical principles, I am yet to seek in them, as having not heard or read of such principles before. And if God did promise before the Law, foretell under the Law, actually receive into Covenant under the Gospel, or appoint Churchmembers under the Gospel without faith or profession of faith, then infidels are actually in Covenant under the Gospel, and so justified; then is Mr. Baxters dispute against Antinomians, about the condition of the Covenant and justification false, and if they be Churchmembers without faith or profession of faith and to be baptized, and the truth of Mr. Crs. proposition, those whom God did promise before the Law, foretell under the Law, actually receive into Covenant under the Gospel, those God did appoint Churchmembers under the Gospel, have no dependence upon faith or profession of faith; then Mr. Baxters 20 arguments in his 2d. dispute of right to Sacraments against Mr. Blake are false; so that I need no more but to leave Mr. Cr. to be chastized by his magnified Doctor Mr. Baxter about this point; and so enough of this section.

Sect. 4. He terms this an untruth, that a person may bee in Covenant, who is not yet born or conceived as my instance of Isaac implies, and saith; "It may bee confuted insito argumento, by an argu- "ment inbred in the terms, for he implies and that right, that a per- "son must be the subject of being in Covenant, but none who is un- "born, and unconceived as Isaac Gen. 17. 22. is a person.] But this is false, he may be a person though not in present but future existence. Those Ephesians who were elected before the Foundation of the world, Eph. 1. 4. were persons when elected, for they were singular men, though not then in actual being but future. Mr. Crs. reasoning in this, is like the reasoning of Adam Medlicot my neighbour, in his book stiled Comfortable doctrine for Adams off-spring, p. 99. "Who will not have any "particularly elected before the foundation of the world, because then "they

" they were not any where men, and p. 96. that none is absolutely elect" ed till he believe, because not in Christ, and if not in Christ not in " election, and one is elected before another because in Christ before " another. And in his Honey found in the Lions Carkass, p. 102. Al" though the purpose of election and reprobation was fully in God be" fore time, yet there could be no absolute or real election or reproba-
" tion of men and women, until they had a real and absolute beeing.
Surely infants are in Covenant no otherwise then by Gods promise or mans vow, or some such act in their behalf, and this may be afore they are in being, and consequently they may be in Covenant afore they are in actual being. If I do not mistake, Mr. Cr. both here Sect. 5. and in the 3d. Part Sect. 9. makes those with whom the Covenant was made Deut. 29. 10. to have been in Covenant, but doubtless the Covenant there was made with the posterity yet unbegotten v. 14, 15. for no other can bee meant by him that was not with them that day, all that were born or begotten then of the Congregation of Israel, whether by nature or Proselytism being present, as the words v. 10, 11. shew, and the end of the Covenant being to prevent the Apostasie of their posterity v. 18. therefore the unbegotten were in Covenant. Nor is it a good argument, A man is in Covenant, ergo he is, any more then a man is elected therefore he is, these termes being termini diminuentes, as Logicians speak; and the verb (est is) in these speeches not noting the present existence of the subject of these propositions, but of the act of the person who elects or covenants. A child unbegotten may be said to be in a copy or a deed, and so in covenant in respect of the assuring an estate to him when hee shall be existent.

But Mr. Cr. tels me, " 2ly. It is a false suggestion that to have a " Covenant made to one is to be in Covenant, if by having the covenant
" made to (for the phrase is somewhat strange) be meant (as he can mean
" nothing else) a promise from God to be and be in covenant, for a " promise may be made to or of one, long before he hath any being, nor " executed or performed till long after his being; Then to be elected
" and to be in covenant would be both one, then Mary Magdalen and
" Paul while a persecutor were in covenant, nay from eternity to be in
" covenant would precede outward and inward calling, conversion, pro" fession and prerogative of birth, then which nothing can be more ri" diculous.

Answ. It is so far from being ridiculous, that to me it is very plain to be in covenant precedes calling, and to be in covenant is to have a covenant made to one, and that a person is said to be in covenant with God by Gods promise to be his God though the man be not existent. This is in my apprehension that which Pædobaptists mean by being in covenant, for they usually say infants are in covenant, which sure they mean of Gods promise to them, for they prove it from Gen. 17. 7. Acts 2. 39. Nor can they mean it of any other being in covenant, sith there is no act of any infant or any other for him, that can denominate him in covenant with God in the time of the Gospel, but Gods promise, which is long before the being of those to or for whom it is made, Tit. 1. 2. Gal. 3. 16.

3. 16, 17. And thus two Kingdomes are said to be in league and covenant, and they that are born many yeers after may be said to be in covenant by vertue thereof. This being in covenant may be, though the things covenanted be not executed or performed till long after the being in covenant, as persons first enter into covenant and then perform. And yet to be in covenant and to be elected would not be both one, though attributed to the same persons, sith there is a different formal conceit of them, election being an immanent act, covenant a transient, that from eternity, this in time, as to be justified and sanctified are not both one, though to the same persons. Nor is it any absurdity to say Paul was in covenant while a persecutor, nor that to be in covenant precedes conversion, sith it is by vertue of being in covenant that one is converted, Heb. 8. 10. Rom. 11. 26, 27. As for being in covenant with God by prerogative of birth, I know not of any such in the time of the Gospel.

"Thirdly (saith Mr. Cr.) It is of the same leven of untruth, that "Isaac was in Covenant when he was not yet born, which his own quo- "tation, Gen. 17. 21. proves against him. For he saith he will establish "a Covenant with Isaac in the future, not that he does establish a Co- "venant in the present.

Answ. Surely Isaac was a child of the promise, Rom. 9. 8, 9. and Jacob, v. 11. afore they were born, and consequently in the Covenant; and when God said he would establish his Covenant with Isaac, he meant no other then the Covenant made with Abraham, and therefore it was made to him then, and he in Covenant, though confirmed and performed after.

Mr. Cr. saith of my speech, that a person is not actually received into Covenant till he is born, and by some acts of his own engageth himself to be Gods, That it is founded upon the basis of this mistake, that every Covenant must be expresly and actually mutual between both parties; and talks after his foolish fashion, as if it were an argument sophistically (though sillily) drawn a negatione unius speciei ad totum genus: But this is his meer cavil. For my reason added, receiving importeth an offering, which is to be done by profession, shews I inferred it otherwise. Against which his exception is in these words, as if more were to be required for admission of visible members into Covenant, then was for admission, or actual receiving of Christ as God-man and Mediator to be visible head of the Church. To which I reply, When and how Christ was visible head of the Church, is a point that requires much discussion. To be head of the Church imports direction, government, &c. To be visible head, is to do these things discernably by reason from something sensible. That he was visible head of the Church till he was manifest to Israel, and how he was visibly head of it but by his preaching, calling Disciples, or how he was actually received as such but by believing on his name, Joh. 1. 11. or how he was admitted visible head but by Johns Declaration, his Baptism of him, the Spirits descent on him, and his Fathers Proclamation of him, or how any according to the Evangelical order are admitted visible members into Covenant but by their own profession of faith, and thereupon being baptized, I understand not. But as for my ſpeech, I ſee not how it imports that which Mr. Cr. would have it to do, but onely, That being actually received into Covenant doth import an offer or tender on his part who is to be received, which however it might be under the Law, yet ſure in the Goſpel is no other way but by the perſons own profeſſion; and this neither ſmels rank of Hereſie nor Blaſphemy, but Mr. Crs. conceit as if under the Goſpel ſome might be received into Covenant, and admitted as viſible members repreſentatively by others, who are their Proxies, and engage for them, they being but meer paſſives without any voluntary act of their own, is but an innovation from what Chriſt or his Apoſtles appointed or practiſed; and his acknwledgement that it is not neceſſary that a Covenant be mutual, that the Covenant Ezek. 36.26. Gen. 15.8. & 17.9. are ſuch as wherein one party maketh the Covenant without mentioning the other but as patient, ſerves me to prove what I aſſert before, ſect. 45. againſt Mr. Bl. that a Covenant is not always a mutual agreement, and that a perſon is ſaid to be in Covenant in that a Covenant is made to him, and this may be to perſons not actually exiſtent, againſt Mr. Cr. in this Section.

Mr. Cr. to prove that God did promiſe to Abraham that infants ſhould be in Covenant under the Goſpel, alledgeth Gen. 17.7. and thus argues. "He that makes an everlaſting Covenant to Abraham and his ſeed after him in their generations, promiſed that infants ſhould be in Covenant under the Goſpel; God made an everlaſting Covenant with "Abraham and his ſeed after him, Ergo.

To this I ſaid I had many exceptions; for beſides thoſe to which Mr. Cr. here replies, I might and do deny his major for another reaſon then I did before. For now by his words p. 254. I perceive by being in Covenant under the Goſpel, he means an outward and viſible Covenant, like to which he hath p. 155. and p. 261. he calls this an impregnable rock which the Anabaptiſts will never overthrow, that to be circumciſed or baptized is all one as to be in viſible Covenant; and p. 158. he ſaith, I clearly affirm with all the Reformed Churches, that all in viſible Covenant are ſubjects of Baptiſm, and all ſubjects of Baptiſm are in viſible Covenant. I muſt confeſs, I magined that Pædobaptiſts if they would ſpeak plainly could mean no other by the being of infants in Covenant under the Goſpel but their being baptized; and ſo their argument, infants are in Covenant, ergo to be baptized, is but a meer tautology, or worſe, they are baptized therefore they are to be baptized. But I think I have ſect. 25. before ſhewed, that the diſtinction of outward and inward Covenant as the Pædobaptiſts uſe it, is either non ens or non-ſenſe, and I now deny this Propoſition, He that makes an everlaſting covenant to Abraham and his ſeed after him in their generations promiſed that infants ſhould be in covenant under the Goſpel, not onely for the reaſon given in the Diſpute, but alſo becauſe I now perceive he means (unleſs he ſtill juggle, as I fear he will in the uſe of the phraſes being in covenant, the covenant is made, &c.) that God promiſed that infants ſhould be baptized under the Goſpel, which is too ridiculous a ſenſe to be put upon the promiſe of being a God to Abraham and his ſeed, Gen. 17.7. much unlike Chriſts expoſition of the phraſe, Luke 20.38,39. and ſeems to be the attempt of men that have for their baby-ſprinkling reſolved to avow the groſſeſt abſurdities. But to keep to the Diſpute as it hath been printed. I ſaid the covenant Gen. 17.7. to Abraham and his ſeed after him in their generations, if it be underſtood of the natural ſeed of Abraham, the everlaſtingneſs of it was but for a time, and that time afore the Goſpel as in the next verſe; the poſſeſſion of Canaan is promiſed to be everlaſting, and yet the Jews now diſpoſſeſſed of it. Which Mr. Cr. grants, and therefore muſt needs grant, that the promiſe v.7. though it be termed everlaſting, yet it is to be underſtood onely of a limited time, as in other paſſages, Exod. 21.6. & 12.24. &c. if meant of the natural ſeed of Abraham.

To this he replies, "How doth that follow? If it had been with a "particle of excluſion, onely to the natural ſeed, there might have been "ſome colour of Diſpute; and yet without all controverſie, the ever-"laſtingneſs of it is extended even to the natural ſeed of Abraham; for "there hath been, is, and will be a ſucceſſion of Jewiſh believers to "the end of the world; which proves that in his ſenſe it's falſe, that "the everlaſtingneſs of it was but for a time, and that time afore the "Goſpel.

Anſw. My meaning was plain enough, that the Covenant as it was Evangelical, that is, as it contains a promiſe of the Spirit, juſtification, &c. (which is the onely Goſpel Covenant I know) if meant of the natural ſeed of Abraham, that is, the generality, or body of them was but for a time afore the Goſpel, which I learned from our Lord Chriſt, who foretold Mat. 21.43. that the Kingdome of God ſhould be taken from them, and the Apoſtle ſaith was accompliſhed, Rom 11.20. that the branches, meaning the Jewiſh-people, were broken off by unbelief: and this is true, though it be true alſo that there have been a ſucceſſion of Jewiſh believers ſtill, they being a remnant onely according to the election of grace, Rom 11.5. and thus they were not merely Abrahams natural ſeed, but alſo his ſpiritual, to wit, elect and true believers, to whom I never denied the Covenant to be ſimply everlaſting.

Mr. Cr. adds. "But the truth is, it is not onely meant of the natural "ſeed, but of the ſpiritual ſeed of Abraham, both whereof ſucceſſively "and in part, if not altogether concomitantly (for there were always "Proſelytes) it is everlaſting, or to the end of the world.

Anſw If Mr. Cr. mean, that to the natural ſeed, who are alſo the ſpiritual ſeed, the Covenant Gen. 17.7. is ſimply everlaſting, I grant it, but this doth no way advantage Mr. Cr. For then it will onely follow, that to ſuch infants as are not onely the natural ſeed of Abraham or a believer, but alſo are themſelves believers, God hath promiſed they ſhall be in Covenant under the Goſpel; which would not be true of all the infants of believers, or any but the elect: If he mean it as it is there meant (as appears by the next words, v.8.) being underſtood of the natural ſeed of Abraham of the nation or people of Iſrael, and not of a remnant of them, it can be true onely of a limited everlaſtingneſs, and not at all of the Gentile believers infants, and ſo is not at all for Mr. Crs. purpoſe.

But he tels me, "It follows not, unleſs the ſame word in adjoyning "verſes muſt neceſſarily ſignifie the ſame thing; which if ſo, an argu- "ment might be drawn againſt the Infiniteneſs and Eternity of the De- "ity from theſe words, God of Gods and Lord of Lords, Gods and Lords "in the latter ſignifies creatures, therefore in the former; but how in- "conſequently in both, a child may judge.

Anſw. My arguing needs not proceed thus, but is good againſt Mr. Cr. thus, The term [everlaſting] ſignifies a limited everlaſtingneſs afore the Goſpel, v. 8. therefore it may be ſo meant v. 7. and if meant of the body of the Iſraelitiſh people who were the natural ſeed of Abraham, it muſt be ſo meant, otherwiſe it were not true. And for his inſtance, I think the argument not good as he makes it; yet it follows, the term [God] doth not neceſſarily of it ſelf infer infiniteneſs and eternity, but when it is applied to the moſt High God the Creatour, who is the God of Gods, becauſe it is ſometimes ſpoken of Creatures.

But Mr. Cr. tels me, "That v. 8. can be true onely in one of theſe "ſenſes, that they had title to all the Land of Canaan, though not actual "poſſeſſion of it, or that it was a type of the everlaſting ſpiritual Ca- "naan, in which ſenſes from Abraham they poſſeſſed it; or that the ple- "nary, and full poſſeſſion of the whole begins at the converſion of the "Jews, and ſhall laſt from thence to the end of the world without in- "terruption, becauſe neither Abraham nor his ſeed had actual poſſeſſion "of all the Land of Canaan; none of theſe will ſupport Mr. T. his decli- "ning cauſe.

Anſw. That the land of Canaan, Gen. 17. 8. muſt be meant of that part of the earth ſo called is manifeſt from the expreſſion, wherein thou art a ſtranger, or the land of thy ſojournings, and might be, if need were, proved by multitudes of other Scriptures. And that the ſeed of Abraham is that which is natural and afore their later converſion, is apparent from v. 9, 10. where the ſeed to whom the land of Canaan is promiſed are enjoyned to be circumciſed, and the term poſſeſſion v. 8. cannot be meant of a mere title, for that's implied in the words will give, but the poſſeſſion is diſtinct from it and conſequent upon it, therefore I chooſe rather to untie Mr. Cr's. knot by expounding it thus, I will give to thee and to thy ſeed after thee all the land of Canaan for an everlaſting poſſeſſion, but not altogether, thou ſhalt poſſeſs a part in thy time as a pledge of the whole, as his burying place was, and thy ſeed in Joſhua's and Davids time ſhall poſſeſs the whole, and this ſhall be not onely a place to ſojourn in, but a poſſeſſion for them to dwell in, and that everlaſting, that is, for many ages, as Phinehas his Prieſthood is termed everlaſting, Numb. 25. 13. ſo long as they ſhall keep my Covenant and obſerve my ſtatutes. Now this will ſerve thus far to ſupport my cauſe, which is ſtill ſtanding and not declining, to ſhew that the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. as it is made to the natural ſeed of Abraham is termed everlaſting, that is, for a limited time afore the Goſpel; which ſenſe alſo the terms for ever and everlaſting have, Exod. 12. 14. & 21. 6. Numb. 25. 13. &c and ſo the major Propoſition of Mr. Cr. juſtly denied, He that makes an everlaſting covenant

to Abraham and his seed after him in their generations, promised that infants should be in Covenant under the Gospel.

Sect. 5. Mr. Cr. endeavours to draw Gal. 3. 8. to his purpose, to prove a continuance of the Gospel Covenant to the end of the world, to Abraham and his seed, by paraphrasing it thus; That the Scripture foretold that God would justifie the Heathen through faith, that is, the partition wall should be pulled down, and the Heathen nations should profess faith as visible members, whereof some should be actually justified as members invisible. But besides his inept expression of [heathen nations] which is all one with nations nations, he abuseth the text by paraphrasing [through faith] thus, that the nations should profess faith as visible members, when it should be, shall be true believers as Abraham was, and would justifie the nations, by whereof some should be actually justified, whereas the text mentions no other then should be justified, and v. 9. terms them, they that are of the faith, who are blessed with Faithfull Abraham, and only meant by the nations, v. 8.

Mr. Cr. tels me, 1. That "I injuriously misreport his allegation, as "that he urged this argument drawn from Gal. 3. 8. to prove that A"brahams natural seed were promised to be in Covenant under the Go"spel, whereas he urged it to prove the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. to have "been a Gospel Covenant made with Abraham and his seed, that is pro"professors and believers, whether carnally descended from him or no. But sure he that reads his first argument in his Sermon p. 88, 89. and his Defence p. 256. where his words are, the minor I prove from Gen. 17. 7. where the infants of believing parents are implied, it being a Covenant not only established with Abraham, but with his seed after him in their generations for an everlasting Covenant, by vertue of which Isaac and all succeeding male infants were circumcised; now sure these were Abrahams natural seed, and here the Covenant is everlasting, and therefore according to Mr. Crs. reasoning to extend to the end of the world, and the infants of believing parents, who are their natural seed, are, he saith, implied; which can be no otherwise then as Abraham is imagined to be taken for each believer, and the believers natural seed proportionably correspondent to Abrahams natural seed, by prerogative of birth, as he there speaks, and then adds. In Gal. 3. 8. there is implied Abrahams seed, in that it was a Gospel Covenant, and that in him all nations shall be blessed, and is directly for me, for it asserts the Covenant, and in that justification to the believing Gentiles, not onely from Abraham promise, but also a promise to them and their seed; which plainly shews that he imagines Gal. 3. 8. the Gospel Covenant, to be a promise to believers and their seed who are their natural seed, as in Abraham his seed is implied, which conformably must be his natural. And if Mr. Cr. did not in the dispute mean Abrahams natural seed he went from the point to be proved, and by me denied, that the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. was not simply everlasting to the natural seed of Abraham, sith they were dispossessed of Canaan. His suggestions therefore of my using officious untruths and pious frauds, are but the venome of his spirit which throughout his book he discovers, and most pestilently in that Section, for which the Lord rebuke him.

What he next saith, that when I say the thing promised Gal. 3. 8. was justification, and that of the heathen and that through faith, therefore this text proves not Abrahams natural seed in Covenant under the Gospel, is, As if all this might not be, and yet some of the natural seed of Abraham be in covenant under the Gospel, who professed, were justified and had faith as well as the heathen; which I grant; but then they were not onely Abrahams natural seed but also his spiritual, to which I grant the Covenant is made Gen. 17. 7. and is everlasting, and if he can prove infants of believers to be such, there's no question but they are in Covenant under the Gospel and to be baptized, till then he can never prove either from Gen. 17. 7. or Gal. 3. 8. that Abrahams natural seed, much less infants of believing parents to be in the Gospel covenant, which whether hee had reason to bee ashamed of attempting the Reader may judge. That the entring into Covenant, Deut. 29. 10, 11. was a transeunt fact and not a thing perpetually binding, I had thought none would deny; nor argue as Mr. Crag doth, it was by command, Deut. 29. 1. they were v. 29. to do the words of the Law, and that was a command, and the revealed things belong to them and their children for ever, therefore the entring into Covenant v. 10, 11. was a command perpetually binding under the Gospel, which is too frivolous to spend time in answering, and his argument, that if wives and servants were in Covenant under the Gospel much more infants, is alike frivolous, sith he himself makes no other then believing wives and servants in Covenant under the Gospel, which when he proves of infants their being in Covenant will not be denied. This is enough in answer to that Section and most of the 8th. and 9th. Sections of the third part.

I said his allegation is vain of Heb. 8. 6. to prove that if infants were in covenant under the Law they are in covenant under the Gospel, whereas the meliority of the Covenant is not placed in the extent to the sort of persons; He asks me, what then? will it follow, if a Covenant was made to no more then before, therefore not to all that were before? Answ. No, yet it will follow that the text is vainly alledged to prove the co extension to persons, tha speaks not at all of that thing, nor i it at all to the purpose, that it is extended to more, to wit to Gentiles. For 1. however that text speaks not of it. 2. It is extended to more nations of the world besides the Jews, but to none but believers of those nations, and consequently not to infants of believing parents as such. That the new Covenant contains promises of better things then the old Covenant, and differs more then in administrations, is shewed before Sect. 43. and yet there is no such thing implied as if there were salvation in any other then Jesus Christ, unless he could prove salvation were by the promises of the Law. My third Paradox (as he calls it) that the promises of the Gospel are not to any other then the elect and true believers, is proved before Sect. 33. That there are in the Gospel Covenant promises of external ordinances made to all visible members, is more then Mr. Cr. proves or any other, and therefore I count it a figment, I know none but spiritual promises in it, which Mr. Cr. grants are made absolutely and terminated or performed onely to the elect and invisible members, which is the same with my Paradox, but hath more asserrors then his most gross speech, that the meliority of the Covenant consists principally in outward ordinances, manner of administration and dispensation, extent and amplitude of the proposal, not of grace and glory. He adds, of which there was always the same reason; Enoch, Abraham, Eliah, Moses, were as well justified by faith, which is true, but not according to the Covenant of the Law, but by the Covenant of the Gospel, which it seems Mr. Cr. understands not, though he assume the title of a Preacher of the Gospel.

Para-

Mr. Cr. saith of me, His last assertion is, that because the promises of the Gospel are not to any other then the elect, and true believers, therefore they are not to infants as the natural seed of believers: The antecedent is proved to be false, for though the spiritual part of Gospel promises is absolutely performed and terminated to the elect, yet they are conditionally proposed to all Professors; and the external part, which consists in administration of ordinances, is equally belonging to all visible members. But are the promises to all professors because they are conditionally proposed to them? If so, we may say the promises are to the most obstinate infidels, to every man in the world, for to them they are conditionally proposed. Sure this is not according to the doctrine of the Scripture which makes the promises to bee the believers inheritance, 2 Cor. 1. 20. 2 Pet. 1. 4. Gal. 3. 16. & 4. 28. Heb 6. 12, 17. according to the doctrine of Protestants, the Saints Legacy, yea Pædobaptists make them their priviledge, Rom. 9. 4. though the promises there were other promises. As for an external part of Gospel promises, which consists in administration of ordinances equally belonging to all visible members, it is a mere figment no where in Scripture; And the sayings of Mr. Cr. Part. 3. Sect. 11. p. 261. [" Christ is said Heb 8. 6. to be a Mediator of a " better Covenant, which could not be, if infants, that were in covenant, " under the Law, were out of covenant under the Gospel, and is grounded upon this impregnable rock, which the Anabaptists will never o- " verthrow, that to be circumcised or baptized is all one as to be in vi- " sible covenant: that the reason of baptizing or circumcising a person " is their birth right, tuition, self-profession, whereby they are visibly " admitted into covenant, that what he hath said Examen part. 3. sect. 1. " Antipæd. part. 1. sect. 5. touches not the true state of the Controver- " sie, but is a confused Maze intricated with his fallacia decumani, or " master fallacy of Gods making, whereas he should say, completing his " Covenant onely with the elect, Heb. 8. 6. the new Covenant is a bet- " ter Covenant not onely positively, because it is established upon bet- " ter promises in circumstantials, but also because it is extended to move " all nations; negatively would not be better, if any sexe, age, degree " were excluded] contain such a heap of mistakes and untruths as is not elsewhere usually found in the most heedless scribler. For 1. if the first speech were true, then unless we grant infants to be baptized, which is in his language, to be in Covenant, either the new Covenant shall not be better then the old, or Christ not mediatour of it, which is as much as to say, if infants who were circumcised under the Law be not baptized under the Gospel then the promises of the Spirit, justification, Gods writing his laws in the heart, teaching, forgiving sins cannot be better then the promises of the Law, which assure righteousness and life to the keepers of the Law, or Christ cannot be Mediatour of the new Covanant, which if it be not a more monstrous conceit and to be more abhorred by Christians then ever any Popish conceit of the necessity of baptism to infants to prevent exclusion out of heaven, for which Austin is by Mr. Cr. himself reckoned the hard Father of infants, I know nothing. Sure all that doubt of infant Baptism, must by this reason either doubt whether it were not as good to be under the Law as under the Gospel, or whether Christ be a better Mediatour then Moses. 2. It is a monstrous boldness in him to tell us of a visible Covenant of so great necessity, and never tell us distinctly what it contains, nor where it is to be found, especially when not onely my self, but his Oracle Mr. Baxter, hath written so much against it, as hee hath done in his Apology against Mr. Blake. 3. It is alike confidence in his own conceits, to tell us, that it is an impregnable rock which the Anabaptists will never overthrow, that to be circumcised or baptised is all one as to be in visible Covenant, and yet shew us none that useth such language but himself. How doth hee think I or any other should answer his arguments, which are vented in such gibberish as no Dictionary or Author, or use makes intelligible? Is not his own first agument in his Sermon here pag. 254. Those (meaning under the Gospel) that are in Covenant with God (meaning outward and visible, which according to him is all one as to be baptized) ought to have the seal of the Covenant which is baptism, But infants of Believing parents are in the Covenant with God (that is in his language in the outward Covenant which is all one as to bee baptized) therefore they ought to have the seal of the Covenant, which is baptism. In which he plainly makes 1. baptism the Covenant, and yet the seal of it. 2. He argues in this manner, infants are baptized therefore they are baptized, which is either merely an inept tautology, such as boyes in Schools would hiss at in a Freshman, or else it infers from baptism already done baptism to bee done, which Pædobaptists call Anabaptism, and so Mr. Cr. is turned an Anabaptist. 4. Hee tels us, this is an impregnable rock which the Anabaptists will never bee able to overthrow (though it be a Castle in the Air built by his imagination and will of it self vanish) that the reason of baptizing a person is his birth right, tuition, which proceeds onely on that conceit as if there were the same reason of Baptizing as of Circumcising, which is oft before shewed to bee false. 5. If his words [whereby they are visibly admitted into Covenant] bee referred to the outward Covenant and baptizing, then the sense is Anabaptistical, by baptizing they are admitted to baptism, if to [birthright, tuition] and admission bee meant as Mr. Baxter in his Book of Baptism page 24. then the sense is, by birth right persons are baptized, and so they baptize themselves and need no other baptism besides Birth right. 6. Hee corrects me for saying God makes, when I should say completes, as if the Translators of Heb. 8. 8. were mistaken, or Gods making his Covenant were not his completing it, or he did not complete the Covenant hee made. But this exception of Mr. Crag ſhews either his oſſitancy or unskilfulneſs; ſith it is the ſame word in Jerem. 31. 31, 32, 33. כרת to ſtrike, rendered in the Greek LXX by the Verb διατιθημι, and ſo Heb. 8. 10. & 10. 16. which is as much as to diſpoſe or put, and Heb. 8. 9. by ἐποίησα I made although it be v. 8. rendred by συντελέσω I will complete, ſo that this exception is but nodus in ſcirpo, out of a cavelling vein. 7. He ſaith, I do not touch the true ſtate of the controverſie Exam. par. 3. ſect. 1. Antipæd. part. 1. ſect. 5. though it be the very hinge of it, unleſs they mean no otherwiſe by being in Covenant then baptiſm, and then I muſt confeſs there is no controverſie about the conſequence of Mr. Ms. argument Infants are in Covenant, that is to be baptized, therefore they are to be baptized, but the argument to be derided as nugatory, as indeed it is. 8. He terms my diſpute there a confuſed Maze intricated, which either his ignorance or impudence prompted him to do, ſure he ſhews no confuſedneſs in it. 9. He calls my propoſition of Gods making his covenant onely with the elect or ſpiritual ſeed, my Maſter ſakacy, and yet it is proved from Scripture before, and acknowledged by Proteſtants, yea Mr. Cr. himſelf to be true. 10. He takes on him to foretell no ſatisfaction to be expected from the third part of my Review before hee ſees it. 11. He ſaith Heb. 8. 6. the new Covenant is a better Covenant, becauſe it is eſtabliſhed on better promiſes in circumſtantials and extended to move all nations, which are not in the text. 12. He ſaith, it would not bee better if any ſexe age or degree were excluded, which being meant of the outward Covenant, it were as if he ſaid, the new Covenant were not better then the old if an infant of a day old were excluded baptiſm.

Hee tels mee pag. 140. His conſequent is alſo unſound, for the internal and ſpiritual part may be made intentionally to infants as the ſpiritual ſeed of believers, and yet the external part and that of Ordinances to infants as the natural ſeed of Believers, as well under the Goſpel as under the Law; In which paſſage the phraſe ſpiritual ſeed of believers is a new notion, intimating that believing fathers beget them ſpiritual, contrary to John 3. 6. and that there is in the Goſpel promiſes a part which is of ordinances, which is a figment, and that belongs to the natural ſeed of believers which is falſe, and that my conſequent is unſound for that reaſon, which if it were good the conſequent is ſound nevertheleſs.

What hee adds, "if the external part under the Goſpel belong "not to infants, the Goſpel and that made with Abraham are two "diſtinct Covenants and eſſentially different, and that made with A-"braham and his ſeed carnal, as the carnal Anabaptiſts affirm, their "portion no better, then Turks they made (as Calvin obſerves) as beaſts, "whereas the Covenant Gen. 17. 7. is everlaſting] is true thus far, that the Covenant Gen. 7. 17. ſo farre as it did aſſure righteouſneſs to Abrahams ſpiritual ſeed by faith was the Goſpel Covenant the ſame with ours, made in Chriſt and everlaſting, but this is nothing to prove that there was ſuch an external part of outward ordinances belonging to infants in that Covenant. But that Covenant is mixt, Mr. Cr. himſelf ſaith, faith, there was a promise of Canaan and temporal blessings in it though in the main the Covenant were spiritual, and that part belonged to the Israelites by nature onely, not to our children at all. So that Mr. Cragg terms of carnal and gross put upon us, and Calvins observation are but reproaches and calumnies by Mr. Cr. and other Pædobaptists, devised and used by them wickedly to make us odious: but in time their wickedness will return on their own head.

Sect. 7. Mr. Cr. speeches of infants sad condition without baptism, are like the Popish talk of the necessity of baptizing infants that they may enter into Gods kingdome. By denying their baptism we deprive them not of Gods Covenant. The priviledges Rom. 3. 2. & 9. 4. were peculiar to the Jews; Did he write with heed, he would not say they belong to infants of Gentiles under the Gospel. When I say Baptism is not an ordinary meanes of salvation without faith, I mean that no ones baptism but the baptism of true believers is an ordinary meanes of salvation, which is true, though there may be true baptism without true saving faith if it be professed. His talk of preaching to infants by presenting objectively the benefit of that which is preached without manifesting to the understanding, is another of his wild conceits. It's no contradiction to say infants are not saved by ordinary meanes, to wit, preaching the word, &c. and yet to say they are saved by election, redemption, the work of Gods Spirit, sith by ordinary means I understand and so do others, the Word and Sacraments and Christian discipline.

It is false he saith of me p. 146. that I confess if I knew infants were elected I would baptize them, or that here I acknowledge of the species or sort of believers infants, that they are not onely elected of God but redeemed of Christ and have the work of his Spirit. Sect. 8. the major of his Syllogism [That which was proposed and entertained with success amongst the Jews, which were the natural seed of Abraham, was not onely made with the spiritual seed of Abraham] p. 147. is denied, he is grossely mistaken in conceiving believing Jews were not Abrahams spiritual seed: and his arguing that many of the natural seed of Abraham were believers under the Gospel, Rom. 4. 11, 12. to prove it confirms the contrary. For all that are true believers (not every professour of faith) or elect are Abrahams spiritual seed, and this I often expressed plainly, and Mr. Cr. knew well enough; but says I speak ambiguously, that he may have some colour for his random roving talk of persons in visible Covenant being children of the promise and Abrahams seed, which is much of it non-sense, unproved dictates, and quite beside the meaning of the texts Rom. 4. 11, 12, 16. & 9. 8. which make none Abrahams seed, and children of the promise Gen. 17. 7 as it was Evangelical, but true believers or elect persons, as is amply before proved Sect. 28, 29. The rest of his scribling in that Section runs on these two mistakes; 1. That there is now under the Gospel a national Church as the Jews was, and that the expression Ephes. 3. 6. may be applied to this whole Nation. 2. That there is such an outward visible Covenant which God hath made with such a whole visible National Church, which is not proved from Deut. 29. 10, 12. Joh. 1. 11. Psal. 50. 5. Joh. 15. 2. two of which speak not at all of the Gospel Covenant, nant, nor of Gods making a Covenant with them, but of theirs with God, the 2d. is expreſly meant onely of true believers, the 4th. of being a branch in Chriſt (which it's true may be meant of a viſible profeſſour) but not of being in the Goſpel Covenant of grace, in which none any where are ſaid to be, nor is God ſaid any where to make it to any but true believers or elect perſons, as is proved Sect. 33. There is not any thing Sect. 9. that I need reply to, ſaving that he grants that the Goſpel Covenant of grace Heb. 8. 10, 11, 12. is made onely to the elect, if by the Covenant I mean the end, event and ſucceſs thereof, which I confeſs I do, and acknowledge that I abhor any conceit to the contrary, as if God ſhould make a Covenant to any, which ſhould not have the end event and ſucceſs anſwerable to his promiſe, and therefore this Covenant promiſing things, which none in the event have but the elect, can bee ſaid to be made by God to none but them, unleſs we will charge God with falſhood, mutability or impotency.

Sect. 10. That Iſa. 49. 22, 23. is a propheſie of the reducing the Jews from Babyloniſh captivity is evinced from v. 19, 20, 21. in that the deſcription of the places waſt and deſolate, the land of their deſtruction, the place which was too ſtrait are meant of the land of Canaan, and Mr. Cr. himſelf thus v. 20. the place is too ſtrait for me, that is the Land of Canaan is too narrow to contain the whole Church, and he himſelf expounds after, thou haſt loſt the other, v. 20. of the natural ſeed of Abraham, and the being deſolate, a captive, and removing too and fro off Jeruſalem: But he will have it meant of the time after the deſtruction by Titus, and the diſperſion after it, for we never find it verified literally that the Land of Canaan was too ſtrait during the time of captivity (as the words point) to contain the Jews. But whereto the words point that the Land of Canaan was too ſtrait during the time of captivity to contain the Jewes. The words point at the multitude of Jews after the return from the Babyloniſh captivity, at which time according to Zechariah his propheſie, ch. 8. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9. the Jews mightily encreaſed and proſpered, and the place deſolate confeſſedly being meant of Canaan and Jeruſalem, and the Jewes the Captives, the ſenſe of v. 22, 23. is meant undoubtedly (in the firſt ſenſe of the words) of the Jews reduction from captivity, which was not true of them after the deſtruction by Titus, therefore of their return from Babylon by Cyrus, and other Perſian and Grecian Kings and Queens favour. The like may be inferred from v. 24, 25. for therein is foretold that they which were taken captive (who were the Jews) ſhould be delivered. But Mr. Cr. ſaith, "That one Democritus would "not be enough to laugh at, nor three Anticyra's ſuffice to purge that "head, that would attempt from hence to draw an argument to prove "the fore-going concluſion: the words are theſe, even the captives of "the mighty ſhall be taken away; from whom? From Cyrus, Artax-"erxes, Darius, Abaſuerus? That would imply a contradiction, for he "confeſſes that theſe were nurſing fathers that did bring back the Jews "from captivity; the prey of the terrible ſhall be delivered, children "are not preys to their nurſes, nor are their nurſes terrible to their "children." But we need not make the mighty and terrible the ſame

with the deliverers or nurses. The Chaldean Princes were the mighty and terrible to whom the Jews were captives and a prey, and Cyrus and others after deliverers and nurses. Yet did we make them the same persons there were nothing ridiculous in it, sith the Jews were at first their captives, and prey, and they terrible to them, and yet not long after deliverers and nurses. So that we may retort Mr. Crs. words thus; One Democritus (except such a scoffer as Mr. Cr.) would not bee enough to laugh at, nor three Anticyra's suffice to purge that Craig that makes such a silly refutation. What he adds to disparage Mr. Gattakers notes may be dispelled by reading the notes, nor is he alone in the sense hee gives, Grotius in his annot. agrees in that thing with Mr. Gattaker. And for the contents of the Chapter though there is not sufficient reason to ascribe them to the Church of England, they being made by one Translator though allowed by others without any Canon, or Act of Parliament establishing them, yet I see not that they make against my sense, but the making the content of v. 24. to be the powerful deliverance out of captivity, did in the Dispute and doth still seem to make for my sense of delivery or returning of the Jews out of the Babylonish captivity, which being derided by Mr. Crs. party shewed the levity of their spirits, to whom this book shews him to be too like. Which is seen in his alleging my words (not p. 14. as he cites them but p. 16.) against my reason; which he makes my interpretation, though if hee had added my words [and if so] it would have appeared that I spake not those words as my interpretation. And for his allegation of Gods saying to Moses thy children which thou hast brought out of Egypt, I remember not where it is used, but [thy people Exod. 32. 7.] And for Mr. Crs. reconciliation, I do not conceive it may be congruously to speech so paraphrased, the Gentiles shall bring thy sons, that is the Churches by spiritual succession, the Gentiles by natural generation, Gods that is mine by adoption. It may be accommodated mystically to the conversion of the Gentiles as shadowed out by the reducing of the Jews from captivity, and yet make nothing for infants Churchmembership or Baptism. For though I yeeld in the litteral sense infants to be comprehended, yet in the mystical sense humble persons, or mean contemptible persons, or new born babes, that is believers desiring the word, may be meant. If the words be mystically meant, yet the words are not a propheſie of a propheſie, but as many speeches are which have a double meaning, as Gen. 15. 5. & 17. 4, 5. Exod. 12. 46. one more open, the other covert. And Mr. Cragg purpose from Isai. 49. 22. were not to prove it foretold that infants under the Gospel should be brought to baptism, but to prove the proposition in question, that God foretold that infants should be Churchmembers under the Gospel, whence infant Baptism will follow; it seems Mr. Cr. understands not the bringing of children in arms and upon shoulders of bringing infants to baptism, and how else in a litteral sense they by bringing in armes and on shoulders become Churchmembers I yet understand not, and am out of hope ever to do.

Sect. 11. Mr. Cr. speaks thus. He says (meaning me) if by standard be meant baptism, which the Scripture never cals Gods standard, and the bringing bringing should be to Baptism, then the sense should be, that supream Magistrates, as Kings and Queens, should bring infants in their armes, and carry them on shoulders to Baptism, which no story mentions to have been done, and is too frivolous to be made the matter of that prophesie, in which words there is neither verity, nor consequence if sense. First hee says, if by standard hee meant Baptism, who makes a Thesis of his Hypothesis? or affirms that by standard is meant Baptism? To which I reply, Mr. Cr. of whom the relatour of the Dispute *p.*35. saith, That to give me satisfaction (which he needed not) he told me, that by standard he understood some visible Gospel Ordinance, as Baptism, without an &c. to wit, Preaching, Praying, with many more; nor had I any reason to conceive he understood any other sith he named no other, nor did he say Gospel Ordinances, as if he included the genus (as now he would evade) but some Gospel ordinance in the singular number. Now I said Baptism is no where called Gods standard, and he hath nothing to reply hereto, but that it is so in this place, the Genus being predicated on the species. But this is but a begging of what he should prove, that by standard here is meant Baptism in particular or Gospel ordinances in general. Sure the phrase of setting up the standard is very unsutable to the use of baptizing, which was not by setting up, but putting down into the water. And if Mr. Crs. words or the text do not necessarily speak of Kings and Queens bringing in their arms and on their shoulders to baptism, my reasons are the same, and of a like force, if meant of the people. For no story doth mention carrying infants on shoulders to Baptism by the people, and such a thing is too frivolous to be made the matter of this prophesie, which expresseth some great and wonderfull thing to be done by Gods extraordinary incitement and power, of which kinde that is not. Though Mr. Cr. grant the phrase of nursing fathers and mothers Isa. 49. 23. to be metaphorical, yet he applies the words before (which are alike metaphorical) [they shall bring thy sons in their armes or bosome, and thy daughters shall be carried upon their shoulders, v. 22.] according to the proper sense of the words, when he saith, the people should bring sons in their arms and daughters upon their shoulders to Baptism, now if the words v. 23. be metaphorical, so are those v. 22. which is also acknowledged by Mr. Cr. 1 In that he grants that in story it is not found that infants have been brought to Baptism on shoulders. 2. In that they are said to be brought to the standard, which is according to Mr. Cr. Baptism, but that is not a standard properly but metaphorically, and therefore it follows upon Mr. Crs grant, that the application of that one phrase of bringing their sons in their arms and daughters on shoulders, according to the proper sense of the words is not right. Nor is his endeavour to fit the metaphor to infant Baptism any better, though in the Low Countries it were true that the eldest son of a Commission Captain being born there whilest his father is in the service of the State, is by the courtesie of the Camp enrolled in the souldiers List on his birth day, and by the allowance of the State receives pay from the time of his nativity, as he scribbles out of Fullers frivolous Treatise termed Infants Advocate p. 99. For 1. if infants be listed, yet no standard is set up, or hand lifted up to the people to bring them, nor are they brought in their arms or bosoms in the Low Countries. 2. Nor was any such usage among the Jews or Gentiles in Isaiahs time, to which he might bee conceived to allude, and it is too ridiculous to go about (as Mr. Cr. doth) to explain a metaphor alluding to an use in Isaiahs time by an use no where shewed to be but in the Low Countries in our time. That Mr. Gataker in the cause of infant Baptism interprets innumerable places against me, is an untruth. Though Esther were a Jew, yet a Queen of the Gentiles, and these things foretold Isa 49. 22, 23. were fulfilled in Cyrus time, and in Ahasuerus, Artaxerxes and Darius time also, yea and after them in Alexander the Great, and some of his successors, and their Queens as Grotius conceives, in his Annotations, who also and Mr. Gataker shew how the prediction of bowing down and licking the dust of the Jews feet was fulfilled, though not in Esthers time (as I said the prophesie of Queens being a nursing mother to the Jews was) yet in the times after afore Christs incarnation. And for Mr. Crs. argument from v. 1, 6, 7, 8, 20, 21. let him form it as strong as he can, yet he will never prove that Isa. 49. 22. is a prophesie of infants visible Churchmembership in the times of the Gospel or their bringing to Baptism, nor was I by any argument of Mr. Cr. forced to surrender up this hold, that Isa. 49. 22, 23. is a prophesie of the return of the Jewes from the Babylonish captivity, and their prosperity in Judea after their return afore Christs incarnation, and yet were it understood of the times of the Gospel, I shewed how it might be understood of grown men perswaded by the preaching of the Gospel, as Junius in his Annotations, which Mr. Cr. abusively puts into an argument as if it were alledged thus, Junius says so therefore it is so, and denies the antecedent and consequent. But neither was the consequent mine, nor the antecedent as Mr. Cr. sets it down. But this Junius saith, that the standard Isa. 49. 22. is the Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, Rom. 1. 16. and therefore it is meant of perswading grown men by the preaching of the Gospel, and that all those things are allegorically spoken of the amplitude of Christs spiritual Kingdome, and therefore not of bringing infants to baptism And for Cornelius a Lapide, Hierome, Cyril, Haymo, if they held it fulfilled in Gospel times, and extended the words to grown men, though they were for infants visible Churchmembership and Baptism, yet they overthrow Mr. Crs. argument from thence, which is of no force unless the words be understood onely of Gospel times, and of infants being brought to some visible Ordinance as Baptism, the contrary whereof his own Authors shew, and himself grants, and therefore I take all Mr. Crs. reasoning in the Dispute and this Reply from Isa. 49. 22. to be meer cavilling, and still think it meet to refer the Reader for the discerning of my interpretation whether right or no, and my yeelding that the words may be accommodated to the calling of the Gentiles without any oppositeness to my interpretation, or appositeness to Mr. Crs. inference whether true or not to Mr. Gatakers Annotations, which for no other reason but because (however otherwise he differ from me) I take to be the exactest, and the most incomparable learned on that part of Scripture of any I know.

To

To Mr. Crs. defence Sect. 12. of his alleging thus Isa. 65. 20. There shall be no more an infant of dayes, that is infants shall not be uncapable of the seal, against my answer impliedly denying the consequence, and saying it hath no proof but his dictate, which is thus. To which it were sufficient reply to say it hath no disproof, but his dictate, which is without all shew of probability, there being not a word of any such thing as outward peace, increase, possession, and long life to the Jews, unless in the type and that scarce probable, but of the glorious estate of the times of the Gospel held out in outward ordinances as shall appear. I oppose 1. that I needed bring no other disproof, but denial being a respondent, but it is necessary hee should make good his sense if hee will inferre his conclusion thence. 2. My disproof was right: for v. 18; 19. speaks of the outward peace of Jerusalem and her people, their long life, increase, building, planting, possession, opposite to their former troubles v. 16. are expressed v. 20. 21, 22, 23. nor a word of outward ordinances.

Against this saith Mr. Cr. "And in Isa. 65. 20. there is need of "such an interpretation, for as v. 17. the new heavens and new earth, "and 18, 19. creation, and Jerusalem were analogical, and not proper, "so the 20. v. is wholly tropical and mystical. There shall be no more "thence an infant of days; How can this be understood litterally? did "not infants after as well, as under the captivity make up their weeks "of dayes, months of weeks? &c. It must needs relate to some thing un- "der the Jewish Pædagogy, and nothing so probably as that of theirs, "that nothing was clean till a Sabbath had gone over it, and therefore "according to Divine institution Circumcision was not till the 8th. day; "Mr. T. might have done well to have imparted us either his own or "Mr. *Gataker*s descant on these words, but because they could devise "nothing that like the ears under the Lions skin would not discover the "whole imposture, ne γρυ quidem.

Answ. That Jerusalem is analogical is not proved, nor doth it follow v. 17. is tropical, therefore also v. 20. any more then Isa. 11. 6, 7, 8. is allegorical, therefore also v. 2, 3, 4, 5, 9. Mr. *Gataker*s sense is plainly set down without any imposture in his Annotations, which is this, "There shall be no more thence brought to burial by reason of untime- "ly ends, as formerly a child that hath not fulfilled his dayes, but shall "live and attain to his just growth and full stint of years." This sense is not infringed by any thing Mr. Cr. saith, yea his question, did not infants &c. confirms it. That it must needs relate to something under the Jewish Pædagogy, is not proved, nor that the conceit nothing was clean till a Sabbath was gone over it, was of the Jewish Pædagogy, nor that it was the reason of circumcising the 8th. day, nor do I see what this, if it were granted, makes for his sense, There shall be no more an infant of dayes, that is infants shall not be uncapable of the seal while their age is measured by dayes, as the Jews infants that might not be circumcised till a week had passed over them. For there is neither mention of seal nor incapacity of it, nor of circumcision, nor its limiting to the 8th. day, and Mr. Cr. leaves out [thence] that is from Jerusalem, which shews it's meant of infants there being, and so not of Gentiles infants, and the predi-

Prediction is of an event of great moment, not of a capacity of a thing which might never be in the event, and if it were is of ſmall or no importance, nor is [an infant of dayes] well paraphraſed by [while their age is meaſured by dayes] For an infant of dayes, is all one in regard of dayes an infant, or child as the oppoſite term an old man ſhews, and his expreſſion is either non-ſenſe, or elſe it is vain to ſuppoſe that a perſon is an infant while his age is meaſured by dayes, for a perſon of many years hath his age meaſured by dayes, and if the meaning be, an infant that hath his age meaſured by dayes, not by one day or ſome hours is capable of the ſeal, then it ſhould imply that an infant of one day old is not. I am blamable for ſpending time in refuting ſuch fooleries, but the intolerable inſolent brags of Mr. Crags diſpute and ſcribling neceſſitates me.

Mr. Cr. from Iſa 65. 20. argued thus, "The childe ſhall die an "hundred years old, or as well a Churchmember as if hee were an hundred years old, therefore children may bee baptized under the Go- "ſpel, and here p. 174. of me he ſaith, He denied the conſequent which "I made good firſt ab impoſſibili, becauſe to take it literally would im- "ply a contradiction. For it is impoſſible being a childe to die a hun- "dred years old, childe is the ſubject of the queſtion, which is to be "taken properly without enallage; ſhall die an hundred years old, the "predicate that cannot otherwiſe be affirmed of it but analogically re- "ſembling in ſome capacity and qualification them that dies an hun- "dred yeares old.

Anſw. This arguing is indeed childiſh like, as if it were argued Luk. 1. 76. Thou childe ſhalt bee called the Prophet of the Higheſt, for thou ſhalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his wayes, to give knowledge of ſalvation; Ergo, this muſt bee underſtood analogically, childe is the ſubject of the queſtion, which is to be taken properly without enallage; and ſo this muſt be true of John Baptiſt while hee was a childe. The like might bee ſaid of Luk. 2. 34. 1 King. 13. 2. He is but a childe that knowes not that in ſuch paſſages as theſe there's no need of imagining an analogical predication, but that they are to be underſtood ſenſu diviſo, as when our Lord Chriſt ſaith Luke 7. 22. the blinde ſee, the lame walk, the Lepers are cleanſed, the deaf hear, the dead are raiſed; that is, ſuch as were blinde, lame, lepers, deaf, dead, not in ſenſu compoſito, ſuch as are when they ſee, walk, are cleanſed, hear are raiſed, ſo in the other place, not he that is a childe while he is a childe, but he that is now, or ſhall be once a child ſhall afore he dies be an hundred years old, which agrees with the reſt of the verſe, and v. 22. as the dayes of a tree are the dayes of my people, and mine elect ſhall long enjoy the work of their hands, they being expreſſions of long life. And M. Gataker ſaid rightly, the ſyntax is familiar, and as clear as the day light or Sunſhine: the childe or youth (that now is) ſhall die the ſon of 100 years; that is ſhall be 100 years old when he dieth. So Gen. 11. 10. Gen. 21. 25. &c. To which Mr. Cr. inſolently replies, I had thought ſyntax had been Gramatical conſtruction according to rule, not literal interpretation, or univocal not analogical prædication. I ſay for Maſter Gataker that hee may think ſtill that ſyntax is Grammatical conſtruction according to rule, not literal literal interpretation, Mr. Gataker saith nothing to the contrary; yet literal interpretation is to be according to the rule of Grammatical construction; he may think Syntax is neither univocal nor annalogical prædication, there may be Syntax in imperfect speeches that are no enunciations, nor in them any predication of one thing on another, Mr. Cr. hath been a Pædagogue long enough to know, that which his Schoolboyes might tell him, there's Syntax between a Noun Adjective and Substantive, a Noun and a Preposition, or Interjection, where there is no predication. He adds of Mr. Gataker, And this Syntax he says, is as clear as the day light, or sun shine, perhaps to an Owle or Bat. Answ. Yea, and too to as seeing men as Mr. Cr. though his Eagle-eye be in this as dark as an Owle or Bat at noon.

He goes on, "And what is this Syntax that is so clear? The child "or youth that now is, shall die the son of an hundred years, that is, "shall be an hundred years old when he dieth; the child or youth, there "is one addition, for the Text mentions not youth, which is a distinct "age from childhood. Answ. It may be an addition to the English translation, but not to the Text, sith as Mr. Gataker shews the word נער is applied to Joseph at 17 years old, *Gen.*37.2. to Benjamin, Gen. 43.8. when he is deemed to have been above thirty but that's the ill luck of it, that then it will not serve Mr. Crs. turn for his infant Churchmembership visible in the time of the Gospel Mr. Cr. adds, That now is, there is another, the child was not yet, it was a prediction. Answ. So it might be, and yet the child one that then was when Isaiah spake it; nor is it any more addition to the Text then if he had said, the child that shall be; nor any untruth in the speech as exponnded by Mr. Gataker.

Mr. Cr. goes on. "There is a third [son of] by addition put in, old "by substraction taken away; excellent Arithmetick! besides here is a "new creation of a new generation [son of years] who ever heard such "a Syntax? did the son beget the years, or the years the son? or whe-"ther is elder? That is, shall be an hundred years when he dieth, here "is an exposition of an exposition, and a fourth addition [he and when] "being superadded.

Answ. It grieves me not so much that Mr. Cr. hath so much vilified my self, as that though he pretend to be a Preacher of the Gospel, yet like a terræ filius, or Grammer reader, he should shew such contempt of a man then alive when he wrote it (as I conceive by the date of his Epistle) however whether alive or dead, a man very reverend, and (however he conceived of me) one of the most learned and accurate writers (specially in such things as this) of his age, and while he slights him discover so much folly and ignorance in Hebrew and Greek, as an ordinary Grammarian or student in the Bible would hardly have shewed; certainly it's unsuitable to his undertaking of a Schoolmaster. The phrase בן־מאה שנה is word by word the son of an hundred years, for without [of] it would be non-sense, it being the sign of the Genitive case, nor is [old] substracted, but included in that expression, it being the Hebrew expression of old or aged, as M. Gataker shews from *Gen.*11.10. & 21.5. & 5.32. & 7.6. & 12.4. & 16.16. & 17.1. & 25.20, 26. & 37.2. & 41.46. & 45.26. and elsewhere.

and the same he might have learned from Ainsworth Annot. on Gen. 5. 32, &c. Hebr. son of 500. years, that is, going in his 500. year. An usual speech in the Hebrew Scripture of mens age or of beasts; Gen. 17. 1. Exod. 12. 5. And for [he and when] how can they be said to be superadded, when the very term [shall die] is all one with [when he shall die,] which shews it is not for Mr. Cr. purpose, for then it should have been, shall be born as an hundred years old, as well a churchmember as if he were; but is agreeable to the Prophets meaning, to express long life: And therefore his jeer of excellent Arithmetick shews his folly in deriding that which was right. And for his prattle, it shews his excellent ignorance of the Hebrew and Greek of the Bible, Buxtorf. Thes. Gram. Hebr. l. 2. c. 3. p. 360. in that piece which is termed by Amama, &c. admirandum opus syntacticum, nomen בן filius periphrases & Hebraismos facit insignes: ut בן קשת filius arcus Iob 41. 19. id est sagitta & similes innumeri. Sic Joban. 17. 12. ὁ υἱὸς τῆς ἀπωλείας, &c. Apud Latinos Horat. l. carm. od. 14. Terræ filius, should one scribble as Mr. Cr. doth here, Here's a new creation of a new generation [son of the bow, of perdition, of the earth] who ever heard such a syntax? did the son beget the bow, perdition, the earth, or the bow, perdition, the earth the son? or whether is elder? Would not a Scholler say he played the fool? For this I leave him to Mr. Vaughans correction.

But he seems to be more considerate in what follows. "According to "which interpretation, the words must carry this sense, There shall no "more infants die when they are young, nor an old man till he hath "filled his days, for he that now is a child shall not die till he be an "hundred years old, I wonder in what age this was performed, that no "man died till he had compleated his century, no mortal disease, nor "disease, nor use of Physitians, but every man might certainly know "the day of his death.

Answ. The words contain not such an absolute universal longævity, as Mr. Cr. would make to be the consequent of our interpretation, but a length of days opposite to former troubles, v. 16. in which so many died by war, famine, and pestilence, which therefore comparatively is reckoned as universal, as in like manner Jeremiah ch. 50. 20. speaking of the same times saith the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for & there shall be none, that is, as formerly to provoke God to cut them off by grievous deaths, as before the captivity. And according to this is that of Zech. 8. 4. and I said without any vaunting Nebuchadnezzar like language, as Mr. Cr. abusively chargeth me with Isa. 65. 20. was rightly made by me answerable to Zech 8. 4. which doth not intimate, that the Text was made by me, and not by the Holy Ghost, but made answerable, or correspondent, which arrogates no more to me then if I had said, made clear, made manifest, &c. Nor is any experience or History contrary to this, that the Jews after their return from Babylon had peace, prosperity, increase and long life in Canaan a great while together, and were honoured by divers Persian Kings, Alexander the Great, and some of the Grecian Kings, and the Nations near them subject to them. The Contents of the Chapter are [illegible] by any Synod or Parliament interpretatively entitled to the Church of England, nor are to be accounted any more valid, then Mr. Gataker's notes, who though a single man, yet had his notes approved by other Annotators, and in some sort by the Assembly at Westminster. Yet the Contents of the Chapter being *v.*17. The blessed estate of the new Jerusalem, and in the Margin at *v.*19. Revel. 21.4. being put, shew, that Mr. Crs. conceit is no more favoured by them then mine. And the speech being to be understood comparatively to the former times, was true of the Jews after their return from the captivity at Babel. *V.*25. expressing the Jews peace notwithstanding the Samaritan neighbours, was true at the same time, although both were accommodated to the Gospel times, and the calling of the Jews yet to come. Nor is it any strange thing in that Prophet to make the restitution of the Jews from Captivity as answering to making new Heavens and Earth, as *Isa.*51.16. & 41.24, 25,26. & 45.12,13. Yet I deny not that 2 Pet. 3.13. *Revel.*21.1. the words are rightly applied to some other great work of God resembled by this and to be yet accomplished. That the Israelites 1 Cor. 10. 2. were actually baptized or washed under the cloud it raining upon them, and in the Red Sea, the water touching their feet at least, after the dividing of the waves in such a sudden passage, and blowing upon them with the sprinkling thereof, is no where set down Exod 13. and 14. Nor will such wetting be ever found in any Greek Author to be termed Baptism formally, and therefore it can be no other then similitudinary Baptism which is there meant, as the eating Manna and drinking Water was a similitudinary partaking of the Lords Supper, and Grotius did rightly expound [1 *Cor.*10.2. were baptised] by [were as if they were baptised] and yet *Isa.*65.20. is not rightly so expounded shall die as an hundred years old, there being no need of such an interpretation, nor any thing leading to it in the Text, but the expression is of long life; nor if it were meant so, is it proved that infants must be Churchmembers, and capable of some seal under the Gospel, unless there were no other way then that in respect of which he might be as one an hundred years old. Had Mr. Cr. sought the clearing of truth, he had been willing to read out the whole that his dealing might not be taken for deceitfull. By my refutation of Dr. Savage in Latin, some years since Printed, it may appear whether Text, Dr. Savage or the Dr. of the Chair did avoid my argument. The rest of M. Crs. arguments are the same with what others have urged, and have been answered in this and the former parts of this Review; nor do I find that Mr. Cr. hath added any thing of moment to them, to which I need make further reply. As for his taunts, quips, misrecitals or mistakes of my words, mis-reports of my actions, together with his own mistakes in Logick, Grammer, Divinity, they are otherwise discernable then by a particular answer in Print to each part of his Book. I presume the Christian and equal Reader will think it unnecessary to make any more reply to what is written of infant Baptism, till some thing be found written which better defends it then those have done who are here answered. If any other think it fit I should answer him also in particular, he may conceive that if I did perceive any thing that might not have an answer in that which is already written, or had in it any difficulty, I should have done it: But being conscious to my self that I have not declined the answering of any out of contempt of the person, or sense of the difficulty of doing it, but because it is thought that I have been too large already, and that to answer every meer quirk of wit is unnecessary, as knowing that however light wits that love to shew their skill in disputing be taken with them, yet solid conscientious men will be led onely with good proofs out of Scripture which may shew the institution of Christ, I do here supersede from this work and commend it to his blessing, of whom and through whom and for whom are all things, to whom be glory for ever.

AMEN.
